Calvin's growing sympathy with the Reformation movement led to his flight from Paris in Nov. 1533, following the outcry against the address delivered by the Rector of the University of Paris, Nicholas Cop, to mark the beginning of the academic year. This oration, generally thought to have been composed by Calvin, shows obvious affinities with both Erasmus and Luther. In 1534 Calvin resigned his ecclesiastical benefices, and, as the religious situation in France deteriorated and the threat of persecution grew, fled to Basle in 1535. The first (Latin) edition of his Institutes (q.v.) was published there in March 1536. On passing through *Geneva in July 1536, he was persuaded by G. *Farel to remain there and assist in organizing the Reformation in the city. In Jan. 1537 Calvin and Farel drew up articles regulating the organization of the Church and worship. However, strong internal opposition to their imposition of ecclesiastical discipline arose, centring on the imposition of a confession of faith and the use of excommunication as an instrument of social policy. Meanwhile Geneva was coming under increasing pressure from its powerful neighbour and ally, Berne. On Easter Day 1538, Calvin publicly defied the city council's explicit instructions to conform to the (*Zwinglian) religious practices of Berne and was immediately ordered to leave the city.

Accepting an invitation from M. *Bucer, Calvin spent the next three years as pastor to the French congregation at Strasbourg. This period proved formative for Calvin, allowing him insights into the management of civil and ecclesiastical affairs denied him in the more provincial setting of Geneva. During this period he produced an enlarged edition of the Institutes (1539), in which the influence of Bucer is particularly evident in the discussion of the Church; a commentary on Romans (1539); the first French edition of the Institutes (1541); and the celebrated Epistle to Cardinal *Sadoleto, then endeavouring to bring Geneva back to the RC Church, in which Calvin vigorously defended the principles of the Reformation. In Aug. 1540 he married Idelette de Bure, a widow.

In Sept. 1541 Calvin accepted the invitation of the city council to return to Geneva and during the next 14 years devoted himself to establishing a theocratic regime. His 'Ecclesiastical Ordinances', which again drew heavily on the views of Bucer, were adopted by the city council in Nov. 1541. These distinguished four ministries within the Church: pastors, doctors, elders, and deacons. Other reforming measures included the introduction of vernacular catechisms and liturgy. Ecclesiastical discipline was placed in the hands of a *consistory, consisting of 12 elders and some pastors, which sought to enforce morality through the threat of temporary excommunication; among other things it prohibited such pleasures as dancing and gambling. Popular reaction against this moral control was considerable, culminating in the victory of an anti-Calvin party in the city elections of 1548. This was assisted by popular discontent arising from the large number of Protestant emigrés, largely from France, who sought refuge in Geneva. The difficulties of Calvin's public life were compounded by personal tragedy: his wife died in March 1549, leaving him to care for her two children by her previous marriage (her only child by Calvin died shortly after his birth in 1542). The trial and execution of M. *Servetus (1553), however, served to undermine the authority of the city council, and by 1555 effective opposition to Calvin had ceased.

From this time onwards Calvin was virtually unimpeded in his promotion of the Reformation in Geneva and elsewhere. His extensive commentaries on the NT were supplemented by a series dealing with OT works. The establishment of the *Genevan Academy (1559) provided an international forum for the propagation of Calvin's ideas. His influence upon the French Protestant movement (see HUGUENOTS) was enormous, Geneva being the chief source of pastors for French Protestant congregations. The publication of French editions of the Institutes exercised as great an influence over the formation of the French language itself as over French Protestantism. Earlier, between 1548 and 1553, Calvin addressed a series of letters to *Edward VI and Protector *Somerset, proposing a scheme for the reform of the English Church which would retain an episcopal form of government; from 1555 onwards he offered refuge in Geneva to Protestant exiles from England. In 1559 Calvin was finally made a citizen of Geneva. Until then his status had been that of a legal resident alien in the employment of the city council. He did not have access to the decision-making bodies in the city, save for the appointment of pastors and the regulation of morals. What authority he possessed appears to have derived largely from his personality and his influence as a religious teacher and preacher; even this authority, however, was constantly challenged by the city council until 1555.

Calvin was a more rigorous and logical thinker than Luther, considerably more sympathetic to the insights and methods of Humanism, and much more aware of the importance of organization, both of ideas and institutions. During his time at Geneva, his reputation and influence as an ecclesiastical statesman, as a religious controversialist, educationalist, and author was widespread. His theological insight, his exegetical talents, his knowledge of languages, his precision, and his clear and pithy style, made him the most influential writer among the reformers. His Institutes are still regarded as one of the most important literary and theological works of the period.

The standard edn. of Calvin's works is that by H. W. Baum, E. Cunitz, E. Reuss, P. Lobstein, and A. Erichson (Corpus Reformatorum, 29–87; 59 vols., Brunswick, 1863–1900). Opera Selecta, ed. P. Barth and W. Niesel (5 vols., Munich, 1926–36). Many of his works were tr. into Eng. in the 19th cent. under the auspices of the Calvin Translation Society. The collection of Tracts and Treatises by H. Beveridge (1844) was repr., with notes and introd. by T. F. Torrance (3 vols., 1958). Other modern trs. into Eng. incl. that of his Theological Treatises by J. K. S. Reid (Library of Christian Classics, 22; 1954), of a selection of his Commentaries by J. Haroutunian (ibid. 23; 1958), of his Institutes by F. L. Battles, ed. J. T. McNeill (ibid. 20–1; 1961), of his Commentaries on the NT by T. H. L. Parker and others, ed. D. W. Torrance and T. F. Torrance (1959 ff.), and of his Comm. on Seneca's De Clementia by F. L. Battles and A. M. Huglo (Leiden, 1969). The Lives of Calvin by T. *Beza, orig. prefixed to Calvin's Comm. on Joshua (posthumously pub., Geneva, 1564; Eng. tr. of the Life, London, 1564), and that prefixed to the edn. of Calvin's letters pub. Geneva, 1575, together with that attributed to Beza (the work of Nicolas Colladon) prefixed to 2nd edn. of the Comm. on Joshua (Lyons, 1565), are pr. among his works.

Modern studies dealing with Calvin generally incl. E. Doumergue, Jean Calvin: Les hommes et les choses de son temps (5 vols., 1899–1917; comprehensive but uncrit.); B. B. Warfield, Calvin and Calvinism (New York and London, 1931); Q. Breen, John Calvin: A Study in French Humanism (Grand Rapids, 1931; 2nd edn., 1968); R. N. Carew Hunt, Calvin (London, 1933); J. Rilliet, Calvin 1509 1564 (Paris, 1963); A. Ganoczy, Le Jeune Calvin: Genèse et évolution de sa vocation réformatrice (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, 40; Wiesbaden, 1966; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1987; Edinburgh, 1988); T. H. L. Parker, John Calvin: A Biography (1975); W. J. Bouwsma, John Calvin: A Sixteenth-Century Portrait (New York and Oxford, 1988); A. E. McGrath, A Life of John Calvin (Oxford, 1990). Works on different aspects incl. E. Choisy, La Théocratie à Genève au temps de Calvin (Geneva [1897]); W. Niesel, Die Theologie Calvins (Munich, 1938; 2nd edn., 1957; Eng. tr., 1956); J. D. Benoît, Calvin, directeur des âmes [1949]; T. F. Torrance, Calvin's Doctrine of Man (1949); id., Kingdom and Church: A Study in the Theology of the Reformation (1956), pp. 90–164; F. Wendel, Calvin: Sources et évolution de sa pensée religieuse (Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses publiées par la faculté de théologie protestante de l'université de Strasbourg, 41; 1950; Eng. tr., 1963); E. A. Dowey, The Knowledge of God in Calvin's Theology (New York, 1952); P. [M.] van Buren, Christ in Our Place: The Substitutionary Character of Calvin's Doctrine of Reconciliation (1957); R. S. Wallace, Calvin's Doctrine of the Christian Life (1959); J. Boisset, Sagesse et Sainteté dans la Pensée de Jean Calvin (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études. Section des Sciences Religieuses, 71; 1959); W. Nijenhuis, Calvinus Oecumenicus: Calvijn en de Eenheid der Kerk in het Licht van zijn Briefwisseling (Kirkhistorische Studien, 3; 1959); J. *Moltmann (ed.), Calvin-Studien 1959 (Neukirchen, 1960); H. J. Forstman, Word and Spirit: Calvin's Doctrine of Biblical Authority (Stanford, Calif., 1962); K. McDonnell, OSB, John Calvin, the Church, and the Eucharist (Princeton, NJ, 1967); B. C. Milner, Jun., Calvin's Doctrine of the Church (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 5; Leiden, 1970); T. H. L. Parker, Calvin's New Testament Commentaries (1971); id., Calvin's Old Testament Commentaries (Edinburgh, 1986); H. Höfl, The Christian Polity of John Calvin (Cambridge, 1982); R. V.

Schnucker (ed.), Calviniana: Ideas and Influence of John Calvin (Kirksville, Mo., 1988). R. Peter and J.-F. Gilmont, Bibliotheca Calviniana: Les œuvres de Jean Calvin publiées au XVIe siècle (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 255 and 281; 1991–4). A. Erichson, Bibliographia Calviniana: Catalogus Chronologicus Operum Calvini (Berlin, 1900); W. Niesel, Calvin-Bibliographie 1901–1959 (Munich, 1961); D. Kempff, A Bibliography of Calviniana 1959–1974 (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 15; Leiden, 1975). J. N. Tylenda and P. De Klerk, 'Calvin Bibliography 1960–1970', Calvin Theological Journal, 6 (1971), pp. 156–93; an annual bibl. is included in subsequent issues of the Journal. See also bibls. to CALVINISM and INSTITUTES.

Calvinism. The theological system of J. Calvin (found chiefly in his Institutes), esp. as formulated by T. *Beza. Accepted with varying degrees of modification by most non-Lutheran reformed Churches, it holds certain doctrines characteristic of *Lutheranism, as well as other elements peculiar to itself. Among the former are the doctrines of Scripture as the only rule of faith, of the bondage of human free will through sin, and *justification (q.v.) by grace through faith. Calvinism is distinguished from Lutheranism primarily by its more radical use of Scripture as a criterion of ecclesiastical doctrine and practice, its stress upon *predestination and divine omnipotence and on the importance of the certitude of salvation to the elect, its modification of Luther's teaching on the Church and sacraments, and its emphasis upon the necessity of discipline within the Church. Where Luther drew a sharp distinction between Law and Gospel, Calvin stressed the continuity between the OT and the NT, allowing the Law a continued role as a moral guide for believers. Whereas the origins of Lutheranism were rural and territorial, Calvinism traces its origins to highly developed urban communities, a factor reflected in the latter's advanced political, economic, and social outlooks.

Although conceding a natural knowledge of God, Calvin insisted that the Bible was the most reliable and authoritative source of knowledge of God and of the moral and religious obligations of Christians. The authority of Scripture is grounded partly objectively in its divine inspiration, and partly subjectively in the 'internal testimony of the Holy Spirit', which persuades believers of its authenticity. In the state of innocence it was possible for man to attain to beatitude through his own natural powers, but the *Fall, which was willed by God, substantially changed human nature so that now all man wills and does is sin. Hence he is no longer free but follows necessarily either the attractions of concupiscence or of grace. All human works outside the Christian faith are sins; even the good works of Christians are intrinsically evil, though covered and not counted as sins through the imputed merits of Christ. This trust ('faith' in the Protestant sense) extends not only, as in Lutheranism, to the certitude of having obtained justification but to the perfect assurance of eternal salvation, and from this follows the characteristically Calvinist doctrine of the indefectibility of grace.

The characteristic Calvinist emphasis upon the divine omnipotence is expressed in the notion of divine election and predestination, according to which God predestined some of His creatures to eternal life and others to damnation without reference to foreseen merit. The doctrine of predestination, however, is not central to Calvin's theological system, being treated rather as an intrinsically mysterious aspect of the doctrine of salvation. The growing emphasis upon deducing theology systematically from general principles, typical of Beza, led to the doctrine of predestination assuming a new importance in later Calvinism. Predestination is treated by Beza as an aspect of the doctrine of God, and the divine decrees of election as axioms from which a doctrine of salvation may be deduced. Many scholars regard this shift of emphasis as a possible distortion of Calvin's balanced discussion of the doctrine.

Calvin's attitude to the Church differs from that of Luther. He defended a theocratic polity, subjecting the State to the Church, as contrasted with Luther who upheld the supremacy of the State. In the question of the Sacraments, esp. the Lord's Supper, Calvin attempted a compromise between Luther's belief in the *Real Presence, expressed in his doctrine of *consubstantiation, and U. *Zwingli's view of a mere symbolism. His language is at times ambiguous, but his thought seems to tend more in the direction of Zwingli, sometimes regarding the Sacraments as a testimony of God's grace, confirmed by an external sign.

The most influential document of strict Calvinism is the Second *Helvetic Confession of 1566, which was accepted in many reformed countries. Calvinism gained considerable influence in *France in the early 1560s; until the Wars of Religion, it seemed possible that the *Huguenots might gain the political ascendancy in Calvin's native country. In 1622 Calvinism became the state religion in the *Netherlands. Controversy there over the issue of predestination led to the emergence of factions in the Church with competing views on this matter (*Arminians, *Gomarists, *Sublapsarians, and *Superlapsarians). Calvinism also gained considerable influence in Germany, replacing Lutheranism in several localities, e.g. in Brandenburg and the Palatinate, as it did also in parts of *Romania and *Hungary. In England, slight Calvinist influence may be discerned in the *Thirty-Nine Articles, although its greatest impact was upon *Puritanism, esp. the *Westminster Confession (1648). It had the strongest effect in Scotland (esp. through J. *Knox) and colonial N. America, where its chief representative was J. *Edwards. It suffered severe setbacks through the rationalism of the 18th and 19th cents., but in the 20th cent. re-emerged as a major theological and religious force, esp. through the writings of K. *Barth and A. *Kuyper. Its attraction for the modern religious mind probably lies partly in its intellectual coherence, and partly in its emphasis upon the sovereignty of God as a reaction against the easy humanitarianism of modern liberal Protestantism.

Dogmatic Confessions in E. F. K. Müller, Die Bekenntnisschriften der reformierten Kirche (Leipzig, 1903). Eng. tr. of various primary docs. in A. C. Cochrane, Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966) and in A. Duke and others (eds.), Calvinism in Europe 1540–1610 (Manchester and New York [1992]). Modern confessional documents ed. L. Vischer, Reformed Witness Today (Berne, 1982). A. Kuyper, Calvinism (L. P. Stone Lectures [in Eng.], Amsterdam and New York, 1899); J. T. McNeill, The History and Character of Calvinism (New York and London, 1954); G. L. Hunt (ed.), Calvinism and the Political Order (Philadelphia, 1965); J. H. Leith, Introduction to the Reformed Tradition (Atlanta, 1977; Edinburgh, 1978); id., The Imperative (Philadelphia [1988]); M. Prestwich (ed.), International Calvinism 1541–1715 (Oxford, 1985); D. K. McKim (ed.), Major Themes in the Reformed Tradition (Grand Rapids [1992]).

A. Schweizer, Die Glaubenslehre der evangelisch-reformirten Kirche dargestellt (2 vols., Zurich, 1844–7); id., Die protestantischen Centraldogmen in ihrer Entwicklung innerhalb der reformierten Kirche (2 vols., ibid., 1854–6). H. Clavier, Études sur le Calvinisme (1936). A. A. van Schelven, Het Calvinisme gedurende zijn bloeitijd (3 vols., 1943–65). K. Barth, Die christliche Lehre nach dem Heidelberger Katechismus (Zurich, 1948). J. Orr in HERE 3 (1901), pp. 146–55; W. S. Reid in D. K. McKim (ed.), Encyclopedia of the Reformed Faith (Louisville, Ky., and Edinburgh, 1992), pp. 48–50, s.v.; R. Benedetto, ibid., pp. 50–3, s.v. 'Calvinism in America'. See also works cited under PRESBYTERIANISM, PROTESTANTISM, and REFORMATION.

Calvinistic Methodism. The Church which was established in *Wales through the revivalist preaching of Howel *Harris of Trevecca (1714–73) and Daniel Rowland of Llangeitho (1713–90). They had contacts with English *Methodists and their first joint Association with them was held in 1743 (18 months before J. *Wesley's first Conference), but among the leaders of the movement there was no wish to separate from the C of E. The English Calvinistic Methodists, led by G. *Whitefield, were eventually absorbed into *Congregationalism. At the time of the Welsh revival of 1762 Rowland, whose licence had been suspended by the Bp. of *St Davids, conducted his ministry in a meeting house at Llangeitho to which his preaching drew great numbers. However, he remained a staunch Anglican until his death. In 1770 an annotated Welsh Bible was published by Peter Williams. The movement was brought to N. Wales by Thomas Charles, who joined the Methodists in 1784. Separation from the Establishment began in 1795 as a result of persecution. Since poor preachers, hampered by heavy fines, were obliged to seek the protection of the *Toleration Act, their meeting-houses were registered as Dissenting Chapels. The first ordinations of ministers in the Connexion took place only in 1811. The Confession of Faith (based on the *Westminster Confession) was drawn up in 1823 and the Constitutional Deed was formally completed in 1826. The first college for candidates for the ministry was founded at Bala in 1837 with Lewis Edwards as principal, and in 1842 the South Wales Association opened a college at Trevecca, David Charles being principal. In 1905 the South Wales Association founded a college at Aberystwyth, and gradually staff and students were transferred here from both Trevecca and Bala. In 1840 a Missionary Society was formed, to work in Brittany and India. By the Calvinistic Methodist or Presbyterian Church of Wales Act 1933, the autonomy of the Church in spiritual matters was secured and a Properties Board established. This Act officially recognized as legally synonymous the alternative title which had been in use from the 1840s.

By the constitution local churches report to their district meeting, which in turn reports to the Presbytery, which is the monthly meeting of a group of districts. The Presbyteries then appoint delegates to the Associations, which are the main legislative courts of the Church. There are three Associations, the North and the South being Welsh-speaking, and the East being English-speaking. Ministers are ordained by the Associations. A General Assembly of the Associations was established in 1864; it meets annually and is a deliberative body which helps to co-ordinate the doctrinal, legislative, and financial policies of the Associations. The ministry is not now itinerant, but ministers often have several churches within their pastoral care. While deacons of a church have a certain latitude in inviting ministers to occupy the pulpit, the Presbyteries now operate a rota system, whereby all churches within their areas receive a regular ministry. Almost three-quarters of its 1,034 churches are Welsh-speaking and many of its ministers and members are zealous defenders of Welsh nationality and language. Many of its members are much involved in education, politics, and social service.

The Church was a founder member of the World Presbyterian Alliance and is a member of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. Its membership at the beginning of 1990 was 63,214.

The Rules of Discipline (in Welsh) first pub. Caerleon, 1801; the Confession of Faith (also in Welsh), preceded by a brief history of the Movement, pub. Aberystwyth, 1824; Eng. tr. under the title The History, Constitution, Rules of Discipline and Confession of the Calvinistic Methodists in Wales (London, 1827; rev. Welsh edn., 1876; Eng. tr., 1877). The Constitutional Deed of 1826 is pr. in the Legal Hand-Book for the Calvinistic Methodist Connexion (2nd edn., Wrexham [1911]), pp. 57–135. The archives of two of the main Calvinistic Methodist Chapels in London, the London Tabernacle and the Spa Fields Chapel, and the Minutes of the Calvinistic Methodist Association, 1745–9, are ed. E. Welch, Two Calvinist Methodist Chapels 1743–1811 (London Record Society Publications, 11; 1975), with introd. on Calvinistic Methodism, pp. vii–xvi. There is a considerable lit. in Welsh. Works in Eng. incl. W. Williams, Welsh Calvinistic Methodism: A Historical Sketch of the Presbyterian Church of Wales (London, 1872). M. W. Williams, Creative Fellowship: An Outline of the History of Calvinistic Methodism in Wales (Caernarvon, 1935). R. R. Williams, Flames from the Altar: Howell Harris and his Contemporaries (ibid., 1962). R. B. Knox, Voices from the Past: History of the English Conference of the Presbyterian Church of Wales, 1889–1938 (1969). L. D. Morgan, Y Diwygiad Mawr (1981; Eng. tr., The Great Awakening in Wales, 1988). D. E. Jenkins, Calvinistic Methodist Holy Orders (Caernarvon, 1911). Journal of the Calvinistic Methodist Historical Society (ibid., 1916 ff.). See also Lives of H. Harris, cited s.v.

Camaldolese. St *Romuald founded a monastery at Camaldoli (Campus Maldoli), near Arezzo, between 1012 and 1023. Its ideal was the barest minimum of communal ties. A hospice which Romuald also established nearby at Fontebuona developed as a *coenobitic house; the hermitage and the monastery were intended to complement each other. Romuald left no written rule, and monastic practice has varied in the different daughter-houses. At present there are two monastic *Congregations of Camaldolese monks, one of which has since 1966 belonged to the *Benedictine Confederation. The habit is a white tunic, with hood and *scapular of the same colour. There are also houses of Camaldolese nuns.

L. Schiaparelli, F. Baldasseroni, and E. Lasino (eds.), Regesto di Camaldoli (Regesta Chartarum Italiae, 2, 5, 13, 14; 1907–22). M. Ziegelbauer, OSB, Centifolium camaldulense, sive Notitia Scriptorum Camaldulensium (Venice, 1750). J. B. Mittarelli, OSB, and A. Costadoni, OSB, Annales Camaldulenses Ordinis Sancti Benedicti (9 vols., Venice, 1755–73). Cenni storici del sacro eremo di Camaldoli (2nd edn., Florence, 1864). A. Giabbani, OSB, L'Eremo: Vita e spiritualità eremitica nel monachismo camaldolese primitivo (Studi e Documenti di Storia religiosa; Brescia, 1945). A. Pagnani, OSB, Storia dei Benedettini Camaldolesi Cenobiti, Eremiti, Monache ed Oblati (Sassoferrato, 1949). W. Kurze, 'Campus

Malduli. Die Frühgeschichte Camaldolis', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 44 (1964), pp. 1–34. A. Des Mazis, OSB, in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 512–36, with bibl.; A. Giabbani, OSB, in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 1095–7, s.v.; G. Cacciamani in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 1718–28, s.v. See also works cited under ROMUALD, ST.

Câmara, Helder Passoa (1909–), Abp. of Olinda and Recife in Brazil. Born in Fortaleza in NE Brazil, he was ordained priest in 1931 and appointed Secretary for Education in his home state of Ceara. In 1936 he went to Rio de Janeiro, being consecrated auxiliary bishop in 1952. He was instrumental in setting up the Conference of Brazilian Bishops and the Latin American Episcopal Council (CELAM). He became increasingly concerned about the plight of the destitute (the favelas) in the capital and about the political and economic injustices that lay behind it. Upon his return to NE Brazil as Abp. of Olinda and Recife in 1964, his condemnation of political injustice became outspoken. Conservative interests in Church and State opposed him, and there were said to be attempts to assassinate him, but he was helped by the personal support of *Paul VI. In 1985 he was succeeded in his see by a conservative, José Cardosa Sobrinho. Câmara's writings, which were mostly occasional, gave him a world-wide reputation. They include Revolução dentro da paz (Rio de Janeiro, 1968; Eng. tr., 1971) and Pour arriver à temps (Brussels, 1970; Eng. tr., Race against Time, 1971).

Cambridge. The city lies where a Roman road crossed the river Granta or Cam; there was a Roman fort N. of the river on the site later occupied by the Norman castle and the modern Shire Hall. But the town grew in mid- and late Saxon times mainly S. and E. of the river; between the 10th and the early 13th cent. at least 15 parish churches were built. In the central Middle Ages Cambridge acquired a remarkable number of religious houses for a small town: *canons regular at St Giles by the Castle, *c.*1092, who later moved to Barnwell Priory; a monastic community at St Sepulchre's, the round church, *c.*1120, later a parish church; *Benedictine nuns at St Radegund's (since 1496 Jesus College), in the mid-12th cent.; *Augustinians at the Hospital of St John (since 1511 St John's College), *c.*1200; and at least six houses of friars in the 13th cent. When Cambridgeshire was split off from the large diocese of *Lincoln in 1109, its first bishop settled at *Ely, seeking the resources and the church of a rich abbey. But the link between Ely and Cambridge has always been very close, and it was prob. the bishop's learned clerks who provided hospitality in Cambridge for students escaping from riots in *Oxford in 1209, and so founded the University of Cambridge. It was certainly Hugh Balsham, Bp. of Ely, who founded the first college, Peterhouse, in 1284. The university early won royal patronage, which enabled it to survive; but until the 15th cent. it remained modest in comparison with Oxford, owing such distinction as it had largely to the peripatetic friars, including *Duns Scotus. In the early 14th cent. one great college, the King's Hall (now part of Trinity College), and a group of small colleges, academic *chantries in effect, were established; and between the 1440s, when King's College and Queens' were founded, and the mid-16th cent. the colleges in effect (as at Oxford) absorbed the student population. In the early 16th cent. St John *Fisher was Chancellor (1504–35) and *Erasmus a celebrated visitor. The 1530s saw the suppression of the friars and of the faculty of *canon law; but it also saw T. *Cranmer of Jesus College become Abp. of *Canterbury, and H. *Latimer of Clare and N. *Ridley of Pembroke leaders of the English *Reformation; the young M. *Parker was already established at Corpus Christi College. From 1549 until 1551 M. *Bucer was Regius Professor of Divinity. Like Oxford, Cambridge produced many of the leading Anglican divines of the late 16th and 17th cents., including E. *Grindal, J. *Whitgift, J. *Donne, G. *Herbert, L. *Andrewes, J. *Cosin, and W. *Sancroft, and also some leading *Puritans, from T. *Cartwright to J. *Milton. It was also the home of the *Cambridge Platonists. It was Matthew Wren, a former Fellow of Pembroke Hall and Master of Peterhouse, who, as Bp. of Ely (1638–67), brought his nephew C. *Wren to Cambridge to build Pembroke Hall chapel for him in the 1660s; Christopher Wren went on to design Emmanuel College chapel for Sancroft and Trinity College library for I. *Barrow, the mathematician and friend of I. *Newton. Newton was pre-eminent as a mathematician, but he was also one of a small circle of unorthodox theologians, which included S. *Clarke. These apart, Cambridge was not again an eminent centre of theology until the late 19th cent., though it produced notable scholars such as R. *Bentley, notable ecclesiastical politicians such as B. *Hoadly, and the celebrated apologist W. *Paley. In the 19th cent. it played a part in the *evangelical revival, esp. through the influence of C. *Simeon, and in *High Church movements through the members of the *Cambridge Camden Society. Most celebrated perhaps of the many Cambridge theologians of the 19th cent. were the triumvirate who played a major role in translating the Revised Version (see BIBLE, ENGLISH VERSIONS, 4), J. B. *Lightfoot, B. F. *Westcott, and F. J. A. *Hort, and their younger contemporary H. B. *Swete. Biblical scholarship continued to flourish in the days of C. H. *Dodd and beyond.

R. Willis and J. W. Clark, The Architectural History of the University of Cambridge, and of the Colleges of Cambridge and Eton (4 vols., Cambridge, 1886). VCH, Cambridgeshire, ed. J. P. C. Roach, 3: The City and University of Cambridge (1959); City of Cambridge (2 vols. + map and plans, Royal Commission on Historical Monuments, 1959). A History of the University of Cambridge, ed. C. [N. L.] Brooke (4 vols., Cambridge, 1988 ff.). A. B. Cobban, The Medieval English Universities: Oxford and Cambridge to c.1500 (Aldershot, 1988). C. [N. L.] Brooke, [J.] R. [L.] Highfield, and W. Swaan, Oxford and Cambridge (Cambridge, 1988). V. H. H. Green, Religion at Oxford and Cambridge (1964); C. N. L. Brooke, 'The churches of medieval Cambridge', in D. [E. D.] Beales and G. [F. A.] Best (eds.), History, Society and the Churches: Essays in honour of Owen Chadwick (1985), pp. 49–76. A. B. Emden, A Biographical Register of the University of Cambridge to 1500 (Cambridge, 1963).

Cambridge Camden Society. A society founded in May 1839 by J. M. *Neale and B. *Webb for the study of ecclesiastical art. Its first president was T. Thorp, Archdeacon of Bristol and Webb's tutor at Trinity; and in 1841 it began to issue its monthly periodical, The Ecclesiologist. In 1846, when its headquarters removed to London, its name was altered to the 'Ecclesiological Society', under which title it survived till 1868. It greatly stimulated interest in church architecture and traditional Catholic worship, and thus assisted the liturgical and ceremonial revival in the C of E in the later 19th cent.

A Report containing Lists of Officers and Members, 'Laws', Lists of Churches Visited, Publications, etc., was pub. annually at Cambridge from 1840 to 1844, at less frequent intervals at London from 1845 to 1864. In all 189 numbers of The Ecclesiologist were issued (Nov. 1841–Dec. 1868). J. F. White, The Cambridge Movement: The Ecclesiologists and the Gothic Revival (Cambridge, 1962).

Cambridge Platonists. They were a group of influential philosophical divines who flourished at Cambridge between 1633 and 1688. They stood between the *Puritans and High Anglicans and consistently advocated tolerance and comprehension within the Church, basing their demand on their conception that reason was the arbiter both of natural and of revealed religion. They held that it could judge the data of revelation by virtue of the indwelling of God in the mind, since 'the spirit in man is the candle of the Lord' (B. *Whichcote). This mystical view of reason was derived principally from *Neoplatonism, though the Cambridge Platonists interpreted it not so much as ecstasy as an abiding direction of will and affection alike. They were in many ways uncritical, discovering, e.g., affinities between *Platonism and the OT. The chief modern influence on their philosophy was R. *Descartes, whose intellectualism appealed to them, though they sought to purge his doctrines of his materialist view of the inanimate world by combining with them belief in an immanent divine soul, and supplementing his mechanism by teleology. They applied their Platonism in the sphere of ethics and epistemology to establish the identity of the Will of God and the 'Summum Bonum' and of the worlds of sense and thought.

The most important of the Cambridge Platonists were B. Whichcote (1609–83), N. Culverwel (d. 1651?), John Smith (1618–52), R. *Cudworth (1617–88), and H. *More (1614–87).

Collections of extracts by E. T. Campagnac (Oxford, 1901), G. R. Cragg (Library of Protestant Thought, New York, 1968) and C. A. Patrides (Stratford-upon-Avon Library, 5; 1969; repr., Cambridge, 1980). J. Tulloch, Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy in England in the 17th Century (2 vols., 1872); F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists (1926). R. L. Colie, Light and Enlightenment: A Study of the Cambridge Platonists and the Dutch Arminians (Cambridge, 1957). H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism (1965), pp. 81–155. M. Micheletti, Animal capax religionis: Da Benjamin Whichcote a Shaftesbury (Perugia, 1984), esp. pp. 9–109. J. Passmore in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 2 (1967), pp. 9–11.

camelaucum. The original name of the Papal tiara (q.v.), found, e.g., in the Life of Pope Constantine (d. 715) in the Liber Pontificalis, and in the '*Donation of Constantine' (8th–9th cent.).

Camerarius, Joachim (1500–74), German classical scholar and reformer. In 1530 he sat in the Diet of *Augsburg as deputy for Nuremberg, and took part in drawing up the famous Confession. In 1535 he undertook the reorganization of the University of *Tübingen, and in 1541 that of Leipzig. A personal friend of the eirenic P. *Melanchthon, whose biography he wrote in elegant Latin, he acted as a moderating influence in Lutheranism; and he discussed in 1535 with Francis I and in 1568 with Maximilian II the possibility of reunion between Catholics and Protestants. He left a large number of treatises on classical subjects and letters, a sizeable proportion of which have remained unpublished.

Study by F. Stählin (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 159; 1936). Collection of essays [several in Eng.], ed. F. Baron (Humanistische Bibliothek, Reihe 1, Bd. 24; Munich, 1978), with list of his works, pp. 231–51. T. Kolde in PRE (3rd edn.), 3 (1897), pp. 687–9, s.v., with bibl. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 1 (1933), p. 104 (nos. 2545–62).

Camerlengo (Lat., camerarius). The chamberlain of the Papal court. He presides over the Apostolic Camera (an ancient and once important department of the Roman *Curia) and chiefly oversees economic affairs during a vacancy in the Holy See. One of his duties is to assemble and direct the *conclave. He is always a *cardinal.

N. Del Re, La Curia Romana (3rd edn., Sussidi Eruditi, 23; 1970), esp. pp. 295–309.

Cameron, John (d. 1446), Bp. of Glasgow and Chancellor of Scotland. In 1424 he became secretary to James I. He was provided to the see of Glasgow by Pope *Martin V at the King's request in 1426 and consecrated in Jan. 1427. He had become Chancellor by this date, and remained in office as the King's leading adviser until the murder of James in Feb. 1437. In 1427 he supported royal legislation limiting the activities of Scottish benefice-seekers in Rome; he was summoned to the Papal court to answer for this in 1429, but the King informed the Pope that he could not spare his Chancellor, who was busy with administrative and diplomatic duties. Cameron was sent as part of the official Scottish delegation to the Council of *Basle, where he was based from Feb. 1434 until mid-1437. He visited Pope *Eugenius IV at least in 1435 and perhaps again in 1436, arranging for the first visit of a Papal legate in 200 years to take steps to reform the Church in Scotland. He returned to Scotland after the King's murder, and as Chancellor was still active in the minority government of James II until he was ousted by a political change in 1439. He was still occasionally employed in the royal administration, and joined with other bishops and abbots in the parliament of 1445 in examining the claim of the Scottish bishops to make testamentary dispositions.

J. Dowden, The Bishops of Scotland, ed. J. M. Thomson (Glasgow, 1912), pp. 319–22. J. H. Burns, Scottish Churchmen and the Council of Basle (Glasgow, 1962), esp. pp. 16 f., and 38–40. T. A. Archer in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 293–5, s.v., with refs.

Cameron, John (*c.*1579–1625), Protestant theologian. He was educated at Glasgow University, and in 1600 went to France, where he taught classics at the College of Bergerac and philosophy at the University of Sedan. He later was a private tutor at Paris, Geneva, and Heidelberg, at the same time pursuing his studies. In 1608 he was appointed a minister of the Protestant Church at Bordeaux, and in 1618 he succeeded F. *Gomar as professor of divinity at Saumur. In 1620 religious conditions in France caused him to return to England, and in 1622 he was made principal of Glasgow University. He was a supporter of *James (VI and) I and his exalted views on the prerogatives of the royal power, but the unpopularity of these views compelled him to return to Saumur in 1623. In 1624 he became professor of divinity at Montauban, where his doctrine of passive obedience to the secular authorities roused such hostility that he was assaulted in the street and his health severely injured. He died in the following year. Cameron was a very gifted linguist as well as a learned theologian. Among his writings are treatises on Grace and Free-Will (1618) and on the Satisfaction of Christ for sin (1620), in which he upheld that God's action on the will was moral, not physical, and thus was considered by stricter *Calvinists as inclining to *Pelagianism. His doctrines were accepted by a school of contemporary theologians ('Cameronites'), which included S. *Bochart and J. *Daillé.

G. B. Maury, 'John Cameron: A Scottish Protestant Theologian in France (1579–1625)', Scottish Historical Review, 7 (1910), pp. 325–45. A. H. Swinne, John Cameron, Philosoph und Theologe (1579–1625). Bibliographisch-kritische Analyse der Hand- und Druckschriften sowie der Cameron-Literatur (Marburg, 1968; 2nd edn., Studia Irenica, 1; Hildesheim, 1972). T. F. Henderson in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 295 f., s.v.

Cameron, Richard (d. 1680), Scottish *Covenanting leader. In his youth he was a schoolmaster under the episcopal incumbent of Falkland, Fife, but was won by the Covenanting cause and became a field-preacher, influencing thousands by his eloquence. In May 1678 he went to the Netherlands, where he was ordained; he returned in Oct., and in 1680 joined with a few others in the 'Sanquhar Declaration', which disowned allegiance to *Charles II and declared war upon him, attacking strongly all Covenanters who accepted the royal indulgence then offered. He fell in an affray with some royal troops at Airds Moss in Ayrshire on 22 July 1680.

Lives by J. Herkless (London [1896]) and A. Veitch (ibid., 1948).

Cameronians. A term applied at the end of the 17th cent. to extreme *Covenanters, such as the followers of R. *Cameron (q.v.) and esp. the '*Reformed Presbyterians' who declined the settlement of the Established Church of Scotland made in 1690 under William and Mary, though they themselves repudiated the name.

J. H. Burton, The History of Scotland from Agricola's Invasion to the Revolution of 1688, 7 (1870), pp. 527–76 passim. J. H. S. Burleigh, A Church History of Scotland (1960), esp. pp. 250–3, 262 f. F. *Kattenbusch in PRE (3rd edn.), 3 (1897), pp. 691–3, s.v. 'Cameronianer', with bibl. See also bibl. to COVENANTERS and REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Camillus of Lellis, St (1550–1614), founder of the 'Ministers of the Sick'. He was a native of the kingdom of Naples, and early joined the Venetian army against the Turks. His passion for gambling having reduced him to great poverty, he was employed as a labourer by the *Capuchins at Manfredonia in 1574, where, in 1575, he was converted and began to embrace a penitential life. He tried his vocation with the Capuchins and again with the *Franciscan *Recollects, but an incurable disease in his legs compelled him to leave both and he became a nurse at the hospital of St Giacomo in Rome. Under the guidance of St *Philip Neri he grew to great holiness, and resolved to found an order for the care of the sick. He was ordained priest in 1584, and about the same time established a congregation, then called 'Camillians', who take a fourth vow to devote themselves to the service of the sick, esp. the plague-stricken. The congregation was approved by the Pope in 1586 and elevated to an order with the privileges of the *Mendicants by Gregory XIV in 1591. It expanded from Rome to a number of other Italian cities during the 1590s. Despite several painful illnesses Camillus remained its superior-general till 1607, when he resigned the government of his order to devote himself more fully to the care of the sick. His striking reforms in this field envisaged both the spiritual and the material needs of the sick, such as the separation of those afflicted with contagious diseases, well-aired wards, special diet, and, particularly, an effective spiritual assistance to the dying, whence his order is also called 'Fathers of a Good Death' or 'Agonizantes'. He was canonized in 1746, made patron of the sick by *Leo XIII in 1886, and of nurses and nursing associations by *Pius XI in 1930. Feast day, 14 (formerly 18) July.

Scritti, ed. M. Vanti (Milan and Rome, 1965). The principal authority is the Life by S. Cicatelli, for 26 years his companion and later general of the order, pub. Viterbo, 1615; Eng. tr. by F. W. *Faber, 2 vols., 1850–1. Further Life by G. B. de Rossi, SJ (Rome, 1644). M. Vanti, S. Camillo de Lellis 1550–1614, apostolo di carità infermiera (Turin and Rome, 1929); id., S. Camillo de Lellis e i suo Ministri degli Infermi (1957; 3rd edn., 1964), and other works of this author. [A.] C. Oldmeadow, The First Red Cross, Camillus de Lellis, 1550–1614 (1923; popular). Other Lives by C. C. Martindale, SJ (London, 1946), and H. Panneel (Mulhouse, etc., 1964). M. Vanti and P. Cannata in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 3 (Rome, 1963), cols. 707–22, s.v., with bibl.; A. Prosperi in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 17 (1974), pp. 230–4, s.v. On the order see also P. Sannazzaro, MI, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 912–24, s.v. 'Chierici Regolari Ministri degli Infermi'.

Camisards. A group of fanatical French Protestants, who rose in the revolt in the Cévennes district in 1702 against the rigorous steps taken by Louis XIV to suppress their religion and the ensuing persecution. They often fell under ecstatic inspiration and prophesied; they fought a guerilla war that neither gave nor expected quarter. Considerable cruelty was shown on both sides, and the revolt was suppressed in 1705. A further outbreak in 1709 was quickly checked. *Huguenots in England and elsewhere outside France, throughout the 18th cent., were unsympathetic to the 'inspired' prophesying and condemned a rebellion which cost 40,000 lives (counting both sides). Meanwhile Antoine Court (1696–1760), while resisting the fanaticism of the Camisards, gathered together the scattered groups into a clandestine Church (Église du désert); he is held to have restored the Protestant Church in France. In England, where some of them took refuge, the Camisards were known as 'French Prophets'. The name 'Camisard' is of uncertain origin; it may derive from camisard (a 'nocturnal attack') or camise (modern chemise; a 'shirt', worn over their clothes as a disguise).

[A. Court], Histoire des troubles des Cevennes ou de la guerre des Camisars (3 vols., Villefranche, 1760; repr., 2 vols., Marseilles, 1975). Smaller modern collection of primary docs. by P. Joutard, Les Camisards [1976]. C. Bost, Les Prédicants protestants des Cévennes et du Bas-Languedoc, 1684–1700 (2 vols., 1912); H. Bosc, La

Guerre des Cévennes, 1702–1710 (6 vols., Montpellier [1985–93]). P. Joutard, La Légende des Camisards: Une sensibilité au passé [1977]. H. Schwartz, The French Prophets: The History of a Millenarian Group in Eighteenth-Century England (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1980]). R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), pp. 356–71. C. Garrett, Spirit Possession and Popular Religion from the Camisards to the Shakers (Baltimore, 1987), pp. 15–73. F. Vernet in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 1435–43, s.v.; J. Dedieu in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 607–14, s.v., with bibl.

campagus (Late Lat.). Originally a kind of military boot, the word came into current usage for episcopal *sandals (q.v.).

Campanella, Tommaso (baptized Giovanni Domenico) (1568–1639), Italian philosopher. In 1582 he became a *Dominican and in 1590 published his first important work, a defence of the philosopher Bernardino *Telesio (d. 1588), called Philosophia Sensibus Demonstrata. His open disavowal of the *Aristotelian philosophy aroused the suspicions of his ecclesiastical superiors, while his suspected complicity in anti-Spanish plots provoked the civil authorities of Naples. In 1603 he was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment, but he was finally released in 1629. In 1634 he withdrew to France in disguise, and spent the rest of his life at the convent of St-Honoré in Paris.

His philosophy was in the *Platonist tradition. Anticipating R. *Descartes, he held that individual consciousness was the fundamental fact of experience, and that the existence of God could be deduced from the presence of the idea of God in human consciousness. His political philosophy owed much both to *Plato and to St *Augustine. He advocated a reconstruction of the political order closely modelled on Plato's 'Republic', with society under the control of philosopher-priests who would submit the government of the state to the supreme authority of the Pope. His most important work in this field is the Civitas Solis (1623). Campanella was also a poet of some ability.

Lettere ed. by V. Spampanato (Bari, 1927); Poesie ed. G. *Gentile (Florence, 1939) and L. Firpo (Rome, 1944); Opuscoli Inediti ed. id. (Florence, 1951); Theologicorum, ed., with Ital. tr., by R. Amerio (Edizione Nazionale dei Classici del Pensiero Italiano, 10–11, 1949–51; 2nd ser. 1, 5–9, 12–16, 19–31, 33, etc., 1955 ff.); Opera Letterarie, ed. L. Bolzoni (Turin, 1977). De Praecedentia Religiosorum first ed. M. Miele, OP, in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 52 (1982), pp. 267–323. Eng. tr. of 'Apologia pro Galileo', by G. McColley in Smith College Studies in History, 22 (Northampton, Mass., 1937), nos. 3 and 4, and of Civitas Solis by D. J. Donno (Berkeley, Calif., and London, 1981). M. Baldacchini, Vita di Tommaso Campanella (Naples, 1847). L. Amabile, Fra Tommaso Campanella: La sua congiura, i suoi processi e la sua pazzia (3 vols., 1882) and other works. L. Blanchet, Campanella (Paris, 1920; repr. New York [1964]); L. Firpo (ed.), Ricerche campanelliane (Biblioteca Storica Sansoni, NS 13, 1947); G. di Napoli, Tommaso Campanella (Problemi d'Oggi, 2nd ser. 10; 1947); A. Corsano, Tommaso Campanella (Bari 1961); A. Ruschioni, Tommaso Campanella filosofo-poeta (Brunello, 1980). G. Bock, Thomas Campanella: Politisches Interesse und philosophische Spekulation (Bibliothek des Deutschen Historischen Instituts in Rom, 46; Tübingen, 1974). A. Amerio, Il sistema teologico di Tommaso Campanello (Milan, 1972). L. Firpo, Bibliografia degli scritti di Tommaso Campanella (1940). Id. in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 17 (1974), pp. 372–401, s.v. with further bibl.

campanile. In general, any bell-tower or bell-steeple; but the name is esp. applied to the detached bell-tower which originated in Italy. The earliest examples of the latter are those of San Apollinare in Classe and San Apollinare Nuovo at *Ravenna, both 10th cent. Other famous campaniles are at San Francesco, Assisi, at St-Front, Périgueux, at San Marco, *Venice, at San Zeno Maggiore, *Verona, at Siena Cathedral, and the Leaning Tower of Pisa.

Campbell, Alexander (1788–1866), co-founder, with Barton W. Stone (1772–1844), of the *Disciples of Christ. The son of Thomas Campbell (1763–1854), a Seceder *Presbyterian minister from Co. Armagh, who emigrated to the USA in 1807, Alexander followed his father in 1809 after a year at Glasgow University and settled at Bethany in what is now W. Virginia. Deeply influenced by J. *Locke and Scottish Common Sense Realism, he taught that a rational study of the biblical text revealed the essential facts of primitive Christian faith. He advocated Christian union on the basis of NT teaching, believing that it would usher in a period of Divine blessing. He and his father left the Presbyterians, holding that creeds and confessions of faith should not be made tests of fellowship. In 1812 he became convinced of the necessity for baptism by *immersion and joined the *Baptists, but his belief that baptism was for the remission of sins led eventually to his separation from them. He initiated a revival on the Western Reserve and in 1832 his movement united with Stone's Christian Connection in Kentucky. By the mid-19th cent. it was one of the largest American denominations, though two later divisions crystallized in 1906 and 1927. In 1841 he founded Bethany College. He edited and wrote nearly the whole of two periodicals, The Christian Baptist (7 vols., 1823–30) and the Millennial Harbinger (41 vols., 1830–70).

R. Richardson, Memoirs of Alexander Campbell (2 vols., Philadelphia, 1868–70). R. F. West, Alexander Campbell and Natural Religion (Yale Studies in Religious Education, 21; New Haven, Conn., and London, 1948); D. R. Lindley, Apostle of Freedom (St Louis [1957]); J. Seale (ed.) Lectures in Honour of the Alexander Campbell Bicentennial, 1788–1988 (Nashville, 1988). G. C. Boase in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 310 f.

Campbell, John McLeod (1800–72), Scottish theologian. Educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh, he was appointed in 1825 to the cure of Row (now Rhu) in Strathclyde. Here, in 1826, he became convinced of the doctrine of 'assurance of faith', which, in conjunction with his belief in the universality of the Atonement, aroused much opposition from his congregation and others as at variance with *Presbyterian principles. In 1831 the *General Assembly found him guilty of heresy and deprived him of his cure. Campbell maintained, however, a successful ministry to an independent congregation at Glasgow from 1833 until 1859, when ill-health forced his retirement. The main thesis of his principal work, The Nature of the Atonement and its Relation to Remission of Sins and Eternal Life (1856), was that the spiritual context of the sufferings of Christ, rather than their penal character, made atonement for sin.

J. McL. Campbell, Reminiscences and Reflections (ed. by his son, D. Campbell, 1873). G. M. Tuttle, So Rich a Soil: John McLeod Campbell on Christian Atonement (Edinburgh, 1986).

Campeggio, Lorenzo (1472–1539), Abp. of *Bologna. After the death of his wife (by whom he had had five children), he was ordained in 1510. He was presented with the bishopric of Feltre in 1512; and from 1513 to 1517 he was *nuncio at the Imperial court. In 1518 he was sent to England by *Leo X to try to gain *Henry VIII's support for a crusade against the Turks, but without success. He was subsequently made protector of England in the Roman *curia, and in 1524 Henry created him Bp. of *Salisbury, while in 1523 the Pope had made him Abp. of Bologna. At this time he also contended on behalf of Papal interests in Germany, but with little success. In 1528 he came back to England in the matter of Henry's projected divorce. He was provided with a document which merely defined the relevant ecclesiastical law and asserted that the question of fact must be settled in England by himself and T. *Wolsey, though the Pope had secretly pledged him to refer the matter to Rome before passing final judgement. Failing to satisfy the King, he left England in 1529 and took part in the coronation of *Charles V in the following year. In 1535 he was deprived by Act of Parliament of the see of Salisbury. He was created a cardinal in 1537.

Primary docs. concerning his part in the divorce case ed. S. Ehses, Römische Dokumente zur Geschichte der Ehescheidung Heinrichs VIII von England, 1527 1534 (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte in Verbindung mit ihrem historischen Institut in Rom herausgegeben von der Görres-Gesellschaft, 2; 1893), with introd. on Campeggio's life up to 1528, pp. xvi–xxxi; id., 'Kardinal Lorenzo Campeggio auf dem Reichstage von Augsburg, 1530', RQ 17 (1903), pp. 383–406; 18 (1904), pp. 358–84; and 19 (1905), pp. 129–225, with docs. G. Müller (ed.), Legation Lorenzo Campeggios [1530–2] und Nuntiatur Girolamo Aleandros [1531–2] (Nuntiaturberichte aus Deutschland, Abt. 1: 1533–1559, Ergänzbande 1–2; 1963–9). Early Life by C. Sigonio (Bologna, 1581). E. V. Cardinal, CSV, Cardinal Lorenzo Campeggio, Legate to the Courts of Henry VIII and Charles V (Boston, 1935). W. E. Wilkie, The Cardinal Protectors of England (Cambridge, 1974), pp. 104–238, passim. S. Skalweit in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 17 (1974), pp. 454–62, s.v. 'Campeggi, Lorenzo'; E. V. Cardinal, CSV, in NCE 2 (1967), p. 1113, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to HENRY VIII.

Campion, St Edmund (1540–81), *Jesuit. The son of a London bookseller, he was educated at the expense of the Grocers' Guild at a London grammar school, Christ's Hospital, and St John's College, Oxford, where he became a Junior Fellow in 1557. He was distinguished by his powers of leadership and his oratorical ability; in 1566 he was chosen by the university to welcome Queen *Elizabeth I to Oxford. Although already Catholic in sympathy, he was ordained deacon in the C of E in 1569, but being troubled in conscience left Oxford in 1570 for *Dublin, hoping for the revival of the university. Returning to England in disguise in 1571, he joined W. *Allen at *Douai in the same year and was received into the RC Church. Proceeding to Rome as a pilgrim, he entered the Society of Jesus in 1573 and was ordained in 1578. After a novitiate spent in Brünn, Bohemia, he taught at Prague until in 1580 he joined R. *Parsons in the first Jesuit mission to England. He preached extensively and with considerable effect in London and Lancs. In 1581 he secretly published a pamphlet entitled Decem Rationes, defending the RC position. He was arrested later in the year, but appears to have been offered his life if he would return to the C of E. On his refusal he was charged with conspiracy against the Crown, put on the rack and executed at Tyburn (1 Dec. 1581). He was among the *Forty Martyrs canonized in 1970.

His Two Bokes of the Histories of Ireland, written in 1571 and pub. in 1633, ed., with introd., by A. F. Vossen (Assen, 1963). [W. *Allen,] A Brief History of the Glorious Martyrdom of Twelve Reverend Priests (1582; new edn. by J. H. Pollen, SJ, 1908). H. More, SJ, Historia Missionis Anglicanae Societatis Jesu (St Omer, 1660), partly tr. into Eng. by F. Edwards, SJ, The Elizabethan Jesuits (1981), esp. pp. 41–128. R. Simpson, Edmund Campion (1867). Modern study by E. Waugh (London, 1935). E. E. Reynolds, Campion and Parsons: The Jesuit Mission of 1580–1 (1980). T. M. McCoog, SJ (ed.), The Reckoned Expense: Edmund Campion and the Early English Jesuits (Woodridge, Suffolk, 1996). Pre-1641 edns. of works listed in A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, The Contemporary Printed Literature of the English Counter-Reformation, 1 (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 23–31 (nos. 130–204). Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 420–3. A. De Bil in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 650–6, s.v.

camp meeting. A religious *revivalist meeting held out of doors and lasting for several days, during which those taking part lived in tents or temporary huts. This kind of meeting, first tried in 1799, has on occasion been adopted by several religious bodies, but has been used most frequently by *Methodists, esp. in the USA. A one-day version was a feature of early *Primitive Methodism in England.

Canaan. The land later known as Palestine, which the Israelites occupied and conquered by degrees in the latter part of the second millennium BC or, acc. to some views, rather earlier. Of the original inhabitants (called Canaanites) some survived, and appear to have had a reactionary influence upon the development and maintenance of the Israelites' belief in Yahweh as their only God. G. E. Mendenhall argued that Israel was in fact composed, in part at least, of native Canaanites who revolted against their overlords; this idea has been developed by N. K. Gottwald.

L. H. Vincent, OP, Canaan d'après l'exploration récente (1907). Y. Aharoni, The Land of the Bible [1967; Eng. tr. of Heb. work of 1962], pp. 61–70. J. Gray, The Canaanites (1964). K. M. Kenyon, Amorites and Canaanites (Schweich Lectures, 1963; 1966). A. R. Millard, 'The Canaanites', in D. J. Wiseman (ed.), Peoples of Old Testament Times (Oxford, 1973), pp. 29–52. G. E. Mendenhall, 'The Hebrew Conquest of Palestine', Biblical Archaeologist, 25 (1962), pp. 66–87; N. K. Gottwald, The Tribes of Yahweh: A Sociology of the Religion of Liberated Israel, 1250–1050 BCE (Maryknoll, NY, 1979; London, 1980), esp. pp. 210–19. F. Stolz in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 539–56, s.v. 'Kanaan', with extensive bibl.

Canada, Christianity in. First brought to what is now Canada by Norse colonists from Greenland c.1001, Christianity took permanent root with the arrival of French settlers in Acadia in 1605. They soon set about evangelizing the aboriginal people. The Indian missions of New France (begun in 1610) engaged the efforts of the Franciscan *Recollects, *Jesuits, the Society of *Saint-Sulpice, and the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris. The Jesuit enterprise among the Hurons (1634–50), which culminated in several martyrdoms, left vivid historical memories. After the British conquest (formalized in 1763), *Anglicans, *Methodists, and Jesuits were prominent in eastern Canada, while from the 1840s the *CMS and the RC *Oblate Order of Mary Immaculate maintained the largest enterprises in the north and west. Work among the Inuit, begun in 1771 by *Moravians in Labrador, has been carried on elsewhere by the CMS and the Oblates.

The influence of the Jesuits, and of *Ursuline and *Augustinian hospital nuns who arrived in 1639, gave Quebec an early atmosphere of RC piety, while the pioneers of Montreal (founded in 1642) regarded their project as a holy mission. The commercialism of the fur trade thereafter tempered religious zeal, and, despite the efforts of the *ultramontane Bp. François de Laval (in Canada, 1657–88), the Church in the colony came to be governed on typically Gallican lines. Meanwhile a tradition of solid catechetical instruction was established.

American and then British immigration brought religious variety to what had been strictly a RC colony. The *SPG and other missionary societies helped to provide clergy. Frontier revivalism appealed to many, leading to the prominence of Methodists in Ontario and of *Baptists in the Maritime provinces. The Church of England enjoyed special status at first, but lost it owing to the numerical preponderance of other denominations. 19th-cent. European religious movements were influential, leading to polarization between High and Low Churchmanship among Anglicans, the replication of the Scottish *Disruption among *Presbyterians, and the permeation of the RC Church by ultramontane ideas and practices. On the other hand, an impulse towards union culminated in 1925 in the formation of the United Church of Canada by Methodists, *Congregationalists, and most Presbyterians. Most provincial school systems developed along non-sectarian lines, although usually with some provision for separate RC schools; those of Quebec and Newfoundland have been strictly confessional.

During the 20th cent. cosmopolitan immigration has greatly expanded the religious spectrum. From the 1991 census it appears that 45 per cent of the population was then RC; 36 per cent was divided, in descending numerical order, among United, Anglicans, Baptists, *Lutherans, *Pentecostal, and *Orthodox. Most major denominations belong to the Canadian Council of Churches, founded in 1944, and the RC Church is now an associate member. Most of these Churches, including the RC, participate in 'coalitions' on a variety of social issues. Since the 1960s there have been a large number of new liturgies and educational curricula, and the main Protestant Churches, including the Anglican, now ordain *women. Conservative Protestant denominations are growing rapidly, however, and modernization in the RC Church has been accompanied by a massive decline in attendance at Mass and in priestly and religious vocations.

H. H. Walsh, The Christian Church in Canada (Toronto, 1956); J. W. Grant (ed.), A History of the Christian Church in Canada (3 vols., ibid. [1966–72]); R. T. Handy, A History of the Churches in the United States and Canada (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1976), esp. pp. 116–35, 228–61, and 344–76. S. D. Clark, Church and Sect in Canada (Toronto, 1948); J. W. Grant (ed.), The Churches and the Canadian Experience (ibid., 1963); J. S. Moir (ed.), The Cross in Canada ([ibid., 1966]).

N. Voisine (ed.), Histoire du catholicisme québecois (5 vols., Montreal, 1984 ff.). R. G. Thwaites (ed.), The Jesuit Relations and Allied Documents: Travels and Explorations of the Jesuit Missionaries in France, 1610 1791 (73 vols., Cleveland, 1896–1901; selections by E. Kenton, London [1927]). A. G. Morice, OMI, History of the Catholic Church in Western Canada (2 vols., Quebec, 1910).

P. Carrington, The Anglican Church in Canada (Toronto, 1963). T. R. Millman and A. R. Kelley, Atlantic Canada to 1900: A History of the Anglican Church (ibid., 1983). T. C. B. Boon, The Anglican Church from the Bay to the Rockies: A History of the Ecclesiastical Province of Rupert's Land and its Dioceses from 1820 to 1895 (ibid. [1962]). F. A. Peake, The Anglican Church in British Columbia (Vancouver, 1959).

J. S. Moir, Enduring Witness: A History of the Presbyterian Church in Canada (Toronto [1974]). C. R. Cronmiller, A History of the Lutheran Church in Canada, 1 (all pub., 1961). G. A. Rawlyk, Ravished by the Spirit: Religious Revivals, Baptists, and Henry Alline (Kingston, Ont. [1984]). F. H. Epp, Mennonites in Canada (2 vols., Toronto [1974–82]).

J. W. Grant, Moon of Wintertime: Missionaries and the Indians of Canada in Encounters since 1534 (Toronto [1984]). J. S. Moir and C. T. McIntire (eds.), Canadian Protestant and Catholic Missions, 1820s–1960s: Historical Essays in honour of John Webster Grant (Toronto Studies in Religion, 3; New York, 1988). [A.] R. Allen, The Social Passion: Religion and Social Reform in Canada 1914 28 (Toronto [1971]). J. Hulliger, L'Enseignement social des évêques canadiens de 1891 à 1950 (Montreal [1958]). R. Cook, The Regenerators: Social Criticism in Late Victorian Canada (Toronto [1985]). J. R. Williams (ed.), Canadian Churches and Social Justice (ibid., 1984). C. E. Silcox, Church Union in Canada: Its Causes and Consequences (New York [1933]); N. K. Clifford, The Resistance to Church Union in Canada, 1904 1939 (Vancouver, 1985). R. W. Bibby, Fragmented Gods: The Poverty and Potential of Religion in Canada (Toronto [1987]).

candle. Candles are widely used in Christian worship, both in E. and W., esp. as ornaments of the *altar. They are lighted during liturgical services and at certain other times. The use of candles on the altar seems to have developed out of processional lights which were in earlier times placed beside or on the altar; and in the RC Church since 1969 it has been permissible to put the candles either on or around the altar. Votive candles are candles lit before statues in churches or shrines as personal offerings. In the C of E the use of lights is governed by the *Ornaments Rubric, the *Lincoln Judgement (1890), and the *Lambeth Opinion of 1899. The last of these condemned portable lights, but the prohibition is now seldom if ever enforced. The 1969 RC rite for the Baptism of Children provides that after the Baptism itself the father of the child shall hold a candle lit from the *Paschal Candle, and some modern liturgies (including the ASB) allow for the giving of a lighted candle to a parent or godparent to show that the candidate has passed from darkness to light. The E. Church follows a similar practice. See also ALTAR LIGHTS, CANDLEMAS, PASCHAL CANDLE.

W. Mühlbauer, Geschichte und Bedeutung der (Wachs-) Lichter bei den kirchlichen Funktionen (1874); Rohault, 6 (1888), ch. 1, pp. 1–33. D. R. Dendy, The Use of Lights in Christian Worship (Alcuin Club Collections, 41; 1959). See also bibl. to ALTAR LIGHTS.

Candlemas. The feast commemorates the purification of the BVM and the presentation of Christ in the *Temple which took place, acc. to Lk. 2: 22–39, 40 days after His birth, as the Jewish Law required (Lev. 12: 1–4). Kept locally at *Jerusalem on 14 Feb. from *c.*350, it is now universally kept on 2 Feb. In 542 the Emp. *Justinian ordered its observance at *Constantinople as a thanksgiving for the cessation of plague, and it thence spread throughout the E., where it was called 'The Meeting' (ὑπαπαντή), i.e. of Christ with *Simeon. Somewhat later it began to be widely kept in the W.

A procession with lighted candles is the distinctive rite in the W. Acc. to the 1970 Roman Missal, the candles are to be blessed, if possible, somewhere other than where the Mass is to be celebrated. After an antiphon, during which the candles held by the people are lighted, a short homily and the prayer of blessing, there is a procession to the church; during it the Nunc Dimittis, with the antiphon, 'Lumen ad revelationem' (cf. Lk. 2: 32) or some other chant, is sung, commemorating Christ's entrance to the Temple. In the Liber Pontificalis, the institution of the procession is connected with the pontificate of Pope *Sergius (687–701).

In the RC Church from 1960 onwards it has been accounted a feast of the Lord, and is now officially designated the Presentation of the Lord; its proper title in the BCP is 'the Presentation of Christ in the Temple, commonly called the Purification of Saint Mary the Virgin'.

The feast is first described by *Egeria, Peregrinatio, 26. Other early refs. are in sermons by St *Gregory of Nyssa (J. P. Migne, PG 46. 1151–82), *Theodotus of Ancyra (ibid., 77. 1389–412) and Abraham of Ephesus (6th cent.; PO 16. 448–54). It owes its introduction to Rome, with three other feasts of the BVM, to Pope Sergius I; cf. LP (Duchesne), 1, p. 376. See also L. *Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), p. 462 (Eng. tr., 1903, p. 479), who prints the description of the Feast in the 'Ordo Romanus of St Amand'. D. De Bruyne, OSB, 'L'Origine des processions de la chandeleur et des rogations à propos d'un sermon inédit', R. Bén. 34 (1922), pp. 14–26, esp. pp. 18–26. K. [W.] Stevenson, 'The Origins and Development of Candlemas: A Struggle for Identity and Coherence?', EL 102 (1988), pp. 316–46.

The use of candles is already mentioned in the Life of Abbot Theodosius by *Cyril of Scythopolis (ed. E. *Schwartz, TU 49, Heft 2, 1939, p. 236). On the blessing of the candles, A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter, 1 (1909), pp. 445–55. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 207–10, s.v. 'Chandeleur'; G. Löw, CSSR, in EC 10 (1953), cols. 341–5, s.v. 'Purificazione'.

Cange, Charles Dufresne, Sieur Du. See DU CANGE, CHARLES DUFRESNE.

Canisius, St Peter (1521–97), *Jesuit theologian. After studying theology at Cologne and Mainz, where he came under the influence of the Jesuit Pierre Lefèvre, he returned to Cologne. Here he founded a Jesuit colony, and attacked the Protestant views of Abp. *Hermann of Wied. From 1549 onwards he was working in Bavaria, Vienna, and Prague, preaching and lecturing against Protestantism. He secured the patronage of the Archduke, afterwards the Emperor, Ferdinand, by whom he was offered the bishopric of Vienna, an offer which the General of his Order commanded him to refuse. A vigorous exponent of the RC, and esp. the Jesuit, position, he compiled a number of catechisms of which the chief was the Summa Doctrinae Christianae (or Catechismus Major), published in 1554 with 211 questions and answers. Over 130 editions have since been issued. In 1556 he was made *Provincial of Upper Germany and was himself very largely responsible for the foundation of colleges at Augsburg, Munich, and Innsbruck, and the spread of Jesuit influence to Poland. To him, more than to any other, was due the remarkable success of the *Counter-Reformation in the S. German lands. He was canonized in 1925 and at the same time (the first occasion that such an honour had coincided with a canonization) declared to be a *Doctor of the Church. Feast day, 21 Dec. (formerly 27 Apr.).

Works listed in Sommervogel, 2 (1891), cols. 617–87, and 8 (1908), cols. 1974–83. O. Braunsberger, SJ (ed.), Beati Petri Canisii societatis Jesu Epistolae et Acta (8 vols., Freiburg i.B., 1896–1923); modern edn. of his Catechisms by F. Streicher, SJ (Societatis Jesu Selecti Scriptores, 2; 2 vols., Rome, 1933–6), and Meditationes seu Notae in Evangelicas Lectiones by id. (ibid. 3; 2 vols. in 3, Munich, 1957–'1961' [1963]). J. Brodrick, SJ, Saint Peter Canisius, SJ, 1521–1597 (1935). E. M. Buxbaum, Petrus Canisius und die kirchliche Erneuerung des Herzogtums Bayern 1549–1556 (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 35; 1973), with full bibl. F. J. Kötter, 'Zur Eucharistiekatechese des 16. Jahrhunderts. Dargestellt an den Katechismen des Petrus Canisius und dem Cathechismus Romanus', in R. Bäumer (ed.), Reformatio Ecclesiae . . .: Festgabe für Erwin Iserloh (Paderborn, 1980), pp. 713–27. Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 425–53. X. Le Bachelet, SJ, in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 1507–37, s.v.

Cano, Melchior (?1509–60), Spanish theologian. In 1523 he entered the *Dominican Order at Salamanca, where he studied under F. *Vitoria. By 1534 he was teaching at Valladolid; in 1543 he was appointed to the first theological professorship at Alcalá; and in 1546 he succeeded Vitoria himself at Salamanca. He took an active part in the debates on the *Eucharist and on *Penance at the Council of *Trent. In his later years he became deeply involved in Spanish ecclesiastical politics, zealously opposing the *Jesuits and defending in his Consultatio theologica (1556) *Philip II's anti-Papal policy. In 1557 he was elected Provincial of the Castile Dominicans, but his appointment was not confirmed at Rome; and when re-elected in 1559, confirmation was again refused at first, though eventually granted. Similar difficulties had arisen over his appointment as Bp. of the Canaries in 1552, but in the following year he renounced the see. As a theologian his reputation rests on his posthumous De locis theologicis (Salamanca, 1563), in which he defended the unusual thesis that the consent of the parties is merely the *matter of the sacrament of *matrimony (q.v.), the *form being the sacerdotal blessing, a view which gave rise to considerable controversy at the Council of Trent and later.

Opera pub. Cologne in 1605. Life by F. Caballero (Madrid, 1871). A. Lang, Die Loci Theologici des Melchior Cano und die Methode des dogmatischen Beweises (1925). E. Marcotte, La Nature de la théologie d'après Melchior Cano (Ottawa, 1949), with bibl. J. Sanz y Sanz, Melchor Cano: Cuestiones fundamentales de crítica histórica sobre su vida y sus escritos (1959). J. Tapia, Iglesia y teología en Melchor Cano (Publicaciones del Instituto Español de Historia Eclesiástica, Monografías, 31; Rome, 1989). C. Gutiérrez, SJ, Españoles en Trento (Corpus Tridentinum Hispanicum, 1; Valladolid, 1951), pp. 814–41. M. Andrés [Martín], La teología española en el siglo XVI (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 13–14; 1976–7), esp. 2, pp. 411–23, with bibl. Quétif and Echard, 2, pp. 176–8. P. Mandonnet, OP, in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 1537–40, s.v.; V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 73–6, s.v.; F. Courtney, SJ, in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 28 f., s.v.

canon. The Greek word κανών meant a straight rod or bar. Metaphorically the term came to be used of the rules of an art or a trade or to signify a list or catalogue. In Christian language it was adopted to denote the list of inspired books which the Church regarded as composing Holy Scripture (see CANON OF SCRIPTURE), liturgical rules, esp. that part of the Mass which includes the *consecration (see CANON OF THE MASS), and rules concerning the life and discipline of the Church. In law, the word 'canon' was gradually used exclusively of ecclesiastical enactments, and *Justinian distinguishes (civil) laws from (ecclesiastical) canons. In the Middle Ages the law of the Church came to be known as 'canon law' as distinct from 'civil law'. In the Councils of the early Church the term was usually reserved for disciplinary decisions; but since the 15th cent. Councils have more often used it for their dogmatic definitions. Generally speaking *canon law to-day covers the rules of the Church for her own organization, government, and administration.

H. Oppel, 'ΚΑΝΩΝ: Zur Bedeutungsgeschichte des Wortes und seiner lateinischen Entsprechungen', Philologus, Suppl. 30 (1937), pp. 1–108; L. Wenger, Canon in den römischen Rechtsquellen und in den Papyri: Eine Wortstudie (Sb. (Wien), 220, Abhandlungen 2; 1942).

canon (ecclesiastical title). Though first applied to all clergy on the official staff of a diocese (excluding monks, private chaplains, etc.), the word was gradually limited to those secular clergy belonging to a cathedral or collegiate church. They had a share in the revenues of the Church and were bound to a common life there, though in the early Middle Ages this was not very uniformly interpreted. Before the 11th cent., a canonry was often consistent with the holding of private property and periods of non-residence; but from then onwards those continuing to maintain this mode of life came to be known as 'secular canons' to distinguish them from the *Augustinian or 'regular' canons (q.v.) who lived under a semi-monastic rule.

'Residentiary canons' form the permanent salaried staff of a cathedral and are responsible for the maintenance of its services, fabric, etc. In the C of E a 'non-residentiary canon' (often 'honorary canon') is one who holds an unsalaried post, which may entail certain privileges and responsibilities. '*Minor canons' are clerics usually chosen for their ability to sing the services in a cathedral, and in general have no say in its government. The residentiary and non-residentiary canons, with the dean, together form the 'General Chapter', which has the right to elect or refuse to elect the Crown's nominee to a vacant episcopal see (but see CONGÉ D'ÉLIRE). See also PREBEND AND PREBENDARY.

J. Molanus, De Canonicis Libri Tres (Cologne, 1587). E. Amort, Vetus Disciplina Canonicorum Regularium et Saecularium (2 vols., Venice, 1747). The legislation governing the main duties and prerogatives of canons in the RC Church is embodied in the CIC (1983), cans. 503–10; the new law is much shorter than the 1917 Code as the norms have only limited applicability in different parts of the world. On canons in the C of E, H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (8th edn. by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), esp. pp. 137–42; E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law (3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, 1992), pp. 40–45, with notes p. 48. The most readily accessible discussions of the subject are in dictionary arts. D. Dunford in CE 3 (1908), pp. 252–5, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 223–48, s.v. 'Chanoines', with bibl.; P. Torquebiau in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 471–88, s.v. 'Chanoines'; id., ibid., cols. 530–95, s.v. 'Chapitres de chanoines', with bibl.; C. Dereine in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 353–405, s.v. 'Chanoines', passim (mainly on 'canons regular'). See also bibl. to CHAPTER.

canon (hymnological). In the E. Church, the series of nine 'odes' or canticles, often acrostics, used chiefly at *Orthros. In practice there are normally only eight odes, the second being omitted except in Lent. The canon originates from the practice of singing the nine biblical *canticles during the second part of Orthros. At first the biblical canticles were sung by themselves: then in the 7th cent. stanzas of poetry or *troparia began to be inserted between the verses of each canticle, and it is these sets of troparia that comprise the canon as we know it. In course of time the practice of reading the actual text of the canticles disappeared, being continued only in certain monasteries esp. on *Athos; and so the nine (in practice, eight) odes of the canon are now sung by themselves, with a brief refrain between the troparia. The text of the *Magnificat, however, is always included in full, except on a few great feasts. The introduction of canons is ascribed to St *Andrew of Crete. Other famous authors of canons are St *Cosmas Melodus, St *John of Damascus, and St *Theodore of Studios.

E. Wellesz, A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (Oxford, 1949), esp. pp. 168–209; 2nd edn. (1961), pp. 198–239, with refs. Krumbacher, pp. 673–9 (on Andrew of Crete, John of Damascus, and Cosmas of Jerusalem). W. Christ, 'Über die Bedeutung von Hirmos, Troparion und Kanon in der griechischen Poesie des Mittelalters', Sb. (Bayr.), 1870 (2), pp. 75–108. O. Heiming, OSB, Syrische 'Eniânê und griechische Kanones (1932). A. *Fortescue in DACL 2 (pt. 2, 1910), cols. 1905–10, with bibl.

Canon Episcopalis. A liturgical book for bishops, formerly used in the Latin rite; it contained the *Ordinary of the Mass, with the form of episcopal blessing and other prayers and forms used by bishops. It became obsolete after the reordering of the Mass in 1970.

canon law. The body of ecclesiastical rules or laws imposed by authority in matters of faith, morals, and discipline.

This corpus of law grew up very gradually. Its beginnings are to be traced to the practice of convening Councils to settle matters of uncertainty or dispute and their issue of a considerable number of ad hoc pronouncements on matters of doctrine and discipline. Such pronouncements had varying degrees of authority, acc. to the importance of the Council and the area of the Church which it represented. The series of 20 miscellaneous canons promulgated at *Nicaea (325) came to possess a certain primacy in both E. and W., owing to the unique authority enjoyed by this Council. To these were added the sets of canons of other Councils. As it happened, in the E. these Councils were often Arianizing assemblies (though this circumstance did not affect the orthodoxy of their canons), while in the W. the canons of the orthodox Council of *Sardica (343) were often attached to those of Nicaea and, owing to a confusion, sometimes supposed to be Nicene. The practice of the African Church of holding plenary Councils with exceptional frequency brought into being a large body of canons from its provinces. Evidence of the existence of canonical collections by the middle of the 5th cent. is provided by the citation at the Council of *Chalcedon (451) of the Antiochene canons of 330 (formerly attributed to the Council of *Antioch of 341). Notable private collectors of canons were *John Scholasticus (who arranged the Greek canons known to him under subject-headings) in the E. and *Dionysius Exiguus and the unknown author of the *Hispana Collection in the W.

Side by side with the Councils the decrees of influential bishops were another source of early ecclesiastical legislation. St *Dionysius of Alexandria, St *Gregory Thaumaturgus, St *Basil of Caesarea, and St *Amphilochius of Iconium all issued canonical letters. Special authority came to be enjoyed by the letters of the Popes (*Decretals) beginning with that of Pope *Siricius to Himerius of Tarragona (385). The 4th–5th cents. also saw the ascription of collections of canons to fictitious authors, such as the '*Apostolic Canons' (q.v.) and those attributed to St *Hippolytus and other names of repute. Under *Charlemagne much standardization took place and by the next generation, as is shown by the *Forged Decretals, a trained body of canonists had come into being.

In the Middle Ages a decisive stage was reached when *Gratian issued his Decretum (*c.*1140). Though in essence a private collection, the appearance of this work marked an epoch in the history of the subject and students have come to regard Gratian's work as the dividing line between ius antiquum and ius novum. (The law established later than *Trent has hence come to be termed ius novissimum.) The authority accorded to Gratian's Decretum led to its supplementation by a series of later collections (among them the Extravagantes*), as described in the entry Corpus Iuris Canonici* (q.v.). In the RC Church this last-named Corpus continued to enjoy authority right down to the present century. It was only the issue of a motu proprio by *Pius X on 19 Mar. 1904 which led to its being completely overhauled and codified in the Codex Iuris Canonici (q.v.) promulgated in 1917. This Codex was itself thoroughly revised and promulgated anew in 1983. A separate Code for the *Uniat Churches was issued in 1990.

Together with laws accepted as universally binding, there have always been others of only local authority. While in general the Roman canon law was binding in England in the Middle Ages, this was supplemented to some extent by the local provincial decrees of Canterbury. In 1433 the Synodal Constitutions of the province from S. *Langton (1222) to H. *Chichele (1416) were issued by W. *Lyndwood in his famous Provinciale. In post-Reformation times these have been modified by the canons of 1604 and 1969 (see CANONS, THE).

In the E., under the Byzantine Empire, there was a much less clear distinction between the law of the Church and State than in the W. Imperial legislation (embodied in the *Justinian Code and its supplements) dealt with such ecclesiastical matters as methods of selecting candidates for the episcopate, as well as with marriage and divorce. On the other hand, Justinian decreed that canons had the 'force of law' (legum vicem). The development of specifically ecclesiastical law took the form of commentary on collections of canons (esp. the *Nomocanon, q.v.). The principle of 'economy' (οἰκονομία)—following the spirit rather than the letter of the law—plays an important part in the interpretation of ecclesiastical regulations.

Older works incl. J. Pignatelli, Consultationes Canonicae (3 vols., Rome, 1675; and many later edns.), and the writings of *Benedict XIV (q.v.), the greatest of modern canonists. J. F. von Schulte, Das katholische Kirchenrecht (2 vols., 1860, 1856; 4th edn., 1876). For texts of the Conciliar canons see the Concilia of J. *Hardouin, SJ, J. D. *Mansi, E. *Schwartz, and C. H. *Turner (qq.v.); texts of the canons of the Oecumenical Councils, with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees (1990). Canons of the Oecumenical Councils, local Councils of the E. Church, and the Canons of the Greek Fathers, with Fr. tr., in Joannou (2 vols. in 3; 1962–3). The most complete history of W. canon law is G. Le Bras and J. Gaudemet (eds.), Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en Occident (1955 ff.). Briefer modern treatment by C. Van de Wiel, History of Canon Law (Louvain Theological & Pastoral Monographs, 5 [1991]). Still valuable is the classic F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, 1 (1870; all pub.); for the later history, J. F. von Schulte, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts von Gratian bis auf die Gegenwart (3 vols., 1875–80). P. Fournier and G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en occident depuis les fausses décrétales jusqu'au décret de Gratien (2 vols., 1931–2). A. M. Stickler, SDB, Historia Iuris Canonici Latini: Institutiones Academicae, 1: Historia Fontium (Rome, 1950). S. G. Kuttner, Harmony from Dissonance: An Interpretation of Medieval Canon Law (Latrobe, Pa., 1960). J. A. Brundage, Medieval Canon Law (1955). A. van Hove, Commentarium Lovaniense in CIC (Malines, 1928 ff.; esp. 1. 1, 'Prolegomena', 2nd edn., 1945). The Gk. canons were collected, with comm., by St. *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain in the Pidalion or 'Rudder' (Leipzig, 1800; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1957). The standard modern work on E. canon law is N. Milasch, Das Kirchenrecht der morgenländischen Kirche, tr. from Serbian (Zara, 1897; 2nd edn., Mostar, 1905). For a briefer account, see J. Meyendorff, Byzantine Theology (New York, 1974; London, 1975), pp. 79–90 and 232 (bibl.). A. Villien, E. Magnin, A. Amanien, and R. Naz (eds.), Dictionnaire de droit canonique (7 vols., 1935–65). C. Vogel and others in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 34–50, s.v. 'Canon Law, History of'.

Canon of the Mass (from Gk. κανών, 'measuring rod', 'rule', because fixed and unchanging), the ancient consecratory prayer in the Roman Mass. A prayer of this kind is found in all the Eucharistic liturgies, Gk. and Lat. It always (with the possible exception of the Liturgy of *Addai and Mari) contains the Words of *Institution (q.v.).

Though the Roman Canon presumably must be based ultimately on Gk. models, it is unlikely (despite A. *Baumstark) that it was a translation from a Gk. original. It existed as early as the 4th cent. in a nearly related form, which is quoted by St *Ambrose (d. 397) in his '*De Sacramentis' (q.v.). It received modifications at the hands of St *Gregory the Great (590–604), by whose period it had assumed virtually its present form. Some early occurrences of it are in the *Gelasian Sacramentary (q.v.), the *Bobbio Missal, and the '*Missale Francorum' (7th cent.). The variations in the text, though they attract the attention of specialists, are of relatively minor importance; the remarkable fact is the universal acceptance of a virtually identical prayer throughout the W.

The Canon of the Mass originally opened with the *Preface, and is marked as doing so in the old *Gelasian Sacramentary (Vat. Reg. 316). Later, through a misunderstanding, the Preface came to be regarded as an introduction to the Canon rather than an integral part of it, and the Canon was held to begin at the words '*Te igitur' (q.v.). It is a succession of short prayers, namely (from their opening words) 'Te Igitur', 'Memento [vivorum]', *Communicantes (intercession, slightly variable at the chief feasts), 'Hanc Igitur', 'Quam Oblationem', 'Qui Pridie' (the actual words of Consecration; accompanied since the Middle Ages by the *elevation of the Elements), 'Unde et Memores' (corresponding to the Gk. *Anamnesis, q.v.), 'Supra Quae', 'Supplices Te Rogamus' (possibly the remains of an ancient *Epiclesis, q.v.), 'Memento [defunctorum]', '*Nobis Quoque Peccatoribus', and 'Per Quem Haec Omnia' (concluding Doxology). The want of any clear sequence of thought, the existence of two separate lists of saints, and other considerations have suggested that its text was seriously dislocated at an earlier stage in its history; but none of the many modern attempts to reconstruct the original order has won wide acceptance.

From *c.*800 until 1967 the Canon was recited silently, only the words 'Nobis Quoque Peccatoribus' and the concluding 'Per omnia saecula saeculorum' being said aloud. In 1967, however, audible recitation of the Canon and the use of the vernacular were authorized. In 1969 some semblance of literary unity was restored to the Canon when it became permissible to omit the conclusions to each of the component prayers except that preceding the doxology; at the same time most of the names in the 'Communicantes' and 'Nobis Quoque Peccatoribus' could be left out. The Canon, in a slightly revised form, is the first of the four eucharistic prayers in the 1970 Roman Missal. For the others see EUCHARISTIC PRAYERS.

Crit. edns. by B. Botte, OSB, Le Canon de la messe romaine (Louvain, 1935), with notes, and L. Eizenhöfer, OSB (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Minor, 1 [Traditio textus] and 7 [Textus propinqui]; Rome, 1954–66). B. Botte, OSB, and C. Mohrmann (eds.), L'Ordinaire de la messe (Études Liturgiques, 2, 1953), esp. pp. 74–85. The best summary of the position at time of writing in Jungmann (1952), 2, pp. 127–340, with full bibl. refs.; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 101–274. The large lit. incl. A. Baumstark, Liturgia romana e liturgia dell'esarcato: Il rito detto in seguito patriarchino e le origini del Canon Missae romano (Rome, 1904); P. Batiffol, Leçons sur la messe (1920), pp. 166–275; P. Oppenheim, OSB, Canon Missae Primitivus (Rome, 1948); B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Innocent I[er] et le Canon de la Messe', RTAM 19 (1952), pp. 5–16, repr. in Travaux Liturgiques, 2 (1962), pp. 236–47, and other arts. in this vol.; G. G. Willis, Essays in Early Roman Liturgy (*Alcuin Club Collections, 46; 1964), pp. 111–33; special issue of La Maison-Dieu, no. 87 (1966), 'Le Canon de la Messe', with contributions by L. Ligier, SJ, B. Botte, OSB, and J. A. Jungmann, SJ; P. Borella, 'Evoluzione storica e Struttura letteraria del Canone della Messa Romana' in L. Ligier, SJ, and others, Il Canone (Liturgica, NS 5; Padua, 1968), pp. 95–113; E. C. Ratcliff and A. H. Couratin, 'The Early Roman Canon Missae', JEH 20 (1969), pp. 211–24, repr. in Ratcliff's Liturgical Studies, ed. A. H. Couratin and D. H. Tripp (1976), pp. 91–107.

canon of Scripture (from Gk. κανών, 'measuring rod', 'rule'). The term, used also in a larger sense for a list or catalogue, gradually acquired a technical meaning for the Books which were officially received as containing the rule of the Christian faith. In this sense the words 'canon' and 'canonical', which had already been employed by *Origen, came into general use in the 4th cent.

The history of the development of the OT canon is a matter of controversy. Acc. to the legend told in the apocryphal IV *Esdras and preserved in the *Pirqe Aboth, the Hebrew canon was closed by the 'Great Synagogue' starting with Ezra after the return from Exile. Modern scholars agree that it was formed gradually at a later period but, while it seems that the process was prob. substantially completed before the beginning of the Christian era, there is no consensus about its final achievement. It was long widely accepted that the canon was finally closed in the later part of the 1st cent. AD, but Sundberg argued that there was no defined canon until considerably later, and now there is discussion as to whether the canon of the OT formed a model for that of the NT, or whether it was perhaps the other way round. The Jews of the *Diaspora regarded several additional Greek Books as equally inspired as the Hebrew Scriptures, namely most of the Books printed in the AV and RV among the *Apocrypha. During the first three cents. these were regularly used also in the Church. In the 4th and 5th cents., however, several E. Fathers, e.g. St *Gregory of Nazianzus and St *Epiphanius, questioned their authenticity, and in the W. St *Jerome esp. would admit only the Hebrew books as canonical. Though St *Ambrose, St *Augustine, and others placed them on the same footing as the other OT Books, through St Jerome's influence doubts as to their canonicity persisted in the W. throughout the Middle Ages, though they continued to be used in the Liturgy. In the 16th cent. they were rejected by the Reformers, whereas the Council of *Trent in its Fourth Session (8 Apr. 1546) imposed their acceptance as de fide on all RCs, a decision confirmed by the First *Vatican Council (1870). For the attitude of the Orthodox Churches of the E., see APOCRYPHA.

The formation of the NT canon also had its vicissitudes. Each of the Four Gospels and the 13 Epistles of St Paul had been accepted, at least in some parts of the Church, as authoritative witnesses to the Apostolic teaching by *c.*130, though the notion of a 'canon' of the NT (i.e. a list of accepted books) only emerged later, possibly in reaction against *Marcion's truncated 'canon'. Towards the end of the 2nd cent. these NT writings came to be regarded as 'Scripture' on the same footing as the OT. The other NT writings were received more slowly; doubts persisted, esp. in the case of Heb., Jude, 2 Pet., 2 and 3 Jn., and Rev., as is shown, e.g. by a list drawn up by *Eusebius. On the other hand, certain writings, such as the Ep. of *Barnabas or the 'Shepherd' of *Hermas, were admitted by individual Churches, though rejected by the majority. St *Athanasius in his Festal Ep. for 367 is the earliest exact witness to the present NT Canon. A Council prob. held at *Rome in 382 under St *Damasus gave a complete list of the canonical books of both the OT and the NT (also known as the '*Gelasian Decree' because it was reproduced by *Gelasius in 495) which is identical with the list given at the Council of *Trent. Notable early lists of NT Scriptures included the *Muratorian Canon (q.v.) and can. 60 of the Council of *Laodicea (4th cent.).

The canon of Scripture thus came to be defined as the collection of inspired writings, made by the tradition and authority of the Church, which contain the rule of Divine Faith. The principle that only the Church has the right to declare a Book canonical is recognized by the RC Church, the Orthodox Churches, and the Anglican Communion. The rise in recent years of the 'canonical approach' or 'canon criticism' in biblical studies represents an attempt to correct the alleged failure of historical-critical study to address the theological significance of the Bible as Scripture; its adherents hold that it is the 'final' or 'canonical' form of the biblical text that is the appropriate object of theological reflection rather than the events or experiences behind the text.

S. M. Zarb, OP, De Historia Canonis Utriusque Testamenti (Rome, 1934). F. V. Filson, Which Books belong to the Bible? A Study of the Canon (Philadelphia [1957]); H. von Campenhausen, Die Entstehung der christlichen Bibel (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 39; 1968; Eng. tr., 1972); B. S. Childs, Introduction to the Old Testament as Scripture (1979); J. Barr, Holy Scripture: Canon, Authority, Criticism (Sprunt Lectures; Oxford, 1983), pp. 49–104. F. F. Bruce, The Canon of Scripture (Glasgow, 1988). H. W. Howarth, 'The Influence of St Jerome on the Canon of the Western Church', JTS 10 (1908–9), pp. 481–96; 11 (1909–10), pp. 321–47; 13 (1911–12), pp. 1–18. F. Schroeder in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 386–96, s.v. 'Bible, 3 (Canon)'; W. Künneth in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 562–70, s.v. 'Kanon'.

On the OT canon, H. E. *Ryle, The Canon of the Old Testament (1892). P. Katz, 'The Old Testament Canon in Palestine and Alexandria', ZNTW 47 (1956), pp. 191–217. H. H. Rowley, The Growth of the Old Testament (Hutchinson's University Library, 1950; 3rd edn., 1967), esp. pp. 165–9. A. C. Sundberg, The Old Testament of the Early Church (Harvard Theological Studies, 20; 1964). S. Z. Leiman, The Canonization of Hebrew Scripture: The Talmudic and Midrashic Evidence (Transactions of the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, 47, 1976, pp. 1–124; also pub. separately, Hamden, Conn. [1976]). J.-D. Kaestli and O. Wermelinger (eds.), Le Canon de l'Ancien Testament: Sa Formation et son Histoire [1984]. R. Beckwith, The Old Testament Canon of the New Testament Church and its Background in Early Judaism (1985). E. E. Ellis, The Old Testament in Early Christianity: Canon and Interpretation in the Light of Modern Research (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 54; Tübingen, 1991), esp. pp. 3–74. H. L. Strack in PRE (3rd edn.), 9 (1901), pp. 741–68, s.v. 'Kanon des Alten Testaments'.

On the NT canon the most ambitious work is T. *Zahn, Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons (2 vols. in 3 pts., 1888–92), to be suppl. by the same scholar's Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons und der altchristlichen Literatur (8 pts., 1881–1907). Other treatises include B. F. *Westcott, A General Survey of the Canon of the New Testament (1855; 4th edn., 1875). M. J. Lagrange, Introduction à l'étude du Nouveau Testament, 1: Histoire ancienne du canon du Nouveau Testament (1933); A. *Souter, The Text and Canon of the New Testament (2nd edn., rev. by C. S. C. Williams, 1954), pp. 137–220; C. F. D. Moule, The Birth of the New Testament (Black's NT Comm., 1962; 3rd edn., 1981); B. S. Childs, The New Testament as Canon: An Introduction (1984); and B. M. Metzger, The Canon of the New Testament: Its Origin, Development, and Significance (Oxford, 1987). J. N. Sanders in M. M. Black and H. H. Rowley (eds.), Peake's Commentary on the Bible (1962), pp. 679–82.

canoness. The name is first used in the 8th cent. to refer to certain communities of women who lived in common, but did not renounce their own property; they were later known as 'secular canonesses'. Membership of these communities was often restricted to noblewomen. They are all now extinct. After the 11th cent. many orders of *canons regular had a similar order for women, whose members were known as 'canonesses regular'. A number of congregations of these canonesses survive in the RC Church and undertake a variety of functions.

P. Torquebiau in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 488–500, s.v. 'Chanoinesses'; N. Backmund, O. Praem., in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 53 f., s.v.; J. B. Valvekens, O. Praem., in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 24–7, s.v. 'Canonichesse'; arts. by various authors on individual orders of canonesses, ibid., cols. 27–46.

canonization. In the RC Church the definitive sentence by which the Pope declares a particular member of the faithful departed, previously beatified, to have already entered into eternal glory, and ordains for the new 'Saint' a public cult throughout the whole Church. In the Orthodox Church canonizations are usually made by the synod of bishops within a particular *autocephalous Church, though in certain instances a cultus comes to be accepted without any formal act of canonization. In the RC Church canonization is today distinguished from *beatification, which allows only a restricted public veneration of the person beatified, but in the early centuries such a distinction was almost, if not quite, unknown.

In the primitive Church, *martyrs were the first to be publicly venerated by the faithful. From the 4th cent. onwards a cultus was extended also to *confessors. Local bishops began to control the various cults in their own dioceses and councils also dealt with the subject. Frequently the veneration of certain saints spread far beyond the limits of their own diocese or country. This raised the problem of the regulation of these cults, and negligence and abuses brought about Papal intervention. The first historically attested canonization is that of *Ulrich of Augsburg by Pope John XV in 993. About 1170 *Alexander III, in a letter to King Canute of Sweden, asserted that no one should be venerated as a saint without the authority of the Roman Church; and by the inclusion of this passage in the *Decretals of *Gregory IX, it became part of W. canon law. This Papal authority is generally given nowadays only after a long legal process which was simplified by the Apostolic Constitution 'Divinus Perfectionis Magister' (25 Jan. 1983) and other legislation. The process begins at diocesan level and continues in Rome in the Congregation for the Causes of Saints. The Promotor Justitiae now ensures that all the necessary investigation takes place and that the evidence is adequately tested at the diocesan level. At Rome the evidence is assessed by a body of historical consultors and then by a body of theological consultors (under the presidency of the Promotor Fidei*) before their findings are considered by the cardinals and bishops who advise the Pope. Normally proof of one *miracle since beatification is required for canonization.

Canonization is held to confer a sevenfold honour: (1) the name is inscribed in the catalogue of saints, i.e. public recognition is enjoined; (2) the new saint is invoked in the public prayers of the Church; (3) churches may be dedicated to God in the saint's memory; (4) the Mass and Office are publicly offered to God in the saint's honour; (5) festival days are celebrated in the saint's memory; (6) pictorial representations are made in which the saint is surrounded by a heavenly light of glory; (7) the saint's relics are enclosed in precious vessels and publicly honoured.

See also RITES, CONGREGATION OF.

The Apostolic Constitution 'Divinus Perfectionis Magister' is pr. in AAS 75 (1983), pp. 349–55. The classic treatise on the whole subject is *Benedict XIV, De Servorum Dei Beatificatione et Beatorum Canonizatione (4 vols., Bologna, 1734–8). E. W. Kemp, Canonization and Authority in the Western Church (1948). A. Vauchez, La Sainteté en Occident aux derniers Siècles du Moyen Âge d'après les Procès de Canonisation et les Documents Hagiographiques (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 241; 1981), esp. pp. 11–162 and 289–489. S. Wilson (ed.), Saints and their Cults (1983), pp. 169–216, reprinting or translating into Eng. arts. previously pub., with new bibl., pp. 315–17. K. [L.] Woodward, Making Saints. Inside the Vatican: Who Become Saints; Who Do Not, and Why . . . (1991 [semi-popular]). F. Veraja, Commento alla Nuova Legislazione per le Cause dei Santi (1983). T. J. Zubek, OFM, 'New Legislation about the Canonization of the Servants of God', Jurist, 43 (1983), pp. 361–75.

Canons, Apostolic. See APOSTOLIC CANONS.

Canons, the. In the C of E the principal body of canonical legislation since the Reformation was long the Book of Canons, a collection of 141 canons passed under the influence of Abp. R. *Bancroft by the *Convocation of *Canterbury in 1604 and of *York in 1606. The individual canons were based on a number of sources. Some were a reaffirmation of medieval prescriptions, others depended on M. *Parker's 'Book of *Advertisements' and the *Thirty-Nine Articles. The many subjects with which they dealt included the conduct of Divine service and the administration of the sacraments, the duties and behaviour of clerics, the furniture and care of churches, *churchwardens, the ecclesiastical courts, and marriage regulations; and several of them were directed against the *Puritans, who were endeavouring in the early 17th cent. to achieve a drastic reconstruction of the C of E. They were drawn up in Latin by Bancroft when he was still Bp. of London, and the Latin version alone has authority.

In 1939 the Abp. of Canterbury, in conjunction with the Abp. of York, appointed a 'Canon Law Commission' under the chairmanship of C. F. Garbett (Bp. of *Winchester) to consider the status of canon law in England and, if it deemed it expedient, to prepare a revised body of canons for submission to Convocation. The meetings of the Commission were delayed until 1943, but in 1947 a report was published, including a proposed set of new canons. After prolonged debate the new Code was promulged in two parts, three sections in 1964 and four in 1969. It covers much the same areas of Church life as earlier Canons and, like them, presupposes both the Common and Statute Law and the pre-Reformation Canon Law of the W. Church, except where the last has been affected by contrary statute or custom in England. All that now remains of the 1604 Book of Canons is the proviso to Canon 113 dealing with the *seal of confession, on which it was feared that new legislation might encounter difficulties with the secular authorities. The Canons are from time to time revised by the General Synod; the latest revision was in April 1993.

Lat. text pub. London, 1604; Eng. tr., ibid., 1604. There have been numerous subsequent edns. of the Eng. tr.; modern edn. of Eng. and Lat. texts by J. V. Bullard (London, 1934). The Canon Law of the Church of England: Being the Report of the Archbishops' Commission on Canon Law, together with Proposals for a Revised Body of Canons (1947), with bibl. The new Code was pub. under the title The Canons of the Church of England (1969). E. W. Kemp, An Introduction to Canon Law in the Church of England (1957); E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law (Oxford, 1967; 3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, London, 1992); M. Hill, Ecclesiastical Law (1995); N. Doe, The Legal Framework of the Church of England (Oxford, 1996).

canons regular (Lat. canonici regulares). A body of canons living under rule, which originated in the 11th cent. in close connection with the Reform movement of *Gregory VII. In the 12th cent. they largely adopted the rule of St *Augustine and have since come to be known as *Augustinian (Austin) Canons (q.v.).

See bibl. to CANON (ecclesiastical title), also to AUGUSTINIAN CANONS.

canopy, processional. An awning supported by poles at the corners and carried over the Blessed Sacrament in processions, and formerly over certain high ecclesiastical dignitaries, in the RC Church.

Canossa. A castle near Reggio/Emilia in N. Italy, belonging in the 11th cent. to Countess Matilda of Tuscany. In the winter of 1076–7, King *Henry IV of Germany, deposed and excommunicated by Pope *Gregory VII in Feb. 1076, crossed the Alps to appear as a penitent before the castle where Gregory was staying. After Henry had passed three days outside it in bitter weather, on 28 Jan. 1077 Gregory acceded to the pleas of his own followers, who included Countess Matilda and St *Hugh, Abbot of Cluny, by restoring him to communion. As regards his kingship, Henry swore to abide by a Papal judgement soon to be passed. Henry was able to return to Germany and regain some of his authority, but in Mar. 1077 the German princes anticipated Gregory's decision by electing as anti-king Duke Rudolf of Swabia. The encounter at Canossa has been regarded by most modern historians as an adroit move by Henry, who thus divided his opponents, but traditionally in Germany it was perceived as a profound humiliation for the royal power by the Pope, and left a mark upon the country's political mythology: 'we will not' (Bismarck said in the Kulturkampf) 'go to Canossa'.

The principal sources for the event are Gregory VII, Register, 4. 12 and 12a (ed. E. Caspar in MGH, Epistolae selectae, 2 (Fasc. 1; 1920), pp. 311–15), and *Lampert of Hersfeld, Annales, a. 1077 (ed. O. Holder-Egger in MGH, Scriptores rerum Germanicarum (1894), pp. 290–98). Crit. survey by G. Meyer von Knonau, Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV. und Heinrich V., 2 (1894), pp. 747–65. The many modern discussions incl. W. von den Steinen, Canossa: Heinrich IV. und die Kirche (Munich, 1957); a collection of essays of various dates ed. H. Kämpf, Canossa als Wende (Wege der Forschungen, 12; Darmstadt, 1963); C. Schneider, Prophetisches Sacerdotium und Heilsgeschichtliches Regnum im Dialog 1073–1077 (Münstersche Mittelalter-Schriften, 9; 1972), pp. 201–13; H. Zimmermann, Der Canossagang von 1077: Wirkungen und Wirklichkeit (Abhandlungen der Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur, Mainz, Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftliche Klasse, Jahrgang 1975, Nr. 5), and C. Vogel, Gregor VII. und Heinrich IV. nach Canossa (Arbeiten zur Frühmittelalterforschung, 9; 1983). In Eng., see K. F. Morrison, 'Canossa: a revision', Traditio, 18 (1962), pp. 121–48, repr. in id., Holiness and Politics in Early Medieval Thought (1985), no. 4. T. Struve in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 2 (1983), cols. 1441–3, s.v.

cantata. Literally a form of sacred or secular musical composition designed to be sung (Lat. cantare) as opposed to the instrumentally performed sonata. In its sacred context it came in late-17th and early-18th cent. Germany to represent a multi-sectional work involving arias and recitatives for solo voices, as well as choral sections. In the *Lutheran service it formed a commentary on the Gospel for the day in the Communion or Ante-Communion service, and is seen in its supreme form in the *c.*200 surviving church cantatas of J. S. *Bach. From the 19th cent. the term has been used to describe anything between an extended *anthem (e.g. E. B. *Britten's 'Rejoice in the Lamb') to a small-scale *oratorio (e.g. R. *Vaughan Williams's 'Dona nobis pacem').

N. Fortune and others in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 3 (1980), pp. 694–718.

Cantate Domino (Lat., 'O sing unto the Lord'), Ps. 98, from its first words. In the 1552 and subsequent editions of the BCP it is an alternative to the canticle '*Magnificat' at Evening Prayer. Since 1662 it has been ordered that it shall not be used here on the 19th evening, when it is read among the psalms for the day. In the American Prayer Book of 1789 the 'Magnificat' was entirely omitted and replaced by the 'Cantate'; but in the revision of 1892 the old arrangement of the English book was restored. In the main modern Anglican liturgies it is no longer used as a canticle.

Canterbury. The history of the present see begins in 597 with the arrival of St *Augustine, who with the assistance of his companions established his first church in the city. Augustine had been ordered to organize England in two ecclesiastical provinces with archbishops at London and *York. The place of London, however, was from the first taken by Canterbury, which has since then been the see of the archbishop of the southern province, who is *Primate of All England. The northern boundary of the province of Canterbury is now formed by the northern boundaries of the dioceses of *Lincoln, Leicester, Derby, and *Lichfield. In 1920 the Welsh dioceses and Monmouth (which at that time formed part of the diocese of *Llandaff) were taken from Canterbury to form the newly constituted province of the 'Church in *Wales'. From 1375 to 1558 Calais and the surrounding district formed part of the diocese of Canterbury; since 1568–9 the *Channel Islands have been in the province, being part of the diocese of *Winchester. From the time of Abp. Stephen *Langton (d. 1228), the archbishops held the title of 'legatus natus', i.e. they were recognized as ex officio permanent Papal legates. The struggle for precedence between the archiepiscopal sees of Canterbury and York ended in the middle of the 14th cent. with a victory for the former. The principal residence of the Abp. of Canterbury is at *Lambeth Palace in London, but he also has a palace at Canterbury. See also ANGLICAN COMMUNION; and CATHEDRALS, FRIENDS OF THE.

Acc. to *Bede (HE 1. 33) an already existing Roman basilica was consecrated by St Augustine as the Cathedral Church of Christ. Destroyed by a fire in 1067, the church was rebuilt by Abp. *Lanfranc, extended under Abp. *Anselm and consecrated in 1130. After a disastrous fire in 1174 the choir was rebuilt in the transitional style under the architectural direction of William of Sens and then William the Englishman. Under Abp. *Sudbury the nave was pulled down and later rebuilt in perpendicular style. The Chapter House and Cloisters are of the same period. The Chichele Steeple (also Oxford or Dunstan Steeple) was erected by Abp. *Chichele; the central Tower (Bell Harry Tower) was built between 1495 and 1503. The chief glory of the Cathedral during the Middle Ages was the shrine of St Thomas *Becket, dedicated on 7 July 1220. The former archiepiscopal throne of Purbeck marble ('St Augustine's Chair') is prob. 13th cent. The crypt is mainly Norman with Roman and Saxon fragments. Since 1575 part of the crypt has been used by Walloon and Huguenot refugees and their descendants.

In *c.*598 (acc. to Thorne and Elmham) St Augustine, with King *Ethelbert and his Queen, established a monastery to the east of the city, dedicated to Sts Peter and Paul, to accommodate the bodies of future bishops and kings of the region. In 613 the new conventual church was consecrated by Abp. Laurence (Abp. from some time between 604 and 609 to 619), the body of St Augustine being reinterred in the N. Porch. The first ten Abps. and several kings were buried there before Abp. Cuthbert (Abp. 740–60) left instructions that the tradition should be broken. The first outbreak of the chronic enmity between the monks and the Cathedral Chapter ensued. In 978 St *Dunstan rededicated the conventual church in honour of Sts Peter and Paul and St Augustine, it being commonly known thereafter by the title of the latter saint. The church was rebuilt in the 12th cent.

From its foundation the abbey was richly endowed and seems to have enjoyed a position of favour. It contended that St Augustine had granted it exemption from the jurisdiction of his successors, but the claim caused friction with the Abps., esp. during the 12th cent. About 1063 *Alexander II made to the abbots of St Augustine's the first grant of the right to wear a mitre and other episcopal insignia. Of considerable importance throughout the Middle Ages, in 1538 the monastery, then inhabited by some 30 monks and the Prior, was dissolved. In 1848 a college for the training of missionaries (named after St Augustine) was founded on the ruins. In 1952 this was reconstituted as a central house of study for the Anglican Communion. From 1969 to 1976 the buildings were occupied by a theological college associated with *King's College, London.

The archiepiscopal registers are extant from 1278 to 1326 and from 1349 onwards; description in D. M. Smith, Guide to Bishops' Registers of England and Wales (Royal Historical Society Guides and Handbooks, 11; 1981), pp. 1–24. The following have been pub.: that of J. *Pecham ed. C. T. Martin (RS, 3 vols., 1882–5), more complete edn. by F. N. Davis and others (Canterbury and York Society, 64–5; 1968–9); those of R. *Winchelsea ed. R. Graham (ibid. 51–2, 1952–6); of Simon Langham ed. A. C. Wood (ibid. 53; 1956); of H. Chichele ed. E. F. Jacob (ibid. 42, 45–7; 1937–47); of T. *Bourchier ed. F. R. H. Du Boulay (ibid. 54; 1957); of John Morton ed. C. Harper-Bill (ibid. 75–6; 1987–8); and of M. *Parker ed. E. M. Thompson and W. H. *Frere (ibid. 35–6, 39; 1907–33). The Acta of S. Langton ed. K. Major (ibid. 50; 1950); Acta for the period 1162–90 and 1193–1205 ed. C. R. Cheney and others, English Episcopal Acta 2, and 3 (1986) respectively. E. [F.] Carpenter, Cantuar: The Archbishops in their Office (1971; rev. edn., 1988). I. J. Churchill, Canterbury Administration: The Administrative Machinery of the Archbishopric of Canterbury Illustrated from Original Records (CHS NS 15; 2 vols., 1933); B. L. Woodcock, Medieval Ecclesiastical Courts in the Diocese of Canterbury (Oxford Historical Series, 1952). F. R. H. Du Boulay, The Lordship of Canterbury (1966). J. W. Lamb, The Archbishopric of Canterbury, from its Foundation to the Norman Conquest (1971).

On the Priory and Cathedral, The Statutes of the Cathedral and Metropolitical Church of Christ, Canterbury (Canterbury, 1925). J. B. Sheppard (ed.), Literae Cantuarienses: The Letter Books of the Monastery of Christ Church, Canterbury (3 vols., RS, 1887–9). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 81–119. R. Willis, The Architectural History of Canterbury Cathedral (1845). A. P. *Stanley, Historical Memorials of Canterbury (1855). C. E. Woodruff and W. Danks, Memorials of the Cathedral and Priory of Christ in Canterbury (1912). S. A. Warner, Canterbury Cathedral (1923). D. I. Hill, Canterbury Cathedral (New Bell's Cathedral Guides, 1986). P. Collinson, N. [L.] Ramsay, and M. [J.] Sparks (eds.), A History of Canterbury Cathedral (Oxford, 1995). C. S. Phillips, Canterbury Cathedral in the Middle Ages (1949). N. [P.] Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury: Christ Church from 597 to 1066 (Leicester, 1984). C. S. Phillips,

'The Archbishop's Three Seats in Canterbury Cathedral', Antiquaries Journal, 29 (1949), pp. 26–36. M. H. Caviness, The Early Stained Glass of Canterbury Cathedral, circa 1175–1220 (Princeton, NJ [1977]); id., The Windows of Christ Church Cathedral Canterbury (Corpus vitrearum medii aevi, Great Britain, 2; 1981). Medieval Art and Architecture at Canterbury before 1220 (British Archaeological Association Conference Transactions for the Year 1979, 5; 1982). R. A. L. Smith, Canterbury Cathedral Priory: A Study in Monastic Administration (Cambridge Studies in Economic History; 1943), with bibl. R. C. Fowler in VCH, Kent, 2 (1926), pp. 113–21. W. Urry, Canterbury under the Angevin Kings (University of London Historical Studies, 19; 1967). On St Augustine's Monastery, W. Dugdale, op. cit., pp. 120–52. R. J. E. Boggis, A History of St Augustine's Monastery, Canterbury (1901). R. C. Fowler in VCH, loc. cit., pp. 126–33. M. [J.] Sparks, St Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury, Kent (1988). R. J. E. Boggis, A History of St Augustine's College, Canterbury (1907). W. A. Pantin in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 785–812, s.v. 'Cantorbéry'.

Canterbury and York Society. A society founded in 1904 for the printing of episcopal registers and other ecclesiastical records.

Lists of the Society's publications are incl. in its annual reports.

Canterbury cap. A soft flat cloth cap sometimes worn by English clerical dignitaries and others. Like the college cap and the *biretta, it is simply a later form of the ordinary medieval black cloth head-dress.

canticle (Lat. canticulum, dim. of canticum, a 'song'. In the rubrics of the *Breviary, however, the non-diminutive form is used). Song or prayer (other than one of the *psalms) derived from the Bible, which is used in the liturgical worship of the Church. In the E. Church the Byzantine rite prescribes nine canticles or 'odes' for daily use at *Orthros, eight from the OT, namely the two 'Songs of *Moses' (Ex. 15: 1–19 and Dt. 32: 1–43); the 'Song of Hannah' (1 Sam. 2: 1–10); the 'Song of Habakkuk' (Hab. 3: 2–19); the 'Song of *Isaiah' (Is. 26: 1–21); the 'Song of Jonah' (Jon. 2: 2–9); the 'Song of the Three Children' (S. of III Ch. 3–22); and the *Benedicite. The ninth ode consists of two NT canticles, *Magnificat and *Benedictus. In present practice all the canticles except the Magnificat are normally omitted. The *Nunc Dimittis is used daily at *Vespers.

In the RC Divine Office, the Benedictus is said daily at *Lauds, the Magnificat at Vespers, and the Nunc Dimittis at *Compline. Varying from day to day, some 44 OT canticles are used at Lauds, and nine other NT canticles at Vespers, namely Eph. 1: 3–10; Phil. 2: 6–11; Col. 1: 12–20; 1 Tim. 3: 16; 1 Pet. 2: 21–4; Rev. 4: 11, 5: 9, 10: 12; 11: 17–18, 12: 10b–12a; 15: 3–4; 19: 1–17. The Roman Breviary also includes the *Te Deum among its canticles.

In the BCP the word 'canticle' is applied only to the Benedicite, but in common speech it is used of many of the others named above, as well as of the *Jubilate, the *Cantate, and *Deus misereatur.

J. Mearns, The Canticles of the Christian Church, Eastern and Western, in Early and Medieval Times (Cambridge, 1914). H. Schneider, Die Altlateinischen Biblischen Cantica (Texte und Arbeiten, I. Abteilung, 29–30; 1938). Id., 'Die biblischen Oden in christlichen Altertum', Biblica, 30 (1949), pp. 28–65, 239–72; id., 'Die biblischen Oden in Jerusalem und Konstantinopel', ibid., pp. 433–52; id., 'Die biblischen Oden im Mittelalter', ibid., pp. 479–500.

Canticle of the Sun, The (Lat. 'canticum solis' or 'laudes creaturarum'). A hymn of St *Francis in praise of the Divine revelation in nature, traditionally supposed to have been composed in 1225 in the garden of San Damiano at *Assisi. It receives its name from the second stanza, 'Be thou praised, my Lord, with all thy creatures, above all Brother Sun'.

Crit. edn. of text in K. Esser, OFM (ed.), Die Opuscula des hl. Franziskus von Assisi (Spicilegium Bonaventurianum, 13; Grottaferrata, 1976), pp. 122–33, with extensive refs. Eng. tr., with introd., in The Writings of St Francis of Assisi, tr. by B. Fahy, OFM (1964), pp. 127–31. J. R. H. Moorman, The Sources for the Life of S. Francis of Assisi (Manchester, 1940), pp. 17–19, incl. refs. to other discussions. E. Doyle, OFM, St Francis and The Song of Brotherhood (1980).

Canticles, Book of. See SOLOMON, SONG OF.

Cantilupe, St Thomas de (*c.*1218–82), also St Thomas of Hereford, Bp. of *Hereford. The descendant of a noble family of Hambledon in Bucks, he was educated at *Oxford, *Paris, and Orléans, and became Chancellor of Oxford University in 1261. As Chancellor he aided the barons against King Henry III, and in 1265, after the defeat of the king at Lewes, became Chancellor of England. After the collapse of the baronial power in 1265 he retired to Paris as a lecturer, but returned to Oxford, where he was Chancellor a second time in 1273. In 1275 he was elected Bp. of Hereford and became the confidential adviser of Edward I. Exercising his influence esp. against simoniacal practices and the vice of nepotism, he firmly suppressed encroachments on the rights of his see by the neighbouring lords. His later years were filled with disputes with his former teacher, John *Pecham, from 1279 Abp. of Canterbury, over questions of jurisdiction; one of these led to his excommunication by the Archbishop in 1282. He immediately appealed against the sentence at the Papal court at Orvieto, but died before judgement had been pronounced. Despite the excommunication, the fame of his sanctity and of the miracles that took place at his tomb led to his canonization in 1320. Feast day, originally 2 Oct.; in modern RC calendars, 3 Oct.

His Register, transcribed by R. G. Griffiths with introd. by W. W. Capes, pub. by the Cantilupe Society, 1906, and reissued by the *Canterbury and York Society, 2 (1907). The chief source for his Life is the Process of Canonization preserved in the Vatican MS 4015, part of which is pr. in AASS, Oct. 1 (1765), pp. 599–705. [E.] M. [S.] Jancey (ed.), St Thomas Cantilupe, Bishop of Hereford: Essays in his honour (Hereford, 1982). T. F. Tout in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 448–52; BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 347–9, s.v. 'Cantelupe, Thomas de'.

Cantilupe, Walter de (d. 1266), Bp. of *Worcester, and uncle of St Thomas de *Cantilupe. He was elected Bishop in 1236, and consecrated by *Gregory IX in person in 1237. He supported many of the actions of R. *Grosseteste, Bp. of *Lincoln; but, despite this, was held to be one of the chief 'friends of the Pope' in England. In the war between King and barons (1258–65) he took the barons' side, and this fact is said to have been the only hindrance to his canonization. He was among the greatest figures of his day both as a diocesan bishop and as a national leader.

The chief sources for his Life are the Annales Monastici, ed. H. R. Luard (RS, 5 vols., 1864–9, esp. 1, pp. 101–52, and 4, pp. 428–56); *Matthew Paris, Chronica Majora, ed. H. R. Luard (RS, 1876–82), passim; The Chronicle of William of Rishanger, ed. by J. O. Halliwell (Camden Society, OS 15; 1840), and the letters of R. Grosseteste, ed. H. R. Luard (RS, 1861). H. R. Luard in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 452–4; BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 349–50, s.v. 'Cantelupe, Walter de'.

cantor. A singer who leads in the liturgical music of the Church. In cathedral and monastic churches the cantor sets the pitch of *plainsong by singing the opening words, and also performs the other solo parts of the chant. In English cathedrals he became known as the *precentor. Acc. to W. usage the number of cantors (one, two, or four) is governed by the feast or season; they may be clerics or lay persons and wear surplices or, on solemn occasions, copes. In modern RC usage the term is also used of the choir master who is enjoined to lead and encourage the people in singing their part at Mass. It is also the title of the director of music in a *Lutheran church, and usually also in the associated school. In the E. Church, the cantor, like the *lector, is one of the '*Minor Orders'.

H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 344–65, s.v. 'Chantres'; S. Corbin in NCE 3 (1967), p. 71, s.v. 'Cantor in Christian Liturgy', with further bibl.

cantoris [sc. sedes] (Lat.), 'the place of the cantor'. As the traditional place of the cantor is on the N. side of the choir of a cathedral or church, the term (also 'cantorial' or 'cantoral') is used to indicate those who in antiphonal singing sit on that side. The opposite side is known as '*decani'.

Capelle, Bernard (1884–1961), Abbot of Mont-César. A native of Namur, he was ordained priest in 1906 and professed a *Benedictine monk at *Maredsous in 1919. In 1928 he was elected coadjutor Abbot of Mont-César, Louvain, becoming full Abbot on his predecessor's death in 1942. In 1936 he became Maître de Conférences (History of Liturgy) in the University of Louvain. His many original and important contributions to the history of liturgy, early Christian literature and the Latin Bible, all marked by solidity and sound judgement, include Le Texte du psautier latin en Afrique (Collectanea Biblica Latina, 4; 1913), Pour une meilleure intelligence de la Messe (1946), *An Early Euchologium: The Der-Balizeh Papyrus enlarged and re-edited (with C. H. Roberts, 1949), and a long series of articles in Revue Bénédictine and other periodicals.

Collected Travaux liturgiques de doctrine et d'histoire (3 vols., Louvain, 1955–67). Obit. notice by F. Vandenbroucke, OSB, in EL 76 (1962), pp. 43–51.

Capernaum (or more correctly 'Capharnaum', as in the best Greek MSS of the NT and in the *Vulgate). A town near the Sea of Galilee, which was a centre for Christ's ministry (Mk. 2: 1), and the scene of many of His miracles. It has now been identified with Kefar Naḥum (Tell Hûm). The site consists of a town, largely unexplored by archaeologists, and a synagogue, usually attributed to the 3rd cent. AD, which has been excavated and partially restored. It may stand on the site of an earlier synagogue.

V. C. Corbo, OFM, and others, Cafarnao (Pubblicazioni dello Studium Biblicum Franciscum, 19; 4 vols., Jerusalem, 1972–5). J. Murphy-O'Connor, OP, The Holy Land: An Archaeological Guide from Earliest Times to 1700 (2nd edn., Oxford, 1986), pp. 188–93. S. Loffreda and V. Tzaferis in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of the Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 1 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 291–6.

Capistrano, St Giovanni. See GIOVANNI CAPISTRANO, ST.

capital punishment. The infliction of death following judicial sentence. St *Paul in Rom. 13 (esp. 1–5) appears to recognize its legitimacy, and no religious body as such holds it to be immoral except the Society of *Friends, although individual Christians have sometimes held that it contravenes the 6th commandment. In the C of E the 37th of the *Thirty-Nine Articles recognizes that it may be inflicted 'for heinous and grave offences'. Its abolition in many countries, however, and the great diminution since 1800 of the number of crimes punishable by death in others, may legitimately be ascribed, in part at least, to Christian enlightenment. In Great Britain the Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act 1965 substituted mandatory life imprisonment for capital punishment for a trial period of five years, and on 31 Dec. 1969 this was made permanent by resolution of Parliament.

Capitilavium (Lat., 'washing of the head'). A name given to *Palm Sunday in the early Middle Ages, acc. to *Isidore of Seville in reference to the custom of washing the heads of children in preparation for the anointing which took place at Baptism on the ensuing *Holy Saturday.

Capito, Wolfgang (1478–1541), Protestant Reformer and OT scholar. His original surname was Köpfel. Educated at Ingolstadt, Heidelberg, and Freiburg i.B., he was ordained and in 1515 moved to Basle, where he came into contact with *Erasmus. From 1518 he was sympathetic to the views of M. *Luther. After a period in Mainz, in 1523 he settled in Strasbourg and became, together with M. *Bucer, the city's chief Reformer. He attempted to get the Mass abolished by peaceful means (1525–9) and was exceptionally tolerant towards *Anabaptists and other religious dissidents. With Bucer, he drew up the *Tetropolitan Confession (1530). In 1532, in collaboration with B. *Haller, he composed the Church ordinance which consolidated the Reformation in Berne. He shared the views of U. *Zwingli on the Eucharist, though he signed the *Wittenberg Concord in 1536. His writings include a Hebrew grammar and commentaries on several Books of the OT.

Catalogue of his correspondence by O. Millet (Publications de la Bibliothèque Nationale et Universitaire de Strasbourg, 8; 1982). J. W. Baum, Capito und Butzer (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformierten Kirche, 3; Elberfeld, 1860). P. Kalkoff, W. Capito im Dienste Erzbischof Albrechts von Mainz (1907); O. E. Strasser, Capitos Beziehungen zu Bern (1927); id., La Pensée théologique de Wolfgang Capiton dans les dernières années de sa vie (Mémoires de l'Université de Neuchâtel, 11; 1938); B. Stierle, Capito als Humanist (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, 42; Gütersloh, 1974), with bibl. of his works; J. M. Kittelson, Wolfgang Capito: From Humanist to Reformer (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 17; Leiden, 1975). M. Lienhard in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 636–40, s.v.

Capitular Mass. The public Mass sung or said in RC cathedrals and collegiate churches, and attended by the whole chapter. It is the parallel of the *Conventual Mass in religious communities, and is sometimes itself so described.

capitulary (Lat. capitulare). (1) A collection of civil statutes, esp. those made by the Merovingian and Carolingian kings. The first official use of the word in this sense is in an enactment of *Charlemagne of the year 779.

(2) A compilation of previously enacted laws made by the bishops for the practical guidance of the clergy and laity of their dioceses. These 'episcopal capitularies' also date chiefly from Frankish times.

(3) In biblical MSS a brief summary of the contents, put at the head of the several Books. These capitularies are based on classical models, and date from the 3rd cent. onwards. In some cases a single Book is prefaced by several independent capitularies. By the Greeks they were known as κεφάλαια or τίτλοι, by the Latins as tituli, breves, breviaria, capitula, or capitulationes.

cappa magna. In the RC Church, a cloak with a long train and a large hood, the use of which is now confined to bishops; in the past it was also used by all cardinals (whether bishops or not) and certain other dignitaries. Its colour is ordinarily violet, except for cardinals whose cappa magna is scarlet. It dates from the end of the Middle Ages, but its form has recently been much simplified.

Cappadocian Fathers, the. The three brilliant leaders of philosophical Christian orthodoxy in the later 4th cent., namely St *Basil the Great, Bp. of Caesarea in Cappadocia, St *Gregory of Nazianzus (from his birthplace, where his father was bishop), and St *Gregory, Bp. of Nyssa (qq.v.). They were the chief influence which led to the final defeat of *Arianism at the Council of *Constantinople of 381. They were all Cappadocians by birth.

Besides general patrologies, Church histories, and histories of doctrine, and works listed under the individual Fathers, see also B. Otis, 'Cappadocian Thought as a Coherent System', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 12 (1958), pp. 95–124.

Capreolus, John (*c.*1380–1444), 'Thomistarum princeps', *Thomist philosopher and theologian. A native of Languedoc, he entered the *Dominican Order at Rodez. From 1407 he lectured on the *Sentences at Paris, where he was granted the licentiate in 1411. Later he was Regent of Studies at Toulouse. His principal work was a defence of St Thomas's teaching in four books ('Defensiones', 1409–32) against the attacks of *Henry of Ghent, *Duns Scotus, *Durandus of St-Pourçain, *William of Ockham, and others, which, after more than a century of eclipse, did much to revive the authority of Thomism.

Modern edn. of his Works by C. Paban and T. Pègues, OP (7 vols., Tours, 1900–8). Series of arts. by T. Pègues, OP, in Revue Thomiste, 7 (1899), pp. 63–81, 317–34, 507–29; 8 (1900), pp. 50–76, 288–309, 505–30; and 13 (1905), pp. 530–53. J. Ude, Doctrina Capreoli de Influxu Dei in Actus Voluntatis Humanae secundum Principia Thomismi et Molinismi collata (1904). U. Degl' Innocenti, OP, 'Il Capreolo e la questione sulla personalità', Divus Thomas, 43 (3rd ser. 17; Piacenza, 1940), pp. 27–40. M. *Grabmann, 'Johannes Capreolus OP der "Princeps Thomistarum" (†7 April 1444) und seine Stellung in der Geschichte der Thomistenschule. Ein Gedenkblatt zu seinem fünfhundertjährigen Todestag', Divus Thomas: Jahrbuch für Philosophie und Spekulative Theologie, 3rd ser, 22 (1944), pp. 85–109, 145–170; repr. in Mittelalterliches Geistesleben, 3 (Munich, 1956), pp. 370–410. K. Forster, Die Verteidigung der Lehre des heiligen Thomas von der Gottesschau durch Johannes Capreolus (Münchener Theologische Studien, II. Systematische Abteilung, 9; 1955). Further bibl. in Überweg, 2, p. 788.

Captivity Epistles, the. The four epistles—Phil., Col., Eph., Philem.—generally believed to have been written by St *Paul towards the end of his life when he was in captivity at *Rome. *Caesarea and *Ephesus have also been suggested as the place of origin of one or more of the epistles. References to Paul's bondage occur, e.g. at Phil. 1: 7, Col. 4: 18, Eph. 4: 1, Philem. 9 f. See arts. on the individual epistles.

Capuchins. An offshoot of the *Franciscan Order, founded by Matteo di Bassi of Urbino (d. 1552), an *Observant Friar, who desired to return to the primitive simplicity of the order. Its members wear a pointed cowl (capuche), similar to that of St *Francis, sandals, and a beard. The Rule, drawn up in 1529, strongly re-emphasized the Franciscan ideals of poverty, austerity, and contemplative prayer. At first the order encountered considerable opposition from the Observant Friars, and the secession in 1541 of the third general, Bernardino *Ochino, to Protestantism nearly led to its suppression. But their enthusiastic preaching and missionary work gained them popular support and made them one of the most powerful weapons of the *Counter-Reformation. The order was until modern times the strictest of the Franciscan families, though the severity of its practices has been gradually mitigated in successive constitutions. Its members have usually been men of action rather than scholars; among the best known are St *Laurence of Brindisi, Father Joseph Leclerc du Tremblay (1577–1638; the confidant of A. M. J. du P. *Richelieu, to whom the phrase éminence grise was first applied, the Capuchin habit then being grey), and Theobald Mathew (1790–1856), the 'Apostle of Temperance' in Ireland and elsewhere. The official title of the order is 'Ordo Fratrum Minorum Capuccinorum' (OFM Cap.). A female branch of the order, whose members are called 'Capuchinesses', was founded in 1538.

Bullarium Ordinis FF. Minorum S. P. Francisci Capucinorum, ed. M. a Tugio, O. Cap. (7 vols., Rome, 1740–52); cont. by Petrus Damianus of Münster, O. Cap. (3 vols., Innsbruck, 1883–4). The various constitutions from 1529 to 1925 were repr. photographically (2 vols., Rome, 1980–6). Z. Boverio, O. Cap., Annales seu Sacrae Historiae Ordinis Minorum S. Francisci qui Capucini nuncupantur (2 vols., Lyons, 1632–9); cont. by Marcellinus of Pisa, O. Cap. (Lyons, 1676), Silvester Draghetta of Milan, O. Cap. (Milan, 1737), and P. Pellegrino of Forlì, O. Cap. (Milan, 4 vols., 1882–5). Other material in Fr. Cuthbert [Hess], OSFC, The Capuchins (2 vols., 1928). Melchior a Pobladura, OFM Cap., Historia Generalis Ordinis Fratrum Minorum Capuccinorum (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, Sectio Historica, 7–10; Rome, 1947–51), and other works of this author. T. Graf, Die Kapuziner (Freiburg, Switzerland, 1957). Lexicon Capuccinum: Promptuarium Historico-Bibliographicum Ordinis Fratrum Minorum Capuccinorum (1525–1950) (Rome, 1951). T. MacVicar, OFM Cap., in NCE 6 (1967), pp. 65–7, s.v. 'Franciscans, Capuchin'; Melchiorre da Pobladura, OFM Cap., in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 203–52, s.v.

'Cappuccini', with extensive bibl. Analecta Ordinis Minorum Capuccinorum pub. at Rome, 1884 ff., and Monumenta Historica Ordinis Capuccinorum, 1–4, Assisi, 1937–40; 4 ff., Rome, 1941 ff. See also works cited s.v. FRANCISCAN ORDER.

Carafa, Giovanni Pietro. See PAUL IV.

Carbonari (Ital., 'charcoal burners'). A secret political society in some ways resembling the Continental *Freemasons. Their existence in the chief Italian cities was reported to Napoleon in 1809, and, though their origins are unclear, their rituals suggest a connection with the French charcoal-burners ('charbonnerie') who operated in Franche-Compté and Jura before the Revolution. The Carbonari were organized in cells, each bound in obedience to a central hierarchy, but their aims and rites differed widely according to time and place. They utilized Christian symbolism, but rejected all forms of Divine revelation and looked to *natural religion as a sufficient basis for virtue and brotherhood. In politics their professed aim was the destruction of absolutism; they also aspired to free Italy from foreign rule and some sought its unification. In 1820 they and their supporters gained possession of Naples for a brief period, and in the following year *Pius VII issued a condemnation of them. The July Revolution of 1830 in France was also largely inspired by their influence. Many were absorbed in the Young Italy Movement of G. Mazzini (1831).

R. J. Rath, 'The Carbonari: Their Origins, Initiation Rites, and Aims', American Historical Review, 69 (1964), pp. 353–70, with extensive refs. J. M. Roberts, The Mythology of Secret Societies (1972), pp. 283–94. P. Pirri, SJ, in EC 3 (1950), cols. 765–70, s.v. 'Carboneria'; M. P. Trauth, SND, in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 101 f., s.v.

Cardijn, Joseph-Leon (1882–1967), Belgian cardinal, founder of the *Jocists. Himself of working-class origin, he was deeply concerned about the alienation from the Church of young workers in industrialized society. After his ordination by D. J. *Mercier in 1906, he studied political and social sciences at Louvain and became a teacher in a secondary school. He used his vacations to examine working-class conditions in various countries. In 1912 he was appointed assistant priest in a suburb of Brussels and in 1915 put in charge of the Christian social work in the city. He organized groups of young factory workers, teaching them to analyse their environment and discover their mission to evangelize those among whom they worked. His ideas spread but aroused opposition. In 1925 he appealed to Pope *Pius XI, who approved the movement, now called 'Jeunesse Ouvrière Chrétienne'. Cardijn spent much of his life organizing it on a world-wide basis. He attended the Second *Vatican Council as a peritus, and his book, Laïcs en première ligne (1963; Eng. tr., 1964) helped shape discussion on the laity. In 1965 he was made a cardinal.

M. de la Bedoyere, The Cardijn Story (1958); M. Fievez and J. Meert, Cardijn (Brussels [1969]); Cardijn, un homme, un mouvement: Actes du Colloque de Leuven-Louvain-la-Neuve, 18 19/11/1982 (Leuven, 1983). F. Peemans in Biographie Nationale publiée par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, 44 (1986), pp. 155–164. See also bibl. to JOCISTS.

cardinal (Lat., cardo, 'hinge'), a title first applied to any priest permanently attached to a church (in which sense it still survives in the two cardinals among the minor canons at *St Paul's Cathedral, London) and then restricted to the clergy of *Rome, i.e. the parish priests, the bishops of the *suburbicarian dioceses, and the seven (later 14) district *deacons.

The cardinals at Rome gradually formed a college, ranked as Roman princes immediately after the Pope, and became (when assembled in *Consistory) his immediate counsellors. They assumed the government of the RC Church during the vacancy of the *Holy See. In the Middle Ages they came to rank with princes of the royal blood.

The three ranks of cardinals originated at different periods. The cardinal-priests were the parish priests of various Roman churches. Cardinal-deacons had the care of the poor in the seven districts of Rome. Cardinal-bishops were created c. the 8th cent., when the increase of Papal business made it necessary to invoke the help of neighbouring bishops to act from time to time as the Pope's representatives. The terms 'cardinal-subdeacon' and 'cardinal-acolyte' were occasionally used of the subdeacons and acolytes at Papal ceremonies; but this usage did not persist.

The present functions of cardinals are chiefly administrative. They are nominated by the Pope. In 1586 their number was fixed at 70 by *Sixtus V, but Pope *John XXIII expressly derogated from this rule in 1958 and there is now no upper limit. Acc. to current canon law (CIC (1983), can. 351), all cardinals must be in priest's orders, and those not already bishops are to be given episcopal consecration. (In the last cent. E. *Consalvi and G. *Antonelli were only deacons, and it is only since 1962 that all cardinals have been made bishops.) Their duties are to reside in Rome if they hold any curial office and are not diocesan bishops, to act as heads of *curial offices and *Roman Congregations, and to preside over ecclesiastical commissions. They are given the title of 'Eminence' and have various rights, such as the faculty to hear confessions anywhere. Their insignia have traditionally included the *red hat (abolished in 1969), red *biretta (which is now used at the ceremony of admission), red skull cap, the 'sacred purple', a *ring with a sapphire stone, the *pectoral cross and, on certain occasions, the use of the *ombrellino. Every cardinal resident in Rome has the right to a revenue (piatto cardinalizio) if without sufficient private means.

On a vacancy in the Apostolic See they meet in secret session to elect a Pope (see CONCLAVE), a privilege that has been exclusively theirs since the Third *Lateran Council of 1179 (can. 1). Only those under 80 may now vote.

From time to time the Pope creates a cardinal in petto, i.e. privately, but the creation is without effect unless publication follows. The nominee, however, retains his place of seniority.

J. B. Sägmüller, Die Thätigkeit und Stellung der Cardinäle bis Papst Bonifaz VIII. (1896). V. Martin, Les Cardinaux et la curie, tribunaux et offices, la vacance du siège apostolique (1930). H. W. Klewitz, 'Die Entstehung des Kardinalkollegiums', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, 25 (1936), pp. 115–221; repr. in Reformpapsttum und Kardinalkolleg (Darmstadt, 1957), pp. 11–134. M. Belardo, De Juribus S.R.E. Cardinalium in Titulis (Vatican City, 1939). S. Kuttner, 'Cardinalis: The History of a Canonical Concept', Traditio, 3 (New York, 1945), pp. 129–214; M. Andrieu, 'L'Origine du titre de cardinal dans l'Église romaine', Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, 5 (ST 125; 1946), pp. 113–44. G. Mollat, 'Contribution à l'histoire du Sacré Collège de Clément V à Eugène IV', RHE 46 (1951), pp. 22–112, 566–94. K. Ganzer, Die Entwicklung des auswärtigen Kardinalats im hohen Mittelalter: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Kardinalkollegiums von 11. bis 13. Jahrhundert (Bibliothek des deutschen historischen Instituts in Rom, 26; 1963). C. G. Fürst, Cardinalis: Prolegomena zu einer Rechtsgeschichte des römischen Kardinalskollegiums (Munich, 1967). A. Molien in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 1310–39, s.v.; P. Paschini, P. Ciprotti and V. Bartoccetti in EC 3 (1949), cols. 779–84, s.v. 'Cardinale'.

cardinal virtues. The four 'cardinal virtues' are prudence, temperance, fortitude, and justice. The chief Christian moral theologians, e.g. St *Ambrose, St *Augustine, and St *Thomas Aquinas, took over this classification from *Plato and *Aristotle. In Christian writers the 'cardinal' are contrasted with the '*theological' virtues of *faith, *hope, and *charity.

St Thomas, S. Theol. I–II, q. 61 ('De Virtutibus Cardinalibus'). F. M. Utz, OP, De Connexione Virtutum Moralium inter se secundum Doctrinam S. Thomae Aquinatis (Vechta, 1937). J. Pieper, The Four Cardinal Virtues (Notre Dame, Ind., 1966; Eng. tr. of four essays issued separately). J. Rickaby, SJ, in CE 3 (1908), pp. 343–5.

Cardwell, Edward (1787–1861), ecclesiastical historian. Educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, he became Camden Professor of Ancient History in 1825, and Principal of St Alban Hall in 1831, in succession to R. *Whately, an office which he held till his death. He issued through the University Press, in the administration of which he took a prominent part, several collections of documents still of great value to the student of English Church history, notably Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England (2 vols., 1839), A History of Conferences ... connected with the Revision of the BCP (1840), and Synodalia (2 vols., 1842).

C. W. Sutton in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 42 f., s.v.

Carey, William (1761–1834), *Baptist missionary. Born in humble circumstances in Northamptonshire and baptized an Anglican, he was apprenticed in 1777 to a shoemaker, but, after his conversion (1779), he became convinced of Baptist teaching (1783) and spent part of his time as a preacher. For many years he continued his cobbling by night, whilst running a school by day and acting as pastor of a church. During this time he taught himself Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Dutch, and French. He believed that mission in previously unevangelized parts of the world was of prime importance, and, at the ministers' meeting at Nottingham in 1792, he promulgated the watchword, 'Expect great things from God and attempt great things for God', which led to the founding of the *Baptist Missionary Society. Sailing for India in 1793 in a Danish vessel, as the East India Company had put a ban on missionaries in British ships, he arrived in Bengal in Nov. 1793, where he was put in charge of an indigo factory at Malda, which became his mission station. In five years he translated the NT into Bengali and visited 200 villages. When the factory was closed (1799), he left for Serampore, where he was joined by four new missionaries, with whose assistance he was able to bring his Bengali New Testament into print in 1801. At this time Fort William College was opened at Calcutta, and Carey was appointed professor of Sanskrit, Bengali, and Marathi—a position that he held for 30 years. His many labours included a translation of the whole Bible into Bengali (1809), and its translation, in whole or part, into 24 other languages and dialects. In addition, he published philological works (grammars and dictionaries) in Sanskrit, Marathi, Punjabi, and Telugu. It was his agitation that was largely responsible for the abolition in 1829 of suttee, the ancient custom that had meant the death of every widow at the time of her husband's funeral.

Lives by E. Carey (son, London, 1836), J. C. Marshman (2 vols., ibid., 1859), G. Smith (ibid., 1885), S. P. Carey (great-grandson, ibid., 1923), and M. Drewery (ibid., 1978). A. H. Oussoren, William Carey, Especially his Missionary Principles (Leiden, 1945). W. A. Smalley, Translation as Mission: Bible Translation in the Modern Missionary Movement (Macon, Ga. [1991]), pp. 40–52. B. Stanley, The History of the Baptist Missionary Society (Edinburgh, 1992), pp. 6–67.

Carlile, Wilson (1847–1942), founder of the *Church Army. After a successful business career (1862–78), he entered the London College of Divinity, was ordained in 1880, and served an assistant curacy in Kensington. In 1882 he founded the Church Army, and combined his work as its honorary Chief Secretary with various parochial appointments. He continued to take part in its administration until a few weeks before his death. From 1949 to 1960 his grandson, Edward Wilson Carlile (1915–96), was (General, 1949–51; then renamed Chief, 1951–60) Secretary of the Church Army.

E. Rowan, Wilson Carlile and the Church Army (1905; 5th edn. by A. E. Reffold, 1956); S. Dark, Wilson Carlile (1944); M. Burn, The Pearl Divers: Pictures from the Life and Work of Prebendary Carlile (1920); A. E. Reffold, Seven Stars: The Story of a Fifty Years' War. A Résumé of the Life and Work of Wilson Carlile and the Church Army (1931; reissued as 'The Audacity to Live', 1938). Id. in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 134–6.

Carlisle. Acc. to *Simeon of Durham, Carlisle and an estate extending 15 miles around it was given by Ecgfrith, King of Northumberland, to St *Cuthbert when he became Bp. of *Lindisfarne in 685; there is also other evidence associating Cuthbert with Carlisle. The region seems to have remained part of the diocese of Lindisfarne/*Durham until 1101, when it passed to *York. In 1133 Carlisle became the centre of a new diocese created for the part of the former kingdom of Strathclyde south of the Solway after its annexation by William II. The first bishop was Aethelwulf, Prior of Nostell, and prob. also of the house of *Augustinian Canons, founded in Carlisle by Henry I *c.*1122. Their priory church became the new cathedral, the only one in England served by this order, but the vacancy in the see of nearly 50 years after Aethelwulf's death in 1156/7 hampered work on the building; it was completed *c.*1280 and largely destroyed by fire in 1292. Because of the impoverishment of the diocese by the Anglo-Scottish wars beginning in 1296, rebuilding was slow during the 14th cent.; the N. transept and central tower were completed by Bp. William Strickland (Bp. 1400–19). The Augustinian priory was dissolved in 1540, its lands and revenues being used to endow a new cathedral establishment. The post-Reformation bishops were greatly concerned to extirpate RCism and improve standards of religious observance, but the cathedral fell into disrepair and five bays of the nave were demolished between 1649 and 1652. The cathedral was extensively restored in 1764 and again between 1853 and 1856. Its chief glory is the 14th-cent. E. window. In 1856 the diocese was enlarged by the addition of parts of southern Cumbria, formerly in the diocese of *Chester. Notable bishops include James *Ussher (who held the see *in commendam, 1642–56), Edward Rainbowe (1664–84), William Nicholson (1702–18), and Harvey Goodwin (1869–91).

The Register of John de Halton, Bishop of Carlisle A.D. 1292–1324, transcribed by W. N. Thompson, with an introd. by T. F. Tout (*Canterbury and York Society, 12 and 13; 1913); The Register of John Kirkby, Bishop of Carlisle 1332–1352, and the Register of John Ross, Bishop of Carlisle, 1325–31, ed. R. L. Storey (ibid. 79, etc.; 1993 ff.). Extant records of the see listed in the Ninth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, part 1 (1863), pp. 177–97. The Statutes of the Cathedral Church of Carlisle, ed. with introd. by J. E. Prescott (Carlisle, 1879). J. Nicolson and R. Burn, The History and Antiquities of the Counties of Westmorland and Cumberland, 2 (1777), pp. 243–310. C. M. L. Bouch, Prelates and People of the Lake Counties: A History of the Diocese of Carlisle 1133–1933 (Kendal, 1948). H. Summerson, Medieval Carlisle: The City and the Borders from the late eleventh to the mid-sixteenth century (Cumberland and Westmorland Antiquarian and Archaeological Society, Extra Series, 25; 2 vols., 1993). D. R. Perriam, 'The Demolition of the Priory of St. Mary, Carlisle', Transactions of the Cumberland & Westmorland Antiquarian & Archaeological Society, 87 (1987), pp. 127–58. J. Wilson in VCH, Cumberland, 2, ed. id. (1905), pp. 131–51. J. E. Prescott in DECH (1912), pp. 95–8, s.v.; H. Dauphin, OSB, in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 1050–8.

Carlstadt (*c.*1480–1541), German reformer. He was so named from his birthplace, his real name being Andreas Bodenstein. After studying at Erfurt and *Cologne, he went to the newly founded University of *Wittenberg. Here from 1505 he taught in the faculty of arts, later in that of theology, in 1512 presiding at M. *Luther's doctoral graduation. He became known for upholding the philosophical teaching of *Thomas Aquinas and *Duns Scotus against the current trend towards *Nominalism. In 1516, on his return from a period in Rome, he engaged in a spirited controversy with Luther, who asserted that Scholasticism represented a misunderstanding of Scripture and of St *Augustine. Soon afterwards Carlstadt changed his position and himself became a vigorous upholder of the Augustinian teaching on the powerlessness of the human will and emphasis on the need for *grace. In 1517 he published 151 theses maintaining this position. In 1518 (in his 'Invectiones') he supported Luther's criticism of *indulgences and in the following year he disputed publicly with J. *Eck at Leipzig. In 1520 he was excommunicated and later in the year announced his break with the Papacy. On Christmas Day 1521 he celebrated the Eucharist in the vernacular, the first Reformer to do so; he wore no vestments, abandoned the *Canon of the Mass, made no reference to sacrifice, and communicated the laity in both kinds. In Jan. 1522 he married. His programme for reform at this stage was more radical than that of Luther and he found himself in sharp conflict with him. In 1523 he resigned his academic position and went as a preacher to Orlamünde, where he interpreted the Eucharist as only a memorial of Christ's death and also refused to baptize infants. He nevertheless declined to join T. *Müntzer in armed conflict, advocating non-violence. He also became interested in German *mysticism. In 1524 he was expelled from Saxony. In 1525, after he had issued an ambiguous recantation, he was allowed to live in the vicinity of Wittenberg on certain conditions, but, fearing imprisonment, fled in 1529, and eventually arrived in Switzerland, where he remained for the rest of his life. In 1534, after he had abandoned his opposition to *Infant Baptism, he was appointed preacher of the university church and professor of Hebrew at Basle.

Karlstadts Schriften aus den Jahren 1523–25, ed. E. Hertsch (2 vols., Halle, 1956–7). His comm. on St Augustine's De Spiritu et Litera (written 1518/19) and 151 Theses ed. E. Kähler, Karlstadt und Augustin (Hallische Monographien, 19; ibid., 1952). O. Seitz, Der authentische Text der Leipziger Disputation (1903). Eng. tr. of some texts by R. J. Sider, Karlstadt's Battle with Luther (Philadelphia [1978]). Full details of Carlstadt's writings by E. Freys and H. Barge, 'Verzeichnis der gedruckten Schriften des Andreas Bodenstein von Karlstadt', Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, 21 (1904), pp. 153–79, 209–43, 305–31; repr. separately, Nieuwkoop, 1965, supplemented by A. Zorzin, Karlstadt als Flugschriftenautor (Göttinger Theologische Arbeiten, 48; 1990), pp. 273–307. H. Barge, Andreas Bodenstein von Karlstadt (2 vols., Leipzig, 1905); F. Kriechbaum, Grundzüge der Theologie Karlstadts (Theologische Forschung, 43; Hamburg, 1967); R. J. Sider, Andreas Bodenstein von Karlstadt: The Development of his Thought 1517–1525 (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 11; Leiden, 1974); U. Bubenheimer, Consonantia Theologiae et Jurisprudentiae: Andreas Bodenstein von Karlstadt als Theologe und Jurist zwischen Scholastik und Reformation (Jus Ecclesiasticum, 24; Tübingen, 1977); C. A. Pater, Karlstadt as the Father of the Baptist Movements (Toronto, etc. [1984]). U. Bubenheimer in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 649–57, s.v. 'Karlstadt, Andreas Rudolff Bodenstein von'.

Carlyle, Thomas (1795–1881), Scottish historian, essayist, and moral teacher. Educated at Edinburgh University, he later was elected its rector (1866). His religious influence (which alone can be referred to here) has been widespread, for though he hated creeds, churches, and theologies, he had a profound belief in God and was convinced that 'the Religious Principle lies unseen in the hearts of all good men'. As an idealist who believed that matter exists only spiritually, he was the relentless foe of all materialistic philosophy and, through such works as Sartor Resartus (1833–4), On Heroes, Hero-worship, & the Heroic in History (1841), and Past and Present (1843), which exposed worldly pleasure-seeking and money-making, he became the religious teacher of thousands. His independent, critical outlook rejected organized Christianity, but there was as much of the prophet as the poet in him and he consistently preached that the 'Everlasting Yea' is to love God.

Collected Works in 15 vols. (1857–8), in 17 vols. (1885–8), and 'Centenary Edition' by H. D. Traill in 30 vols. (1896–9). The Collected Letters of Thomas and Jane Welsh Carlyle [his wife], ed. C. R. Sanders and others (Durham, NC, 1970 ff.). There are also collections of Thomas Carlyle's correspondence with Goethe, ed. C. E. Norton (London, 1887); with R. W. *Emerson, ed. J. Slater (London and New York, 1964); and with J. *Ruskin, ed. G. A. Cate (Stanford, Calif., 1982). J. A. Froude (ed.), Reminiscences by Thomas Carlyle (2 vols., 1881) and Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh Carlyle (3 vols., 1883). Id., Thomas Carlyle, 1795–1835 (2 vols., 1882); id., Thomas Carlyle, 1834–1881 (2 vols., 1884). Modern Lives by D. A. Wilson (6 vols., London, 1923–34 [exhaustive but uncrit.]) and F. Kaplan (Cambridge, 1983). J.

Symons, Thomas Carlyle: The Life and Ideals of a Prophet (1952). A. A. Ikeler, Puritan Temper and Transcendental Faith: Carlyle's Literary Vision (Columbus, Oh. [1972]); E. M. Behnken, Thomas Carlyle: 'Calvinist Without the Theology' (University of Missouri Studies, 66; 1978); J. D. Rosenberg, Carlyle and the Burden of History (Oxford, 1985); R. apRoberts, The Ancient Dialect: Thomas Carlyle and Comparative Religion (Berkeley, Calif., etc., 1988). R. L. Tarr, Thomas Carlyle: A Bibliography of English-Language Criticism 1824–1974 (Charlottesville, Va., 1976); id., Thomas Carlyle: A Descriptive Bibliography (Oxford, 1989).

Carmel, Mount. The high ridge in N. Palestine, immediately above the modern port of Haifa. Its caves, which were inhabited over 150,000 years ago, are of great interest to archaeologists. Mount Carmel was the scene of the contest described in 1 Kgs. 18 between *Elijah and the prophets of *Baal. About AD 500 a church was built there, and a monastery founded by Greek monks. In the Middle Ages it became famous as the home of the *Carmelite Order. The feast of 'Our Lady of Mount Carmel' (16 July) is now an optional memorial.

F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 1 (1933), pp. 350–3. The Stone Age of Mount Carmel, vol. 1 by D. A. E. Garrod and D. M. A. Bate (Oxford, 1937); vol. 2 by T. D. McCown and A. Keith (ibid., 1939). M. Avi-Yonah, 'Mount Carmel and the God of Baalbek', Israel Exploration Journal, 2 (1952), pp. 118–24. O. Eissfeldt, Der Gott Karmel (Sb. (Berl.), Klasse für Sprachen, Literatur und Kunst, Jahrgang 1953, Nr. 1; 1954), with refs. T. Noy and E. Wreschner in M. Avi-Yonah (ed.), Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 1 (1975), pp. 290–8, s.v. 'Carmel Caves'.

Carmelites. The 'Order of the Brothers of Our Lady of Mount Carmel' dates from the late 12th cent. The revival of the eremitical life in the W. Church and of *pilgrimages to the sites associated with Christ's earthly life during the *Crusades led many to adopt the solitary life in various places in the Holy Land, but by the end of the 12th cent. only those on Mt. *Carmel were securely within the Frankish Kingdom. A group of hermits living there accepted a rule written *c.*1208 by St Albert, the Latin Patr. of *Jerusalem. They built a church dedicated to the BVM, from which they took their title, but saw *Elijah as their model in the contemplative life. Albert's Rule echoes the traditional style of Palestinian *lavrae. Each hermit was allotted a cave-dwelling, where he was to remain 'day and night' praying continually. It also prescribed a daily Eucharist and the recitation of the Psalter, perpetual abstinence from meat, and an annual fast from the Feast of the *Exaltation of the Cross (Sept. 14) to *Easter.

By the middle of the 13th cent. the instability of the Crusader kingdom led some of the hermits to migrate to Europe and by 1242 foundations had been made in Cyprus, Sicily, France, and England. In 1247 Pope *Innocent IV gave permission for foundations to be made not only in desert places, but in towns and cities, for meals to be taken in common, and for the canonical *hours to be recited in place of the Psalter. The undertaking of public preaching and permission to accept alms brought the Carmelites into the class of *Mendicant Friars. They grew rapidly. During the 14th and 15th cent. communities of women were associated to the Order; wearing the Carmelite habit, they adopted the Rule of Albert and were formally incorporated into the Order in 1432. Also, groups of lay people became affiliated to the Order; members of these confraternities wore part of the Carmelite habit, either the white mantle (from which the Carmelites were known as Whitefriars) or the brown *scapular (on which see SIMON STOCK, ST).

In 1432 Pope *Eugenius IV approved a second mitigation of the Rule, relaxing the abstinence from meat and the obligation of silence. This, together with the decline in religious observance in the later Middle Ages, led to attempts to reform and renew the Order. Congregations of reform included those at Mantua and Albi. Under John Soreth (Prior General 1451–71) the existence of reformed houses (sometimes referred to as *Observants in contrast to the *Conventuals) was encouraged in the revised constitutions of 1456. The best known of the reforms was that begun by St *Teresa of Avila who founded many convents following the 'Primitive Rule' of Carmel, and her own Constitutions for *Discalced Nuns. Her disciple St *John of the Cross was among the first friars to follow her reform in Spain.

After losing the French provinces during the Revolution and suffering from the anti-monastic legislation of the Napoleonic era, the Carmelites have rebuilt their European provinces and expanded in the New and Third World. The Carmelite family today consists of three orders of men; the Carmelite Friars (of the Ancient Observance); the Discalced Carmelite Friars (who look to the 'Teresian Reform' as their special inspiration); and the Carmelites of Mary Immaculate (founded in India in 1831). In addition to the enclosed communities of Carmelite Nuns, there are many congregations of active Carmelite Sisters, and *Secular Institutes of lay people. All share in a particular devotion to the BVM, esp. to 'Our Lady of Mt. Carmel' (feast day, 16 July). In the Middle Ages Carmelite theologians were among the earliest defenders of the *Immaculate Conception. Well-known Carmelites, besides those already mentioned, include T. *Netter, St *Mary Magdalene de' Pazzi, St *Teresa of Lisieux, and Bl. Edith *Stein.

J. B. de Lezana, OCC, Annales Sacri, Prophetici et Eliani Ordinis Beatae Virginis Mariae de Monte Carmeli (4 vols., Rome, 1645–56). [C. de Villiers de St-Étienne,] Bibliotheca Carmelitana: Notis Criticis et Dissertationibus Illustrata (2 vols., Orléans, 1752; repr. with suppl. material by G. Wessels, OCC, Rome, 1927). Collection of texts relating to the early history ed. A. Staring, O. Carm., Medieval Carmelite Heritage (Textus et Studia Carmelitana, 16; Rome, 1989). J. Smet, O. Carm., The Carmelites: A History of the Brothers of Our Lady of Mount Carmel (4 vols. in 5; vols. 2–4, Darien, Ill., 1976–88; vol. 1 first pub. Rome, 1975, but rev. [much improved] edn., Darien, 1988) [the most authoritative history]. Id., Cloistered Carmel: A Brief History of the Carmelite Nuns (Rome, 1986). Earlier general works incl. L. van den Bossche, Les Carmes (1930) and H. Peltier, Histoire du Carmel [1958]. S. Possanzini, O. Carm., La Regola dei Carmelitani: Storia e spiritualità (Florence, 1979). L. C. Sheppard, The English Carmelites (1943). P. W. Janssen, OCC, Les Origines de la réforme des Carmes en France au XVII^e siècle (Archives Internationales d'Histoire des Idées, 4; The Hague, 1963). Monumenta Historica Carmelitana (Lérins, 1905 ff.). Analecta Ordinis Carmelitarum (Rome, 1908 ff.). B. Zimmerman, ODC, in CE 3 (1908), pp. 354–70, s.v.; Melchior de Ste-Marie, OCD, in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 1070–104, s.v. 'Carmel (Ordre de Notre-Dame du Mont-Carmel)', with bibl.; Bl T. Brandsma, OCC, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 156–71, s.v. 'Carmes'. The Carmelites and their branches are comprehensively treated by various authors in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 398–605, with bibl.

On the Discalced Carmelites see also Constitutiones Fratrum Discalceatorum Congregationis S. Eliae Ordinis Beatissimae Virginis Mariae de Monte Carmelo (Paris, 1638). Chroniques de l'ordre des Carmélites de la réforme de Sainte-Thérèse depuis leur introduction en France (5 vols., Troyes, 1846–65; 2nd ser., 4 vols., Poitiers, 1888–9). Silverio de Santa Teresa, OCD, Historia del Carmo Descalzo en España, Portugal y América (15 vols., Burgos, 1935–52). L. Saggi, O. Carm., Le Origini dei Carmelitani Scalzi 1567 1593: Storia et Storiografia (Textus et Studia Carmelitana, 14; 1986). Études carmélitaines (Paris, 1911 ff.); Analecta Ordinis Carmelitarum Discalceatorum (Rome, 1926 ff.); Ephemerides Carmeliticae (Florence, 1947 ff.), with supplementary Archivum Bibliographicum Carmelitanum (Rome, 1956 ff.). Gabriel de Sainte-Marie-Magdaleine, OCD, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 171–209, s.v. 'Carmes Déchaussés', with bibl.

carnival. Popular etymology derives the word from caro vale, i.e. 'good-bye flesh'; but more probable is the derivation from carnem levare, 'to put away flesh-meat'. It is the name given in RC countries to the period before *Lent, whether it be the three days immediately previous, or the whole period between 3 Feb. and *Ash Wednesday. Such seasons of feasting and dancing early degenerated into riots, hence the transference of the word to secular festive occasions.

carol. A song of joy, originally accompanying a dance; now applied esp. to traditional and popular songs of a religious character. The word is from the Italian carola, a 'ring dance' (from carolare, 'to sing'). Historically the carol differs from the hymn in being a popular, and often unpolished, reflection on a religious theme, composed for informal singing, whereas the hymn was written by skilled and educated churchmen for formal use in Divine Service. Modern practice in England, where the 19th and 20th cents. have seen a considerable revival of the popularity of carols, has tended to confine the singing of them to Christmastide, and also to break down the distinction between carols and hymns, carols being often sung in church, and hymns outside the liturgy. A service of carols and lessons, introduced by E. W. *Benson, Bp. of *Truro, in 1880, was adopted by King's College, Cambridge, in 1918; as modified in the following year, it has become widely popular. There are many traditional carols for seasons other than Christmas.

P. *Dearmer, R. *Vaughan Williams and M. Shaw (eds.), The Oxford Book of Carols (1928); H. Keyte and A. Parrott (eds.), The New Oxford Book of Carols (Oxford and New York [1992]); R. L. Greene (ed.), The Early English Carols (Oxford, 1935; 2nd edn., 1977); id. (ed.), A Selection of English Carols (ibid., 1962); R. Nettel (ed.), Carols 1400–1950: A Book of Christmas Carols (1956). E. Poston (ed.), The Penguin Book of Christmas Carols (Harmondsworth, 1965). E. Routley, The English Carol (1958), with bibl.

Caroline Books, the (Libri Carolini). A treatise compiled *c.*790–2, which purports to have been written by *Charlemagne, but is manifestly the work of a skilled theologian. It was an attack on the *Iconoclastic Council of 754 (for forbidding images altogether) and *Nicaea II of 787 (for allowing excessive reverence to be paid to them). Its true purpose may be explained by Charlemagne's known irritation with the Greek empress, Irene, and his wish, by discrediting Greek authority of whatever kind, to have the more justification for assuming the Imperial title. It was long supposed that *Alcuin was its real author, but recent research has made it seem very probable that it was the work of *Theodulf of Orleans. Possibly Alcuin wrote a small part (bk. 4, chs. 14–17).

Text in J. P. Migne, PL 98. 989–1248; modern edn. by H. Bastgen in MGH, Legum Sectio III, Concilia II, Supp. (1924). Further edn. by A. Freeman in preparation. W. von den Steinen, 'Karl der Grosse und die Libri Carolini. Die tironischen Randnoten zum Codex Authenticus', NA 49 (1931), pp. 207–80. D. de Bruyne, 'La Composition des Libri Carolini', R. Bén., 44 (1932), pp. 227–34. A. Freeman, 'Theodulf of Orleans and the Libri Carolini', Speculum, 32 (1957), pp. 663–705; id., 'Further Studies in the Libri Carolini', ibid. 40 (1965), pp. 203–89, and 46 (1971), pp. 597–612; id., 'Carolingian Orthodoxy and the Fate of the Libri Carolini', Viator, 16 (1985), pp. 65–108; id., 'Additions and corrections to the Libri Carolini: links with Alcuin and the Adoptionist controversy', in S. Krämer and M. Bernhard (eds.), Scire litteras (Abh. (Bayr.), NF 99; 1988), pp. 159–69. L. Wallach, Diplomatic Studies in Latin and Greek Documents from the Carolingian Age (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1977), pp. 43–294; cf. P. Meyvaert, 'The authorship of the "Libri Carolini" ', R. Bén. 89 (1979), pp. 29–57. A. Melloni, 'L' "Opus Caroli Regis contra Synodum" o "Libri Carolini" ', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 29 (1988), pp. 873–86.

Caroline Divines. The Anglican divines of the 17th cent., esp. when considered as exponents of *High Church principles. The term is not ordinarily restricted (as the word would imply) to those who wrote esp. or solely during the reigns of *Charles I (1625–49) and *Charles II (1660–85), but it is taken to include such theologians as L. *Andrewes (d. 1626). See also ANGLICANISM.

Many of their writings repr. in the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology, 1841 ff. See also P. E. More and F. L. Cross, Anglicanism: The Thought and Practice of the Church of England, illustrated from the Religious Literature of the Seventeenth Century (1935). H. R. McAdoo, The Structure of Caroline Moral Theology (1949); id., The Spirit of Anglicanism: A Survey of Anglican Theological Method in the Seventeenth Century (1965); C. F. Allison, The Rise of Moralism: The Proclamation of the Gospel from Hooker to Baxter (1966).

Carolingian Schools. The reign of *Charlemagne (768–814) stimulated an intellectual Renaissance within his domains which continued throughout the 9th cent. and left its mark upon the future history of education. The responsibility for this revival largely rested with Charlemagne himself, and his advisers *Alcuin and *Theodulf of Orléans. By establishing new schools and patronizing scholars he hoped to diminish the illiteracy of the Frankish clergy. In 787 he issued a *capitulary of Baugulf, Abbot of *Fulda, ordering that in all monasteries and bishops' houses there should be study and 'let those who can, teach'. This prescription, which has been termed the 'charter of modern education', was followed in 789 by another capitulary ordering that 'there may be schools for reading-boys; let them learn psalms, notes, chants, the computus and grammar, in every monastery and bishop's house'. Further capitularies (e.g. that of 805) confirmed and elaborated Charlemagne's educational legislation. Through his initiative a Palace School was formed for the cultivation of the *seven liberal arts, which was attended by members of the court as well as the boy lectors of the royal chapel, children of the nobility, and even plebeians. It was probably the first school to give a classical education to members of the laity in any number.

During this period the chief schools were connected with cathedrals and monasteries, the school of Alcuin at Tours being the model for the rest. Of the episcopal schools, those at Orléans (under Theodulf) and at *Reims (later to be under *Hincmar and *Remigius of Auxerre) were the most distinguished. Of the schools more directly connected with monasteries, the schools at Fulda under *Rabanus Maurus, a breeding-ground for scholars, at *Corbie under Adalhard and *Paschasius Radbertus, at Ferrières under *Lupus Servatus, at St Wandrille, at St *Gall, and at St Riquier, were all notable for their scholarship.

The Carolingian Schools were not outstanding for originality of thought. Alcuin's primers, on orthography, grammar, rhetoric, and dialectic, are by modern standards very crude productions. The main purpose, for instance, why he taught mathematics was to enable pupils to calculate the dates of Church festivals. Even his interpretation of theology was quite elementary. There are many indications (e.g. decrees of the Councils of Paris, 824; of Mainz, 847; of Savonnières, 859) that the educational legislation of Charlemagne was not effectively carried out in the declining years of the Carolingian era. Nevertheless many schools (e.g. St Gall), thus stimulated by the Carolingian revival, maintained a high reputation through the early Middle Ages as educational centres. Finally the responsibility for restoring Latin to the position of a literary language and the formation of a more accurate orthography largely rests with the scholars of these schools, whilst editions and copies of the classics, both Christian and pagan, were produced which to some extent were to form in a later period the bases of Renaissance scholarship itself.

G. Monod, Études critiques sur les sources de l'histoire carolingienne (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 119; 1898), ch. 2, 'La Renaissance carolingienne', pp. 37–67; E. Patzelt, Die karolingische Renaissance (Vienna, 1924; 2nd edn., with additional material by C. Vogel, Graz, 1965). R. McKitterick, The Frankish Church and the Carolingian Reforms, 789 895 (1977); id., The Frankish Kingdoms under the Carolingians, 751 987 (1983); P. Riché, Les Écoles et l'enseignement dans l'Occident chrétien de la fin du V^e siècle au milieu du XI^e siècle (1979); J. [A.] Marenbon, From the Circle of Alcuin to the School of Auxerre: Logic, Theology and Philosophy in the Early Middle Ages (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 15; 1981); J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 205–389. P. Godman (ed.), Poetry of the Carolingian Renaissance (1985; extracts, with Eng. tr. and substantial introd.), id., Poets and Emperors: Frankish Politics and Carolingian Poetry (Oxford, 1987). Various papers by B. Bischoff, from 1964 onwards, repr. in his Mittelalterliche Studien, 3 (Stuttgart, 1981), esp. pp. 1–54 and 149–212. C. R. Dodwell, Painting in Europe 800–1200 (Pelican History of Art, 1971), esp. pp. 15–44. M. L. W. Laistner, Thought and Letters in Western Europe, A.D. 500–900 (1931), pp. 147–325; 2nd edn. (1957), pp. 187–386. Manitius, 1, pp. 243–718. See also bibl. to ALCUIN, CHARLEMAGNE, and THEODULF OF ORLÉANS.

Carpenter, Joseph Estlin (1844–1927), English *Unitarian divine. The grandson of L. *Carpenter (q.v.), he was educated at University College, London. After some years as Unitarian minister at Clifton, Bristol (1866–1869) and Mill Hill, Leeds (1869–75), he became lecturer at Manchester New College, first at London (1875–89) and then at Oxford (1889–1906). From 1906 to 1915 he was principal of Manchester College. One of the chief figures in modern Unitarianism, he was widely respected for his extensive knowledge in comparative religion, Semitic literature, and other religious subjects. His writings include The First Three Gospels (1890), *The Composition of the Hexateuch (1902), Comparative Religion (in the Home University Library, 1913), and The Johannine Writings (1927). He was also the English translator of vols. 3 to 5 of G. H. A. *Ewald's History of Israel.

Joseph Estlin Carpenter: A Memorial Volume, ed. C. H. Herford (1929). J. H. Weatherall in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 161 f.

Carpenter, Lant (1780–1840), *Unitarian minister. Educated at dissenting schools and at Glasgow University (1798–1801), he became a Unitarian minister, and from 1802 to 1805 was librarian of the Liverpool Athenaeum. Afterwards he was headmaster and pastor at boarding schools, first at *Exeter (1805–17) and then at Bristol (1817–29), where Harriet and James *Martineau were among his pupils. He was drowned near Naples on 5–6 Apr. 1840.

Carpenter did much to foster a more liberal spirit in English Unitarianism. In 1825, on the amalgamation of three older societies into the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, he was instrumental in expunging from the constitution of the new body a preamble branding Trinitarianism as idolatrous. He continued, however, to regard Baptism as superstitious, substituting a form of dedication of infants. Among his many works were Unitarianism, the Doctrine of the Gospels (1809), and Systematic Education (2 vols., 1815).

R. L. Carpenter (son), Memoirs of the Life of the Rev. Lant Carpenter, LLD (1842). A. Gordon in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 157–9.

Carpenter, William Boyd (1841–1918), Bp. of *Ripon. Educated at St Catharine's College, Cambridge, he held a succession of parish appointments in which he rapidly gained a great reputation as a preacher. Much liked by Queen Victoria, he was appointed a Royal Chaplain in 1879, Canon of Windsor in 1882, and Bp. of Ripon in 1884 (resigned, 1911). In 1898 he founded the Ripon Clergy College, which moved in 1919 to Oxford (where it was renamed 'Ripon Hall') and in 1933 to a site just outside Oxford on Boars Hill; in 1975 it was merged with Cuddesdon College to form Ripon College, Cuddesdon. From 1911 until his death Carpenter was a Canon of *Westminster. His influence in the later 19th cent. was far-reaching, but his prolific writings have little permanent interest.

H. D. A. Major, The Life and Letters of William Boyd Carpenter (1925). Id. in DNB, 1912 1921, p. 94.

Carpocrates (2nd cent.), *Gnostic teacher. He was probably a native of *Alexandria. His disciples, the 'Carpocratians', who survived till the 4th cent., preached a licentious ethic, the transmigration of souls, and the doctrine that Jesus was born by natural generation. His son, Epiphanes, wrote a treatise 'On Justice', in which, under the influence of *Plato's 'Republic', he advocated a community of women and goods.

*Irenaeus, Adv. haer. 1. 25; *Hippolytus, Haer. 7. 32; *Clement, Strom. 3. 2–6. Texts conveniently pr. in W. Völker (ed.), Quellen zur Geschichte der christlichen Gnosis (1932), pp. 33–8; Eng. tr. of texts in W. Foerster (ed.), Gnosis, 1 (Eng. tr., Oxford, 1972), pp. 36–40. H. Liboron, Die Karpokratianische Gnosis: Untersuchungen zur Geschichte und Anschauungswelt eines spätgnostischen Systems (Studien zur Religionswissenschaft, 3; 1938). A. Pourkier, L'hérésiologie chez Épiphane de Salamine (Christianisme Antique, 4 [1992]), pp. 257–89. G. *Salmon in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 407–9, s.v.; E. Peterson in EC 3 (1949), cols. 929 f., s.v. 'Carpocrate e Carpocraziani'.

Carpzov. A family of German theologians and lawyers. Among those most distinguished in ecclesiastical affairs were:

(1) Benedikt (1595–1666), who founded the earliest complete system of Protestant ecclesiastical law, in his Jurisprudentia ecclesiastica seu consistorialis (1649).

(2) Johann Benedikt I (1607–57), his brother, who first systematized the *Lutheran creeds in his Isagoge in libros ecclesiarum Lutheranarum symbolicos (1665).

(3) Johann Benedikt II (1639–99) and (4) Samuel Benedikt (1647–1707), his sons, who were engaged in the *Pietist controversy, Johann maintaining the traditional position and Samuel supporting the Pietists, until won over by his elder brother.

(5) Johann Gottlob (1679–1767), son of (4), who was among the foremost orthodox OT scholars of his day in Germany, and attacked the Pietists, the *Moravians, and the first liberal Biblical critics. (See esp. Introductio in libros Veteris Testamenti (1714–21) and Critica sacra (1728).)

(6) Johann Benedikt III (1720–1803), grandson of (3). A classical scholar and theologian, he attacked the rationalism of W. A. Teller (1734–1804) in his Liber doctrinalis theologiae purioris (1768); he was also an authority on the NT and on *patristics.

Carroll, John (1735–1815), Abp. of Baltimore and first bishop of the RC hierarchy in the USA. A native of Upper Marlborough, Maryland, he was educated at *St-Omer in Flanders. He entered the *Jesuit noviciate in 1753, was ordained priest in 1769, and during the next four years taught philosophy and theology at St-Omer and Liège. After the suppression of the Jesuits in 1773 he returned to Maryland in 1774, where he led the life of a missionary, and actively supported the movement for political independence. In 1776 he took part in the embassy of B. Franklin to Canada, and, partly through Franklin's influence, was appointed by the Pope in 1784 Superior of the Missions, a step which made the Church in the USA independent of the *Vicars Apostolic in England. The priests of Maryland having petitioned *Pius VI in 1788 for a bishop for the USA, Carroll was appointed in 1789. In 1790 he was consecrated in the chapel of Lulworth Castle, Dorset, to the see of Baltimore. Here he did a great work in consolidating the RC Church. In 1808 he was made an archbishop, and his enormous diocese was divided into four sees. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

T. O'B. Hanley, SJ (ed.), The John Carroll Papers (3 vols., Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1976]). P. Guilday, The Life and Times of John Carroll (New York, 1922), incl. full bibl.; A. M. Melville, John Carroll of Baltimore (ibid. [1955]). J. Hennesey, SJ, 'An Eighteenth Century Bishop: John Carroll of Baltimore', Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, 16 (1978), pp. 171–204. Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 462 f. R. J. Purcell in Dict. Amer. Biog. 3 (1929), pp. 526–8. A. M. Melville in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 151–4, s.v.

Carstares, William (1649–1715), statesman and Scottish *Presbyterian divine. Educated at the universities of Edinburgh (1663–7) and Utrecht (*c.*1669–72), he was probably ordained in the Dutch Reformed Church. While in the Netherlands he was introduced to William of Orange, then seeking British agents. His subsequent activities led to spells of imprisonment in both England and Scotland (1674–9 and 1683–4). In 1684 he was severely tortured and tricked into naming his associates before release and return to the Netherlands. He accompanied William to England in 1688, and conducted the thanksgiving service on the beach at Torbay. He thereafter became the King's principal adviser on Scottish affairs, acquiring a high reputation for wisdom, integrity, and fearlessness. A leading figure in the re-establishment of Presbyterianism in Scotland (1690), he became Principal of the University of Edinburgh in 1703, was four times *Moderator of the General Assembly (1705, 1708, 1711 and 1715), and played an influential part in securing Scottish acceptance of the Act of Union in 1707. Combining loyalty to the old faith with a new tolerance and sense of the possible, his life was a bridge between the *Covenanters of one century and the *Moderates of the next.

J. McCormick (ed.), State-Papers and Letters addressed to William Carstares (Edinburgh, 1774), with Life, pp. 3–102. A. I. Dunlop, William Carstares and the Kirk by Law Established (Chalmers Lectures, 1964; Edinburgh, 1967). J. B. P. Bulloch in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 94–106. Æ. Mackay in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 187–90.

Carta Caritatis. The 'Charter of Love', so called in opposition to the obligatory charters of the *Cluniac Order, was the document outlining the constitution of the *Cistercian Order, and was presented in 1119 to Pope *Callistus II. In its final form, *c.*1155, it is a masterly and novel outline of a religious order of autonomous houses forming a family; it established annual visitation of each house by the abbot of the house which founded it, and an annual General Chapter with legislative and judicial powers. There are also instructions for abbatial elections and the correction of delinquent abbots and monasteries. The Charter, short as it is, has in recent years been subjected to intensive textual criticism, and it has been divided with great probability into a nucleus, the work of *Stephen Harding, and successive additions, but controversy continues.

The official text ed. P. Guignard, Les Monuments primitifs de la Règle cistercienne (Dijon, 1878), pp. 76–84; crit. edn. by J. de la C. Bouton, OCR, and J. B. Van Damme, OCR Les plus anciens Textes de Cîteaux (Cîteaux—Commentarii Cistercienses, 2; Achel, 1974), pp. 87–106. J.-B. Auberger, OFM, L'Unanimité cistercienne primitive: Mythe ou réalité? (Cîteaux: Studia et documenta, 3; ibid., 1986), pp. 21–41. Account of controversy to date in [M.] D. *Knowles, The Monastic Order in England (2nd edn., Cambridge, 1963), pp. 752 f. P. Zakar, O. Cist., in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 609–13, s.v.

Carter, Thomas Thellusson (1808–1901), second generation *Tractarian divine. Educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, he left Oxford before the *Oxford Movement began; but when, after a succession of parochial appointments, he became Rector of Clewer, near Windsor, in 1844, he had come deeply under Tractarian influence. In 1849 he founded at Clewer a House of Mercy for the rescue of fallen women, and in 1852 a sisterhood, the Community of St John the Baptist (CSJB), to take charge of it. Throughout the rest of his life he continued to take a prominent part in the High Church Movement, esp. through the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, the *English Church Union, and the *Society of the Holy Cross. He was the author of a long series of spiritual and controversial writings, including the widely used Treasury of Devotion (1869).

W. H. Hutchings, Life and Letters of Thomas Thellusson Carter (1903). A. M. Allchin, The Silent Rebellion: Anglican Religious Communities, 1845–1900 (1958), pp. 69–84. A. R. Buckland in DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 319–21, s.v.

Cartesianism. The set of philosophical principles embodied in the teaching of R. *Descartes (1596–1650).

Carthage, Councils of. The early ecclesiastical Councils held at Carthage fall naturally into four groups:

(1) Those under St *Cyprian in 251, 252, 254, 255, and 256. At the earlier of these Councils the chief subject was the reconciliation of those who had lapsed during the *Decian Persecution, at the later ones the dispute with Rome about the re-*baptism of heretics.

(2) Those under Gratus *c.*348 and Genethlius 390. These are the earliest African Councils of which collections of canons survive.

(3) Those under *Aurelius. There is a long series extending from 393 to 424, the most celebrated being that of May 419, when the claims of Rome to exercise jurisdiction over Africa were strongly contested (see APIARIUS). To this Council belongs the extended collection of canons (most of them taken over from earlier Councils) known as the 'Codex Canonum Ecclesiae Africanae'.

(4) Those under Boniface, Bp. of Carthage, in 525 and 534. The canons of only the former of these Councils survive.

The texts will be found in the standard collections of *Hardouin and J. D. *Mansi. For the later Councils, crit. edn. by J. Munier, Concilia Africae A. 345—A. 525 (CCSL 149; 1974), pp. 2–19, 67–247, and 254–360, and S. Lancel, Gesta Conlationis Carthaginiensis anno 411 (ibid. 149A; 1974), pp. 1–257; the latter is also ed., with Fr. tr., as Actes de la Conférence de Carthage en 411 (SC 194, 195, and 224; 1972–5; complementary material in vol. 4, SC 373; 1991). F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts in Abendlande bis zum Ausgange des Mittelalters, 1 (1870), pp. 149–85. F. L. Cross, 'History and Fiction in the African Canons', JTS NS 12 (1961), pp. 227–47. J. Gaudemet, Les Sources du Droit de l'Église en occident du IIe au VIIe siècle (1985), pp. 79–83 and 104 f.

Carthusian Order. This strictly contemplative order was founded by St *Bruno, in 1084, at the *Grande Chartreuse (whence its name). At first it had no special Rule, though it demanded perfect mortification and renunciation of the world. The monks were vowed to silence and, by Bruno's orders, each lived in his own cell within the monastery, working and devoting several hours daily to mental prayer, and meeting his brethren for the *Office, for the conventual *Mass, and for meals only on feast days. Between 1121 and 1128 *Guigo I, the fifth Prior of the Grande Chartreuse, compiled as their Rule the 'Consuetudines Cartusiae', which in 1133 received the approbation of Innocent II. This with the resolutions made by the General Chapters since *c.*1140 constituted the 'Antiquae Consuetudines' promulgated by the General Chapter in 1271. Further additions were made a century later (the 'Novae Constitutiones'), in 1509 ('Tertia Compilatio'), and in 1581 ('Nova Collectio Statutorum'). This whole body of material is known as the 'Statuta'. The elaboration of the Carthusian Rule, however, has hardly modified (except in the number of fasts) the austerity and self-denial characteristic of the order from the beginning. The basis of Carthusian custom was and is a combination of *Benedictine monachism and eremitical *asceticism.

The history of the order has been comparatively uneventful, the most notable incident being a division within the order caused by the *Great Schism (1378–1409), which was healed by the resignation of the two *Generals and the election of a third in their place. The order was one of the least affected by the decline of monasticism in the late Middle Ages. During the Reformation a number of English Carthusians were put to death by *Henry VIII, but in Spain, France, and Italy the order was prosperous. The Carthusians suffered badly during the French Revolution, and though much of their property was restored in 1816, the *anticlerical legislation of 1901 once again drove them from the Grande Chartreuse. Most of them found refuge in Spain. In 1940 they returned to the Grande Chartreuse. The headquarters of the English Carthusians is now the Charterhouse at Parkminster, W. Sussex (est. 1883). Their habit is white, with a white leather belt.

The Carthusians have numbered among their members many mystics and devotional writers. The most famous of English Carthusians is St *Hugh, from *c.*1180 the third prior of the first English Charterhouse founded at Witham in Somerset *c.*1178/9, and later Bp. of *Lincoln (1186–1200).

The order also includes a few houses of nuns who live under a similar Rule to the monks. The government of the order rests with the General, who is the Prior of the Grande Chartreuse, elected by the monks of his house, and a General Chapter, consisting of the visitors and priors, which meets every year.

Annales Ordinis Cartusiensis ab anno 1084 ad annum 1429, begun by C. Le Couteulx, Ord. Cart. (1687), ed. and cont. by Carthusians of Montreuil (8 vols., 1887–91). M. Tromby, Ord. Cart., Storia critico-cronologica diplomatica del patriarca S. Brunone e del suo Ordine Cartusiano (Naples, 1773–79). L. Vasseur, Ord. Cart., Ephemerides Ordinis Cartusiensis (ed. by Carthusians of Montreuil, 4 vols., 1890–92). V. M. Doreau, Les Éphémérides de l'ordre des Chartreux (4 vols., Montreuil, 1897–1900). C. Bohic, Ord. Cart., Chronica Ordinis Carthusiensis, ab anno 1084 ad annum 1510 (4 vols., Parkminster, 1911–54). J. Hogg (ed.), Analecta Cartusiana (Salzburg, 1970 ff.). A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'La Chronique des premiers Chartreux', Revue Mabillon, 16 (1926), pp. 77–141. [M. Laporte], Aux Sources de la vie cartusienne (6 vols., St-Pierre-de-Chartreuse, 1960–67, incl. edn. of 'Consuetudines Cartusiae' in vol. 4). The 'Consuetudines Cartusiae' also ed., with Fr. tr., by Un Chartreux (SC 313; 1984). Lettres des premiers Chartreux, ed. by Un Chartreux (ibid. 88 and 274; 1962–80; 2nd edn. of vol. 1, 1988). E. Baumann, Les Chartreux ('Les Grands Ordres monastiques', 1928); M. Zadnikar (ed.), Die Kartäuser: Die Orden der schweigenden Mönche (Cologne, 1983). Anon., Maisons de l'ordre des Chartreux: vues et notices (4 vols., 1913–19). E. M. Thompson, The Carthusian Order in England (CHS NS 3, 1930); [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, The Monastic Order in England (1940; 2nd edn., 1963), pp. 375–91. B. Bligny, L'Église et les ordres religieux dans le royaume de Bourgogne aux XIe et XIIe siècles (1960), pp. 245–318, with bibl., pp. 490 f. J. Dubois, OSB, 'Quelques problèmes de l'histoire de l'Ordre des Chartreux à propos de livres récents', RHE 63 (1968), pp. 27–54. Various other essays by id., *Histoire monastique en France au XII*e siècle (Variorum Reprints, London, 1982), nos. 7–10. A. Gruys, Cartusiana: Un instrument heuristique (3 parts, 1976–8). Y. Gourdel, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 705–76, s.v. 'Chartreux'; Un Certosino and J. Dubois, OSB, in DIP 2 (1973), cols. 782–821, s.v. 'Certosini'. See also bibl. to BRUNO, ST, and GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

cartouche. A type of mural memorial tablet widely introduced into English churches in the 17th and 18th cents. Usually of marble, it is provided with a surface, made to resemble a somewhat bent piece of paper, for the inscription, and surrounded with ornamentation. It is often surmounted with the coat of arms of the deceased.

K. A. Esdaile, English Church Monuments, 1510–1840 (1946), plates nos. 25, 28–30.

Cartwright, Thomas (1535–1603), *Puritan divine. Elected in 1550 a scholar of St John's College, Cambridge, which at that date strongly supported Reformation doctrines, he was forced to leave the university on *Mary's accession (1553), and did not return to Cambridge till after her death, when he became successively a Fellow of Trinity, St John's, and then Trinity once more. He took an active part in the theological disputes at the university in the early years of *Elizabeth I's reign and, apparently to escape from them, retired to Ireland from 1565 to 1567. In 1569 he was appointed Lady Margaret Professor at Cambridge, a triumph for his friends, and then began vigorously to criticize the constitution of the C of E. He was deprived of his professorship in 1570 on account of his *Presbyterian views and left Cambridge for the more congenial theological atmosphere of T. *Beza's Geneva. In April 1572 he returned, but his defence of the Admonition to the Parliament involved him in a long controversy which ended with his losing his Trinity Fellowship (summer 1572). He took flight again and did not return till 1585, although from 1583 both the Earl of Leicester and Sir Francis Walsingham were giving him semi-official encouragement to write against the RC Church. On his return he took an active part in furthering Presbyterianism and the Puritan cause. When in 1590 he was arrested and tried in the Courts of *High Commission and Star Chamber, he escaped formal condemnation and was set free in 1592. On *James I's accession (1603), he took part in the Puritan petitioning of the new King, and seems to have been intended as one of the leading Puritan spokesmen at the *Hampton Court Conference, but died before it met. He was among the most gifted, able and learned of the 16th-cent. Puritans.

A. Peel and L. H. Carlson (eds.), Cartwrightiana (Elizabethan Nonconformist Texts, 1; 1951). A. F. Scott Pearson, Thomas Cartwright and Elizabethan Puritanism, 1535–1603 (1925). J. F. H. New, 'The Whitgift–Cartwright Controversy', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 59 (1968), pp. 203–11. P. [G.] Lake, Anglicans and Puritans? Presbyterianism and English Conformist Thought from Whitgift to Hooker (1988), esp. pp. 13–66. See also works cited under PURITANS.

Casaubon, Isaac (1559–1614), classical scholar. Born and educated at Geneva, he became professor at the university there in 1581. In 1586 he married the daughter of the French scholar-printer H. *Stephanus [II]. In 1596 he was appointed to a professorship at Montpellier, but in 1599 he left for Paris, where King *Henry IV gave him a pension and, in 1604, appointed him his sub-librarian. His religious opinions, which were greatly influenced by patristic studies and were opposed both to RCism and extreme *Calvinism, had long been unsettled, and after Henry's death (1610) he decided to leave for England. Appointed to a prebendal stall at *Canterbury and assigned a pension of £300 a year by *James I, he determined to make England his permanent home; but he died a few years later and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Casaubon's devotion to scholarship, both in classics and theology, was unwearied. His most important classical works were his editions of *Suetonius (which first led J. J. *Scaliger to appreciate his merits), Athenaeus, and Polybius. But if he ranks higher as a classical scholar than as a theologian, he was in fact more interested in theology than in classical literature. He wrote in defence of *Anglicanism, and in 1614 issued a severe criticism of C. *Baronius's annals. He also published (1587) a translation of the NT.

His son, Méric Casaubon (1599–1671), also an eminent scholar, was the editor of *Marcus Aurelius and other classical authors.

Ephemerides (Casaubon's diary, ed. J. Russell, 2 vols., 1850); M. *Pattison, Isaac Casaubon (1875; 2nd edn., ed. H. Nettleship, 1892). J. H. Overton in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 257–61.

Casel, Odo (1886–1948), liturgist. He entered the Benedictine monastery of *Maria Laach in 1905 and from 1922 until his sudden death he was spiritual director of the nuns at Herstelle. He was esp. concerned to expound the theological aspects of liturgy and saw in the Eucharist a re-enactment of the mysteries of Christ by his Church (Mysterienlehre). In this way he anticipated the paschal understanding of the Eucharist which was stressed a generation later during the Second *Vatican Council. He elaborated his teaching in a large number of papers, esp. in the Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft. His teaching is summarized in English in The Mystery of Christian Worship (Eng. adaptation, 1962).

A. Mayer, J. Quasten, and B. Neunheuser, OSB (eds.), Vom Christlichen Mysterium: Gesammelte Arbeiten zum Gedächtnis von Odo Casel OSB (Düsseldorf, 1951), with list of his works, pp. 363–75. A. Gozier, OSB, Dom Casel (Paris [1968]). J. Plooij, De Mysterie-Leer van Odo Casel (Zwolle, 1964; Ger. tr., 1968); A. Schilson, Theologie als Sakramententheologie: Die Mysterientheologie Odo Casels (Tübinger theologische Studien, 18; 1982). B. Neunheuser, OSB, in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 176 f.; id. in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 643–7, both s.v.

Cashel, Council of (1172). A council called by Henry II after his invasion of *Ireland and attended by Bp. Christian of Lismore as Papal legate, all the Irish hierarchy except the aged Abp. of *Armagh, and the great majority of leading churchmen, together with English clergy nominated by the King. The Irish Church was thus seen to recognize Henry II's authority. The constitutions passed by the council and intended to introduce 12th-cent. discipline to the still very irregular Irish Church have been preserved by *Giraldus Cambrensis. He also mentions a document sealed by the legate in which were set out the shortcomings of the Irish clergy and which appears to have been used by Henry II in securing letters from Pope *Alexander III confirming the subjugation of Ireland to the English Crown.

Giraldus Cambrensis, Expugnatio Hibernica, 1. 34 f., ed., with Eng. tr., by A. B. Scott and F. X. Martin (A New History of Ireland, Ancillary Publications, 3; Dublin, 1978), pp. 96–101, with notes, pp. 314 f.; also pr. in Giraldus' Works, 5, ed. J. F. Dimock (RS 21 E; 1867), pp. 280–3. J. A. Watt, The Church and the Two Nations in Medieval Ireland (Cambridge, 1970), pp. 38–41; F. X. Martin in A. Cosgrove (ed.), A New History of Ireland, 2 (Oxford, 1987), pp. 91–3.

Caspari, Carl Paul (1814–92), German-Norwegian theologian. Of Jewish descent, he was converted to Christianity in 1838. In 1847 he was appointed lector, and in 1857 professor, at the University of Christiania (Oslo). Here he made some important researches into the history of the early Church, esp. the development of the Baptismal *Creeds, which he published as Quellen zur Geschichte des Taufsymbols und der Glaubensregel (vols. 1–3, 1866–75; additional vol., 1879).

J. Belsheim in PRE 3 (3rd edn., 1897), pp. 737–42, s.v.

Cassander, Georg (1513–66), eirenic Catholic theologian. He was born at Pitthem, nr. Bruges, studied at Louvain, taught at Bruges *c.*1541 and then at Ghent, and from *c.*1549 lived at *Cologne. In his numerous writings he sought to mediate between the Catholics and the Protestants, advocating, for example, concessions by Catholics on giving Communion in both kinds and on clerical *celibacy. His chief work, De Officio Pii ac Publicae Tranquillitatis vere amantis Viri in hoc Religionis Dissidio (pub. anonymously, Basle, 1561), which took as its basis the Scriptures and the Fathers of the first six centuries, was esp. concerned to show that abuses were no sufficient reason for leaving the Catholic Church, though Cassander did not conceal his dislike of certain exaggerated Papal claims. When submitted to the Colloquy of *Poissy (1561), it gave offence to both sides. In 1564 the Emp. Ferdinand I invoked Cassander's aid in the official attempt at reunion, and to this end Cassander wrote his Consultatio de Articulis Religionis inter Catholicos et Protestantes Controversis (posthumously pub. in 1577), seeking to put a Catholic interpretation on the official Protestant formularies. The work met with strong disapproval from both sides. His other writings include Hymni Ecclesiastici (1556), De Baptismo Infantium (1563; against the *Anabaptists), and De Sacra Communione Christiani Populi in utraque Panis et Vini Specie (1564). A collected edition of his works (incomplete) was issued at Paris in 1616 and put on the *Index in the next year.

M. E. Nolte, Georgius Cassander en zijn oecumenisch Streven (1951), with Eng. summary. J. P. Dolan, CSC, The Influence of Erasmus, Witzel and Cassander in the Church Ordinances and Reform Proposals of the United Duchees [sic] of Cleve during the Middle Decades of the 16th Century (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 83; 1957), pp. 87–111; M. Erbe, 'François Bauduin und Georg Cassander. Dokumente einer Humanistenfreundschaft', Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 40 (1978), pp. 537–60. J. Baudot in DACL 2 (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2334–40, s.v. 'Cassandre'.

Cassian, John (*c.*360–after 430), monk. Acc. to *Gennadius, Cassian was 'natione Scytha', i.e. born in the Roman province of Scythia Minor (modern Dobrudja); this statement is prob. correct, despite the doubts of some scholars. As a young man he joined a monastery at *Bethlehem, but left soon after (*c.*385) to study monasticism in Egypt, where he was much influenced by *Evagrius Ponticus. We next hear of him (*c.*404) as a deacon of the Church of *Constantinople, whence he was sent by St *Chrysostom on an embassy to Pope *Innocent I. After this he seems to have established himself permanently in the W. About 415 he founded two monasteries near Marseilles; and there he wrote his two books, the 'Institutes' and the 'Conferences', out of the material collected during his years in the E. The 'Institutes', which sets out the ordinary rules for the monastic life and discusses the eight chief hindrances to a monk's perfection, was taken as the basis of many W. Rules, being drawn on, e.g., by St *Benedict. The 'Conferences' take the form of conversations with the great leaders of E. monasticism. Cassian shared the unease of many of the monks of Gaul with the extremes of St *Augustine's doctrine of *grace and attacked that doctrine in Conf. 13; his position was later called *Semipelagianism (q.v.). He also wrote *c.*430 a work in seven books 'De Incarnatione Domini' at the instance of St *Leo to acquaint the W. with the teachings of *Nestorius. The E. Church treats him as a saint, but in the W. he has never been officially canonized, Marseilles only keeping his feast on 23 July. Feast day in E., 29 Feb. (when this occurs).

Cassian's 'Conferences' pr. in 1476–8 at Brussels by the *Brethren of the Common Life; other early edns., with the 'Institutes', at Basle, 1485, Venice, 1491, and Basle, 1497. Edn. of his Works by A. Gazaeus (Gazet), 2 vols. in 3, Douai, 1616, repr. J. P. Migne, PL 49 and 50. Crit. edn. by M. Petschenig in CSEL 13 ('Collations', 1886) and 17 ('Institutes' and 'De Incarnatione Domini', 1888). Petschenig's text of the 'Conferences' repr. with slight modifications, full introd. and Fr. tr. by E. Pichery, OSB (SC 42, 54, 64; 1955–9); 'Institutes' ed., with Fr. tr. by J. C. Guy, SJ (SC 109; 1965). Eng. tr. (except Inst. 6 and Coll. 12 and 22) with good prolegomena and notes by E. C. S. Gibson in NPNCF, 2nd ser. 11 (1894), pp. 161–641. [W.] O. Chadwick, John Cassian: A Study in Primitive Monasticism (1950; 2nd edn., much rev., 1968). A. Hoch, Lehre des Johannes Cassianus von Natur und Gnade (Diss., Freiburg i.B., 1895). S. Marsili, OSB, Giovanni Cassiano ed Evagrio Pontico: Dottrina sulla carità e contemplazione (Studia Anselmiana, 5; 1936). L. Cristiani, Jean Cassien, ou la spiritualité du désert (2 vols., 1946). H.-O. Weber, Die Stellung des Johannes Cassianus zur ausserpachomianischen Mönchstradition: Eine Quellenuntersuchung (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, 24; 1961); J. C. Guy, SJ, Jean Cassien: Vie et doctrine spirituelle (1961). V. Codina, SJ, El aspecto cristológico en la espiritualidad de Juan Casiano (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 175; 1966). A. Hamman, OFM, in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 512–23. M. Cappuyns, OSB, in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 1319–48, s.v. 'Cassien, 15 (Jean)'; M. Olphe-Galliard in Dict. Sp. 1 (1953), cols. 214–76; [W.] O. Chadwick in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 650–7, s.v.

Cassinese Congregation. A monastic *Congregation of *Benedictine monks which owes its origin to a reform initiated by Ludovico Barbo at Padua in 1409. The aim of the reformers was to overcome the evil of appointing abbots *in commendam, and the congregation was characterized until the 20th cent. by the overall authority of the General

Chapter and the centralized system of appointing abbots on a temporary basis. It spread throughout Italy and was at first called the 'Congregation of Santa Giustina' or 'of Unity' (1419). After the accession of *Monte Cassino in 1504 it became known as the Cassinese Congregation. Its system had a deep effect on the reforms initiated at this period in other countries, notably those of France, Spain, and England. At its height it had 70 houses. A decline set in during the 18th cent. At the time of the French Revolution the monks were driven out and their properties taken over by the government, but a partial restoration took place after 1815. Further confiscations of property took place in the mid-19th cent. after the unification of Italy. The Cassinese Congregation today includes a number of famous monasteries, notably Monte Cassino, Cava, *St Paul's outside the Walls. In the 19th cent. a number of monasteries separated to form the Cassinese Congregation of the Primitive Observance, now called the *Subiaco Congregation.

T. Leccisoti, OSB (ed.), Congregationis S. Justinae de Padua O.S.B. Ordinationes Capitulorum Generalium, pt. 1: 1424–1474 (Miscellanea Cassinese, 16–17; 1939); pt. 2: 1475–1504 (ibid. 35; 1970). P. Schmitz, OSB, Histoire de l'Ordre de Saint-Benoît, 3 (Maredsous, 1948), pp. 157–74; 4 (1948), pp. 148–53. A. Pantoni, OSB, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 1477–85, s.v. 'Congregazione Benedettina Cassinese', with extensive bibl.

Cassiodorus, Flavius Magnus Aurelius Cassiodorus Senator (485/90–c.580), Roman statesman, author, and monastic founder. Cassiodorus belonged to a minor senatorial family, that was allied to the Aurelii and the Anicii and thus to *Boethius. He made his public career as the trusted servant and spokesman of the Ostrogothic rulers at *Ravenna, for whom he wrote the official correspondence preserved in the Variae and a national history, the Historia Gothorum (now lost). He was quaestor in 507, patricius, consul (514), magister officiorum (523), and praetorian prefect (533). In 537, when Ostrogothic rule had collapsed and *Justinian's armies were invading Italy, Cassiodorus withdrew from public life. He edited his Variae, adding as the 'thirteenth book' the philosophical De Anima; and he embarked on the Expositio Psalmorum, which may have occupied him until 548. At an undetermined date (perhaps as early as 540) he joined the Italian senatorial exiles in *Constantinople, where in 551 the Historia Gothorum was epitomized by Jordanes as the Getica. In 554 Cassiodorus returned to a pacified Italy and established the monastic community of Vivarium on his estate of Squillace near Naples. There he built up an important library, incl. much biblical commentary. He arranged for the extensive copying of manuscripts and he had Greek texts translated, including the histories of *Socrates, *Sozomen, and *Theodoret, which served as the basis of his own Historia Ecclesiastica Tripartita; he explained the raison d'être of his library—and by implication of the community which created it—in his Institutiones Divinarum et Saecularium Litterarum. Although Vivarium did not survive as a community beyond the 7th cent., the books written there were preserved and copied in other libraries: both *Bede's text of the Bible and the *Codex Amiatinus appear to be related to Cassiodorus' Bible (in 9 vols.) at Vivarium.

Opera Omnia ed. J. Garet (2 vols. bound in 1, Rouen, 1679), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 69. 421–1334, and 70. Variae ed. T. *Mommsen (MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 12; 1894), and, with the Ordo generis Cassiodororum (the source for his relationship with Symmachus (Aurelii) and Boethius) ed. Å. J. Fridh, and De Anima ed. J. W. Halporn (CCSL 96; 1973); Eng. tr. of Variae and Ordo generis Cassiodororum by S. J. B. Barnish (Translated Texts for Historians, 12; Liverpool, 1992); Expositio Psalmorum ed., after Maurist text, by M. Adriaen (CCSL, 97–8; 1958); Eng. tr. by P. G. Walsh (ACW 51–3 [1990–1]). Historia Ecclesiastica Tripartita ed. W. Jacob and R. Hanslik (CSEL 71; 1952); Institutiones, ed. R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford, 1937); Eng. tr. by L. W. Jones (Records of Civilization, no. 40; New York, 1946). Selection of his letters ed. with introd. by T. Hodgkin (London, 1886). Monographs by G. Minasi (Naples, 1895), A. Van de Vyver in Speculum, 6 (1931), pp. 244–92, G. Ludwig (Frankfurt, 1967), and J. J. O'Donnell (Berkeley, Calif., and London, 1979; cf. A. Cameron in JRS 71 (1981), pp. 183–6). E. *Schwartz, Zu Cassiodor und Prokop (Sb. (Bayr.) 1939, Heft 2; 1939). G. Bardy, 'Cassiodore et la fin du monde ancien', L'Année Théologique, 6 (1945), pp. 383–425; A. Momigliano, 'Cassiodorus and Italian Culture of his Time', Proceedings of the British Academy, 41 (1955), pp. 207–45. J. R. Martindale, The Prosopography of the Later Roman Empire, 2 (1980), pp. 265–9. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 294–9 (nos. 896–911). M. Cappuyns, OSB, in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 1349–408, s.v. 'Cassiodore'; R. Helm in RAC 2 (1954), cols. 915–26, s.v.; A. Momigliano in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 21 (1978), pp. 494–504, s.v., with extensive bibl.

cassock. The long garment, now usually black (formerly of various colours), worn by the clergy. It originated in vestis talaris or ankle-length dress, which was retained by the clergy when, under barbarian influence in the 6th cent., shorter garments became usual for secular use. Its use was already ordered by the Council of Braga (572) and subsequent legislation has continued this tradition. The RC Church long insisted upon its use by clerics both out of church and inside, but in many countries coats of varying length have for some time been allowed for outdoor wear and now an alb may be worn in church instead of a cassock. In the C of E a cassock is still required for Morning and Evening Prayer and the Occasional Offices; either a cassock or an alb may be used for the Holy Communion. The cassocks of bishops in the W. are purple in colour, those of cardinals red, that of the Pope white, and, in England, those of royal chaplains red.

Castel Gandolfo. A small town in the Alban Hills, some 18 miles SE of Rome, not far from the Via Appia Nuova. Since the 17th cent. it has been the site of the Pope's summer residence. Under the *Lateran Treaty of 1929, the Papal palace and gardens were assigned to the extra-territorial (i.e. non-Italian) domains of the Holy See.

E. Bonomelli in EC 3 (1949), cols. 1014–17, s.v.

Castellio, Sebastian (1515–63), classical scholar and Protestant theologian. A native of Savoy, he was educated in Lyons. In 1540, after adopting Protestantism, he moved to Strasbourg to study under J. *Calvin. When Calvin returned to *Geneva in 1541, he procured for Castellio a post as rector of the Collège de Genève. There Castellio published the Dialogi Sacri (dated 1543, but issued in 1542), a school manual of Bible stories in dialogue form which remained popular until the 18th cent. In 1544 he resigned his rectorship on grounds of ill-health. His refusal to accept the canonicity of the Song of *Solomon and his unorthodox view of the descent of Christ into Hell caused a breach between him and Calvin, and he left Geneva in 1545. He worked in Basle as a proof-reader until *c.*1553, when he became professor of Greek in the university. In 1551 he published a controversial translation of the Bible into classical Latin, which he dedicated to *Edward VI. As well as defending the doctrine of free will in an excursus on Rom. 9: 13, the Bible contained a plea for freedom of worship which was unique among the theologians of the 16th cent. These ideas brought him into conflict with the Genevan Church, esp. with T. *Beza. He was the instigator and one of the authors (or perhaps the sole author) of the compilation De Haereticis an sint persequendi published in Latin and French in 1554 under the pseudonym 'Martinus Bellius'. The work, which condemned the burning of M. *Servetus, aroused a storm of opposition. In 1555 Castellio brought out a French version of his Latin Bible. As well as writing theological treatises, some of which were published only posthumously, he produced Latin translations of Xenophon, Homer, and other Greek authors. His doctrine of religious *toleration received its fullest expression in the Conseil à la France désolée (1562).

The 1554 Lat. edn. of De Haereticis was photograpically repr., with introd. by S. van der Woude (Geneva, 1954); modernized edn. of the Fr. text by A. Olivet (ibid., 1913); new Lat. and Fr. texts ed. B. Becker and M. [F.] Valkoff respectively (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 118; 1971). Modern edns. of Conseil à la France désolée by M. F. Valkoff (Geneva, 1967), and of De arte dubitandi et confidendi, ignorandi et sciendi by E. F. Hirsch (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 29; 1981). Eng. tr. of De Haereticis (with excerpts from other works of Castellio and David Joris on Religious Liberty) by R. H. Bainton (Records of Civilization, 22; New York, 1935). F. Buisson, Sébastien Castellion, sa vie et son œuvre (1515–1563) (2 vols., 1892), with details of edns. of his works, 2, pp. 341–80. Other monographs by E. Giran (Haarlem, 1914), P. Hemmi (in Eng.) (Zurich [1937]), and C. É. Delormeau (Neuchâtel [1964]). S. Zweig, Castellio gegen Calvin (1936; Eng. tr., 1936); R. H. Bainton and others, Castellioniana: Quatre études sur Sébastien Castellion et l'idée de la tolérance (1951); B. Becker (ed.), Autour de Michel Servet et de Sebastien Castellion (Haarlem, 1953), pp. 142–302; H. R. Guggisberg, Sebastian Castellio im Urteil seiner Nachwelt vom Späthumanismus bis zur Aufklärung (Basler Beiträge zur Geschichtswissenschaft, 57; 1956). E. Droz, Chemins de l'Hérésie: Textes et Documents, 2 (Geneva, 1971), pp. 325–432. H. R. Guggisberg in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 663–5, s.v.

casuistry. The art or science of bringing general moral principles to bear upon particular cases. Its exercise is always called for in moral issues, whether the particular decision is made by individual judgement or in accordance with an established code, though the word 'casuistry' is generally restricted to the latter. The introduction of universal private *Penance was the natural cause of the rise of formal casuistry in the Church, and by the 7th cent. 'Libri Poenitentiales' were common. Later these were replaced by various 'Summae de Poenitentia' which formed complete legal digests. From the 16th cent. onwards various systems of casuistry, such as *Probabilism, *Probabiliorism, and *Equiprobabilism, developed in the RC Church in competition with each other; the first of these systems, in modified form, eventually won most popularity, largely through the advocacy of St *Alphonsus Liguori in the 18th cent. Among *Puritan writers, W. *Perkins and W. *Ames were notable casuists, and in the Anglican tradition of the 17th cent., Jeremy *Taylor and R. *Sanderson (qq.v).

For bibl. see under MORAL THEOLOGY.

Caswall, Edward (1814–78), hymn-writer. Educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, he was Perpetual Curate of Stratford-sub-Castle, Wilts, from 1840 to 1847. In 1847 he was received into the RC Church, and in 1850 (after the death of his wife) became a member of the *Oratory at Edgbaston under J. H. *Newman. Among his many successful and popular translations of Latin hymns were 'Hark! a thrilling voice is sounding' (AM 47, EH 5), 'Bethlehem, of noblest cities' (EH 40), and 'Jesu, the very thought of thee' (AM 178, EH 419). He published Lyra Catholica (1849), besides devotional writings and other collections of poems.

T. Cooper in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 276 f., s.v.

catacombs. This term for subterranean burial-places is prob. derived from the Gk. κατὰ κύμβας ('at the hollows'). Applied to the Christian cemetery of St *Sebastian by the *Chronographer of 354, it was being used of similar communal burial-places *c.*800.

Subterranean burial was common in the ancient world, and catacombs, with their long ramifying passages, or closely related structures, can be found near *Rome and in other Italian localities, on Sicily, Malta, and Milos, in Syria, in the region of *Jerusalem, in NW Africa, and at *Alexandria. They were used by Jews, pagans, and Christians. The most famous and extensive are near Rome. Like all Roman tombs, they enjoyed legal protection, and had to be dug outside the walls. Forty-one Christian catacombs survive there; they are of great interest for the social and religious history of the early Church. Among the most important are those named after Sts *Callistus (with Papal crypt of *c.*230), Praetextatus, and *Sebastian, all on the Via Appia; St Domitilla Aurelia Vetus; St Commodilla on the Via Ostiensis; and Sts Marcellinus and Peter on the Via Labicana. Excavation prob. began *c.*150–200. Some of the earliest catacombs seem to have been dug on private ground initially, but their ownership and management soon passed to the Church; individual tombs prob. served as the nuclei for catacombs, or parts of them. It is unlikely that Christians used them for refuge, or, at first, for worship on any scale. Inhumations needed much space, and decent burial was a charitable duty. Also, while their catacombs may sometimes have included pagan mausolea, Christians needed separate cemeteries as a means of self-distinction. The proximity of *martyrs' relics was an attraction which proved a strong motive for expansion, esp. in the 4th cent.

Christian catacombs, dug by skilful and organized *fossors, consist of labyrinths of galleries, often in two to five stories with connecting stairs. Old quarries (arenaria) and other excavations might be exploited. Shafts (luminaria) admitted light and air, and let out spoil. Bodies were placed in floor-graves (formae) or in wall-niches (loculi*), often holding more than one, and closed by stone slabs or tiles. These were cut in passages or in family tomb-chambers (cubicula), which became popular from c.300. For the more important, a large niche with a curved arch (arcosolium), and perhaps a *sarcophagus, might be used. The numerous wall-paintings provide early examples of Christian *iconography. Highly allusive and symbolic, they owe much to Jewish and pagan motifs. Many sarcophagi and other objects of art have also been found.

Families prob. held commemorative meals at the catacombs, above or below ground, and by the 4th cent. the Eucharist was often celebrated at the grave of a martyr on the supposed anniversary of his death. The areas surrounding the graves of martyrs were enlarged and embellished; in this work Pope *Damasus (366–84) was esp. active. To accommodate the number of pilgrims attracted by the martyrs, basilicas were also built above ground in the 4th to 7th cents.; relics were sometimes moved up from the catacombs; and ground-level cemeteries developed; their effect on the religious geography of Rome was lasting. The catacombs thus expanded little after the 4th cent., but fell slowly into disuse, aided by the disturbed conditions and a declining population. In the 8th–9th cents. many of their relics were transferred to the churches of Rome, and the catacombs were largely forgotten until the 16th cent. Their investigation is still incomplete.

The fundamental works on the catacombs are those of A. *Bosio, Roma sotterranea (1632), and G. B. *de Rossi, La Roma sotterranea cristiana (3 vols., 1864–77); and on the art, J. Wilpert, Die Malereien der Katakomben Roms (2 vols., 1903). Modern works incl.: J. P. Kirsch, Le Catacombe Romane (1933; Eng. tr., Rome, 1946); P. Styger, Die römische Katakomben (1933); id., Römische Märtyrergrüfte (2 vols., 1935); P. Testini, Le Catacombe e gli Antichi Cimetieri Cristiani in Roma [Bologna, 1966]; J. Stevenson, The Catacombs (1978); H. Brandenburg, 'Überlegungen zu Ursprung und Entstehung der Katakomben Roms', in Vivarium: Festschrift Theodor Klauser zum 90. Geburtstag (Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, Ergänzungsband, 11; 1984), pp. 11–49. J. G. Deckers and others, Die Katakombe 'Santi Marcellino e Pietro': Repertorium der Malereien (Roma Sotterranea Cristiana, 6; 2 vols., Rome and Münster, 1987). E. R. Goodenough, 'Catacomb Art', Journal of Biblical Literature, 81 (1962), pp. 113–42; J. M. C. Toynbee, Death and Burial in the Roman World [1971], pp. 199–244; C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 2 vols., 1976), pp. 37–51, 69–77, 121–34, 522–57, 595–624, 659–67, and 722 f.; R. Krautheimer, Rome: Profile of a City, 312–1308 (Princeton, NJ, 1980), pp. 18 f., 24–26, and 82–6. J. Guyon, 'Dal Praedium imperiale al santuario dei martiri. Il territorio "ad duas lauros"', in A. Giardina (ed.), Roma: Politica, Economia, Paesaggio Urbano (Società Romana e Impero Tardoantico, 2; 1986), pp. 299–332; P. Pergola, 'Le catecombe romane: mite e realtà (a proposito del cimitero di Domitilla)', ibid., pp. 333–50; C. Vismara, 'Il Cimiteri ebraici di Roma', ibid., pp. 351–92. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2376–486, s.v., with bibl. cols. 2447–50.

catafalque. An erection, resembling a bier and covered with a *pall, formerly used at *Requiem Masses to represent the corpse in its absence. The derivation of the word is quite uncertain, but its first syllables prob. came from the Gk. κατά, 'alongside'. The term is now also used in a more general sense of the coffin and all its appurtenances.

Cataphrygians (Gk. Καταφρυγασταί, Καταφρύγας). An alternative title found in a few early Christian writers, e.g. St *Epiphanius, for the *Montanists in reference to their Phrygian origin.

Epiphanius, Haer. 98. 1. 3 (PG 41. 856 B); cf. *Jerome, Comm. in Gal. 3 (PL 26. 356 C).

catechesis. Instruction given to Christian *catechumens preparing for *Baptism, esp. in the primitive Church. The word was also used of the books containing such instruction, of which the most celebrated is that of St *Cyril of Jerusalem. In the RC Church the word is now used for education in faith throughout life.

Catechetical School of Alexandria. The notion of a Christian school in *Alexandria, concerned with advanced teaching in theology and with a succession of teachers in charge of it, is found most clearly in the work of *Philip Sidetes (early 5th cent.); he speaks of such a school existing from the early 2nd cent. to the late 4th cent., giving as its first head *Athenagoras (whom he dates in the first half of the 2nd cent.). A somewhat similar conception is found in the Historia Ecclesiastica of *Eusebius; he begins rather later, with *Pantaenus (d. c.190), followed by *Clement (c.190–c.202), *Origen (c.202–31), Heraclas (231–c.233), and St *Dionysius (from c.233). After that only Achillas (who succeeded *Peter as Bp. of Alexandria, c.311) is mentioned by Eusebius as head of the school (Achillas is not mentioned by Philip). The idea of a school with a succession of teachers seems to be inspired by pagan models (e.g. the Platonic Academy in *Athens or the Museum in Alexandria), and it is difficult to be sure what historical basis it ever had. It is more probable that Pantaenus and Clement were individual teachers like St *Justin at Rome. Acc. to Eusebius, Origen was appointed by *Demetrius, Bp. of Alexandria, to give elementary ('catechetical') teaching in the Christian faith, and later (c.215) he consigned this role to Heraclas and devoted himself to more advanced teaching. Whether such an advanced school survived Origen's conflict with Demetrius and his permanent retirement to *Caesarea in 231 is uncertain. Acc. to *Rufinus, *Didymus the Blind was appointed by St *Athanasius as 'teacher of the ecclesiastical school', but the meaning of this statement is disputed. None of the other 'heads' mentioned by Philip (e.g. *Theognostus, Pierius, Peter) is designated such by anyone else in antiquity.

Primary sources: fragment of Philip Sidetes pub. by H. *Dodwell in his Dissertationes in Irenaeum (Oxford, 1689), p. 488; Eusebius, HE 5. 10, 6. 3. 3, 6. 6, 6. 15, 6. 26, 6. 29. 4, and 7. 32. 30; Rufinus, HE 2. 7. W. *Bousset, Jüdisch-christlicher Schulbetrieb in Alexandria und Rom (1915). G. Bardy, 'Aux origines de l'école d'Alexandrie', Rech. S.R., 27 (1937), pp. 65–90; id., 'Pour l'histoire de l'école d'Alexandrie' in Vivre et Penser [war-time title of R. Bibl.], 2 (1942), pp. 80–109. A. Le Boulluec, 'L'École d'Alexandrie. De quelques aventures d'un concept historiographique', in 'Αλεξανδρîνα. . . . Mélanges offerts au P. Claude Mondésert (1987), pp. 403–17. A. de La Barre in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 805–24, s.v. 'Alexandrie, IV (École chrétienne d')'; M. Simonetti in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 117–21, s.v. 'Alessandria, II. Scuola'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 22 f.

catechism (from Gk. κατηχέω, 'to make hear', hence 'to instruct'). A popular manual of Christian doctrine. Originally the term was applied to the oral instruction on the principal Christian truths given to children and adults before Baptism. From this usage the name passed to the book containing such instructions. The term seems first to have been used in the early 16th cent., but the idea is much older. In the Middle Ages prescriptions for catechizing the faithful were frequently issued, e.g. at the Council of *Lambeth (1281), and books were produced containing explanations of the Pater Noster and the Creed, lists of mortal sins, etc., arranged preferably in groups of seven. Thus the seven petitions of the Pater Noster were connected with the seven *Beatitudes and the *seven gifts of the Holy Spirit, and the *seven deadly sins were opposed to the seven principal virtues and the seven works of mercy. One of the most active propagators of catechisms before the Reformation was J. *Gerson, whose 'ABC des simples gens' became very popular at the end of the 15th cent. Other widely used works of the type were the catechism of J. *Colet in England and the 'Christenspiegel' in Germany.

The *Reformation, with its insistence on religious instruction, brought a flood of new catechisms. The most famous is M. *Luther's Kleiner Katechismus (1529), which is still the standard book of the Lutheran Church not only in Germany but also in other Protestant countries. The Heidelberger Katechismus (1563) occupies a similar position in the *Calvinist communions. The short catechism of the C of E (see following entry) is printed in the BCP as a preparation for *Confirmation, and the *Presbyterian Churches generally follow the 'Humble Advice' of the *Westminster Assembly of 1647. In competition with the Protestants the RC Church, too, produced a number of new catechisms. Apart from the so-called '*Roman Catechism' (q.v.), the most famous of these is St Peter *Canisius' Summa Doctrinae Christianae (1554). During the following centuries a flood of RC catechisms appeared; in many countries, e.g. in France, there was a different one approved for each diocese; in England one superseded all others: A Catechism of Christian Doctrine, first issued in 1898, popularly called the 'Penny Catechism'. This was based on R. *Challoner's Abridgement of Christian Doctrine, first published in 1759. The desire for a modern manual of doctrine in the RC Church led to the publication in 1992 of the '*Catechism of the Catholic Church' (q.v.). Catechisms, whether Catholic or Protestant, normally contain the Creed, the *Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments with explanations; RC ones also add instructions on the *Hail Mary, the three theological virtues, the *Commandments of the Church, the Sacraments, and the Virtues and Vices.

See also GENEVAN CATECHISM, HEIDELBERG CATECHISM, WESTMINSTER CATECHISMS.

T. F. Torrance, The School of Faith: The Catechisms of the Reformed Church, tr. and ed. with introd. (1959). For early Protestant Catechisms see also F. Cohrs, Die evangelischen Katechismusversuche vor Luthers Enchiridion in Monumenta Germaniae Paedagogica, ed. C. Kehrbach, vols. 20–3 and 39 (1900–7). G. Adler and G. Vogeleisen, Un Siècle de Catéchèse en France 1893–1980: Histoire—Déplacements—Enjeux (Théologie Historique, 60 [1981]). P. Tudor, 'Religious Instruction for Children and Adolescents in the Early English Reformation', JEH 35 (1984), pp. 391–413. I. Green, The Christian's ABC: Catechisms and Catechizing in England c.1530–1740 (Oxford, 1996). H.-J. Fraas and others in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 710–44, s.v. 'Katechismus', with bibl.

Catechism, Prayer Book, the 'Instruction' in the BCP in the form of a series of questions and answers 'to be learned of every person before he be brought to be confirmed by the Bishop'. The inclusion of such a body of teaching in an authorized service book was an innovation in 1549. It consisted of an explanation of the nature of *Baptism akin to that found in the service itself, the *Apostles' Creed followed by a brief explanation of the doctrine of the *Trinity, the Ten *Commandments (in abridged form in 1549, but since 1552 in full and with a prefatory introduction) followed by an explanation of man's duty to God and his neighbour, and the *Lord's Prayer with an explanation of its meaning. In 1604, in response to the Puritans' request at *Hampton Court for a clearer statement of doctrine, a section was added on the Sacraments of Baptism and Holy Communion. In 1689 it was proposed to add two further questions on the Creed and the Church, and in 1887 the Lower House of the *Convocation of Canterbury approved a considerable series of additions on the nature of the Church and Ministry, but neither of these amendments was authorized. From 1549 to 1661 the Catechism was printed at the beginning of the *Confirmation service, presumably with the intention that the bishop should ask these questions before confirming the candidates; it has since been printed as a separate item before the Confirmation service. Since 1661 the rubric has directed that instruction in the Catechism should be given after the second lesson at Evensong, but in modern times it seldom, if ever, takes place during the service. The authorship of the Catechism is a matter of dispute. The similarity it bears to the 'Small Catechism' (pub. 1573) by A. *Nowell suggests that the earlier part is his work; the 1604 addition is commonly attributed to J. *Overall, but it prob. incorporates much of Nowell's work.

The revision of the Catechism, left untouched by the proposed Prayer Book of 1928, was entrusted to a Commission of the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York in 1958. The Revised Catechism, published in 1961, was in 1962 commended by the Convocations for use during a period of seven years, which has been repeatedly extended. It widened the scope of the Prayer Book Catechism by adding material on the Church and Ministry, the Holy Spirit, the Bible, the lesser Sacraments, and *Eschatology. While the catechetical form was retained, the language was extensively modernized.

G. *Burnet, An Exposition of the Church Catechism for the Use of the Diocese of Sarum (1710). W. C. E. Newbolt, The Church Catechism (1903).

Catechism of the Catholic Church (1992). A comprehensive account of RC teaching in four sections, dealing with (1) the faith, including an exposition of the *Apostles' Creed; (2) the Sacraments; (3) life in Christ, with an exposition of the Ten *Commandments; and (4) prayer, with an exposition of the *Lord's Prayer. It includes teaching on such contemporary ethical problems as the sale of organs for transplant surgery. It was the first 'universal' catechism of the RC Church since the '*Roman Catechism' of 1566. While the latter was intended for the use of the parish clergy, this catechism was designed primarily for bishops as a point of reference in the preparation of regional catechisms. It was first suggested by the 1985

Extraordinary Synod of Bishops which called for a further implementation of the teachings of the Second *Vatican Council; in the following year Pope *John Paul II appointed a commission of bishops and cardinals which undertook the work.

An Eng. tr. appeared in 1994.

catechist. (1) In the primitive Church, a teacher of *catechumens, or a lecturer in a catechetical school.

(2) In modern usage, occasionally, a person appointed to give instruction in Christianity, e.g. to children.

(3) In the mission field, a native Christian teacher.

catechumens (Gk. κατηχούμενοι). In the early Church those undergoing training and instruction preparatory to Christian *Baptism. They were assigned a place in the church, but solemnly dismissed before the *Eucharist proper began. Since F. X. Funk's researches, the older view that they were divided into several grades, corresponding to the well-known stages of those undergoing penance, has been generally abandoned. Only those who had reached the stage of awaiting Baptism at the coming Easter formed a separate group (φωτιζόμενοι). There was an elaborate ritual of preparation, with a succession of *scrutinies, in the preceding *Lent, the candidates being finally admitted at the Paschal Mass. Illustrations of early catechetical instruction survive in St *Cyril of Jerusalem's Lectures (*c.*350) and St *Augustine's De Catechizandis Rudibus (*c.*400).

In 1962 the catechumenate was restored in the RC Church, when provision was made for the elements surviving in the Rituale Romanum (enrolment, exorcisms, pre-baptismal anointings) to be administered on separate occasions. The revived catechumenate was of special importance in the mission field, but the increasing number of adult Baptisms led to its establishment in other countries, e.g. France. By the Ordo 'De Initiatione Christiana Adultorum' (The Christian Initiation of Adults) of 6 Jan. 1972, the restored catechumenate became a necessary prelude to all adult Baptisms. On entering the catechumenate, candidates are marked with the sign of the cross. In the following period, which may be lengthy, they are encouraged to attend services of Bible reading and instruction. They enter the 'Time of Purification and Enlightenment' with their election for sacramental initiation; this election normally takes place on the first Sunday in Lent, and is followed by scrutinies on the third, fourth, and fifth Sundays of Lent. On appointed weekdays explanations, known as 'traditions', of the Creed and the *Lord's Prayer are given (see TRADITIO SYMBOLI), and on Holy Saturday (or earlier in Holy Week) the final ceremonies take place, namely the 'reddition' or recitation of the Creed, the *Ephphatha, and the anointing of the candidates with oil. (National conferences of bishops may, however, decide to omit the last two ceremonies.) The Baptism, Confirmation, and Communion of the candidates during the *Paschal Vigil Service is followed during Eastertide by a period of 'mystagogy', during which frequent attendance at Mass, etc., is urged.

F. X. Funk, Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, Bd. 1 (1897), esp. papers 6, 7, and 8; E. *Schwartz, Bussstufen und Katechumenatsklassen (Strasbourg, 1911). A. Dondeyne, 'La Discipline des Scrutins dans l'Église Latine avant Charlemagne', RHE 28 (1932), pp. 5–33, 751–87. T. Maertens, Histoire et Pastorale du Rituel du Catéchuménat et du Baptême (Bruges, 1962); M. Dujarier, Le Parrainage des Adultes aux trois premiers siècles de l'Église: Recherche historique sur l'évolution des garanties et des étapes catéchuménales avant 313 (1962; Eng. tr., New York [1979]). T. Ohm, Das Katechumenat in den katholischen Missionen (Münster, 1959).

Catechumens, Mass of the. The Ante-Communion, or first part of the *Eucharist. It is so named because in the early Church it was the part of the service which catechumens, who were dismissed before the *Anaphora, were allowed to attend.

Categorical Imperative. In the ethical theory of I. *Kant, the absolute moral law, given in reason, and therefore unconditionally binding upon every rational being. It is contrasted with the 'hypothetical imperative', which, being either a counsel of prudence or a rule of skill, implies a hypothesis, or condition under which alone it is operative.

H. J. Paton, The Categorical Imperative: A Study in Kant's Moral Philosophy (1947). See also works cited s.v. KANT, I.

catena (Lat.), 'chain' (Gk. σειρά). A word applied to the biblical commentaries dating from the 5th cent. onwards, in which the successive verses of the scriptural text were elucidated by 'chains' of passages derived from previous commentators. In a wider sense the word was used of any collection of passages from different authors bearing on a single subject. Among the most celebrated of biblical catenae was St *Thomas Aquinas' 'Catena Aurea' on the Gospels.

Numerous catenae and frags. from catenae have been pub. in modern times; important collections incl. J. A. *Cramer, Catenae Graecorum Patrum in Novum Testamentum (8 vols., 1838–44); M. *Faulhaber, Hohelied, Proverbien- und Prediger-Catenen (1902); K. Staab, Die Pauluskatenen nach den handschriftlichen Quellen untersucht (Scripta Pontificii Instituti Biblici; Rome, 1926); id., Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 15; 1933); J. Reuss, Matthäus-, Markus- und Johannes-Katenen (ibid. 18, Hefte 4–5; 1941); id., Matthäus-Kommentare aus der griechischen Kirche aus Katenenhandschriften gesammelt (TU 61; 1957); id., Johannes-Kommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (ibid. 89; 1966). R. Devreesse, Les anciens commentateurs grecques de l'Octateuque et des Rois (Fragments tirés des Chaînes) (ST 201; 1959); id., Les anciens commentateurs des Psaumes (ST 264; 1970); M. Harl and G. Dorival, La Chaîne Palestinienne sur le Psaume 118 (SC 189–90; 1972); E. Mühlenberg, Psalmenkommentare aus der Katenenüberlieferung (Patristische Texte und Studien, 15, 16, and 19; 1975–8); F. Petit, Catenae Graecae in Genesim et Exodum (CCSG 2, 15, etc.; 1977 ff.); and U. and D. Hagedorn (eds.), Die älteren Griechischen Katenen zum Buch Hiob (Patristische Texte und Studien, 40 etc.: 1994 ff.). M. Richard, 'Les premiers chaines sur le Psautier', Bulletin d'information de l'Institut de Recherche et d'Histoire des Textes, 5, for 1956 (1957), pp. 87–98; repr. in his Opera Minora, 3 (Turnhout, 1977), no. 70; other arts. repr. nos 69 and 71; G. Dorival, Les Chaînes Exégétiques grecques sur les Psaumes: Contribution à l'étude d'une forme littéraire (SSL 43, 44, 45, etc.; 1986 ff.). G. Karo and H. *Lietzmann, 'Catenarum Graecarum Catalogus', Nachr. (Gött.), 1902, pp. 1–66, 299–350, and 559–620. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 185–259. R. Devreesse in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 1084–233, s.v. 'Chaînes exégétiques grecques'; E. Mühlenberg in TRE 18 (1989), pp. 14–21, s.v. 'Katenen', with further bibl.

Catesby, Robert (1573–1605), English *recusant and conspirator. In 1601 he suffered a heavy fine for his part in the conspiracy of the Earl of Essex, and allied himself with the extreme RC party, who would make no compromise with the state. He was the original mover of the *Gunpowder Plot, which he first devised in the winter of 1603–4, and with which he persevered even after he knew that it had been betrayed. After the failure of the plot he took refuge at Holbeche, near Dudley, in West Midlands, where he was killed on 8 Nov. 1605 while resisting arrest.

M. W. Jones, The Gunpowder Plot and Life of Robert Catesby (1909), pp. 1–53. A. Jessopp in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 281–4.

Cathari (or Cathars) (Gk. καθαρός, 'pure'). The name has been applied to several sects, e.g. to the *Novatianists by St *Epiphanius and other Greek Fathers, and, acc. to St *Augustine, in the form 'Catharistae' to a group of *Manichaeans. But it is mostly used for a large group of medieval dissenters who provided a serious challenge to the Church in the 12th and 13th cents. Traces of this way of thinking can be found in scattered places in W. Europe in the early 11th cent., beginning with a group condemned at Orléans in 1022, but it is not possible to say whether there was any real continuity between these early groups and the later fully-developed movement. From *c.*1140, initially in Germany, there are clear signs of influence from the *Bogomils in the E., and of the distinctive ideas and organization of the later Cathars. From this time onwards, their activity spread widely, and by 1200 they were strong in S. France and Lombardy. Contemporaries knew them under various names: Cathars, Manichaeans, *Arians, Bulgari or Bougres, *Albigenses (in France), and *Patarenes (in Italy). The word 'heretic' in the 13th cent. is applied almost exclusively to the Cathars, and is rarely used of other dissenting opinions. They claimed to be restoring the purity of the early Church, and there are similarities between their ideals and those of the more radical champions of reform and the apostolic life.

Their theology in its purest form was almost certainly derived from the E., and was basically dualist. They rejected the flesh and material creation as evil, affirming two principles of good and evil. There are signs in their writings of both an absolute dualism (of equal and opposite principles) and a 'mitigated' dualism (envisaging the ultimate triumph of God over the devil). The purpose of redemption was the liberation of the soul from the flesh and the end of the 'mixed' state which had been brought about by the devil. Though retaining the NT and the prophetic parts of the OT, the Cathars interpreted them as allegories, teaching that Christ was an angel with a phantom body who, consequently, did not suffer or rise again, and whose redemptive work consisted only in teaching man the true doctrine. The Catholic Church, by taking the NT allegories literally, had been corrupted and was doing the work of the devil.

Rejecting the sacraments, the doctrines of hell, purgatory, and the resurrection of the body, and believing that all matter was bad, their moral doctrine was of extreme rigorism, condemning marriage, the use of meat, milk, eggs, and other animal produce. As, however, these ideals were too austere for the majority of men and women, they distinguished two classes, the 'perfect', who received the 'consolamentum', i.e. baptism of the Holy Spirit by imposition of hands, and kept the precepts in all their rigour, and the ordinary 'believers' who were allowed to lead normal lives but promised to receive the 'consolamentum' when in danger of death.

The Church was at first slow to react to this unaccustomed threat, but then did so by both preaching and persecution. The extensive reforms of the Fourth *Lateran Council of 1215, and the emergence of the *Dominican Order, were both in large part reactions to the threat of heresy, as was the development of the *Inquisition. By 1300 the combined effect of force and persuasion had greatly weakened the Cathars, and thereafter they did not play a major part in the history of the W. Church.

There is much primary material in the records of the Inquisition, and some valuable treatises on Catharism written by both supporters and critics. These include the Summa de Catharis of Rainer Sacconi, OP, and the Liber de Duobus Principiis, prob. by John de Lugio, both ed., with a frag. of a Catharist Ritual, by A. Dondaine, OP (Rome, 1939; the Summa de Catharis is also ed. by F. Šanjek, OP, in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 44 (1974), pp. 31–60; and the Liber de Duobus Principiis and the frag. of the Ritual are also ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by C. Thouzellier, SC 198, 1973, and SC 236, 1977, respectively); Moneta of Cremona, OP, Adversus Catharos et Valdenses, ed. T. A. Ricchinius, OP (Rome, 1743); C. Thouzellier (ed.), Un traité cathare inédit du début du XIII^e siècle d'après le Liber contra Manicheos de Durand de Huesca (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 37; 1961), and Durandus of Huesca's Liber Antiheresis, ed. K.-V. Selge, Die ersten Waldenser (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 37; 2 vols., 1967). Eng. tr., in whole or part, of all these docs. except the last in W. L. Wakefield and A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 81; 1969), pp. 329–46, 511–91, 465–83, 307–29, and 494–510, with other material and extensive bibl. There are trs. of other important materials in R. I. Moore, The Birth of Popular Heresy (1975), esp. pp. 1–26 and 88–154, and E. [M.] Peters, Heresy and Authority in Medieval Europe (1980), esp. pp. 103–37. There are extensive discussions of the origin of Catharist ideas: see esp. R. I. Moore, The Origins of European Dissent (1977), and M. D. Lambert, Medieval Heresy: Popular Movements from Bogomil to Hus (1977), esp. pp. 1–150 (2nd edn., 1992, pp. 1–146), passim. Although there is now some more source material, the classic expositions of Catharist doctrine remain those of H. Söderberg, La religion des Cathares (Uppsala, 1949), and A. Borst, Die Katharer (Schriften der MGH, 12; Stuttgart, 1953). The many later works incl. J. Duvernoy, Le Catharisme (2 vols., Toulouse, 1976–9), and G. Rottenwöhrer, Der Katharismus (2 vols. in 4, Bad Honnef, 1982), with extensive bibl. For other studies, see H. Grundmann, Bibliographie zur Ketzergeschichte des Mittelalters (1900–66) (Sussidi eruditi, 20; Rome, 1967), and C. T. Berkhout and J. B. Russell, Medieval Heresies: A Bibliography 1960–1979 (Subsidia Mediaevalia, 11; Toronto, 1981), esp. pp. 26–52 (nos. 290–709). Cahiers d'Études Cathares (Arques, 1949 ff.). D. Müller in TRE 18 (1989), pp. 21–30, s.v. 'Katharer', with bibl. See also works cited s.v. ALBIGENSES.

Catharinus, Ambrosius (*c.*1484–1553), *Dominican theologian. Lancelot Politi was born in Siena; after studying canon and civil law there he was made a doctor at the age of 17. About 1507 he left Siena to visit various universities in Italy and prob. France. By 1514 he was professor at the Sapienza in Rome. Inspired by the works of G. *Savonarola, he entered the Dominican Order at San Marco, Florence, in 1517, taking the name Ambrosius Catharinus in honour of the Sienese Dominican saints, Bl Ambrose Sansedoni and St *Catherine. His superiors soon employed him as a controversialist against *Lutheran doctrines: his Apologia pro Veritate Catholica appeared in 1520 and the passionate Excusatio Disputationis contra Lutherum in 1521. He appears not to have remained long in Florence; in 1526 he was in Pistoia and then in Siena, where he was elected prior, prob. in 1527. In Siena he became embroiled in a bitter controversy: the Sienese government was trying to force the Dominicans to celebrate the feast of the *Immaculate Conception, while the Dominican authorities were opposed to the feast and the doctrine. Catharinus, who was personally in favour of the doctrine, attempted to persuade his superiors to consent to the celebration of the feast, but he failed and incurred their bitter hostility. An attempt to win support from T. *Cajetan also failed. In 1530 Catharinus was deposed as prior. He continued to campaign in favour of the Immaculate Conception and also embarked on a critical attack (pub. at Paris, 1535) on Cajetan's exegetical works. At his request *Clement VII freed him from the control of his provincial superiors and placed him directly under the Master General. By 1535 he was living in France, where he published a volume of Opuscula (Lyons, 1542), which included treatises on *predestination and the Immaculate Conception. In 1545 *Paul III summoned him to the Council of *Trent as a theologian and in 1546 appointed him Bp. of Minori, though he spent little time in his see. He played a prominent part in the Council, where his views, esp. on grace, brought him into conflict with other Dominicans such as Domingo de *Soto. From 1549 he lived mainly in Rome. In 1552 his former student, *Julius III, appointed him Abp. of Conza.

On many points his teaching was at variance with the official Dominican *Thomism. He taught that it is possible in this life to know certainly whether or not one is in a state of grace, and his ideas on predestination have been seen, rather misleadingly, as foreshadowing those of L. de *Molina. He distinguished between the 'predestination' of certain special saints, such as the BVM and the Apostles, who are guaranteed by a special grace against the possibility of damnation, and the 'foreknowledge' by which God knows that some people will in fact be saved, but who remain capable of salvation or damnation throughout their lives, depending on whether or not they accept the grace which is freely offered by God to everyone. In Catharinus' view most people are not 'predestined' either to salvation or damnation, and he rejected with horror the belief that anyone is predestined to damnation. He also denied that anyone is damned simply because of *original sin.

Quétif and Échard, 2, pp. 144–51, 332, and 825, with list of his works. Photographic repr. of his Enarrationes, Assertationes, and various Disputationes, orig. pub. Rome, 1551–2, and of his Opuscula (2 vols., Ridgewood, NJ, 1964). Modern edn. of his Apologia pro Veritate by J. Schweizer (Corpus Catholicorum, 27; Münster i.W., 1956). Id., Ambrosius Catharinus Politus (1484–1553), ein Theologe des Reformationszeitalters (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, Hefte 11 and 12; 1910). F. Lauchert, Die italienischen literarischen Gegner Luthers (1912), pp. 30–133. D. Scaramuzzi, 'Le idee scotiste di un grande teologo domenicano del '500: Ambrogio Catarino', Studi Francescani, 2nd ser. 4 (1932), pp. 296–319, and 5 (1933), pp. 197–217. L. Scarina, OSB, Giustizia primitiva e peccato originale secondo Ambrogio Catarino, OP (Studia Anselmiana, 17; Rome, 1947). G. Bosco, OP, 'Intorno a un carteggio inedito di Ambrogio Caterino', Memorie Domenicane, 67 (1950), pp. 103–20, 137–66, and 233–66, incl. text. A. Duval, OP, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1844–58, s.v. 'Politi, Lancellotto'. See also works cited under TRENT, COUNCIL OF.

cathedra. Properly the bishop's chair or throne in his cathedral church. Its original position was in the centre of the apse behind the *high altar; in the Middle Ages it was often placed in the chancel, but the primitive position, which survived in some places, is again becoming common. The phrase 'ex cathedra' (i.e. 'from the throne') is used esp. of the pronouncements uttered by the Pope with the full formal weight of his office as the supposed divinely appointed guardian of Christian faith and morals, and such are held by RCs to be *infallible. No authoritative statement exists as to which particular Papal pronouncements are 'ex cathedra'.

cathedral. The church which contains the 'throne' (Gk. καθέδρα, Lat. cathedra) or official seat (Lat. sedes) of the bishop of the diocese, and hence, since the throne is one of the most important and oldest of the episcopal insignia, its 'mother church' (matrix ecclesia). Though not necessarily the largest or most splendid church in the diocese (e.g. at *Rome, where the *Vatican basilica has long outshone St John *Lateran, the cathedral church), it is usually of outstanding size and grandeur. In rare instances the bishop has two thrones and hence two cathedrals (e.g. in the Protestant diocese of *Dublin, q.v.). The original position of the bishop's chair was at the E. end of the church so that he faced W., looking over the high altar; see previous entry.

Originally the cathedral church, being in the immediate vicinity of the Bishop's residence, was served by the bishop himself and his household or familia. But as the bishop's pastoral and administrative responsibilities grew and became more exacting and the worship in the cathedral church also became more elaborate, the responsibility for the administration of the cathedral was gradually delegated to a separate body of clergy. The bishop, who now used his own oratory for his regular private worship, came to visit his cathedral for official worship only on greater occasions, e.g. on the chief ecclesiastical feasts. The result was that those directly responsible for the cathedral came to be a separate ecclesiastical corporation or *chapter with its own privileges and rights.

In medieval England the cathedrals were of two kinds according as their chapter was a secular or monastic body. The nine secular foundations were *Chichester, *Exeter, *Hereford, *Lichfield, *Lincoln, London, *Salisbury, *Wells, and *York; the eight religious ones were *Canterbury, *Carlisle, *Durham, *Ely, *Norwich, *Rochester, *Winchester, and *Worcester. These last were all in the custody of *Benedictine monks except Carlisle, which was served by *Augustinian Canons.

With the *Dissolution of the Monasteries under *Henry VIII, the religious foundations naturally came to an end. On these eight cathedrals new constitutions were imposed by the King; they have hence become known as the 'New Foundations' in contrast with the other nine which, retaining their medieval statutes, are known as the 'Old Foundations'. Besides these, five further 'New Foundations' survived out of the six new bishoprics which Henry VIII created from the monastic spoils, namely Bristol, *Chester, *Gloucester, *Oxford, and *Peterborough (Henry's sixth creation, that of Westminster (see WESTMINSTER ABBEY), was suppressed again in 1550). Here in every case an earlier (usually monastic) church was constituted the cathedral; and all except Oxford had a body of statutes imposed on them.

The creation of new English dioceses in modern times, beginning with *Ripon in 1836, has brought a corresponding growth of cathedrals. Here again already existing churches have been adapted to use as a cathedral, e.g. the collegiate church at Ripon, the originally monastic church at *St Albans, and parish churches at *Southwark and Bradford. New churches, however, have been built at *Truro (here, however, incorporating a small portion of the old parish church of St Mary), Guildford, *Coventry, and *Liverpool.

In the RC Church the restoration of the hierarchy in 1850 was naturally followed by the foundation of cathedrals in England. The most notable are those of *Westminster and Liverpool (qq.v.).

English cathedrals are normally governed by a body of clergy consisting of from three to six residentiary canons presided over by a dean (or, in the case of recent foundations, a provost). The degree of authority possessed by the dean in his chapter varies from place to place, in general being considerably greater in the 'New' than in the 'Old' 'Foundations'. Besides the dean and residentiary canons there is generally also a larger body of non-residentiary canons, sometimes known as *prebendaries or honorary canons. The staff of a cathedral also includes a body of *minor canons whose primary duties are to render the priest's parts of the musical service. There is also a choir to render the daily office, consisting of an organist, choirmen (sometimes known as 'lay clerks'), and choristers. In the older cathedrals there has been a long tradition of high musical performance; and the type of service now general in parish churches was borrowed in the middle of the 19th cent. from the cathedrals and hence at first known as a 'cathedral service'. In most cases the cathedral statutes make provision for all these officials, who sometimes have a considerable degree of independence accorded to them.

A. Barbosa, Tractatus de Canonicis et Dignitatibus aliisque Inferioribus Beneficiariis Cathedralium (3rd edn., Lyons, 1640); M. A. Frances de Urrutigoyti, De Ecclesiis Cathedralibus, eorumque Privilegiis et Praerogativis Tractatus (Lyons, 1665). J. de Bordenhave, L'État des églises cathédrales et collégiales (1643). E. A. Freeman, History of the Cathedral Church of Wells as Illustrating the History of the Cathedral Churches of the Old Foundation (1870). E. W. *Benson, The Cathedral: Its Necessary Place in the Life and Work of the Church (1878). A. H. Thompson, The Cathedral Churches of England (1925), with bibl. K. Edwards, The English Secular Cathedrals in the Middle Ages (Publications of the University of Manchester, 301; 1949; rev. edn., 1967). H. Sedlmayr, Die Entstehung der Kathedrale (Zurich, 1950). O. von Simson, The Gothic Cathedral: The Origins of Gothic Architecture & the Medieval Concept of Order (New York and London, 1956). J. Fitchen, The Construction of Gothic Cathedrals: A Study of Medieval Vault Erection (Oxford, 1961). P. Johnson, British Cathedrals [1980]; T. Tatton-Brown, Great Cathedrals of Britain (1989). D. Marcombe and C. S. Knighton (eds.), Close Encounters: English Cathedrals and Societies since 1540 (Studies in Local and Regional History, 3; Nottingham, 1991); P. Barrett, Barchester: English Cathedral Life in the Nineteenth Century (1993).

Much information about the cathedrals of England is to be found in W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum (q.v.). Among modern works dealing with Eng. cathedrals collectively are those of F. Bond (London, 1899), T. F. Bumpus (3 vols., ibid., 1905–6; rev. edn. 1922), and photographic studies incl. those of H. Batsford and C. Fry (London, 1934), H. Felton and J. Harvey (ibid., 1950; rev. edn. by J. Harvey, 1974), M. Hürlimann and P. Meyer (ibid., 1950), and H. Thorold, Collins Guide to Cathedrals, Abbeys and Priories of England and Wales (1986). E. S. Prior, The Cathedral Builders in England (1905). E. H. Fellowes, English Cathedral Music from Edward VI to Edward VII (1941; rev. edn. by J. A. Westrup, 1969). E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law (3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, 1992), pp. 40–4, with notes p. 48. M. Hill, Ecclesiastical Law (1995), pp. 465–97. Heritage and Renewal: The Report of the Archbishops' Commission on Cathedrals (1994 [recommended extensive changes in the structure of administration]).

cathedral schools. Schools established in medieval or later times for the education of the choirboys of cathedral churches. They sometimes served also the purposes of a grammar school, providing free education for poor boys living in the cathedral city. Most of these schools have in later times admitted fee-paying pupils, both day boys and boarders, and many of those which provide secondary as well as primary education are represented on the Headmasters' Conference. Several now admit girls as well as boys; in some cases girls form part of the cathedral choir. The oldest choir school is probably that at *York, which claims to have been founded in the 7th cent.

Cathedrals, Friends of the. Voluntary organizations designed to support the work and fabric of the English cathedrals. The first such society, the Friends of *Canterbury Cathedral, was founded in 1927 under the auspices of G. K. A. *Bell, then the dean; its objects were defined as 'to gather round the cathedral in association with the Dean and Chapter a body of supporters who are prepared to take some share in caring for it and in preserving it for posterity'. This precedent has since been followed in the case of many other ancient English (and esp. cathedral) churches.

Catherine, St, of Alexandria. Acc. to tradition, she was a virgin martyred at *Alexandria in the early 4th cent.; but though she is among the most widely venerated of women saints, she is not mentioned in the W. before the 8th/9th cent. Legend represents her as of a noble family and of exceptional learning, who, as a result of her protest against the persecution of Christians by Maxentius, was tied to a wheel, tortured, and finally beheaded. Her body was said to have been discovered *c.*800 on Mount *Sinai, whither, acc. to her *acts, it was transported by angels after her death. The monastery near the site, however, goes back to 527, and the earlier pilgrims knew nothing of its connection with St Catherine. There was great devotion to her in the Middle Ages, notably in France during the *Crusades. Her symbol is a spiked wheel; and she is patroness of young women, wheelwrights, attorneys, and scholars, and is one of the '*auxiliary saints'. Feast day, 25 Nov., suppressed in 1969.

She has sometimes been identified, but on insufficient grounds, with the unnamed woman mentioned in *Eusebius, HE 8. 14. 15. There are a number of versions of the legend; four Gk. texts ed. J. Viteau, Passions des Saints Écaterine et Pierre d'Alexandrie (1897), pp. 2–65; the legend acc. to *Simeon Metaphrastes is also pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 116. 276–301; further texts in H. Kunst, Geschichte der Legende der h. Katherina von Alexandrien und der h. Maria Aegyptiaca (1890), pp. 1–109, passim; two metrical Lat. versions ed. H. Varnhagen (Erlangen, 1891); A. Poncelet, SJ (ed.), 'Sanctae Catharinae Virginis et Martyris Translatio et Miracula Rotomagensia Saec. XI', Anal. Boll. 22 (1903), pp. 423–38; full details of edns. of Lat. MSS, to date, in BHL 1, pp. 250–5 (nos. 1657–700), and novum supplementum (1986), pp. 192–7. P. Peeters, SJ (ed.), 'Une Version arabe de la passion de Sainte Catherine d'Alexandrie', Anal. Boll. 27 (1907), pp. 5–32, incl. Lat. tr. R. Fawtier, 'Les Reliques rouennaises de Sainte Catherine d'Alexandrie', ibid. 41 (1923), pp. 357–68. For date of earliest Lat. Life, see H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'Les Martyrs d'Égypte', ibid. 40 (1922), pp. 5–154, esp. pp. 123 f. Life by Clemence of Barking ed. W. MacBain (Anglo-Norman Texts, 18; 1964). J. A. *Robinson, 'The Passion of Saint Catharine and the Romance of Barlaam and Joasaph', JTS 25 (1924), pp. 246–53. E. Weigand, 'Zu den ältesten abendländischen Darstellungen der Jungfrau und Märtyrin Katherina von Alexandria', in Pisciculi: Studien zur Religion und Kultur des Altertums Franz Joseph Dölger . . . dargeboten (Antike und Christentum. Ergänzungsband, 1, 1939), pp. 279–90, with refs. A. Zachou, Σινᾶ καὶ ἁγία Αἰκατερίνη (1937). On iconography, H. *Bremond, Sainte Catherine d'Alexandrie (L'Art et les saints, 1917). Tito da Ottone, OM Cap., La leggenda di Santa Caterina vergine e martire di Alexandria (Genoa, 1940), incl. information on the growth of the cult. D. Balboni and others in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 3 (Rome, 1963), cols. 954–78, s.v., with further bibl.

Catherine, St, of Genoa (1447–1510), mystic. Caterina Fieschi was of a noble Ligurian family, who at the age of 16 married Giuliano Adorno. Ten years later she was suddenly converted; and, though she found continued life with her pleasure-loving husband burdensome, she succeeded in reaching great heights of spirituality. She began to receive communion almost daily, a practice extremely rare except for priests in the later Middle Ages. Subsequently her husband too was also converted, and after this assisted her in her selfless care of the sick in a hospital in Genoa. Eventually Giuliano became a Franciscan *tertiary, but Caterina joined no order. She underwent a number of remarkable mental and at times almost pathological experiences, which were the subject of F. *von Hügel's well-known study and evaluation. Her spiritual doctrine is contained in the book published in 1551 as the Vita e dottrina, though perhaps she did not herself put this account of her visions and convictions into their present literary form; this is the source of her 'Dialogues on the Soul and the Body' and of her 'Treatise on Purgatory' which have often been issued separately. It used to be thought that the writings were edited by Battista *Vernazza, but recent scholarship has discredited this suggestion. In 1944 St Catherine was proclaimed by *Pius XII Patroness of the Hospitals in Italy. Feast day, 15 Sept.

Modern Eng. tr. of Catherine's 'Treatise on Purgatory' (here called 'Purgation and Purgatory') and 'Dialogue' by S. Hughes, with introd. by B. J. Groeschel, OFM Cap. (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1979). F. von Hügel, The Mystical Element of Religion as studied in St Catherine of Genoa and her Friends (2 vols., 1908). Von Hügel's contention that neither the 'Dialogue' nor the 'Treatise' received literary shape until a late date has been severely criticized by Umile [Bonzi] da Genova, OM Cap., in an imp. art. in Dict. Sp. 2 (1938), s.v. 'Catherine de Gênes', cols. 290–321, with bibl. cols. 324 f.; more recently, id., S. Caterina Fieschi Adorno (2 vols., 1961–62), with crit. text of 'opus Catharinianum'. G. da Pantasina, Vita di Santa Caterina Fieschi Adorno con ricordi e documenti (Genoa, 1929). P. Debongnie, CSSR, in DHGE 10 (1949), cols. 1506–15, s.v. 'Catherine de Gênes'; S. Pezella in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 22 (1979), pp. 343–5, s.v. 'Caterina Fieschi Adorno'.

Catherine, St, de' Ricci (1522–90), *Dominican nun. Her baptismal name was Alessandra Lucrezia Romola. In 1535 she entered the Dominican convent of San Vincenzo, Prato, a house closely associated with the reforming movement of G. *Savonarola. From 1552 until her death she was always either prioress or subprioress. During several years she underwent periodic raptures, in which she experienced an intense union with Christ's Passion. Increasingly her reputation for sanctity and good counsel attracted to her people of all walks and stations of life, some of them becoming her 'spiritual children'. Among her correspondents were St *Charles Borromeo and St *Philip Neri and many other ecclesiastical and secular leaders. She was beatified in 1732 and canonized in 1746. Feast day, 4 Feb. (until 1971, 13 Feb.).

Modern edn. of her Letters by Guglielmo M. [later Domenico] di Agresti, OP (Collana Ricciana, Fonti, 8–12; Florence, 1973–5). Eng. tr. of Selected Letters, with introd. by id. (Dominican Sources, 3; Oxford '1985' [1986]). Acta Canonizationis . . . Catharinae de Ricci pub. Rome, 1749; other docs. concerned with the process pub. ibid., 1713, 1729, 1731, and 1742. The main early authority is the Life by S. Razzi, OP (Lucca, 1594; modern edn. by G. M. di Agresti in Collana Ricciana, Fonti, 3; 1965). There is much other material on St Catherine ed. by G. M. di Agresti in other vols. of this series (12 vols., 1963–75). H. Bayonne, Vie de Sainte Catherine de Ricci de Florence (2 vols., 1873); G. Bertini, Santa Caterina de' Ricci (1935).

Catherine, St, of Siena (?1347–80), *Dominican tertiary. Caterina Benincasa was the 23rd of 25 children born to a prosperous Sienese dyer. She grew up in Christian piety, though her long hours of prayer and severe mortification at first brought her into conflict with her family. Having at the early age of 16 joined the Dominican Order of Penance (later known as the Dominican *Third Order), she lived for a further three years or so in seclusion at home until, as she believed, she received a command from Christ to leave her solitude and devote herself to the care of the sick and poor and the conversion of sinners. Before long she was being called upon to act as a mediator not only between the warring factions in and around Siena but also in such higher matters as the conflict between Florence and the Holy See. On the journeys involved in these missions, she was nearly always accompanied by some of the large band of followers, both men and women, clerical and lay, who had gathered round her, drawn by her extraordinary sanctity, attractive personality, and great spiritual wisdom. These same qualities are reflected in the 383 extant letters written or dictated by her; in the synthesis of her teaching which is usually referred to as the 'Dialogo'; and in some 26 prayers (mostly recorded from phrases she was heard to murmur in one of her frequent states of 'abstraction'). In all her writings, the central theme is that of Christ crucified, and in particular the thought of His blood, which Catherine saw as the supreme sign and pledge of divine love and the chief motive for ours. Politically her one real success was to have helped persuade *Gregory XI to transfer the Papacy from *Avignon back to Rome in 1377. Ironically, it was Gregory's premature death just over a year later that paved the way for the election of *Urban VI and then for the onset of the *Great Schism. Catherine remained unswervingly loyal to Urban, but her intense distress over the Schism tore her apart, both physically and spiritually, and she died on 29 April 1380, aged only 33. She was canonized in 1461 and declared a *Doctor of the Church in 1970. Feast day, 29 (formerly 30) April.

Works ed. G. Gigli (4 vols., Lucca, 1707–21). The best edn. of the Dialogo is that of G. Cavallini (Rome, 1968); this omits the chapter divisions (which do not seem to be orig.) of earlier edns., e.g. that of M. Fiorilli and S. Caramella (Scrittori d'Italia [34]; 1928). 15th cent. Eng. tr., The Orcherd of Syon, ed. P. Hodgson and G. M. Liegey (EETS, Original Series, 258; 1966); modern trs. by A. Thorold (London, 1896; abridged edn., 1907, repr. Rockford, Ill., 1974) and S. Noffke, OP (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1980). Lettere ed. N. Tommaseo and P. Misciatelli (6 vols., Siena, 1913–21); crit. edn. by E. Dupré Theseider (vol. 1 only; Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, 82; 1940); good selection, with introd. and notes, by G. Cavallini, La Verità dell'Amore (1978). Eng. tr. of Letters by S. Noffke, OP (Medieval & Renaissance Texts and Studies, 52, etc.; Binghamton, NY, 1988 ff.); also of selections (with biog. and doctrinal introd., and extract from the Dialogo) by K. Foster, OP, and M. J. Ronayne, OP (London, 1980). Orazioni ed. G. Cavallini (Rome, 1978). Eng. tr. by S. Noffke, OP (New York, 1983). The principal sources for her Life are the Legenda Major by Raymond of Capua, OP, her confessor (editio princeps by T. Loher, Cologne, 1553, repr. in AASS, Apr. 3 (1675), pp. 853–959; an Eng. tr. was pub. London, prob. in 1492; modern Eng. trs. by G. Lamb, London, 1960, and C. Kearns, OP, Dublin, 1980); a Supplement to it (ed. J. Cavallini and I. Foralosso, Rome, 1974), and a Legenda Minor (ed. E. Franceschini, Fontes Vitae S. Catharinae Senensis Historici, 10; Milan, 1942), both by T. Caffarini; also the canonization process (ed. M.-H. Laurent, OP, ibid. 9; Milan, 1942). Further source material in Fontes, op. cit., 1 and 4 (both Florence, 1936), 15 (ibid., 1939), 20 (ibid., 1937) and 21 (ibid., 1938); the series is incomplete. Lives available in Eng. incl. those of A. T. Drane (London, 1880), E. G. Gardner (ibid., 1907), A. Curtayne (ibid., 1929), A. Levasti (Turin, 1947; Eng. tr., 1954), and M. de la Bedoyere (London, 1947; popular); see also G. Kaftan, St Catherine in Tuscan Painting (Oxford, 1949). Important studies include: R. Fawtier, Sainte Catherine de Sienne: Essai de critique des sources (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 121 and 135; 1921–30); id. and L. Canet, La Double Expérience de Catherine Benincasa (1948). E. Dupré Theseider, 'La duplice esperienza di S. Caterina da Siena', Rivista Storica Italiana, 62 (1950), pp. 533–74; A. Grion, OP, Santa Caterina da Siena: Dottrina e Fonti (Cremona, 1953); G. D'Urso, Il Genio di santa Caterina (1971). E. Jordan, 'La Date de naissance de Sainte Catherine de Sienne', Anal. Boll. 40 (1922), pp. 365–411; A. Dondaine, OP, 'Sainte Catherine de Sienne et Niccolò Toldo', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 19 (1949), pp. 169–207; Congresso Internazionale di Studi Cateriniani, Siena Rome—24–29 Aprile 1980: Atti (Rome, 1981). L. Bianchi and D. Giunta (eds.), Iconografia di S. Caterina da Siena (1988 ff.). L. Zanini, Bibliografia analitica di S. Caterina da Siena, 1901–1950 (1971); vols. covering 1951–75 and 1976–85, ed. M. C. Paterna (1985–9). M.-M. Gorce in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 327–48, s.v.; E. Dupré Theseider in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 22 (1979), pp. 361–79, s.v. 'Caterina da Siena', with detailed bibl.

Catherine, St, of Sweden (1331–81). The daughter of St *Bridget, she herself early showed signs of great sanctity. The first abbess of Vadstena, the original house of the *Bridgettine Order, she spent the later part of her life largely in Italy, obtaining confirmation of the order, and unsuccessfully seeking her mother's canonization. Like St *Catherine of Siena, she supported the party of *Urban VI during the *Great Schism. Feast day, 22 Mar.

Life by Upho, a monk of Gotland (d. 1433), pr. in AASS, Mar. 3 (1668), pp. 505–17; crit. edn. by C. Annerstedt (Scriptores Rerum Suecicarum Medii Aevi, 3, pt. 2; Uppsala, 1871), pp. 244–63. I. [G. A.] Collijn (ed.), Processus seu Negocium Canonizacionis B. Katerine de Vadstenis (Corpus Codicum Suecicorum Medii Aevi, 2; Copenhagen, 1943). She is also mentioned in works on St Bridget.

Catherine de' Medici (1519–89), Queen-Consort of France from 1547, and Queen-Mother from 1559. A relative of Pope *Clement VII, she was married in 1533 to Henry, son of Francis I of France, in order that French support might free the Pope from the control of the Emp. *Charles V. Through the reigns of Francis I and her husband (Henry II), she had little influence on politics; but during those of her sons, Francis II (1559–60), Charles IX (1560–74), and Henry III (1574–89), she exercised much power, and for most of Charles's reign was the real ruler of the country. In the wars of religion then raging in France she advocated at first a policy of toleration, since she wished to use the Protestants as a check upon the dominant Catholic party, without allowing them to gain any control of affairs. Between 1567 and 1570, however, she took violent measures in face of a Protestant rebellion, and, after a brief interval of mildness in a vain effort to gain the support of *Elizabeth I of England, attempted to re-establish her position, which seemed threatened, by the murder of G. *Coligny, the Protestant leader, and the Massacre of St *Bartholomew (23 Aug. 1572), for which she must bear the chief responsibility. After 1574 she returned to a policy of compromise, but her influence on affairs grew steadily less.

Letters ed. by les Ctes Hector de la Ferrière and Baguenault de Puchesse (Paris, 10 vols., 1880–1909; Index by A. Lesort, 1943). E. [H.] Sichel, Catherine de' Medici and the French Reformation (1905); J. H. Mariéjol, Catherine de Médicis (1519–1589) (Paris, 1920; repr., 1979); P. Van Dyke, Catherine de Medicis (2 vols., London, 1923); J. Héritier, Catherine de Médicis (1959; Eng. tr., 1963); I. Cloulas, Catherine de Médicis (Paris, 1979); J. Orieux, Catherine de Médicis ou la Reine noire (2 vols., 1986). F. Watson, The Life and Times of Catherine de' Medici (1934); R. Roeder, Catherine de' Medici and the Lost Revolution (1937); J. E. Neale, The Age of Catherine de Medici (1943).

Catholic. A word derived from the Gk. καθολικός, and meaning 'general' or 'universal'. It is first met with in Christian literature in St *Ignatius of Antioch (Ep. ad Smyr. 8. 2). In Christian terminology it has come to have various uses: (1) Of the universal Church as distinct from local Christian communities. It is applied thus to the faith of the whole Church, i.e. the doctrine believed 'everywhere, always, and by all' (see VINCENTIAN CANON). (2) In the sense of 'orthodox', as distinct from 'heretical', or (later) from 'schismatical'. (3) In historical writers, of the undivided Church before the schism of E. and W., traditionally dated in 1054. Thereafter the W. Church usually referred to itself as 'catholic', the E. preferring to describe itself as 'orthodox'. (4) Since the *Reformation RCs have come to use it of themselves exclusively. *Anglicans, and later *Old Catholics, have also adopted it to cover besides themselves and the RC Church also the E. Orthodox in the belief that these Communions together represent the undivided Church of earlier ages. (5) In general, in present-day usage, it is employed of those Christians who claim to be in possession of a historical and continuous tradition of faith and practice, as opposed to Protestants, who tend to find their ultimate standards in the Bible as interpreted on the principles of the Reformation of the 16th century.

P. M. Brlek, OFM, 'De vocis "catholica" origine et notione', Antonianum, 38 (1963), pp. 263–87. J. H. Maude in HERE 3 (1910), pp. 258–61, s.v. 'Catholicism, Catholicity'. G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (Oxford, 1968), pp. 690 f., s.v. καθολικός.

Catholic Action. Organized religious activity, esp. of a social, educational, or quasi-political kind, on the part of the RC laity, particularly when conceived as an extension of the apostolate of the hierarchy. A powerful impetus was given to such work when *Pius XI, in the encyclical 'Ubi Arcano' (23 Dec. 1922), encouraged the creation of elastic organizations for the purpose, under the direction of the clergy, in many European countries. Among such organizations are the *Jocists (q.v.), begun in Belgium, the 'Legion of Mary', founded in Ireland in 1921, and the 'Grail Movement', founded in the Netherlands in 1929. Subsequent Papal pronouncements, esp. those of *Pius XII in his later years, have insisted less on the organizational aspects of Catholic Action and more on the vocation of every member of the Church to spread the Kingdom of God on earth. After the Second *Vatican Council had encouraged initiatives and varied apostolates by the laity, the importance of the concept of Catholic Action declined.

The vast literature includes L. Civardi, Manuale di azione cattolica secundo gli ultimi ordinamenti (1924; Eng. tr. of vol. 1, 17th edn., by C. C. Martindale, SJ, 1935); E. Guerry, Code de l'action catholique (1928); J. Fitzsimons, OP, and P. McGuire, Restoring All Things (1939); C. K. Murphy, The Spirit of Catholic Action (1943); Y. J.-M. *Congar, OP, Jalons pour une théologie du laïcat (Unam Sanctam, 23, 1953; Eng. tr., Lay People in the Church, 1957; 3rd edn., 1964; Eng. tr., 1965); J. Newman, What is Catholic Action? (Dublin, 1958). The Second Vatican Council's Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity is pr. in AAS 68 (1966), pp. 837–64.

Catholic Apostolic Church. A religious body partly inspired in its origins by the teaching of E. *Irving (q.v.), its members also being known as Irvingites. It developed out of a revivalist circle which had gathered round H. *Drummond and counted Irving among its members. They believed in the near approach of the *Second Coming of Christ, in preparation for which they resolved to re-establish the primitive offices of the Church, namely those of Apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, to which others, e.g. 'angels' (bishops) and deacons, were added later. J. B. Cardale, the earliest of the 'Apostles', was 'called' in 1832. In 1835 the full 'College of Apostles', numbering 12, held its first 'council' in London, and in 1836 addressed memoranda to the bishops of the C of E and to William IV stating their mission. Shortly afterwards they undertook missionary journeys to the mainland of Europe and to America, each 'Apostle' being assigned one or more countries for his activities. The effect on them of their travels, perhaps helped by the spread of *Tractarianism in England, was an increasing inclination towards Catholic doctrines and practices. It was expressed in their service book of 1842, a mixture of RC, Greek, and Anglican rites. Their 'priests' wore vestments and used incense; later Anointing of the Sick, a ceremony called 'Sealing' based on Rev. 7. 3 ff., *Reservation in the Tabernacle, and the use of *holy water were also introduced. In 1853 they built a large church in Gordon Square, London (since 1963 used by the Anglican chaplaincy to London University). They carried on a vigorous though mostly secret propaganda on the mainland of Europe, esp. in the *Netherlands and Germany, where in the beginning they gained the adherence of several Catholic priests. Their chief successes, however, were obtained in the Protestant north, where they were favoured by the Prussian nobility. After the death, in 1901, of the last 'Apostle', who had been expected to survive till the Second Advent, they gradually diminished and are now virtually extinct.

E. Miller, The History and Doctrines of Irvingism (2 vols., 1878). P. E. Shaw, The Catholic Apostolic Church (New York, 1946). R. A. Davenport, Albury Apostles: The Story of the Body known as the Catholic Apostolic Church (1970; 2nd edn., 1973). C. G. Flegg, 'Gathered Under Apostles': A Study of the Catholic Apostolic Church (Oxford, 1992). J. G. Simpson in HERE 7 (1914), pp. 422–8, s.v. 'Irving and the Catholic Apostolic Church'.

Catholic Association. An association created by D. *O'Connell for the defence of RC interests in Ireland. It was founded in May 1823, but did not come into effective existence till the following February. Through the exertions of the RC clergy a branch of it was established in nearly every parish, and it mobilized all classes of the RC community and liberal Protestants. In Feb. 1825 the government suppressed it, but its work was continued under other names. Its influence largely contributed to the passing of the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829.

T. Wyse, Historical Sketch of the late Catholic Association of Ireland (2 vols., 1829). J. A. Reynolds, The Catholic Emancipation Crisis in Ireland, 1823–1829 (Yale Historical Publications, Miscellany 60; New Haven, Conn., and London, 1954). F. O'Ferrall, Catholic Emancipation: Daniel O'Connell and the Birth of Irish Democracy (Dublin, 1985). See also Lives of D. O'Connell, cited s.v.

Catholic Emancipation Acts. See CATHOLIC RELIEF ACTS.

Catholic Epistles. A title used properly of the NT Epistles of Jas., 1 and 2 Pet., 1 Jn., and Jude, because they were 'general' (i.e. universal) epistles, and (unlike those of St *Paul) not addressed to specified Churches or individuals. It is usual, however, to include 2 and 3 Jn. among them, though these are addressed respectively to 'the elect lady and her children' and to Gaius. On this reckoning they thus total seven in all. The word 'catholic' may originally have been applied to some or all of these epistles for a different reason, i.e. to indicate that their *canonicity was accepted. See also arts. on separate epistles.

Catholic Majesty, His. A traditional title of the Kings of *Spain, said to have been granted by *Alexander VI to *Ferdinand of Aragon in 1494 in recognition of his conquest of Granada. In earlier times it had been borne by certain kings of France, e.g. *Pepin in 767.

The precise circumstances in which the title arose are obscure. It is the subject of a letter dated 5 Feb. 1495, by Peter Martyr (Ital. historian, 1455–1526), pr. in his Opus Epistolarum (Amsterdam and Paris, 1670), pp. 88 f. (no. 157). W. H. Prescott, History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, 2 (ed. J. F. Kirk, 1902), pp. 283 f., for note on the subject; P. de Roo, Material for a History of Pope Alexander VI, 5 (Bruges, 1924), pp. 2 f., with refs.; cf. J. Perez, Isabelle et Ferdinand [1988], pp. 7 f.

Catholic Record Society. An organization, founded in 1904, to print and circulate records bearing on the history of English RCism since the 16th cent. It has issued a long series of publications, now including the periodical Recusant History.

F. A. *Gasquet, Introduction to Miscellanea, 1 (Publications of the CRS, 1, 1905), pp. vii–xv.

Catholic Relief Acts (also Catholic Emancipation Acts). (1) By the Papists Act 1778 Catholics were allowed henceforward to own landed property on taking an oath not involving a denial of their religion; priests ceased to be subject to persecution at the denunciation of the common informer; and lifelong imprisonment for keeping a Catholic school was abolished. The Act was followed by the *Gordon Riots.

(2) By the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1791 those who took the prescribed oath were freed from the Statutes of Recusancy and the Oath of Supremacy; Catholic worship and schools were tolerated; and certain posts in the legal and military professions were opened to RCs.

(3) In 1793 by 33 Geo. III, c. 21 [Ireland] Catholics in Ireland were admitted to the franchise, the universities, and the professions.

(4) When the Irish situation was critical, the most decisive of the Emancipation measures, the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829, was passed. Almost all disabilities were removed and Catholics were admitted to most public offices. The unrepealed restrictions, some of which were from the first a dead letter, included the prohibition of public celebrations and of taking the title of the ancient episcopal sees, and the invalidity of marriage before a priest.

(5) Most of these remaining disabilities were removed by the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1926. Among those still retained is the law which restrains the King or Queen of Great Britain from being a RC. The same applies to the offices of Regent, Lord Chancellor, and Keeper of the Great Seal. The disability of priests sitting in the House of Commons is shared with the clergy of the C of E (but not with ministers of the Free Churches). RCs are also still disabled from presenting or nominating to any benefice, the right passing by the Presentation of Benefices Act 1605 to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge acc. to a geographical distribution.

Catholic Truth Society. A RC society formed at the suggestion of Dr (later Cardinal) Herbert *Vaughan in 1884 for the printing of cheap literature, chiefly leaflets and tracts, of a devotional, educational, or controversial nature.

G. E. Anstruther and P. E. Hallett, Catholic Truth Society: The First Fifty Years (1934); C. Ralls, The Catholic Truth Society: A New History (1993).

Catholic University of America. The university was founded at Washington, DC, in 1889. It was originally intended for the higher education of the RC clergy; the laity were admitted in 1905. The university is governed by a board of 40 or more trustees, about evenly divided between clergy and laity, with the Abp. of Washington the ex officio chancellor. A number of religious orders and congregations are attached or affiliated to it with neighbouring houses of studies. It has played an important part in the educational activity of the RC Church in the USA at all levels.

J. T. Ellis, The Formative Years of the Catholic University of America (Washington, DC, 1946); P. H. Ahern, The Catholic University of America, 1887–1896: The Rectorship of John J. Keane (ibid., 1948); P. E. Hogan, SSJ, The Catholic University of America, 1896–1903: The Rectorship of Thomas J. Conaty (ibid., 1949); C. J. Barry, OSB, The Catholic University of America, 1903–1909: The Rectorship of Denis J. O'Connell (ibid., 1950); C. J. Nuesse, The Catholic University of America: A Centennial History (ibid., 1990). J. T. Ellis in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 332–4, s.v.

Catholicos (Gk. καθολικός). A title used by the *Patriarchs of the *Armenian and *Georgian Churches and the *Church of the East (in the case of the last two in the form 'Catholicos Patriarch'). In secular usage it was originally applied to certain high financial officials, and then in early Christian usage to the head of a number of monasteries in the same city. At one period it was used of certain bishops of metropolitan rank, in addition to the Patriarchs so named.

Caton, William (1636–65), one of the earliest *Quakers. He became a Quaker in 1652 under the influence of G. *Fox. He preached first in the Swarthmore district and then became an itinerant minister, working in various parts of the country; he received much harsh treatment. He spent a short time in France in 1655 and made four visits to the Netherlands, helping to build up the young Quaker community there. He wrote a good deal in a simple style and his Journal (edited by Fox himself, 1689) was long read among Friends.

List of his writings, among them an 'Abridgement' of *Eusebius' Chronologies (n.p., 1661), in DNB 9 (1887), p. 322, s.v.

Causes of Saints, Congregation for the. The Congregation was established by *Paul VI in 1969 when the Congregation of Sacred *Rites was divided. It deals with *beatification and *canonization procedures, those for declaring '*Doctors of the Church', and with the authentication and preservation of *relics. Its structure and methods of operation have been radically changed by recent legislation on canonization. While a cause is going through its diocesan stages the Congregation assists and ensures that all is done correctly. When the cause is being heard in Rome, it appoints an official (the relator) to oversee its progress. In due course it prepares a positio or report on the martyrdom or virtues of the candidate for beatification or canonization and then one on his or her alleged *miracles. Historians and theologians (headed by the Promotor Fidei) act as consultors. At the end of the process there is an assembly of cardinals and bishops who advise the Pope; the final decision is his alone.

For bibl. see CANONIZATION.

Caussade, Jean Pierre de (1675–1751), ascetic writer. In 1693 he joined the *Jesuits at Toulouse, was professed in 1708, and later travelled widely, being much appreciated as a preacher. From 1729 until 1740 he resided mainly in Lorraine. His last years were passed at Perpignan (1741–3), Albi (1744–6), and Toulouse (1746–51). His extensive correspondence with the *Visitandines at Nancy is a leading source of our knowledge of his doctrines.

His influence did much to rehabilitate *mysticism at a time when its claims were still suffering from the condemnation of *Quietism. Caussade tried to show that it had justification in the teaching of J. B. *Bossuet, whose authority here was of the highest in view of his part in the Quietist controversy. In addition to his letters of spiritual direction, his works include Instructions spirituelles en forme de dialogue sur les divers états d'oraison (1741; Eng. tr., with introd. by J. *Chapman, 1931). The treatise on abandonment to God's providence, first published by H. Ramière as L'Abandon à la providence divine (1867; Eng. tr., 1921), was taken from papers put together by the Visitation nuns at Nancy; it is disputed whether or not all the material can be ascribed to Caussade.

Good edn. of his Lettres spirituelles by M. Olphe-Galliard, SJ (2 vols., 1962–4); earlier Eng. tr. by A. Thorold (1934). His Traité sur l'oraison du cœur first ed., together with the second book of his Instructions spirituelles, by M. Olphe-Galliard, SJ [1981]. L'Abandon à la providence divine also ed. id. (1966; Eng. tr., 1981). M. Huillet d'Istria, Le Père de Caussade et la querelle du pur amour [1964], with bibl. M. Olphe-Galliard, SJ, 'Le Père Jean-Pierre de Caussade et Madame Guyon', Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, 82 (1981), pp. 25–56. S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Ways of Imperfection (1984), pp. 208–18. Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 473–5. M. Olphe-Galliard in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 354–70, incl. full bibl.

cautel. A rubrical direction for the correct administration of the Sacraments. The word is used esp. of those prefixed to the Roman *Missal of 1570 to give the celebrant guidance in the case of accidents or defects during the service.

Cave, William (1637–1713), *patristic scholar. He was incumbent successively of Islington (1662), All Hallows the Great, Thames Street, London (1679), and Isleworth (1690). His principal writings were his Apostolici (1677), a history of the chief figures in the first three hundred years of the Church's existence; his Ecclesiastici (1682), a continuation of the Apostolici for the 4th cent.; and his Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Historia Literaria (pt. 1, 1688; 2, 1698), a history of ecclesiastical writers down to the 14th cent. His works were all erudite and lucidly arranged.

J. H. Overton in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 341–3, s.v.

Caxton, William (*c.*1422–91), the first English printer. After spending his early years in commerce in London, Antwerp, and Bruges, where he was Governor of the English Merchant Adventurers, he entered the service of his compatriot, Margaret, Duchess of Burgundy, for whom he made several English translations. Tiring of copying these by hand, he learnt the new art of printing at Cologne (1471–2), and introduced it into Bruges in 1473–4, producing the first book ever to be printed in English, his own translation of Raoul LeFèvre's 'The Recuyell of the Histories of Troye'. In Sept. 1476 he set up his printing press at the Almonry, Westminster, and before 13 Dec. 1476 he had published an *indulgence of *Sixtus IV (the first of his known works in England). Other works printed by Caxton include Dictes and Sayings of the Philosophers (1477), Ordinale secundum Usum Sarum [1477], G. *Chaucer's Canterbury Tales [1477], the first Horae ad Usum Sarum [1477/8], *Boethius' Consolatio Philosophiae [1478?], the Golden Legend* [after 20 Nov. 1485], and St *Bonaventure's Speculum Vitae Christi [1486]. He was not only a printer but also a translator, editor, and moralist, and an enthusiast for standardizing the English language.

Good modern reprints exist of several of Caxton's books. His important and informative Prologues and Epilogues ed. W. J. B. Crotch (EETS 176; 1928). Pioneering study by W. Blades, The Life and Typography of William Caxton (2 vols., 1861–3; rev. edn., 1877). N. F. Blake, Caxton: England's First Publisher (1976). G. D. Painter, William Caxton: A Quincentenary Biography of England's First Printer (1976). In 1976 the quincentenary commemorations of Caxton's coming to Westminster gave rise to a large number of works, most importantly the catalogues of exhibitions held in the British Library and Cambridge University Library, 24 Sept. 1976–31 Jan. 1977, both entitled William Caxton and pub. in 1976. L. Hellinga, Caxton in Focus: The Beginning of Printing in England [1982], with important discussion of Caxton's typefaces. P. Needham, The Printer & the Pardoner (Washington, DC, 1986), with a list of Caxton's work, some of which he redates from watermark evidence.

CCCS. The 'Colonial and Continental Church Society'. The name under which the Intercontinental Church Society is incorporated. The society was formed by a union in 1851 of the Newfoundland School Society (founded in 1823) with the Western Australian Missionary Society (founded in 1835). It was originally intended to enable *Evangelicals of the Church of England to take an active part in the work of Church extension in the British Empire; it later provided chaplains in many places in Continental Europe, and now supports chaplains, lay workers and teachers serving English-speaking people in all parts of the world. Altered circumstances were reflected in the changes of title to 'Commonwealth and Continental Church Society' in 1958 and to 'Intercontinental Church Society' in 1979.

Ceadda, St. See CHAD, ST.

Cecilia, St (2nd or 3rd cent.). One of the most venerated martyrs in the early Roman Church. Acc. to her acts, which are apocryphal and date from about the end of the 5th cent., she converted her pagan husband, Valerian, and his brother, Tibertius, both of whom were then martyred before her, and, after herself dying for the Christian faith, was buried in the *catacomb of St Callistus. When her relics were discovered in the catacomb of Praetextatus by Paschal I (817–24), they were moved to the church which bears her name in Trastevere in the city of Rome. Here her body is said to have been found entire and uncorrupted when the church was being repaired in 1599. She is frequently represented as playing on the organ, and is the patroness of church music. Feast day, 22 Nov.

J. P. Kirsch, Die heilige Cäcilia in der römischen Kirche des Altertums (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 4, Heft 2; 1910). P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, 4 (ST 24; 1912), pp. 3–38 ('Recenti studi intorno a S. Cecilia'). H. *Delehaye, SJ, Étude sur le légendier romain: Les saints de novembre et de décembre (Subsidia Hagiographica, 23; 1936), pp. 77–96, incl. full bibl. refs. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; 1938), pp. 178–82. A.

Amore, OFM, I Martiri di Roma (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, 1975), pp. 144–56. H. *Quentin, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2712–38, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, ibid., cols. 2738–2779, s.v. 'Cécile (Crypte et Basilique de Sainte-)'.

Cedd (or Cedda), St, Bp. of the East Saxons and brother of St *Chad (q.v.). Two of his other brothers were priests. He was brought up with St Chad at *Lindisfarne under St *Aidan and in 653 was one of the four priests sent by Oswiu, King of Northumbria, to evangelize the Middle Angles. Shortly afterwards he was recalled for a similar mission to Essex and consecrated Bp. of the East Saxons in 654. Here he founded many churches and established monasteries at West Tilbury and Ythancester (Bradwell-on-Sea, the Roman Othona). On a visit to Northumbria he also founded the abbey of Lastingham, N. Yorks, of which he became the first Abbot. At the Synod of *Whitby (664) he accepted the Roman Easter. Shortly afterwards he died of the plague at Lastingham (26 Oct. 664). He is reckoned by Florence of Worcester and *William of Malmesbury (on no sufficient grounds) the second Bp. of London. Feast day, 7 Jan.

The primary authority for his life is *Bede, HE 3. 21–3, 25, and 4. 3; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 118–20 and 233. T. F. Tout in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 413 f., with refs.; C. P. S. Clarke in DECH, pp. 102 f.

Cedron. The valley or gorge on the east of *Jerusalem, between the city and the Mount of *Olives. It was the scene of the burning of an *Asherah by Asa (1 Kgs. 15: 13) and of another by Josiah (2 Kgs. 23: 6). It is mentioned only once in the NT (Jn. 18: 1; RV, 'Kidron', NEB and RSV, 'Kedron'), as the 'brook' crossed by Christ in the night before His Passion. The spelling 'Kidron' is almost consistently that of the English versions of the OT. Since the 4th cent. AD it has been identified with the 'Valley of *Jehoshaphat' (q.v.).

Ceillier, Remi (1688–1763), ecclesiastical historian. In 1705 he joined the *Benedictine monastery of Moyen-Moutier in the Vosges, in 1718 was elected prior of that of St-Jacques de Neufchâteau, and, having moved to that of Flavigny-sur-Moselle in 1724, was prior there from 1733 till his death. His Histoire générale des auteurs sacrés et ecclésiastiques (23 vols., 1729–63) is a remarkably full record of what is known of Christian writers down to the middle of the 13th cent. (esp. complete for the *patristic period), though somewhat diffuse in treatment.

A. Beugnet, Étude biographique et critique sur Dom Remi Ceillier (Mémoires de la Société des Lettres, Sciences et Arts de Bar-le-Duc, 2nd ser. 2, 10; 1891). Id. in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 2049–51, s.v.

celebret (Lat.), 'let him celebrate'. In the RC Church a priest is now permitted to celebrate the Eucharist, even if he is not known to the rector of the church, provided either that he presents commendatory letters (the celebret document) from his own *Ordinary or Superior, or that it can be prudently judged that he is not debarred from celebrating. The celebret should not be more than one year old (CIC (1983), can. 903). In the past a celebret was normally required unless the priest was known.

G. F. Schorr, The Law of the Celebret: A Historical Synopsis and a Commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, 332; 1952). F. Jombart in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 126–31, s.v.

Celestine I, St (d. 432), Pope from 422. He continued the theological policy of his predecessor, *Boniface I, by sending *Germanus of Auxerre to Britain in 429 to combat *Pelagianism, and by writing to S. Gaul in 431 against the *Semipelagian teaching of John *Cassian. His support of the African presbyter *Apiarius, who had appealed to Rome from the Church authorities in Africa, led a Council of *Carthage of *c.*424 to protest against what they held to be an infringement of their rights. At a Roman Synod in Aug. 430, he formally condemned *Nestorius and charged St *Cyril of Alexandria with carrying through his excommunication and deposition. Feast day, in the E., 8 Apr.; in the W., formerly 6 Apr., after 1922 27 July, and now suppressed.

Letters, mostly dealing with Nestorian conflict, collected in J. P. Migne, PL 50. 417–558. Crit. edn. by E. *Schwartz in ACO 1. 1 (pt. 7; 1929), pp. 125–37, and 1. 2 (1925–6), pp. 5–101. For the text of the spurious 'Capitula Caelestini' against Semipelagianism, from the early 6th cent. attributed to this Pope, but prob. the work of *Prosper of Aquitaine, see Denzinger-Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 113–20 (nos. 238–49); M. Cappuyns, OSB, 'L'Origine des capitula pseudo-célestiniens contre le semipélagianisme', R. Bén. 41 (1929), pp. 156–70. O. Wermelinger, Rom und Pelagius: Die theologische Position der römischen Bischöfe im Pelagianischen Streit in der Jahren 411–432 (Päpste und Papsttum, 7; 1975), pp. 244–53. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 2 vols., 1976), 2, pp. 955–66, 1026–43, 1130–9, and 1357–93. H. J. Vogt, 'Papst Cölestin und Nestorius', in G. Schwaiger (ed.), Konzil und Papst . . .: Festgabe für Hermann Tüchle (1975), pp. 85–101. On the synod of 430, Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 260–4 and É. Amann in Rev. S.R. 24 (1950), pp. 28–52. B. Studer in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 638 f., s.v. 'Celestino I'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 154.

Celestine III (*c.*1106–98), Pope from 1191. Giacinto Bobone was a member of the Roman family of the Orsini. He defended *Abelard at the Council of *Sens (1140), and, after becoming a cardinal in 1144, advocated a conciliatory policy towards *Frederick Barbarossa, and urged St Thomas *Becket to adopt a less intransigent attitude towards Henry II of England. He was elected Pope in his 85th year. His reign was marked by indecision. One of his first Papal acts was the coronation as Emperor of King Henry VI, who, having failed to conquer Sicily, oppressed the Church in Germany, and caused Richard the Lionhearted to be imprisoned on his return from the Crusade. The aged Pope failing to take prompt action, Henry once more invaded Sicily after the death of King Tancred in 1194. Having blinded Tancred's young successor, William III, committed many other cruelties, and united Sicily with the Empire, Henry calmed the Pope with feigned promises of a *Crusade. The Pope was firmer in his dealings with the matrimonial affairs of the European princes. He forced King Alfonso IX of León to give up his plan of a marriage with a Portuguese princess within the forbidden degrees, and declared invalid a divorce conceded to King Philip Augustus by his complacent French bishops. He favoured the idea of a Crusade and approved the orders of the Knights *Templar, the *Hospitallers, and the newly founded *Teutonic Order.

His registers are lost, but 330 of his letters are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 206. 867–1240, and a few further docs. in NA 2 (1877), p. 218; 11 (1886), pp. 398 f.; and 12 (1887), pp. 411–14. Study by J. Leineweber (Jena, 1905). V. Pfaff, 'Pro posse nostro. Die Ausübung der Kirchengewalt durch Papst Coelestin III', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, 74, Kanonistische Abteilung, 43 (1957), pp. 89–131, and other works of this author. Mann, 10 (1914), pp. 383–441. R. Mols in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 62–77; V. Pfaff in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 23 (1979), pp. 392–8, s.v., both incl. further bibl.

Celestine V, St (c.1215–96), founder of the *Celestine Order and, for some months in 1294, Pope. At the age of 17 he became a *Benedictine, but his love of solitude led him to retire to Monte Morrone in the Abruzzi, where the many disciples who collected around him became the nucleus of the Celestine Order. He became very celebrated as an ascetic and seems to have had some connections with the widespread religious movement of which the '*Spiritual Franciscans' were a part. When nearly 80 he was elected Pope on 5 July 1294, through an impasse at a Papal *conclave. His pontificate was astonishing and disastrous. Naïve and ignorant of all procedure, he became a tool in the hands of Charles II of Naples, and, after alienating his supporters, abdicated on 13 Dec. of the same year. His acts were abrogated by his ambitious successor, *Boniface VIII, who also had him arrested and imprisoned in the castle of Fumone, where he died. Partly because of his sanctity, and partly as a political move against Boniface's pontificate, Celestine was canonized by *Clement V in 1313. His baptismal name was Peter, whence he is sometimes known as 'St Peter Celestine'. Feast day, 19 May, no longer in the universal calendar.

Two versions of a 14th-cent. Life in Anal. Boll. 9 (1890), pp. 149–200; 10 (1891), pp. 385–92; and 16 (1897), pp. 393–487, with discussion of sources, 16, pp. 365–92; and 18 (1899), pp. 34–42. F. X. Seppelt, Monumenta Coelestiniana (1921); F. Baethgen, Der Engelpapst: Idee und Erscheinung (Leipzig, 1943); A. Frugoni, Celestiniana (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, Studi Storici, fascs. 6–7; 1954); P. Herde, Cölestin V. (Päpste und Papsttum, 16; 1981). Mann, 17 (1931), pp. 247–341. R. Mols in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 79–101; P. Herde in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 23 (1979), pp. 402–15, s.v.

Celestine Order. A congregation of the *Benedictine Order which had its origin at Monte Morrone, not far from Sulmona in Central Italy; it was founded by Peter 'del Morrone', later *Celestine V. Established in 1259, the abbey secured the approval of Pope Urban IV in 1263, and the Order was recognized by Pope *Gregory X in 1275. Its constitution, the Instituta beati Petri, was based on the Rule of St *Benedict, but was highly eclectic. The severity of its discipline did not prevent the Order from numbering at one time as many as 120 monasteries. It came to an end in 1785, when the last surviving house at Calavino, near Trent, was closed.

A. Moscati, 'I monasteri di Pietro Celestino', Bulletino d'Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, 68 (1956), pp. 91–163. P. Schmitz, OSB, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 102–4, s.v. 'Célestins'; V. Cattana, OSB, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 732–5, s.v. 'Celestini', both with bibl. The foundation of the Order is also discussed in Lives of Pope Celestine V.

Celestius (5th cent.), heretic. A native of Britain, he was practising as an advocate in *Rome when he met *Pelagius, who induced him to turn from secular pursuits. The two men, alarmed by the low morality of their day, became convinced that it could be reformed only by stressing the responsibility of men for their actions, and so began teaching a doctrine of free will which left no room for *grace. Celestius went so far as to deny that *Baptism is for the remission of sins, and indeed that *original sin ever existed. He was condemned in Africa (whither he had migrated c.410) by the Council of *Carthage of 411, and retired to *Ephesus. The condemnation was reaffirmed by the Council of Diospolis (Lydda) in 415, and by two African councils in 416. Pope *Innocent I upheld this decision, but his successor, *Zosimus (417), was inclined to favour the two friends, and reversed Innocent's decree, though he was constrained to retract his decision by an Imperial decree of banishment against them. The chief opponents of Celestius and Pelagius were St *Augustine and St *Jerome. His teachings were condemned at the Council of Ephesus (431) (cans. 1 and 4).

Convenient note by A. de Veer, 'Le Dossier de Célestius', Œuvres de Saint Augustin, 22 (Bibliothèque Augustinienne, 1975), pp. 691 f. For other items see bibl. to PELAGIUS.

celibacy of the clergy. In the E., many early councils asserted or implied the right of the clergy to be married, and this position was stabilized by the Council in *Trullo of 692 (can. 13). At the Council of *Nicaea (325) a proposal to compel all clergy to give up cohabitation with their wives was rejected, and the legal position in the E. has always been the same—priests and deacons may marry before ordination, but not after. Bishops, on the other hand, must be celibate.

In the W., a legal position was gradually reached by which all the higher clergy must be celibate. The earliest canonical enactment is can. 33 of the Council of *Elvira (c.306). In 386 a *decretal of Pope *Siricius ordered celibacy for 'priests and levites'; this was repeated by *Innocent I (402–17). Similar legislation was introduced in Africa, which even extended to *subdeacons. *Leo the Great (440–61) forbade men to put away their wives on receiving Holy *Orders; they were to go on living with them as brother and sister. This course was open to obvious objections, and it was not long before Gallican councils refused to ordain married men before mutual vows of continence had been exchanged between them and their wives. The wives then retired to a monastery, or were enrolled in the orders of *widows or *deaconesses. Throughout the Middle Ages there were repeated efforts to enforce celibacy on those in Holy Orders, and the Second *Lateran Council of 1139 (can. 7) made the marriage of clerics not only unlawful but invalid. This legislation was repeated at the Council of Trent. The 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici states that clerics are bound to celibacy and that a man who has a wife is impeded from receiving orders unless he is destined for the permanent diaconate (cans. 277 and 1042). Dispensations may, however, be granted in certain cases.

Practice has not always kept pace with legislation in this matter and there have been periods in the history of the W. Church when clerical concubinage has been rife, e.g. the 10th and 15th cents. It was a matter of debate among the Schoolmen whether celibacy was enjoined on the clergy by the law of God or the law of the Church; and was decided in favour of the latter (St *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theol. 2. 2, q. 88, a. 11). The relation of this law of the Church to the vow of perfect chastity required of subdeacons since the 11th cent. is still the subject of dispute among canonists. The importance of the debate lies in the degree of difficulty in granting dispensations which would follow from the answer. In practice, dispensations have in the past very rarely been given, except for deacons or subdeacons who, being at the point of death, wished for conscience' sake to have their unions ratified. In recent years, however, many dispensations have been granted to priests and deacons who, having left the ministry, wished to marry, and there has been little difficulty for subdeacons who did not propose to proceed to further orders. Since the Second *Vatican Council, which reaffirmed the need for celibacy for those in *major orders, there has been much discussion and even agitation to have the law changed so that celibacy might become a genuinely free choice. A vigorous restatement of the traditional position by Pope *Paul VI in his encyclical Sacerdotalis Caelibatus (of 24 June 1967) failed to halt the discussion. The traditional discipline of the *Uniat Churches (a married clergy except for bishops) was specifically exempted from the Vatican Council decree and the encyclical of 1967. Popes have also allowed priests to continue in marriage who contracted marriage during schism, e.g. *Pius VII to priests who married in the French Revolution, and *Julius III to English priests who married in the reign of *Henry VIII.

In the C of E the obligation to celibacy of the clergy was formally abolished in 1549, and thereby the marriage of Abp. T. *Cranmer was technically legalized.

H. C. Lea, History of Sacerdotal Celibacy in the Christian Church (2 vols., 1907; hostile and uncritical in details). F. X. Funk, Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, 1 (1897), pp. 121–55 ('Coelibat und Priesterehe'); E. Vacandard, Études de critique et d'histoire religieuse (1905), pp. 69–120 ('Les Origines du célibat ecclésiastique'); R. Gryson, Les Origines du célibat ecclésiastique du premier au septième siècle (Recherches et Synthèses, Section d'histoire, 2; Gembloux [1970]); G. Denzler, Das Papsttum und der Amtszölibat (Päpste und Papsttum, 5; 2 vols., 1973–6). The encyclical Sacerdotalis Caelibatus is pr. in AAS 59 (1967), pp. 657–97. Works in the recent debate incl. E. *Schillebeeckx, OP, Het ambts-celibaat in de branding (Bilthoven, 1966; Eng. tr., 1968); J. Blenkinsopp, Celibacy, Ministry, Church (New York, 1968; London, 1969); and R. Cholij, Clerical Celibacy in East and West (Leominster, 1988). E. Vacandard in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 2068–88, s.v. 'Célibat ecclésiastique'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 2, 1910), cols. 2802–32, s.v. 'Célibat', with extensive bibl.; E. Jombart and E. Herman, SJ, in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 132–56, s.v. 'Célibat des clercs', also with bibl. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 3 (1908), pp. 481–8, s.v.; P. Delhaye in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 369–74, s.v. 'Celibacy, History of'.

cell. (1) The private room or apartment of a *religious of either sex. A hermit's cell and those of monastic orders leading eremitical lives, such as the *Camaldolese, were usually separate from each other. In major orders of *Benedictines and *Augustinians the stress on common life long militated against private accommodation, though under modern social conditions it is common. The cell usually contains only bare necessities.

(2) A monastic house dependent on its mother house, e.g. in the choice of its superior and control of its personnel and property. Such establishments were generally small, though some cells of the order of *Cluny were sizeable.

(3) In quite recent times the word has come into use for small groups of Christians, mainly lay people, who have pledged themselves to intensive work for the propagation of the Christian faith in the secular surroundings in which their lot is cast. The members of such cells commonly meet together frequently for prayer, study, and mutual counsel and encouragement.

cella (also cella cemeterialis). A small chapel erected in cemeteries in early Christian times, and intended primarily for commemorating the departed buried there. Cellae were often also used as places of ordinary worship.

cellarer. One of the officials or *obedientiaries in a medieval monastic community. In theory he was responsible for the catering, and his chief duty was to see that there was always sufficient food and drink ready at hand. In practice, however, the cellarer was usually responsible for almost the whole of the monastery's dealings with outside tradesmen. Items such as coal, iron, nails, wood, or wax are frequently found in his accounts. For the performance of his duties he was allowed considerable freedom from the Rule, including non-attendance at the Divine *Office and leave of absence to visit the neighbouring markets and fairs.

Celsus (2nd cent.), pagan philosopher. His 'True Discourse' (Ἀληθὴς Λόγος) is the oldest literary attack on Christianity of which the details have survived (*c.*178). We know of it from *Origen's reply, 'Contra Celsum', in eight books, which dates from the middle of the 3rd cent. and preserves about nine-tenths of the 'Discourse'. Celsus' attitude is that of a detached pagan observer, interested in, but with no strong feelings about, religion. He praised the *Logos doctrine and the high Christian code of morals, but he objected to the exclusive claims of the Church. Making his own some of the Jewish objections to Christianity, he criticized much in biblical history for its miracles and absurdities, and expressed his repugnance to the Christian doctrines of the Incarnation and Crucifixion. Objecting that Christians, by refusing to conform to the State, undermined its strength and powers of resistance, he made an impassioned appeal to them to abandon their religious and political intolerance. All extant MSS of the 'Contra Celsum' go back to a 13th cent. archetype in the *Vatican Library (no. 386), apart from sections of the first two books preserved in a papyrus found at Toura, near Cairo, in 1941; they derive from the same line of textual tradition.

Reconstruction of Ἀληθὴς Λόγος by O. Glöckner (Kleine Texte, 151; 1924); also by R. Bader (Tübinger Beiträge zur Altertumswissenschaft, 33; 1940). Editio princeps of the 'Contra Celsum' by D. Hoeschel, Augsburg, 1605. Crit. edns. by P. Koetschau in GCS Origenes Werke, 1 (Leipzig, 1899), pp. 49–374, and 2 (ibid., 1899), and with Fr. tr. by M. Borret, SJ (SC 132, 136, 147, and 150; 1967–9). Papyrus text found at Toura ed. J. Scherer (Institut français d'Archéologie orientale, Bibliothèque d'études, 28; 1956). Eng. tr. of Contra Celsum, with valuable introd., by H. Chadwick (Cambridge, 1953; repr. with corrections, 1965), with bibl. to date. C. Andresen, Logos und Nomos: Die Polemik des Kelsos wider das Christentum (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 30; 1955); F. Mosetto, I miracoli evangelici nel dibattito tra Celso e Origene (Biblioteca di Scienze Religiose, 76 [1986]). J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 52–7, with further bibl. P. Merlan in RAC 2 (1954), cols. 954–65, s.v.

Celtic Churches. The Churches of the areas using Celtic languages—Cumbria, *Wales, Cornwall, Brittany, *Ireland, and *Scotland—were not linked by any institutional unity, nor were there any clearly defined practices common to these Churches but distinct from those of other regional Churches in early medieval Europe. Nevertheless, they all developed from the Church in late-Roman Britain in the 100 years or so after the withdrawal of the Roman government. During the late 4th cent. most evidence for the Romano-British Church comes from the towns and villas of lowland Britain where Christian symbols on silverware and mosaics reflect the religion of a wealthy class. The account of St *Germanus of Auxerre's visit to Britain (perhaps in 429) to combat *Pelagianism, and *Victricius of Rouen's references to theological dispute in the British Church suggest that it survived for at least some decades after the end of Roman rule in Britain. It was prob. trading links with Christian communities in W. Britain that carried Christianity to Ireland, so that in 431 Pope *Celestine I could send *Palladius 'to the Irish believing in Christ' as their first bishop. Later in the 5th cent., however, when St *Patrick came from Britain, Ireland was still largely pagan, and, apart from his writings, there is no evidence of the Church there until well into the 6th cent. Meanwhile, in Britain in the 5th and 6th cents., the westward expansion of the mainly pagan Anglo-Saxons pushed back the British Churches, which are depicted by *Gildas (*c.*540) as wealthy, worldly, and corrupt, and in contact with Continental Europe. In the west Midlands, however, the time between the defeat of the British and the arrival of St *Augustine's mission was fairly short; by *c.*605 he was trying to reach agreement with the British Churches at a meeting on the R. Severn. While there is some evidence of continuity of Christian life from Roman, through British, to Anglo-Saxon times, there was also deep hostility on the part of the British towards the Anglo-Saxons and hence towards the mission sent from Rome.

As the boundaries between the British and the Anglo-Saxons moved westward, the British Church increasingly directed its attention to the west. In the 6th cent. there were Christian communities in the wilder parts of Wales, Cornwall, and Galloway. A source of inspiration and renewal in all these regions was provided by *monasticism. The desire for a more devout and ascetic life led men to leave the established churches and monasteries and to set up Christian communities in remote areas. Thus, St *Samson, in his search for a religious life, left Wales, founded churches in Ireland and Cornwall, before finally settling in Brittany. St *Columba left Ireland on a life of pilgrimage in the Hebrides and Highlands of Scotland, establishing among other churches the monastery of *Iona. During the 6th and 7th cents. the major churches of Wales and Ireland were founded, many of them by saints whose careers are known only from later Lives: *Dubricius, *Illtyd, and *David in Wales; those in Ireland included *Comgall, the founder of *Bangor, from where *Columbanus went to found monasteries at *Luxeuil and *Bobbio.

For a brief period in the 6th–7th cent. the Celtic Churches shared in a common phase of development, and a letter of Columbanus (ep. 1) implies a contrast between the Celtic Churches and those of Gaul. Certain features have been held to characterize the Celtic Churches mainly because over these matters they came into conflict with those who followed different practices which came to prevail in the W. They adhered to a different method of calculating the date of *Easter from that used by Augustine and his successors. Pope *Honorius I urged the Irish Churches not to set themselves apart from Catholic practice in this matter and by shortly after 640 the southern Irish had adopted the Roman calendar. Some of the northern Irish Churches, however, held out longer; these included Iona. The last of the British Churches conformed in 768. A subsidiary matter was the shape of the *tonsure; conformity with Roman practice spread with the adoption of the Roman date for observing Easter.

The ecclesiastical organization of the early Churches of the Celtic lands lacked the hierarchical structure of later times. Jurisdiction was centred on the bishops, but diocesan limits were not defined and monasteries tended to be the centres of ecclesiastical administration. In Ireland powers of jurisdiction were transferred to abbots, initially in priests' orders, but from the 8th cent. lay *coarbs normally controlled the temporalia of even the largest churches. Here the situation was complicated by political factors and the diocesan structure remained at a rudimentary level. The boundaries of many of the dioceses which were eventually established in Ireland, Brittany, and Scotland suggest that they were based on property rights rather than political divisions. With the coming of the Normans in the 11th and 12th cents. firm diocesan and metropolitan organization was established in all these Churches. See also ANGLO-SAXON CHURCH; CHURCH OF ENGLAND; IRELAND, CHRISTIANITY IN; SCOTLAND, CHRISTIANITY IN; and WALES, CHRISTIANITY IN.

L. Gougaud, OSB, Les Chrétientés celtiques (1911; Eng. tr., rev., 1932). J. T. McNeill, The Celtic Churches: A History A.D. 200 to 1200 (Chicago and London, 1974). F. E. Warren, The Liturgy and Ritual of the Celtic Church (Oxford, 1881; repr., Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1987, with introd. by J. Stevenson, pp. ix–cxxviii). N. K. Chadwick, The Age of the Saints in the Early Celtic Church (1961). H. Williams, Christianity in Early Britain (1912). N. K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958); M. W. Barley and R. P. C. Hanson (eds.), Christianity in Britain, 300 700: Papers presented to the Conference on Christianity in Roman and Sub-Roman Britain held at the University of Nottingham 17–20 April 1967 (Leicester, 1968). [A.] C. Thomas, The Early Christian Archaeology of North Britain (1971 [wider than its title suggests]); id., Christianity in Roman Britain to AD 500 (1981). S. M. Pearce (ed.), The Early Church in Western Britain and Ireland: Studies presented to C. A. Ralegh Radford arising out of a Conference organised in his honour by the Devon Archaeological Society and Exeter City Museum (BAR, British Series 102; 1982). S. Victory, The Celtic Church in Wales (1977). K. Hughes, 'The Celtic Church: Is This a Valid Concept?', Cambridge Medieval Celtic Studies, 1 (1981), pp. 1–20. M. Lapidge and R. Sharpe, A Bibliography of Celtic-Latin Literature 400–1200 (Dublin, 1985).

cemetery. A place set apart for the burial of the dead. The Gk. word (κοιμητήριον) means a 'sleeping-place', and seems to have been used exclusively of Christian burial-grounds. RC canon law still insists that, where possible, the Church should have its own cemeteries or at least an area in public cemeteries which is blessed and reserved for the faithful (CIC (1983), can. 1240). See also BURIAL ACTS and BURIAL SERVICES.

Cenaculum. The 'upper room' or 'cenacle' in *Jerusalem (Mk. 14: 15, Lk. 22: 12, ἀνώγεον; Acts 1: 13, ὑπερῷον) in which the *Last Supper was celebrated and the Holy Spirit descended at *Pentecost. Acc. to St *Epiphanius, a small Christian church (which appears to have been the only church in Jerusalem until the early 4th cent.) existed on the spot from the time of Hadrian (117–38). Today a complex of buildings on this site includes the Dormition Abbey (1906) and Church (1900), built beside a group of structures, including that known as 'David's tomb'; an upper room in this is supposed to be the Cenaculum.

H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem: Recherches de topographie, d'archéologie et d'histoire, 2: Jérusalem nouvelle (1926), pp. 421–81. J. [D.] Wilkinson, Jerusalem as Jesus Knew it: Archaeology as Evidence [1978], pp. 168 f. and fig. 116. E. Power, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 1064–84, s.v. 'Cénacle'.

cenobites. See COENOBITES.

censer. See THURIBLE.

censures, ecclesiastical. See PENALTIES.

Centre Party (Ger. Zentrum). The party founded by the Prussian Catholics in 1870–1 to counteract the anti-Catholic policy of the Conservatives and esp. of the National Liberals. Under the leadership of L. *Windthorst (q.v.) it was the most effective opponent of Bismarck in the '*Kulturkampf'. In the closing phases of the struggle the party had become so strong that the Chancellor could no longer be certain of a majority against it, and subsequently Chancellors frequently depended on it for support. During the war of 1914–18 the Centre Party moved with the democratic tide to the left and became a regular party of government in the Weimar Republic. As a denominationalist party, it had the flexibility to move right or left and at the end of the Weimar Republic it followed the drift to the right. Under the chancellorship of its member, H. Brüning (1930–2) it made a last effort to resist Nazism, but it governed without a majority in the Reichstag and was dependent for its powers to decree emergency legislation on the Reich President, P. von Hindenburg. In 1933 it was suppressed by A. Hitler along with the other German parties, although at the same time Hitler agreed to the Reich Concordat through which the Church hoped to be able to defend its liberties. After 1945 its place was taken by the Christian Democratic Union (Christlich Demokratische Union) which, unlike the Centre Party, became an inter-denominational party, building on the shared experiences of Church members under the Third Reich, and rapidly established itself as the dominant party to the right of the Social Democrats and the major party of government in the Federal Republic from 1949 to 1969 and again after 1982.

K. Bachem, Vorgeschichte, Geschichte und Politik der deutschen Zentrumspartie (9 vols., Cologne, 1927–32). E. L. Evans, The German Center Party 1870–1933: A Study in Political Catholicism (Carbondale, Ill., 1981). J. K. Zeender, The German Center Party, 1890–1906 (Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, NS 66, pt. 1; 1976); R. J. Ross, Beleagured Tower: The Dilemma of Political Catholicism in Wilhelmine Germany (Notre Dame, Ind., and London, 1976); D. Blackbourn, Class, Religion and Local Politics in Wilhelmine Germany: The Centre Party in Württemberg before 1914 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1980); R. Morsey, Die Deutsche Zentrumspartei 1917–1923 (Beiträge zur Geschichte des Parlamentarismus und der politischen Parteien, 32; Düsseldorf, 1966); id., Der Untergang des politischen Katholizimus: Die Zentrumspartei zwischen christlichen Selbstverständnis und 'Nationaler Erhebung' 1932/33 (Stuttgart, 1977), and other works of this author. On the Christian Democratic Union, F. Spotts, The Churches and Politics in Germany (Middletown, Conn. [1973]), esp. pp. 291–323; R. E. M. Irving, The Christian Democratic Parties of Western Europe (1979), pp. 112–63. J. K. Zeender in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 397–9, s.v. 'Center Party'.

Centuriators of Magdeburg. The authors of a Church history from its beginnings down to 1400, divided by 'centuries', which was pub. (in Lat.) as the Historia Ecclesiae Christi at Basle, 1559–74. The book, which was dominated by the rigid *Lutheranism and anti-Romanism of M. *Flacius, who co-ordinated the work, depicted the pure Christianity of the NT as coming progressively under the power of the 'Papal Antichrist' until liberated by M. *Luther. In its breadth of conception the work was a landmark in ecclesiastical history; but its inaccuracies, and esp. the liberties it took with the texts of original documents, made it an easy target for C. *Baronius in his Annales Ecclesiastici.

P. Polman, OFM, 'Flacius Illyricus, historien de l'Église', RHE 37 (1931), pp. 27–73. J. Massner, Kirchliche Überlieferung und Autorität im Flaciuskreis: Studien zu den Magdeburger Zenturien (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, 14; 1964). H. Scheible, Die Entstehung der Magdeburger Zenturien (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 183; Gütersloh, 1966). See also bibl. to FLACIUS, MATTHIAS.

Cerdo (2nd cent.), Syrian *Gnostic teacher who taught in *Rome *c.*140. He maintained that the Creator God revealed in the Law of Moses and the Hebrew Prophets was to be distinguished from the Father of Jesus Christ, and also that only the soul, and not the body, will share in the resurrection. Acc. to *Irenaeus, *Marcion was one of his disciples.

The chief sources include Irenaeus, Haer. 1. 27 and 3. 4, *Hippolytus, Haer. 7. 37 and 10. 19, and *Tertullian, Adv. Marc. 1. 2; also (Ps.-)Tertullian, Adv. omn. haer. 6 (16); *Epiphanius, Haer. 41; these and other sources are pr. and discussed in A. *Harnack, Marcion (TU 45; 1921), pp. 28*–36* (Beilage 2). G. Bareille in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 2138 f.; E. Peterson in EC 3 (1950), cols. 1313 f., both s.v.

cere cloth (Lat. cera, 'wax'). Acc. to W. usage a cloth impregnated or smeared with wax (also known as a 'chrismale'), which is laid on the surface of the altar to prevent the linen cloths above from becoming soiled, e.g. by the holy oils used in the consecration of the *mensa.

ceremonial. In ecclesiastical usage, the performance of Divine worship with prescribed and formal actions. Strictly, 'ceremonial' is concerned with action only, the term '*ritual' being used of the form of words, but the two are often used interchangeably.

Cerinthus (fl. *c.*100), *Gnostic heretic. The source of his opinions is uncertain, but, like most Gnostics, he seems to have held that the world had been created, not by the supreme God, but either by a *Demiurge, a far less exalted being, or by angels, who had produced it out of formless matter. He taught that Jesus began His earthly life as a mere man, though at His baptism 'the Christ', a higher

Divine power, descended upon Him, only to depart from Him again before the crucifixion. His doctrines distressed the orthodox. *Polycarp, e.g., is said to have related that John, 'the disciple of the Lord', on hearing that Cerinthus was in the bath-house at *Ephesus, ran out, fearing that the house would fall on the enemy of truth (*Eusebius, HE 3. 28. 6). *Irenaeus (Adv. haer. 3. 11. 1) asserts that St John wrote his Gospel to refute Cerinthus, while the *Alogi held the curious belief that Cerinthus was himself the author of Jn. and Rev.

The chief source is Irenaeus, Haer. 1. 26; cf. also *Hippolytus, Haer. 7. 33. T. *Zahn, Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, 1 (1888), pp. 220–62; 2 (pt. 2; 1892), pp. 973–91. G. Bardy, 'Cérinthe', R. Bibl. 30 (1921), pp. 344–73. A. F. J. Klijn and G. J. Reinink, Patristic Evidence for Jewish-Christian Sects (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 36; 1973), pp. 3–19.

Cerne, Book of. A 9th-cent. collection of non-liturgical prayers, largely Celtic in origin. The MS, which once belonged to Cerne Abbey in Dorset, is now in the Cambridge University Library (Ll. 1. 10).

The Prayer Book of Aedeluald the Bishop, commonly called the Book of Cerne, ed. A. B. Kuypers, OSB (Cambridge, 1902). Further refs. in M. Lapidge and R. Sharpe, A Bibliography of Celtic-Latin Literature 400–1200 (Dublin, 1985), pp. 339 f. (no. 1281).

certosa. The Italian name for a *Carthusian religious house.

Cerularius. See MICHAEL CERULARIUS.

Cesarini, Julian (1398–1444), cardinal. A member of a noble Roman family, he studied at Perugia, Bologna, and Padua, where he became a friend of *Nicholas of Cusa. He later entered the service of the *Curia and was employed on several diplomatic missions. In 1419 he accompanied Branda da Castiglione on his mission against the *Hussites, and later represented Papal interests in France (1425) and England (1426). He was created cardinal in pectore in 1426, an appointment made public in 1430. In 1431 *Martin V made Cesarini his legate in the crusade against the Hussites and also president of the Council of *Basle. The Council was formally opened by Cesarini's deputies. When he himself returned to Basle, he solemnly inaugurated the Council on 14 Dec. 1431 and continued his leadership even when the Council had been dissolved by *Eugenius IV, though exerting himself to reconcile Pope and Council. After the transfer of the Council to Ferrara and *Florence he took a prominent part in the negotiations for the union between the Roman and Greek Churches. In 1442 he was sent to Hungary to preach the Crusade against the Turks. Through his influence King Ladislaus repudiated the Peace of Szegedin (July 1444). The war was then resumed and ended with the total defeat of the Christians at the hands of the Turks at Varna (in Bulgaria) on 10 Nov. 1444, Cesarini being killed, according to some sources, in flight after the battle.

Cesarini's correspondence with *Pius II on the Council of Basle is pr. among the latter's works (Basle, 1551). E. Hofmann, SJ (ed.), 'Ein Brief des Kardinals Julian Cesarini an Cosimo von Medici', OCP 5 (1939), pp. 233–5. G. Christianson, Cesarini: The Conciliar Cardinal. The Basel Years, 1431–1438 (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, 10; 1979). R. Mols, SJ, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 220–49, s.v.; A. A. Strnad and K. Walsh in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 24 (1980), pp. 188–95, s.v., both with detailed bibl.

chaburah (cf. Heb. חָבֵר, 'friend'). In Jewish practice a group of friends formed for religious purposes. The *Talmudic directions suggest that the chief object of such groups was to secure strict observance of the laws of ritual cleanness and of tithe, but there are indications, e.g. in the Berakôth of the *Mishnah and *Tosephta, that they also served a wider social purpose as a common weekly meal, usually on the eves of sabbaths or holy days. It has been argued that the Lord and His disciples formed such a chaburah and that the *Last Supper was a chaburah meal; the thanksgiving or blessing over the bread would then be the Jewish *berakah used when the bread was broken at the beginning of the meal, and that over the cup the berakah at the end. Further support is sought in the Gospel of St John, which avoids connecting the Last Supper with the Passover meal and asserts that the Crucifixion took place before the feast (18: 28, 19: 14), as well as in the refs. in Acts to weekly (20: 7) or daily (2: 46) Christian assemblies for the breaking of bread; these would be the continuation of the regular chaburah meal of Jesus with His disciples, but with the new significance He had given it at the Last Supper. See also KIDDUSH.

On such Jewish meals, cf. I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1913). Close study of the primary sources, however, leaves it uncertain how far these groups of 'chaburoth' had any formal organization. Scholars for whom the 'chaburah' provides the setting of the Last Supper include: W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jewish Background of the Christian Liturgy (1925), pp. 156–93; H. *Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926), p. 250 (Eng. tr., Leiden, 1979, p. 204); R. *Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934), pp. 235 f. (Eng. tr., 1938, pp. 278 f.); and G. *Dix, OSB, The Shape of the Liturgy (1944), pp. 50–96. For a critique of this view, see J. Jeremias, Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu (3rd edn., 1960), pp. 23–5; Eng. tr. (1966), pp. 29–31.

Chad (also Ceadda), St, (d. 672), Bp. of *Lichfield and brother of St *Cedd. He was a native of Northumbria and a pupil of St *Aidan at *Lindisfarne. In 664 on his brother's death he became Abbot of Lastingham, N. Yorks. Shortly afterwards he was irregularly made Bp. of the Northumbrians, with his see at *York, by King Oswiu, the King having become impatient at the absence of St *Wilfrid, who had originally been appointed to the see but had gone to France to receive consecration. On Wilfrid's return Abp. *Theodore denied the legitimacy of Chad's appointment, and he nobly accepted this decision and in 669 retired to Lastingham. Impressed by his humility, Theodore regularized his consecration and later in the same year provided for him to be Bp. of the Mercians. Fixing his see at Lichfield, Chad was tireless in spreading the Gospel and journeyed as far afield as N. Lincolnshire, where he is said to have founded the monastery at Barrow. Feast day, 2 Mar.

The main source for his life is *Bede, HE 3. 23, 28, and 4. 2 f.; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 133 and 139–41, with refs. AASS, Mar. 1 (1668), pp. 143–5. R. H. Warner, Life and Legends of St Chad, Bishop of Lichfield 669–672 [1871]. Short study by H. E. Savage (York Minster Historical Tracts, 4 [1928]). B. S. Benedikz, 'St Chad—Patron of Mercia', Eastern Churches News Letter, NS 4 (1977), pp. 11–20. W. R. W. Stephens in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 391–3, s.v. 'Ceadda'.

Chalcedon, Council of (AD 451). The Fourth *Oecumenical Council, held in the city of Chalcedon in Asia Minor, nearly opposite Byzantium. It was convoked by the Emp. *Marcian to deal with the *Eutychian heresy. At the first meeting, held on 8 Oct. 451, some 500–600 bishops were present, all of them Easterns except two bishops from the province of Africa and the two Papal legates, *Paschasinus and Boniface. The decisions of the *Latrocinium (449) were annulled and Eutyches was condemned. The Council then drew up a statement of faith, the so-called *Chalcedonian Definition, and made a large number of important enactments. All the dogmatic decisions of the Council were accepted by the W. Church, but can. 28, which made the see of *Constantinople second only to that of Rome and gave its bishop the exclusive right to ordain the metropolitans of Pontus, Asia, and Thrace (a canon which had been opposed by the Roman legates), was rejected in the W., in order (it was stated) to protect the interests of the older E. patriarchates. See also following entry.

Hardouin, 2, cols. 662–772; Mansi, 6 (1761), cols. 529–1230, and 7 (1762), cols. 1–872. Canons, Definition, and the *Tome of Leo, with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 75–103. Crit. edn. of Acta ed. E. *Schwartz, ACO 2 (1932–8: 1. Acta Graeca. 2. Versiones Particulares. 3. Versio Antiqua a Rustico Correcta. 4. Leonis Papae I Epistolarum Collectiones. 5. Codex Encyclicus. 6. Indices). Fr. tr. of Greek text of Acts by A. J. Festugière, Éphèse et Chalcédoine, Actes des Conciles (1982), pp. 654–895; id., Actes du Concile de Chalcédoine, Sessions III–VI (La Définition de la Foi) (Cahiers d'Orientalisme, 4; Geneva, 1983), with preface by H. Chadwick, pp. 7–16. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (2) (1908), pp. 649–857, with full bibl., pp. 650 f. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, 1 (1930), pp. 511–531. A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalcedon (3 vols., 1951–4). R. V. Sellers, The Council of Chalcedon (1953). P.-T. Camelot, OP, Éphèse et Chalcédoine (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 2; 1962), pp. 79–182 and 209–35. S. O. Horn, Petrou Kathedra: Der Bischof von Rom und die Synoden von Ephesus (449) und Chalcedon (Konfessionskundliche und kontroverstheologische Studien, 45; Paderborn, 1982), pp. 143–250. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 82–155 (nos. 8945–9307). J. Bois in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 2190–208, s.v. 'Chalcédoine (Concile de)'; M. Jugie, AA, in EC 3 (1950), cols. 324–8; P.-T. Camelot, OP, in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 423–6, s.v. See also works cited under the following entry.

Chalcedon, the Definition of. The statement of the Catholic Faith made by the Council of Chalcedon of 451, and eventually accepted in both E. and W., except by the *Oriental Orthodox Churches. It reaffirms the definitions of *Nicaea and *Constantinople, asserting them to be a sufficient account of the orthodox faith about the Person of Christ, but declares that the new errors of *Nestorius and Eutyches must be formally repudiated. It therefore expressly excluded the views (1) of those who deny the title Theotokos ('Mother of God') to the Virgin *Mary, thereby implying that the humanity of Christ is separable from His Divine Person; and (2) of those who confuse the Divine and human natures in one, and therefore hold that the Divine nature is by this confusion passible. The synodical Epistles of *Cyril to Nestorius and to the Easterns, and the Epistle of *Leo to *Flavian (the *Tome), are reasserted; the duality of Sons, the passibility of the Godhead, any mixture or confusion of the two natures, the thesis that Christ's human nature has a different source from ours (e.g. a heavenly source), and the doctrine which holds that the two natures existed before the union but became one at the Incarnation, are rejected. Christ is declared to be one Person in two Natures, the Divine of the same substance as the Father (ὁμοούσιος τῷ πατρί), the human of the same substance as us (ὁμοούσιος ἡμῖν), which are united unconfusedly, unchangeably, indivisibly, inseparably (ἀσυγχύτως, ἀτρέπτως, ἀδιαιρέτως, ἀχωρίστως).

It seems clear that its purpose was to define the limits of legitimate speculation rather than to make an exact and final statement of a theological position. Even so, it did not prove universally acceptable, and for two centuries after the Council Christendom was torn by the *Monophysite and *Monothelite controversies. From the end of the 7th cent., however, it has been generally received both in E. and W., except among the Oriental Orthodox Churches; and its theological standpoint was in the 8th cent. expressed in systematic form by St *John of Damascus in his 'De Fide Orthodoxa'.

The text is incl. in all edns. of the Acta (see previous bibl.). Only crit. edn. of Gk. text in ACO 2. 1 (2), 1933, pp. 126–30; the early Lat. versions (Versio Antiqua, Versio Rustica) are also pr. by E. Schwartz, ibid. 2 (3). F. E. *Brightman, 'Six Notes. vi: The Definition of Chalcedon', JTS 29 (1927–8), pp. 164 f. I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, 'Das Glaubenssymbol von Chalcedon. Sein Text, sein Werden, seine dogmatische Bedeutung', in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ, Das Konzil von Chalcedon, 1 (1951), pp. 389–418. On the theology of the Definition, besides histories of doctrine and several essays in A. Grillmeier and H. Bacht, op. cit., esp. A. Grillmeier, SJ, 'Die theologische und sprachliche Vorbereitung der christologischen Formel von Chalkedon', pp. 5–202; expanded by J. S. Bowden, Christ in Christian Tradition (1965; 2nd edn., 1975; rev. German edn., Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 1, 1979), see R. V. Sellers, The Council of Chalcedon (1953), esp. pp. 207–350.

Chaldean Christians. The convenient, if not very appropriate, title applied to that part of the *Church of the East in communion with the see of Rome. They fall into two main groups, those of the Middle East (esp. Iraq), and those of *Malabar. As a result of dispute over succession within the Middle Eastern group, a separate line of *Uniat Patriarchs came into existence in 1553, when Simeon Sulaqa was consecrated in Rome after submitting his profession of faith to Pope *Julius III. Over the next three cents. difficulties of communication gave rise to problems. The Sulaqa line (normally with the name Simeon) remained in communion with Rome until 1672, while members of the other line (with the name Elias) briefly entered communion with Rome on several occasions. In 1681 a new Uniat line of Patriarchs at Diyarbekr was inaugurated (with the name of Joseph), to last for well over a century. In 1830 affairs were regularized and the Uniat Patriarchate was again restored, now at Baghdad, with the title 'of Babylon'. The customs and discipline of the Chaldeans have been partially assimilated to those of the Latin rite, and they follow the *Gregorian calendar. Syriac liturgical tradition and language are, however, retained. In the Middle East the Chaldeans are said to number *c.*800,000. For the Indian group, see MALABAR CHRISTIANS.

D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wis. [1935]), pp. 227–41, rev. as The Christian Churches of the East, 1 ([Leominster] 1961; London, 1963), pp. 188–98. G. Beltrami, La chiesa caldea nel secolo dell'unione (Orientalia Christiana, 29, fasc. 83; 1933), with bibl. S. Bello, La Congrégation de S. Hormisdas et l'Église chaldéenne dans la première moitié du XIXᵉ siècle (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, fasc. 122; 1939). H. W. Codrington, 'The Chaldean Liturgy', The Eastern Churches Quarterly, 2 (1937), pp. 79–83, 138–52, 202–9; A. A. King, The Rites of Eastern Christendom, 2 (Rome, 1948), ch. 8, pp. 251–415, with bibl. J. Habbi, 'Signification de l'union chaldéenne de Mar Sulaqa avec Rome en 1553', L'Orient Syrien, 11 (1966), pp. 99–132, 199–230; id., 'L'Unification de la hiérarchie chaldéenne dans la première moitié du XIXᵉ siècle', Parole de l'Orient, 2 (1971), pp. 121–43, 305–27. E. Tisserant in DTC 11 (1931), cols. 225–323, s.v. 'Nestorienne (l'Église)'; R. Rabban and C. K. von Euw in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 427–32, s.v. 'Chaldean Rite', with bibl. On former Chaldean canon law see J. Dauvillier in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 292–388, s.v. 'Chaldéen (droit)'.

Chaldee. An obsolete and misleading name for *Aramaic (the language used in a few passages in the OT). The word appears to go back to St *Jerome and probably owes its origin to an incorrect identification of the languages referred to in Dan. 1: 4 and 2: 4 respectively.

chalice (Lat. calix, 'cup'). In ecclesiastical usage, the cup used to contain the wine consecrated in the Eucharist. The earliest Christian chalices were commonly of glass, though other materials were sometimes used. By the 4th cent. the precious metals had become general, and valuable chalices of gold or silver set with precious stones are mentioned by St *Augustine and St *Chrysostom. The use of materials other than metal was not forbidden, however, till the 9th cent., and has again been allowed in the RC Church since 1969. The earliest form of chalice, frequently depicted in the catacombs, consists of a bowl with two handles but without stem. In Carolingian times two types were known: ministerial chalices, used for the Communion of the people at times of general Communion (corresponding to the earlier type), and sacrificial chalices, for the use of the priest. From the 14th cent. the stem was gradually elongated, and the bowl of the chalice made smaller as Communion in one kind became universal, though a chalice of unconsecrated wine was often offered to the communicant as he left the altar. In England after the Reformation the restoration of Communion in both kinds caused the chalices of the later 16th and following cents. to be made considerably larger than before.

Rohault, 4 [1887], pp. 45–153, with plates cclxx–cccxiv; Braun, CA (1932), pp. 17–196, with plates 1–40. C. [C.] Oman, English Church Plate 597–1830 (1957), passim. V. H. Elbern, 'Der eucharistische Kelch im frühen Mittelalter', Zeitschrift des Deutschen Vereins für Kunstwissenschaft, 17 (1963), pp. 1–76, 117–88. W. W. Watts, Catalogue of Chalices and other Communion Vessels (Victoria and Albert Museum, 1922), pp. 1–38 and 47–70. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 1595–645, s.v. 'Calice', with refs.

chalice veil. A square of material, usually silk, normally corresponding in colour to the Eucharistic vestments, for some cents. used in the W. to cover the *chalice and *paten during those parts of the Mass when they were not in use, i.e. until the *offertory and after the *ablutions. It was a comparatively late ornament; its use was ordered by the Missal of *Pius V (1570). Earlier in the 16th cent. the chalice was commonly brought to the altar in a 'sacculum' or small bag, and before that it was covered only with a second folded *corporal, which was spread over it after the Communion. The rubric of the BCP, ordering that the chalice be covered with a 'fair linen cloth' may reflect this usage. The rubrics of the 1970 Missale Romanum make no mention of the chalice veil; in many places the chalice is now covered with a large corporal, and the chalice veil is becoming obsolescent. See also HUMERAL VEIL.

N. F. Robinson, SSJE, 'Concerning Three Eucharistic Veils of Western Use', Transactions of the St Paul's Ecclesiological Society, 6 (1906–10), pp. 129–60, esp. pp. 140–53. Braun, LP, pp. 213–15.

Challoner, Richard (1691–1781), author of *The Garden of the Soul. Born at Lewes of *Presbyterian parents, Challoner became a RC while still a boy, and at the age of 14 was sent to *Douai to be trained for the priesthood. Here he was successively student, professor, and vice-president, and did not return to England till 1730. In 1738 he deemed it wise to leave England again for a short time, owing to Conyers Middleton's resentment at a preface in which Challoner had attacked him. In 1741 he was consecrated at Hammersmith Bishop (in partibus) of Debra and coadjutor to the *Vicar Apostolic, Dr Petre, whom he succeeded in 1758. Challoner was the author of many books, both controversial and devotional, including a revision of the *Douai-Reims translation of the Bible. His Garden of the Soul, first issued in 1740 as a prayer-book for the laity, long remained one of the favourite devotional books of English RCs, though its sober liturgical content was much diluted in some later editions. His Meditations for Every Day of the Year (1753) also enjoyed popularity.

Life by J. Barnard (London, 1784). E. H. Burton, The Life and Times of Bishop Challoner, 1691–1781 (2 vols., 1909); E. Duffy (ed.), Challoner and his Church (1981). T. Cooper in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 440–3; P. Chauvin, OSB, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 282–4, s.v.

Chalmers, James (1841–1901), *Congregational missionary to New Guinea. Born in the Scottish Highlands, he intended to enter the ministry of the *United Presbyterian Church, but, after acceptance by the *LMS, he pursued his studies at Cheshunt College. After ordination, he left England in 1866, and, after a long and adventurous voyage, reached Rarotonga in the *South Pacific. There he did much to render the Church indigenous before sailing, in 1877, for New Guinea. In what was then an unknown land, he slowly won the confidence of the people, so that he was able to facilitate the establishment of British rule in the south-eastern part of the country in 1888. He vigorously opposed any move to westernize the dress or customs of the people of New Guinea. Like D. *Livingstone, Chalmers stands out as a missionary-explorer, and his books, Work and Adventure in New Guinea (1885) and Pioneering in New Guinea (1887), contained much new geographical detail. His sphere of activity was constantly extending, taking in a visit to Samoa, where he made contact with R. L. Stevenson. His last ten years were devoted to the task of establishing peaceful relations with the little-contacted peoples of the Fly River region, and to this end he sailed for Goaribari Island in the Gulf of Papua, where, at Dopima, he and his party were brutally put to death.

R. Lovett, James Chalmers, his Autobiography and Letters (1902). D. Langmore, Tamate—a King: James Chalmers in New Guinea 1877–1901 (Melbourne, 1974). A. R. Buckland in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 343–5.

Chalmers, Thomas (1780–1847), theologian, preacher, and philanthropist. After parish ministries in Glasgow (at Tron, 1815–19, and St John's, 1819–23), he became professor of moral philosophy at St Andrews in 1823, and in 1828 of theology at Edinburgh. He was known in his early days as an able evangelical preacher, a formidable intellectual defender of Christianity, a brilliant mathematician, and a pioneer of popular education and modern methods of poor relief. But his chief importance lies in his leadership of the movement for the choice of ministers in the Established Church of Scotland by the people, and of the Free Church schism of 1843 which followed its failure. In that year he left the Established Church with a considerable body of followers, and founded the *Free Church of Scotland, becoming in the same year principal and professor of divinity at New College, Edinburgh. His theology was Calvinistic, with the stress rather on the needs of man than on the election of God. His many writings include the first of the *Bridgewater Treatises. See also DISRUPTION.

W. Hanna, The Life and Writings of T. Chalmers (4 vols., 1849–52); S. J. Brown, Thomas Chalmers and the Godly Commonwealth in Scotland (Oxford, 1982); A. C. Cheyne (ed.), The Practical and the Pious: Essays on Thomas Chalmers (1780–1847) (Edinburgh, 1985). W. G. Blaikie in DNB 9 (1887), pp. 449–54.

Chambers, John Charles (1817–74), author of *The Priest in Absolution (q.v.). Educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1842 to a curacy at Sedbergh, Cumbria. On his ordination as priest in 1846 he proceeded to Perth, where he worked till 1855. From 1856 till his death he was incumbent of St Mary's, Crown Street, and warden of the 'House of Charity', both in Soho. Here he was remarkably successful as a mission priest, working esp. among the ragged children in his cure. Besides various religious writings issued under his own name, he was the anonymous author of the celebrated Priest in Absolution (part 1, 1866; part 2, 1870). This work was compiled at the behest of the *Society of the Holy Cross, of which Chambers was an early member.

See W. Wroth in DNB 10 (1887), pp. 19 f., where, however, all reference to The Priest in Absolution has been avoided. J. Embry, The Catholic Movement and the Society of the Holy Cross (1931), ch. 5, pp. 97–127.

Chambers, Robert (1802–71), Scottish publisher and author. In 1818 he began business with a bookstall in Leith Walk, Edinburgh, and eventually joined his brother, William Chambers (1800–83), in the publishing firm of W. & R. Chambers. He was the part or sole author of a great mass of encyclopaedic works. His most famous production, the Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation (1844), was a popular handbook of the natural sciences (geology, zoology, etc.), defending an evolutionary (essentially Lamarckian) theory of man's origin. The work attracted much controversy; but it helped to prepare the public for the Darwinian theory. Great pains were taken to preserve anonymity—it was ascribed to the Prince Consort, Charles Lyell, and others—but in Chambers's later years his authorship was widely accepted, and publicly avowed by Alexander Ireland in a posthumous edition of 1884. Chambers himself appears to have been a man of sincere piety, and to have regarded the question at issue as purely one of science.

W. Chambers (brother), Memoir of Robert Chambers (1872). A. Ireland, 'Story of the authorship of the "Vestiges" told for the first time', prefixed to his edn., the 12th, of Chambers, Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation (1884), pp. vii–xxvii. C. H. Layman (ed.), Man of Letters: The Early Life and Love Letters of Robert Chambers (Edinburgh [1990]). M. Millhauser, Just Before Darwin: Robert Chambers and Vestiges (Middleton, Conn. [1959]). F. Watt in DNB 10 (1887), pp. 23–5. NCBEL 3 (1969), cols. 1372 f. and 1605.

chancel (Lat. cancellus). Originally the part of the church immediately about the altar, now called the 'sanctuary'. When further space was reserved for clergy and choir westward from the sanctuary, the word was applied to this area as well, and hence is now normally employed for the entire area within the main body of the church east of the nave and transepts. In medieval times a screen often separated chancel and nave, and some modern churches have followed this arrangement. In England, by custom the rector of an ancient parish used to be responsible for repairing only the chancel, while the liability for the nave fell on the parishioners. Now, unless there is a *lay rector, the parishioners bear the whole responsibility.

F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916).

chancellor. In the C of E, the diocesan chancellor is the chief representative of the *bishop in the administration of the temporal affairs of his diocese; in the diocese of Canterbury he is known as the Commissary General. He is usually the sole president of the *Consistory Court (in Canterbury the Commissary Court) in *faculty cases. The office was orig. that of a private secretary; but when the *archdeacon's responsibilities extended and he lost his personal connection with the bishop, many of his former duties passed to the chancellor, who nowadays serves as the bishop's *Official Principal and his *Vicar General. The extent of his jurisdiction varies somewhat acc. to the terms of the bishop's letters patent appointing him, but once appointed his authority derives not from the bishop but from the law. Normally his chief function is the hearing of applications for and granting of *faculties and, through his *surrogates, common *marriage licences. He hears, with two clerical and two lay assessors as jury, complaints against clerics under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963, provided that these do not involve matters of doctrine, ritual or ceremonial. Under s. 2 of the same Measure he must either hold or have held high judicial office or be a barrister or solicitor of at least seven years' standing, be at least 30 years of age and, if a layman, a communicant. If the bishop fails to appoint a chancellor, it falls to the *metropolitan to do so.

The title is also held by residentiary canons in some *cathedrals. In those of the Old Foundation the chancellor is one of the four principal dignitaries, dean, precentor, chancellor, and treasurer. He used to be responsible for the Cathedral School and also the library. In modern times he is often assigned wider educational functions.

In the RC Church the diocesan chancellor is primarily responsible for the official archives. In the past, he was invariably a priest, but he no longer needs to be (CIC (1983), can. 482). In practice, considerable authority is often delegated to him by the bishop.

E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law (3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, 1992), pp. 115–20; T. Coningsby, 'Chancellor, Vicar-General, Official Principal—a Bundle of Offices', Ecclesiastical Law Journal, 2 (1992), pp. 273–85; cf. letter by A. Pearce, ibid., pp. 383–5.

On RC chancellors, J. A. Alesandro in J. A. Coriden, T. J. Green, and D. E. Heintschel (eds.), The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985), pp. 392 f.

Chancery, Papal, the name attached, in the late 12th cent., to the Pope's secretariat. Arrangements for drafting papal letters and keeping archives are traceable to the 4th cent. and to classical models, but the titles of officers changed over the centuries. In 819 the headship passed to the librarian, and late in the 11th cent. to the chancellor. He was always a *cardinal. After vacancies, 1187–91 and 1197–1205, the office lapsed in 1216 until *Pius X revived it in 1908. Instead, a vice-chancellor (after 1295 a cardinal) ruled the Chancery. The growth of papal power depended much upon the impressive muniments in its registers and the scribal and legal expertise of its secretariat. By *John XXII's time (1316–34) Regulae cancellariae determined the terms on which papal graces were granted and gave the Chancery quasi-legislative power. From the 15th cent. chancery control of papal correspondence diminished and its influence was restricted by the development of new offices.

H. Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre für Deutschland und Italien (2 vols. + index, 1889–1960), esp. 1, pp. 158–252; 2nd edn. (1912), pp. 192–352. W. [A. C.] von Hofmann, Forschungen zur Geschichte der kurialen Behörden vom Schisma bis zur Reformation (Bibliothek des königlich Preussischen historischen Instituts in Rom, 12–13; 1914). R. L. Poole, Lectures on the History of the Papal Chancery down to the Time of Innocent III (1915), incl. refs. to earlier work. P. Herde, Beiträge zum päpstlichen Kanzlei- und Urkundenwesen im dreizehnten Jahrhundert (Münchener Historische Studien, Abteilung Geschichtl. Hilfswissenschaften, 1; 1961, 2nd edn., 1967). C. R. Cheney, The Study of the Medieval Papal Chancery (Lecture; Glasgow, 1966), with bibl. refs. F. Claeys-Bouuaert in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 454–7, s.v. 'Chancelier (1). De la sainte Église romaine', and ibid., cols. 464–71, s.v. 'Chancellerie'.

Channel Islands, Christianity in the. Christianity was apparently introduced into the Channel Islands about the 5th–6th cent., largely by the saints who are commemorated in many of the place-names of the islands. In 933 the islands became the property of the Dukes of Normandy, but after the Norman Conquest, when England and Normandy were united under the same sovereign, it was doubtful for some time to which part of his dominions they were conceived to belong. After the separation of England and Normandy (1204) they were annexed by *John to England. Between 1482 and 1486 the islands were granted neutrality in the English–French wars; but this neutrality was annulled by William of Orange in 1689. These changes in political status affected ecclesiastical history. The islands formed part of the diocese of Coutances (on the neighbouring mainland). At the request of Henry VII (1485–1509), Papal bulls were issued in 1496 and 1500 transferring them to *Salisbury and *Winchester respectively, but neither was effective. They were finally detached from Coutances and annexed to Winchester on the orders of *Elizabeth I in 1568–9. In the 16th cent. Protestant refugees from France and elsewhere induced the islanders to adopt *Presbyterianism; but Episcopalian polity and canons agreeable to the standards of the C of E were imposed at the end of the reign of *James I and this has been the official creed since that time, though even now *Huguenot Protestantism is strong. The two large islands of Jersey and Guernsey each have a dean, who is also a parochial incumbent.

French trs. of the BCP for use in the Channel Islands were authorized and pub. at London in 1616 and 1667, the latter being a rendering of the 1662 Book by J. Durel. P. Falle, An Account of the Island of Jersey (1694), pp. 115–92 (ed. E. Durell, 1837, pp. 175–262); J. Duncan, The History of Guernsey (1841), pp. 314–404. On the introd. of Christianity into the Channel Islands, M. Pégot-Orgier, Histoire des îles de la Manche (1881), pp. 37–49; E. F. Carey, The Channel Islands (1904), pp. 22–32. Information on ecclesiastical history is incl. in J. Uttley, The Story of the Channel Islands (1966) and R. Lemprière, History of the Channel Islands (1974). G. R. Balleine, A History of the Island of Jersey (1950; rev. by M. Syvret and J. Stevens, Chichester, 1981), with account of the Reformation. H. de Sausmarez, 'Considerations on the ecclesiastical position in the Channel Islands, and particularly in Guernsey', Transactions of La Société Guernesiaise, 10, for 1926–9 (1931), pp. 37–45. R. D. Moore, Methodism in the Channel Islands (1952).

Channing, William Ellery (1780–1842), American *Unitarian pastor. He graduated at Harvard in 1798, became regent there in 1802, and in 1803 was appointed pastor of the Congregational Church in Federal Street, Boston. In the schism some time later between conservative and liberal *Congregationalists in America, Channing espoused the liberal or Unitarian cause, and preached against the doctrines of the *Trinity, the *Atonement and *total depravity. From about 1820 he was considered to be a Unitarian, and is often reckoned the greatest American Unitarian theologian; but he disapproved of Unitarianism as a sect, and regarded himself as belonging 'not to a sect, but to the community of free minds'. He 'desired to escape the narrow walls of a particular church'.

Works (5 vols., Boston, 1841; 2 vols., London, 1865). Memoir by William Henry Channing (3 vols., London, 1848). Other Lives by E. P. Peabody (Boston, 1880), J. W. Chadwick (ibid., 1903), A. W. Brown (Syracuse, NY [1956]), and M. H. Rice (New York [1961]). R. L. Patterson, The Philosophy of William Ellery Channing (New York, 1952). A. Delbanco, William Ellery Channing: An Essay on the Liberal Spirit in America (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1981). T. Toulouse, The Art of Prophesying: New England Sermons and the Shaping of Belief (Athens, Ga., and London [1987]), pp. 75–117.

Chantal, St Jane. See JANE FRANCES DE CHANTAL, ST.

chantry. An endowment for the maintenance of priests to sing or say Mass for the souls of the founder and others nominated by him (usually his kin or friends); the body of priests so endowed; and also any chapel in which such Masses were said. The chapel usually took the form either of an altar erected in a space partitioned off for the purpose within the parent building, or of a building constructed as a 'chantry chapel', annexed to the church or detached from it. In the latter case the chantry chapel, which was often close to the churchyard or at the entrance of a bridge, might have an extra storey, designed for the more secular duties of the chantry priest.

The creation of a chantry chapel in the later Middle Ages in England required a monetary endowment for its erection and upkeep, the permission of the *ordinary, the consent of the Crown for the alienation of lands held in *mortmain, and a guarantee to the priest of the parish that the chantry priest would not interfere with his rights.

Although the erection of chantries and the endowment of chantry priests dates back to the early Middle Ages, it was only in the 14th and 15th cents. that chantries became numerous. In addition to his purely ecclesiastical duties the chantry priest often had to act as schoolmaster, curate, or chaplain. At the Reformation the fate of the chantries was not long in the balance. Under *Henry VIII, owing to the financial needs of the wars being waged against France and Scotland, the Dissolution of Colleges Act 1545 was passed, stating that the possessions of chantries were generally misapplied and vesting them in the King for the term of his life; and commissioners were appointed to inquire into their property. This Act implicitly recognized that both individuals and the government were already engaged in individual suppressions; but wholesale suppression did not occur until the passing of the Dissolution of Colleges Act 1547 under *Edward VI, which widened the scope of the foundations to be dissolved. The number of chantries and guild chapels whose endowments were confiscated remains uncertain, but it was much greater than the traditionally quoted figure of 2,374. The 1547 Act provided that the money should be applied to public and charitable purposes, but much of it merely went into the pockets of Edward VI's advisers. It was laid down, however, that pensions should be paid to the chantry priests. The chantries had frequently been educational centres, and one of the chief losses was in this sphere, though in the (comparatively few) cases where there was formal provision for schooling in the chantry foundation, they were usually refounded as grammar schools, some bearing the name of Edward VI.

A large number of the chantry certificates for different counties have been pub., e.g. F. R. Raines (ed.), A History of the Chantries within the County Palatine of Lancaster, being the Reports of the Royal Commissioners of Henry VIII, Edward VI, and Queen Mary (Chetham Society, 59 and 60; 1862); A. Hamilton Thompson (ed.), 'The Chantry Certificates for Leicestershire returned under the Act of 37 Henry VIII., cap. iv., with an Introduction and Supplementary Documents', in Associated Architectural Societies' Reports & Papers, 30 (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 463–570; A. Hussey (ed.), Kent Chantries (Kent Archæological Society, Records Branch, 12; 1936); C. J. Kitching (ed.), London and Middlesex Chantry Certificates 1548 (London Record Society Publications, 16; 1980). Full list to date, under counties, in E. L. C. Mullins, Texts and Calendars: An Analytical Guide to Serial Publications (Royal Historical Society Guides and Handbooks, 7; 1958), and id., Texts and Calendars II: An Analytical Guide to Serial Publications 1957–1982 (ibid. 12; 1983): see index s.v. 'Chantries' and 'Chantry'. K. L. Wood-Legh, Perpetual Chantries in Britain, based on the Birkbeck Lectures 1954–5 (Cambridge, 1965); A. Kreider, English Chantries: The Road to Dissolution (Harvard Historical Studies, 97; 1979). J. J. Scarisbrick, 'Henry VIII and the dissolution of the secular colleges', in C. Cross and others (eds.), Law and Government under the Tudors: Essays Presented to Sir Geoffrey Elton (Cambridge, 1988), pp. 51–66. J. T. Rosenthal, 'The Yorkshire Chantry Certificates of 1546: an Analysis', Northern History, 9 (1974), pp. 26–47. C. [J.] Kitching, 'The Disposal of Monastic and Chantry Lands', in F. Heal and R. O'Day (eds.), Church and Society in England: Henry VIII to James I (London and Basingstoke, 1977), pp. 119–36. R. Whiting, The Blind Devotion of the People: Popular Religion and the English Reformation (Cambridge, 1989), esp. pp. 17–47 and 83–112. A. Hamilton Thompson, The Historical Growth of the Parish Church (1911), ch. 2, pp. 24–50; G. H. Cook, Mediaeval Chantries and Chantry Chapels (1947).

chapel. The word, which is first found in Marculfus (7th cent.), seems to derive from the temporary structure in which the Kings of France housed the 'cape' (late Lat. cappella, dim. of cappa) of St *Martin (q.v.) when carrying it on their military campaigns as a sacred relic. By an extension of use it was applied to shrines containing other relics (cf. esp. the '*Sainte-Chapelle' at *Paris, built to receive the *Crown of Thorns), and then to a variety of buildings which in various ways were less than churches. They include the following:

(1) Chapels of a private institution, such as a school, college, or hospital. Such chapels are often of imposing dimensions, e.g. those of some of the colleges at Oxford and Cambridge. (2) RC and dissenting places of worship, in distinction from the English parish churches. Before the 19th cent. the word 'church' was rarely applied to such buildings. Hence 'Church and Chapel' was a common phrase for 'Members of the C of E and Nonconformists'. In Ireland the term is still current for RC churches, though these are often larger than the Protestant churches in the same town. (3) A part of a large church, or cathedral, with a separate altar. The dedication of such chapels is commonly other than that of the main church. One of them (frequently the most considerable of them) is often dedicated to the BVM and hence known as the '*Lady Chapel' (q.v.). (4) The '*Chapels Royal', which, with the Royal *Peculiars, differ from cathedral and parish churches in being under the direct jurisdiction of the Sovereign. (5) A '*chapel of ease' (q.v.), a building for the ease of parishioners who live too far from the parish church. (6) A '*proprietary chapel' (q.v.), a church in private hands; there are very few now surviving in England.

On the Continent the word is often used for the chancel of a church. It has hence come to be applied to a (musical) choir, whether religious or secular, e.g. in Kapellmeister ('the master of a choir').

See also ORATORY, esp. for the RC legislation on chapels, and CHANTRY.

OED (2nd edn.), 3 (1989), pp. 24–6, s.v.

chapel of ease. A chapel subordinate to a mother church, for the ease of parishioners in prayers and preaching. Many such chapels were founded from the 12th cent. onward, and a good proportion rose by custom or express licence to parochial status and were used for the administration of the Sacraments and for burials. They proved esp. useful in the vast parishes of N. England where distance and natural obstacles made attendance at the mother church difficult, if not impossible, for many parishioners, and in areas where seasonal flooding separated communities from their main parish church. The Dissolution of Colleges Act 1547, intended to suppress chantries, also put endowed chapels in peril, but nearly all the essential ones survived, and many, such as the massive Holy Trinity, Hull, became independent parish churches. In modern times chapels of ease have usually been served by the parish clergy as opportunity allows, without the appointment of a separate priest-in-charge. See also CHANTRY.

Chapel Royal. A private chapel attached to a Royal court. In England the Chapel Royal and the Royal *Peculiars are not subject to the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which they are situated, but to the 'Dean of the Chapels Royal'. They are now regularly served by priests-in-ordinary appointed by the Crown. The present English Chapels Royal are (or are situate at) St James's Palace, Hampton Court, the Chapels Royal of St John the Evangelist and St Peter ad vincula within HM Tower of London, and The Queen's Chapel of the Savoy. Several of these have had a distinguished tradition of choral music. The *Sainte-Chapelle at Paris was formerly a Chapel Royal of the French court.

J. H. Denton, English Royal Free Chapels, 1100–1300: A Constitutional Study (Manchester, 1970). D. Baldwin, The Chapel Royal ancient and modern (1990).

chaplain. Orig. a priest or minister who has the charge of a *chapel (q.v.). He is ordinarily a cleric who performs non-parochial duties.

Chaplains are often appointed to monarchs, to bishops, and other high ecclesiastical dignitaries; they are also appointed to serve in various institutions, such as schools, colleges, prisons, hospitals, cemeteries, and at embassies, legations, and consulates abroad. The Indian Civil Service used to appoint a number of chaplains. In the armies, navies, and air forces of most Christian countries chaplains are appointed, both permanent and temporary. In Great Britain Army and RAF chaplains are given permanent or temporary commissions, and rank equivalent to captain or above according to seniority; in the Navy they do not hold official rank; and in all the services these chaplains are drawn from all the larger religious bodies. Chaplains appointed by the State are paid by the State, those by private persons by their employers.

A. Laurence, Parliamentary Army Chaplains 1642–1651 (Royal Historical Society Studies in History, 59; Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1990). G. Taylor, The Sea Chaplains: A History of Chaplains of the Royal Navy (Oxford, 1978). G. C. Zahn, Chaplains in the RAF: A Study in Role Tension (Manchester [1969]).

chaplet (Fr. chapelet, dim. of Old Fr. chape, 'headgear'; hence a 'crown' or 'wreath'). The name given to the three parts into which the devotion of the *Rosary is divided, each corresponding to a set of five of the 15 *Mysteries. It thus consists of five *decades, each concerned with one Mystery, and forms a complete devotion in itself. The word is also used of the string of beads constructed to count the prayers of one complete chaplet of the Rosary devotion and sometimes to denote the devotion as a whole. (Chapelet is the word most commonly used in France in this last sense.) The name has also been adopted for a devotion of Rosary type taught in the C of E by Fr. M. W. T. Conran, SSJE, entitled A Chaplet of Prayer and sanctioned by certain bishops for public use in their dioceses. It uses different prayers and Mysteries from the customary ones.

Chapman, John (1865–1933), NT and patristic scholar. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and ordained deacon in the C of E in 1889. In 1890 he joined the RC Church and in 1892 entered the *Benedictine Order. In 1913 he was sent for a year as Superior to *Caldey Island after the community there had joined the RC Church. He became Prior of *Downside in 1922 and Abbot in 1929.

In his John the Presbyter and the Fourth Gospel (1911) he sought to disprove the existence of a 'John the Elder' distinct from St John the Apostle, and in Matthew, Mark and Luke (ed. J. M. T. Barton; 1937) to show the priority of St Matthew's Gospel to the other *Synoptists. He also endeavoured to rehabilitate the supposed interpolations in the text of St *Cyprian's 'De Unitate Ecclesiae', which appear to tell in favour of the primacy of the Pope. His other writings include Notes on the Early History of the Vulgate Gospels (1908), St Benedict and the Sixth Century (1929), and his valuable Spiritual Letters (1935).

The Spiritual Letters of Dom John Chapman, OSB, ed. with introd. memoir by R. Hudleston, OSB (1935). Id. in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 488–92, s.v.

chapter (Lat. capitulum). The word is in current use in a variety of ecclesiastical senses:

(1) Orig. it denoted a section of the monastic rule, such as was daily read publicly in religious houses.

(2) The assembly of the members of a religious house to listen to this reading or for similar purposes (receiving the abbot's instructions, transacting the business of the monastery, etc.). (See also CHAPTER HOUSE.) By extension the assembly of the monks or their representatives of a whole province or order came to be referred to as a 'provincial chapter' or 'general chapter'.

(3) The members of a religious house in their corporate capacity. Hence

(4) The members of any corporate body responsible for an ecclesiastical institution. In England esp. of the body responsible for the spiritual and temporal concerns of a cathedral church. In some cathedrals two capitular bodies (the Lesser and Greater Chapters) exist, with different functions, the smaller body usually consisting of the residentiary members and being included in the larger body (whose members are commonly known as 'Prebendaries' or 'Honorary Canons').

(5) The clergy of a rural deanery meeting under the chairmanship of the *rural dean (q.v.).

For chapter and verse references in the Bible, see BIBLE DIVISIONS AND REFERENCES.

The duties of cathedral chapters in the RC Church are laid down in CIC (1983), cans. 503–10. On chapters in the C of E, E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law, 3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson (1992), pp. 40–5, with notes p. 48. A. H. Thompson in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), pp. 103–5; L. R. Misserey, OP, in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 595–610. See also bibl. to CANON.

Chapter, Little. A short lesson of a verse or two of Scripture, included in each of the Breviary *Offices except the *Office of Readings. In the 1971 Breviary it is called the 'Lectio Brevis' ('Short Reading').

chapter house. A building used for meetings of a cathedral or monastic chapter. Separate buildings for such purposes appear early in the 9th cent. They are usually rectangular in shape, but a small number of polygonal ones were built in England, mainly c. the end of the 13th cent.

character. In the Catholic theology of the Sacraments, the indelible quality which *Baptism, *Confirmation, and *Ordination are held to imprint on the soul. As this character is indelible and, even after the gravest sins, including apostasy, therefore remains, none of these Sacraments can be received more than once by the same person. The doctrine received explicit formulation, largely under the influence of St *Augustine, by the Schoolmen, but it was foreshadowed from an early date by such expressions as 'the Lord's seal' (σφραγὶς τοῦ Κυρίου) applied by *Clement of Alexandria to Baptism, itself based on such NT passages as Eph. 1: 13.

Chardon, Louis (1595–1651), French spiritual theologian. In 1618 he entered the *Dominican Order in Paris, where he appears to have spent much of the rest of his life. His principal writing, La Croix de Jésus (1649), was little known in modern times until H. *Bremond drew attention to it. Chardon here argues that just as the grace given to Christ impelled him to choose suffering and crucifixion, and even a sense of abandonment by God, so grace in the believer typically leads to crosses and desolation, even if consolations and 'mystical phenomena' may accompany the earlier stages of the spiritual life. Through desolation the soul comes to rely on God alone, not confusing the efficacy of grace with incidental feelings. Enthusiasm is thus replaced by real inner strength and the soul is united to God in a purely supernatural way. The whole work shows a pervasive influence of St *Thomas Aquinas and the current Thomistic doctrine of grace, and also a marked dependence, probably indirect, on *Eckhart and J. *Tauler. Chardon reinterpreted the contemporary mystical doctrine of the suspension of the natural operation of the powers of the soul in a Thomistic way. He published a few other writings, including a French translation of the Dialogue of St *Catherine of Siena (1648) and of the Institutions ascribed to Tauler (1650).

Modern edn. of La Croix de Jésus by F. Florand, OP (Paris, 1937); review by H. D. Simonin in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 7 (1937), pp. 337–40. Eng. tr. of La Croix de Jésus by R. T. Murphy, OP, and J. Thornton (2 vols., St Louis and London, 1957–9). Bremond, 8 (1928), pp. 3–77. Series of arts. by F. Florand, OP, in La Vie spirituelle, Suppl. 42 (1935), pp. 15–57, 108–27; 44 (1935), pp. 17–55, 85–96; 45 (1936), pp. 22–35, 100–20; 58 (1939), pp. 33–43, incl. refs. to other works. Id. in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 498–503.

charge. An address delivered by a bishop, archdeacon, or other ecclesiastical person at a *visitation of the clergy under his jurisdiction. Charges are also delivered to their ordinands by bishops (and, in the Presbyterian Church, by ministers) immediately before ordination. A charge is usually more of the nature of an admonitory exhortation than a definite command, though the latter could quite properly be conveyed through a charge. See also VISITATION.

charismata (Gk. χαρίσματα, plur. of χάρισμα, 'a gift of grace'). The blessings, spiritual and temporal, bestowed on every Christian for the due fulfilment of his vocation. In a narrower sense, the word is used esp. for the supernatural graces which individual Christians need to perform the specific tasks incumbent on them in promoting the spiritual advancement of their fellows. In 1 Cor. 12: 8–11 they are enumerated as comprising the word of wisdom, the word of knowledge, faith, the gifts of healing, working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, to which are added, in verse 28 the charismata given to Apostles, prophets, teachers, and those entrusted with the government of the Church.

A. Lemonnyer, OP, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 1233–43, s.v. 'Charismes'; J. H. Crehan, SJ, in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 19–22, s.v. 'Charisms'.

Charismatic Renewal Movement or 'Charismatic Movement', also known as 'Neo-Pentecostalism'. A loosely-structured predominantly lay movement dating from *c.*1960 in the main Churches, incl. since *c.*1967 RCs. It began in N. America and is now world-wide. It has its modern origins in *Pentecostalism, and, like it, is characterized by an emphasis on group worship and the exercise of the spiritual 'gifts' ('*charismata' or 'charisms'; see previous entry), esp. divine (or *spiritual) healing and *glossolalia (but without Pentecostalism's tight correlation of glossolalia and '*baptism in the Holy Spirit'). Since the 1970s its Pentecostal origins and 'enthusiastic' features have become less evident, and its adherents have widely emphasized its orthodoxy. In the RC Church, where (in the W.) by *c.*1980 it had become one of the main lay movements and was recognized as such by the Vatican (e.g. by representation at the 1987 Rome Synod of Bishops on the Laity), it is more structured and theologically conservative than when it first appeared.

For bibl. see PENTECOSTALISM; also K. McDonnell, Charismatic Renewal and the Churches (New York [1976]); A. Bittlinger (ed.), The Church is Charismatic: The World Council of Churches and the Charismatic Movement (Geneva, 1981).

charity (Lat. caritas). The greatest of the '*theological virtues'. Usually, though not consistently, it is the AV translation of ἀγάπη, the virtue of which the nature and characteristics are described by St *Paul in 1 Cor. 13. It is directed primarily towards God; but it is also owed to ourselves and our neighbours as the objects of God's love. Its natural opposite is hatred, which may also take the negative form of indifference. See also AGAPE, LOVE.

Charlemagne (*c.*742–814), 'Charles the Great', first Emperor (from 800) of what was later to be called the '*Holy Roman Empire'. The son of *Pepin III, King of the Franks, and Bertrada, he was anointed with his father and Carloman, his brother, by Pope *Stephen III in 754. On Pepin's death in 768 he and Carloman divided the kingdom between them. The death of Carloman in 771 left Charlemagne sole ruler.

For the next 28 years, Charlemagne was mainly occupied with extending his kingdom in all directions. He first subdued Lombardy, perhaps at the request of *Hadrian I. Having forced the king, Desiderius, to retire to a monastery, Charlemagne assumed the Lombard crown, and was rewarded by the Pope with the title of patricius. Next followed (772–85) a long series of arduous campaigns against the Saxons. In 778 Bavaria was conquered and annexed in 788, and between 791 and 796 the Avar kingdom and Pannonia fell into his hands. Meanwhile dissensions among the Muslims in Spain had tempted Charlemagne over the Pyrennees. In his first expedition (778), which was a failure, Roland, Count of the Breton March, was killed; the tradition of his campaign long survived into the Middle Ages in a romantic form through La Chanson de Roland. The systematic conquest of northern Spain began in 785; and eventually, in 801, Barcelona was captured and made the centre of the Spanish March. On Christmas Day 800 Charlemagne was crowned Emperor by Pope *Leo III in Rome; his title thereafter suggested a renewal of the Roman Empire, a claim which met with some disfavour in Byzantium.

In addition to his conquests and wars abroad, Charlemagne brought consistency, reform, and uniformity into his government at home, building upon the firm foundations laid by his father. His creation of a strong central government, his employment of missi dominici (itinerant royal legates), and his legislation in the form of *capitularies, which he issued for the peoples of all the regions under his rule, reflect the vigour of his government. His encouragement of ecclesiastical reform and patronage of letters, undertaken in consultation with his lay and ecclesiastical magnates, have rightly earned for his reign and much of the succeeding cent., the description the 'Carolingian Renaissance'. He continued to promote the reform of the Frankish Church by such measures as the restoration of the metropolitans. He was personally interested in *Adoptianism and *Iconoclasm, the main theological disputes of his day, as well as in the corrected text of the Bible prepared by *Alcuin. He was anxious to achieve liturgical uniformity and sought to promote the Roman Mass; he also made provision for a standard *homiliary and an approved collection of canon law. His patronage of the scholars who formed the palace 'school' and his remarkable collection of books in the palace library did much to stimulate learning (see CAROLINGIAN SCHOOLS). It was these achievements and his encouragement of education, rather than his conquests, which form his chief claim to fame.

Official docs. ed. E. Mühlbacher in MGH, Diplomata Karolina, 1 (1906), pp. 77–484. The 'Codex Carolinus' (letters from Popes Gregory II, *Zacharias, Stephen II, Paul I, Constantine II, *Stephen III, and *Hadrian I to Charles Martel, Pepin, and Charlemagne), ed. W. Grundlach in MGH, Epistolae, 3 (1892), pp. 469–657; the latter also ed., together with various other letters, Life by *Einhard and other primary material, by P. Jaffé, Monumenta Carolina (Berlin, 1867). Life by Einhard also ed. O. Holder-Egger (Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum scholarum, 1911), H. W. Garrod and R. B. Mowat (Oxford, 1915), and, with Fr. tr., by L. Halphen (Les Classiques d'histoire de France au moyen âge; 1923); Eng. tr. by L. Thorpe (Harmondsworth, 1969). Eng. tr. of part of the 'Codex Carolinus' in P. D. King, Charlemagne: Translated Sources (privately pr., Lambrigg, Cumbria, 1987), pp. 269–307. Other primary material listed in BHL 1, pp. 238–45 (nos. 1577–618); Novum Supplementum (1986), pp. 179–86. S. Abel and B. Simson, Jahrbücher des fränkischen Reiches unter Karl dem Grossen (Jahrbücher der deutschen Geschichte; 2 vols., 1866–83). Modern studies incl. those of A. Kleinclausz (Paris, 1934, with good introd. on sources; see also other works of this author), J. Calmette (ibid., 1945), F. Heer (London, 1975), and P. D. King (Lancaster Pamphlet, 1986). L. Halphen, Études critiques sur l'histoire de Charlemagne (1921); id., Charlemagne et l'empire carolingien (1947, repr. with suppl. bibl., 1968); K. Heldmann, Das Kaisertum Karls des Grossen (Quellen und Studien zur Verfassungsgeschichte des deutschen Reiches in Mittelalter und Neuzeit, 6, Heft 2; 1928). D. Bullough, The Age of Charlemagne (1965; 2nd edn., 1973), with useful bibl. W. Braunfels (ed.), Karl der Grosse: Lebenswerk und Nachleben (4 vols. + Register, Düsseldorf, 1965–8). R. Folz, Études sur le culte liturgique de Charlemagne dans les églises de l'empire (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, fasc. 115; 1951); id., Le Couronnement impérial de Charlemagne (1964; Eng. tr., 1974). F. L. Ganshof, Frankish Institutions under Charlemagne (Providence, RI, 1968; a collection of his papers tr. into Eng.). R. McKitterick, The Frankish Church and the Carolingian Reforms 789–895 (1977), pp. 122–33; id., The Frankish Kingdoms under the Carolingians, 751–987 (1983), pp. 59–105. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 181–204. Karl der Grosse: Werk und Wirkung. Exhibition Catalogue (Aachen, 1965). B. Gebhardt, Handbuch der deutschen Geschichte, 1 (9th edn. by H. Grundmann; Stuttgart, 1970), pp. 169–90, with further bibl. Survey of recent work by D. A. Bullough, 'Europae Pater: Charlemagne and his Achievement in the Light of Recent Scholarship', EHR 85 (1970), pp. 59–105. A. P. Frutaz in EC 3 (1950), cols. 882–6, s.v. 'Carolomagno', on the liturgical reform of his reign, with bibl. For works on the Carolingian Renaissance see bibl. to CAROLINGIAN SCHOOLS.

Charles I (1600–49), King of Great Britain and Ireland from 1625. On his accession to the throne, Charles found a considerable party among the clergy disposed to abandon the *Calvinistic views which had been predominant under *Elizabeth I and *James I, and to welcome a theological position nearer to the Catholic tradition. The King, who personally favoured the new movement (soon labelled '*Arminianism'), took steps to silence the resulting controversy, meanwhile promoting High Churchmen to important positions, and in 1633 giving the see of *Canterbury to W. *Laud, their leader. Laud's vigorous policy in enforcing a higher standard of ceremonial and favouring Arminianism earned him wide unpopularity, while the King, whose administrative, financial, and foreign policy had been as disastrous as it had been well-intentioned, suffered with him. The fact that *Henrietta Maria was a RC added to the difficulties, since Charles, torn between her demands for complete toleration of her co-religionists and the violent anti-Popery of the mass of his subjects, unsuccessfully compromised; the only result of this policy was popular indignation at the discrepancy between the half-hearted enforcement of the recusancy laws against RCs and the rigour with which the courts of Star Chamber and *High Commission, under Laud's direction, passed sentence on *Puritans, even though such sentences were lenient in comparison with those which RCs and Puritans alike suffered under Elizabeth I.

Charles's Scottish policy was similarly unfortunate. In Scotland the earlier agitation against episcopacy had died down, but between his coronation at Edinburgh in 1633 and the Prayer Book riot there in 1637 Charles did everything to inflame it. His coronation was carried out with the fullest Anglican ceremonial; he insisted that Scotland should adopt the English or a similar Prayer Book, and conform to the Laudian usages in externals; and, worst of all, the government and policy of the Church of Scotland were to be dependent upon Canterbury or upon Scottish bishops controlled by the King and Laud. The *National Covenant of 1638, which pledged Scotland to Presbyterianism, was the outcome.

The Civil War, which broke out in England in 1642, was largely caused by ecclesiastical differences. By 1648 the defeat of Charles ensured the eclipse of the C of E and the temporary triumph of Presbyterianism. The subsequent failure of Charles to negotiate successfully with his enemies owed much to his refusal to consent to a permanent sacrifice of episcopacy in order to obtain the goodwill of the Scots and the support of the victorious English Parliamentarians. His execution, an illegal act carried through by fanatical Army leaders, has been justly considered a martyrdom, for in the end it was conditioned chiefly by his resolution to defend the Church. His character, though marred by political indecision, imprudence, and faithlessness, was, in his private life, of high moral purity and beauty. His deep sense of religious principle and personal responsibility appeared to full effect in the dignity of his last hours.

On the day of his death the Eikon Basilike*, a memoir in somewhat hagiographical terms, was published, and the dead king was widely acclaimed as a martyr. From 1662 to 1859 a special service for 30 Jan., the day of his death, was annexed to the BCP by royal mandate; it ordered an annual day of national fasting. Charles I is commemorated on 30 Jan. in the ASB, and over the ages various churches have been dedicated in his name.

C. Petrie (ed.), The Letters, Speeches and Proclamations of King Charles I (1935). S. R. Gardiner, History of England from the Accession of James I to the Outbreak of the Civil War (10 vols., 1883–4), esp. vols. 6 ff.; id., History of the Great Civil War, 1642–1649 (3 vols., 1886–91). Modern studies by P. Gregg (London, 1981) and C. Carlton (ibid., 1983). G. Albion, Charles I and the Court of Rome (1935); C. V. Wedgwood, The King's Peace, 1637–1641 (1955); id., The King's War, 1641–1647 (1958); id., The Trial of King Charles I (1964). A. [J.] Fletcher, The Outbreak of the English Civil War (1981; repr. with corrections, 1985). N. [R. N.] Tyacke, Anti-Calvinists: The Rise of English Arminianism c.1590–1640 (Oxford, 1987), passim. C. Russell, The Causes of the English Civil War (Ford Lectures for 1987–8; ibid., 1990), esp. pp. 109–30 and 185–211. K. Sharpe, The Personal Rule of Charles I (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1992). J. Davies, The Caroline Captivity of the Church: Charles I and the Remoulding of Anglicanism 1625–1641 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1992). V. Staley, 'The Commemoration of King Charles the Martyr', in his Liturgical Studies (1907), no. 6, pp. 66–83; R. A. Beddard, 'Wren's mausoleum for Charles I and the cult of the Royal Martyr', Architectural History, 27 (1984), pp. 36–49.

Charles II (1630–85), King of Great Britain and Ireland (in exile) from 1649; restored 1660. He took the Covenant in 1650 in order to obtain Scottish aid, but abandoned it on the failure of his invasion in 1651. Thereafter he conformed to the Anglicanism dominant at the exiled court. After the Restoration political considerations, even more than personal indifference, inclined him to a policy of toleration, to which he tried to give effect in the abortive *Declarations of Indulgence of 1662 and 1672, but the exclusive Anglican sentiment of the country prevailed in parliament, as may be seen in the *Corporation Act (1661), the Act of *Uniformity (1662), the *Conventicles Act (1664) and the *Five Mile Act (1665). The Declaration of Indulgence in 1672 marked the climax of Charles's efforts to rewrite the Restoration settlement in Church and State. It provoked considerable opposition, in which Abp. G. *Sheldon played a leading part. The parliamentary defeat of Indulgence and the imposition of the *Test Act (1673) resulted in the King's finally supporting the Anglican establishment. Under Lord Treasurer Danby and, later on, in the period of Whig aggression (1679–81) he upheld the authority of the episcopate. After the dissolution of the Oxford Parliament in 1681 the hierarchy under Abp. W. *Sancroft attempted a pastoral reformation in the parishes and dioceses of England with the support of the court and the Tory politicians of the Church party. On his deathbed the King made a formal profession of the RC faith, out of which his successor, *James II, made religious propaganda in the next reign. See also POPISH PLOT.

A. Bryant (ed.), The Letters, Speeches and Declarations of King Charles II (1935). Modern Lives by A. Bryant (London, 1931; rev. edn., 1955), J. R. Jones (ibid., 1987), R. Hutton (Oxford, 1989) and J. [L.] Miller (London, 1991). D. Ogg, England in the Reign of Charles II (2 vols., 1935). J. R. Jones (ed.), The Restored Monarchy 1660–1688 (1979). R. [A.] Beddard, 'The Commission for Ecclesiastical Promotions, 1681–84: an Instrument of Tory Reaction', The Historical Journal, 10 (1967), pp. 11–40.

Charles V (1500–58), Emperor. The eldest son of Philip of Burgundy and the grandson of *Ferdinand and *Isabella, Charles soon became the most powerful man in Europe. By 1519, when he was elected Emperor, he held (besides the county of Burgundy) the Netherlands, Spain and the Spanish American Empire, the kingdom of Naples, and had a claim to the duchy of Milan. The very extent of his power was, however, his chief source of weakness; for though in Spain and the Netherlands his centralized administration was absolute, in all his other dominions his position was weakened by enemies within and without—France, the Papacy, the Turks, and the Protestant princes. The most urgent problem that confronted him was the growth of *Lutheranism. The Diet of *Worms (1521) banned M. *Luther, but for many years Charles's other difficulties only allowed him to pursue an alternating policy of concession and repression. After 1544 he managed at last to break up the *Schmalkaldic League. The Protestants, however, soon reasserted their strength, drove the Emperor out of Germany, and at the Diet of *Augsburg (1555) forced upon him the principle of '*cuius regio, eius religio'. To avoid the anomaly of persecuting Protestants in one part of his dominions and tolerating them in another, Charles abdicated in 1556, and died in retirement at the monastery of Yuste in Estremadura.

Substantial works on Charles V include those of W. Robertson and W. H. Prescott (2 vols., London, 1857), H. Baumgarten (3 vols., Stuttgart, 1885–92), and E. Armstrong (2 vols., London, 1902). The best modern Life is that of K. Brandi (2 vols., Munich, 1937–41; Eng. tr. of vol. 1, 1939 [in effect the text, vol. 2 comprising original docs.]). Charles-Quint et son temps: Colloques internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, Paris 30 septembre–3 octobre 1958 (1959); P. Rassow and F. Schalk (eds.), Karl V: Der Kaiser und seine Zeit. Kölner Colloquium 26.–29. November 1958 (Cologne, 1960). W. Friedensburg, Kaiser Karl V und Papst Paul III, 1534–1549 (1932). R. Carande, Carlos V y sus Banqueros (3 vols., 1943–67; 2nd edn., vol. 1, 1965). S. A. Fischer-Galati, Ottoman Imperialism and German Protestantism 1521–1555 (Harvard Historical Monographs, 43; 1959), passim. J. Lynch, Spain under the Habsburgs, 1 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 68–100; 2nd edn. (1981), pp. 74–108; M. Fernández Álvarez, L'España del Emperador Carlos V (1550–1558; 1517–1556) (Historia de España, ed. R. Menéndez Pidal, 18; 1966), P. Chaunu, L'Espagne de Charles Quint (2 vols., 1973). S. Haliczer, The Comuneros of Castile: The Forging of a Revolution, 1475–1521 (Madison, Wis., 1981). H. E. Koenigsberger, 'The Empire of Charles V in Europe', in G. R. Elton (ed.), New Cambridge Modern History, 2 (1958), pp. 301–33. E. D. McShane in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 503–6, with useful bibl. See also works dealing with this period cited under SPAIN, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Charles Borromeo, St (1538–84), Abp. of Milan. He was one of the leaders of the *Counter-Reformation. Born of noble parentage at Arona on Lake Maggiore, he was early destined for the priesthood, and received his first benefice at the age of 12. In 1552 he went to Pavia, where he studied civil and canon law under Alciati. In 1559 his uncle, the newly elected *Pius IV, summoned him to Rome and in 1560 created him cardinal and Abp. of Milan. He had much influence on the third and last group of sessions of the Council of *Trent. On his entry into Milan he set about a radical reformation of the see, tightening up the morals and manners of clergy and laity, and making the work of the diocese more effective. He founded an order of Oblates (modelled on the *Jesuits), established seminaries for the education of the clergy, and reorganized a Confraternity of Christian Doctrine for instructing children. He took much personal interest in the sick and the poor, notably in the plague of 1576. His reforms provoked great hostility, but his influence was felt far outside his diocese, and in particular in Switzerland. He was canonized in 1610. Feast day, 4 Nov.

Federico Borromeo (1564–1631), his cousin and successor in the see of Milan from 1595, was the founder of the Ambrosiana (q.v.; 1609). Other members of his family held high office in Church and State.

Charles Borromeo's Sermons ed. J. A. Sassi (5 vols., Milan, 1747–8). His decrees and official acts are pr. in the Acta Ecclesiae Mediolanensis, 2–3, ed. A. Ratti [later *Pius XI] (ibid., 1890–92). Gli Atti della Visita Apostolica di S. Carlo Borromeo a Bergamo (1575), ed. A. G. Roncalli [later *John XXIII] and P. Forno (Fontes Ambrosiani, 13–17; 1936–57). Modern edn. of his 'Instructiones fabricae et supellectilis ecclesiasticae' by P. Barocchi, Trattati d'Arte del Cinquecento, 3 (Bari, 1962), pp. 1–113. The primary authorities are the Lives by A. Valiero (Verona, 1586), C. Bascapè (Ingolstadt, 1592), and J. P. Giussano (Rome, 1610; Eng. tr., with preface by H. E. *Manning, 2 vols., 1884). A. Sala, Documenti circa la vita e le gesta di San Carlo Borromeo (4 vols., 1857–62). Id., Biographia di San Carlo Borromeo (1858). Other modern studies by M. Yeo (London, 1938; popular), A. Deroo (Paris, 1963), and H. Jedin (tr. into Ital., Rome, 1971), with useful bibl. G. Alberigo, 'Carlo Borromeo come modello di vescovo nella Chiesa post-tridentina', Rivista storica italiana, 79 (1967), pp. 1031–52; P. Prodi, 'Charles Borromée, archevêque de Milan, et la papauté', RHE 62 (1967), pp. 379–411. J. M. Headley and J. B. Tomaro (eds.), San Carlo Borromeo: Catholic Reform and Ecclesiastical Politics in the Second Half of the Sixteenth Century [1988]. R. Mols, SJ, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 486–534, s.v. 'Charles Borromée'; id. in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 710–12, s.v. 'Borromeo, Charles'; C. M. de Certeau in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 20 (1977), pp. 260–69, s.v. 'Carlo Borromeo, santo'.

On Federico Borromeo, Lettere del Cardinale Federico Borromeo ai Familiari, ed. C. Marcora (1, Milan, 1971; 2, Como [1978]). F. Rivola, Vita di Federico Borromeo Cardinale (Milan, 1656). P. Prodi in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 13 (1971), pp. 33–42, s.v. 'Borromeo, Federico'.

Charles Martel (c.690–741), Frankish ruler. He was a son of Pepin II, Mayor of the Palace to the Merovingian kings, by a concubine, Chapaida. Between 714 and 718 he fought for leadership and control of the Frankish kingdom against his father's wife Plectrud and also against the Neustrian Franks led by the Mayor Ragamfred. Having won the support of many important bishops, abbots, and aristocrats, his position as head of the Carolingian family and as Princeps Francorum was assured by 723. Thereafter he consolidated his government and conducted campaigns against the Frisians, Saxons, and Bavarians. He defeated the Arab army of Abd-ar-Rahman at the famous battle of Poitiers in 732, and he attempted, unsuccessfully, to annex Aquitaine. He enjoyed good relations with the Lombards and his support was courted by the Papacy. He afforded protection to St *Boniface and continued his family's patronage of *Echternach under St *Willibrord. He was the grandfather of *Charlemagne.

T. Breysig, Jahrbücher des fränkischen Reiches, 714 741: Die Zeit Karl Martells (1869), with important excursus on sources, pp. 109–15. F. Lot, C. Pfister, and F. L. Ganshof, Les Destinées de l'empire en occident de 395 à 768 (Histoire générale, ed. G. Glotz, Histoire du moyen-âge, 1, pt. 1; 1928), pp. 294–402, passim, esp. pp. 394–402, with refs. J. Deviosse, Charles Martel (Paris, 1978). J.-H. Roy and J. Deviosse, La Bataille de Poitiers [1966]; M. Rouche, 'Les Aquitains ont-ils trahi avant la bataille de Poitiers? Un éclairage "événementiel" sur les mentalités', Le Moyen Age, 74 (1968), pp. 5–26. J. Semmler, 'Zur pippinidisch-karolingischen Suksessionskrise 714–723', Deutsches Archiv, 33 (1977), pp. 1–36. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 132–8. See also Lives of Boniface and Willibrord, cited s.v.

Charles, Robert Henry (1855–1931), biblical scholar. He was educated at Queen's College, Belfast, and *Trinity College, Dublin. After some years as a parish priest in London and in research at *Oxford, he became professor of Biblical Greek at Dublin in 1898. From 1906 to 1913 he was again in Oxford. In 1913 he became Canon, and in 1919 Archdeacon, of *Westminster. In matters of Jewish eschatology and apocalyptic he was the greatest authority of his day, and produced numerous scholarly editions of texts, including the *Book of Enoch (1893, 1912), the *Book of Jubilees (1895), *The Apocalypse of Baruch (1896), and *The Testaments of the XII Patriarchs (1908). General surveys and conclusions of his researches were embodied in A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life . . ., or Hebrew, Jewish, and Christian Eschatology (1899; 2nd edn., 1913) and Religious Development between the Old and the New Testaments (1914). He is best known to non-specialist readers for The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament (2 vols, 1913), a comprehensive corpus of texts in English translation, with introductions and notes, until recently the standard reference work of its kind.

F. C. *Burkitt in Proceedings of the British Academy, 17 (1931), pp. 437–45. Brief memoir by C. F. D'Arcy prefixed to Charles's Courage, Truth, Purity (posthumous, 1931), pp. xiii–xxxv. T. W. Manson in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 169 f.

Charron, Pierre (1541–1603), French preacher and philosopher. He attended the *Sorbonne and studied law at Bourges, Orléans, and Montpellier. He was ordained as a young man (the date is not known); in 1576 he became a canon of Bordeaux, in 1594 Vicar General at Cahors, and later Canon of Condom. In the 1580s he met M. de *Montaigne, who greatly influenced him. His works, which were widely read, include Les Trois Vérités (1593), Discours Chrestiens (1601), and his most famous work, De la Sagesse (also 1601). Charron denounced the claims of Protestants to have established rational bases for their versions of Christianity, but he did not believe the RC Church to have been any more successful in this attempt; his negative theology led him to doubt whether human reason could, unaided, reach any certainty about God or His properties. The RC Church is, however, the vehicle of revealed truth, of which it has a monopoly. In matters of morality, where the Church gives no specific guidance, wise men follow Nature and begin to discover her precepts. Charron's sceptical Catholicism is deeply indebted to Montaigne, but he has suffered from being wrongly regarded as a mere systematizer of an impoverished version of Montaigne's thought; he was opposed by the *Jesuits and by M. *Mersenne. In 1605, soon after its second edition, De la Sagesse was put on the *Index. His posthumously published Traicté de Sagesse (1606) contains a clear statement of his beliefs.

Œuvres (Paris, 1635). J. B. Sabrié, De l'humanisme au rationalisme: Pierre Charron, (1913); J. D. Charron, The 'Wisdom' of Pierre Charron: An Original and Orthodox Code of Morality (University of North Carolina Studies in the Romance Languages and Literatures, 34; Chapel Hill, NC [1961]). E. F. Rice, Jun., The Renaissance Idea of Wisdom (Cambridge, Mass., 1958), pp. 178–207; R. H. Popkin, The History of Scepticism from Erasmus to Descartes (Assen, 1960), esp. pp. 56–63.

charterhouse, Eng. version of Fr. maison chartreuse, a *Carthusian religious house. The most famous house of that name was established in 1371 just W. of Aldersgate, London, and on the site of it a chapel, almshouse, and school were founded by Thomas Sutton in 1611. The school, which in 1872 was removed to near Godalming, in Surrey, is now among the most famous of English public schools.

Charter of Love. See CARTA CARITATIS.

Chartres. The town, about 50 miles S. of Paris, has been the seat of a bishop since the late 4th cent., with some intervals. The present cathedral consists of a crypt dating from the time of Bp. *Fulbert (d. 1028) and a marvellous Gothic church above it, built and decorated between *c.*1130 and 1230. The particular glories of Chartres are the stained glass, much of it from the 12th and 13th cents., and the stone sculpture on the west front and the porches to the north and south transepts. The 'programme' or scheme of decoration of the west door includes the *seven liberal arts, surrounding scenes from the life of the BVM. These sculptures have focused and helped to perpetuate the belief that Chartres was a major centre of learning in the 12th cent.: one of the sources of the University of *Paris. But whereas Fulbert certainly taught at Chartres, there is no evidence that 'the school of Chartres' survived (with or without interruption) until *c.*1150. Only *Bernard, of whom *John of Salisbury speaks warmly, is a distinctive figure in the cathedral school in the 12th cent. Other scholars and masters, such as *Thierry, taught elsewhere, notably in Paris, and were designated 'of Chartres' from their place of origin.

G. [D. S.] Henderson, Chartres (Harmondsworth, 1968). O. [G.] von Simson, The Gothic Cathedral: The Origins of Gothic Architecture & the Medieval Concept of Order (1956), pp. 183–265. W. Sauerländer, Gotische Skulptur in Frankreich 1140–1270 (1970; Eng. tr., Gothic Sculpture in France 1140–1270, 1972), passim; A. Katzenellenbogen, The Sculptural Programs of Chartres Cathedral: Christ, Mary, Ecclesia (Baltimore, 1959). Y. Delaporte and É. Houvet, Les Vitraux de la Cathédrale de Chartres (4 vols., Chartres, 1926); L. Grodecki, Le Vitrail Roman (1977), pp. 103–12. A. Clerval, Les Écoles de Chartres au Moyen Age (1895). E. Jeauneau, 'Lectio Philosophorum': Recherches sur l'École de Chartres (Amsterdam, 1973). N. [M.] Häring, 'Chartres and Paris revisited', in J. R. O'Donnell (ed.), Essays in honour of Anton Charles Pegis (Toronto, 1974), pp. 268–329; R. W. Southern, 'The Schools of Paris and the School of Chartres', in R. L. Benson and G. Constable (eds.), Renaissance and Renewal in the Twelfth Century (Oxford, 1982), pp. 113–37. Y. Delaporte in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 544–74, s.v.

Chartreuse, La Grande. See GRANDE CHARTREUSE, LA.

Chasidim (also Hasidaeans). The conservative Jews in Palestine (the name means the 'pious' or 'godly') who in the 2nd cent. BC endeavoured to maintain the traditional Hebrew Law, with its scribal interpretation, against the prevalent Greek influences. When the *Maccabees revolted under Mattathias in 167/6 against the Hellenizing party, the Chasidim at first supported him, but once religious freedom had been secured (*c.*162), they refused to fight for national independence. The Chasidim were probably the immediate ancestors of the party of the *Pharisees. The word was used later in other senses, e.g. as a title for Jewish mystics and as the name of a Jewish sect founded in the 18th cent.

J. Morgenstern, 'The Hasîdim—Who were they?', Hebrew Union College Annual, 38 (1967), pp. 59–73. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), p. 157. See also comm. to Maccabees, cited s.v.

chasuble. The outermost garment worn by bishops and priests in celebrating the *Eucharist, and in the E. Church often also at solemn celebrations of the morning and evening offices and on certain other occasions. It is derived from the 'paenula' or 'planeta', the outdoor cloak of both sexes in the later Graeco-Roman world. In shape it was originally like a tent, with a hole for the head, but gradually it was reduced in size. This took place in the W. by the cutting away of the sides, whereas in the E., where it is known as the '*phelonion', the garment was gathered up or cut away in the front. In recent years the original form has been revived in some RC churches. In the BCP of 1549 the chasuble was retained, with the cope as an alternative; in that of 1552 it was abolished; but it has been widely held that the *Ornaments Rubric of 1559, re-enacted in 1662, reimposes its use. In practice, however, it seems to have been little used, if at all, in post-Reformation times in the C of E before the ceremonial revival of the 19th cent., when decisions of the civil courts against the use of Eucharistic vestments failed to check its widespread reintroduction. The *Lutheran Church in Germany retained the chasuble for some time after the Reformation, and the Scandinavian Churches still use it.

Rohault, 7 (1888), pp. 111–81, with plates dlxi–dci. Braun, LG, pp. 149–247. On the revival of the use of the chasuble in the C of E in the 19th cent., cf. F. E. *Brightman in DECH, p. 612, s.v. 'Vestments'.

Chateaubriand, François René, Vicomte de (1768–1848), French Romantic writer. He was a native of St-Malo. In 1791 he crossed to America, but soon returned, and lived from 1793 to 1800 in England. In his later life he had a distinguished career as a politician, becoming a peer, ambassador, and foreign minister. He was buried at his own request on the island of Grand Bé, near St-Malo.

His principal religious work is his Génie du christianisme, ou beautés de la religion chrétienne, a brilliant rhetorical defence of Catholic Christianity, which he published in 1802 on the morrow of the *Concordat. He had been converted to a living faith in Christianity by a deep emotional crisis that followed the deaths of his mother and sister (ma conviction est sortie du cœur; j'ai pleuré et j'ai cru). In the Génie he sought to lift Christianity from the discredit into which the destructive work of the 18th-cent. rationalist philosophers had brought it by transferring the debate from the plane of reason to that of feeling. He argued that the study of history proved the Christian faith to have been the main fountain of art and civilization in Europe, by the recurrent stimulus it gave to the intellectual and spiritual aspirations of mankind. His other writings of religious significance include his novel Les Martyrs, ou le triomphe de la religion chrétienne (1809) and a Life of de *Rancé (1844).

The edn. of his Œuvres complètes (12 vols., Paris [1861]) contains numerous texts not easily available elsewhere. That of his Correspondance générale by L. Thomas (5 vols., Paris, 1912–24) is being replaced by the edn. of B. d'Andlau and P. Riberette (ibid., 1977 ff.). There is much autobiographical material in his Mémoires d'outre-tombe (MS completed 1846; 20 vols., Brussels, 1848–50; 12 vols., Paris, 1849–50; Eng. tr., 6 vols., 1902), but edns. vary considerably in their text; recent ones by M. Levaillant and G. Moulinier (2 vols., Paris, 1946) and by J.-C. Berchet (ibid., 1989 ff.). C.-A. Sainte-Beauve, Chateaubriand et son groupe littéraire sous l'empire (2 vols., 1861), despite its personal views, remains a classic. The innumerable modern studies include J. Lemaître, Chateaubriand (Paris, 1912), G. Collas and others, Chateaubriand: Le Livre du Centenaire (ibid. [1949]; summarizing articles), P. Moreau, Chateaubriand, l'homme et l'oeuvre (ibid., 1956), and G. D. Painter, Chateaubriand: A Biography, 1 (London, 1977 [no more pub.]). G. Bertrin, La Sincérité religieuse de Chateaubriand (1900); V. Giraud, Le Christianisme de Chateaubriand (2 vols., 1925–8). P. Moreau in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 519–21.

Chaucer, Geoffrey (1343/4–1400), English poet. He was the son of a London merchant. After serving as a page to Elizabeth de Burgh, countess of Ulster, he fought in France and was captured at 'Retters'. Ransomed by the King, he afterwards entered his service, and during the next 30 years was employed in various diplomatic missions. Under Richard II he was Clerk of the Works at Windsor and *Westminster.

The Canterbury Tales were apparently begun c.1387 and remained unfinished at the time of Chaucer's death. *Boethius' De Consolatione Philosophiae, which Chaucer translated into English, was the major influence on his religious thinking; it stimulated his engagement with problems of free will, chance, destiny, and mutability in Troilus and Criseyde, and gave a *Stoic colouring to the Canterbury Tales. In the Church as an institution Chaucer apparently has little interest; the anti-ecclesiastical satire in the General Prologue to the Canterbury Tales is traditional in content and is not motivated by any reforming drive. It is in the saints' legends, and the Clerk's Tale of patient Griselda, that his most profound religious vision of the power of suffering is to be found.

The Canterbury Tales was pr. by W. *Caxton in 1477. Crit. edns. of Chaucer's Works by W. W. Skeat (7 vols., London, 1894–7) and F. N. Robinson (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1933; 2nd edn., 1957) with notes and bibl. Modern edn. of Troilus and Criseyde by B. A. Windeatt (London, 1984). M. M. Crow and C. C. Olson (eds.), Chaucer Life-Records (Oxford, 1966). Modern Life by M. Chute (London, 1951). Studies by T. R. Lounsbury (3 vols., London, 1892), R. K. Root (ibid., 1906), G. L. Kittredge (Cambridge, Mass., 1915), J. M. Manly (New York, 1926), G. K. *Chesterton (London, 1932), J. Livingstone Lowes (ibid., 1934), D. S. Brewer (ibid., 1953), and M. Bowden (ibid., 1965). J. M. Manly and E. Rickert, The Text of the Canterbury Tales (3 vols., Chicago, 1940); W. F. Bryan and G. Dempster (eds.), Sources and Analogues of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (Chicago, 1941; London, 1958). W. Clemen, Chaucers frühe Dichtung (1963; Eng. tr., 1963). D. W. Robertson, Jun., A Preface to Chaucer (Princeton, NJ, and London, 1963). C. Muscatine, Chaucer and the French Tradition (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1957). E. Wagenknecht (ed.), Chaucer: Modern Essays in Criticism (New York, 1959). R. J. Schoeck and J. Taylor (eds.), Chaucer Criticism (2 vols., Notre Dame, Ind., 1960–1); R. O. Payne, The Key of Remembrance: A Study of Chaucer's Poetics (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1963); J. Mann, Chaucer and Medieval Estates Satire: The Literature of Social Classes and the General Prologue to the Canterbury Tales (Cambridge, 1973). J. D. Burnley, Chaucer's Language and the Philosophers' Tradition (ibid., 1979). D. Brewer (ed.), Chaucer: The Critical Heritage (2 vols., 1978 [repr. material dating from 1385 to 1933]). H. S. Bennett, Chaucer and the Fifteenth Century (Oxford History of English Literature, 2; 1947), esp. pp. 1–95. E. P. Hammond, Chaucer: A Bibliographical Manual (New York, 1908); D. D. Griffith, Bibliography of Chaucer, 1908–1953 (Seattle, 1955); W. R. Crawford, Bibliography of Chaucer, 1954–63 [1967]; L. Y. Baird, A Bibliography of Chaucer, 1964–1973 (Boston, 1977); annual bibl. in Studies in the Age of Chaucer (Norman, Okla., 1979 ff.).

Chelsea, Councils of. A series of synods representing the Church of all England S. of the Humber, held in Chelsea (then quite separate from London) in the late 8th and first quarter of the 9th cent.; many of the attested meetings were also attended by the King of the Mercians. Records survive of several meetings held during this period, but the most important are those of 787 and 816. The former witnessed the elevation of *Lichfield to archiepiscopal status. The latter, besides dealing with matters of ecclesiastical organization, affirmed and extended episcopal authority over monasteries; it led to a protracted dispute between Wulfred, Abp. of *Canterbury (805–32), and Cenwulf, King of Mercia (796–821).

Acts of the 816 Council in A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 3 (1871), pp. 579–84. E. B. Fryde and others (eds.), Handbook of British Chronology (Royal Historical Society Guides and Handbooks, 2; 3rd edn., 1986), pp. 583–9. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), pp. 175–80; C. Cubitt, Anglo-Saxon Church Councils c.650–c.850 [1995], pp. 191–203 (both on the 816 Council).

Cheltenham List. See MOMMSEN CATALOGUE.

Chemnitz, Martin (1522–86), *Lutheran theologian. After lecturing for a short time in the philosophical faculty at *Wittenberg, where in 1553 he expounded the Loci Communes of P. *Melanchthon, Chemnitz left for Brunswick in 1554. Here he spent the rest of his life in a pastoral capacity, refusing the many important appointments offered him. In his Repetitio sanae doctrinae de vera praesentia (1561) he defended the Lutheran doctrine of the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist, including Luther's teaching on ubiquity, though he deprecated further elaboration as to the mode of the presence; and in his Examen concilii Tridentini (1565–73) he attacked the Council of *Trent. He also wrote an important doctrinal work on the person of Christ, De Duabus Naturis in Christo (1570), and took a leading part in drawing up the Formula of *Concord (q.v.). He was one of the main influences in consolidating Lutheran doctrine and practice in the generation following Luther's death. His Loci Theologici (pub. 1591), based on his lectures, ably defend a mainly Melanchthonian theology.

Eng. tr. of his Examen concilii Tridentini by F. Kramer (4 vols., St Louis, 1971–86). C. G. H. Lentz, Dr. Martin Kemnitz (Gotha, 1866); H. Hachfeld, Martin Chemnitz nach seinem Leben und Wirken (Leipzig, 1867); R. Mumm, Die Polemik des M. Chemnitz gegen das Konzil von Trient (1905). G. Noth, 'Peccata Contra Conscientiam', in F. Hübner (ed.), Gedenkschrift für D. Werner Elert (1955), pp. 211–19. E. F. Klug, From Luther to Chemnitz on Scripture and the Word (Grand Rapids [1971]), pp. 115–248. T. Mahlmann in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 714–21, with extensive bibl.

Cherubicon (Gk. χερουβικόν), also 'The Cherubic Hymn'. In the E. Church, a hymn sung at the *Great Entrance by the choir, in which the worshippers are described as the mystical representatives of the *Cherubim. It is often set to very elaborate music. On *Maundy Thursday and *Holy Saturday other texts are used instead of the Cherubicon.

Cherubim. This Heb. word, which is plural in form, denotes the second of the nine orders of *angels. In the OT they appear as God's attendants, e.g. they guard His presence from profanity (Gen. 3: 24, Ezek. 28: 14, etc.), and representations of them were set up in *Solomon's *Temple at *Jerusalem, overshadowing the *Ark (cf. Ex. 25: 18–22). It is possible that Assyrian thought exercised some influence on Jewish conceptions of the Cherubim. In Christian angelology they have usually been grouped with the Thrones and the *Seraphim, though in the earliest times they were not included in the angelic lists (which were based on Eph. 1: 21 and Col. 1: 16).

P. Dhorme, OP, and L. H. Vincent, OP, 'Les Chérubins', R. Bibl. 35 (1926), pp. 328–58 and 481–95. W. F. Albright, 'What were the Cherubim?', Biblical Archaeologist, 1 (1938), pp. 1–3; M. Haran, 'The Ark and the Cherubim: Their Symbolic Significance in Biblical Ritual', Israel Exploration Journal, 9 (1959), pp. 30–8, 89–94; R. de Vaux, OP, 'Les Chérubins et l'Arche d'Alliance. Les Spinx gardiens et les Trônes divins dans l'Ancien Orient', Mélanges de l'Université Saint-Joseph, 37 (Beirut, 1960–1), pp. 91–124. J. Trinquet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 161–86, s.v. 'Kerub, Kerubim'. On their representation in art, K. Künstle, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst, 1 (1928), pp. 245 f.

Chester. The city was perhaps the seat of the bishops of the kingdom of Mercia; but in the Middle Ages it ceased to be a bishopric, except between 1075 and *c.*1100, when the present church of St John Baptist served as the cathedral. The see was refounded in 1541 by *Henry VIII, who made the church of the dissolved abbey of St *Werburg the cathedral, under a new dedication to Christ and the BVM, and Chester has remained a bishopric ever since. In 1542 the diocese was transferred from the province of *Canterbury to that of *York; it was greatly reduced in size during the 19th cent.

R. C. Christie (ed.), Annales Cestrienses; or, Chronicle of the Abbey of S. Werburg, at Chester (The Record Society for the Publication of Original Documents relating to Lancashire and Cheshire, 14; 1886). T. and T. C. Hughes (eds.), The Registers of Chester Cathedral, 1687–1812 (Parish Record Society, 1904). J. Tait (ed.), The Chartulary or Register of the Abbey of St Werburgh, Chester (Chetham Society, 79 and 82; 1920–3). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum (1819 edn.), pp. 370–401. R. V. H. Burne, Chester Cathedral from its Founding by Henry VIII to the Accession of Queen Victoria (1958); id., The Monks of Chester: The History of St Werburgh's Abbey (1962). S. J. Lander and others in VCH, Chester, 3, ed. B. E. Harris (1980), pp. 1–87 on the Pre-Reformation Church and the diocese; pp. 88–123 on RCs and Protestant Nonconformists; A. J. Kettle, ibid., pp. 124–87, on the religious houses, incl. pp. 132–46 on the abbey; and B. E. Harris, ibid., pp. 188–95, on the cathedral. F. [L. M.] Bennett, Chester Cathedral (Chester [1925]). H. Dauphin, OSB, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 641–5, s.v. See also bibl. to WERBURG, ST.

Chester Beatty Papyri. A group of papyrus codices, most of which were acquired in 1931 by A. Chester Beatty (d. 1968); they may have formed part of the same library as the *Bodmer papyri, in which case they are likely to have been found in Panopolis (Akhmîm) rather than in the Fayûm. Though they are all imperfect, several are of substantial size. They include (1) 50 leaves (of an original 66) of Genesis, 4th cent.; (2) 27 leaves (out of 84) of Genesis, 3rd cent.; (3) 50 leaves (out of 108) of Numbers and Deuteronomy, early 2nd cent.; (4) 1½ leaves of Ecclesiasticus, 4th cent.; (5) portions of 33 leaves (out of 104) of Isaiah, 3rd cent.; (6) two small fragments of Jeremiah, 2nd cent.; (7) 50 leaves (out of 118) of Ezekiel, Daniel, and Esther, 3rd cent.; (8) portions of 30 leaves (out of 220) of the Gospels and Acts, early 3rd cent.; (9) 86 leaves (out of 99) of the Pauline epistles, early 3rd cent.; (10) 10 leaves (out of 32) of Revelation, 3rd cent.; (11) 8 leaves containing the last 11 chapters of the apocryphal Book, 1 *Enoch, and 6 containing part of the work now known as the 'Peri Pascha' by *Melito, Bp. of Sardis, 4th cent.; (12) parts of 7 leaves of the Acts of *Phileas. Of the papyri never in Chester Beatty's possession, most of the Ezekiel is at Princeton University, and 30 leaves of St Paul, with small fragments of other MSS, at Michigan University. The age of these papyri makes them very valuable evidence for the text of the Greek Bible, since they are a century or more older than the earliest vellum MSS. They are preserved in the Chester Beatty Library in Dublin.

Biblical papyri ed. by F. G. Kenyon, 8 fascs. + parallel series of plates (London and Dublin, 1933–58). Items (1) and (2) above (*P*961 and *P*962) also ed. A. Pietersma (American Studies in Papyrology, 16; 1977). On item (9) above (*P*46), also H. A. Sanders, A Third-Century Papyrus Codex of the Epistles of St Paul (University of Michigan Studies, Hum. Series, no. 38; 1935); on item (7) above (*P*967), A. C. Johnson, H. S. Gehman, and E. S. Kase, The John H. Scheide Biblical Papyri: Ezekiel (Princeton University Studies in Papyrology, 1938); on item (11), C. Bonner and H. C. Youtie, The Last Chapters of Enoch in Greek (Studies and Documents, 8; 1937); on item (12) A. Pietersma, The Acts of Phileas (Cahiers d'Orientalisme, 7; 1984). The large and scattered lit., mainly in periodicals, is summarized by E. Vogt and A. Calderini in EC 2 (1949), cols. 1113–15, s.v. 'Beatty, Chester, Papyri'.

Chesterton, Gilbert Keith (1874–1936), poet and essayist. After beginning a course of training in art in 1891, he abandoned it for journalism. His defence of orthodoxy and conventionality in an individual and unconventional style soon established his literary reputation. Among those of his early works which were directly or indirectly concerned with religious topics, the best known are Heretics (1905) and Orthodoxy (1908). His poems include the hymn 'O God of earth and altar'. In his novels there is less of religious interest, though his appreciation of the RC clergy appears in the 'Father Brown' stories. In 1922 he left the C of E for the RC Church; but the change of allegiance had little effect on his style or outlook. His Autobiography (1936) gives an illuminating picture of literary-religious circles from *c.*1895 to his death.

Collected Works, ed. D. Dooley (San Francisco, 1986 ff.). Lives by M. Ward (London, 1944; with a further study, Return to Chesterton, 1952), D. Barker (London, 1973), and A. S. Dale (Grand Rapids [1982]). C. Hollis, The Mind of Chesterton (1970). D. J. Conlon (ed.), G. K. Chesterton: A Half Century of Views (Oxford and New York, 1987). J. Sullivan, G. K. Chesterton: A Bibliography (1958; with suppl., 1968). M. Ward in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 171–5.

Chevetogne. The *Benedictine community now at Chevetogne in Belgium was founded in 1925 at Amay-sur-Meuse by L. *Beauduin in response to Pope *Pius XI's request that Benedictines should pray for Christian unity (Equidem verba, 21 March 1924). It moved to Chevetogne in 1939. The monks seek to establish closer relations between RC and other Churches, esp. Orthodox communities; they aim at corporate reconciliation rather than individual conversions or *Uniat status. The community is divided into two groups, the Latin and the Eastern, the one following the W. rite, the other the E. (Greek and Slavonic). Since 1926 it has published Irénikon.

G. [W. S.] Curtis, CR, Paul Couturier and Unity in Christ (1964), pp. 44–51. S. A. Quitslund, Beauduin (New York [1973]), esp. pp. 94–145. E. Lanne, OSB, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 880–2, s.v. See also other works in bibl. to BEAUDUIN, L.

Cheyne, Thomas Kelly (1841–1915), OT scholar and critic. He was the grandson of T. H. *Horne. Educated at Worcester College, Oxford, he was successively vice-principal of St Edmund Hall (1864), Fellow of Balliol (1868), rector of Tendring, Essex (1880), and Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture at Oxford (1885–1908). In 1884 he became a member of the OT Company engaged on the *Revised Version. Studies at Göttingen under H. G. A. *Ewald in 1862 having led him to a critical view of the OT, he upheld as early as 1871 the 'documentary hypothesis' of Pentateuchal sources. His mind, however, went through many phases. His pastoral work at Tendring lent his writings an evangelical and homiletic colour for some years. Later he became highly, and finally recklessly, unconventional in his biblical criticism and ideas. Among his chief writings are Prophecies of Isaiah (1880–1), Hosea (1884), Job and Solomon (1887), Book of Psalms (1888), and Founders of Old Testament Criticism (1893). The chief production of his last period, the Encyclopaedia Biblica (4 vols., 1899–1903), which he edited in conjunction with J. Sutherland Black, reflects the combination of daring and originality which marked his later work.

Much autobiographical material is to be found in the prefaces to many of his books. R. H. *Charles in Proceedings of the British Academy (1915–16), pp. 545–51. A. S. *Peake in DNB, 1912 21, pp. 119 f.

Chicago–Lambeth Articles. See LAMBETH QUADRILATERAL.

Chichele, Henry (?1362–1443), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated under the patronage of *William of Wykeham at Winchester and New College, Oxford, he was ordained priest in 1396. His abilities as a lawyer and diplomat soon attracted the attention of both the King and the Pope, and he became Bp. of *St Davids in 1408 and Abp. of Canterbury in 1414. In 1409 he was one of the English delegates to the Council of *Pisa. When Henry V left England for the French wars in 1414, Chichele was among those appointed to assist the Duke of Bedford in administering the kingdom. He was one of the architects of the pastoral response to the *Lollard challenge undertaken by Henry V's government, and his determined resistance to *Martin V's assault on the *Provisors legislation earned him the humiliation of seeing his legatine powers suspended and the Bp. of *Winchester and the Abp. of *York created cardinals and given precedence over him. The traditional view that he encouraged the war with France to divert attention from abuses in the Church is without contemporary support. His tenacity and endurance made the English Church more independent and improved the quality of its pastoral care. His concern for learning is attested by his foundation of the college of All Souls at Oxford (1438).

The Register of Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury 1414–1443, ed. E. F. Jacob and H. C. Johnson (*Canterbury and York Society, 42, 45, 46, and 47; 1937–47; also pub. separately, 4 vols., 1938–47). E. F. Jacob, Archbishop Henry Chichele (1967). R. G. Davies, 'Martin V and the English Episcopate, with Particular Reference to his Campaign for the Repeal of the Statute of Provisors', EHR 92 (1977), pp. 309–44. BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 410–12.

Chichester. A town on the site of the city of Regnum. The name is held to be derived from the Saxon, Cissa (OE Cissaceaster, i.e. 'Cissa's camp'), one of the three sons of Aelle (alleged founder of the kingdom of Sussex in the last quarter of the 5th cent.). The see, which was founded at Selsey by St *Wilfrid during his exile from *York, was transferred to Chichester in accordance with a decree of the Council of London of 1075. Its bishops have included St *Richard (1245–53), L. *Andrewes (1605–9), R. *Montagu (1628–38), B. *Duppa (1638–41), Henry King, poet and friend of J. *Donne (1642–69), John Lake, the *Nonjuror (1685–9), and G. K. A. *Bell (1929–58). The present diocese is conterminous with E. and W. Sussex. The cathedral was built in the 12th–13th cents. A Roman inscription, the 'Pudens Stone', which is preserved outside the Town Hall, records the gift of land for a (pagan) temple by a Pudens, son of Pudentinus, whom some have attempted to identify with the Pudens of 2 Tim. 4: 21.

Three surviving medieval episcopal registers, with other primary material, incl. muniments of the Dean and Chapter, are described in Historical Manuscripts Commission: Report of Manuscripts in Various Collections, 1 (1901), pp. 177–204. H. Mayr-Harting (ed.), The Acta of the Bishops of Chichester, 1075–1207 (Canterbury and York Society, pt. 130; 1964). C. Deedes (ed.), The Episcopal Register of Robert Rede . . ., Lord Bishop of Chichester, 1397–1415 (Sussex Record Society, 8 and 11; 1908–

10); id. (ed.), 'Extracts from the Episcopal Register of Richard Praty, S.T.P., Lord Bishop of Chichester, 1438–1445', Sussex Record Society, 4 (1905), pp. 83–236. The episcopal registers from 1478 are continuous. F. G. Bennett, R. H. Codrington, and C. Deedes (eds.), Statutes and Constitutions of the Cathedral Church of Chichester (Chichester, 1904); W. D. Peckham (ed.), The Acts of the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Chichester, 1472–1544 (The White Book) (Sussex Record Society, 52; 1952); id. (ed.), The Acts of the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Chichester, 1542–1642 (ibid., 58; 1959 [1960]); id. (ed.), The Chartulary of the High Church of Chichester (ibid., 46; 1944). A. S. Duncan-Jones (ed.), The Chichester Customary (modern observances; *Alcuin Club Collections, 36; 1948). W. R. W. Stephens, Memorials of the South Sussex See and Cathedral Church of Chichester (1876). T. G. Willis, Records of Chichester (1928), pp. 149–220. A. S. Duncan-Jones, The Story of Chichester Cathedral [1933]. M. Hobbs (ed.), Chichester Cathedral: A Historical Survey (Chichester, 1994). W. H. Godfrey and J. W. Bloe in L. F. Salzman (ed.), VCH, Sussex, 3 (1935), pp. 105–60. J. Warrillow in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 665–74, s.v.

Childermas. An old English name for (1) the Feast of the *Holy Innocents (28 Dec.); (2) the day of the week throughout the year on which that feast fell, widely held to be a day of ill omen.

Children, Song of the Three. See SONG OF THE THREE CHILDREN.

Children's Crusade (1212). A popular movement which arose spontaneously, and with little support or sympathy from the clergy, with the intention of recovering *Jerusalem for Christian rule. Marching from *Cologne, the main party reached Genoa, but went no further, and a French party perhaps never intended to travel to the Holy Land. The details are unclear, and the movement was embellished in later legends. It is very possible that the so-called 'children' were in reality servants, shepherds, and others outside the main structures of organized society. In any event, the episode is a striking illustration of the extent of sympathy for the crusading ideal prevalent in Europe in the early 13th cent.

The contemporary evidence, and recent discussions, are summarized in P. Raedts, 'The Children's Crusade of 1212', Journal of Medieval History, 3 (1977), pp. 279–323. See also general works on the CRUSADES.

Chile, Christianity in. The Spanish invasion of Chile, which began in 1535, was followed by the arrival of the first missionary priest in 1541 and the establishment of the first RC diocese (Santiago) 20 years later. The conversion of the country, carried out initially by the *Franciscan friars and the *Jesuits, was not, however, completed until the end of the 17th cent. In 1818 independence from Spain was secured, but the RC Church continued to be 'protected' and state-subsidized, though other religions were tolerated; in 1925 Church and State were officially separated, but the RC Church is still an important moral and political force in the country. Some 82 per cent of the 11 million population are nominally RC, but Mass attendance declined rapidly after 1960 and is now only about 15 per cent. There are five archdioceses, 17 dioceses, and two apostolic vicarates, with just over 2,000 priests, two-thirds of whom are members of religious orders, and 5,000 nuns. In recent years a large number of lay *catechists have been trained. The first Protestant missionary, from the *British and Foreign Bible Society, arrived in 1821. Later in the 19th cent. *Methodist and *Presbyterian missionaries came from the USA and *Lutherans and *Baptists from Germany. *Pentecostal Churches have grown phenomenally since the 1960s and have nearly 2 million members. Non-Pentecostal Protestants form about 2 per cent of the population, the largest group being the *Seventh-day Adventists. There are just over 4,000 Anglicans in the diocese of Chile.

C. S. Cotapos, Historia eclesiástica de Chile (Santiago, 1925), with bibl. La provincia eclesiástica chilena: Erección de sus obispados y división en parroquias (Freiburg i.B., 1895). R. Poblete, La Iglesia en Chile: Estructuras eclesiásticas (Estudios Socio-Religiosos Latino-Americanos, 6; Fribourg, Switzerland, Bogotá, and Madrid, 1962). F. Enrich, SJ, Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en Chile (2 vols. only [down to 1822], Barcelona, 1891). R. Lagos, OFM, Historia de las misiones del colegio de Chillán (Barcelona, 1908). P. Gazulla, Los primeros mercedarios en Chile, 1536–1600 (Santiago, 1918). B. H. Smith, The Church and Politics in Chile: Challenges to Modern Catholicism (Princeton, NJ [1982]). R. Muñoz, Nueva Conciencia de la Iglesia en América Latina (Santiago, 1973; Salamanca, 1974), passim. T. [R.] Beeson and J. Pearce, A Vision of Hope: The Churches and Change in Latin America (1984), pp. 123–52, esp. pp. 142–52. J. A. de Ramón Folch in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 583–7.

chiliasm (Gk. χίλιοι, 'a thousand'). Another name for *Millenarianism, the theory that Christ will return to earth and reign here for a thousand years before the final consummation of all things. The belief is based on an interpretation of Rev. 20: 1–5.

Chillingworth, William (1602–44), Anglican divine. A scholar (1618) and fellow (1628) of Trinity College, Oxford, he first attracted attention when he engaged a Jesuit, 'John *Fisher', in controversy. As a result of this incident, Chillingworth was converted to the RC Church, and went to *Douai in 1630. In the following year, however, he returned to England, and in 1634 again declared himself a Protestant. His best known work was his Religion of Protestants a Safe Way to Salvation (1638), written as his contribution to a controversy raging between a Jesuit, Knott, and the Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, on the subject of whether Protestants could be saved. On the plea that 'the Bible only is the religion of Protestants', he defended the rights of reason and free inquiry in doctrinal matters, and denied that any Church has the gift of infallibility. He affirmed that he belonged to the C of E, because he considered her doctrine sufficiently pure to ensure salvation, and that adequate grounds were wanting to warrant disturbing the 16th-cent. settlement. During the Civil War he was a chaplain in the Royalist army, and was captured in 1643. His death in captivity at *Chichester was said to have been hastened by the efforts of the other side to convert him.

The collected edns. of Chillingworth's Works are numbered acc. to the edns. of The Religion of Protestants a Safe Way to Salvation, the first to bear the title The Works of William Chillingworth being '7th edn.', London, 1719. Life by T. Birch, prefixed to 10th edn., London, 1742, pp. ii–viii. P. Des Maizeaux, An Historical and Critical Account of the Life and Writings of Wm. Chillingworth (1725; ed. J. Nichols, 1863). R. R. Orr, Reason and Authority: The Thought of William Chillingworth (Oxford, 1967). H. Trevor-Roper, Catholics, Anglicans and Puritans: Seventeenth Century chimere. A gown without sleeves, worn by Anglican bishops and by doctors of divinity. It was traditionally made of silk or satin, but other materials are now sometimes used. It perhaps derives from the tabard, a medieval upper garment. It is frequently worn at liturgical functions, but also constitutes part of episcopal full dress on important civil occasions, and of the full academic dress of those entitled to wear it. It is incorrect to wear a chimere under a vestment or cope.

Essays (1987), no. 4 ('The Great Tew Circle'), pp. 166–230, esp. pp. 166–75, 186–92, 199–209. M. *Creighton in DNB 10 (1887), pp. 252–7.

China, Christianity in. Legend has it that St *Thomas the Apostle preached in China as well as in India, but there is no historical evidence of this. The *Sigan-Fu stone, dated AD 781, shows that *Church of the East missionaries reached China in the 7th cent. Syriac Christianity survived till the 14th cent. The first western mission was that of John of Monte Corvino (*c.*1294). At first successful, it was brought to an end by the advent of the Ming dynasty in 1368. The celebrated mission of the *Jesuits began in 1582 with the arrival of Michele Ruggieri and Matteo *Ricci. By their skill in mathematics and astronomy, which won them the favour of influential scholars and officials, and their policy of retaining traditional Chinese ceremonies and religious terms, the Jesuits were able to establish themselves and build up a Chinese Christian community. *Franciscan, *Dominican, and other RC missionaries came in the 17th cent. Hostility to the Jesuits' method of *accommodation gave rise to the prolonged and damaging Rites Controversy, issuing in their condemnation by *Clement XI and other 18th-cent. Popes. The assertion of Papal authority in China antagonized the Emperor. This and other causes led to persecutions and to imperial decrees banning Christianity. Though not entirely stamped out, it fell into decay.

The modern missionary movement of the 19th cent., RC and Protestant, was faced by the isolationist policy of the Manchu dynasty, which sought to keep the country closed to foreigners. Robert *Morrison, the first Protestant missionary, who arrived in 1807 at Canton, where the East India Company had a precarious footing, owed his continuance there to his employment as translator by the Company. In his free time he translated the Bible and wrote a dictionary and other works. But the main development of modern missions came after the period 1839–65, during which the western powers by military action and forced treaties secured for themselves rights of residence and to some extent jurisdiction in China. This did indeed open the country to Christian missions, but the fact that they came in the wake of such action gave them an association with foreign power which was to prove a heavy liability. Once it had become possible for missionaries not only to reside at 'treaty ports' but to penetrate into the interior also, missions of all the principal denominations of Europe and America spread to every province, founding churches, schools, and hospitals. The largest single organization was the undenominational *China Inland Mission (1865). By 1895 Protestant Chinese Christians numbered over 40,000, Roman Catholics over 580,000. From time to time there were violent outbursts of anti-foreign feeling, the worst being the Boxer rising in 1900, in which thousands of Chinese Christians and many missionaries were killed.

Revolutions and wars have dominated the history of China in the 20th cent. from the overthrow of the old imperial regime in 1911 to the coming of the Communists to power in 1949, a period which included the Japanese invasion and occupation of a large part of the country, 1937–45. In spite of the turmoil Christian work went on. The period up to 1939 was notable for the development of higher education and of church organization, and for the emergence and increasing importance of Chinese leaders, such as Cheng Ching Yi and Timothy Tinfang Lew among the Protestants. In the RC Church six Chinese bishops were consecrated in 1926. The influence of Christianity seemed to be on the increase until the advent of the Communist regime.

Thereafter Christian institutions were taken over by the state, many churches were closed, and Christians became subject to pressure to make them conform to the requirements of a Communist regime. Those considered hostile to it were persecuted. Missionaries were denounced as agents of western imperialism, and when it became clear that their presence could only embarrass and even endanger local Christians, it was judged best that they should withdraw. By the end of 1952 very few remained. It was the policy of the new rulers to sever all links between the Chinese Church and the West, and to bring it under control. For this purpose they encouraged the organization among Chinese Christians of the 'Three-Self Patriotic Movement' (Three-Self refers to the ideal of a self-supporting, self-governing, and self-propagating Church). In 1957 RCs were forced to sever relations with Rome. During the Cultural Revolution (1966) all religion (not only Christianity) was virtually outlawed and driven underground. Some church buildings were used for other purposes, but many were merely closed and left undamaged. In 1979 churches began to reopen and in the 1980s restrictions on religious activities were reduced. Theological seminaries received students and Bibles and other literature were produced. International links were restored, although the breach with Rome was not mended and RCs are still divided between those loyal to the Vatican and those prepared to work within autonomous structures. In the 1980s even the tiny Orthodox community (mainly Russian) reopened churches in Urumqui in NW China. After the massacre in Beijing in June 1989 a more restrictive atmosphere prevailed, but on the other hand Christianity represented a dynamic and growing force which appealed to increasing numbers of people disillusioned with Marxism.

K. S. Latourette, A History of Christian Missions in China (1929), with full bibl., pp. 847–99; B. Whyte, Unfinished Encounter: China and Christianity (1988). M. Huc, Le Christianisme en Chine, en Tartarie et au Thibet (4 vols., bound in 2, 1857–8; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1857–8); A. Launay, Histoire des missions de Chine (3 vols., 1903–8). P. M. D'Elia, SJ, The Catholic Missions in China (Shanghai, 1934); [E.] C. Cary-Elwes, China and the Cross: Studies in Missionary History (1957); J. Gernet, Chine et christianisme (1982; Eng. tr., Cambridge, 1985). J. de Moidrey, SJ, La Hiérarchie catholique en Chine, en Corée et au Japon (Variétés sinologiques, 38; Shanghai, 1914), esp. pp. 1–158; L. Pfister, SJ, Notices biographiques et bibliographiques sur les Jésuites de l'ancienne mission de Chine, 1552–1773 (ibid., 59 and 60; 1932–4). C. E. Ronan, SJ, and B. B. C. Oh (eds.), East Meets West: The Jesuits in China 1582–1773 (Chicago [1988]); A. C. Ross, A Vision Betrayed: The Jesuits in Japan and China 1542–1742 (Edinburgh [1994]), pp. 6–12 and 118–207. J. M. Gonzáles, OP, Historia de las Misiones Dominicanas de China (5 vols., 1955–67). J.-P. Wiest, Maryknoll in China: A History, 1918–1955 (Armonk, NY, and London [1988]).

F. Bontinck, CICM, La Lutte autour de la liturgie chinoise aux XVII^e et XVIII^e siècles (Publications de l'Université Lovanium de Léopoldville, 1962). H. R. Williamson, British Baptists in China, 1845–1952 (1957). J. Richter, Allgemeine evangelische Missionsgeschichte, 4, Das Werden der christlichen Kirche in China (1928). S. W. Barnett and J. K. Fairbank (eds.), Christianity in China: Early Protestant Missionary Writings (Harvard Studies in American–East Asian Relations, 9; Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1985). P. Wickeri, Seeking the Common Ground: Protestant Christianity, the Three-Self Movement, and China's United Front (Maryknoll, NY, 1988). D. E. MacInnis, Religion in China Today: Policy and Practice (Maryknoll, NY, 1989), esp. pp. 263–362. G. Hood, Neither Bang nor Whimper: The End of a Missionary Era in China (Singapore and London [1991]). A. Hunter and K.-K. Chan, Protestantism in Contemporary China (Cambridge, 1993). Latourette, 6, pp. 253–363, and 7, pp. 238–78. J. Krahl in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 591–602, s.v., with bibl.

China Inland Mission (CIM). An interdenominational and international mission to the interior of *China, founded by J. H. *Taylor in 1865. After the establishment of a Communist regime, the Mission withdrew from China in 1951 and relocated its work in E. Asia. In 1965 it was renamed the '*Overseas Missionary Fellowship'. In China the work was primarily evangelistic, though it had a certain number of schools and hospitals in its care.

M. Broomhall, The Jubilee Story of the China Inland Mission [1915]. P. Thompson, D. E. Hoste: . . . Hudson Taylor's Successor as General Director of the China Inland Mission, 1900–1935 [c.1947]. A. J. Broomhall, Hudson Taylor & China's Open Century (7 vols., 1981–9). See also bibl. to TAYLOR, HUDSON.

choir (architectural). A term generally used to describe the part of a church containing the seats of the clergy. In the Roman *basilicas these seats at first were set in a semi-circle round the *apse and behind the altar. Later they were placed in a railed-off space within the nave, or body of the church, and at its eastern end. Later still, in various parts of Christendom, *chancels replaced apses; they were much larger, and rectangular in shape, and the choir was included within the chancel, at its western end. The term 'ritual choir' is sometimes used for the seats of the clergy when these do not occupy the (architectural) choir of the church.

choir (musical). A body of singers assisting at Divine Service. As early as the 4th cent. such bodies existed, made up of clerks in *minor orders and of boys, and, by the time of St *Gregory the Great (d. 604), the *Schola Cantorum seems to have been fully established. In the Middle Ages the choirs of cathedrals and monasteries were almost the only places where music of any kind was taught, and there, until a conventional notation came in *c.*1100, instruction was given orally. About the 12th cent. polyphony began to supplement the liturgical plainchant of the Church, and lay singers to augment church choirs. In all sections of W. Christendom this change reached its fullest development in the 16th–18th cents., when church music was at its most elaborate and florid, and the singers often skilled professionals. It also became customary in this period to set the singers in a gallery, often at the W. end. The *Oxford Movement in the C of E and the *Liturgical Movement among RCs have tended to restore the choir to the *chancel, though the 1964 RC legislation laid down that it should be placed where it could best assist the people to sing their parts. This ruling confirmed the various efforts that have been made in the 20th cent. to give the congregation fuller scope for taking part in the music of the services. In recent years many churches have supplemented or replaced choirs by more informal 'music groups' utilizing both singers and instrumentalists. Mixed choirs of both sexes, though long familiar among Nonconformists, have in the 20th cent. become increasingly common in Anglican and RC churches. The traditional dress of singers is the *surplice, worn over the *cassock, though ordinary lay clothes are sometimes worn.

choir sisters. Nuns who are under obligation to attend all choir *offices, as contrasted with lay sisters, who, though living under rule, attend only certain services. The Second *Vatican Council's Decree on the Appropriate Renewal of the Religious Life (1965) ordered that normally there should be only one class of sisters, so that the distinction is now obsolete in nearly all RC orders. See also LAY BROTHER, LAY SISTER.

chorepiscopus (Gk. χωρεπίσκοπος; also ἐπίσκοπος τῶν ἀγρῶν). In the early Church, a bishop of a country district in full episcopal orders. The powers which he could exercise were severely restricted (cf. Conc. *Ancyr. can. 13; Conc. *Antioch. can. 10). He could ordain only to the lower ranks of the clergy and was wholly subject to the authority of his diocesan. Such chorepiscopi were very numerous in the 4th cent., esp. in Asia Minor. At the Council of *Nicaea 15 signed in their own right. But the appointment of further chorepiscopi was forbidden by the Council of *Laodicea (can. 57), which ordered that their place be taken by 'periodeutai', i.e. visiting priests (cf. Conc. *Sard. can. 6, which forbids the appointment of bishops to tiny places so that the name of bishop shall not be cheapened). At the Council of *Chalcedon (451) they signed only as representatives of their diocesans. In the E. their functions were progressively restricted to those of a modern *archdeacon, and by the 13th cent. they had disappeared. As an honorary title the word survives to the present day in the Orthodox and *Uniat Patriarchates of Antioch.

In the W. they are first mentioned in 439 at the Council of Riez. They were numerous in missionary districts in Germany in the 8th cent., but became unpopular in the 9th when they sought to extend their authority, and finally disappeared in the 12th cent. Their administrative authority passed to the archdeacon; their liturgical functions were continued by mitred abbots.

D. *Petavius, 'De Chorepiscopis', append. to Haer. 69, in his ed. of *Epiphanius, Opera (1622, 2, pp. 276–82; J. P. Migne, PG 42. 1045–54). H. Bergère, Étude historique sur les chorévêques (thesis, Paris; 1905); Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 2; 1908), pp. 1197–237 ('La Législation conciliaire relative aux chorévêques'); T. Gottlob, Der abendländische Chorepiskopat (Kanonistische Studien und Texte, 1; 1928). H. *Leclercq in DACL 3 (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 1423–52, s.v. 'Chorévêques'; J. Leclef, OSB, in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 686–95, s.v. 'Chorévêque'; E. Kirsten in RAC 2 (1954), cols. 1105–14; R. Kottje in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 2 (1983), cols. 1884–6, both s.v. 'Chorbischof'.

chrism (Gk. χρῖσμα, from χρίω, 'anoint'; but in Greek it is usually called μύρον). A mixture of olive oil and balsam, used in the ritual of the Greek and Latin Churches. The use of special oils for liturgical functions such as the consecration of priests and kings was familiar in the OT. The practice was taken over by the early Church, and its use in the rites of Christian initiation is attested by several early Fathers, e.g. *Tertullian, St *Ambrose, and *Theodoret. St *Cyril of Jerusalem refers to it as 'the mystic chrism' (τὸ μυστικὸν χρῖσμα), and the Council of *Laodicea as 'holy chrism'. For St Augustine the 'sacrament of chrism' refers to the inward unity of the Church, which is the bond of love, while the Apostolic Constitutions call chrism 'the strength of confessors', and St *Gregory the Great speaks of the 'chrism of salvation'. The strength-giving richness of the oil and the fragrance of the balsam, representing the fullness of sacramental grace and the gifts of the Holy Spirit as well as the sweetness of Christian virtue, made it a favourite subject of allegorical interpretation to *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite and later writers. The early Schoolmen held that the chrism was a purely ecclesiastical institution, but St *Thomas Aquinas and Duns Scotus both teach that its liturgical use, though not mentioned in the NT, goes back to Christ Himself. The Roman Catechism (1566) followed this view, claiming for it the support of early authorities such as Pope Fabian (d. 250). The texts adduced, however, have since been recognized as apocryphal, and the Catechism of the Catholic Church (1992) treats chrism as an early addition.

Of the two ingredients required for the chrism oil is the older element. In the E. Church a variety of perfumes is used in addition to balsam. From at least the 4th cent. chrism was distinguished from other holy oils, e.g. that used for the unction of the sick, to which balsam is not added. Only bishops have the right to consecrate the chrism, as is already stated by the Second Council of *Carthage (390; can. 3), an injunction repeated by several later Councils. In the E. the privilege became restricted to the *Patriarchs and other heads of *autocephalous Churches. The earliest evidence for the rite of its consecration is found in Syria in the late 5th cent., by which time it had developed into a very impressive ceremony. Acc. to the present Latin usage, which dates in its essentials from the 8th cent., it is consecrated by the bishop, assisted by representative priests and deacons (when available), on *Maundy Thursday. Before 1955 the consecration took place during the Mass of the day, after the Communion, but the Ordinal of *Pius XII provided a special Mass of the Chrism to be celebrated in cathedral churches in the morning.

In the E. chrismation is part of the rite of *Baptism, and is also used for the reconciliation of apostates and the reception of converts from other Christian communions. In the W. chrism is used in the three Sacraments that confer a *character, namely at Baptism, *Confirmation, and Holy *Orders; it was also formerly used at the coronation of sovereigns (which was sometimes also thought to confer a character). In the later Middle Ages, under W. influence, chrism came to be used in the coronation of the Byzantine Emperors, and thence for the coronation of the Russian tsars. Chrism is used, in both E. and W., at the consecration of churches and altars.

P. Hofmeister, OSB, Die heiligen Öle in der morgen- und abendländischen Kirche (Das östliche Christentum, NF, Hefte 6–7; Würzburg, 1948). M. Dudley and [D.] G. Rowell (eds.), The Oil of Gladness: Anointing in the Christian Tradition (1993). For the Syriac evidence, W. Strothmann, Das Sakrament der Myron-Weihe in der Schrift De Ecclesiastica Hierarchia des Pseudo-Dionysios Areopagitica, 2 (Göttinger Orientforschungen, 1. Reihe, Bd. 15, Teil 2; Wiesbaden, 1978), pp. xliii–liii. A. Chavasse, 'La Bénédiction du chrême en Gaule avant l'adoption intégrale de la liturgie romaine', Revue du Moyen-Age Latin, 1 (1945), pp. 109–28. J. Rogues, 'La Préface consécratoire du Chrême', Maison-Dieu, 49 (1957), pp. 35–49. L. L. Mitchell, Baptismal Anointing (*Alcuin Club Collections, 48; 1966). S. Salaville, 'Un rite peu connu: la consécration du Saint Chrême au patriarcat grec de Constantinople', L'Union des Églises, 5 (1926), pp. 56–62. L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 1 (1932), pp. 308–17. P. Bernard in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 2395–414, s.v. 'Chrême (saint)'; F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2777–91, s.v. 'Huile'.

chrismatory. A small vessel, in use since the Middle Ages, for keeping the three kinds of holy oils, namely oil of the catechumens, oil of the sick, and *chrism, from which last the name is derived. Of the vessels used for these oils one set, preserving the supply for the year, is kept in the sacristy of the cathedral. Another set containing oil for parochial use is kept in a locked cupboard in the chancel of the parish church.

chrisom. See CHRYSOM.

Christ (Gk. χριστός, lit. the 'Anointed One'). The word is the Gk. translation of the Heb. '*Messiah' (q.v. for the development of the conception among the Jews and in the early Church). Orig. a title, it very soon came to be used by the followers of the risen Jesus as a proper name for their Lord (e.g. Gal. 1: 6, Heb. 9: 11), so much so that they themselves came to be known as '*Christians' (q.v.) before long. In early Christian theology, the name was at first employed to emphasize the Lord's position as the fulfilment of the Old Israel, e.g. in St *Paul's contrast between *Adam and Christ as the 'Old' and the 'New Man'; but here again it soon lost its OT associations and was used purely as a proper name. See also JESUS CHRIST; and for the growth of the doctrine of the Person of Christ see CHRISTOLOGY.

Editors and G. F. Moore (cf. p. 346 n.) in F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. *Lake, The Beginnings of Christianity, 1. 1 (1920), pp. 346–68; E. de W. Burton, Galatians (ICC, 1921), pp. 392–9. S. V. McCasland, 'Christ Jesus', Journal of Biblical Literature, 65 (1946), pp. 377–83. W. Bauer, Griechischdeutsches Wörterbuch zu den Schriften des Neuen Testaments und der übrigen urchristlichen Literatur, 6th edn. by K. and B. Aland (1988), cols. 1768 f.; Eng. tr. of 4th edn. (Chicago, 1975), pp. 886 f. G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (Oxford, 1968), pp. 1531 f., s.v. Χριστός. A. Romeo in EC 4 (1950), cols. 918–21.

Christ, Disciples of. See DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

Christ the King, Feast of. The feast observed in the RC Church in celebration of the all-embracing authority of Christ which shall lead mankind to seek the 'peace of Christ' in the 'Kingdom of Christ'. It was instituted by *Pius XI in the encyclical Quas primas of 11 Dec. 1925 at the close of the *Jubilee Year, when the last Sunday in October was allotted for its observance. From 1970 it has been kept on the last Sunday before the beginning of Advent. It is also kept unofficially in some Anglican churches.

Text of Quas primas, in AAS 17 (1925), pp. 593–610.

Christ Church, Oxford. One of the largest colleges in the University of Oxford, it was founded in 1525 on the site of the monastery of St *Frideswide by T. *Wolsey as 'Cardinal College', and, seven years later, refounded as 'King *Henry the Eighth's College'. In 1545 the latter was dissolved and in 1546 reconstituted in substantially its present form as Christ Church ('Aedes Christi') by Henry VIII. At the same time the new episcopal see was moved from Oseney Abbey to the church of St Frideswide, which thus became both a cathedral and a college chapel, and the whole establishment was placed under a dean and eight canons. The number of canonries is now seven, of which four are attached to professorships in the faculty of theology. In 1867 the tutors of the college were admitted to membership of the Governing Body.

H. L. Thompson, Christ Church (1900); S. A. Warner, Oxford Cathedral (1924); E. W. Watson, The Cathedral Church of Christ in Oxford (1935); W. G. Hiscock, A Christ Church Miscellany (privately pr., Oxford, 1946). A. Hassall (ed.), Christ Church, Oxford: An Anthology in Prose and Verse (1911), with useful introd. E. G. W. Bill and J. F. A. Mason, Christ Church and Reform, 1850–1867 (Oxford, 1970).

Christadelphians, a Christian sect. They were originally called 'Thomasites' after John Thomas (1805–71), who founded them in America in 1848. The name 'Christadelphians' ('Christ's brethren') was Thomas's substitute for 'Christian', which term he rejected, teaching that the beliefs and religious development which it connoted constituted an apostasy. He claimed to return to the beliefs and practice of the earliest disciples. Christadelphian doctrines include the acceptance of the Bible as inspired and infallible, and the interpretation of Hebrew prophecy and, e.g., the Book of Revelation in terms of current and future events. The doctrine of the Trinity is rejected. The core of the Gospel is belief in the return of Jesus Christ in power and great glory to set up a visible world-wide theocracy beginning at Jerusalem, and assurance of this is held to be necessary to salvation. Christadelphians also hold no form of Baptism to be valid except immersion, that the wicked will be annihilated, and that the unconverted, the ignorant, and infants will not be raised from the dead. They have no ministers or clergy. The sect publishes no statistics as to its membership.

R. Roberts, Dr. Thomas: His Life and Work (1884; 3rd edn., rev. by C. C. Walker and W. H. Boulton, 1954). H. Tennant, The Christadelphians: What They Believe and Preach (Birmingham, 1986). C. H. Lippy, The Christadelphians in North America (Studies in American Religion, 34; Lewiston, Lampeter, and Queenston [1989]). B. R. Wilson, Sects and Society: A Sociological Study of Three Religious Groups in Britain (1961), pp. 219–314, with bibl. pp. 382–5. F. J. Powicke in HERE 3 (1910), pp. 569–71, s.v.

Christian. The name was orig. applied to followers of Christ by outsiders, being first used, acc. to Acts 11: 26, at *Antioch c. AD 40–4. In the NT it occurs in only two other places, in Acts 26: 28, where it is used by King Agrippa speaking to St *Paul, and in 1 Pet. 4: 16, where its use by enemies or persecutors is envisaged. Acc. to *Tacitus (Annals, 15. 44) it was already current among the populace at Rome at the time of the *Neronian persecution (AD 64) and it was always the official Roman designation of members of the Church; thus during times of persecution it was often the confession or denial of this name which was crucial, e.g. in the cases reported by *Pliny (q.v.). The form of the word, parallel to, e.g. 'Herodians' (Mk. 12: 13, etc.) and 'Caesarians' (supporters or clients of Caesar), has been thought to indicate that Christianity was considered as a quasi-political movement. Owing to its pagan origin the word was long avoided by Christian writers, except in reference to conflict with paganism. Thus in 1 Pet. 4: 16 the readers are bidden not to be ashamed of suffering on the charge of being a 'Christian', and St *Ignatius of Antioch writing of his approaching martyrdom says, 'Let me not merely be called "Christian" but be found one' (Ign., Rom. 3. 2). By pagans the name 'Christus' was often confused with 'chrestus' (χρηστός, good, kind) and hence the form 'Chrestiani' was used. The *Apologists (e.g. *Tertullian, Apol. 3 and 5) retorted that this, though a misunderstanding, was a true indication of the character of Christianity and that the name 'Christian' stood for nothing worthy of punishment. As the name for which the martyrs suffered (cf. Lk. 21: 12) and as containing the name of Christ, the term easily came to fill the obvious need for a proper name by which the Church could designate itself as distinct from Jews and pagans (and later from Muslims, etc.), rather than the earlier terms 'brethren' (Acts 1: 16), 'disciples' (Acts 11: 26), 'believers' (Acts 2: 44), and others found in the NT.

In modern times the name Christian has usually been claimed by every form of belief stemming from historic Christianity, and has tended, in nominally Christian countries, to lose any credal significance and imply only that which is ethically praiseworthy (e.g. 'a Christian action') or socially customary ('Christian name'). It was disclaimed, as too narrow, by some *Unitarians in the 19th cent., though claimed by the main Unitarian tradition. On the other hand, it has been occasionally adopted in a particular sense by sects which claim to practise mere 'New Testament Christianity' and reject denominational labels (e.g. *Bible Christians).

R. A. *Lipsius, Ueber den Ursprung und den ältesten Gebrauch des Christennamens (Jena, 1873). J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, pt. 2, S. Ignatius and S. Polycarp, 1 (1885), pp. 400–4. E. Peterson, 'Christianus', Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, 1 (Studi e Testi, 121; 1946), pp. 356–72; H. B. Mattingly, 'The Origin of the Name Christiani', JTS NS 9 (1958), pp. 26–37; C. Spicq, OP, 'Ce que signifie le titre de chrétien', Studia Theologica, 15 (1961), pp. 68–78, with further refs. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 1464–78, s.v. 'Chrétien', with bibl.; H. Karpp in RAC 2 (1954), cols. 1114–38, s.v. 'Christennamen', also with bibl.

Christian Aid. See BRITISH COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

Christian Library. The collection of 50 spiritual books which J. *Wesley selected and reissued in handy form to meet the devotional and intellectual needs of his followers. It was published in 1749–55.

Christian Initiation. See BAPTISM and CONFIRMATION.

Christian Majesty, His Most (Lat. Rex Christianissimus). A title belonging to the Kings of France, and from 1464 invariably used by the Popes in addressing them.

Christian Science. The tenets of a religious body known chiefly for its concern with healing through prayer alone. It was founded by Mary Baker Eddy (1821–1910), a native of New Hampshire and of *Calvinistic origin. Having suffered from various ailments from her youth, for a time she believed herself cured by a mesmerist, P. P. Quimby. After a year she suffered a relapse. In 1866 she claimed to have experienced a healing while studying the account of the healing of the paralysed man in Mt. 9. She believed that she had discovered in the Bible the spiritual law and science underlying the healing work of Jesus which rendered such healing open to all who accepted the moral and spiritual discipline of His teaching. While accepting the historicity of the Gospel accounts of Jesus' birth, life, death, and bodily resurrection, she drew a distinction between Jesus the man and Christ, the divinity which He manifested. Everything that does not express the nature of God is 'unreal', a flawed and limited concept of God's kingdom. Evil and sickness have no ultimate reality and are to be destroyed by the subject's becoming aware of God's power and love (rather than by medical treatment). She set out her teaching in Science and Health (1875; revised, with Key to the Scriptures, 1883), which had an immense success. In 1877 she married Asa G. Eddy. In 1879 the 'Church of Christ, Scientist' was founded in Boston and reorganized on a permanent basis in 1892. Christian Science has subsequently spread, esp. in the English-speaking world and in Germany. Since Mrs Eddy's death, the organization, with its largely autonomous, congregationally run branches, has maintained the structure for which she provided in the Church Manual (1895); it is administered by a Board of five Directors who appoint their successors. The Christian Science Monitor, a well-informed newspaper, is one of its chief assets. Christian Science services are simple in form; those on Sunday consist chiefly of readings from the Bible and Science and Health and include hymns, recitation of the *Lord's Prayer (the only form of vocal prayer used), and silent prayer; mid-week meetings include accounts of healings by members of the congregation. Though Christian Scientists point to a substantial amount of testimony, the universal applicability of their methods of healing is not admitted outside their own ranks.

Modern Lives of Mary Baker Eddy by L. P. Powell (London, 1930) and R. Peel (3 vols., New York, 1966–77). N. Beasley, The Cross and the Crown: The History of Christian Science (Boston, 1952; London, 1953); id., The Continuing Spirit (Boston and Toronto, 1956; London, 1957); C. S. Braden, Christian Science Today (Dallas, 1958; London, 1959); R. Peel, Christian Science: Its Encounter with American Culture (New York, 1958); DeW. John, The Christian Science Way of Life (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1962); S. Gottschalk, The Emergence of Christian Science in American Religious Life (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1973]); R. A. Nenneman, The New Birth of Christianity (San Francisco [1992]), pp. 97–190. B. R. Wilson, Sects and Society: A Sociological Study of Three Religious Groups in Britain (1961), pp. 121–215, with bibl., pp. 376–82. H. A. L. Fisher, Our New Religion (1933), criticizes both the life and character of the foundress and her work.

Christian Socialism. A movement for social reform initiated in the 19th cent. by members of the C of E. It was a response to the conditions of the 'Hungry Forties' and, although its leaders professed a belief in the general validity of Political Economy, its central assault was upon competitive practices in society. The movement from the start lacked internal agreement, and was educative rather than political. Its best-known leaders were J. M. F. *Ludlow, F. D. *Maurice, C. *Kingsley, and Thomas Hughes. Their short-lived periodical, Politics for the People (1848), though moderate in its description of the social injustices of the time, roused much opposition and soon had to be abandoned for lack of support. There were two distinct phases; the first, beginning in 1848, was an attempt to counter Chartism within the working classes by providing an alternative Christian social critique, and the second, originating with the Guild of St Matthew in 1877, was more specifically political and aimed at the permeation of the Church with social radicalism. The earlier Christian Socialists sought to apply the ideals of the French co-operatives in England, and this led to the foundation of the London Working Tailors' Association (1849) and a number of other enterprises—none of which had much contact, at least initially, with the simultaneous evolution of similar associations in the North of England. Becoming wary of the political activism of some of the members, F. D. Maurice began to dissociate himself from the co-operatives, and in 1854, with the inauguration of the Working Men's College, he sought, with some success, to divert energies into adult education instead. The eventual failure of the movement may be attributed not only to the indifference of the official C of E but also to the unresponsiveness of the workers themselves. Its work, however, marked the beginning of the modern social movement in the C of E and had much influence in the formation of the trade unions, in early co-operative legislation, and in working-class education.

C. E. Raven, Christian Socialism, 1848 1854 (1920). G. C. Binyon, The Christian Socialist Movement in England (1931). M. B. Reckitt, Faith and Society: A Study of the Structure, Outlook and Opportunity of the Christian Social Movement in Great Britain and America (1932). Id., Maurice to Temple: A Century of Social Movement in the Church of England (Scott Holland Memorial Lectures, 1946; 1947). J. F. C. Harrison, A History of the Working Men's College 1854–1954 (1954). T. Christensen, Origin and History of Christian Socialism 1848–54 (Acta Theologica Danica, 3; Aarhus, 1962). A. R. Vidler, F. D. Maurice and Company (1966). P. d'A. Jones, The Christian Socialist Revival 1877 1914: Religion, Class, and Social Conscience in Late-Victorian England (Princeton, NJ, 1968). P. N. Backstrom, Christian Socialism and Co-operation in Victorian England: Edward Vansittart Neale and the Co-operative Movement (1974). E. [R.] Norman, The Victorian Christian Socialists (Cambridge, 1987).

Christian stewardship. See STEWARDSHIP.

Christian Year, The. The collection of poems for the Sundays and holy days of the year, by J. *Keble, published in 1827. It was very popular throughout the 19th cent., and several well-known hymns have been taken from it (e.g. EH 216, 370).

The phrase 'the Christian year' is also used of the liturgical *year, i.e. the year conceived as starting at *Advent Sunday.

Christina (1626–89), Queen of Sweden. The only surviving child of *Gustavus Adolphus, she succeeded to the Swedish throne in 1632 before she was 6. Until 1644 the government was in the hands of a council of regency. Christina, who was given a boy's education, received instruction in politics (from Axel Oxenstierna), ancient and modern languages, and philosophy. After assuming the direction of affairs on her 18th birthday (8 Dec. 1644), she made it her first aim to end the *Thirty Years War and was partly responsible for the Treaty of *Westphalia (1648). At home she promoted education, increasing and improving the schools and colleges founded by Gustavus and bringing into effect the first school ordinance for the whole kingdom (1649). She also sought to encourage learning by the patronage of foreign as well as Swedish scholars, artists, and scientists, among them R. *Descartes, H. *Grotius, G. J. *Voss, S. *Pufendorf, Olaf Rudbeck (discoverer of the lymphatic vessels), and J. A. *Comenius.

Interest in the RC faith, combined with dislike of the monotony of rule and her Council's repeated requests that she should marry, made her suggest abdication as early as 1651. On 6 June 1654, the Council finally accepted her resignation. In Nov. 1655 she was received into the RC Church at Innsbruck by L. *Holste and settled in Rome, first at the Palazzo Farnese and from 1668 at the Palazzo Riario. Her allegiance to her new faith, although absolute, was never blind. She made repeated attempts to lessen the penalties imposed by the *Inquisition, and criticized the Revocation of the Edict of *Nantes. At Rome she became the centre of a group of intellectuals, later known as the 'Arcadia Academy', and she pursued interests in a variety of Platonic and hermetic ideas, some far from compatible with RC dogma.

After her abdication she twice attempted (1660; 1667) to resume the Swedish crown, intrigued with J. *Mazarin to become ruler of the Spanish kingdom of Naples, and, on the abdication of John Casimir of Vasa (1668), sought the crown of *Poland; but her efforts to regain political power were unsuccessful. She died at Rome, leaving Cardinal Azzolino her chief heir. There is a monument to her in *St Peter's.

Christina left, in French highly praised by Descartes, some fragmentary writings of her own, including an autobiography. Her intellectual gifts were celebrated in verse by Andrew Marvell and J. *Milton, and she endeavoured, through Sir Bulstrode Whitelocke, to persuade Milton to visit her court. She made a collection of MSS, consisting of works on theology, Church history, philosophy, civil law, and medicine, which are deservedly famous and have been incorporated in the *Vatican Library ('Reginenses').

J. Arckenholtz, Mémoires concernant Christine, reine de Suède (4 vols., Amsterdam, 1751–60), incl. some of her Works and Letters, with her Autobiography in vol. 3, pp. 1–69; Eng. tr. of some of her Works (London, 1753), with account of her Life, Character, and Writings by the translator, pp. iii–xx. Numerous modern studies include those by S. Stolpe (2 vols., Stockholm, 1960–1; Eng. tr. of abridged Ger. version, 1966; and other works of this author), G. Masson (London, 1968), and the studies and docs. ed. M. von Platen (Analecta Reginensia, 1; Stockholm, 1966). W. Di Palma and others, Cristina di Svezia: scienza ed alchimia nella Roma barocca (Bari, 1990). S. Åkerman, Queen Christina of Sweden and her Circle (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 21; Leiden, etc., 1991), with bibl. C. N. D. de Bildt, Christine de Suède et le cardinal Azzolino: Lettres inédites, 1666–1668, avec une introduction et des notes (1899). G. Claretta, La regina Cristina di Svezia in Italia, 1655–1689 (1892). C. Weibull, Drottning Christina och Monaldesco (1936). G. B. *Pitra and H. Stevenson, Codices Manuscripti Graeci Reginae Suecorum et Pii PP. II (Bibliothecae Apostolicae Vaticanae Codices Manuscripti Recensiti iubente Leone XIII; Rome, 1888). A. *Wilmart, OSB, Codices Reginenses Latini: Codices 1–500 (all pub., Bibliothecae Apostolicae Vaticanae Codices Manu Scripti Recensiti, 2 vols., Vatican, 1937–45). Les Manuscrits de la reine de Suède au Vatican: Réédition du catalogue de Montfaucon et cotes actuelles (ST 238; 1964). Christina, Queen of Sweden—a personality of European civilisation. Exhibition arranged in collaboration with The Royal Library, the Royal Collections . . . and the National Record Office, Stockholm, Sweden (Stockholm, 1966), with preface by C. Nordenfalk.

Christkatholiken. The official name of the *Old Catholics of Switzerland. The 'Christkatholische Kirche der Schweiz' was formally founded at a synod at Olten in 1875.

Christmas. Though speculation as to the time of year of Christ's Birth dates from the early 3rd cent., *Clement of Alexandria, e.g., suggesting 20 May, the celebration of the anniversary does not appear to have been general till the later 4th cent. The earliest mention of the observance on 25 Dec. is in the *Philocalian Calendar, representing Roman practice of the year 336 (25 Dec.: natus Christus in Betleem Judeae). This date was prob. chosen to oppose the feast of the Natalis Solis Invicti by the celebration of the birth of the 'Sun of Righteousness'. Another tradition, however, derived the date of Christmas from that of the *Annunciation. The Pseudo-*Chrysostomic tractate De solstitia et aequinoctia conceptionis et nativitatis domini nostri Iesu Christi et Iohannis Baptistae argued that the Lord was conceived and crucified on the same day of the year, and calculated this as 25 Mar., a computation mentioned by St *Augustine (De Trinitate, 4. 5). Whatever the origin of the 25 Dec. date, after the accession of the Emp. *Constantine its observance in the W. seems to have spread from Rome. In the E. the closely related feast of the *Epiphany (6 Jan.), which commemorated also the Baptism of Christ, was at first the more important; but in the later 4th cent. it was connected with the Nativity, esp. in Syria, and by the middle of the 5th cent. most of the E. had adopted 25 Dec., though the Church of *Jerusalem held to 6 Jan. until 549. In the *Armenian Church 6 Jan. is still the only day devoted specifically to the celebration of the Incarnation. The controversies of the 4th to 6th cents. on the Incarnation and the Person of Christ doubtless contributed to the growth in importance of the feast.

The day is celebrated in the W. rite by three Masses, of the night (normally said at midnight), of the dawn, and of the day, which have been held to symbolize the threefold birth of Christ, eternally in the bosom of the Father, from the womb of the Virgin Mary, and mystically in the soul of the faithful.

The popular observance of the feast has always been marked by the joy and merry-making formerly characteristic of the Roman Saturnalia and the other pagan festivals it replaced. It developed considerably in England in the 19th cent. through the importation of German customs by the Prince Consort (e.g. Christmas trees) and the influence of Charles Dickens. The singing of *carols has become a widespread feature in both ecclesiastical and secular contexts.

L. *Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), pp. 247–54 (Eng. tr. of 3rd edn., 1903, pp. 257–65). H. Usener, Das Weihnachtsfest (1889; 2nd edn. by H. *Lietzmann, 1911); B. Botte, OSB, Les Origines de la Noël et de l'Épiphanie (1932), with text of the De solstitia, pp. 93–105. O. *Cullmann, Weihnachten in der alten Kirche (Basle, 1947; Fr. tr., 1949; Eng. tr. in id., The Early Church (1956), pp. 17–36). J. Lemarié, OSB, La Manifestation du Seigneur: La liturgie de Noël et de l'Épiphanie (Lex Orandi, 23; 1957), esp. pp. 23–229. H. Frank, OSB, 'Zur Geschichte von Weihnachten und Epiphanie', JLW 12 ('1932'; pub. 1934), pp. 145–55; 13 ('1933'; 1935), pp. 1–38; J. Leclercq, OSB, 'Aux origines du cycle de Noël', EL 60 (1946), pp. 7–26; F. J. Dölger, Antike und Christentum, 6 (1950), pp. 23–30 ('Natalis Solis Invicti und das christliche Weihnachtsfest'); H. Frank, OSB, 'Frühgeschichte und Ursprung des römischen Weihnachtsfestes im Lichte neuerer Forschung', Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, 2 (1952), pp. 1–24; H. Engberding, OSB, 'Der 25. Dezember als Tag der Feier der Geburt des Herrn', ibid., pp. 25–43. J. Gaillard, 'Noël: memoria ou mystère?', Maison-Dieu, 59 (1959), pp. 37–59. R. Berger, 'Ostern und Weihnachten. Zum Grundgefüge des Kirchenjahres', Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, 8 (1963), pp. 1–20. J. Mossay, Les Fêtes de Noël et d'Épiphanie d'après les sources littéraires cappadociennes du IVe siècle (Textes et Études Liturgiques, 3; 1965). J.-J. von Allmen, 'La Célébration de Noël d'après les livres liturgiques réformés actuels', in A.-M. Dubarle and others, Noël-Épiphanie: . . . Semaine liturgique de l'Institut Saint-Serge [Paris] (Lex Orandi, 40; 1967), pp. 277–98, and other essays. K. Onasch, Die Weihnachtsfest im orthodoxen Kirchenjahr (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur Konfessionskunde der Orthodoxie, 2; 1958). A. T. Kraabel, 'The Roots of Christmas', Dialog, 21 (1982), pp. 274–80. G. Rietschel in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 47–54, s.v. 'Weihnachten'; C. Martindale, SJ, in CE 3 (1908), pp. 724–8; K. *Lake in HERE 3 (1910), pp. 601–8; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 905–58 (esp. 910–34), s.v. 'Nativité de Jésus'; C. Smith in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 655–60, with useful bibl.

Christocentric. (1) A word originally used of systems of theology which maintain that God has never revealed Himself to man except in the Incarnate Christ. Christocentric theology bases itself on a literal interpretation of Mt. 11: 27, to the exclusion of the passages in Scripture which seem to refer to or imply a revelation in nature, and thus precludes the possibility of *natural theology altogether. Among its modern advocates are A. *Ritschl, W. *Herrmann, and K. *Barth.

(2) More generally, of any set of religious beliefs which is focused primarily on the Person of Christ.

Christology. The study of the Person of Christ, and in particular of the union in Him of the divine and human natures, and of His significance for Christian faith. In the writings of the NT, composed by those who believed in the resurrection of the crucified Jesus of Nazareth and who saw Him as the fulfilment of the ancient promises, and in particular as the *Messiah (the Christ, the 'anointed one'), reflection on Jesus is presented largely in categories drawn from current Jewish thought. He is seen as a teacher with unparalleled authority (Mk. 1: 27), a prophet (Mt. 21: 11; Lk. 24: 19; Jn. 4: 19, etc.), as Messiah (q.v.), and is regarded as standing in a peculiar filial relationship to God (Mt. 3: 17, 11: 27; Jn. 3: 16, etc.). But rarely were merely human categories (e.g. teacher, prophet) felt to be adequate; instead of being an interpreter of the Law (or the *Torah), or of the Wisdom of God, Jesus is seen as superseding the Law (Mt. 5: 21–48) or as *Wisdom itself (1 Cor. 1: 24), and the role in the work of creation that Jewish thought had ascribed to the Torah and Wisdom is attributed to Christ, the Son of God, the Word (1 Cor. 8: 6; Heb. 1: 2; Jn. 1: 3 respectively). Some, esp. among Jewish Christians, shrank from such an interpretation of Christ and clung to the idea of Jesus as a teacher and prophet, a man inspired by the Spirit of God (the *Ebionites); others so emphasized that Jesus was a manifestation of the Divine that His humanity was felt to be a disguise, a mere appearance (the *Docetists).

The idea that in Jesus there was encountered the One through whom God had made the universe provided a starting-point for a more philosophical approach to Christology. The *Apologists of the 2nd cent. (e.g. *Justin Martyr) saw Jesus as the *Logos or Word of God, understood in line with Middle *Platonism as the source of all order and rationality; in Jesus the Logos united Himself to a human being. For the Apologists, however, the Logos was an intermediary between God and the world, and distinct from Him. When at the beginning of the 4th cent. *Arius (d. 336) held that such a subordinate Logos was not the uncreated God but part (albeit a unique part) of the created order, he met opposition from those for whom to say that Jesus was the Logos incarnate was to say in some way that He is God. At the Council of Nicaea (325), Arius was condemned and it was asserted that the Son of God who became incarnate in Jesus is 'consubstantial with the Father' (ὁμοούσιος τῷ πατρί). Such a clear affirmation of the divinity of Christ provoked much Christological reflection. The *Alexandrians emphasized that in Christ God Himself was living a human life, and they cherished the affirmation of such paradoxical self-effacement on God's part as evidence of the depth of His love for mankind. The *Antiochenes emphasized that in Christ both humanity and divinity co-operated in their integrity, and that such a conjunction of human and divine involved no encroachment on the reality of either of the two natures. In trying to work out what could be meant by the Logos becoming a man, *Apollinarius (d. *c.*390) proposed that the Logos took the place of the soul in Christ. This idea was rejected by the *Cappadocian Fathers and by the Antiochenes as impairing Christ's saving work ('the unassumed is the unhealed'), and Apollinarius was condemned at the Council of *Constantinople (381).

Alexandrian suspicions that Antiochene Christology failed to safeguard the unity of the Person of Christ were confirmed when in 428 *Nestorius, the newly elected Abp. of Constantinople (d. after 451), rejected the title of '*Theotokos' ('Mother of God') applied to the Blessed Virgin *Mary. At the Council of *Ephesus (431), Nestorius was condemned and the use of the title 'Theotokos' upheld. Shortly afterwards St *Cyril of Alexandria (d. 444) and the moderate Antiochenes led by *John of Antioch (d. 441) reached an agreement on Christology enshrined in the 'Formulary of Reunion' (433) which affirmed the unity of Christ and asserted that he is 'consubstantial (ὁμοούσιος) with the Father in Godhead and consubstantial with us in manhood'. In 447 *Eutyches (d.

454) began to teach in Constantinople that faithfulness to Cyril's teaching entailed maintaining that after the union there was one nature, and that this nature was not 'consubstantial with us'. This teaching, along with other Christological heresies, was condemned at the Council of *Chalcedon (451), which reaffirmed the teaching of the 'Formulary of Reunion' and asserted that there is 'one . . . Christ . . . in two natures, without confusion, without change, without division, without separation'. The Council also endorsed the Christological teaching of Pope *Leo (d. 461), expressed in a letter to *Flavian, the Abp. of Constantinople who had been the first to condemn Eutyches; this letter (the '*Tome of Leo'), following the teaching of St *Augustine (354–430), maintained that there is one subject in Christ to which, paradoxically, two sets of attributes, divine and human, are to be ascribed. Neither the Council of Ephesus nor that of Chalcedon secured complete agreement; those who supported Nestorius rejected Ephesus and formed a continuing schismatic Church (the *Church of the East), while many Christians in the E. felt that Chalcedon had betrayed the teaching of Cyril and so rejected the Chalcedonian Definition of Faith (the so-called '*Monophysites'). The 'Monophysites' generally rejected the teaching of Eutyches too, maintaining that Christ is consubstantial with the Father in His Godhead and consubstantial with us in His manhood, and therefore completely God, completely man, and completely one. The next two centuries saw a series of attempts, inspired by various Emperors, to secure agreement between the supporters of Chalcedon and the 'Monophysites'. The '*Henoticon' (482), which set aside the Definition of Chalcedon, secured some agreement in the East but provoked the '*Acacian schism' between the E. and W. Although the Emp. *Justinian secured Pope *Vigilius' support for his compromise involving the condemnation of the *Three Chapters, which was endorsed at the Second Council of *Constantinople (553), many Christians in the W. refused to accept it. In the 7th cent. these attempts at compromise led to the heresies of monenergism and *monothelitism, which were condemned at the Third Council of *Constantinople (680–81), after the virtual martyrdom of St *Maximus the Confessor (*c.*580–662) and Pope *Martin I (d. 655), who had both opposed such attempts. Another (more successful) attempt to find common ground between the Chalcedonians and the Oriental Orthodox Churches is found in the so-called Neo-Chalcedonianism or 'Cyrillian Chalcedonianism' of the 6th cent. In this context the doctrine of Enhypostasia was developed; this asserts that though the humanity of Christ has no person (hypostasis) of its own, it is not on that account 'anhypostatic' (deprived of a hypostasis), but finds its hypostasis in the hypostasis of the Logos. Thus the distinguishing features of the particular man who Jesus is, as well as the essential qualities of the species (mankind) to which He belongs, are attributed to the divine hypostasis. For the Neo-Chalcedonians this notion provided a justification for the *Theopaschite formulae.These ideas are further refined in the Christological teaching of Maximus the Confessor and St *John of Damascus (d. 750).

In the W. the Council of Chalcedon's endorsement of Leo was taken to be an endorsement of the Christological teaching of Augustine that Leo represented. Later, after *Burgundio of Pisa had translated John of Damascus' Expositio Fidei into Latin in the 12th cent., the fruits of Byzantine Christology became accessible in the W. Scholastic theologians introduced further refinements of their own, but they did not call in question the fundamental pattern of Christological doctrine laid down by Chalcedon and reaffirmed by later councils.

The *Reformation and the *Enlightenment were to produce pressures for a change of focus that led to developments, seen first as alternatives and then as replacements for the traditional formulations of Christological doctrines. Christological concern shifted from the question of the two natures of Christ to a more direct analysis of His work in redemption. M. *Luther's classic question at the Reformation was 'How can I find a gracious God?'. He supported his doctrine of the Real Presence in the Eucharist with the patristic theory of communicatio idiomatum (exchange of divine and human attributes; see UBIQUITARIANISM). In this connection J. *Calvin stressed the divine transcendence, and more generally, in his Christology was inclined to emphasize a clear distinction between the two natures (a doctrine sometimes called the Extra Calvinisticum). The Lutheran tradition developed a new Christology of the two states of Christ's humiliation and exaltation in cross and resurrection, in accounting for the biblical stress on historical contingency in the Incarnation. Humiliation and condescension led to further reflection on *kenosis (self-emptying) in Jesus and in God.

Modern Christology may be said to begin in the Enlightenment, at a time when all sorts of new questions had arisen concerning the nature of man and his world in relation to God, questions to which the classical categories seemed to provide no relevant answer. To meet this challenge a new Christology was produced, that tended to see belief in the divinity of Christ as a way of articulating the conviction that the distinctive character of Christian faith in God is that this faith is focused on Jesus of Nazareth. So, following a suggestion of J. G. *Herder, it sought to look for the divinity of Jesus in the unique quality of His life on earth. F. D. E. *Schleiermacher stressed the unique quality of Jesus' consciousness of God, which He passes on to others. His successors built the methods and results of the new historical criticism of the Gospels into their Christology. For A. *Ritschl the focus is a picture of a man of pure compassion and kindness, who set a moral example in all that He did. He began the work of the *Kingdom of God, which we continue by acting in love towards our fellow men. It was in reaction to such an approach that the so-called '*dialectical theology' arose. K. *Barth's God is wholly other; in Christ He reveals Himself as and when He wishes. For R. *Bultmann Jesus is the one who confronts man with the eschatological message, demanding response in existential commitment. For Barth there is a return to the high classical Christology, for Bultmann a renewal of the attack on '*metaphysics' and concentration on obedience to God's will as revealed through Jesus' message. Bultmann's pupils, notably E. Käsemann, G. Ebeling, and E. Fuchs, developed a 'New Quest' of the historical Jesus, accepting the importance of *kerygma but seeking to relate it again to history. British Christology in the 20th cent. has been centred in large measure on the classical doctrine of the Incarnation and attempts to reinterpret it. In Anglican theology the continuing debate with the Fathers has been pursued. Traditional Incarnational Christology, however, was attacked by the authors of the Myth of God Incarnate symposium (1977). On the Continent of Europe J. *Moltmann and E. Jüngel see the cross of Christ as the key not just to Christology but to all legitimate talk of God. The most comprehensive treatment of Christology in Protestant theology since Barth is to be found in the work of W. *Pannenberg. RC thought has been extraordinarily fertile in the field, esp. in the work of K. *Rahner and E. *Schillebeeckx, H. *Küng, and H. U. von *Balthasar. Rahner displays an almost unique versatility in criticizing the ancient formulas, reinterpreting them radically in line with a post-Enlightenment anthropology, and then using them to interpret the central affirmations of Christology. Schillebeeckx lays stress on Jesus, the Mosaic-messianic 'eschatological prophet' as the basic NT model from which all others are derived. '*Liberation theology', produced largely in Latin America, relates the Incarnation to salvation in the most direct possible way, in its commitment to love for the poor and the dispossessed. See also HISTORICAL JESUS, QUEST OF THE; INCARNATION; HYPOSTASIS; and HYPOSTATIC UNION.

The more important modern works include I. A. *Dorner, Entwicklungsgeschichte der Lehre von der Person Christi (Stuttgart, 1839; 2nd edn., 2 vols., Berlin, 1845–53; Eng. tr., 5 vols., 1861–1869); R. I. *Wilberforce, The Doctrine of the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ (1848); C. *Gore, The Incarnation of the Son of God (Bampton Lectures, 1891); id., Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation (1895); F. *Weston, The One Christ (1907); P. T. *Forsyth, The Person and Place of Jesus Christ (1909); H. M. Relton, A Study in Christology (1917); E. *Brunner, Der Mittler (Tübingen, 1927; Eng. tr., The Mediator, 1934); Essays on the Trinity and the Incarnation, ed. A. E. J. Rawlinson (1928); H. *Rashdall, God and Man (1930); J. K. Mozley, The Doctrine of the Incarnation (1936); J. M. Creed, The Divinity of Jesus Christ (1938); E. L. Mascall, Christ, the Christian and the Church (1946); D. M. Baillie, God was in Christ (1948); A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon (3 vols., Würzburg, 1951–4); W. Elert, Das Ausgang der altkirchlichen Christologie (1957); O. *Cullmann, Die Christologie des Neuen Testaments (Tübingen, 1957; 2nd edn., 1958; Eng. tr., 1963); W. Pannenberg, Grundzüge der Christologie (Gütersloh, 1964; Eng. tr., Jesus—God and Man, 1968); R. H. Fuller, The Foundations of New Testament Christology (1965); J. Meyendorff, Christ in Eastern Christian Tradition after Chalcedon (Washington, DC, 1969); K. Rahner and W. Thüsing, Christologie—systematisch und exegetisch (Quaestiones Disputatae, 55; Freiburg, 1972; Eng. tr., 1980), and arts. by Rahner in his Schriften zur Theologie (Eng. tr., Theological Investigations); J. Moltmann, Der gekreuzigte Gott (Munich, 1973; Eng. tr., The Crucified God, 1974); J. A. T. *Robinson, The Human Face of God (1973); E. Schillebeeckx, OP, Jezus, het verhaal van een levende (1974; Eng. tr., Jesus: An Experiment in Christology, 1979); id., Gerechtigheid en liefde: Genade en bevrijding (1977; Eng. tr., Christ: The Christian Experience in the Modern World, 1980; both highly controversial); A. Grillmeier, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche (Freiburg, 1979 ff.; Eng. tr., Christ in Christian Tradition, 1975 ff.; vol. 1 originated as an article in Grillmeier and Bacht, op. cit., 1, pp. 5–202, of which a rev. Eng. tr. was pub. 1965); C. F. D. Moule, The Origin of Christology (1977); J. [H.] Hick (ed.), The Myth of God Incarnate (1977); E. Jüngel, Gott als Geheimnis der Welt (Tübingen, 1977; Eng. tr., God as the Mystery of the World, 1983); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making (1980; 2nd edn., 1989); R. Sturch, The Word and the Christ: An Essay in Analytic Christology (Oxford, 1991); M. Karrer, Die Gesalbte: Die Grundlagen des Christustitels (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 151 [1991]). A. J. Hultgren, New Testament Christology: A Critical Assessment and Annotated Bibliography (New York, 1988). See also works cited s.vv. CREEDS and SON OF MAN.

Christopher, St (Gk. Χριστοφόρος, 'one who bore Christ'), one of the 14 *Auxiliary Saints. Acc. to tradition, he suffered martyrdom in Asia Minor during the 3rd cent. Many legends have gathered round his name. One represents him as a powerful giant who earned his living by carrying travellers across a river, and on one occasion numbered among his passengers a small child who caused him to bow beneath his burden, since the child was none other than the Christ and His weight that of the whole world. It was a common medieval custom to place a large mural painting of the saint opposite the south door of the church, in the belief that the sight of it would safeguard the passer-by from accident that day. St Christopher is the patron of wayfarers; recently he has been adopted esp. by motorists. His feast day in the W., 25 July, was dropped from the Roman Calendar of 1969, but may be observed locally. Feast day in the E., 9 May.

Various Gk. and Lat. texts of legend in AASS, Jul. 6 (1729), pp. 125–49, in Anal. Boll. 1 (1882), pp. 121–48, and 10 (1891), pp. 393–405, and in H. Usener (ed.), Acta S. Marinae et S. Christophori (Bonn, 1886), pp. 54–76. H. F. [C.] Rosenfeld, Der hl. Christophorus: Seine Verehrung und seine Legende (Acta Academiae Aboensis, Humaniora, 10, no. 3; 1937). E. K. Stahl, Die Legende vom heil. Riesen Christophorus in der Graphik des 15. und 16. Jahrhunderts (1920); H. C. Whaite, St Christopher in English Mediaeval Wallpainting (University College (London) Monographs on English Mediaeval Art, 1; 1929). C. Johnson, St Christopher: The Patron Saint of Travellers (1932; enlarged 1938); A. Masseron, Saint Christophe, patron des automobilistes (1933). A. Lohr, OSB, 'Der heilige Christophorus und die Wandlungen im christlichen Heiligenkult', in A. Mayer, J. Quasten, and B. Neunheuser, OSB (eds.), Vom Christlichen Mysterium: Gesammelte Arbeiten zum Gedächtnis von Odo Casel OSB (Düsseldorf, 1951), pp. 227–59; W. Loeschcke, 'Sanctus Christophorus Canineus', in Edwin Redslob zum 70. Geburtstag: Eine Festgabe [1955], pp. 33–82. B. Hahn-Woernle, Christophorus in der Schweiz: Seine Verehrung in bildlichen und kultischen Zeugnissen (Schriften der Schweizerischen Gesellschaft für Volkskunde, 53; Basle, 1972). F. Werner in Lexikon der christlichen Ikonographie, 5 (1973), cols. 496–508, s.v. 'Christophorus', with bibl.

Christopherson, John (d. 1558), Bp. of *Chichester. He was one of the original Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, by the charter of 1546, and among the first to introduce Greek studies to the University. As an opponent of the Reformation he retired abroad during *Edward VI's reign, but his college continued to support him. When on *Mary's accession William Bill, a pronounced Protestant, was ejected from the Mastership of Trinity, Christopherson was put in to replace him; and he became chaplain and confessor to the Queen. In 1554 he was appointed Dean of Norwich and in 1557 Bp. of Chichester. For preaching an impassioned sermon on 27 Nov. 1558 after *Elizabeth's accession, against the Reformation, he was imprisoned and died shortly afterwards. He was a learned and enthusiastic patristic scholar who rendered into Latin the writings of *Philo (Philonis Judaei Scriptoris eloquentissimi libri iv, Antwerp, 1553) as well as the Church Histories of *Eusebius, *Socrates, *Sozomen, *Evagrius, and *Theodoret (published posthumously, Louvain, 1569). He also collected a considerable number of MSS, which he bequeathed to Trinity College.

T. Cooper in DNB 10 (1887), pp. 293–5, s.v., with refs.

Christophoria (Gk.), 'the carrying of Christ'. In the *Ambrosian rite, the title of a Feast observed on 7 Jan., the day following the *Epiphany, and commemorating the Return from Egypt (Mt. 2: 21).

Chrodegang, St (d. 766), Bp. of Metz prob. from 742 (possibly from 747). He was one of the chief ecclesiastical reformers of his time. Of noble birth, he became chancellor and chief minister to *Charles Martel and his successor *Pepin III, continuing in political office even after he was made Bp. of Metz. On the martyrdom of St *Boniface in 754 he assumed responsibility for the ecclesiastical affairs of the whole Frankish kingdom. In 748 he founded the abbey of *Gorze, near Metz, and continued to take a keen part in furthering monasticism throughout his diocese. He also caused the canons of his cathedral to live a community life, drawing up for them the 'rule' which bears his name (*c.*755). The picture given by this rule is that of a community consisting essentially of clerics, monastic in their common life and in the performance of the Divine Office, but unmonastic in their close connection with diocesan officials such as the bishop and archdeacon, and, above all, in their licence to hold private property. He also introduced the Roman chant and liturgy into the diocese of Metz. Feast day, 6 Mar.

'Rule' repr. from L. *d'Achery in J. P. Migne, PL 89. 1057–96; crit. edn. from Leiden Cod. Voss. Lat. 94 by W. Schmitz (Hanover, 1889); text, based on edn. of Schmitz, with introd. and notes, in J. B. Pelt, Études sur la cathédrale de Metz: La liturgie (1937), pp. 5–28. Early Eng. tr., together with Lat. text, ed. A. S. Napier in EETS, Original Series, 150 (1916), pp. 1–101, with introd., pp. vii–x. Life ascribed to John, Abbot of Gorze (historically valueless), ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 10 (1852), pp. 552–72. Of more importance is relevant section of *Paul the Deacon's Liber de Episcopis Mettensibus, ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 2 (1829), pp. 267 f. M. Buchner, 'Die "Vita Chrodegangi"—eine kirchenpolitische Tendenzschrift aus der Mitte des 9. Jahrhunderts, zugleich eine Untersuchung zur Entwicklung der Primatial- und Vikariatsidee', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abt., 16 (1927), pp. 1–36, with refs. to earlier studies. R. Folz and others, Saint Chrodegang: Communications présentées au colloque tenu à Metz à l'occasion du douzième centenaire de sa mort (Metz, 1967); E. Ewig, 'Beobachtungen zur Entwicklung der fränkischen Reichskirche unter Chrodegang von Metz', Frühmittelalterliche Studien, 2 (1968), pp. 67–77; repr. in id., Spätantikes und fränkisches Gallien, 2 (Beihefte der Francia, 3. 2; Munich, 1979), pp. 220–31; J. Semmler, 'Chrodegang, Bischof von Metz 747–766', in F. Knöpp (ed.), Die Reichsabtei Lorsch: Festschrift zum Gedenken an ihre Stiftung 764, 1 (Darmstadt, 1973), pp. 229–45, with refs. M. Parisse in DIP 3 (1976), cols. 314–19, s.v. 'Crodegango', with full bibl.; J. Semmler in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 71–4, s.v.

Chromatius, St (d. 407), Bp. of *Aquileia, N. Italy. He succeeded Valerian in the see *c.*388. A learned scholar, he conducted an active correspondence with several illustrious contemporaries, among them St *Ambrose, St *Jerome, and *Rufinus. In the *Origenistic dispute he sought to mediate between the two last named. He was a strong supporter of St John *Chrysostom, on whose behalf he interceded, without success, with the Emp. Honorius. Eighteen of his Homilies on Mt. [3: 15–17; 5: 1–6: 24], including a separate treatise on the Eight Beatitudes, have long been known, but since 1960 many more have been identified apparently from an extensive comm. on Mt. In addition, J. Lemarié has discovered some 45 other sermons.

His works are repr., mainly from the text ed. P. Braida, Udine, 1816, in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 247–436. Modern edn., incl. those recently ascribed to Chromatius, by R. Étaix and J. Lemarié (CCSL 9A; 2 vols., 1974–7), with bibl. to date. Sermons also ed. J. Lemarié, OSB, with Fr. tr. by H. Tardif (SC 154 and 164; 1969–71). G. Trettel, Mysterium e Sacramentum in S. Cromazio (Trieste, 1979). J. Lemarié, 'Chromatiana. Status Quaestionis' [in Fr.], Rivista di Storia e Letteratura Religiosa, 17 (1981), pp. 64–76. Chromatius Episcopus 388–1988 (Antichità Altoadriatiche, 34; Udine, 1989). B. Studer in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 572–4.

Chronicles, Books of. These OT Books record the history of *Israel and *Judah from the Creation to the return from *Exile after the fall of Babylon *c.*539 BC. In the Hebrew Canon they are a single Book; the division into two goes back to the *Septuagint, where they are called Παραλειπομένων α΄β΄, i.e. 'that which is left over', sc. from Sam. and Kgs. The term 'Chronicles' was introduced by St *Jerome, whence it made its way into the English and German versions. The work is divided into four parts. 1 Chron. 1–9 are genealogies from *Adam to the death of Saul; 10–29 describe the reign of *David; 2 Chron. 1–9 the reign of *Solomon; and 10–36 give a history of the kings of Judah.

Throughout the Books the interest concentrates on the religious aspects of the history, esp. the *Temple and its worship, to which is assigned a very large place. Thus the story of David is much concerned with his preparations for the building of the Temple, and the reign of Solomon with long descriptions of the Temple itself, its structure, liturgy, and personnel. With the same religious interest in view the less edifying episodes in the lives of David and Solomon are omitted, and the whole subsequent history of the kings of Judah is seen as a series of rewards and punishments acc. to their attitude to religion. The obvious aim of the work is to inculcate respect for the Law and to stress the advantages of its observance.

The sources used in Chron. are the canonical books, esp. Gen., Exod., Num., Jos., and Sam. and Kgs., but also extra-canonical material, among which the author names a 'History of the Kings of Israel and Judah' and a 'Midrash of the Kings of Israel and Judah'. Acc. to the list of high priests the book seems to have been written in the latter half of the 4th cent. BC. Until recently most scholars held that the Chron. formed one continuous whole with the Books of *Ezra and *Nehemiah, but whether this is so is now widely regarded as an open question. On the historical value of Chron. opinion is also divided. The older critics, such as W. M. L. *de Wette and J. *Wellhausen, refused it all credibility, whereas a number of recent scholars have argued that it used reliable information at least for the later period.

Comm. by J. W. Rothstein and J. Hänel (2 vols., KAT 18; 1927), K. Galling (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 12; on Chron., Ez., Neh., 1954, pp. 7–185), W. Rudolph (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 21; 1955), F. Michaeli (Commentaire de l'Ancien Testament, 16; on Chron., Ez., Neh.; Neuchâtel, 1967, pp. 9–12, 24–250), R. J.

Coggins (New Camb. Bib., 1976), H. G. M. Williamson (New Cent. Bib., 1982), and S. Japhet (Old Testament Library; London, 1993). A. C. Welch, The Work of the Chronicler: Its Purpose and Date (Schweich Lectures, 1938; 1939). G. von *Rad, Das Geschichtsbild des chronistischen Werkes (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, 59, Folge 4, 3; 1930). M. *Noth, Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Studien (2nd edn., Tübingen, 1957), pp. 110–216 ('Die chronistische Werk (Chr)'); separate Eng. tr., The Chronicler's History (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 50; Sheffield [1987]). T. Willi, Die Chronik als Auslegung (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 106; 1972). H. G. M. Williamson, Israel in the Books of Chronicles (Cambridge, 1977). S. Japhet, The Ideology of the Book of Chronicles and its Place in Biblical Thought (Beiträge zur Erforschung des Alten Testaments und des antiken Judentum, 9 [1989]). Eissfeldt, pp. 529–40, 769, with bibl. A. M. Brunet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 1220–61, s.v. 'Paralipomènes', with bibl.

Chronicon Edessenum (Edessene Chronicle). A Syriac Chronicle extending from 133 BC to AD 540, the date of its compilation, but with very few entries before the 3rd cent. AD. Its principal interest lies in the history of *Edessa, but it sometimes supplies important incidental information on general history both East and West. L. Hallier argued that its principal sources were some early documents from *Antioch, a lost history of the Persians, and the Edessene city archives. It exists only in a single MS (Cod. Vat. syr. 163), derived from the Convent of Our Lady in the Nitrian desert.

Syr. text first pub. in J. S. *Assemani, Bibliotheca Orientalis, 1 (1719), pp. 387–417. Crit. edns. by L. Hallier, with Ger. tr. and comm. (TU 9. 1; 1892), and by I. Guidi (CSCO, Scriptores Syri, 3rd ser., 4, 1903, pp. 1–13, with Lat. tr. pp. 1–11). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 99 f.

Chronicon Paschale. A Byzantine chronicle compiled in the first half of the 7th cent., so named from its having been based on the Easter reckoning. It contained a chronological outline of events from the creation of Adam to the 20th year of the Emp. *Heraclius (630); but not all of it has survived. The author used inter alia the Easter Tables of *Alexandria, the 'Fasti Consulares', Sextus *Julius Africanus, the 'Chronicon' and 'Ecclesiastical History' of *Eusebius of Caesarea, the 'Christian Topography' of *Cosmas Indicopleustes, and the 'Chronicle' of *John Malalas; and for the last 27 years he has the value of a contemporary historian. The principal MS is the *Vatican cod. gr. 1941 (10th cent.).

The document is sometimes known as the 'Chronicon Alexandrinum'; it owes the name 'Paschal Chronicle' to its first ed., C. D. *Du Cange. Best edn. by L. Dindorf in CSH Byz. (2 vols., 1832); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 92. 9–1160. Eng. tr. of section covering 284–628 by M. and M. Whitby (Translated Texts for Historians, Liverpool, 1989), with introd. and bibl. G. *Mercati, 'A Study of the Paschal Chronicle', JTS 7 (1906), pp. 397–412; repr. in his Opere minori (ST 77; 1937), pp. 462–79.

Chronographer of AD 354, the. The name given by T. *Mommsen to the unknown compiler of an almanac drawn up for the use of Christians at *Rome in the 4th cent. The document, devoid of literary pretensions, remains an invaluable source for the study of early ecclesiastical history. All the extant MSS are fragments, but by piecing their witness together practically the whole document can be reconstructed. Acc. to Mommsen, these are all dependent on a now lost 'Codex Luxemburgensis'. The compilation contained inter alia these items: (1) a calendar of Roman holidays; (2) a list of the consuls (from AUC 245 to AD 354); (3) an Easter Table (from AD 312 to 354, with an extension to AD 410); (4) a list of the city prefects at Rome from AD 254 to 354; (5) 'Depositio episcoporum', a list of the dates of death of the Bishops of Rome from AD 255 to 352; (6) a sort of primitive Roman *Martyrology; (7) a list of the Roman Bishops from St *Peter down to Pope *Liberius (see LIBERIAN CATALOGUE); (8) a chronicle based on that of St *Hippolytus, combined with (9) a chronicle of Roman secular history from early times down to the death of the Emp. Licinius (325); (10) an account of the 14 regions of the city of Rome.

Text pr., with extended comm., in T. Mommsen, 'Über den Chronographen vom Jahre 354' in Abh. (Sächs.), 1 (1850), pp. 547–693; and again in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 9 (pt. 1; 1892), pp. 13–196. C. Nordenfalk, Der Kalender vom Jahre 354 und die lateinische Buchmalerei des iv. Jahrhunderts (Göteborg, 1936); H. Stern, Le Calendrier de 354: Étude sur son texte et sur ses illustrations (Institut français d'Archéologie de Beyrout. Bibliothèque Archéologique et Historique, 55; 1953). M. R. Salzman, On Roman Time: The Codex-Calendar of 354 and the Rhythms of Urban Life in Late Antiquity (Transformation of the Classical Heritage, 17; Berkeley, Los Angeles and Oxford [1990]). O. Seeck in PW 3 (1899), cols. 2477–81. See also bibl. to LIBERIAN CATALOGUE.

chronology, biblical. (1) OLD TESTAMENT. It is very difficult to date accurately the events which are narrated in the OT owing to (a) the absence in the ancient world of any widely recognized chronological era, (b) the few allusions in the OT to events outside Israel known to us from extraneous sources, and (c) the occasional use in the OT of chronological schemes for theological purposes. The Hebrew records are themselves sometimes inadequate, e.g. while the duration of the sojourn in Egypt is given (Gen. 15: 13, Ex. 12: 40–1), the names of the Pharaohs are not recorded. Among the important chronological data supplied in the OT are the interval between the *Exodus and the building of Solomon's *Temple (1 Kgs. 6: 1); the duration of the wandering in the wilderness (Num. 14: 33); and the lengths of the reigns of the Kings of Israel and Judah in the Books of the Kings. But the figures supplied are not always consistent even in the Hebrew text, and there are frequent divergences in the *Septuagint. However, from the 9th cent. BC onwards the dates of the events narrated can be roughly discovered by comparing them with the more detailed and accurate Assyrian and Persian chronologies.

(2) NEW TESTAMENT. The range here is shorter and the problems more circumscribed, but even so there are many difficulties. Complications are caused by the vagueness of much of the evidence and our dependence upon inferences; also by the different methods by which the years of monarchs were reckoned and the intricacies of the Jewish calendar. Acc. to Mt. 2: 1, Jesus was born 'in the days of *Herod the king' (d. *c.*4 BC), but acc. to Lk. 2: 2 during 'the first enrolment made when Quirinius was governor of Syria' (probably AD 6–9). Jesus was baptized in 'the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius *Caesar' (Lk. 3: 1), i.e. in AD 28 or 29, while acc. to Jn. 2: 13–20 the first *Passover after His Baptism was the 46th year of the building of Herod's Temple (AD 27). Jesus would thus be about 30 years old when He began to teach (Lk. 3: 23). The length of Christ's ministry is difficult to determine. In the Synoptic Gospels only one Passover is explicitly mentioned, and from this fact it has sometimes been inferred that the ministry lasted only one year; in the Fourth Gospel three Passovers are recorded. The date of the Crucifixion is uncertain, the most likely years being AD 30 or 33. However, all are agreed that Jesus 'suffered under Pontius *Pilate', who was prefect of *Judaea from AD 26 to 36. With regard to the chronology of the Apostolic Age, the date of St *Paul's conversion, on which so much depends, is uncertain, in spite of the data which he supplies in Gal. 1: 18 and 2; the earliest date would be just after the Crucifixion. The concluding part of Paul's life is also obscure, as his death is not recorded. Evidence from outside the NT is scanty and sometimes ambiguous; the firmest date is supplied by an inscription which shows that Gallio, before whom Paul appeared in Corinth (Acts 18: 12–18) was proconsul of Achaea in AD 51–2. Nevertheless these uncertainties hardly affect the main outline of our picture of the course of early Christianity.

Among the first attempts to put biblical chronology on a sound basis was J. *Ussher, Annales Veteris et Novi Testamenti (2 parts, 1650–9); its dates gained wide currency through their frequent printing in the margins of the AV. Modern attempts to deal with the problems of biblical chronology as a whole by E. Ruffini, Chronologia Veteris et Novi Testamenti in Aeram Nostram Collata (Rome, 1924); J. Finegan, Handbook of Biblical Chronology (Princeton, NJ, 1964).

On the chronology of the OT, D. N. Freedman, 'The Chronology of Israel and the Near East. Section A. Old Testament Chronology', in G. E. Wright (ed.), The Bible and the Ancient Near East: Essays in honor of William Foxwell Albright (1961), pp. 203–14, with notes, pp. 225–8; A. Jepsen and R. Hanhart, Untersuchungen zur israelitisch-jüdischen Chronologie (Beihefte zur ZATW, 88; 1964); R. R. Wilson, Genealogy and History in the Biblical World (Yale Near Eastern Researches, 7; 1977); J. Hughes, Secrets of the Times: Myth and History in Biblical Chronology (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Suppl. Series, 66; 1990). See also bibl. to individual books.

On the NT, the classic discussion is that of C. H. *Turner in HDB 1 (1900), pp. 403–25, s.v. 'Chronology in the New Testament'. U. Holzmeister, SJ, Chronologia Vitae Christi (Scripta Pontificii Instituti Biblici, 1936); G. Ogg, The Chronology of the Public Ministry of Jesus (1940); J. A. T. *Robinson, The Priority of John, ed. J. F. Coakley (1985), pp. 123–57 ('The Chronology of the Ministry'). G. Ogg, The Chronology of the Life of Paul (1968); A. Suhl, Paulus und seine Briefe: Ein Beitrag zur paulinischen Chronologie (Studien zum Neuen Testament, 11 [1975]); R. Jewett, A Chronology of Paul's Life (Philadelphia, 1979; British edn., Dating Paul's Life, London, 1979); G. Lüdemann, Paul, der Heidenapostel, 1: Studien zur Chronologie (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 123; Göttingen, 1980; Eng. tr., 1984); N. Hyldahl, Die Paulinische Chronologie (Acta Theologica Danica, 19; 1986). J. Lebreton, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 970–5, s.v. 'Jésus-Christ. Chronologie de la vie de Jésus', and F. Prat, ibid., 1 (1928), cols. 1299–304, s.v. See also Lives of Christ, cited under JESUS CHRIST, works on Paul, and bibl. to his various Epistles, and to Acts. For general discussions on chronology, see bibl. to CALENDAR.

Chrysippus (*c.*405–79), 'of Jerusalem', ecclesiastical writer. A native of Cappadocia, he accompanied his two brothers, Cosmas and Gabriel, to Jerusalem *c.*428 and became a monk at the laura of St *Euthymius. He was ordained priest *c.*455 and later succeeded Cosmas as guardian of the Holy Cross at the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre ('staurophylax'). His few surviving writings include panegyrics of (1) the BVM, (2) St Theodore Tiro, (3) St *Michael the Archangel, and (4) St *John Baptist.

The chief evidences for his life are the refs. in *Cyril of Scythopolis' 'Life of St Euthymius'. For text of the four panegyrics mentioned above see: for (1), ed. M. Jugie, AA, in PO 19 (1926), pp. 336–43 (a repr., with corrections, of edn. of F. *Ducaeus, 1624); for (2), ed. A. Sigalas (Byzantinisches Archiv, 7; 1921); for (3), ed. id. in Ἐπετηρὶς Ἑταιρείας Βυζαντινῶν Σπουδῶν, 3 (Athens, 1926), pp. 85–93; for (4), ed. id. (Texte und Forschungen zur byzantinisch-neugriechischen Philologie, 20; 1937). S. Vailhé, AA, 'Chrysippe Prêtre de Jérusalem', Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, 10 (1905), pp. 96–9. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 287 f. (nos. 6705–8). P. Bruns in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 2 (1994), cols. 1190, s.v.

Chrysogonus, St. Though his cultus at *Rome dates from the 5th cent. at latest, very little is known of him. Acc. to legend, he was arrested in Rome during *Diocletian's persecution and subsequently slain at *Aquileia. From the 6th cent. onwards he was supposed to have been the spiritual director of St *Anastasia of Rome, with whom he is held to have corresponded on the behaviour of Christians towards their pagan husbands and wives. His name is included in the *Canon of the Roman Mass. Feast day in the E., 22 Dec.; in the W., formerly 24 Nov., but now suppressed.

Chief source of the legend is the 'Passio S. Anastasiae', ed. H. *Delehaye, SJ, Étude sur le Légendier romain (Subsidia Hagiographica, 23; 1936), pp. 221–49; cf. also pp. 151–63. On the theory that Chrysogonus was orig. the owner of a church in Rome (titulus Chrysogoni), the name being later misunderstood as a dedication, cf. J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (1918), pp. 108–13. M. Mesnard, La Basilique de saint Chrysogone à Rome (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 9; 1935); R. Krautheimer, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, vol. 1, fasc. 3 (Rome, 1940), pp. 144–64; B. M. A. Ghetti, OFM, 'Nuove considerazioni sulla chiesa inferiore di S. Crisogono', Riv. A.C. 22 (1946), pp. 235–49. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; 1938), pp. 128–30, with further bibl. refs.

Chrysologus, St Peter (*c.*400–50), Bp. of *Ravenna. His episcopate coincided with the Empress *Galla Placidia's time in Ravenna. He seems to have preached before her, and shared her enthusiasm for ambitious building projects. A large collection of sermons attributed to him survives, but almost all his other writings are lost. In a letter to *Eutyches (449) he viewed his case with favour, though in a striking passage he asserted the necessity for adherence in matters of faith to the Roman see. The materials for his life are contained mainly in the historically unreliable 'Liber Pontificalis Ecclesiae Ravennatis' of Abbot *Agnellus (9th cent.). He was apparently named 'Chrysologus' (Gk. 'golden-worded') to make him a W. counterpart of '*Chrysostom' ('golden-mouthed'). In 1729 he was declared a '*Doctor of the Church'. Feast day, 30 July (formerly 4 Dec.).

Editio princeps of his Sermons by Agapitus Vincentinus, Bologna, 1534. Later edns., Bologna, 1643, and Venice, 1750; latter repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 52. 9–680; further sermons, with notes on authenticity of those previously pr., by A. Hamman, OFM, ibid., Supplementum, 3 (Paris, 1963), cols. 153–83. Sermons also ed. A. Olivar, OSB (CCSL 24, 24 A, 24 B; 1975–82). Id., Los sermones de San Pedro Crisólogo (Scripta et Documenta, 13; Montserrat, 1962), incl. some texts. Eng. tr. of Selected Sermons and Letter to Eutyches, with introd. by G. E. Ganss, SJ (Fathers of the Church, 17; 1953, pp. 3–287). Monographs by F. J. Peters (Cologne [1918]) and G. Böhmer (Paderborn, 1919). J. H. Baxter, 'The Homilies of St Peter Chrysologus', JTS 22 (1920–1), pp. 250–8; C. Jenkins, 'Aspects of the theology of St Peter Chrysologus', CQR 103 (1927), pp. 233–59. F. Sottocornola, L'Anno liturgico nei sermoni di Pietro Crisologo (Studia Ravennatensia, 1; Cesena, 1973). CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 87–93 (nos. 227–37). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 458 and 648. H. Koch in PW 19 (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1361–72, s.v. 'Petrus (122) Chrysologus'; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1541–6, s.v. 'Pierre (18) Chrysologue'.

chrysom. The 'chrism-robe' put on a child at Baptism, as a symbol of the cleansing of its sin. Originally it may have been a cloth put over the head, to prevent the *chrism from being rubbed off. If the child died within a month of its Baptism, the chrysom was used as a shroud; hence the expression 'chrysom child'. The use of the 'whyte vesture, commonly called the Chrysome' was ordered in the BCP of 1549. It was to be put on before the unction, not after it as in the pre-Reformation English rites, and returned to the priest at the mother's *churching. In the C of E its use disappeared in 1552 and has not been officially revived, except in the Province of *Southern Africa. It survives in the RC Church.

Chrysostom, Pseudo-. A very large number of St John *Chrysostom's sermons has come down to us, and his great repute as a preacher caused many sermons to be falsely ascribed to him. Of particular interest among these pseudonymous sermons are homilies by representatives of heretical movements of the later 4th cent. from which little else survives. Three paschal homilies have been ascribed to *Apollinaris of Laodicea (Cattaneo); two homilies for the octave of *Easter seem to be *Anomoean (Liébaert), and the Opus imperfectum in Matthaeum (PG 56. 611–946) consists of a series of Latin homilies preached by an *Arian bishop of the 5th or even the 6th cent. The sermons give a rare glimpse of the spirituality of such heretical movements.

Homélies Pascales, ed., with Fr. tr., by P. Nautin and F. Floërri (SC 27, 36, and 48; 1950–7); Deux Homélies Anoméennes pour l'octave de Pâques, ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Liébaert (ibid., 146; 1969). Other Homilies also ed. K.-H. Uthemann and others (Turnhout, 1994 ff.). Crit. text of Opus imperfectum by J. van Banning, SJ (CCSL 87 B, etc.; 1988 ff.). E. Cattaneo, SJ, Trois Homélies Pseudo-Chrysostomiennes sur la Pâque comme œuvre d'Apollinaire de Laodicée (Théologie Historique, 58 [1981]). F. Mali, Das 'Opus imperfectum in Matthaeum' und sein Verhältnis zu den Matthäuskommentaren von Origenes und Hieronymus (Innsbrucker theologische Studien, 34; 1991). J. A. de Aldama, SJ, Repertorium pseudochrysostomicum (Documents, Études et Répertoires publiés par l'Institut de Recherche et d'Histoire des Textes, 10; 1965), limited to works already pub. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 540–672 (nos. 4500–5197). H. J. Sieben in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 355–69, s.v. 'Jean Chrysostome (Pseudo-)', with bibl. See also bibl. to CHRYSOSTOM, ST JOHN.

Chrysostom, St John (*c.*347–407), Bp. of *Constantinople and '*Doctor of the Church'. He was educated for the law under the great pagan orator Libanius at *Antioch, where he studied theology under *Diodore of Tarsus, the leader of the *Antiochene School. He early felt a call to the monastic life. As the care of his widowed mother Anthusa prevented the immediate fulfilment of this desire, he lived for some time under rule at home, and later became a hermit (*c.*373–*c.*381), following the *Pachomian Rule with austerities which undermined his health. He was made deacon in 381, and served at Antioch under the bishop Flavian, who ordained him priest in 386, and appointed him to devote special attention to the work of preaching (a task in which his ability gained him the name of Chrysostom, 'golden-mouthed'). His powers of oratory were soon manifested in the famous series of sermons 'On the Statues' which he gave in Mar. and Apr. 387 after a riot at Antioch in which the Imperial statues had been overthrown. His preaching was directed esp. to the instruction and moral reformation of the nominally Christian society of his day. His sermons on Books of the Bible—Gen., Pss., Is., Mt., Jn., Acts, and the Pauline Epistles (incl. Heb.)—establish his title as the greatest of Christian expositors. These works combine a great facility for seeing the spiritual meaning of the author with an equal ability for immediate practical application. He was opposed, however, to the wholesale *allegorization of the Scriptures and stressed the importance of the literal sense. Against his wish, Chrysostom was made Patr. of Constantinople in 398, and immediately set about the work of reforming the city, where the corruption of court, clergy, and people alike had been encouraged by the complaisance and self-indulgence of his predecessor, St *Nectarius.

His combination of honesty, asceticism, and tactlessness, esp. in relation to the Empress Eudoxia, who with some reason took all attempts at moral reform as a censure of herself, was sufficient to work his ruin. When Chrysostom sheltered the *Tall Brothers who had fled from Egypt after the condemnation of *Origenism, *Theophilus, Patr. of *Alexandria, seized the opportunity to humiliate the see of Constantinople. At the Synod of the *Oak (403), carefully packed by Theophilus, Chrysostom was condemned on 29 charges. He was removed from his see, but shortly afterwards recalled by the court. Very soon, however, his plain speaking brought the displeasure of the Empress on him again, and his enemies saw their opportunity, and secured his banishment on a charge of unlawfully reassuming the duties of a see from which he had been canonically deposed (404). Even the support of the people of Constantinople, of the Pope (*Innocent I), and of the entire W. Church, failed to save him. He was exiled at first to near Antioch, and when it became clear that in spite of his enfeebled health he would not die there soon enough, he was moved to Pontus, and finally deliberately killed by enforced travelling on foot in severe weather. His chief claim to remembrance, apart from his personal holiness, rests on his preaching and exegesis. His early work, 'On the Priesthood', is a finely conceived description of the responsibilities of the Christian minister. Feast day in W., 13 Sept. (formerly 27 Jan., also observed in parts of the Anglican Communion); in E., 13 Nov. See also CHRYSOSTOM, PSEUDO-, and the following entries.

Collected edns. of his works, incl. much spuria, by F. *Ducaeus, SJ (12 vols., Paris, 1609–33), H. *Savile (8 vols., Eton, 1612, without Lat. tr.; with important prefaces and notes by I. *Casaubon and others, and generally, except for the portions ed. by F. *Field and modern edns. of individual treaties, still the best edn. of the text), and B. de *Montfaucon, OSB (13 vols., Paris, 1718–38). This last was repr. (the most convenient edn.), with revisions by G. R. L. von Sinner (13 vols., Paris, 'apud fratres Gaume', 1834–40); and, with suppls., in J. P. Migne, PG 47–64. Valuable edns. by F. Field of Homm. on Matt. (3 vols., Cambridge, 1839) and Interpr. Omnium Epp. Paulinarum (7 vols., Oxford, 1845–62). Other separate edns. incl. the De Sacerdotio ed. J. A. Nairn (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1906) and Contra subintroductas ed. J. Dumortier (Nouvelle Collection des Textes et Documents, 1955).

Several treatises have been ed. in SC: by A.-M. Malingrey, Ad eos qui scandalizati (as Sur la providence de Dieu, 79; 1961), a letter to Olympias from exile (Quod nemo laeditur, 103; 1964), Epp. ad Olympiadem (13bis; 1968), De Incomprehensibili (with others, 28bis; 1970), De inani gloria (188; 1972), De Sacerdotio (272; 1980), and Contra Anomoeos (as Sur l'Égalité du Père et du Fils, 396; 1994); by J. Dumortier, Ad Theodorum lapsum (117; 1966), Homilies on Is. 6: 1–6 (In illud, Vidi Dominum) (277; 1981), and Comm. in Isaiam (304; 1983); by H. Musurillo, SJ, De Virginitate (125; 1966); by B. Grillet and G. H. Ettlinger, SJ, Ad viduam juniorem and De non iterando conjugio (138; 1968); by A. Wenger, AA, eight previously unedited baptismal homilies, from Athos MS Stavronikita 6 (50bis., 1970); by A. Piédagnel, De laudibus S. Pauli (300; 1982) and three baptismal catecheses (366; 1990); by M. A. Schatkin and others, De S. Babyla contra Iulianum et Gentiles (362; 1990, with De S. hieromartyre Babyla, ed. B. Grillet and J.-N. Guinot); previously unpub. comm. on Job ed., with Fr. tr., by H. Sorlin and L. Neyrand, SJ (ibid. 346 and 348; 1988) and, with Ger. tr., by U. and D. Hagedorn (Patristische Texte und Studien, 35; 1990). Eng. tr. of sets of Homilies in LF, 16 vols., 1839–52, and NPNCF, 1st ser. 9–14, 1888–93; also of Homilies on Gen. by R. C. Hill (Fathers of the Church, 74, 82, and 87 [1986–92]); and of the eight rediscovered baptismal homilies (and four others), with valuable introd., by P. W. Harkins (ACW 31; 1963).

Life (pr. in edns. of Chrysostom) by *Palladius, entitled 'Dialogus de Vita S. Joannis Chrysostomi' (crit. edns. by P. R. Coleman-Norton, Cambridge, 1928, and, with Fr. tr., by A.-M. Malingrey and P. Leclercq, SC 341–2; 1988). Further biog. material in *Socrates, HE 6. 2–23, 7. 25–45, *Sozomen, HE 8. 2–28, and *Theodoret, HE 5. 27–36. Some impression of his posthumous fame emerges from F. Halkin, SJ (ed.), Douze Récits Byzantins sur Saint Jean Chrysostome (Subsidia Hagiographica, 60; 1977). Modern studies by A. Puech (Paris, 1891), id. ('Les Saints', 1900; Eng. tr., 1902), A. Moulard (Paris, 1941), P. Chrysostomus Baur, OSB (2 vols., Munich, 1929–1930; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1959–60; fundamental), and J. N. D. Kelly (London, 1995). Of primary importance, esp. for chronology, L. S. de *Tillemont, Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire ecclésiastique des six premiers siècles, 9 (1706), pp. 1–405 and 547–626. A. Naegle, Die Eucharistielehre des heiligen Johannes Chrysostomus (1900). S. Verosta, Johannes Chrysostomus, Staatsphilosoph und Geschichtstheologe (Graz, etc., 1960). P. Stockmeier, Theologie und Kult des Kreuzes bei Johannes Chrysostomus (Trierer Theologische Studien, 18; 1966). T. M. Finn, The Liturgy of Baptism in the Baptismal Instructions of St John Chrysostom (Catholic University of America Studies in Christian Antiquity, 15; 1967). C. Kannengiesser [SJ] (ed.), Jean Chrysostome et Augustin: Actes du Colloque de Chantilly 22–24 septembre 1974 (Théologie historique, 35 [1975]). O. Pasquato, SDB, Gli Spettacoli in S. Giovanno Crisostomo (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 201; 1976). R. L. Wilken, John Chrysostom and the Jews (Berkeley, Calif., and London, 1983). A. Stötzel, Kirche als 'neue Gesellschaft': Die humanisierende Wirkung des Christentums nach Johannes Chrysostomus (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 51; 1984). F.-X. Druet, Language, Images et Visages de la Mort chez Jean Chrysostome (Collection d'études classiques, 3; Namur, 1990). F. van de Paverd, St John Chrysostom, The Homilies on the Statues: An Introduction (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 239; Rome, 1991). J. H. W. G. Liebeschuetz, Barbarians and Bishops (Oxford, 1990), esp. pp. 166–227.

CPG 2 (1974), pp. 491–672 (nos. 4305–5197). Catalogue of MSS containing material ascribed to Chrysostom (incl. dubia and spuria) by M. Aubineau, R. E. Carter, SJ, and others, Codices Chrysostomici Graeci (Documents, Études et Répertoires publiés par l'Institut de Recherche et d'Histoire des Textes, 13, 14, 15, etc. [subsequent vols. not numbered]; 1968 ff.). B. C. Burger, Bibliotheca Chrysostomica (8 vols., Portland, Or., 1982 ff.); A.-M. Malingrey and others, Indices Chrysostomici (Hildesheim and New York, 1978 ff.); R. A. Krupp, Saint John Chrysostom: A Scripture Index (New York and London, 1984). E. Venables in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 518–35; G. Bardy in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 660–90, s.v. 'Jean Chrysostome'; P. W. Harkins in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 1041–4, s.v. 'John Chrysostom, St'; A. Wenger, AA, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 331–55, s.v. 'Jean 57. Jean Chrysostome'.

Chrysostom, Liturgy of St. The normal liturgy of the E. Orthodox Church used on all days when the Eucharistic liturgy is offered except on the ten days in the year for which the Liturgy of St *Basil is prescribed. The earliest surviving text is a *Barberini MS of the 8th or 9th cent. Though there are some early elements, in its present form the Liturgy is much later than the time of St *Chrysostom, whose name it bears. Most scholars question the grounds for associating it with him at all; recently, however, many passages for which parallels can be found in Chrysostom's works have led G. Wagner to defend the connection. It probably owed its great influence to being the liturgy of the Imperial capital, and after the older liturgies of St *James (*Jerusalem and *Antioch) and St *Mark (*Alexandria) had been considerably assimilated to it, it almost entirely superseded them in the 13th cent. It is used in several different languages in the Orthodox Churches of the E.

Gk. text in F. E. *Brightman, Liturgies Eastern and Western, 1 (1896), pp. 309–44 (based on MS Barb., iii. 55) and 353–99 (modern text). Eng. tr., with parallel Gk. text, by A. Kokkinakis, The Liturgy of the Orthodox Church (1979), pp. 86–143; also in The Divine Liturgy of . . . John Chrysostom (Oxford, 1995). Oldest Lat. version ed. A. Strittmatter, OSB, in Ephemerides Liturgicae, 55 (1941), pp. 2–73, and Traditio, 1 (New York, 1943), pp. 79–137. Syr. vers. ed. H. W. Codrington (Rome, 1940). S. [L.] Antoniadis, Place de la Liturgie dans la Tradition des Lettres grecques (Leiden, 1939), esp. pp. 50–86 and 153–61. C. Kucharek, The Byzantine–Slav Liturgy of St John Chrysostom: Its Origin and Evolution (Allendale, NJ [1971]). G. Wagner, Der Ursprung der Chrysostomusliturgie (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 49; 1973). J. Mateos, SJ, La Célébration de la Parole dans la Liturgie Byzantine (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 191; 1971); R. F. Taft, SJ, The Great Entrance: A History of the Transfer of Gifts and other Pre-Anaphoral Rites of the Liturgy of St Chrysostom (ibid. 200; 1975); id., A History of the Liturgy of St John Chrysostom, 4: The Diptychs (ibid. 238; 1991), with refs. to arts. which will form parts of other vols.

Chrysostom, The Prayer of St. The familiar prayer in the BCP was drawn by T. *Cranmer from the Liturgy of St *Chrysostom (q.v., ed. F. E. *Brightman, p. 367). In the original Book (1549) it is found only in the *Litany, where it owes its presence to the fact that in 'Chrysostom' (on which Cranmer was largely dependent for the English Litany) its place was near the Deacon's Litany. It was first included among the concluding prayers at Mattins and Evensong in 1662. Its authorship is unknown.

J. Dowden, The Workmanship of the Prayer Book (1899), pp. 227–9.

Church. (1) TERMINOLOGY. The Eng. 'church', Ger. Kirche, Dutch kerk, etc., come ultimately from the Gk.

κυριακόν, '[thing] belonging to the Lord', which was applied orig. to a church building. The Lat. ecclesia and its derivatives (Fr. église, Ital. chiesa, etc., including Welsh eglwys), although used of the building, come from the Gk. ἐκκλησία, which in secular Greek meant an assembly, primarily of citizens in a self-governing city (e.g. that of *Ephesus, Acts 19: 39). In the *Septuagint ἐκκλησία was used of the 'assembly' or 'congregation' of the Israelites (Heb. קָהָל and esp. of those 'within the covenant' as opposed to 'the stranger in your midst' (Deut. 23: 3, Neh. 13: 1). In Acts 7: 38 the word is used with this OT ref.

In the Gospels, the word ἐκκλησία occurs only twice on the Lord's lips, at Mt. 16: 18 (the words to St *Peter, 'upon this rock [petra] I will build my Church'), and at 18: 17 (when a brother will not heed private remonstrance, the matter is to be told to 'the Church'). In Acts the word is first found, in its Christian sense, in 5: 11, where 'the whole Church' is to be identified with 'the Church in Jerusalem' at 8: 1. (The best MSS do not attest the word at 2: 47, where it is found in the AV.) It is uncertain whether the Jerusalem Christians applied the equivalent Aramaic word to themselves at this date; but it is clear from St *Paul's Epp. that among Greek-speaking Christians ἐκκλησία was the regular word from an early date, both for a local Christian community (e.g. 'the Churches of Galatia', 'the Church of the Thessalonians', Gal. 1: 2, 1 Thess. 1: 1) and for the whole Christian community (e.g. 1 Cor. 12: 28).

(2) New Testament. The origins of the Church as a sect within 1st-cent. Judaism lie in the Lord's choice of 12 disciples (called *Apostles at Mk. 6: 30, Mt. 10: 2 and in Lk.), probably representing the 12 tribes of Israel (cf. Mt. 19: 28). Their mission was initially to Israel (cf. Mt. 10: 5), but soon after the Resurrection Gentiles began to join the Hellenists, or Greek-speaking Jewish Christians, probably first at *Antioch (cf. Acts 11: 20). Paul's Gentile mission and esp. the epistles which he wrote in the 50s laid foundations for the Gentile Christianity which became dominant after the fall of *Jersualem in 70 and the expulsion of Jewish Christians from *synagogues in the 80s. This 'parting of the ways' between Church and synagogue marked a large step in the emerging of early Catholic Christianity around 100 AD. The historical development from considerable diversity to a measure of uniformity is only partly visible because the sources are fragmentary, but the outlines of 1st-cent. life and worship can be detected. The Church's roots in Israel were all-important, and the relationship to contemporary Israel initially a vital issue (e.g. Rom. 11). Paul's fertile images (e.g. body, bride, temple) were taken up by later writers, and the experience of the Spirit was associated with a more settled ministry of *bishops, *presbyters, and *deacons.

(3) Catholicism and the Church. Though sociologically classifiable as a sect, the early Church never considered itself a merely voluntary association of individuals. From the outset its self-understanding was conditioned by its belief in God's inauguration of the new age and its imminent expectation of a new heaven and new earth (the *Kingdom of God). It constituted the faithful remnant of God's people who had recognized the coming of the *Messiah and soon understood its mission in universal terms (cf. Mt. 28: 19).

After the death of St *James (the Great), Paul and Peter in the 60s and the marginalizing of Jewish Christianity, new structures were needed and Church order developed. The memory of the Apostles was cherished and the emerging orthodoxy of the 2nd cent. aimed to be 'apostolic' in all things, repudiating as heretics those who were not. The essence of the Church was later epitomized in the traditional '*notes of the Church', namely unity, holiness, catholicity, and apostolicity. The concept is already present in Ephesians, though the term 'the *catholic church' first occurs in St *Ignatius (Ep. ad Smyrn., 8. 2). As teaching the Apostles' doctrine and historically descended from them, the Church is apostolic. Its membership (at least as far as the living are concerned), its orders of ministers, and its unity are all constituted by participation in visible sacraments, i.e. those of *Baptism and *Confirmation, of Holy *Orders and of the *Eucharist, respectively. In contrast with this visible Church 'Militant here in earth', there exists the invisible Church of the faithful departed, divided into the Church Expectant (undergoing purification in *purgatory) and the Church Triumphant (already enjoying the *beatific vision in heaven). Separation from the Church Militant is the sin of *schism, and rejection of its apostolic doctrine *heresy.

In early times the doctrine of the visible unity of the Church was accepted on all sides. The schismatic bodies which arose (e.g. *Montanists, *Novatianists, *Donatists) all considered themselves the whole Church. But a theology of the Church gradually developed which gave precision to the status of those in schism. Against rigorist movements such as Donatism, St *Augustine maintained that the sacraments were everywhere to be regarded as acts of the whole Church; their *validity (q.v.) depended not on the personal qualities of the minister but only on his sacramental status. In the following period authority in the W. Church came to be increasingly concentrated in the Papacy. The *Conciliar Theory challenged the notion that the Church could not act apart from the Pope, but to little effect.

After the schism between the E. and W., the RC and the E. *Orthodox Churches each maintained that the other was in schism, and that itself was the historic manifestation of the visible Church. In 1965 the mutual excommunications were withdrawn, without, however, the fundamental claims being much affected. Anglicans and others who do not accept the exclusive claim of any Church often maintain that all parts of the Church Militant, including the RC Church, are now to some extent in schism.

(4) Protestantism and the Church. The *Reformation led to a reformulation of the idea of the Church. It sought to proclaim its inner being in terms of the Word of God rather than in sacramental relationships. Two doctrines of the Church received wide acceptance: (a) the more conservative, that the Church is a visible body and in the Divine intention one throughout the world, but that in view of corruptions and errors which have arisen it is justified within a particular nation in reforming itself, even if this involves a breach of visible unity; (b) the more radical, that the true Church is in essence an invisible body, since the essential fact by which a man is saved and made a member of the Church is the inward fact of faith. Thus constituted, the Church is a body whose actual membership is known only to God. Most supporters of this view of the Church held that it was desirable that it should possess an outward and visible organization, membership of which should correspond as closely as possible to the true invisible Church, though identity was impossible. In the view of some the visible organization of the Church should as far as possible be one throughout Christendom, or at least throughout reformed Christendom. In each nation or area of civil government this visible unity was to be secured by an '*established religion', determined by decree of the ruler, and on this basis the national Churches on the *Lutheran or *Calvinist model were organized. But another group of theologians held that unity of organization between Christian congregations in different places was unnecessary. The *Independents maintained that the only essential outward unity was that of each local congregation and that national Churches were undesirable.

(5) CONTEMPORARY REVIVAL. In modern times fresh interest has been taken in the theology of the Church by Catholic, Orthodox, and Protestants alike. The revived understanding of the Bible, the renewed appreciation of eschatology, the growth of the *Ecumenical Movement and the desire for reunion, the reaction from individualism in politics (at least until the 1980s), organic doctrines in philosophy, and the increased sense of history have all played their part. The Church as such is being recognized in a new sense as a fundamental fact in the Christian Revelation. In the early part of the 20th cent. this renewed vision of the Church focused on the Pauline notion of the Body of Christ. Many aspects of this teaching found expression in *Pius XII's encyclical Mystici Corporis Christi (29 June 1943). However, such a conception of the Church still laid great stress on its institutional character. In the second half of the 20th cent., partly as a result of the *Liturgical Movement, increased stress was laid on the Church as sacramental (as the 'primordial Sacrament' or Ursakrament), an idea emphasized by Orthodox theologians who see the community gathered together to celebrate the Eucharist with its bishop as the primary manifestation of the Church. It has some affinities with the conception of the Church as centred in each congregation that has characterized the *Congregational and other Protestant Churches. In the RC Church a less institutional and juridical view found expression in the Second *Vatican Council's Constitution on the Church, Lumen Gentium (21 Nov. 1964), in which the Church is seen primarily as the People of God; it has subsequently been developed by a number of RC theologians including H. U. von *Balthasar and E. C. F. A. *Schillebeeckx.

ON NT ECCLESIOLOGY: F. J. A. *Hort, The Christian Ecclesia (1897); K. L. Schmidt, 'Die Kirche des Urchristentums', in Festgabe für Adolf Deissmann zum 60. Geburtstag (1927), pp. 258–319; R. N. Flew, Jesus and His Church: A Study of the Idea of the Ecclesia in the New Testament (1938); G. Johnston, The Doctrine of the Church of the New Testament (Cambridge, 1943); L. Cerfaux, La Théologie de l'Église suivant saint Paul (2nd edn., Unam Sanctam, 10; 1948; enlarged edn., ibid. 54, 1965; Eng. tr., 1959); E. Best, One Body in Christ: A Study of the Relationship of the Church to Christ in the Epistles of the Apostle Paul (1955); P. S. Minear, Images of the Church in the New Testament (Philadelphia [1960]; London, 1961); R. Schnackenburg, Die Kirche im Neuen Testament (Quaestiones Disputatae, 14 [1961]; Eng. tr. [1966]); J. Knox, The Church and the Reality of Christ (1963); C. K. Barrett, The Signs of an Apostle (Cato lecture, 1969; 1970); W. Klaiber, Rechtfertigung und Gemeinde: Eine Untersuchung zum paulinischen Kirchenverständnis (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 127; 1982); W. A. Meeks, The First Urban Christians: The Social World of the Apostle Paul (New Haven, Conn., and London [1983]); R. E. Brown, SS, The Churches the Apostles left Behind (New York and London, 1984), and other works of this author; J. D. G. Dunn, The Partings of the Ways: Between Christianity and Judaism and their Significance for the Character of Christianity (1991). K. L. Schmidt in TWNT 3 (1938), pp. 502–39, s.v. ἐκκλησία; separate Eng. tr., The Church (1949).

ON PATRISTIC ECCLESIOLOGY: E. Hatch, The Organization of the Early Christian Churches (1881); A. *Harnack, Entstehung und Entwickelung der Kirchenverfassung (1910; Eng. tr., The Constitution & Law of the Church, 1910); J. C. Plumpe, Mater Ecclesia: An Enquiry into the Concept of the Church as Mother in Early Christianity (Catholic University of America Studies in Christian Antiquity, 5; Washington, DC, 1943); G. Bardy, La Théologie de l'Église de saint Clément de Rome à saint Irénée (Unam Sanctam, 13; 1945); id., La Théologie de l'Église de saint Irénée au concile de Nicée (ibid. 14; 1947); H. von Campenhausen, Kirchliche Amt und geistliche Vollmacht in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 14; Tübingen, 1953; Eng. tr., 1969); W. Elert, Abendmahl und Kirchengemeinschaft in der alten Kirche hauptsächlich des Ostens (Berlin, 1954; Eng. tr., St Louis [1966]); J. Ratzinger, Volk und Haus Gottes in Augustins Lehre von der Kirche (Münchener theologische Studien, Systematische Abt. 7; 1954); H. Rahner, [SJ,] Symbole der Kirche: Die Ekklesiologie der Väter (Salzburg [1964]); R. F. Evans, One and Holy: The Church in Latin Patristic Thought (1972); R. Murray, SJ, Symbols of Church and Kingdom: A Study in Early Syriac Tradition (Cambridge, 1975). H. J. Vogt, in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 1049–62, s.v. 'Ecclesiologia' (Eng. tr., with some additional bibl., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 259–62).

ON THE MIDDLE AGES: H. de *Lubac, SJ, Corpus Mysticum: L'Eucharistie et l'Église au moyen âge (Théologie, 3, 1944; 2nd edn., 1949); Y. M.-J. *Congar, OP, L'Ecclésiologie du haut moyen-âge: De Saint Grégoire le Grand à la désunion entre Byzance et Rome (1968).

MORE SYSTEMATIC DISCUSSIONS: [F. D. *Maurice,] The Kingdom of Christ (3 vols. [1837]); W. *Palmer, Treatise on the Christian Church (2 vols., 1838); D. *Stone, The Christian Church (1905); H. B. *Swete, The Holy Catholic Church (1915); A. C. *Headlam, The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Reunion (1920); K. *Adam, Das Wesen des Katholizismus (1924; 5th edn., 1928; Eng. tr., 1929); D. *Bonhoeffer, Sanctorum Communio (Berlin, 1930; Eng. tr., 1963); É. Mersch, SJ, Le Corps mystique du Christ: Études de théologie historique (Museum Lessianum, Section théologique, 28–9; 1933; Eng. tr., 1938); id., La Théologie du Corps Mystique (ibid. 38–9; 1944; Eng. tr., St Louis [1951]); A. M. *Ramsey, The Gospel and the Catholic Church (1936; 2nd edn., 1956); H. de Lubac, SJ, Catholicisme: Les aspects sociaux du dogme (Unam Sanctam, 3; 1938; Eng. tr., 1950); Y. M.-J. Congar, OP, Chrétiens désunis: Principes d'un 'oecuménisme' catholique (Unam Sanctam, 1, 1937; Eng. tr., Divided Christendom, 1939); id., Esquisses du mystère de l'Église (ibid. 8, 1941); D. T. Jenkins, The Nature of Catholicity (1942); C. Journet, L'Église du Verbe incarné (Bibliothèque de la Revue Thomiste, 2 vols., 1941–51, 2nd edn. of vol. 1, 1955; Eng. tr. of vol. 1 [only], 1955); L. S. Thornton, CR, The Common Life in the Body of Christ ([1942]; 4th edn., 1963); E. L. Mascall, Christ, the Christian and the Church (1946); E. *Brunner, Das Missverständnis der Kirche (Zurich, 1951; Eng. tr., 1952); O. Semmelroth, SJ, Die Kirche als Ursakrament (Frankfurt am Main [1953]); N. N. Afanassieff and others, La Primauté de Pierre dans l'Église orthodoxe (Neuchâtel [1960]; Eng. tr., J. Meyendorff and others, The Primacy of Peter, 1963; 2nd edn., with additional material, Crestwood, NY, 1992); G. Wingren, Evangeliet och Kyrkan (Lund, 1960; Eng. tr., 1964); B. C. Butler, OSB, The Idea of the Church (1962); H. *Küng, Strukturen der Kirche (Quaestiones Disputatae, 17; 1962; Eng. tr., New York, 1964; London, 1965); id., Die Kirche (Freiburg, 1967; 2nd edn., 1968; Eng. tr., 1967); H. Mühlen, Una persona mystica: Die Kirche als das Mysterium der Identität des Heiligen Geistes in Christus und den Christen (Munich, 1964); J. Ratzinger, Das neue Volk Gottes (Düsseldorf [1969]); L. Bouyer, L'Église de Dieu, corps du Christ et temple de l'Esprit (1970); H. U. von Balthasar, Pneuma und Institution (Skizzen zur Theologie, 4; Einsiedeln [1974]); J. *Moltmann, Kirche in der Kraft des Geistes (Munich, 1975; Eng. tr., 1977); A. Acerbi, La Chiesa nel tempo: Sguardi sui progretti di relazioni tra Chiesa e società civile negli ultimi cento anni (Milan, 1979); R. P. McBrien, Catholicism, 2 (1980), pp. 565–729 (3rd edn. (one vol., 1994), pp. 569–782); J.-M.-R. Tillard, OP, L'Évêque de Rome (1982; Eng. tr., 1983); id., Églises d'Églises: L'ecclésiologie de communion (Cogitatio fidei, 143; 1987); J. D. Zizioulas, Being as Communion: Studies in Personhood and the Church (New York, 1985); W. Kasper, Theologie und Kirche (1987; Eng. tr., 1989), pt. 2. E. [C. F. A.] Schillebeeckx, OP, Mensen als verhaal van God (1989; Eng. tr., The Church: The Human Story of God, 1990).

M.-J. le Guillou and others in Sacramentum Mundi, 1 (1968), pp. 313–37, s.v. 'Church'; K. Berger and others in TRE 18 (1989), pp. 198–344, s.v. 'Kirche', with extensive bibl.

Church, Richard William (1815–90), Dean of *St Paul's. He was born at Lisbon and spent his earlier years in Florence. In 1833 he was sent to Wadham College, Oxford, because the college at that time, under B. P. Symons, had a reputation for Evangelicalism. He came under the influence of C. *Marriott of Oriel, who enlisted him in his band of translators of the Fathers, and introduced him to J. H. *Newman, E. B. *Pusey, and J. *Keble. In 1838 he was elected a Fellow of Oriel, where he remained until 1852, when he became Rector of Whatley in Somerset. As Junior Proctor he shared with H. P. Guillemard of Trinity in the dramatic vetoing of the condemnation of Tract 90 in the university convocation (1845). He was one of the prime movers in establishing the Guardian, which from the first (1846) espoused High Church principles. After nearly twenty years at Whatley, Church was appointed in 1871 to the Deanery of St Paul's, where he remained until his death. In The Gifts of Civilization (1870, incorporating earlier work) he developed his beliefs about the relation of the Church to the world; he illustrated the same theme in his lives of *St Anselm (1870), Spenser (1879), and Bacon* (1884). His book The Oxford Movement, Twelve Years, 1833–1845 (posthumously published in 1891) is a masterpiece, as a judicious and balanced interpretation of the history of the movement.

Life and Letters of Dean Church, ed. by his daughter, M. C. Church (1894). D. C. Lathbury, Dean Church (1905); B. A. Smith, Dean Church: The Anglican Response to Newman (1965). [W.] O. Chadwick, The Spirit of the Oxford Movement (Cambridge, 1990), pp. 135–53 ('The Oxford Movement and its Reminiscencers'). H. C. Beeching in DNB, Suppl. 2 (1901), pp. 6–9.

Church Army. An Anglican society of lay *evangelists founded in 1882 by Wilson *Carlile, who brought together a number of groups already existing in some parishes. It is, to some extent, similar to the *Salvation Army. Carlile was convinced that lay people could preach the Gospel, and all officers of the Church Army are admitted to the office of evangelist at their commissioning and are licensed to their work by a diocesan bishop. The Army represents a broad spectrum of churchmanship. Its activities include diocesan and parochial evangelism, as well as varied social work (since 1889) co-ordinated with local authorities. Its officers work on chaplaincy teams in prisons, the armed forces, and in hospitals. There are independent societies in Australia, New Zealand, Canada, the USA, the Caribbean, and E. Africa.

K. [J.] Heasman, Army of the Church (1968). M. Turnbull, God's Front Line (1978); D. [MacL.] Lynch, Chariots of the Gospel: The Centenary History of the Church Army (Worthing, W. Sussex, 1982). See also works cited under CARLILE, W.

Church Assembly. This body, officially 'The National Assembly of the Church of England', was established by the *Convocations in 1919 'to deliberate on all matters concerning the Church of England and to make provision in respect thereof'. In 1970, as a result of the *Synodical Government Measure 1969, it was superseded by the General Synod. It was composed of a House of Bishops, comprising all the members of the two Upper Houses of Convocation; a House of Clergy, consisting of all the members of the two Lower Houses of Convocation; and a House of Laity, elected every five years by the representative electors of the Diocesan Conferences. The Assembly's most important function was to prepare ecclesiastical measures for transmission to Parliament under powers given by the Church of England Assembly (Powers) Act 1919 ('the *Enabling Act'). Parliament could either accept or reject (but not amend) such measures; if accepted they received the royal assent and became law. Measures passed by the Assembly and Parliament included the Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measures 1921 and 1956, the Cathedrals Measures 1931 and 1963, the Parsonages Measure 1938, and the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963. Although the Revised Prayer Book was twice accepted by the Assembly, in 1927 and 1928, it was in each case subsequently rejected by Parliament. The Assembly exercised great influence, through the Central Board of Finance, on the financial affairs of the C of E.

The Reports of the Proceedings were pub. conjointly by the Church Information Board and the *SPCK. The Church Assembly and the Church: A Book of Essays (1930). K. A. Thompson, Bureaucracy and Church Reform (Oxford, 1970), pp. 179–211. The Church Assembly News: The Official Publication of the Church Assembly (London, 1924–69, monthly). Much contemporary information is contained in The Official Year Book of the National Assembly of the Church of England [from 1963 The Church of England Year Book] (annually).

Church Association. A society formed in 1865 during the ritual controversies by several leading Evangelical Churchmen to maintain the Protestant ideals of faith and worship in the C of E. Previously active in litigation (cf. *Church Discipline Act, *Ritual Commission), it came ultimately to rely rather on publicity. In 1950 it became (with the National Church League) the Church Society.

Church Building Society. Founded in 1818 and incorporated in 1828, the Incorporated Church Building Society has taken an important and continuous part in furthering the construction and repair of Anglican churches in England and Wales. Since 1963 it has been managed by the Historic Churches Preservation Trust (founded in 1953).

Church Commissioners for England. The body formed in 1948 by the amalgamation of the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners and *Queen Anne's Bounty. It is responsible for managing the greater part of the C of E's historic assets (stocks and shares as well as agricultural, commercial and residential property), the income of which is used to help pay, house, and provide pensions for the clergy. The Commissioners number 95: the two archbishops and 41 other diocesan bishops, three 'Church Estates Commissioners' (two appointed by the Crown and one by the Abp. of *Canterbury), 25 persons appointed formerly by the *Church Assembly and now by the General *Synod (five deans or provosts, ten other clerks in holy orders, and ten laymen), four laymen appointed by the Crown, four persons appointed by the Abp. of Canterbury, ten officers of state (see the corresponding list of former 'Ecclesiastical Commissioners'), two Aldermen of the City of London, the Lord Mayors of London and York, and one representative each of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The general business of the Commissioners is dealt with by its Board of Governors, which comprises no more than 30 members. In addition to their main financial responsibilities, the Commissioners have certain wider administrative duties in connection with pastoral reorganization and the future of redundant churches. They also recommend to the General Synod for submission to Parliament the scale of statutory fees to be chargeable for marriages, funerals, and other rites. After serious financial losses in the 1980s, radical changes were recommended by the Turnbull Commission.

The Church Commissioners Measure 1947, as finally approved by the Assembly, 21 June 1946, is pr. for the Church Assembly, CA 794A (1946). P. B. Wilbraham, The First Five Years: The Story of the Church Commissioners, 1948–53 (1953). Working as One Body: The Report of the Archbishops' Commission on the Organization of the Church of England (1995), esp. pp. 81–95.

Church Congresses. A series of unofficial gatherings of Anglican Churchmen which were held between 1861 and 1938 (annually down to 1913, and less regularly thereafter). The first meeting (1861) was at Cambridge. Owing to other means of contact between different centres of Church life in the provinces, e.g. the setting-up of the *Church Assembly in 1920, the usefulness of the Congresses declined after the War of 1914–18.

Official reports of the Proceedings of the first 59 congresses were issued in uniform vols., 1862–1925; thereafter in the name of the editor.

Church Discipline Act 1840. This Act empowered the bishop, in cases of an alleged non-criminal offence by a cleric (e.g. irregularities in doctrine or ritual, also *simony), either to issue a Commission of Inquiry which should institute a preliminary investigation and decide whether or not there was a prima facie case or, alternatively, himself to transmit the case by Letters of Request to the provincial Court of Appeal. Conviction might be followed by suspension or deprivation. The Act was repealed by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963.

R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (2nd edn., 1895), 2, pp. 1013–25.

Church Historical Society. A society founded in 1894 (under the presidency of Mandell *Creighton, Bp. of London) for the diffusion of historical knowledge esp. in so far as it affected the authority and claims of the C of E. Through the *SPCK it issued a series of writings, originally of small dimensions, but all marked by a high standard of scholarship. It was wound up in 1974.

Church House, Westminster. The building in which the *Convocation of Canterbury and the General *Synod of the C of E generally sit and the headquarters of many Anglican organizations. It replaced a set of buildings erected between 1891 and 1902 on a site fronting on Dean's Yard, *Westminster. It was designed by Sir Herbert Baker, and completed and opened in 1940.

Church Hymnary, The. The authorized hymnal of most of the *Presbyterian Churches in Britain. The first edition was issued in 1898, and much revised forms in 1927 and 1973. The third edition contains nearly 700 hymns, together with *doxologies, *canticles, and a selection of psalms, both metrical and prose.

J. M. Barkley (ed.), Handbook to the Church Hymnary Third Edition (1979).

Church Meeting. The regular (usually monthly) assembly of all the members of a *Congregational or *Baptist Church for the purposes of Church administration, the admission of members and the election of officers, and the exercise of discipline in that particular congregation. 'The covenanted people of God' meeting in such a local unit have complete autonomy.

Church Missionary Society. See CMS.

Church's Ministry among the Jews. The 'London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews' was founded as an interdenominational body in 1809. It became an Anglican Society in 1815, though Christians of other denominations serve with it. Its title for official purposes is unchanged, but early in the 20th cent. it became known as the 'Church Mission to the Jews' and in 1962 as the 'Church's Ministry among the Jews'. It operates mainly in Israel and Britain, but is active in S. Africa and S. America, and there is an autonomous branch in the USA.

W. T. Gidney, The History of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, from 1809 to 1908 (1908). Shorter histories by G. H. Stevens, Go Tell My Brethren [1959] and W. Barker, A Fountain Opened (1983).

Church of England. It is impossible to say at what date Christianity was first planted in Great Britain, but the presence of British bishops at the Council of *Arles in 314 is evidence of the existence of an organized Church. With the coming of the Anglo-Saxon invaders, British Christianity and Christians were driven before them into the western parts of Britain and the new faith suffered a temporary eclipse. The conversion of the Teutonic pagan conquerors was effected from two sources: by the labours of *Celtic missionaries from the monasteries of Ireland and Scotland and by the mission headed by St *Augustine sent from Rome (597). To this mission the British Christians would at first pay neither obedience nor submission. The Christianization of the Heptarchy progressed slowly, and with many set-backs, for the varying fortunes of the various kingdoms involved those of the Christian bishops. Before the several local kingdoms gave place to a loosely united national kingdom the Church had first to settle down to the task of administrative unification of its scattered dioceses. Before this in turn could be attempted, the differences between the Celtic and Roman missions had to be composed. Springing from a fundamental difference of temper, the Celtic monastic tradition lacked the administrative organization of the Roman Church, and the deep divergences between the two found expression in many minor points, such as the date of Easter. At a synod held at *Whitby in 664 the conflict was at length resolved in favour of the Roman customs, and the way thereby opened for the organization of the whole Church in England under one head.

*Theodore of Tarsus, sent from Rome as Abp. of *Canterbury, undertook this vital work of unification by subdivision of dioceses, summoning of ecclesiastical councils, legislative decrees, and encouragement of learning. He was the first of a long line of statesmen-archbishops of the English Church. His work was mainly that of organizing the higher administration of the Church, for the factor of the proprietary church presented a stubborn and enduring obstacle to the assertion of episcopal control over the secular parish priests. Anglo-Saxon Christianity enjoyed a transient golden age following the vigorous primacy of Theodore, producing both scholars such as *Bede, the author of one of the greatest historical narratives of all ages, and missionaries such as *Boniface of Crediton. England, largely through its monasteries, both shared in and contributed to the renaissance of the age of *Charlemagne.

Darkness, however, supervened again upon this period of light. The plundering raids of the Northmen fell with especial devastation upon religious houses and contributed to declining standards of clerical life and learning. The reign of *Alfred provided a temporary barrier against the Danes, and saw the beginnings of a revival of religion and learning, but the confusion of the times was detrimental to the highest developments of both. Under Edgar, Abp. *Dunstan, in addition to his work as a statesman, laboured with his colleagues, St *Ethelwold and St *Oswald, to reform the monasteries and cathedral chapters in accordance with contemporary European movements. The isolation of England from the main life of the Continent, both in political and ecclesiastical affairs, could not be maintained; and the question whether these islands would pass into the orbit of a NW Scandinavian empire or become joined to the main states of W. Europe was finally settled by the Norman Conquest under *William I. The last of the old English kings, *Edward the Confessor, had assisted the introduction of Norman culture. He also refounded and rebuilt the famous abbey-church of St Peter at *Westminster.

With the Norman domination, the English Church entered into the mainstream of European religion at a time when the Hildebrandine reforming movement, associated with the pontificate of *Gregory VII, was powerfully affecting the life of the Church. *Lanfranc, the new Norman Abp. of Canterbury, assisted by a body of foreign bishops and abbots, led the way to a revival of religious life in England. The Norman age saw the removal of episcopal sees from remote villages to cities and the creation of the dioceses of *Ely and *Carlisle, the beginning of that tremendous outburst of building of which the cathedrals constitute the finest monuments, the restoration of learning and education, and the reorganization of ecclesiastical administration. Most important of all, the separation of the ecclesiastical and civil courts opened the way for the entrance of the Roman canon law, itself the chief agent of Papal control throughout the W. Church. The English Church henceforth could not escape the ubiquitous influence of the Popes. Under kings less scrupulous than William I, relations between Church and State were not harmonious. The *investiture conflict was itself but a symbol of the attempt of the spiritual power to free itself from the control of the temporal, which in the lower orders of the clergy was typified by the proprietary church and in the episcopate by the contest between Papacy and kings over questions of electing bishops. *Anselm maintained this struggle on its highest plane of principle in his differences with Henry I, whilst Thomas *Becket's dramatic conflict with Henry II, ending in his martyrdom, was evidence of the personal passions inextricably interlocked with the assertion of principle. Henry II believed himself to be maintaining the ancient customs of the English Crown, as asserted by Henry I, but Becket was representative of the augmented prestige of the Papacy consequent on the Hildebrandine movement and the development of canon law. Behind this foreground of struggle the English Church was influenced by the several monastic revivals of Europe, an Englishman, Stephen Harding, being the author of the nucleus of the Carta Caritatis, the rule of the *Cistercian Order.

The 13th cent. was in many ways the culmination of the Middle Ages. In England, after the combined victory of Church and barons over King *John symbolized in Magna Carta, promising freedom to the Church from royal absolutism, the long reign of Henry III afforded wide opportunities for the Papacy and the Church. Under Henry, himself a king of deep piety and the second refounder of Westminster Abbey, the Papacy came to exercise a marked influence in episcopal appointments, esp. to the see of Canterbury, and sent representatives to England to seek financial aid for the Papal struggle against *Frederick II. During his reign, moreover, the *Friars came to England, university life was fostered, the constitutions of Otto and Ottobuono developed ecclesiastical law, and amongst the Henrician episcopate was numbered one of the most famous of all English prelates, *Grosseteste of Lincoln, distinguished alike as scholar, pastor, and administrator. *Innocent III had died very shortly before Henry's accession, but the influence of his ecclesiastical reforms, esp. as reflected in the decrees of the Fourth *Lateran Council of 1215, were felt in the English Church during his rule. There followed a period of consolidation of royal power under Edward I and, after the brief misrule of his son, under Edward III, whose reign saw the development of parliamentary institutions in England and the successful struggle of the lower clergy to avoid inclusion of their proctors in the lower parliamentary house.

With the accentuation of national self-consciousness on the one hand, and the Papal scandals of the *Babylonian captivity and *Great Schism on the other, the exactions and policy of the Roman see became the subject of increasing criticism in England. During the Hundred Years War with France many alien priories were suppressed, and their revenues diverted to the crown, whilst the statutes of *Provisors and *Praemunire attempted to curtail in the royal interest the Papal practice of diverting the revenues of English benefices to the support of foreign ecclesiastics and the payment of Papal creditors. The failure of the *Conciliar Movement, however, demonstrated the impossibility of a constitutional Papacy, and national kings found their interests better served by concordats with the Papacy through which a financial division of the spoils of the Church and a sharing of ecclesiastical appointments were effected. The chief results of the policy of concordats were to strengthen the hold of the monarchy on the Church in England and to reduce any corporate sentiment of loyalty towards the Papacy on the part of the episcopate.

When, in the 16th cent., the Tudor sovereigns deemed it expedient to measure their strength against the Papacy, they found many elements in the nation ready to lend their support. Criticism of ecclesiastical wealth, accompanied amongst the lower classes by sporadic heresy, had been prominent since the time of J. *Wycliffe. Ambitious men cast occasional glances upon the riches of monastic property. Common lawyers bore the canonists a deep grudge, and there may have been wider resentment of Papal exactions. More intangible were the evidences of religious yearnings, represented amongst the learned by the humanist revolt against Scholasticism and devotion to the study of Hebrew and Greek of which *Erasmus and J. *Colet were typical in England, and expressed amongst the literate by the purchase of newly printed religious books and the expansion of domestic piety. The occasion of the Tudor Reformation was the famous 'divorce' of *Henry VIII; but its causes lay deeper. T. *Wolsey may have weakened the affection amongst many of the bishops for Papal supremacy, whilst indicating the advantages of unified control of the English Church. Under Henry VIII the *Convocations acknowledged the King to be Supreme Head on earth of the Church of England, and a series of laws severed the financial, judicial, and administrative bonds between Rome and England. Despite the influx of *Lutheran books and ideas and the inclusion of men of reforming opinions amongst the episcopate, Henry VIII allowed only limited doctrinal changes. His order for the setting-up of the *Great Bible in all churches was an event of which the full influence and importance were not realized until later. Apart from the overthrow of Papal supremacy and the bringing of Convocation under the control of the Crown, the main events of this reign were negative, such as the *dissolution of the monasteries and the destruction of shrines. Under *Edward VI, Abp. T. *Cranmer produced the First and Second Books of *Common Prayer in 1549 and 1552, an English *Ordinal, and a statement of doctrine, the *Forty-Two Articles, and the State seized the endowments of the *chantries. This advance towards Protestantism was followed by a reaction under *Mary which restored the Papal supremacy and undid much of the work of the two previous reigns. Upon the accession of *Elizabeth I the Papal obedience was again repudiated, the Crown assumed the title of 'Supreme Governor', the Second Edwardine Prayer Book with some changes became the service book of the Church of England, the Articles of Religion were reduced to *Thirty-Nine, and the bishops, despite the caution of Elizabeth and Abp. M. *Parker, led a campaign of Protestant evangelism.

Two bodies of critics opposed the Elizabethan settlement. Conservative sentiment remained strong among the lower clergy and the laity; Popish *recusants were sustained by missionary priests from continental colleges, and the *Roman Catholic Church in England and Wales preserved a continuous (if at times clandestine) existence. On the other side a considerable volume of Protestant opinion regarded the Prayer Book, Articles, and episcopacy as only a half-way house to a fuller and better reformation. Almost all divines of this standpoint remained within the Church, striving for changes from within, and controversy ranged over a wide ground from the wearing of the surplice to the reform of the Prayer Book and even the supplanting of episcopacy by *presbyterianism. In J. *Jewel and R. *Hooker the C of E found apologists against both Rome and Geneva, who appealed to Scripture, the Fathers, and human reason, but most educated ministers were moderate *Calvinists and there was little theological dispute. Under *James I the Convocations, by royal licence and assent, published the *Canons of 1604; but under his son, *Charles I, the ascendancy of Abp. W. *Laud and his endeavours to secure a higher standard of common order in the Church sharpened *Puritan criticism and made episcopacy and Anglicanism a subject of conflict in the Civil Wars. The victory of parliament led first to a presbyterian reform, and then, owing to the influence of the Army, to *Independency. During the Commonwealth and Protectorate the use of the BCP was prohibited, and benefices were held by episcopalian, presbyterian, and independent ministers indifferently, though clandestine BCP services continued. With the restoration of *Charles II, the C of E returned to its position as the established Church. The failure of an attempt at comprehension at the *Savoy Conference was followed by a revision of the Prayer Book, its enforcement by a new Act of *Uniformity in 1662, and by persecuting measures against dissenters. The attempts of Charles II and *James II to use the royal prerogative of indulgence to secure toleration for dissenters and Papists failed, and James II's open attack on the C of E was largely responsible for his downfall. The Protestant succession in the persons of William of Orange and later the House of Hanover delivered the Church from the dreaded danger of Popery.

After a century of fierce controversy against both Papist and Puritan, the C of E settled down from 1689 to an epoch of quiescence. A limited religious toleration pacified the dissenters; the Convocation, having lost its power of voting clerical taxation, sank into torpor; theological disputes became unpopular; and the alliance of Church and State became a mutually defensive pact against all subversive forces. The *Methodist revival was the parent both of a new Christian body and of the Anglican *Evangelical revival. *Latitudinarianism continued to dominate the intellectual atmosphere of the Georgian age, until the thoroughgoing reforms of the third decade of the 19th cent. aroused the protest of J. *Keble and effected a second administrative reformation of the Church. From this last there sprang new bishoprics and parishes, and a series of financial and administrative reforms, followed by the revival of Convocation. From Keble's protest proceeded the *Oxford Movement, which laid a new emphasis upon the catholic and apostolic character of the established Church, and upon the order of episcopacy. The Tractarian leaders, esp. J. H. *Newman and E. B. *Pusey, became the storm-centres of much controversy, and this initial period of strife culminated in the secession to Rome of Newman (1845), and at a later date of H. E. *Manning (1851).

When this revival of Church life became involved in ceremonial novelties, with consequent litigation, a generation of acute disputation set in. From another standpoint new problems of biblical interpretation and of the relation of theology to secular science produced controversies of another kind, which centred in the publication of such composite volumes as Essays and Reviews* and Lux Mundi*. Behind the dismal series of so-called ritualistic lawsuits, the Church was attempting to adjust its beliefs to a revolutionary background of human knowledge. Relations between Church and State were strained, and the 20th cent. opened with much continuation of controversy. These disputes tended to obscure the often growing and deepening activities of the Church in education and pastoral ministration. At the close of the First World War in 1919 a readjustment of the relations of Church and State was effected by the passing of the Church of England National Assembly (Powers) Act. By this measure the three houses of the Assembly, of bishops, clergy, and laity, were given powers to prepare legislation on ecclesiastical matters for the consideration of parliament. The modification worked well until, in 1927 and 1928, the House of Commons twice rejected a project for the revision of the Prayer Book, and created a deadlock in the relations between the *Church Assembly and parliament.

At the end of the Second World War (1945), the major problems facing the C of E were the need for pastoral reorganization and the provision of adequate financial resources, esp. for the stipends of the clergy. Revision of the Canons was achieved (1969). Lengthy discussions on reunion with the Methodist Church were abortive (1972; see ANGLICAN–METHODIST CONVERSATIONS), as were the subsequent attempts to establish a Covenant with the *United Reformed Church, the Methodists, *Moravians, and *Disciples of Christ (1982; see REUNION). Nevertheless, closer relations between the C of E and the Free Churches, as well as with the RC Church, have been characteristic of the post-war period; since 1972 members of other Churches have been free to receive Communion in Anglican churches. Since the 1960s there has been much discussion on the limits of theological orthodoxy. A shortage of clergy and a drop in Church membership have posed problems, and the laity has come to play an increasingly important part in the liturgical, pastoral, and governmental life of the Church. In most parts of the C of E the focus of worship is now predominantly Eucharistic. Prayer Book revision, after years of experimental services, culminated in the publication of the *Alternative Service Book (1980); it was facilitated by the *Worship and Doctrine Measure 1974, which gave the C of E liberty, under certain safeguards, to order its own worship. Church government was restructured by the *Synodical Government Measure 1969, and in 1976 the Church, through its *Crown Appointments Commission, was given a dominant voice in the choice of its bishops. Recent years have been overshadowed by the controversy surrounding the ordination of *women, which was opposed by many *Evangelicals and *Anglo-Catholics on different grounds. Nevertheless, the Deacons (Ordination of Women) Measure 1986 led to women being admitted to the diaconate and was followed by pressure for them to be made priests. This issue was even more divisive. By a small margin the Priests (Ordination of Women) Measure was passed by the General Synod in 1992 and approved by Parliament in 1993, the first women being ordained in 1994. The Measure allowed for parishes to refuse to have a woman as incumbent and accompanying legislation authorized financial compensation for most full-time stipendiary clergy who felt bound in conscience to resign in consequence of the ordination of women. An Act of Synod (the Episcopal Ministry Act) 1993 made provision for three provincial bishops who would, under the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop, minister in those parishes which were unwilling to accept the ministrations of bishops who had been involved in the ordination of a woman.

See also ANGLICAN COMMUNION and ANGLICANISM.

The principal authority for the early history of Christianity in England is Bede, HE. Councils & Synods with other Documents Relating to the English Church: 1, A.D. 871–1204, ed. D. Whitelock, M. Brett and C. N. L. Brooke (2 vols., Oxford, 1981); 2, 1205–1313, ed. F. M. Powicke and C. R. Cheney (2 vols., ibid., 1964). General collection of docs. in Gee and Hardy. E. W. Watson, The Church of England (HUL, 1914; 3rd edn. with additional ch. by A. [T. P.] Williams, 1961). J. R. H. Moorman, A History of the Church in England (1953; 3rd edn., 1973), with bibl. D. L. Edwards, Christian England [to 1918] (3 vols., 1981–4). F. Makower, Die Verfassung der Kirche von England (1894; Eng. tr., 1895). S. C. Carpenter, The Church in England, 597–1688 (1954). [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, The Monastic Order in England (Cambridge, 1940; 2nd edn., 1963); id., The Religious Orders in England (3 vols., 1948–59). C. H. Lawrence (ed.), The English Church and the Papacy in the Middle Ages (1965). Z. N. Brooke, The English Church and the Papacy from the Conquest to the Reign of John (1931). J. C. Dickinson, The Later Middle Ages: From the Norman Conquest to the Eve of the Reformation (An Ecclesiastical History of England, 2; 1979). J. R. H. Moorman, Church Life in England in the Thirteenth Century (1945). K. L. Wood-Legh, Studies in Church Life in England under Edward III (1934). W. A. Pantin, The English Church in the Fourteenth Century (Cambridge, 1955). E. Duffy, The Stripping of the Altars: Traditional Religion in England c.1400–c.1580 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1992). A. G. Dickens, The English Reformation (1964; 2nd edn., 1989). J. J. Scarisbrick, The Reformation and the English People (Ford Lectures, 1982; Oxford 1984). C. [A.] Haigh, English Reformations (ibid., 1993), passim. P. Collinson, The Religion of Protestants: The Church in English Society 1559–1625 (Ford Lectures, 1979; Oxford, 1982); id., The Birthpangs of Protestant England: Religious and Cultural Change in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (Basingstoke, 1988). F. Heal and R. O'Day (eds.), Church and Society in England: Henry VIII to James I (London and Basingstoke, 1977); D. [N. J.] MacCulloch, The Later Reformation in England 1547–1603 (ibid., 1990); S. Doran and C. Durston, Princes, Pastors and People: The Church and Religion in England 1529–1689 (1991). [J. E.] C. Hill, Economic Problems of the Church from Archbishop Whitgift to the End of the Long Parliament (Oxford, 1956). K. Fincham (ed.), The Early Stuart Church, 1603–1642 (1993). W. A. Shaw, A History of the English Church during the Civil Wars and under the Commonwealth, 1640 1660 (2 vols., 1900). R. G. Usher, The Reconstruction of the English Church (2 vols., 1910). I. M. Green, The Re-Establishment of the Church of England, 1660–1663 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1978). J. Spurr, The Restoration Church of England 1646–1689 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1991); J. I. A. Champion, The Pillars of Priestcraft Shaken: The Church of England and its Enemies, 1660–1730 (Cambridge, 1992). J. W. Legg, English Church Life from the Restoration to the Tractarian Movement (1914); J. Walsh and others (eds.), The Church of England c.1689–c.1833: From Toleration to Tractarianism (Cambridge, 1993). G. F. Nuttall and [W.] O. Chadwick (eds.), From Uniformity to Unity, 1662–1962 (1962). N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker: Aspects of English Church History 1660–1768 (Ford Lectures for 1958; Cambridge, 1959). Id., Church and State in England in the XVIIIth Century (Birkbeck Lectures for 1931–3; 1934). S. C. Carpenter, Eighteenth Century Church and People (1959); id., Church and People, 1789–1889 (1933). [E.] G. Rupp, Religion in England 1688–1791 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986). E. R. Norman, Church and Society in England, 1770–1970: A Historical Study (Oxford, 1976). O. J. Brose, Church and Parliament: The Reshaping of the Church of England 1828–1860 (1959). E. R. Wickham, Church and People in an Industrial City (1957). [W.] O. Chadwick, The Victorian Church (2 vols., 1966–70). R. Lloyd, The Church of England in the Twentieth Century (2 vols., 1946–50; rev. as The Church of England 1900–1965; 1966). A. Wilkinson, The Church of England and the First World War (1978). K. A. Thompson, Bureaucracy and Church Reform: The Organizational Response of the Church of England to Social Change 1800–1965 (Oxford, 1970). R. E. Rodes, Law and Modernization in the Church of England: Charles II to the Welfare State (Notre Dame, Ind., and London, 1991). R. P. Flindall (ed.), The Church of England 1815–1945: A Documentary History (1972). D. L. Edwards, Leaders of the Church of England 1828–1944 (1971; updated, rev. edn., without notes, 1978). P. A. Welsby, A History of the Church of England 1945–1980 (Oxford, 1984). A. Hastings, A History of English Christianity 1920–1985 (1986), passim. DECH. For works on the Pre-Conquest period, see s.v. ANGLO-SAXON CHURCH; for the 15th cent., see also bibl. to LOLLARDY and WYCLIFFE, J.; for the period of the Reformation, see bibl. to CRANMER, T., CROMWELL, T., EDWARD VI, ELIZABETH I, HENRY VIII, and WOLSEY; for the 18th cent. onwards see also bibl. to EVANGELICALISM; from the beginning of the 19th cent. among the most important sources are the biographies of leading churchmen such as F. *Temple, R. T. *Davidson, C. G. *Lang, W. *Temple, A. P. *Stanley, E. B. *Pusey, G. K. A. *Bell, G. F. *Fisher, A. M. *Ramsey, etc.; for this period see also bibl. to OXFORD MOVEMENT. On the whole subject see also entry ANGLICANISM, and bibl.

Church of the East (or *Assyrian Church of the East). It is frequently, but misleadingly, referred to as the *Nestorian Church; its Christology, which is strictly *Antiochene, developed largely from that of *Theodore of Mopsuestia rather than from that of Nestorius. Official formulations of the 6th and 7th cent. sometimes speak of 'two natures, two qnōmē (corresponding to Gk. hypostasis*) and one prosopon' in the incarnate Christ, thus differing from the *Chalcedonian Definition which posits a single hypostasis.

The Church in Mesopotamia (approximately modern Iraq) lay outside the Roman Empire and took no part in the great Councils, although the Creed and Canons of the first Council of *Nicaea (325), affirming the full Divinity of Christ, were formally accepted at the Synod of Seleucia in 410. The Council of *Ephesus (431), and in particular the title of *Theotokos for the BVM, is rejected, while ambivalent attitudes have been held towards the Chalcedonian Definition, owing to a different understanding of the term hypostasis. The doctrinal position of the Church of the East was largely based on the Antiochene theology of the School of Nisibis, inherited from the 'Persian School' at Edessa (closed in 489) and propagated by *Barsumas, Bp. of Nisibis. Their most important theologian was Babai the Great (d. 628), author of the Book of the Union (sc. of the Godhead and Manhood in Christ).

By the end of Sassanian rule in Iran (651) Christians constituted an important religious minority in the country, with the seat of the Catholicos-Patriarch at Seleucia-Ktesiphon on the R. Tigris, and about ten metropolitan sees. In the 4th–5th cent. there was intermittent *persecution (usually in times of war with the Roman Empire); later there were individual martyrdoms of several high-born converts from *Zoroastrianism. One such convert was the energetic Catholicos Mar Aba I (540–52), admired (under the name of Patrikios) by *Cosmas Indicopleustes. A monastic revival in the mid 6th cent., initiated by Abraham of Kashkar (d. *c.*580) on Mt. Izla (near Nisibis), led to a large number of new monastic foundations in the course of the next few centuries; many of these are described by *Thomas of Marga in his Book of Governors (or Superiors). Monastic writers include *Sahdona, *Isaac of Nineveh, *John Saba, and Joseph the Seer (8th cent.). By the early 7th cent. missionaries from the Church of the East had reached *India (see MALABAR CHRISTIANS) and E. Asia (see SIGAN-FU STONE).

After the Arab conquests (completed in 651), the Christians met with moderately good treatment under the Caliphate, constituting an ahl al dhimma ('people of protection'), whose religious freedom was theoretically guaranteed in return for payment of a poll tax. Under the Abbasids (749–1258) the Patriarchate moved to Baghdad, where Syriac scholars such as Hunayn ibn Ishaq (d. 873), played an important role in the transmission of Greek philosophical and scientific literature to the Arab world.

Initially favoured by the Mongols, the Church of the East suffered drastic losses in the 14th cent. after the conversion of the Mongol dynasty to *Islam in 1295. The diary of a monk from Peking, Rabban Sauma, who was sent by the Mongols as an envoy to Europe, survives. In the mid 16th cent. the Church of the East (by now centred on the mountains of Kurdistan) was divided by the creation of a separate *Uniat Patriarchal line (see CHALDEAN CHRISTIANS). In the 19th cent. several W. missions were sent to the Church of the East. An American *Presbyterian mission set up a *Syriac printing press at Urmi, which functioned from 1841 to 1918; in 1885 the Abp. of Canterbury, E. W. *Benson, sent an educational mission (closed in 1915) which also published many Syriac biblical and liturgical texts.

The Church of the East suffered greatly as a result of political developments in the 20th century. Partly because of the influence of the 'Archbishop of Canterbury's Mission' it supported the Anglo-Russian side during the First World War; there were reprisals from both Turks and Kurds. When the war was over, after the murder of the Catholicos, most of his flock fled to the protection of the British Mandate in Iraq. At the end of the Mandate (1933), as a result of disturbances, the Catholicos was deported, eventually to settle in the USA. Members of the Church of the East are now scattered in many parts of the world, esp. in the USA; only about 30,000 remain in the Middle East (Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, and Iran). Since 1968 there has been a schism, with one Catholicos resident in Baghdad, the other in the USA.

The liturgical language of the Church of the East is Syriac, and three anaphoras are used, attributed to Theodore of Mopsuestia, Nestorius, and *Addai and Mari. The last of these retains a number of primitive elements.

A. R. Vine, The Nestorian Churches (1937; popular). A. K. Arvanitis, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἀσσυριακῆς Νεστοριανικῆς Ἐκκλησίας (Athens, 1968). J. Labourt, Le Christianisme dans l'empire perse sous la dynastie sassanide, 224–632 (1904). F. Nau, 'L'Expansion nestorienne en Asie', Annales du Musée Guimet: Bibliothèque de Vulgarisation, 40 [1913], pp. 193–383. J. M. Fiey, OP, Assyrie Chrétienne (Recherches publiées sous la direction de l'Institut des Lettres Orientales de Beyrouth, 22; 3 vols., 1965–8). Id., Jalons pour une Histoire de l'Église en Iraq (CSCO, Subsidia, 36; 1970); id., Chrétiens Syriaques sous les Abbassides surtout à Bagdad (749–1258) (ibid. 59; 1980); id., Chrétiens Syriaques sous les Mongols (Il-Khanat de Perse, XIIIe–XIVe s.) (ibid. 44; 1975). Id., Pour un Oriens Christianus novus: Répertoire des diocèses syriaques orientaux et occidentaux (Beiruter Texte und Studien, 49; 1993). W. G. Young, Patriarch, Shah and Caliph: A Study of the Relationships of the Church of the East with the Sassanid Empire and the early Caliphates up to 820 A.D. (Rawalpindi, 1974). G. P. Badger, The Nestorians and their Rituals (2 vols., 1852; descriptive account of contemporary practice as seen by a missionary, with Eng. tr. of liturgical texts). A. J. Maclean and W. H. Browne, The Catholicos of the East and his People: Being the Impressions of Five Years' Work in the 'Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission' (1892). P. Kawerau, 'Die nestorianischen Patriarchate in der neueren Zeit', ZKG 67 (1955–6), pp. 119–31. J. F. Coakley, The Church of the East and the Church of England: A History of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission (Oxford, 1992). J. Joseph, The Nestorians and their Muslim Neighbors (Princeton Oriental Studies, 20; 1961). G. Yonan, Assyrer heute: Kultur, Sprache, Nationalbewegung der aramäisch sprechenden Christen im Nahen Osten (Reihe Pogrom, 59; Hamburg, 1978). A. Vööbus, History of the School of Nisibis (CSCO, Subsidia, 26; 1965). G. Chediath, The Christology of Mar Babai the Great (Kottayam, 1982). S. [P.] Brock, 'The Christology of the Church of the East in the Synods of the Fifth to Early Seventh Centuries: Preliminary Considerations and Materials', in G. D. Dragas (ed.), Aksum-Thyateira: A Festschrift for Archbishop Methodios of Thyateira and Great Britain (1985), pp. 125–42, repr. in id., Studies in Syriac Christianity [1992], no. 12. J. B. Chabot (ed. and tr.), Synodicon orientale ou recueil des synodes nestoriens (Notices et Extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale, 38; 1902). W. de Vries, SJ, Sakramententheologie bei den Nestorianern (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 133; 1947). E. A. W. Budge, The Monks of Kûblâi Khân, Emperor of China, or The History of the Life and Travels of Rabban Swâmâ, Envoy and Plenipotentiary of the Mongol Khâns to the Kings of Europe, and Markôs who as Mâr Yahbh-Allâhâ III became Patriarch of the Nestorian Church in Asia, tr. from the Syriac (1928). A. S. Atiyah, A History of Eastern Christianity (1968), pp. 237–302. E. Tisserant and É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 157–323, s.v. 'Nestorius. 2. L'Église nestorienne'; J. Dauvillier in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 292–388, s.v. 'Chaldéen, (droit)'; M. Jugie, AA, and G. de Vries, SJ, in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1780–7, s.v. 'Nestorio e nestorianesimo'. See also bibl. to ASSYRIAN CHRISTIANS and SYRIAC.

Church Pastoral Aid Society. See CPAS.

Church Sisters. In the Church of Scotland, women specially set apart to assist in parochial work, generally in busy industrial areas, in connection with the Women's Home Mission. They are appointed by *kirk sessions and are under the oversight of an Assembly Committee and the minister of the parish in which they labour. They have now been merged in an order of *Deaconesses.

Church Society. See CHURCH ASSOCIATION.

Church Times. A weekly religious newspaper, founded to propagate *Anglo-Catholic principles. Its first issue appeared on 7 Feb. 1863. It now occupies a position of central Churchmanship in the C of E.

B. Palmer, Gadfly for God: A History of the Church Times (1991).

Church Union. An Anglican association which exists 'to uphold the doctrine and discipline of the Church; to extend the knowledge of Catholic Faith and practice at home and beyond the seas; and so to bring everyone to worship the Lord as Saviour and King'. It was formed in 1934 under the presidency of the second Lord *Halifax by the amalgamation of the *English Church Union and the Anglo-Catholic Congress.

Church Unity Octave. The *octave of prayer observed annually from 18 Jan. (formerly Feast of St Peter's Chair at Rome) to 25 Jan. (Conversion of St Paul) by a group of Anglican High Churchmen and others for the visible reunion of the Church, with Rome as the central see of Christendom. It was first kept in 1908. Under P. I. Couturier (q.v.) it evolved into what became the widely-observed 'Week of Prayer for Christian Unity'.

Churches of Christ. See DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

Churching of Women. The form of thanksgiving which Christian women make after childbirth. The custom, which is based on the Jewish rite of Purification (Lev. 12: 6), is mentioned in a letter of St *Augustine of Canterbury to St *Gregory the Great. The oldest extant forms of service, however, are medieval. The 1662 BCP office is essentially the same as that of the *Sarum rite except that psalms 116 and 127 replace 121 and 128. It is intended to precede Holy Communion. The wearing of a white veil by the woman was anciently customary and enforced by law in *James I's reign. The woman makes a thank-offering at this service.

The ASB provides new services of 'Thanksgiving for the Birth of a Child' and 'Thanksgiving after Adoption'. Both are intended to involve the whole family and include the giving of one of the Gospels to the parents. Other modern Anglican liturgies make similar provisions for a service distinct from *Baptism.

The RC office used to be closely similar to that of the BCP. It has now been replaced by a blessing of the mother at the end of the Baptismal service. If the mother is unable to attend the Baptism, a separate form of blessing is provided in the section of the *Rituale Romanum, De Benedictionibus (1984), pt. 1, cap. 1, nos. 236–57.

In the E. Church there are various services of prayer and thanksgiving after the birth of a child. It is the child, however, who is said to be 'churched', i.e. brought to church, ideally forty days after birth. These services can be found in the Euchologion*.

E. *Martène, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, 1, cap. 9, art. 5, ordo 11. M. Righetti, Manuale di Storia Liturgica, 4 (2nd edn., 1959), pp. 470–2. S. Cheetham in DCA 1 (1875), pp. 390 f., s.v., with primary refs. C. L. Feltoe in PBD (1925), pp. 203 f., s.v. A. J. Schulte in CE 3 (1908), p. 761, s.v.

Churchmen's Union. See MODERN CHURCHMEN'S UNION.

churchwardens. The election of churchwardens in the C of E is governed by the Churchwardens (Appointment and Resignation) Measure 1964 (slightly modified by the *Synodical Government Measure 1969). This preserves the arrangement of can. 89 of 1604, whereby two churchwardens are to be chosen by the incumbent and the parishioners, or, if they fail to agree, one is to be appointed by the incumbent, the other by the people. The election takes place annually, not later in the year than 30 April, and the persons elected are admitted to their office by the *ordinary. The duties of churchwardens are defined in the 1969 canons (can. E 1) as being 'foremost in representing the laity and in co-operating with the incumbent', encouraging the parishioners 'in the practice of true religion', promoting unity and peace, and maintaining order and decency in the church and churchyard. They are also responsible for the movable property in the church. In the past they had also the duty of presenting offenders against ecclesiastical law, a function which they fulfilled until the 19th cent. Until the establishment of *Parochial Church Councils in 1921 they were the sole official representatives of the laity in each parish.

C. Drew, Early Parochial Organisation in England: The Origins of the Office of Churchwarden (St Anthony's Hall publications, 7; 1954). R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, 2 (2nd edn. by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), esp. pp. 1463–91. H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (8th edn. by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 158–77. The 1964 Measure is pr. in K. M. Macmorran, A Handbook for Churchwardens and Parochial Church Councillors (9th edn. by K. J. T. Elphinstone, E. G. Moore, and T. J. Briden, 1986), pp. 59–68; see also pp. 69–75. M. Hill, Ecclesiastical Law (1995), pp. 92–7.

churchyard. Properly the ground in which a church stands, though the word is often used as though equivalent to '*cemetery' (which it may or may not be). In the past such enclosures were often used as public meeting-places for the conduct of trials, markets, and other secular business.

ciborium (Gk. κιβώριον). (1) A chalice-shaped vessel, with a lid, used to contain the Sacramental Bread of the Eucharist. It apparently came into general use early in the Middle Ages. (2) The term is also sometimes applied to the canopy ('ciborium magnum') resting on four pillars over the altar of Christian *basilicas and other churches, now more usually termed in the W. the '*baldachino'.

(1) Braun, AG, pp. 280–347, with plates 51–9.

(2) Braun, CA, 2, pp. 185–261, with plates 152–8. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2, 1914), cols. 1588–612, s.v.

Cimabue (d. 1302 or later), the usual name of Cenni di Pepo, Florentine painter. Little is known of his life, beyond the facts that he was working in 1272 and 1302. He was, however, regarded by *Dante (Purg. 11. 94–6) as the most important painter in Italy before *Giotto, and G. Vasari, the 16th-cent. historian of Italian art, claimed that he was Giotto's teacher. The mosaic of St John the Evangelist in the apse of Pisa cathedral is the only documented work (1302), but this is now partly restored. He painted in Rome and also extensively in the church of S. Francesco, *Assisi, particularly in the transepts and apse of the Upper Church. Outstanding works on panel include the 'S. Trinità Madonna' (Uffizi, Florence), the 'Crucifixions' in the churches of S. Domenico, Arezzo, and S. Croce, Florence (damaged by flooding in 1966), and the 'Virgin and Child with Angels' (Louvre, Paris). The traditional attribution to Cimabue of the 'Madonna' once in the chapel of the Rucellai in S. Maria Novella, Florence (now in the Uffizi) is no longer valid; it is a documented work of 1285 by the Sienese painter Duccio di Buoninsegna (d. 1319).

A. Nicholson, Cimabue: A Critical Study (Princeton Monographs in Art and Archaeology, 16; 1932); E. Battisti, Cimabue (Milan, 1963; Eng. tr., University Park, Pa., and London, 1967). U. Baldini and O. Casazza, The Cimabue Crucifix [1983]. J. White, Art and Architecture in Italy 1250 to 1400 (Pelican History of Art, 1966), pp. 115–31. E. Borsook, The Mural Painters of Tuscany (2nd edn., Oxford, 1980), pp. 3–7.

cincture. See GIRDLE.

Circumcellions. Fanatical bands of predatory peasants who flourished in the north of Africa, esp. Numidia, in the 4th cent. They were so named because they lived or moved around (circum) martyrs' shrines (cellae) from which they drew physical sustenance, but they preferred themselves to be known as 'Agonistici', i.e. 'soldiers (of Christ)'. Though they were originally concerned only with the remedy of (probably genuine) social grievances, they became linked with the *Donatists; and as such they used great violence on behalf of the Donatist cause, taking as their battle-cry the words 'laudes Deo' ('praises be to God'). Among some Donatists at least Circumcellions who were killed on their raids were regarded as martyrs, and some seem to have sought martyrdom by suicide. The civil government tried to subdue them by force and persuasion in turn, but they survived into the 5th cent.

The chief patristic refs. include *Optatus, De Schismate Donatistarum, 3. 4, and St *Augustine, Contra Gaudentium, 1. 28. 32, and Enarratio in Ps., 132. 3 and 6. Further patristic refs. in W. H. C. Frend, The Donatist Church: A Movement of Protest in Roman North Africa (1952), esp. pp. 172–8; id., 'The cellae of the African Circumcellions', JTS NS 3 (1952), pp. 87–9. H. J. Diesner, Kirche und Staat im spätrömischen Reich (1963), esp. chs. 1, 4, 5, with full bibl. E. Tengström, Donatisten und Katholiken: Soziale, wirtschaftliche und politische Aspekte einer nordafrikanischen Kirchenspaltung (Studia Graeca et Latina Gothoburgensia, 18; 1964), pp. 24–78. W. H. C. Frend, 'Circumcellions and Monks', JTS NS 20 (1969), pp. 542–9.

circumcision. Though circumcision had long been in use as a religious rite among the Jews, for whom it was part of the Law of *Moses (e.g. Gen. 17: 12, Ex. 12: 48), it was abandoned at an early date by nearly the whole Christian Church. At the conference at *Jerusalem c. AD 50 (cf. Acts 15 and Gal. 2) St *Paul and St *Barnabas gained recognition for the Church in *Antioch's practice of not circumcising Gentile converts. However, as Paul's mission spread, it attracted opposition on that account, esp. in Galatia. Only with the fall of Jerusalem and the marginalizing of Jewish Christianity was Paul's position finally victorious. From a remote date, however, the rite has been in use in the Church of *Ethiopia, where it is performed between the third and eighth day after birth, i.e. before the child is baptized. In the NT (e.g. Rom. 3: 30, Eph. 2: 11), 'the circumcision' (ἡ περιτομή) is occasionally used substantively of the Jewish people.

The Jewish Rite of Circumcision, with prayers and laws appertaining thereto. Translated into English, with an introd. essay by A. Asher (1873). R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 1 (1958), pp. 78–82; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 46–48. Arts. by L. H. Gray ('Introductory'), L. Spence ('American'), G. Foucart ('Egyptian'), D. S. Margoliouth ('Muslim'), and G. A. Barton ('Semitic') in HERE 3 (1910), pp. 659–80. R. Meyer in TWNT 6 (1959), cols. 72–83; Eng. tr. (1968), pp. 72–84, s.v. περιτέμνω, with further refs.

Circumcision, Feast of the. The feast traditionally kept on 1 Jan., the eighth day after *Christmas, in commemoration of Christ's circumcision (cf. Lk. 2: 21: 'when eight days were accomplished'). The observance goes back to the middle of the 6th cent. It then spread, at first esp. in Spain and Gaul, but it did not become established at *Rome till the 11th cent. Its relatively late introduction into the Christian calendar has been connected with the unwillingness of the Church to introduce a festival on New Year's Day, which had been kept with great riot and licence by the pagans. Indeed, many early Missals provided a second Mass for use on that day against idolatrous practices (ad prohibendum ab idolis). In the *Armenian Church, the feast is observed on 13 Jan. Since it is recorded that when He was circumcised, the Lord was given the name Jesus (Lk. 2: 22), many modern Anglican liturgies call the feast the Naming of Jesus. In the RC Church there has been a tendency to observe 1 Jan. as the Octave of Christmas (as it was officially styled in 1960); in the 1969 Roman Calendar it is called the 'Solemnity of Holy Mary, the Mother of God' (Solemnitas S. Dei Genetricis Mariae).

F. Bünger, Geschichte der Neujahrsfeier in der Kirche (1910). F. *Cabrol, Les Origines liturgiques (1906), Appendice C, 'Le Premier des Calendes de Janvier et la Messe contre les Idoles', pp. 203–10. M. Righetti, Manuale di Storia Liturgica, 2 (Milan, 1955), pp. 73–77, with refs. F. Cabrol in DACL 3, pt. 2 (1914), cols. 1717–28, s.v., incl. further bibl.

circumincession (also circuminsession). In Christian theology the technical term for the interpenetration of the Three Persons of the Holy Trinity. The corresponding Gk. word, περιχώρησις (lit. 'a proceeding around'), used by St *John of Damascus in this connection, was rendered into Latin circumincessio by *Burgundio of Pisa (d. 1193); and this later became changed into circuminsessio through similarity of sound.

A. Deneffe, SJ, 'Perichoresis, circumincessio, circuminsessio. Eine terminologische Untersuchung', ZKT 47 (1923), pp. 497–532; [G.] L. Prestige, 'Περιχωρέω and περιχώρησις in the Fathers', JTS 29 (1928), pp. 242–52; G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (1968), p. 1077, s.v. περιχωρέω.

Cisneros, Franceso Ximénez de. See XIMÉNEZ DE CISNEROS, F.

Cistercian Order. The order of White Monks, so called from the mother house at *Cîteaux, which was founded in 1098 by St *Robert of Molesme and several other brethren, incl. St *Stephen Harding, who sought to establish a form of *Benedictinism stricter and more primitive than any then existing. After some precarious years Cîteaux rose rapidly to celebrity through its connection with its most famous son, St *Bernard, who became a novice there in 1112. Its four eldest 'daughters' were founded in quick succession: la Ferté (1113), Pontigny (1114), *Clairvaux, and Morimond (1115). In the following decades the order spread very rapidly to almost every part of Europe and the Latin East. By the death of St Bernard (1153) there were 345 houses; by the end of the 13th cent. the order reached its maximum of 740; and there were still some 700 on the eve of the Reformation. There were also many houses of Cistercian nuns. The first foundation in England was at Waverley, Surrey (1128–9), soon followed by *Rievaulx (1131/2) and *Fountains (1132).

The Cistercian life was to be one of secluded communal intercession and adoration. Houses were to be erected only in remote situations, while its churches were to be plain in character and their ornaments and vestments were not made from precious materials. Strict rules on diet and silence were laid down and manual labour given its primitive prominent position. The Cistercians thus became important agricultural pioneers, playing a notable part in English sheep farming, the care of their estates being for long undertaken by *lay brothers who lived under somewhat less severe rules.

According to recent scholarship, the constitution of the Cistercian order developed gradually during the 12th cent., and its basic documents—the Carta caritatis*, the Exordium parvum, and the Exordium Cistercii—also took shape gradually during this process. The detailed course of events remains a matter of controversy, but the order developed a constitution under which a founding abbey had permanent oversight of abbeys that it founded; this was achieved through visitation by the abbot, in principle annually but perhaps more often, to ensure observance and discipline. Daughter-abbeys could make foundations of their own; thus, lines of filiation quickly developed, often to four generations and more. Cîteaux itself was visited by the abbots of its eldest daughters (the 'proto-abbots'). All Cistercian abbots were obliged to attend an annual General Chapter at Cîteaux; if inevitably hindered they had to send a deputy. In the General Chapter was vested legislative, executive, and judicial authority over the whole order. There was no scope for the abbot of Cîteaux to develop monarchical authority, and a body of Statutes of the General Chapters was built up. No other chapters of abbots were allowed to assemble. Cistercian observances powerfully influenced those of other medieval orders, notably certain congregations of *regular canons, and after 1215 their scheme of periodic general chapters and visitations was made obligatory for other monastic orders. From the 13th cent., however, the fame of the order waned.

Starting with Castile in the 15th cent., more and more foreign houses formed national congregations, which developed outside the control of Cîteaux and the four proto-abbeys, while still remaining juridically part of the order. In France a particularly radical reform in the late 16th cent. gave rise first to a congregation and then an independent order of *Feuillants. In the 17th cent. Cistercians, like most orders, were divided between reformers (the Strict Observance), trying to return to the spirit and practice of the founding fathers by rejecting all later mitigations of the Rule, and those, led by Cîteaux, who wanted a minimum of change (the Common Observance).

The Strict Observance eventually controlled about a third of the French houses, but failed either to impose their reform on the whole order or to achieve the autonomy they sought. Those houses flourished most where austerity, as at *la Trappe, went consistently beyond the average.

In the 18th cent. Cistercians in the Austro-Hungarian Empire survived the *Josephine edicts only by undertaking major educational and pastoral responsibilities. Shortly afterwards the French Revolution destroyed not only all houses in France and neighbouring lands, but the very structure of central authority. Throughout the 19th cent. government hostility to monastic life led to massive closures and expulsions in Spain, Italy, Germany, and even Switzerland, and in the 20th cent. wars in Europe and Asia, totalitarian regimes and post-colonial turbulence have all violently, and often unpredictably, affected organisation and survival. It has been reaction to external events that has given the present Common Observance (properly the Sacred Order of Cîteaux, S. O. Cist.) its present shape, with an Abbot General and staff (finally established at Rome only in 1927), presiding over a union of about a dozen congregations, formed mainly on a national or linguistic basis. These differ widely in their pattern of life, some being responsible for high schools and universities, some in the mission field, often with parishes, and some (notably *Lérins) primarily contemplative. The largest congregations are those in Austria, Italy, and the *United States of America. The order has almost as many nuns as monks, organized in similar congregations.

The extinction of Cîteaux and the proto-abbeys in 1790/1 left la Trappe as the only French community of any male order to survive. Under the leadership of Augustin de Lestrange (elected Abbot in 1794), 24 volunteers fled to Switzerland; they soon attracted hundreds of recruits (many from other orders) and founded communities in various countries. Wartime conditions obliged Lestrange to draft regulations of excessive rigour which were only partly relaxed when peace permitted Trappists to re-establish monastic life in France; other houses, and their daughter foundations, preferred to follow A.-J. le B. de *Rancé's original reform. A fundamentally penitential view of monastic life, expressed in a uniformly strict observance, was the common aim of all the Trappist houses. It was not, however, until 1892 that the three Trappist congregations achieved union and were recognized in 1893 as a new independent order; in 1902, after the recovery of Cîteaux, which became the mother house, it was designated as the Cistercians of the Strict Observance (OCSO) or Reformed Cistercians (OCR). This order is not the continuation of the Strict Observance destroyed in 1791, but the lineal descendant of Rancé's reform of 1664 at la Trappe. Vast expansion worldwide has strained the practice of uniformity, and, with the abolition of the category of lay brothers (and sisters) after the Second *Vatican Council, major changes were initiated, culminating in new Constitutions which were finally approved in 1990. The explicit aim is now unity, not uniformity, expressed through a pluralism which recognises cultural and regional differences. Abbots (including the Abbot General) are no longer automatically elected for life; regional conferences have much wider powers (though the General Chapter remains supreme); the Divine *Office has been simplified (but *Vigils, the Night Office, is retained); abstention from meat is normally recommended, but detailed dietary prescriptions have been omitted; silence is normally absolute only in prescribed places and at night; contacts with family, and the outside world, are easier; and study is actively encouraged. A major change has been a much greater degree of self-government for the nuns, whose General Chapter was for the first time in 1990 given equality with that of the monks in electing the new Abbot General. There are about 80 houses of men and rather fewer of women.

Though there are now two quite separate Cistercian Orders, close and fraternal co-operation between them, at a local and also wider level, is constant.

J.-M. Canivez, OCR (ed.), Statuta Capitulorum Generalium Ordinis Cisterciensis (8 vols., Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, fascs. 9–14 B; 1933–41). J. de la C. Bouton, OCR, and J. B. Van Damme, OCR, Les plus anciens Textes de Cîteaux (Cîteaux—Commentarii Cistercienses, 2; Achel, 1974). A. Manrique, O. Cist., Annales Cistercienses (4 vols., Lyons, 1642–59; repr., Farnborough, 1970). B. Tissier, O. Cist. (ed.), Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium, id est Operum Abbatum et Monachorum Ordinis Cisterciensis qui saeculo S. Bernardi aut paulo post eius obitum floruerunt (8 vols., bound in 3, Bonnefontaine and Paris, 1660–9). On the problems presented by the early Cistercian docs. see [M.] D. *Knowles, Great Historical Enterprises: Problems in Monastic History (1963), pp. 198–222; K. Hallinger, 'Die Anfänge von Cîteaux', in Aus Kirche und Reich. . . .: Festschrift für Friedrich Kempf zu seinem 75. Geburtstag und 50. Doktorjubiläum, ed. H. Mordek (1983), pp. 225–235. J.-B. Auberger, OFM, L'Unanimité cistercienne primitive: mythe ou réalité? (Cîteaux, Studia et Documenta, 3; Achel, 1986). P. Le Nain, O. Cist., Essai de l'histoire de l'ordre de Cîteaux (9 vols., 1695–7). L. J. Lekai, O. Cist., The White Monks: A History of the Cistercian Order (Okauchee, Wis., 1953); id., The Rise of the Cistercian Strict Observance in Seventeenth Century France (Washington, DC, 1968); id., The Cistercians: Ideals and Reality (Kent, Oh., 1977). A Schneider, O. Cist., and others (eds.), Die Cisterciense Geschichte, Geist, Kunst (Cologne, 1974). M. Pacaut, Les moines blancs: Histoire de l'ordre de Cîteaux [1993].

L. Pressouyre and T. N. Kinder (eds.), Saint Bernard et le monde cistercien: Exposition presentée par la Caisse nationale des monuments historiques et des sites à la Conciergerie de Paris du 18 décembre 1990 au 28 février 1991 (1990). L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., La Spiritualité de Cîteaux (1955; Eng. tr., 1958). J. B. Mahn, L'Ordre cistercien et son gouvernement, des origines au milieu du XIII^e siècle, 1098 1265 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 116; 1945). A. A. King, Cîteaux and her Elder Daughters (1954), pp. 1–105. [M.] D. Knowles, The Monastic Order in England (Cambridge, 1940; 2nd edn., 1967), pp. 208–66, 346–62, and 632–48. J. F. O'Sullivan, Cistercian Settlements in Wales and Monmouthshire, 1140 1540 (Fordham University Studies, History Series, 2; New York, 1947). B. D. Hill, English Cistercian Monasteries and their Patrons in the Twelfth Century (1968). Y. Zaluska, L'Enluminure et le Scriptorium de Cîteaux au XII^e siècle (Cîteaux, Commentarii Cistercienses, Studia et documenta, 4; Cîteaux, 1989). J.-B. Lefèvre and J.-J. Bolly, 'Monastères Bénédictins et Cisterciens dans les Albums de Croÿ (1596–1611). Histoire et Institutions des Abbayes Cisterciennes (XII^e–XVII^e siècles)', R. Bén. 100 (1990), pp. 109–238.

A. Le Bail, OSB, L'Ordre de Cîteaux: 'La Trappe' (Les Ordres religieux, 1924); C. Grolleau-G. Chastel, L'Ordre de Cîteaux: La Trappe (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux, 1932). Y. Estienne, Les Trappistines: Cisterciennes de la stricte observance (1937). M. T. Kervingant, OCSO, Des moniales face à la Révolution française: Aux origines des Cisterciennes-Trappistines (1989). Life in a Trappist monastery in the USA before the Second Vatican Council is depicted in the autobiography of T. *Merton, The Seven Storey Mountain (New York [1948]), pub. in England as Elected Silence (London, 1949), and other works of this author.

The Cistercienser-Chronik ed. by the Cistercians of Mehrerau (1889 ff.); Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis (Rome, 1945 ff.); Collectanea Ordinis Cisterciensium Reformatorum (Rome and Westmalle, 1934 ff.). L. J. Lekai, O. Cist., in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 885–9, s.v.; M. R. Flanagan, ibid. 14 (1967), pp. 261–4, s.v. 'Trappists'; L. J. Lekai, O. Cist., in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 1058–98, s.v. 'Cistercensi'; É. Mikkers, OCR, in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 738–814, s.v. 'Robert (12) de Molesmes', 2: 'La Spiritualité Cistercienne'.

citation. A summons to appear before a court of justice, esp. an ecclesiastical court. Until the Court of Probate Act 1857 transferred jurisdiction to the temporal courts, the probate of wills was dealt with by the ecclesiastical courts, where citation is the normal method of opening proceedings. Any person may still be cited, e.g. even a *lay rector not himself a member of the C of E, for offences against ecclesiastical law, but the most common use of citation nowadays is in *faculty cases, where a citation is a notice of proceedings either publicly displayed ('general citation') or served on an interested body, e.g. English Heritage ('special citation').

Cîteaux (Lat. Cistercium). The mother house of the *Cistercian Order, some 16 miles S. of Dijon. Expropriated at the French Revolution, Cîteaux was acquired in 1898 by the newly independent Order formed from *Trappist congregations united in 1893. Their new Abbot General, while residing in Rome, took the title of Abbot of Cîteaux, appointing an auxiliary abbot to rule the monastery. Since 1963 the General has borne the title of Arch-Abbot and the community of Cîteaux elected its own superior, like other houses of the Order.

J. Marlier (ed.), Chartes et documents concernant l'abbaye de Cîteaux, 1098–1182 (Bibliotheca Cisterciensis, 1; Rome, 1961). L. M. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 787–90, with extensive bibl. J.-M. Canivez, OCR, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 852–74, s.v., with bibl.; J. de la Croix Bouton and others in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 2 (1983), cols. 2104–7, s.v.

Cities of Refuge. In ancient Israel the six walled cities, three on each side of *Jordan, which were set aside as a protection for those who had committed accidental homicide (Deut. 4: 41–3, 19: 1–13, and Josh. 20). The existence of such places was made necessary by the primitive law which required blood vengeance from the next of kin (goel). In the earlier legislation of Exod. 21: 13 f. (the 'Book of the Covenant'), apparently any altar offered such asylum. Acc. to Deut. 19: 1 f., three were to be appointed when the Hebrews were established W. of Jordan and three more when the whole land was conquered (Deut. 19: 8 f.). In Josh. 20, where the selection of the cities is attributed to *Joshua (not, as in Deut. 4: 41–3, to *Moses), their names are Kedesh, Shechem, Hebron, Bezer, Ramoth in Gilead, and Golan. Asylum involved trial; and if the verdict was murder, the refuge was withdrawn.

R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 1 (1958; 4th edn., 1982), pp. 247–50; Eng. tr., Ancient Israel (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 160–3.

Civil Constitution of the Clergy. The legislative measures passed (12 July 1790) during the French Revolution by the Constituent Assembly to reorganize the Church in France. Since Church property was being sold and *tithe had been abolished, arrangements had to be made for paying the clergy. The Assembly was also determined to end the aristocratic monopoly of high ecclesiastical office and, in the spirit of *Gallicanism, wished to demonstrate French independence of Rome—except in the sphere of doctrine. The dioceses were reduced in number to coincide with the civil departments, the parochial structure was made more logical, the parish priests, many of them poorly paid in the past, were given fair salaries, and the bishops and curés were to be elected by the more prosperous of the local citizens. The Papal power of confirming nominations to the episcopate was transferred to the metropolitans. Most of the clergy, including a majority of the bishops, wished to accept the new order, however reluctantly, but they insisted that 'the Church must be consulted'. The Assembly, intoxicated by the idea of national sovereignty, would not permit the aristocratic bishops to meet in Council, and allowed only a brief period to the king in which he made covert approaches to Rome (using the threat of the annexation of Avignon). Finally, on 27 Nov. 1790, the Assembly imposed an oath to the Civil Constitution on all priests wishing to retain ecclesiastical office. About half of the parish clergy (though only four of the diocesan bishops) accepted it. Louis XVI had sanctioned the Civil Constitution on 23 May 1791, and Papal briefs condemning it reached him the following day. The condemnation had been kept secret. It was only at the beginning of May 1791 that the French clergy heard of the Papal brief 'Caritas' (of 13 April) declaring the Civil Constitution heretical, sacrilegious, and schismatic.

Text in Archives parlementaires de 1787 à 1860. Recueil complet des débats législatifs et politiques des chambres françaises imprimé par ordre du Sénat et de la Chambre des Députés sous la direction de . . . J. Mavidal . . . and E. Laurent, 1st ser., 17 (1884), pp. 55–60. The Brief 'Caritas' is pr. in A. Barlèri and R. Segreti, IC (eds.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio . . . Clementis XIII. Clementis XIV. Pii VI. Pii VII. Leonis XII. et Pii VIII., 9 (Rome, 1845), pp. 11–19. Eng. tr. of the main clauses of the Constitution, the decree requiring the Clerical Oath, and the brief 'Caritas' in J. H. Stewart, A Documentary Survey of the French Revolution (New York [1951]), pp. 169–89, and of the Constitution, with comm., in S. Z. Ehler and J. B. Morrall (eds.), Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), pp. 236–49. A. Mathiez, Rome et le clergé français sous la Constituante (1911); J. McManners, French Ecclesiastical Society under the Ancien Régime: A Study of Angers in the Eighteenth Century (Manchester, 1960), pp. 255–76; T. Tackett, Religion, Revolution, and Regional Culture in Eighteenth-Century France: The Ecclesiastical Oath of 1791 (Princeton, NJ [1986]). See also bibl. to CONSTITUTIONAL CHURCH.

Civiltà Cattolica. A periodical published twice monthly by the Italian *Jesuits. At the time of the First *Vatican Council (1869–70), it actively attacked *liberalism and supported Papal infallibility.

Clairvaux (Lat. Clara Vallis). The fourth house of the *Cistercian Order, near Bar-sur-Aube, founded in 1115 by St *Bernard of Clairvaux. The filiation of Clairvaux soon became, and remained, the largest in the Order, of which Clairvaux was much the wealthiest house until the French Revolution. Abbot Denis Largentier was one of the promoters (in 1615) of the Strict Observance, but after his death in 1624 Clairvaux ceased to support the movement. The community was broken up and the property confiscated by the state in 1790. Since 1808 Clairvaux has been used as a prison.

A. A. King, Cîteaux and her Elder Daughters (1954), pp. 207–328. A. [E.] Prévost, 'Recueil des chartes et bulles de Clairvaux', Revue Mabillon, 14 (1924), pp. 140–56, 233–42; 15 (1925), pp. 145–67, 258–71, 308–17; 16 (1926), pp. 49–62, 166–9, 237–48, 369–84; 17 (1927), pp. 62–71, 286–90, 421–8; 18 (1928), pp. 66–76, 158–76, 240–56, 324–37; and 19 (1929), pp. 161–72. J. Waquet (ed.), Recueil des chartes de l'abbaye de Clairvaux, fasc. 1 (Troyes, 1950). J. Laurent and F. Claudon, Abbayes et prieurés de l'Ancienne France, 12, pt. 3 (Archives de la France Monastique, 45; 1941), pp. 308–44, with full refs. J. J. Vernier (ed.), 'Inventaire du trésor de la sacristie de l'abbaye de Clairvaux de 1640', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 63 (1902), pp. 599–677. La Bibliothèque de l'Abbaye de Clairvaux du XII^e au XVIII^e Siècle, 1: Catalogues et Répertoires, ed. A. Vernet (1979). J.-M. Canivez, OCR, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 1050–61, s.v.; A. Dimier, OCSO, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 1111 f., s.v., both with bibl.

clandestinity. The celebration of marriages without the cognizance of proper authority. The abuse became widespread in the later Middle Ages and in the 16th cent. Protestants and Catholics alike were anxious for reform. In his Von Ehesachen (1530) M. *Luther strongly opposed unions contracted without parental knowledge or approval, regarding such marriages (to which he esp. applied the term 'clandestine') as null and void; and he was closely followed by P. *Melanchthon, J. *Brenz, J. *Calvin, and T. *Beza. The RC canonists, though less concerned with parental consent (in which they saw a frequent danger to the liberty of the children), were at least as eager for publicity. But to insist on it as a sine qua non seemed to imply that the Church possessed the power of altering the matter of a sacrament. After long discussions it was laid down in Session 24 of the Council of *Trent that though clandestine marriages were true and proper marriages (vera et rata matrimonia), provided that they had not been rendered void by the Church, in future all such marriages in places where the ruling of the decree obtained would be held to be null. Henceforward all marriages were to be in facie ecclesiae, i.e. before the parish priest, local ordinary, or a priest appointed by one of them, as well as at least two other witnesses. This ruling was embodied in the decree Tametsi*, repeated with minor modifications in Ne Temere*, and it remains substantially unchanged in CIC (1983), can. 1108. Since 1970 the detailed requirements may be dispensed in the case of *mixed marriages, provided there is a public ceremony.

In the C of E publicity is secured by the publication of *banns, the issue of a *marriage licence or the certificate of a superintendent registrar, and by the requirement of proper witnesses to the ceremony. Marriages without banns were formally condemned in the 11th Canon of the Synod of *Westminster (1200). Can. 62 of the 1604 *Canons also ordered that the marriage shall take place 'in time of Divine service'. In 1754, civil legislation was introduced to prevent clandestine marriages by the Clandestine Marriages Act 1753 ('Lord *Hardwicke's Act'), while since the Marriage Act 1823 the law has required as a minimum of publicity two or more credible witnesses, besides the minister. At the time of the service the doors of the church must not be locked, and Canon B 35 of the 1969 Canons requires all marriages to take place between 8.00 a.m. and 6.00 p.m. In the C of E clandestinity is commonly held not to void a marriage, though the 1604 Canons provided for the punishment of ministers celebrating such marriages.

Clapham Sect. An informal group of wealthy Anglican *Evangelicals, so named by Sydney Smith (1764–1840), because the majority of its members lived near Clapham and worshipped in its parish church. Among the most outstanding were J. Venn, Rector of Clapham from 1792 to 1813, Charles Grant (1746–1832), Z. *Macaulay (q.v.), Lord Teignmouth (1751–1834), James Stephen (1758–1832), Henry Thornton (1760–1815), Granville Sharp (1735–1813) and W. *Wilberforce (q.v.). Although at bottom conservative in their attitude to the social order, they shared a keen sense of moral responsibility and the belief that religion must be manifested in good works. Among the most important schemes in which they engaged were the struggle for the abolition of the *slave trade, the extension of missionary enterprise, esp. in *India, the foundation of the *British and Foreign Bible Society and the establishment of a model colony in *Sierra Leone. They also promoted such schemes for the improvement of moral standards at home as the Proclamation Society (founded 1789), the Society for Bettering the Conditions and Increasing the Comforts of the Poor (1794) and the extension of *Sunday Schools. Towards the end of her life Hannah *More (q.v.) was closely connected with the group. Mainly through the personal position of its members, many of whom were interrelated by marriage, the group was able to exercise on parliament and public opinion an influence out of all proportion to its numbers.

J. Stephen, Essays in Ecclesiastical Biography, 2 (1849), pp. 287–382 ('The Clapham Sect'); E. M. Howse, Saints in Politics: The 'Clapham Sect' and the Growth of Freedom (Toronto, 1952; London, 1953); D. Spring, 'The Clapham Sect: some social and political aspects', Victorian Studies, 5 (1961–2), pp. 35–48; K. Hylson-Smith, Evangelicals in the Church of England 1734–1984 (Edinburgh, 1989), pp. 79–93. See also other works cited under EVANGELICALISM.

Clapton Sect. See HACKNEY PHALANX.

Clare, St (1193/4–1253), foundress of the '*Poor Clares'. About 1212, moved by the teaching of St *Francis of Assisi, she gave up all her possessions and joined him at the *Portiuncula. He placed her first in a *Benedictine house before moving her to San Damiano outside the walls of *Assisi. When other women wishing to live on Franciscan lines came to join her, she was made abbess (*c.*1215), a position she held until the end of her life. Many daughter houses were founded in Europe during the 13th cent., including 47 in Spain. The austerity of the rule went far beyond any that women had previously undertaken, and, although many of the daughter houses obtained dispensations from the original ban upon communal property, the community of 'San Damiano', with those of Perugia and Florence, obtained at St Clare's wish the 'privilegium paupertatis' from *Gregory IX, which enabled them to maintain their original state of entire poverty. She was canonized by Alexander IV in 1255. Feast day, 11 (formerly 12) Aug.

The authenticity of the rule and four letters is accepted; that of the Testament, Blessing, and another letter is contested. Eng. tr., from the edn. of I. Omaechevarria, OFM (Madrid, 1970), Francis and Clare, The Complete Works, tr. R. J. Armstrong, OFM Cap., and I. Brady, OFM (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1982), pp. 189–234, with introd., pp. 169–85. They are also available in Eng. trs. of primary docs. on her life cited below. Separate edn. of her writings, with Fr. tr. and introd., by M.-F. Becker and others (SC 325; 1985). Contemporary Life, attributed to *Thomas of Celano, pr. in AASS, Aug. 2 (1735), pp. 754–67; also ed. from MS 338 of the Bibl. Comunale of Assisi by F. Pennacchi (Assisi, 1910). Eng. tr. by P. Robinson, OFM (London, 1910); this was repr., with different introd. and notes, St Bonaventure, NY, 1953. Eng. tr. of Clare's writings and other material by R. J. Armstrong, OFM Cap., Clare of Assisi: Early Documents (New York, 1988), incl. the Life attributed to Thomas of Celano, pp. 184–240; also the Process of Canonization, pp. 125–75, and Bull of Canonization, pp. 176–83. B. Bughetti, OFM (ed.), 'Legenda Versificata S. Clarae Assisiensis, Saec. XIII', AFH 5 (1912), pp. 237–60 and 459–81; 14th cent. metrical Life ed. L. Oliger, OFM, ibid., 12 (1919), pp. 110–31. Life, written in 1494, by Ugolino Verino (1442–1505), ed., with introd. and notes, W. Seton (Chelsea, 1921). Z. Lazzeri, OFM, 'Il processo di canonizzazione di S. Chiara d'Assisi', AFH 13 (1920), pp. 403–507. E. Gilliat-Smith, Saint Clare of Assisi: Her Life and Legislation (1914). Other Lives by M. Beaufreton ('Les Saints', 1916), N. de Robeck (Milwaukee, 1951), and F. Casolini (Assisi, 1953). L. Hardick, OFM, 'Zur Chronologie im Leben der hl. Klara', Franziskanische Studien, 35 (1953), pp. 174–210, with other arts. on the rule and order, pp. 145–73 and 211–383. A. Fortini, 'Nuove notizie intorno a S. Chiara di Assisi', AFH 46 (1953), pp. 3–43. Santa Chiara d'Assisi: Studi e cronaca del VII centenario 1253–1953 (Assisi [1954]), esp. pp. 37–310, with docs., pp. 519–42. M. Bartoli, Chiara d'Assisi (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, 37; 1989; Eng. tr., 1993). L. Iriarte [OFM Cap.], 'Clara de Asís en la tipología hagiográfica femenina', Laurentianum, 29 (1988), pp. 416–61. P. *Sabatier, 'Le Privilège de la pauvreté', Revue d'histoire franciscaine, 1 (1924), pp. 1–54. R. B. and C. N. L. Brooke, 'St Clare', in D. Baker (ed.), Medieval Women, dedicated and presented to . . . Rosalind M. T. Hill (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 1; Oxford, 1978), pp. 275–87. F. Casolini in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1401–9, s.v. 'Frères Mineurs, 6. Sainte Claire et les Clarisses. 1. Sainte Claire', with further bibl. See also bibl. to POOR CLARES.

Clarendon, Constitutions of. A schedule of sixteen clauses, put forward by Henry II of England as a statement of English custom under his grandfather Henry I, to regulate the relations between ecclesiastical and lay jurisdiction and other matters. They were produced at the Council of Clarendon (1164) for the assent of St Thomas *Becket, Archbishop of *Canterbury, who, although he had agreed verbally to observe the customs, refused to seal the documents. Among the most important clauses were those which prohibited appeals to Rome without the king's consent (viii) and asserted the royal jurisdiction over criminous clerks (iii). Pope *Alexander III condemned these and eight other clauses, and a long dispute followed, until after Becket's murder Henry promised (1172) not to impede appeals to Rome (these came in practice to be heard in England by papal judges-delegate), and to abandon 'customs' brought in against the churches of his land in his own time—if any. However, though Henry suffered a defeat over criminous clerks (see BENEFIT OF CLERGY), he maintained other important customs, notably the right of lay courts to try actions concerning *advowsons, the control of bishoprics and royal abbeys during vacancies, and the 'election' of bishops in the King's chapel.

Text in Councils & Synods, 1: A.D. 871–1204, ed. D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke, Part 2, 1066–1204 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 877–83, with introd. pp. 852–77 and related material, pp. 883–93. Eng. tr. in Gee and Hardy, pp. 68–73 (no. 23), and, with notes, in D. C. Douglas and G. W. Greenaway (eds.), English Historical Documents 1042–1189 (2nd edn., 1981), pp. 766–70. F. Barlow, 'The Constitutions of Clarendon', Medieval History, 1, no. 1 (1991), pp. 39–52. See also bibl. cited under BECKET, ST THOMAS.

Clarke, Samuel (1675–1729). A native of *Norwich, he was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he came under I. *Newton's influence. His ability attracted the notice of J. Moore, Bp. of Norwich, who in 1698 appointed him his chaplain. In 1704 and 1705 he delivered two sets of Boyle Lectures in defence of rational theology against the empiricism of J. *Locke. They were later published (1705–6), with the joint title (from 1716) of A Discourse concerning the Being and Attributes of God, the Obligations of Natural Religion, and the Truth and Certainty of the Christian Revelation. Though a critic of the *Deists, Clarke did not conceal his sympathy with some aspects of their teaching. In A Letter to Mr. Dodwell (1706) he defended against H. *Dodwell the natural immortality and incorporeality of the soul. In 1706 he was appointed Rector of St Benet's, Paul's Wharf, and in 1709 Rector of St James's, Piccadilly. His preaching was highly regarded by Samuel *Johnson. In 1712 he aroused the indignation, esp. of *High Churchmen, by his Scripture-Doctrine of the Trinity, which had marked *Unitarian leanings. He was attacked by R. *Nelson and D. *Waterland; and the Lower House of Convocation sought his condemnation. The Upper House, however, imposed no formal retractation, when Clarke promised to write no further on the subject. In the next years he entered into a correspondence with G. W. *Leibniz on space and time (pub. 1717), defending the Newtonian doctrines, and also on the nature of free-will. On Newton's death (1727) he declined an invitation to succeed him as Master of the Mint. His other writings include Three Practical Essays, viz. on Baptism, Confirmation, Repentance (1699); a critique of J. *Toland's Amyntor (1699); Paraphrases on the Gospels of Mt. (1701), Mk. and Lk. (1702); and some collections of Sermons.

Collected ed. of his Works (4 vols., London, 1738), with Life by B. *Hoadly repr. in vol. 1, pp. i–xiv (previously prefixed to edn. of Clarke's Sermons by John Clarke, 10 vols., 1730–1, vol. 1, pp. i–l). Modern edn. of Leibniz–Clarke correspondence by H. G. Alexander (Manchester, 1956). The principal authority is the Life by his friend, W. *Whiston (London, 1730; a brief memoir by T. Emlyn is appended to 3rd edn., 1748). J. P. Ferguson, An Eighteenth Century Heretic: Dr. Samuel Clarke (Kineton, Warwick, 1976). J. E. Le Rossignol, The Ethical Philosophy of Samuel Clarke (Diss., Leipzig, 1892). L. Stephen in DNB 10 (1887), pp. 443–6.

Clarkson, Thomas (1760–1846), anti-slave-trade agitator. Educated at St John's College, Cambridge, he decided to devote his life to the repression of the slave trade, on which he had just written a prize essay. He was ordained deacon but hardly ever exercised his ministry. In 1787 he was involved in the establishment of a Christian settlement for poor Blacks in *Sierra Leone and also with some leading *Quakers and with W. *Wilberforce formed a group which pressed in the House of Commons for the abolition of the slave trade. Their vigorous efforts were rewarded by the Act of 1807 ending the traffic, and the emancipation of the slaves in 1833. Clarkson spent some time in France soon after the outbreak of the Revolution, urging here also the abolition of the slave trade with other abuses, and after the Peace of Vienna in 1815 propagated his views at the various European congresses. His books include A Portraiture of Quakerism (1806); History of the Rise, Progress, and Accomplishment of the Abolition of the African Slave Trade by the British Parliament (2 vols., 1808); Memoirs of the Private and Public Life of William Penn (2 vols., 1813); and Researches, Antediluvian, Patriarchal and Historical, concerning the Way in which Men first acquired their Knowledge of God and Religion (1836).

Clarkson's Correspondence with Henry Christophe, King of Haiti, ed. E. L. Griggs and C. H. Prator (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1952). E. L. Griggs, Thomas Clarkson: The Friend of Slaves (1936); E. Gibson Wilson, Thomas Clarkson: A Biography (1989). G. F. R. Barker in DNB 10 (1887), pp. 454–6. See also bibl. to SLAVERY.

class meeting. A meeting, usually held weekly, of small sections of each congregation of *Methodists, under a class leader appointed by the minister, at which contributions to the Church funds are paid, and inquiry is made into the conduct and spiritual progress of individual members. This institution, peculiar to Methodism, dates from 1742.

H. D. Rack, 'The Decline of the Class-Meeting and the Problem of Church-Membership in Nineteenth-Century Wesleyanism', Proceedings of the Wesley Historical Society, 39 (1973–4), pp. 12–21; W. W. Dean, 'The Methodist Class Meeting: The Significance of its Decline', ibid. 43 (1981), pp. 41–8.

Claudel, Paul Louis Charles (1868–1955), French Catholic poet and diplomat. He was born at Villeneuve-sur-Fère (Aisne) and, at the age of 18 was converted from worldliness to Christian fervour. He entered the diplomatic service in 1893, and after a distinguished career, which took him to the Far East, Brazil, and many cities of Central Europe, became ambassador in Tokyo in 1921, and in 1926 in Washington. His fame rests chiefly on his plays, which revivified the French theatre; their central theme is the consecration of the world to God in Christ. L'Annonce faite à Marie (1912; Eng. tr., 1916) is a canticle on the religious meaning of voluntary suffering and expiation lived by the leprous young girl Violaine, who thus becomes a mediatrix of grace. His greatest play, Le Soulier de Satin (1929; Eng. tr., 1931), which is set in Spain in the Baroque period, extends the theme of sacrificial love and redemption to the whole world. Catholic symbolism is also apparent in his prose writings, such as Art poétique (1907), and Figures et Paraboles (1936), and in his biblical commentaries, Les Aventures de Sophie (1937). His poems appeared in several collections, among them Cinq Grandes Odes (1910; Eng. tr., 1967), Corona Benignitatis Anni Dei (1915), Feuilles de Saints (1925), and Visages radieux (1947). Their powerful biblical imagery, and stirring realization of the Cross as the centre of the world, rank them with the finest Christian poetry of his time, to be compared only with that of C. *Péguy.

Œuvres complètes (29 vols., 1950–86, with Suppl., 1990 ff.). Convenient edns. of: Théâtre (Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, 72–3; 1956; 2nd edn., 1965), Œuvre poétique (ibid., 125; 1957), Œuvres en Prose (ibid., 179; 1965), and Journal (ibid., 205 and 213; 1968–1969). Jacques Rivière et Paul Claudel: Correspondance, 1907–1914, with introd. by I. Rivière (1926; Eng. tr., Letters to a Doubter, 1929); Paul Claudel et André Gide: Correspondance, 1899–1926, ed. R. Mallet (1949; Eng. tr., 1952); Lettres à sa fille Reine, ed. M. Malicet (1991). J. Rivière, Études (1911), no. 3, pp. 61–129; J. Madaule, Le Drame de Paul Claudel (1936; 5th edn., 1964); J. Samson, Paul Claudel, Poète-Musicien (Geneva [1948]); L. Chaigne, Vie de Paul Claudel et genèse de son oeuvre (1961); P.-A. Lesort, Paul Claudel par lui-même (Écrivains de toujours, 1963); F. Varillon, Claudel (Les Écrivains devant Dieu [1967]); R. Griffiths (ed.), Claudel: A Reappraisal (1968); H. de *Lubac and J. Bastaire, Claudel et Péguy (1974); A. Caranfa, Claudel: Beauty and Grace (Lewisburg and London [1989]); D. Millet-Gérard, Anima et la Sagesse pour une poétique comparée de l'exégèse claudélienne (1990). Cahiers Paul Claudel (1959 ff.).

Claudianus Mamertus (d. *c.*474), Christian philosopher and younger brother of St *Mamertus, Bp. of Vienne. Born in the vicinity of Lyons, he became a monk and was later ordained a presbyter by his brother. He was also a close friend of *Sidonius Apollinaris. His principal work was a treatise 'De Statu Animae' (3 Books, *c.*470). In this Claudianus defended the *Neoplatonist doctrine (accepted by St *Augustine) that the soul was immaterial (against *Faustus of Riez, who, following an earlier W. tradition (*Tertullian, *Hilary), held that the soul as a created substance was of a corporeal and extended character). He also wrote a letter to the rhetorician Sapaudus in which he bemoaned the level of the arts in his age.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL 53. 697–786. Crit. edn. by A. Engelbrecht in (CSEL 11; 1885). Id., 'Untersuchungen über die Sprache des Claudianus Mamertus' in Sb. (Wien), 110 (1886), pp. 423–542. Study by R. de la Broise (Paris, thesis, 1890). P. Courcelle, Les Lettres grecques en occident (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 159; 1943; 2nd edn., 1948), pp. 223–35; Eng. tr. (Cambridge, Mass., 1969), pp. 238–51 (on Claudianus' relation to *Porphyry). J. Madoz, SJ, Liciniano de Cartagena y sus cartas (Facultades de Teologia y de Filosofia del Colegio Máximo de Oña. Estudios Onienses, 1st ser. 4; 1948), pp. 28–55. E. L. Fortin, AA, Christianisme et culture philosophique au cinquième siècle: La querelle de l'âme humaine en Occident (Études Augustiniennes, 1959), esp. pp. 15–42 and 75–110. W. Schmid in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 169–79, s.v.; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 186–90, s.v. 'Mamert'.

Claudius (d. after 827), Bp. of Turin. He was of Spanish birth, and became master of the royal schools of Aquitaine before his promotion to the see of Turin *c.*817. He made a series of attacks on image-worship, relics, the adoration of the Cross, and indeed every visible symbol of Christ's life, as well as on *pilgrimages and the intercession of saints. He had scant regard for the authority of the Roman see, and his views, which were regarded as heretical by many, were refuted at the request of *Louis the Pious by Dungal and Jonas of Orléans. He was also famous for his biblical commentaries, which displayed an unusually wide knowledge of the works of St *Augustine and contain extensive quotations from them. A number of works formerly attributed to other authors have been ascribed to him by Dom Paulino Bellet. Some of the older historians of the *Waldenses claimed him as their founder.

Most of his writings are still in MS; those pub. are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 104. 615–928. Crit. edn. of 'Epp.' by E. Dümmler in MGH, Epistolae, 4 (1895), pp. 586–613. M. Ferrari, 'Note su Claudio di Torino "Episcopus ab ecclesia damnatus"', Italia Medioevale e Umanistica, 16 (1973), pp. 291–308, incl. text; I. M. Douglas, 'The Commentary on the Book of Ruth by Claudius of Turin', Sacris Erudiri, 22 (1974–5), pp. 295–320, incl. text. E. Dümmler, 'Über Leben und Lehre des Bischofs Claudius von Turin' in Sb. (Berl.) (1895), pp. 427–43. P. Bellet, OSB, 'Claudio de Turin, autor de los comentarios "In genesim et regum" del Pseudo Euquerio', Estudios Bíblicos, 9 (1950), pp. 209–23; id., 'Oració de Claudi de Tori en el comentari a Hebreus del Pseudo Attó de Vercelli', in Colligere Fragmenta: Festschrift Alban Dold, ed. B. Fischer, OSB and V. Fiala, OSB (Texte und Arbeiten, 1. Abteilung, 2; 1952), pp. 140–3; id., 'El Liber de Imaginibus Sanctorum bajo el nombre de Agobardo de Lyon obra de Claudio de Turin', Analecta Sacra Tarraconensia, 26 (1953), pp. 151–94. G. Italiani, La Tradizione esegetica nel commento ai Re di Claudio di Torino (Florence, 1979). Manitius, 1, pp. 390–6 (with account of MS material). F. Stegmüller, Repertorium Biblicum Medii Aevi, 2 (Madrid, 1950), pp. 242–9 (nos. 1949–75), and 8 (ibid., 1976), pp. 379–81. P. Bellet in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 921 f.; G. Sergi in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 26 (1982), pp. 158–61, both s.v.

Claudius Apollinarius. See APOLLINARIUS, CLAUDIUS.

clausura (Lat. 'closure' or, more usually, 'enclosure'). (1) The practice of separating a part of a religious house to the exclusion of those of the opposite sex to the community; and (2) the portion so enclosed. The clausura is found in all religious orders, in both E. and W., and dates from the earliest monastic rules. Permission, general or particular, is needed for religious to go outside the clausura, or for outsiders to come in, while in some cases even lay persons of the same sex as the community are held to violate the clausura by entrance. In some communities, certain parts of the house or church are neutral ground, which both the community and outsiders may enter without leave. In the RC Church an enclosure adapted to the character and mission of the Religious *Institute is required in all religious houses, with some part of the house reserved for its members. A stricter discipline applies in houses devoted to the *contemplative life; those of contemplative *nuns have to observe enclosure according to norms laid down by the Holy See (CIC (1983), can. 667).

Clayton, John (1709–73), one of the first '*Methodists'. Educated at Manchester Grammar School and Brasenose College, Oxford, he was a member of the '*Holy Club', founded by the *Wesleys. After ordination in 1732, he was put in charge of the Sacred Trinity Chapel, Salford, where J. Wesley and G. *Whitefield often preached for him. In 1740 he became a chaplain, and in 1760 a Fellow, of the Manchester Collegiate Church. Throughout his life he was a supporter of the Jacobites, giving great offence by his political views to the Whigs of the district. For many years he also conducted an academy at Salford.

Memoir by L. Tyerman, 'The Rev. John Clayton, M.A., the Jacobite Churchman', in The Oxford Methodists (1873), pp. 24–56. C. W. Sutton in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 13 f.

Clemens non Papa. Jacques Clement (*c.*1500–*c.*1556), a Dutch composer of Church music, who was facetiously so called to pretend to distinguish him from the contemporary Pope, *Clement VII. He was a forerunner of G. P. da *Palestrina.

Clement of Alexandria, St. See after Pope CLEMENT XIV.

Clement of Rome, St (fl. *c.*96), Bp. of *Rome. He appears in early succession lists as the second or third bishop after St *Peter; as, however, there is no evidence for monarchical episcopacy in Rome at so early a date, the meaning of this evidence is not clear. In primitive times he was often held to have been appointed by St Peter personally. Various writers of the 3rd and 4th cents. identify him with the Clement mentioned in Phil. 4: 3. Besides the spurious '*Clementine Literature' (q.v), two 'Epp. to the Corinthians' have been ascribed to him. The former Epistle ('1 Clement') is genuine, and is his real title to fame. It was written *c.*96 in the name of the Roman Church to deal with fierce strife in the Church at Corinth, where certain presbyters had been deposed. Clement issued a call to repentance, insisting that God required due order in all things and that the deposed presbyters must be reinstated and legitimate superiors obeyed. The Apostles 'appointed bishops and deacons' in every place, and it was they who gave directions how the ministry should perpetuate itself. Clement calls the higher class of ministers indifferently 'bishops' (ἐπίσκοποι) and 'presbyters' (or elders, πρεσβύτεροι). He refers to 'offering the gifts' (sc. of the *Eucharist) as one of their functions, and to some or all of them as 'rulers' of the Church. Here and elsewhere he affords valuable evidence of the state of the ministry in his time, on the history of the Roman Church and (it has been held) the martyrdoms of Sts Peter and *Paul. The epistle, which was highly regarded, was being read in church at Corinth along with the Scriptures *c.*170.

The so-called 'Second Epistle of Clement' is really a homily, assigned on stylistic grounds to a separate author. The earliest surviving Christian sermon, it sets out in general terms the character of the Christian life and the duty of repentance. It probably belongs to Corinth (so J. B. *Lightfoot), though some scholars have assigned it to Rome (A. *Harnack, who attributed it to Pope Soter) or Alexandria.

In later tradition St Clement became the subject of a variety of legends. In the 'Clementine Literature' he figures as the intermediary through whom the Apostles transmit their teaching to the Church. Quite another tradition, preserved in some apocryphal acta (not earlier than the 4th cent.), describes how he was banished to the Crimea in the reign of Trajan and forced to work in the mines. It is said that his missionary labours in those parts met with remarkable success and that he was bound to an anchor and thrown into the Black Sea. The legend adds that his tomb, which was built by angels, was shown once a year to the inhabitants by the miraculous ebbing of the tide. Feast day in the W., 23 Nov.; in the E., 24 or 25 Nov.

Fullest collection of material, patristic and modern, in J. B. Lightfoot, Apostolic Fathers, pt. 1 (rev. edn., 2 vols., 1890). The two 'Epp.' survive in two MSS, the [biblical] *Codex Alexandrinus (B. Libr.; text imperfect) and the Cod. Hierosol. of AD 1056 (of *Didache fame) discovered by P. *Bryennios. They were first pr. by P. *Young ('Junius'), Oxford, 1633 (whence incorporated by J. B. *Cotelier in his Patres Apostolici, 1672); crit. edn. by J. B. Lightfoot, op. cit. Text also in J. P. Migne, PG 1 and 2 (incl. Clementines). 1 Clem. also ed., with Fr. tr., by A. Jaubert (SC 167; 1971). For other edns. see APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Ancient Lat. tr. of I Clem. ed. G. *Morin, OSB, Maredsous, 1894; ancient Syr. tr. ed. R. L. Bensly and R. H. Kennett, London, 1899; Copt. frags. ed. F. Rösch, Strasbourg, 1910; Eng. tr. of 'Epp.' in J. B. Lightfoot, op. cit.; also of I Clem., with useful notes by W. K. Lowther Clarke (London, 1937). Comm. by A. Lindemann (Hb. NT 17; 1992). F. Gerke, Die Stellung des I. Clemensbriefes innerhalb der Entwicklung der altchristlichen Gemeindeverfassung und des Kirchenrechts (TU 47.1; 1931). L. Sanders, Le Hellénisme de St Clément de Rome et le paulinisme (Louvain, 1943). C. Eggenberger, Die Quellen der politischen Ethik des I. Klemensbriefes (Zurich, 1951); A. W. Ziegler, Neue Studien zum ersten Klemensbrief (1958); O. Andrén, Rättäfärdighet och Frid: En Studie i det första Clemensbrevet (Uppsala, 1960; with Eng. summary); O. Knoch, Eigenart und Bedeutung der Eschatologie im theologischen Aufriss des ersten Clemensbriefes: Eine auslegungsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (Theophaneia, 17; 1964). K. Beyschlag, Clemens Romanus und der Frühkatholizismus: Untersuchungen zu I Clemens 1–7 (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 35; Tübingen, 1966). G. Brunner, Die theologische Mitte des Ersten Klemensbriefs (Frankfurter Theologische Studien, 11; 1972); D. A. Hagner, The Use of the Old and New Testaments in Clement of Rome (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 34; 1973); K. P. Donfried, The Setting of Second Clement in Early Christianity (ibid. 38; 1974). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 5–7 (nos. 1001–14). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 45–7 and 551. A. Stuiber in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 188–97, s.v. See also bibl. to APOSTOLIC FATHERS.

Clement V (1264–1314), Pope from 1305. Bertrand de Got, a member of an influential French family, after studying at Toulouse, Orléans, and *Bologna, was appointed Bp. of Comminges in 1295 and Abp. of Bordeaux in 1299. Elected Pope in 1305 as successor to Benedict XI, he was crowned at Lyons in the presence of Philip the Fair, whose powerful influence made Clement's policy henceforward largely subservient to French interests. By fixing his residence at *Avignon in 1309 and thus inaugurating the 70 years' 'Captivity', Clement further increased his dependence on Philip, and the King insisted on a formal condemnation of Clement's predecessor, *Boniface VIII, on charges of heresy and immorality. The process, however, though actually begun in 1310, was, with Philip's assent, abandoned in 1311 when the King substituted a plan for the abolition of the *Templars, whose property he coveted. The order was suppressed at the Council of *Vienne (1311) and, though the Knights *Hospitallers received from the Pope the title to its property, the French King contrived to lay his hands on most of its possessions. As a vassal of Edward I, Clement was also brought into English affairs. In 1306 he was persuaded to suspend Robert of *Winchelsea, Abp. of *Canterbury, who was accused by the King of treason for his support of Boniface VIII, but in 1308, under Edward II, Robert was reinstalled at the request of the King. In 1306 he excommunicated Robert Bruce of Scotland for his part in the murder of the Red Comyn, and soon after deposed two bishops who had been actively in favour of the Scots rebellion. Despite his political difficulties and the discredit he brought on the Papacy by his taxation and sale of offices, Clement V did much to further scholarship, esp. the study of medicine and oriental languages, and founded the universities of Orléans (1306) and Perugia (1308). He also added to medieval Canon Law by the so-called '*Clementines' (q.v.).

Bulls ed. by the monks of *Monte Cassino, Regestum Clementis Papae V ex Vaticanis Archetypis . . . nunc primum editum cura et studio Monachorum Ordinis S. Benedicti (9 vols., bound in 7, with appendix, Rome, 1885–92); Acta ed. F. M. Delorme, OFM, and A. L. Tăutu (Pontificia Commissio ad Redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis. Fontes, 3rd ser., 7, tom. 1; Vatican, 1955). R. Fawtier and Y. Lanhers, Tables des registres de Clément V publiés par les Bénédictins (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 3rd ser., 1948–57). E. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium, ed. G. Mollat (4 vols., 1916–27), esp. vol. 1, pp. 1–106 and 551–66. E. Berchon, 'L'Histoire du Pape Clément V (1305–1314)', Actes de l'Académie Nationale des Sciences, Belles-Lettres et Arts de Bordeaux, 55 (1893), pp. 493–535, and 56 (1894), pp. 5–171. H. G. Richardson, 'Clement V and the See of Canterbury', EHR 56 (1941), pp. 96–103; R. Gaignard, 'Le Gouvernement pontifical au travail. L'exemple des dernières années du règne de Clément V: 1er août 1311–20 avril 1314', Annales du Midi, 72 (1960), pp. 169–214, with refs.; J. H. Denton, 'Pope Clement V's Early Career as a Royal Clerk', EHR 83 (1968), pp. 303–14. L. Thier, Kreuzzugsbemühungen unter Papst Clements V. (1305–1314) (Franziskanische Forschungen, 24; 1973); N. Housley, 'Pope Clement V and the Crusades of 1309–10', Journal of Medieval History, 8 (1982), pp. 29–43. T. Schmidt, Der Bonifaz-Prozess: Verfahren der Papstanklage in der Zeit Bonifaz' VIII. und Clemens' V. (Forschungen zur kirchlichen Rechtsgeschichte und zum Kirchenrecht, 19; 1989), pp. 119–439. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (1912; 10th edn. [1965]; Eng. tr., 1963), bk. 1, ch. 1, and passim. Pastor, 1 (1891), pp. 58–63. G. Mollat in DHGE 12 (1952), cols. 1115–29, s.v.; A. P. Bagliani in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 26 (1982), pp. 202–15, s.v. 'Clemente V', both with full bibl.

Clement VI (1291–1352), Pope from 1342. Pierre Roger entered the *Benedictine monastery of La Chaise-Dieu at the age of 10, and later studied and taught at *Paris. He advanced rapidly in both the secular and the ecclesiastical spheres: he became successively Abbot of Fécamp in 1326, Bp. of Arras in 1328, Abp. of Sens in 1329, and Abp. of Rouen in 1330. Meanwhile he was a close and valued councillor of King Philip IV of France. Created cardinal by *Benedict XII in 1338, he was elected Pope at Avignon on 7 May 1342. His French sympathies hindered his efforts to make peace in the Hundred Years War between France and England. These and his lavish use of Papal provisions led to anti-Papal legislation in England, notably, Edward III's First Statute of *Provisors (1351). Clement appointed many cardinals, several from among his relations, which enhanced his reputation for *nepotism. In 1352 the cardinals staged a palace revolution by drawing up an unprecedented election capitulation, designed to limit the authority of the next Pope in their favour. Like his predecessors, Clement refused to confirm the election as Emperor of Louis of Bavaria, whom he regarded as a usurper, and instead appointed Charles of Bohemia (Charles IV) as King of the Romans in 1346. In Italy Clement faced many problems—the rebellious Visconti in Milan, turmoil in Naples under his ward, Queen Joanna, and popular revolution in Rome, led by Cola di *Rienzo in 1347. In 1344 the 'Holy League', formed on Clement's initiative, captured the key port of Smyrna (Izmir) from the Turks, but further crusades were prevented by the effects of plague, economic decline, and European warfare.

Despite pressure to return the Papacy to Rome, Clement strengthened its establishment at Avignon by buying the city from Joanna of Naples, and by trying to build it up as the intellectual and artistic nucleus of Christendom, both through patronage and through his spectacular extensions to the Papal palace. Clement was celebrated both for his preaching and as a theologian: his jubilee bull of 1350 is fundamental for the doctrine of *Indulgences. Although his extravagant lifestyle resembled that of the Renaissance Popes, he was a generous almsgiver to the poor, whom he befriended especially during the Black Death of 1348–9, and a protector of the Jews.

E. Déprez and others (eds.), Clément VI (1342–1352): Lettres closes, patentes et curiales se rapportant à la France (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 3rd ser., 3 vols., 1901–61); E. Déprez and G. Mollat (eds.), Clément VI (1342–1352): Lettres closes, patentes et curiales intéressant les pays autres que la France (ibid., 1960–1); U. Berlière, OSB (ed.), Lettres de Clément VI, 1342–1352, 1 (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, 6; 1924 [no more pub.]); id. (ed.), Suppliques de Clément VI, 1342–1352 (ibid. 1; 1906); E. Griffe (ed.), Lettres patentes des évêques de France, recueillies dans les registres du Pape Clément VI, 1342–1352, 1, Province de Bourges (Acta Episcoporum Galliae Saeculo XIV, 1933); L. Klicman (ed.), Acta Clementis VI Pontificis Romani, 1342–1352 (Monumenta Vaticana Res Gestas Bohemicas Illustrantia, 1; Prague, 1903). E. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium (ed. G. Mollat, esp. 1 (1916), pp. 241–308, with notes, 2 (1927), pp. 335–433). D. Wood, Clement VI: The Pontificate and Ideas of an Avignon Pope (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 4th ser., 13; 1989). J. Gay, Le Pape Clément VI et les affaires d'Orient (1342–1352) (thesis, Paris, 1904). G. Mollat, 'L'Œuvre oratoire de Clément VI', AHDLMA 3 (1928), pp. 239–74; P. Schmitz, OSB, 'Les Sermons et discours de Clément VI, OSB', R. Bén. 41 (1929), pp. 15–34. A. Maier, 'Der literarische Nachlass des Petrus Rogerii (Clement VI) in der Borghesiana', RTAM 15 (1948), pp. 332–56, and 16 (1949), pp. 72–98. R. J. Loenertz, OP, 'Ambassadeurs grecs auprès du Pape Clément VI (1348)', OCP 19 (1953), pp. 178–96. F. Giunta, 'Sulla politica orientale di Clemente VI', in P. Vaccari and P. F. Palumbo (eds.), Studi in storia medievale e moderna in onore di Ettore Rota (Rome, 1958), pp. 149–62. G. Mollat, 'Le Saint-Siège et la France sous le pontificat de Clément VI (1342–1352)', RHE 55 (1960), pp. 5–24. J. E. Wrigley, 'Clement VI before his Pontificate: the early life of Pierre Roger, 1290/91–1342', Catholic Historical Review, 56 (1970), pp. 433–73; id., 'The Conclave and the Electors of 1342', Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, 20 (1982), pp. 51–81. P. E. Burnham, 'The Patronage of Clement VI', History Today, 28 (1978), pp. 372–81. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (1912; 10th edn. [1965]; Eng. tr., 1963), esp. bk. 1, ch. 4. Id. in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 1129–62, s.v.; B. Guillemain in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 26 (1982), pp. 215–22, s.v. 'Clemente VI', both with bibl.

Clement VII (1478–1534), Pope from 1523. The son of Giuliano de' Medici and a cousin of *Leo X, he rapidly rose to a high position, becoming Abp. of Florence and cardinal in 1513. In 1523 he succeeded *Hadrian VI. Though Clement was personally of blameless character, his lack of courage led his reign to be marked by shifty diplomacy and intrigue. He attempted to steer a middle path between the conflicting aims of Francis I of France and the Emp. *Charles V, siding first with the former by the League of Cognac (1526), and then, after the sack of Rome (1527) by the Imperial armies, with the latter by the Treaty of Barcelona (1529). He pursued the same irresolute policy of procrastination in relation to the divorce of *Henry VIII from Catherine of Aragon. It was his failure to foster the movement for reform within the Church that encouraged the rapid spread of Protestant doctrine during his pontificate. In his ready patronage of scholars and artists, among the latter B. Cellini, *Raphael, and *Michelangelo, he was a true son of the house of Medici.

H. M. Vaughan, The Medici Popes, Leo X and Clement VII (1908), pp. 285–346; E. Rodocanachi, Histoire de Rome: Les pontificats d'Adrien VI et de Clément VII (1933), pp. 87–270, with bibl. pp. 281–4. G. Müller, Die römische Kurie und die Reformation 1523–1534: Kirche und Politik während des Pontifikates Clemens' VII. (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, 38; 1969). Among the principal sources for the history of his relations with Henry VIII are the Calendars of the State Papers of the reign (see s.v. HENRY VIII); S. Ehses (ed.), Römische Dokumente zur Geschichte der Ehescheidung Heinrichs VIII von England, 1527–1534 (1893). P. Crabitès, Clement VII and Henry VIII (1936). There is also important information in W. E. Wilkie, The Cardinal Protectors of England (Cambridge, 1974); see index, s.v. 'Clement VII' and 'Medici, Giulio de''. Pastor, 9 (1910), pp. 231–67, and 10 (1910). R. Mols, SJ, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 1175–1224, s.v., with full bibl. (inaccurate); A. Prosperi in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 26 (1982), pp. 237–59, s.v. 'Clemente VII, Papa', also with bibl.

Clement VIII (c.1536–1605), Pope from 1592. The son of Silvestro Aldobrandini, a distinguished Italian lawyer, Ippolito Aldobrandini was a man of high personal character. He became a cardinal in 1585 and was elected Pope in 1592. It was his policy to secure the representation of all the conflicting influences in the *curia, and esp. to limit the dominance of Spanish influence. He supported the Catholic League against *Henry of Navarre, but this did not prevent his negotiating with Henry, so that in 1595 Henry was received into the Catholic Church. Clement was also largely responsible for the ensuing Treaty of Vervins (1598), which brought about peace between France and Spain. His hopes of converting *James I of England to RCism were not realized, however. In ecclesiastical matters he pursued a policy of reform. He took a keen interest in the revision of the service books, and issued new editions of the *Vulgate, the *Missal, the *Breviary, the '*Caeremoniale Episcoporum', and the *Pontifical.

K. Jaitner (ed.), Die Hauptinstruktionen Clemens' VIII. für die Nuntien und Legaten an den Europäischen Fürstenhöfen 1592–1605 (2 vols., Tübingen, 1984), with full introd. P. Van Isacker, 'Notes sur l'intervention militaire de Clément VIII en France à la fin du XVIe siècle', RHE 12 (1911), pp. 702–13. A. Louant, 'L'Intervention de Clément VIII dans le traité de Vervins', Bulletin de l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, 12 (1932), pp. 127–86. A. O. Meyer, 'Clement VIII und Jakob I von England', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 7 (1904), pp. 268–306; J. Martin, PSS, 'Clément VIII et Jacques Stuart', Revue d'Histoire Diplomatique, 25 (1911), pp. 279–307 and 359–78. Cav. L. F. Mathaus-Voltolini, 'Die Beteiligung des Papstes Clemens VIII an der Bekämpfung der Türken in den Jahren 1592–1595', RQ 15 (1901), pp. 303–26 and 410–23. D. Beggiao, La visita pastorale di Clemente VIII (1592–1600): Aspetti di riforma post-tridentina a Roma (Corona Lateranensis, 23; 1978). Pastor, 23 (1933) and 24 (1933). R. Mols, SJ, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 1249–97, s.v., with full bibl. (inaccurate); A. Borromeo in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 26 (1982), pp. 259–82, s.v. 'Clemente VIII', with extensive bibl.

Clement XI (1649–1721), Pope from 1700. Giovanni Francesco Albani, who was a native of Urbino, was educated at the Roman College, became a doctor of both Laws, and entered on an administrative career in the Papal States. In 1687 he was appointed Secretary of Papal Briefs and in 1690 he was created cardinal. He was an ecclesiastic of austere habits who, accepting election to the Papacy with reluctance, continued to discharge faithfully his pastoral duties. He met with ill success in the political sphere. In 1701 he protested, without effect, against the assumption of the title of King of Prussia by the Elector of Brandenburg. In the War of the Spanish Succession, having previously favoured the candidature of Philip of Anjou (1683–1746), he afterwards tried to remain neutral and procure a peaceful solution, but was forced in 1701 to recognize Philip, and in 1709, when the Imperial troops had invaded the Papal States, to abandon him in favour of the Archduke Charles; consequently in the Treaty of Utrecht (1713) his rights in Sicily, Sardinia, Parma and Piacenza were ignored. In the same year he quarrelled with the Duke of Savoy about his rights of investiture in Sicily; and when he issued an *interdict, all the clergy who accepted it were banished until the island was conquered by Philip V of Spain in 1718. On the declaration of war by the Turks on Venice in 1714, he tried, without success, to organize an alliance of princes against them.

During Clement's reign the long-drawn-out *Jansenist controversy continued within the French Church and Jansenism was once more condemned in the bull '*Vineam Domini Sabaoth' (16 July 1705). This was followed by the condemnation of P. *Quesnel's Abrégé de la morale de l'évangile in 1708, and, later, by the famous bull '*Unigenitus Dei Filius' (8 Sept. 1713). He also had to decide the dispute between *Dominicans and *Jesuits on the question of the Chinese rites, esp. the cult of ancestors and of Confucius, which the former condemned while the latter tolerated it. The Pope approved the decision of the *Holy Office which censured the opinion of the Jesuits, but the controversy was not finally settled until the reign of *Benedict XIV. Clement XI was a generous protector of arts and scholarship, one of the most important additions to the *Vatican Library being the MSS. collected at his instigation by J. S. *Assemani.

In 1708 he made the Feast of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM one of obligation throughout the Church.

Works, incl. Bullarium, ed. by his nephew, Card. Albani (7 vols., Rome, 1722–4), with Life [by J. C. Battellus] prefixed to Bullarium (1723); later edn. (2 vols., Rome, 1729). [P. Polidori,] De Vita et Rebus Gestis Clementis Undecimi (Urbino, 1727). S. Reboulet, Histoire de Clément XI Pape (2 vols., Avignon, 1752). F. Pometti, 'Studii sul pontificato di Clemente XI, 1700–1721', Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, 21 (1898), pp. 279–457; 22 (1899), pp. 109–179; 23 (1900), pp. 239–76, 449–515. L. Nina, Le finanze pontificie sotto Clemente XI (1928). A. Aldobrandini, La guerra di successione di Spagna negli stati dell'Alta Italia dal 1702 al 1705 e la politica di Clemente XI dal carteggio di Mons (1931). L. Just, Clemens XI und der Code Léopold (1701–50) (1935). [J.] Schmidlin, 'Der Konflikt der Anima mit Clemens XI', RQ 17 (1903), pp. 141–59 and 301–23. L. Ceyssens, 'Autour de l'Unigénitus. Le Pape Clément XI', Bulletin de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 53–4 (1983–4), pp. 253–304, repr. in id. and J. A. G. Tans, Autour de l'Unigenitus (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 76; 1987), pp. 737–88. Pastor, 33 (1941), with bibl. R. Mols, SJ, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 1326–61, s.v.; S. Andretta in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 26 (1982), pp. 302–20, s.v. 'Clemente XI', both with full bibl. See also other works cited under UNIGENITUS.

Clement XIII (1693–1769), Pope from 1758. Carlo della Torre Rezzonico was a native of Venice, studied with the *Jesuits at *Bologna, and became a doctor of law at Padua. Having been appointed Auditor of the *Rota for *Venice in 1728, he was made cardinal in 1737 and in 1743 Bp. of Padua, where he endeared himself to his people by his lavish almsgiving. Soon after his election to the Papacy the storm gathered against the Society of Jesus, which came to be the chief preoccupation of his pontificate. It began in *Portugal, where the all-powerful minister, Sebastian Carvalho, afterwards Marquis de Pombal, first imprisoned and then expelled all members of the Society under pretext of their having conspired against the King, and all relations between the country and the Holy See were severed in 1760. In 1761 the Portuguese example was followed by *France, where the Parlement of Paris demanded drastic alterations in the constitutions of the Society, which Clement refused with the famous words: Sint ut sunt aut non sint ('Let them be as they are or not be at all'). In 1764 nearly all the French Jesuits had to go into exile, and Louis XV abolished the order by law in his kingdom. The Pope replied by the bull 'Apostolicum pascendi' of 7 Jan. 1765, giving warm praise to the Society and all its good works. In 1767 the Jesuits were expelled also from *Spain, and shipped to Civitavecchia, and soon after also from Naples and Parma. At last, in 1769, the three ambassadors of Spain, Naples, and France demanded the complete and irrevocable destruction of the Society, and the secularization of its members throughout the world, a step which is believed to have hastened Clement's death, which occurred a few days afterwards. The suppression of the Society by Papal authority was effected by his successor, *Clement XIV.

Bulls in A. Babèri (ed.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio . . . Clementis XIII. Clementis XIV. Pii VI. Pii VII. Leonis XII. et Pii VIII., ed. C. A. Spetia, 1–3 (Rome, 1835–8). J. Holzwarth, Die Verschwörung der katholischen Höfe gegen Clement den Dreizehnten (1872). P. Dudon, 'De la suppression de la Compagnie de Jésus (1758–73)', RQH 132 (1938), pp. 75–107. [G. J. X.] de Lacroix de Ravignon, SJ, Clément XIII et Clément XIV (2 vols., 1854), vol. 1, pp. 1–236, with docs. vol. 2, pp. 1–362. A. Theiner, Orat., Histoire du Pontificat de Clément XIV, 1 (Fr. tr. of Germ., 1852), pp. 23–147. B. Betto, 'Papa Rezzonico attraverso le lettere inedite del confessore apostolico', Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, 28 (1974), pp. 388–464, incl. text of 15 letters addressed to him. C. Bellinati, Attività Pastorale del Card. Carlo Rezzonico, Vescovo di Padova pio Clemente XIII (1743–1758) (Padua [1969]). Pastor, 26 (1950), pp. 143–504, and 27 (1950). J. Mols, SJ, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 1381–410, s.v., with full bibl.; E. D. McShane, SJ, in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 937–40; L. Cajani and A. Foa in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 26 (1982), pp. 328–43.

Clement XIV (1705–74), Pope from 1769. Giovanni Vincenzo Antonio Ganganelli was the son of a surgeon at Sant'Arcangelo, nr. Rimini, who entered the *Franciscan Order in 1723. In 1746 he was appointed Consultor of the *Holy Office by *Benedict XIV, and in 1759 created cardinal by *Clement XIII. In 1769 he was elected Pope after a stormy conclave, the Bourbon courts having decided to recognize only a Pope determined to suppress the *Jesuits.

As Pope he made it his chief aim to preserve peace with the Catholic princes in order to gain their support against the growing irreligion. He therefore restored good relations with Parma and *Spain, and esp. *Portugal, by creating cardinal the brother of the Marquis de Pombal, the Portuguese prime minister. He also suspended (1773) the annual issue of the bull '*In Coena Domini', which contained the censures reserved to the Pope. But all these concessions failed to satisfy the Bourbon courts, bent on the destruction of the Society of Jesus. After hesitating and using half-measures for some time, Clement at last yielded to the pressure of France and Spain, who threatened a schism if the order were not suppressed. In the Brief '*Dominus ac Redemptor' of 21 July 1773 which decreed its suppression, he gave as the only reason for the step the hostility which the Jesuits had incurred and the controversies in which they had been implicated. Thus the order was suppressed in all Catholic states, though Catharine II of Russia and Frederick II of Prussia (the latter only until 1780) refused to promulgate the Papal Brief, so that the Society continued to exist in their realms.

The sacrifice of the Society of Jesus did not, however, procure better relations between the Papacy and the European princes. The former Papal possessions of *Avignon and Benevento were, indeed, restored to the Holy See, but in France a royal commission for the reform of the religious orders continued its activities, suppressing religious houses without Papal approval; in Portugal the secular authorities interfered with ecclesiastical affairs and with the education of the young; and in *Poland hostile tendencies made themselves felt even among the clergy, and esp. in the Order of the *Piarists. Clement XIV introduced many measures for the development of trade and industry in the Pontifical States, but with little success, owing to the opposition of the cardinals and the Roman nobility, who could not forgive the suppression of the Jesuits.

Epistolae et Brevia Selectiora, ed. A. Theiner, Orat. (Paris, 1852). A. L. de Caraccioli, La Vie du Pape Clément XIV (1775; Eng. tr., 1776). A. Theiner, Orat., Geschichte des Pontificats Clemens' XIV (2 vols., 1853; Fr. tr., 1852). A. von Reumont, Ganganelli: Papst Clement XIV. Seine Briefe und seine Zeit (1847). J. A. M. Crétineau-Joly, Clément XIV et les Jésuites (1847); [G. J. X.] de Lacroix de Ravignon, SJ, Clément XIII et Clément XIV (2 vols., 1854), vol. 1, pp. 237–483, and vol. 2, pp. 363–492. L. Berra, 'Il diario del conclave di Clemente XIV del Card. Filippo Maria Pirelli', Archivio della Società romana di Storia patria, 85–6 for 1962–3 (1965), pp. 25–319, incl. text of journal of the conclave by Card. Pirelli, pp. 98–319. L. Szilas, SJ, 'Konklave und Papstwahl Clemens' XIV (1769). Vorspeil zur Aufhebung der Gesellschaft Jesu am 21. Juli 1773', ZKT 96 (1974), pp. 287–99. Pastor, 38 ('1951' [1952]); cf. L. Cicchitto, OFM Conv., in Miscellanea Francescana, 34 (1934), pp. 189–231. J. de la Servière, SJ, in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 124–34, E. Préclin in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 1411–23; M. Rosa in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 26 (1982), pp. 343–62, all s.v., with bibl.

Clement of Alexandria (c.150–c.215), theologian. Practically nothing is known of his life. Perhaps born in *Athens, after studying Christianity and philosophy in several places, he became a pupil of *Pantaenus in *Alexandria. He assumed the role of teacher himself (c.190), continuing after Pantaenus' death, but fled from Alexandria in the persecution c.202. *Eusebius (HE 6. 13. 1–14. 7) mentions several of his works, of which the following survive: the Protrepticus, or an 'Exhortation to the Greeks'; the Paedagogus, on Christian life and manners; eight Books of Stromateis, or 'Miscellanies' (though the last Book seems to be a misplaced fragment on logic); Excerpta ex Theodoto (extracts from the work of *Theodotus, a *Valentinian Gnostic); Eclogae propheticae (these two last may be material for the apparently missing eighth book of Stromateis); a homily (Quis dives salvetur?), and several fragments. Clement's work represents an attempt to meet the charge of such pagan critics of Christianity as *Celsus that it is a religion for the ignorant. He treads a middle way between heretical *Gnosticism which had intellectual pretensions and a religion of simple faith, seeing in Christianity the fulfilment both of the OT Scriptures and of Greek philosophy. His theology is presented as a spiritual journey in the threefold work consisting of the Protrepticus, the Paedagogus, and the (projected) Didascalus (or 'Teacher', to which the Stromateis seems to bear a somewhat ambiguous relationship). In the first, the *Logos exposes the error and immorality of Greek religion and leads men, through *Baptism, to the true and pure religion of Christianity. In the second, the Logos as paedagogus, nurse, and physician, watches over the newly-born Christian soul, trains it in appropriate virtues, and prepares it to grasp the deeper teaching (essentially of the Scriptures) which the Logos will expound as didascalus. In all this Clement is deeply indebted to contemporary Middle *Platonic philosophy, and he uses many themes from the Gnostics: he applies the term 'gnostic' to the Christian who has attained the deeper teaching of the Logos. The ultimate goal of the Christian life is presented as *deification, identified both as Platonic 'assimilation to God' (Theat. 176 B) and as the biblical idea of imitation of God (cf. Mt. 5: 48, and the example of *Moses following God). Clement's name appears in the earlier martyrologies, where it is assigned to 4 Dec., but *Clement VIII excised it on the advice of C. *Baronius on the grounds of the doubtful orthodoxy of some of his writings. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 5 Dec.

The Protrepticus and Paedagogus survive in the 'Arethas Codex' (Par. gr. 451 of AD 914) and some dependent MSS, the Stromateis in the Florence MS Laur. V. 3 (11th cent.) and a copy. Editiones principes by P. Victorius (Florence, 1550) and F. Sylburg (Heidelberg, 1592); good edn. by J. *Potter, 2 vols., Oxford, 1715. J. P. Migne, PG 8 and 9. Crit. edn. by O. Stählin in GCS 1–3, text, 1905–9; rev. by L. Früchtel and U. Treu, 1960–72; vol. 4 (very fine index), 1934–6; rev. U. Treu, 1980 ff. Stromateis, bk. 7, ed. F. J. A. *Hort and J. B. Mayor (London, 1902); Protrepticus and Quis dives salvetur?, with frag., ed., with Eng. tr., by G. W. Butterworth (Loeb, 1919). There are also eds., mainly based on the GCS texts, with Fr. tr. and comm., in SC: Protrepticus, by A. Plassart and C. Mondésert, SJ (2bis, 1949); Paedagogus, by M. Harl, C. Mondésert, SJ, and H. I. Marrou (70, 108, and 158; 1960–70); Stromateis, bks. 1 and 2, by C. Mondésert, SJ, and others (30 and 38; 1951–4), bk. 5, by A. Le Boulluec and P. Voulet, SJ (278–9; 1981); for edns. of Excerpta ex Theodoto see s.v. THEODOTUS. Modern Eng. tr. of Paedagogos by S. P. Wood, CP (Fathers of the Church, 23; 1954) and of Stromateis, bks. 1–3 by J. Ferguson (ibid., 85 [1991]). Studies by E. de Faye (Paris, 1898), R. B. Tollinton (2 vols., London, 1914), G. Bardy (Paris, 1926), G. Lazzati (Milan, 1939), and C. Mondésert, SJ (Paris, 1944). C. *Bigg, The Christian Platonists of Alexandria (ed. F. E. *Brightman, 1913), esp. pp. 72–150. J. Munck, Untersuchungen über Klemens von Alexandrien (1933). E. Molland, 'Clement of Alexandria on the Origin of Greek Philosophy', Symbolae Osloenses, 15–16 (1936), pp. 57–85; id., The Conception of the Gospel in the Alexandrian Theology (Oslo, 1938), pp. 5–84. T. Camelot, OP, Foi et gnose: Introduction à l'étude de la connaissance mystique chez Clément d'Alexandrie (Études de théologie et d'histoire de la spiritualité, 3; 1945). F. Quatember, SJ, Die christliche Lebenshaltung des Klemens von Alexandrien nach seinem Pädagogus (Vienna, 1946). W. Völker, Der wahre Gnostiker nach Clemens Alexandrinus (TU 57; 1952). E. F. Osborn, The Philosophy of Clement of Alexandria (Texts and Studies, NS 3; 1957). A. Méhat, Étude sur les 'Stromates' de Clément d'Alexandrie (Patristica Sorbonensia, 7 [1966]). H. Chadwick, Early Christian Thought and the Classical Tradition: Studies in Justin, Clement, and Origen (Oxford, 1966), pp. 31–65. S. R. C. Lilla, Clement of Alexandria: A Study in Christian Platonism and Gnosticism (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971). D. Wyrwa, Die christliche Platonaneignung in den Stromateis des Clemens von Alexandrien (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 53; 1983). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 135–40 (nos. 1375–99). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 190–97 and 585–7. A. de la Barre in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 137–99; M. Spanneut in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 943 f.; A. Méhat in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 101–13, all s.v. See also works cited under ALEXANDRIAN THEOLOGY.

Clement I. See CLEMENT OF ROME, ST.

Clement Mary Hofbauer, St. See HOFBAUER, ST CLEMENT MARY.

Clementine Literature. The many apocryphal writings which circulated in the early Church under the name of St *Clement of Rome include, besides the so-called 'Second Ep. of Clement' (q.v.), (1) the '*Apostolic Constitutions', (2) two 'Epp. to Virgins', (3) and (4) the 'Clementine Homilies' and 'Recognitions', (5) 'Epitomes' of the last named, (6) the 'Apocalypse of Clement', more commonly known as the 'Apocalypse of St *Peter' (q.v.), (7) an unpublished Arabic Apocalypse akin to the preceding, and (8) spurious letters in the *False Decretals (q.v.). The term 'Clementines' (Κλημέντια) is by convention restricted to (3), (4), and the less important (5).

(1) The Clementine Homilies ('Ομιλίαι) is a religious and philosophical romance, arranged as 20 discourses, which Clement is supposed to have sent from *Rome to *James of Jerusalem, the Lord's brother, and preceded by two letters from Peter and Clement, also addressed to James, and instructions for the correct use of the work (the Contestatio). They describe Clement's travels in the East when he met St Peter and witnessed his conflict with *Simon Magus. The work contains much legendary matter, e.g. about Clement's family. Until A. R. M. Dressel published a complete text on the basis of Cod. Ottobon. 443 in 1853, they were only known in a defective Cod. Par. gr. 930.

(2) The Clementine Recognitions ('Αναγνώσεις), in 10 books, closely resembles the 'Homilies' in historical setting and theological outlook. Their narrative parts go over much the same ground, with additional details of the vicissitudes of several members of Clement's family and their final reunion after their 'recognition' (hence the title) by St Peter. The original Greek is lost; the work survives in the Lat. of *Rufinus (d. 410), who in a prefatory letter mentions that he had made various curtailments. Parts of the 'Homilies' and 'Recognitions' also survive in Syriac.

(3) The two Greek Epitomes ('Επιτομαί) are evidently later. They omit most of the theological discussions of the earlier works and introduce an account of Clement's martyrdom. Two Arabic epitomes also survive.

The literary and theological problems raised by the Clementines are still debated. It is undisputed that there is a literary connection between the 'Homilies' and the 'Recognitions' and it is generally thought that they both depend on a common lost source (Grundschrift). Some scholars think this Grundschrift was composed of the 'Preachings of St Peter' (not to be confused with the 'Preaching of St *Peter', q.v.) and material derived from the 'Acts of St *Peter', the former of which was prob. *Ebionite and anti-Pauline. Others hold that the Grundschrift is based on a lost 'Itinerary of St Peter', an apologetic treatise displaying a rationalism akin to that of the 2nd cent. *Apologists. It is, however, generally agreed that one of the sources of the Grundschrift was *Bardesanes' 'Dialogue of Destiny'. This fact, combined with Origen's quotation from some form of the Clementines in Book 3 of his 'Commentary on Genesis' (preserved in the Philocalia), suggests a date of composition sometime in the first third of the 3rd cent. The 'Homilies' seem to be a first reworking of the Grundschrift, adding a metaphysical, *Gnostic interest in *syzygies, which provides a background to the opposition of Peter and Simon Magus. They belong to the 4th cent. and betray *Arian sympathies. The 'Recognitions' seem to presuppose the 'Homilies' as well as the Grundschrift, but as they survive mainly in the (characteristically reworked) translation of Rufinus, it is difficult to know what their original intention was. As they stand they contain a passage expressing *Eunomian teaching (3. 2–11), which most critics think is an interpolation. In this final form, Christ is a Divine Aeon, who had previously been revealed in *Adam and *Moses. Jesus is the True Prophet and special emphasis is laid on the Jerusalem Church. There are also strong ascetic elements. Peter is a strict vegetarian and the use of water alone is allowed in the Eucharist. On the other hand there is a definite repudiation of celibacy (a mark of Jewish influence).

The documents were given a wholly disproportionate importance by the *Tübingen School, who, putting them very early, saw in the narratives of Simon Magus a reflection of the fierce conflict between 'Petrinism' and 'Paulinism' in pre-Catholic Christianity.

Homilies (1–19a only) first pr. from Par. gr. 930 by J. B. *Cotelier in his '*Apostolic Fathers' (1672), 1, pp. 546–746. A. R. M. Dressel's complete text (1853; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 2. 19–468) was soon superseded by the more satisfactory edn. of P. de *Lagarde (Clementina, Leipzig, 1865). Recognitions ed. J. *Faber Stapulensis as early as 1504. Subsequent edns. by J. B. Cotelier (1672) and E. G. Gersdorf (1838; repr. PG 1. 1158–474). Crit. edn. of Homilies by B. Rehm (GCS 42; 1953; 3rd edn. by G. Strecker, 1992) and of the Recognitions by B. Rehm and F. Paschke (ibid. 51; 1965; 2nd edn. by G. Strecker, 1994), with concordances by G. Strecker (ibid. 58; 2 vols., 1986–9). Selections from the Homilies, Recognitions, and Epitome in Ger. tr., with introd., by J. Irmscher and G. Strecker in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 439–88; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 483–541. W. Frankenberg, Die syrischen Clementinen mit griechischem Paralleltext (TU 48, Heft 3; 1937). F. Paschke, Die beiden griechischen Klementinen-Epitomen und ihre Anhänge: Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Vorarbeiten zu einer Neuausgabe der Texte (ibid. 90; 1966). The lit. is vast. Among the more important is H. Waitz, Die Pseudoklementinen (TU 25. 4; 1904); J. *Chapman, 'On the date of the Clementines', ZNTW 9 (1908), pp. 21–34, 147–59; O. *Cullmann, Le Problème littéraire et historique du roman pseudo-clémentin (1930); E. *Schwartz, 'Unzeitgemässe Betrachtungen zu den Clementinen', ZNTW 31 (1932), pp. 151–99; B. Rehm, 'Zur Entstehung der pseudoclementinischen Schriften', ibid. 37 (1938), pp. 77–184. G. Strecker, Das Judenchristentum in den Pseudoklementinen (TU 70; 1958; 2nd edn., 1981), with bibl.; W. Ullmann, 'The Significance of the Epistola Clementis in the Pseudo-Clementines', JTS NS 11 (1960), pp. 295–317; J. Rius-Camps, 'Las Pseudoclementinas. Bases filológicas para una nueva interpretación', Revista Catalana de Teología, 1 (1976), pp. 79–158, with Eng. summary. F. Stanley Jones, 'The Pseudo-Clementines: A History of Research', The Second Century, 2 (1982), pp. 1–33 and 63–96. For lexical purposes, W. C[hawner], Index of Noteworthy Words and Phrases found in the Clementine Homilies (1893). CPC 1 (1983), pp. 8–11 (nos. 1015–21). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 134 f. and 575. B. Rehm in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 197–206, s.v. 'Clemens Romanus II'.

Clementines. In canon law, the collection of *Decretals, also known as the Liber Septimus, issued by *Clement V. It contains Decretals of *Boniface VIII, Urban IV, and Clement himself. Clement promulgated it, together with the decrees of the Council of *Vienne (1311–12), on 21 Mar. 1314 at Monteux, nr. Carpentras. Its authority being uncertain owing to Clement's having died before its general acceptance, it was promulgated afresh by *John XXII on 25 Oct. 1317. It was the last item officially embodied in the '*Corpus Iuris Canonici'.

G. Mollat in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 635–40, s.v. 'Corpus Juris Canonici, IV. Les Clémentines', with refs. to lists of edns. and comm. and also bibl.

Cleopas. One of the two disciples to whom the risen Christ appeared on the road to *Emmaus on the day of the Resurrection, and made Himself known in the 'breaking of bread' (Lk. 24: 13–35). He is sometimes identified with the Clopas of Jn. 19: 25 (RV), the husband of a certain Mary, who, on the assumption that the Gk. Κλωπᾶς is the equivalent of the Aramaic חַלְפַי (also 'Alphaeus'), has been identified with Mary, the mother of James (cf. Mk. 3: 18, 15: 40).

Clerical Disabilities Act 1870. The Act which allows a C of E cleric, after resigning all preferments, to execute a Deed of Relinquishment and thereby regain such civil rights as were lost through becoming a cleric (e.g. that of sitting in the House of Commons). However, as *Orders are indelible, the person concerned does not thereby cease to be ordained, and has since the Clerical Disabilities Act 1870 (Amendment) Measure 1934 been able to petition the Archbishop of the Province in which his Deed is recorded to vacate the enrolment of the Deed and become a cleric again without further ordination.

Clerical Subscription Act 1865. The Act amending the 36th *Canon of 1604 by changing the form of declaration made by Anglican clergymen at ordination and on accepting ecclesiastical preferment. The chief points of difference are that an Oath of *Allegiance to the Sovereign is alone required, and the acknowledgement of the Royal Supremacy is no longer imposed; and that a (general) '*assent' was demanded to the *Thirty-Nine Articles, instead of the obligation to 'acknowledge all and every [Article] to be agreeable to the Word of God'. The Act also provided that every beneficed clergyman, on taking up a new cure of souls, should, on the first Sunday, or on some other day appointed by the bishop, read the Articles to his congregation and make a formal assent to them and to the BCP. In 1975 the obligation to read the Articles was removed and the form of assent made less rigid. See also ASSENT, DECLARATION OF.

clericalism. A term, often used in an opprobrious sense, for an excessively professional attitude of outlook, conversation, or conduct on the part of clergymen, or for the imitation of a supposedly clerical manner by lay persons. It is also used to describe undue clerical influence in secular affairs. See also ANTICLERICALISM.

Clericis Laicos. The bull issued by *Boniface VIII on 25 Feb. 1296 to protect the clergy of England and France against the exactions of the secular power. It forbade any cleric to pay ecclesiastical revenues to laymen without the authority of the Roman see, and any layman, under threat of excommunication, to receive such payments. The vehemence of its language aroused fierce opposition on the part of Philip the Fair and Edward I, and considerably weakened its effectiveness. It was revoked by *Clement V.

Complete text in A. Thomas, M. Faucon, and G. Digard (eds.), Les Registres de Boniface VIII, 1 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 1907), no. 1567, pp. 584 f.; Operative part of text also in Mirbt and Aland (1967), p. 457 (no. 743); Eng. tr. in Bettenson, pp. 157–9. S. Vigor, ed. by P. Dupuy, Histoire du différend entre le Pape Boniface VIII et Philippe le Bel roy de France (1655); J. Rivière, Le Problème de l'Église et de l'état au temps de Philippe le Bel (SSL 8; 1926), esp. pp. 63–70. T. S. R. Boase, Boniface VIII (1933), esp. ch. 5, pp. 129–56. L. Santifaller, 'Zur Original-Überlieferung der Bulle Papst Bonifaz' VIII. "Clericis Laicos" von 1296 Februar 25', Studia Gratiana, 11 (1967), pp. 69–90. E. J. Smyth, 'Clericis Laicos and the Lower Clergy in England', in G. G. Steckler and D. L. Davis (eds.), Studies in Mediaevalia and Americana: Essays in honor of William Lyle Davis, SJ (Spokane, Wash., 1973), pp. 77–87.

Clericus. See LECLERC, JEAN.

clerk, parish. See PARISH CLERK.

Clerk in Holy Orders. A designation, chiefly legal and formal, for a bishop, priest, or deacon in the C of E, as contrasted with such clerks as 'Lay Clerks', 'Bible Clerks', etc., who execute minor ecclesiastical functions without ordination. Before the *Reformation, the word 'clerk' without qualification was applied to those in *Minor Orders, while the orders of bishop, priest, and deacon (and also the *subdiaconate from the 13th cent.) were specified as *Major, or Holy, Orders.

Clerk of the Closet. The cleric who presides over the Royal College of Chaplains. When a vacancy occurs in the list of chaplains, he is asked by the Master of the Household to suggest possible names to the Sovereign. Among his duties are the presentation of bishops to the Sovereign when they do homage after consecration, and the examination of theological books whose authors wish to present copies to the Sovereign.

J. [M.] Bickersteth and J. W. Dunning, The Clerks of the Closet in the Royal Household (Stroud, 1991).

clerks regular. A term applied to certain bodies of RC clergy, bound under religious vows, who live in community and engage esp. in active pastoral work. Such regular clerks originated in the 16th cent. through the efforts of various bands of clerics to perfect their pastoral work by the stimulus of ordered discipline. The first communities were largely Italian, and met with striking success at a time when the waning prestige of the Church called for such intensified effort. They included the '*Theatines' (1524), the 'Clerks Regular of the Good Jesus' founded at *Ravenna (1526), and the '*Barnabites' founded at Milan in 1530. The largest and most important member of the family is the *Jesuits or Society of Jesus (1534). Since the close of the 16th cent. there have been no official additions to the number of orders of regular clerks, but their name has been adopted by other religious congregations. The mode of life of regular clerks has greatly influenced the constitutions of various modern bodies, monastic and non-monastic, living under rule. They may be regarded as the modern counterpart of the regular *canons (q.v.).

Clermont (modern Clermont-Ferrand), Collège de, also known as the Collège Louis le Grand. The celebrated *Jesuit house at *Paris, at one time the property of G. du Prat, Bp. of Clermont (1529–60). Through the energies of J. *Sirmond and others, it acquired a celebrated collection of MSS known to scholars as the 'Claromontani'. In 1764 the College was dissolved and the MSS dispersed.

G. Dupont-Ferrier, Du collège de Clermont au collège Louis-le-Grand (3 vols., 1921–5). H. Fouqueray, SJ, Histoire de la compagnie de Jésus en France, 1 (1910), pp. 363–433.

Clermont, Council of (1095). Summoned by *Urban II for the reform of the Church and the preaching of the First *Crusade, it met at Clermont on 18–28 Nov. 1095. It was attended by some 300 clergy, predominantly French. Besides proclaiming a remission of all penances for those who travelled to Jerusalem to free the Church of God, it passed numerous canons. Their subjects included the Peace and *Truce of God, and many matters of clerical and lay discipline. The primacy of the see of Lyons was also confirmed and King Philip of France was excommunicated for adultery. Unfortunately no official record of its legislation survives; its canons must be pieced together from many sources. Urban II preached the Crusade in an open field on 27 Nov. to a great crowd of clergy and laymen.

R. Somerville, The Councils of Urban II, 1: Decreta Claromontensia (Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum, Suppl., 1; Amsterdam, 1972). Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 396–444. See also bibl. to CRUSADES.

Cletus, St. See ANACLETUS, ST.

Clifford, John (1836–1923), *Baptist leader. As a boy he worked in a lace factory. He experienced conversion in 1850 and was baptized in the following year. In 1858 he became the minister of the Baptist Church at Praed Street, Paddington, and when the congregation, attracted by his successful pastorate, grew too large, Westbourne Park Chapel was built for him (opened, 1877). In 1888 he became president of the Baptist Union. He was keenly interested in upholding the cause of working people and also led the movement for 'passive resistance' to A. J. *Balfour's Education Act of 1902, which he believed to be injurious to Nonconformist interests. His influence did much towards bringing about the defeat of the Unionists at the polls in 1906. He held several important offices in the Baptist Church, and from 1905 to 1911 was the first president of the Baptist World Alliance. Theologically he inclined towards a more liberal position than had been traditional in his own communion. His many writings exercised great influence on his generation.

Life and Letters of Dr. John Clifford, ed. J. Marchant (1924). G. W. Byrt, John Clifford (1947). J. H. Rushbrooke in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 188–90.

Climacus, St John. See JOHN CLIMACUS, ST.

Clinici. See under BAPTISM (p. 150, col. 2).

Clitherow, St Margaret (*c.*1556–86), the 'martyr of *York'. The daughter of a Sheriff of York, she was converted to the Roman obedience at the age of 18, and became an ardent friend of the persecuted RCs. In 1586 she was arrested and charged at the York Assizes with harbouring priests. To save her children from being forced to witness against her, she refused to plead, and was barbarously crushed to death. She was one of the *Forty Martyrs canonized by *Paul VI in 1970; feast day, previously 2 Apr. See also FORTY MARTYRS OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

Life by John Mush, her confessor (first pub. London, 1849). Modern studies by K. M. Longley (under the name of 'Mary Claridge', London, 1966) and under her own name, (Wheathampstead, Herts, 1986).

cloister. An enclosed space which in the Middle Ages and in modern times has normally formed the central part of a monastery or other religious building. It consists of a garth or open plot surrounded on all four sides by broad covered alleys with roofs supported on their inner sides by arcades (orig. open but later often glazed) and on their outer sides by the walls of the church or other major building. The term is also used in general for a Religious House, or the Religious Life. See also CLAUSURA.

J. C. Dickinson, Monastic Life in Medieval England (1961), esp. pp. 28–31. P. Meyvaert, 'The Medieval Monastic Claustrum', Gesta, 12 (1973), pp. 53–59; repr. in Meyvaert's Benedict, Gregory, Bede and Others (1977), no. 16.

Close, Francis (1797–1882), Dean of *Carlisle. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St John's College, Cambridge, and became incumbent of Cheltenham in 1826. His sermons, modelled on those of C. *Simeon, soon won him a large following, and made him one of the best known of Evangelical preachers. By his opposition to the theatre, horse-racing, and esp. 'Sabbath-breaking', he exercised great influence on the public life of Cheltenham. A spokesman of the Evangelicals on education, in 1847 he founded the colleges of St Paul and St Mary in the town. He was hostile to *Tractarianism and saw in 'Popery', whether Anglican or Roman, one of the chief dangers of the age. From 1856 to 1881 he was Dean of Carlisle. His long series of books (largely sermons) and tracts were of great influence in their day. The Dean Close School was founded at Cheltenham as a public school for boys in his memory.

'Contem Ignotus' [Richard Glover], The Golden Decade of a Favoured Town: Being Biographical Sketches and Personal Recollections of the Celebrated Characters who have been connected with Cheltenham from 1843 to 1853 (1884), pp. 10–69; Memorials of Dean Close, ed. by one who knew him (Carlisle, 1885). G. Berwick, 'Close of Cheltenham: Parish Pope', Theology, 39 (1939), pp. 193–201 and 276–85. M. [M.] Hennell, Sons of the Prophets: Evangelical Leaders of the Victorian Church (1979), pp. 104–21. G. C. Boase in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 123 f.

Clotilde, St (474–545), Frankish queen. By birth a Burgundian princess, she married *Clovis, King of the Salian Franks, in 492 or 493. She at once endeavoured to convert him to Christianity, and partly as a result of a great victory over the Alemanni, he and many of his followers were baptized by St *Remigius, Bp. of Reims. *Gregory of Tours gives 496 as the date of Clovis' baptism, but in recent years historians have come to think that it may have been as late as *c.*503, or even 508. After her husband's death in 511 Clotilde's life was saddened by internecine struggles between her sons and the tragic fate of her daughter, and she retired to the abbey of St *Martin at Tours, where her reputation for piety and good works continued undimmed. In later times the events of her life were much embroidered in the interests of epic. Feast day, 3 June.

Crit. edn. of a Life, prob. 10th cent., by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 2 (1888), pp. 349–51; Eng. tr. in Sainted Women of the Dark Ages, ed. and tr. J. A. McNamara and others (Durham, NC, and London, 1992), pp. 38–50. G. Kurth, Sainte Clotilde ('Les Saints', Paris, 1897; Eng. tr., 1898). For works on the baptism of Clovis and the date of his conversion, see bibl. to CLOVIS.

Cloud of Unknowing, The. An anonymous 14th-cent. English mystical treatise. There has been much inconclusive discussion about the identity of the author, who was prob. contemporary with Walter *Hilton. The most important of his other works are The Book of Privy Counselling and An Epistle of Discretion of Stirrings. The author was deeply influenced by the anti-intellectualist interpretation of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, as found in *Thomas Gallus, and insists that, in this life, God as He is in Himself cannot be grasped by the intellect; between Him and us there is always a 'cloud of unknowing', which can be pierced only by 'a sharp dart of love'. He is, however, the proper object of our wills, which should be directed towards Him with a 'naked entent', as free from any admixture of creatures as possible. Those who are called to 'the higher part of the contemplative life' should abandon discursive and affective meditation in favour of this 'naked entent', in which our being is simply offered, unanalysed, to God, whom we cannot think. This 'entent' may be sustained with the help of monosyllabic 'meditation' or very brief ejaculatory prayer. The author warns against adopting the 'work' of contemplatives unless one is called to it by God.

Crit. edns. by P. Hodgson, with introd. and bibl., of The Cloud of Unknowing and The Book of Privy Counselling (EETS, Orig. Ser. 218, 1944; repr. with corrections and new bibl., 1958); of Deonise Hid Diuinite and Other Treatises on Contemplative Prayer related to The Cloud of Unknowing (ibid., 231; 1955); and of The Cloud of Unknowing and related Treatises (Analecta Cartusiana, 3; Salzburg, 1982); Latin versions of The Cloud, ed. J. [P. H.] Clark (ibid., 119; 2 vols., 1989). Modern trs. of The Cloud by C. Wolters (Penguin Classics, 1961; repr. with The Book of Privy Counselling and other works, 1978) and J. Walsh, SJ (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1981). W. Riehle, Studien zur englischen Mystik des Mittelalters (Anglistische Forschungen, 120; 1977; Eng. tr., 1981). A. J. Minnis, 'The Sources of The Cloud of Unknowing: A Reconsideration', in The Medieval Mystical Tradition in England: Papers Read at Dartington Hall, July 1982, ed. M. Glasscoe (Exeter, 1982), pp. 63–75. S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Ways of Imperfection (1984), pp. 170–86. V. M. Lagorio and R. Bradley, The 14th-Century English Mystics: A Comprehensive Annotated Bibliography (New York and London, 1981), pp. 81–90.

Clovesho, Councils of. A series of synods representing the Church of all England south of the Humber, held between the late 7th and the first quarter of the 9th cent.; many of the attested meetings were also attended by the King of the Mercians. A decision of the Council of *Hertford in 672 or 673 laid down that the clergy should meet annually at Clovesho (on 1 Aug.), and records—of varying degrees of authenticity—survive of the meetings which were held in 716, 742, 747, 792, 794, 798, 803, 824, and 825. Those of 747 and 803 are the most important. The former dealt with ecclesiastical discipline and liturgy, ordering in the later strict adherence to the Roman rite. The latter was the occasion of the abolition of the archiepiscopal status of *Lichfield, set up in 787, and the restoration of the Mercian sees to the province of *Canterbury. The site of Clovesho is unknown.

Acts of the Councils of 747 and 803, with other primary material, in A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 3 (1871), pp. 360–76 and 541–8. C. Cubitt, Anglo-Saxon Church Councils c.650–c.850 [1995], pp. 99–152 (on the Council of 747). E. B. Fryde and others (eds.), Handbook of British Chronology (Royal Historical Society Guides and Handbooks, 2; 3rd edn., 1986), pp. 583–9.

Clovis (*c.*466–511), King of the Franks. The son of Childeric I, he became King of the Salian Franks in 481 and forthwith began to expand his domain. He attacked and defeated his rival, the Roman general Syagrius, at Soissons, and incorporated into his dominions much of Roman Gaul and other territories, including those of the Ripuarian Franks and the Thuringians. The decisive event in his career was his conversion to Catholic Christianity and his baptism (see CLOTILDE). The date, 496, given by *Gregory of Tours, has been disputed, with 503, 506, and even 508 suggested. The chronology of Clovis's reign is of crucial importance for the interpretation of his career. A link is usually made between his Catholicism and his success, notably the overthrow of the *Arian King Alaric II and the Visigothic forces at the battle of Vouillé in 507, and the consolidation of his dominions, since he gained the aid of the Catholic bishops and Roman officials in governing the country. In 508 the E. Emp. Anastasius conferred on him the title of 'Proconsul'. Ruthless and cruel, Clovis was a man of consummate ability. The oldest redaction of the Salic law was drawn up during his reign.

G. Kurth, Clovis (Tours, 1896; 3rd edn., 2 vols., Brussels, 1923). A. van de Vyver, 'La Victoire contre les Alamans et la conversion de Clovis', Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, 15 (1936), pp. 859–914, and 17 (1937), pp. 35–94; id., 'Clovis et la politique méditerranéenne', in Études d'histoire dédiées à la mémoire de Henri Pirenne [ed. F. L. Ganshof, E. Sabbe, and F. Vercauteren] (1937), pp. 367–87; id., 'La Chronologie du règne de Clovis d'après la légende et d'après l'histoire', Le Moyen Age, 53 (1947), pp. 177–96. F. Oppenheimer, Frankish Themes and Problems (1952), pp. 17–63 ('The Place and Date of Clovis' Baptism'). J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Long-Haired Kings and other Studies in Frankish History (1962), esp. pp. 163–85. G. Tessier, Le Baptême de Clovis (1964); id., 'La Conversion de Clovis et la christianisation des Francs', Settimane di Studio del Centro Italiano di Studi sull' Alto Medioevo, 14 (1967), pp. 149–89. R. Weiss, Chlodwigs Taufe: Reims 508. Versuch einer neuen Chronologie für die

Regierungszeit des ersten christlichen Frankenkönigs unter Berücksichtigung der politischen und kirchlich-dogmatischen Probleme seiner Zeit (Geist und Werken der Zeiten, 29; 1971). M. Reydellet, La Royauté dans la littérature latine de Sidoine à Isidore de Séville (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 243; 1981), pp. 94–113. I. N. Wood, 'Gregory of Tours and Clovis', Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, 63 (1985), pp. 249–72. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2037–74, s.v. 'Clovis (Baptême et sépulture de)'.

Cluny, Cluniacs. The influential monastery of Cluny, near Mâcon in Burgundy, was founded by William the Pious, Duke of Aquitaine, in 909/10. The high standard of monastic observance set by Berno of Baume, its first Abbot (909/10–927), was adopted before Berno's death in some five or six neighbouring monasteries. The real founder of Cluny's influence, however, was Berno's successor, St *Odo (927–42), under whose encouragement many monasteries in the S. of France, and even some of the most important Italian houses (*Monte Cassino, Santa Maria on the Aventine, *Subiaco) reformed themselves after the Cluniac model. Under Odo's gifted successors Aymardus (942–c.954; d. c.963 [perh. 964]), Majolus (c.954–94) and St *Odilo (994–1048; q.v.) an ever-growing number of houses, old and new, adopted the reform. Its objects included a return to the strict *Benedictine rule, esp. as expounded by St *Benedict of Aniane, cultivation of the personal spiritual life, stress on the choir office (which tended to grow to excessive length) and the splendour and solemnity of worship generally, with a corresponding reduction in manual labour. Great attention was also paid to sound economic organization and independence of lay control. It now seems clear that in the 10th cent. the Cluniac houses were not yet welded into a system, which only developed under Odilo and his successor *Hugh (1049–1109). Under Hugh, when the influence of Cluny reached its height, the number of Cluniac houses was well over 1,000. Then the centralization was such that the heads of the subject-houses were ordinarily priors, not abbots.

Esp. in the 11th and early 12th cents. Cluny exercised decisive influence on the life of the Church. Its leading figures came from noble families who increasingly enjoyed the confidence of sovereigns and popes. Their ideals were widely admired by the secular clergy and largely inspired the reforms (repression of *simony, *celibacy of clergy) of *Gregory VII. The new church at Cluny (begun in 1088), of which *Urban II consecrated the high altar in person on 25 Oct. 1095 and Innocent II the whole church (except the *narthex) in 1131–2, was then the largest church in Europe (555 ft. long).

After Hugh's death the next abbots were Pontius (1109–22), Hugh II (1122), and *Peter the Venerable (1122–56). From the beginning of the 13th cent., the Cluniacs became organized as an Order on the *Cistercian model, with General Chapters and a system of visitations. In the later Middle Ages the influence of Cluny greatly declined, but the monastery survived until 1790. The Hôtel de Cluny in Paris (since 1833 a museum) was formerly the town-house of the Abbots of Cluny.

The first English Cluniac house was St Pancras at Lewes, founded by William de Warenne in 1077. Others soon followed at Wenlock (c.1081), Bermondsey (c.1085), Castle Acre (1089), and Thetford (1104), and, in Scotland, at Paisley (1163). By the middle of the 12th cent. their number had risen to 36. As alien priories they were frequently sequestered by the Crown during the French Wars. In the later Middle Ages the control from Cluny was in fact slight. At the Dissolution there were eight greater and nearly 30 lesser Cluniac houses.

Bibliotheca Cluniacensis, ed. M. Marrier, OSB, and A. Quercetanus (Paris, 1614); Bullarium Sacri Ordinis Cluniacensis, ed. P. Simon, OSB (Lyons, 1680). Consuetudines Cluniacensium Antiquiores cum redactionibus derivatis, ed. K. Hallinger, OSB (Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, 7, pt. 2; Siegburg, 1983; see also introd., ibid., 7, pt. 1; 1984); Liber Tramitis Aevi Odilonis Abbatis, ed. P. Dinter (ibid., 10; 1980); for Abbot Hugh's reign, 'Ordo Cluniacensis Bernardi monachi' in [M. Herrgott, OSB (ed.)] Vetus Disciplina Monastica (Paris, 1726), pp. 133–364, and 'Antiquiores Consuetudines Cluniacensis Monasterii collectore S. Udalrico' in L. *d'Achery, OSB, Spicilegium, ed. S. *Baluze and E. *Martène, 1 (1723), pp. 641–703, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 149. 635–778. Statuts, chapitres généraux et visites de l'ordre de Cluny with preface and notes by G. Charvin, OSB (9 vols. in 11, 1965–82). G. de Valous, Le Monachisme clunisien des origines au XV^e siècle: Vie intérieure des monastères et organisation de l'ordre (Archives de la France monastique, 39–40; 1935; 2nd edn., 2 vols., 1970). G. F. Duckett, Charters and Records among the Archives of the ancient Abbey of Cluni (2 vols., 1888); E. Sackur, Die Cluniacenser (2 vols., 1892–4). L. M. Smith, The Early History of the Movement of Cluny (1925). K. Hallinger, OSB, Gorze-Kluny: Studien zu den monastischen Lebensformen und Gegensätzen im Hochmittelalter (2 vols., Studia Anselmiana, 22–25; 1950–1951). J. Wollasch, H. E. Mager, and A. Diener, Neue Forschungen über Cluny und die Cluniacenser, ed. G. Tellenbach (Freiburg, 1959). H. E. J. Cowdrey, The Cluniacs and the Gregorian Reform (Oxford, 1970). M. Pacaut, L'Ordre de Cluny (909 1789) (1986). J. Evans, Monastic Life at Cluny, 910–1157 (1931). N. Hunt, Cluny under St Hugh, 1049 1109 (1967). K. J. Conant, Cluny: Les Églises et la Maison du Chef d'Ordre (Mâcon, 1968). A Cluny: Congrès scientifique, fêtes et cérémonies liturgiques en l'honneur des saints Abbés Odon et Odilon 9–11 juillet 1949. Travaux du congrès ... publiés par la Société des Amis de Cluny (Dijon, 1950). A number of essays are collected and tr. into English in N. Hunt (ed.), Cluniac Monasticism in the Central Middle Ages (1971). [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, The Monastic Order in England (1940; 2nd edn., 1963), esp. chs. 8 and 16. E. M. Wischermann, Marcigny-sur-Loire: Gründungs- und Frühgeschichte des ersten Cluniacenserinnenpriorates (1055–1150) (Münstersche Mittelalter-Schriften, 42; 1986). P. Racinet, Les Maisons de l'Ordre de Cluny au Moyen Âge: Évolution et permanence d'un ancien ordre bénédictin au nord de Paris (Bibliothèque de la RHE 76; 1990). G. de Valous in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 35–174, with extensive bibl. N. Bulst and others in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 2 (1983), cols. 2172–94, s.v. 'Cluny, Cluniazenzer'. See also works cited under ODILO and PETER THE VENERABLE.

CMS. The 'Church Missionary Society', originally called the 'Society for Missions in Africa and the East', was founded in 1799 with Thomas *Scott (q.v.) as its first secretary. Though later in date than the *SPCK and the *SPG, it became the first C of E society to send missionaries to the indigenous populations of Africa and Asia. It did pioneering work in West, and later East, Africa, many parts of India, Pakistan and Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, China, Japan, and the Middle East. It also worked in its early years in Canada and New Zealand. The CMS of Australia, New Zealand, and Ireland are sister societies. The CMS fostered the development of autonomous Churches and now works in partnership with them. In 1993 it had c.200 mission partners in 27 countries and an annual budget of just over £4 million. From its earliest days its theology has been consistently *Evangelical. See also BCMS.

E. Stock, The History of the Church Missionary Society (3 vols., 1899; suppl. vol. 4, 1916). C. Hole, The Early History of the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East to the end of A.D. 1814 (1896). The Centenary Volume of the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East, 1799–1899 (1902). J. Murray, Proclaim the Good News: A Short History of the Church Missionary Society (1985). [G. H.] G. Hewitt, The Problems of Success: A History of the Church Missionary Society 1910–1942 (2 vols., 1971–77). S. M. Johnstone, A History of the Church Missionary Society in Australia and Tasmania (Sydney, 1925). F. E. Bland, How the Church Missionary Society came to Ireland (Dublin, 1935). E. Elbourne, 'The foundation of the Church Missionary Society: the Anglican missionary impulse', in J. Walsh and others (eds.), The Church of England c.1689–c.1833 (Cambridge, 1993), pp. 247–64. The CMS News-Letter, periodically from Dec. 1939. There is also a Register of Missionaries from 1804 to 1904, and Annual Reports of the Society from 1801 to 1970.

coadjutor-bishop. A bishop appointed to assist a diocesan bishop in his duties, often with the right of succession to the see at the next vacancy. The practice of appointing coadjutor-bishops is much followed in the RC Church, but seldom in the Anglican Communion, except in certain dioceses outside England, and in the *Episcopal Church of America, where it is a common practice.

coarb (Irish comarba, in early medieval Latin texts heres, but later cuverbus and variants). In Ireland, the 'heir' or successor of a saint who founded a church. Until c. the 12th cent. the coarb was head of the church and controlled the temporalities. He sometimes also held the office of abbot or bishop but was more often a layman. After the institution of the hierarchy in the 12th cent., the coarbial family generally remained as hereditary occupants of former ecclesiastical estates.

St J. D. Seymour, 'The coarb in the medieval Irish Church (circa 1200–1550)', Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, 41 (1932–4), C, pp. 219–31. J. Barry, 'The Appointment of Coarb and Erenagh', Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 5th ser. 93 (1960), pp. 361–5, with refs. to earlier arts.

Coat of Christ, Holy. See HOLY COAT.

Cocceius, Johannes (1603–69), Johann Koch, dogmatic theologian. Born in Bremen, where he studied under Matthias Martinius, in 1629 he moved to Franeker, where William *Ames and Sixtinus Amama were amongst his teachers. He taught at Bremen from 1630 to 1636, when he returned to Franeker as Professor of Hebrew, adding a Chair in Theology in 1643. In 1650 he moved to *Leiden. In his works, which were grounded in considerable knowledge of oriental languages, he sought to expound dogmatic theology on a purely biblical basis; but although professedly a *Calvinist, he objected both to the Calvinist spirit and to the scholastic orthodoxy of his day. He interpreted the relation between God and man in terms of a personal covenant and his system thus became known as Föderaltheologie. After his death his followers were openly accused of unorthodoxy, and there seems little doubt that his teaching was a factor leading to the later growth of *Pietism. His most important treatise was his Summa doctrinae de Foedere et Testamento Dei (1648).

Collected works ed., with brief Life, by his son, J. H. Cocceius (8 vols., Amsterdam, 1673–5). G. Schrenk, Gottesreich und Bund im älteren Protestantismus, vornehmlich bei Johannes Coccejus (Beiträge zur Föderung christlicher Theologie, Reihe 5, Bd. 5; Gütersloh, 1923); H. Faulenbach, Weg und Ziel der Erkenntnis Christi: Eine Untersuchung zur Theologie des Johannes Coccejus (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 36; Neukirchen [1973]). C. S. McCoy, 'Johannes Cocceius: Federal Theologian', Scottish Journal of Theology, 16 (1963), pp. 352–70. H. Faulenbach in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 132–40, s.v.

Cochlaeus, Johannes (1479–1552), RC controversialist. His real name was Dobeneck. He went to *Cologne in 1504, where he developed a distaste for *Scholasticism and a strong sympathy for the *Platonist and humanist revival of the Renaissance. In 1521 and the following years he was engaged in writing against M. *Luther, but the bitter tone of his polemic gained little favour even from his own side. In 1526 he accepted a canonry at Mainz, *c.*1534 at Meissen, and in 1539 at Breslau. He attended many of the conferences of the period, at which the points of difference between Catholics and Protestants were argued, but on these occasions his services were little used. His best-known works are Historiae Hussitarum Libri XII (1549) and Commentaria de Actis et Scriptis M. Lutheri, 1517–1546 (1549). In 1525 he had made every endeavour to prevent the printing of W. *Tyndale's English New Testament at Cologne.

Life by M. Spahn (Berlin, 1898). H. Jedin, Des Johannes Cochlaeus Streitschrift de libero arbitrio hominis (1525): Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der vortridentinischen katholischen Theologie (Breslauer Studien zur historischen Theologie, 9; 1927); A. Herte, Die Lutherkommentare des Johannes Cochläus (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, Heft 33; 1935); id., Das katholische Lutherbild im Bann der Lutherkommentare des Cochläus (3 vols., Münster, 1943); R. Bäumer, Johannes Cochlaeus (1479–1552): Leben und Werk in Dienst der katholischen Reform (ibid., 1980), with bibl. Id. in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 140–6, s.v.

co-consecrator. A bishop who assists the chief consecrator in the laying-on of hands at the making of a bishop. There should be at least two (cf. Conc. *Nic. [325], can. 4), though in the West the absence of an assistant is not deemed to invalidate the consecration. It is also a widely held belief among dogmatic theologians that all who lay hands are consecrators, so that, even assuming some defect in the chief consecrator, the consecration might still be valid.

Code of Holiness. See HOLINESS, CODE OF.

Codex Alexandrinus ('A'). The early 5th-cent. MS of the Greek Bible, written on vellum in two columns to the page, which Cyril *Lucar, then Patr. of *Constantinople, offered to *James I (1603–1625) through the English Ambassador, Sir Thomas Roe (d. 1644). The MS (now Royal MS 1 D. v–viii) did not reach England until after James's death. In 1757 it passed with the rest of the Royal Library to the newly founded British Museum, whence (1973) to the British Library. Its earlier history is obscure, but it was probably brought to *Alexandria from *Constantinople in 1308. In the Gospels the Codex is the earliest example of a *Byzantine text; in Acts and the Pauline Epistles it is late *Alexandrian. The order of the biblical Books is Gen., Exod., Lev., Num., Deut., Jos., Jgs., Ruth, 1 and 2 Sam., 1 and 2 Kgs., 1 and 2 Chron., the *Minor Prophets, Is., Jer., Bar., Lam., Epistle of Jeremy, Ezek., Dan., Est., Tob., Judith, 1 and 2 Esd., 1–4 Macc., Pss., Job, Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, Wisd., Ecclus.; Mt., Mk., Lk., Jn., Acts, Jas., 1 and 2 Pet., 1–3 Jn., Jude, Rom., 1 and 2 Cor., Gal., Eph., Phil., Col., 1 and 2 Thess., Heb., 1 and 2 Tim., Tit., Philem., and Rev. They are followed by the two (so-called) Epp. of *Clement.

The Codex Alexandrinus was one of the earliest of the uncial MSS to be made available to scholars. The first Ep. of Clement was ed. from it by P. *Young (Oxford, 1633). It was used by B. *Walton in the Biblia Polyglotta (6 vols., London, 1655–7). The OT was ed. J. E. *Grabe (2 vols., Oxford, 1707–20) and by H. H. Baber (3 vols., London, 1816–21). NT ed. C. G. Woide (ibid., 1786). Photographic edn. by E. M. Thompson (4 vols., ibid., 1879–83), with introd. in vol. 1, pp. 3–12; reduced photographic edn. by F. G. Kenyon, H. J. M. Milne, and T. C. Skeat (5 vols., ibid., 1909–1957), introd. to NT vol., pp. 5–11, and to OT, vol. 4, pp. 1–4. H. J. M. Milne and T. C. Skeat, Scribes and Correctors of the Codex Sinaiticus (1938), pp. 91–3 (app. 2) and pls. 10–43. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (Oxford, 1964; 3rd edn., 1992), pp. 46 f.; K. and B. Aland, Der Text des Neuen Testaments (1982; 2nd edn., 1989; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids and Leiden, 1987; 2nd edn., 1989), passim.

Codex Amiatinus. The oldest extant MS of the Latin *Vulgate and a primary witness to the text. It was one of three Bibles written at either *Wearmouth or Jarrow under Abbot Ceolfrith between *c.*690 and 700. It has been calculated that the three copies required the skins of some 1,550 calves. In 716 Ceolfrith set out with the codex for Rome, intending to present it to *Gregory II, but he died at Langres on the way. From the 9th or 10th cent. the MS was in the monastery of Monte Amiata, hence its name. After the suppression of the monastery in 1782 it was transferred to the Laurentian Library at Florence. Fragments of one of the sister Bibles were discovered in 1909 and 1937 and are now in the British Library (Add. MSS 37777 and 45025 respectively); a further leaf discovered at Kingston Lacy House in Dorset in 1982 is on permanent deposit in the British Library (Loan MS 81; the 'Bankes Leaf').

The MS was used for the revision of the Vulgate for the Sixtine edn., pub. Rome, 1590, and its readings are noted in the Vatican edn. of 1926 ff. For the NT F. F. Fleck noted its readings in his edn. of the Vulgate NT (Leipzig, 1840), and it is the basis of the edn. of J. *Wordsworth, H. J. White, etc. (3 vols., Oxford, 1889–1954). The complete text of the NT was pub. by C. *Tischendorf (Leipzig, 1850; reissued, 1854). There is no complete edn. of the OT, but much of it is pr. in T. Heyse and C. Tischendorf (eds.), Biblia Sacra Latina (Leipzig, 1873). G. B. *de Rossi, La Bibbia offerta da Coelfrido abbate al sepolcro di S. Pietro (1888). P. Corssen, 'Die Bibeln des Cassiodorus und der Codex Amiatinus', Jahrbücher für Protestantische Theologie, 9 (1883), pp. 619–33. H. J. White, 'The Codex Amiatinus and its Birthplace', Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, 2 (Oxford, 1890), pp. 273–309. G. Schmid, 'Zur Geschichte des Codex Amiatinus', Th.Q. 89 (1907), pp. 577–84; A. Mercati, 'Per la storia del Codice Amiatino', Biblica, 3 (1922), pp. 324–8. B. Fischer, OSB, 'Bibelausgaben des frühen Mittelalters', Settimane di Studio del Centro italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, 10 (1963), pp. 519–600, esp. pp. 559–61. R. L. S. Bruce-Mitford, 'The Art of the Codex Amiatinus', Journal of the British Archaeological Association, 3rd ser. 32 (1969), pp. 1–25. E. A. Lowe, English Uncial (Oxford, 1960), pp. 8–13, with plates viii–x. Id., Codices Latini Antiquiores, 3 (ibid., 1938), p. 8 (no. 299); J. J. Alexander, Insular Manuscripts, 6th to the 9th century (A Survey of the Manuscripts Illuminated in the British Isles, 1; 1978), pp. 32–5 (no. 7), with bibl. See also bibl. to VULGATE.

Codex Bezae ('D'). This bilingual (Latin and Greek) MS of the Gospels (in the order Mt., Jn., Lk., Mk.,) and Acts, with a fragment of the Latin of 3 John, is important as the main uncial representative of the so-called *Western text (q.v.). Its peculiarity is its combination of certain omissions with extensive additions, esp. in Acts. The MS was written between the 4th and 6th cent. but little is known of its subsequent history. Some of its readings were reported to R. *Stephanus and included in the 3rd edition of his Greek New Testament of 1550. It came into the possession of T. *Beza, after whom it is named, and who in turn donated it to the University of Cambridge, where it is still. It is a small codex (10 in. by 8 in.) with Latin and Greek texts facing each other, arranged in 'sense lines' to facilitate comparison. The Latin is not, however, a direct translation of the Greek text. The Greek itself contains many blunders, and the work of several later correctors is evident. It is likely, therefore, to have come from a predominantly Latin-speaking area, but there is no certainty as to exact provenance; S. France, N. Africa, Italy, Sicily, and Phoenicia are possibilities.

Text first pub. by T. Kipling (2 vols., fol., Cambridge, 1793). Crit. edn., with introd. and notes, by F. H. A. *Scrivener (Cambridge, 1864). Photographic edn. in 2 vols., Cambridge, 1899. The readings of the Codex Bezae are noted by C. *Tischendorf in his edns. of the NT (Leipzig, 1841, etc.). J. R. *Harris, A Study of the Codex Bezae (Texts and Studies, 2, no. 1; Cambridge, 1891). F. H. Chase, The Old Syriac Elements in the Text of the Codex Bezae (1893). K. *Lake, 'On the Italian Origin of Codex Bezae. 1. Codex Bezae and Codex 1071', JTS 1 (1900), pp. 441–5. J. R. Harris, The Annotators of the Codex Bezae (1901). E. J. Epp, The Theological Tendency of Codex Bezae Cantabrigiensis in Acts (Cambridge, 1966). D. C. Parker, Codex Bezae: An early Christian manuscript and its text (ibid., 1992). J. D. Yoder, Concordance to the Distinctive Greek Text of Codex Bezae (New Testament Tools and Studies, 2; 1961).

Codex Canonum Ecclesiae Universae. Under this title C. Justel (1580–1649) published in 1610 an eclectic text which he believed to represent the 'official' canon law collection of the early Church, sanctioned by the Council of *Chalcedon (451) and later by the Emp. *Justinian (d. 565). It contained the canons of *Nicaea, *Ancyra, *Neocaesarea, *Gangra, *Antioch, *Laodicea, *Constantinople, *Ephesus, and *Chalcedon in a continuous sequence of 207 items in Greek, with his own Latin translation. It exercised some influence on later scholars, but rested on a number of misconceptions about the nature of the earliest canonical collections.

F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, 1 (1870), pp. xxxix–xlii; J. Gaudemet, Les Sources du droit de l'église en occident du ii^e au vii^e siècle (1985), pp. 73–9.

Codex Ephraemi ('C'). A 5th-cent. Greek MS of the Bible now at *Paris (Bibl. Nationale, Gr. 9). In the 12th cent. it was converted into a *palimpsest by a covering of some of the writings of St *Ephraem Syrus. Only portions of the original MS have survived, and the text is not always decipherable; but every book of the NT except 2 Thess. and 2 Jn. is represented to some extent. In the Gospels the text is fundamentally *Alexandrian, but it also contains a *Western element.

Text of NT (as much as could be deciphered) ed., with introd. by C. *Tischendorf, Leipzig, 1843; of OT, ibid., 1845. F. G. Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (1895), pp. 137–9; rev. by A. W. Adams (1958), pp. 206 f. R. W. Lyon, 'A Re-examination of Codex Ephraemi Rescriptus', New Testament Studies, 5 (1959), pp. 260–72. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (Oxford, 1964; 3rd edn., 1992), pp. 12 and 48 f. K. and B. Aland, Der Text des Neuen Testaments (1982; 2nd edn., 1989; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids and Leiden, 1987; 2nd edn., 1989), passim.

Codex Fuldensis. The Latin MS of the NT (*Fulda, Landesbibliothek, Bonifatianus I), written in 541–6 at the order of *Victor, Bp. of Capua. The four Gospels are arranged in a harmony, in the manner and order of *Tatian's '*Diatessaron', though the text has been revised to agree with that of the *Vulgate. Its early presence at Fulda and the identification of an annotating hand which is thought to be that of St *Boniface have led to the suggestion that it was once owned by him.

Text ed. E. Ranke (Marburg and Leipzig, 1868). H. J. Vogels, Beiträge zur Geschichte des Diatessaron im Abendland (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 8, Heft 1; 1919), pp. 1–34. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, 8 (Oxford, 1959), p. 49 (no. 1196). M. B. Parkes, 'The Handwriting of St Boniface: A Reassessment of the Problems', Beiträge zur Geschichte der Deutschen Sprache und Literatur, 98 (1976), pp. 161–79. K. and B. Aland, Der Text des Neuen Testaments, (1982; 2nd edn., 1989; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids and Leiden, 1987; 2nd edn., 1989), passim.

Codex Iuris Canonici (CIC). The code of *canon law in force in the (Latin) RC Church at the present day. By the end of the 19th cent. the material of Roman canon law had become so unwieldy that in 1904 *Pius X appointed a commission under the direction of Cardinal Gasparri to collect and redact the canon law and produce a codex. The result of their labours, a comparatively small volume divided into five books and 2,414 canons, was promulgated by *Benedict XV on 27 May 1917, and came into force at *Pentecost in the following year. During the Second *Vatican Council a commission was set up to revise the 1917 codex; its work was much influenced by the Council. The codex promulgated by *John Paul II on 25 Jan. 1983 consists of seven books divided into 1,752 canons. On 2 Jan. 1984 a commission was set up to interpret the codex authoritatively. A separate codex for the *Uniat Churches was promulgated on 18 Oct. 1990, to come into force on 1 Oct. 1991. See also CANON LAW; CORPUS IURIS CANONICI.

Among the many comm. on the 1917 Codex, those in Eng. incl. Charles Augustine [Bachofen], OSB, A Commentary on the New Code of Canon Law (8 vols., St Louis and London, 1918–22); A. G. Cicognani, Ius Canonicum (Rome, 1925; rev. Eng. tr., Canon Law, Westminster, Md. [1934]); T. L. Bouscaren and A. C. Ellis, Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (Milwaukee [1946]; 4th edn., with F. N. Korth [1963]). J. A. Abbo and J. D. Hannan, The Sacred Canons: A Concise Presentation of the Disciplinary Norms of the Church (2 vols., St Louis and London, 1952; 2nd edn. [1960]). A. Vetulani and R. Naz in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 908–40, s.v., with bibl. D. Staffa in EC 3 (1949), cols. 1911–19, s.v., with further bibl.

The official text of the 1983 Codex is in AAS 75 (1983), part 2 (25 Jan.), with corrections in Appendix, 22 Sept. (separate pagination). An Eng. tr., prepared by the Canon Law Society of Great Britain and Ireland, in association with others, was pub. in 1983. Comm. by J. A. Coriden, T. J. Green, and D. E. Heintschel (eds.), The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985). Further comm. ed. E. Caparros, M. Thériault, and J. Thorn, Code of Canon Law Annotated (Montreal, 1993; based on the Sp. comm. prepared under the auspices of the Instituto Martín de Azpilcueta of the University of Navarra in Pamplona, 5th edn., 1992). G. Sheehy and others (eds.), The Canon Law: Letter & Spirit (1995). The text of the 'Codex Canonum Ecclesiarum Orientalium' is pr. in AAS 82 (1990), pp. 1045–363. V. Pospishil, Eastern Catholic Church Law according to the Code of Canons of the Eastern Churches (Brooklyn, N.Y., 1993). A valuable account of the work of revision and authoritative interpretations are contained in the periodical Communicationes issued by the commission, now a council (Rome, 1969 ff.).

Codex Sinaiticus ('ℵ'). The celebrated MS of the Greek Bible (British Library, Add. MS 43725), discovered by C. *Tischendorf in the monastery of St Catherine on Mount *Sinai. On a visit in 1844 he found some leaves of the OT Books, and instantly recognized its great value. He was given 43 leaves which are now in Leipzig. On his third visit in 1859 he borrowed the MS and presented it to the Tsar of Russia. In 1869 this 'donation' was regularized. The Soviet Government sold it to the British Museum in 1933 for £100,000, nearly half of which was paid by public subscription. In 1975 15 leaves of Gen. were discovered in St Catherine's. Besides half the OT (1 Chron., Neh., Est., Tob., Judith, 1 Macc., 4 Macc., Is., Jer., Lam., Joel-Mal., Pss., Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, Wisd., Ecclus., and Job), the MS contains the whole of the NT as well as the 'Ep. of *Barnabas' and part of the 'Shepherd' of *Hermas. It is written on vellum, four columns to the page (two columns in Pss., Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, Wisd., Ecclus., and Job), and in quires of eight leaves. Three hands took part in the original writing, and the text has been revised by a number of correctors. Although the text seems to be Egyptian, it is quite uncertain where it was written, though it was in *Caesarea in Palestine in the 6th cent. Its date is probably about the middle of the 4th cent.

The NT text of the codex is closely allied to that of *Codex Vaticanus, together with which it is the chief witness to the *Neutral or *Alexandrian text. The MS exercised a decisive influence on the text of the '*Revised Version' of the NT of 1881, but less on recent editions.

Text ed. C. Tischendorf (4 vols., St Petersburg, 1862): two further frags. ed. id., Appendix Codicum Celeberrimorum Sinaitici Vaticani Alexandrini (Leipzig, 1867), pp. 3–6. Photographic edn. by H. and K. *Lake (2 vols., Oxford, 1911–22), with introd. by K. Lake. H. J. M. Milne and T. C. Skeat, Scribes and Correctors of the Codex Sinaiticus (1938). I. Ševčenko, 'New Documents on Constantine Tischendorf and the Codex Sinaiticus', Scriptorium, 18 (1964), pp. 55–80. The British Library, Catalogue of Additions to the Manuscripts, 1931–1935 (1967), pp. 207–12. B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort, The New Testament in the Original Greek: Introduction (1882), pp. 210–30 and 246–71. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (Oxford, 1964; 3rd edn., 1992), pp. 42–6; K. and B. Aland, Der Text des Neuen Testaments (1982; 2nd edn., 1989; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids and Leiden, 1987, 2nd edn., 1989), passim. Popular account of its discovery in J. Bentley, Secrets of Mount Sinai: The Story of Codex Sinaiticus (1985).

Codex Vaticanus ('B'). The 4th-cent. MS of the Greek Bible, now in the *Vatican Library (Vat. gr. 1209), where its presence is certainly vouched for in the 1481 catalogue, ('Biblia in tribus columnis ex membranis in rubeo'), and probably in the 1475 catalogue ('Biblia ex membranis in rubeo'). Its earlier history is unknown. It was extensively restored in the 15th cent. Most of Gen. was copied from Chis. R VI 38 in the Vatican Library. Ps. 105: 27–137: 6, Heb. 9. 14–13: 25, and Rev. were copied from an unidentified MS. The *Pastorals are totally missing. T. C. Skeat conjectures that the restoration, which is unusual, was for presentation to a Pope, and the Council of *Florence would have been a suitable occasion for the Greeks to make such a presentation. With its nearest relative, P^{75} (see BODMER PAPYRI), and *Codex Sinaiticus, it is the chief witness to the *Neutral or *Alexandrian text.

The MS was the basis of the Sixtine edn. of the *Septuagint pub. Rome, 1587, and its successors. The complete text was ed. A. *Mai (5 vols., Rome, 1857); also ed., under the auspices of Pope *Pius IX, by C. Vercellone and J. Cozza (6 vols., Rome, 1869–1881). The NT was also ed., after Mai, by C. *Tischendorf (Leipzig, 1867, with appendix, 1869). Photographic edn. by J. Cozza-Luzi (5 vols. Rome, 1889–90); also in 4 vols., ibid., 1904–1907; NT in Codices e Vaticanis selecti, 30 (1968). H. J. M. Milne and T. C. Skeat, Scribes and Correctors of the Codex Sinaiticus (1938), pp. 87–91 (App. 1). J. Šagi, SJ, 'Problema historiae codicis B', Divus Thomas, 75 (Piacenza, 1972), pp. 3–29; T. C. Skeat, 'The Codex Vaticanus in the Fifteenth Century', JTS NS 35 (1984), pp. 454–65; B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort, The New Testament in the Original Greek: Introduction (1882), pp. 210–46 and 250–70; B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (Oxford, 1964; 3rd edn., 1992), pp. 47 f.; K. and B. Aland, Der Text des Neuen Testaments (1982; 2nd edn., 1989; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids and Leiden, 1987; 2nd edn., 1989), passim.

Codrington, Christopher (1668–1710), soldier, poet, and colonial administrator. In 1690 he became a probationer-fellow of All Souls, Oxford, and varied his life in Oxford with military expeditions to Flanders. In 1699 he was appointed to succeed his father as Captain-General of the Leeward Islands, but he resigned his post after the failure of an expedition against Guadeloupe in 1703, and lived in retirement in Barbados until his death, studying Church history and metaphysics. In his will he left £10,000 and a large library to All Souls, and also bequeathed two estates, with part of Barbuda, to found in Barbados a college of physic and divinity, where the members were to live under vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, and do missionary work in the West Indies. The provision for the threefold vow was disregarded, but Codrington Missionary Training College was built in 1714–42. From 1955 to 1969 it was run by the *Community of the Resurrection, which trained candidates for Ordination in the College.

V. T. Harlow, Christopher Codrington 1668–1710 (1928, repr., 1990). N. Langley, Christopher Codrington and his College (1964). A. Dobson in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 203 f.

Coelestis Urbs Jerusalem. Breviary hymn for the office of the dedication of a church. See URBS BEATA HIERUSALEM.

Coemgen, St. See KEVIN, ST.

Coenaculum. See CENACULUM.

coenobite (Gk. κοινόβιος, 'living in a community', from κοινός, 'common', and βίος, 'life' or 'way of life'). A religious in vows who lives in a community (as opposed to a *hermit). The word is by extension also used in a technical sense of *anchorites who occupy separate dwellings and observe a rule of silence, but live otherwise as a community of *monks in a common enclosure. This latter way of life originated in the desert and is now followed in the W. chiefly in the *Carthusian Order. See also LAVRA.

Coffin, Charles (1676–1749), hymn-writer. In 1712 he became principal of the Collège Dormans-Beauvais at Paris, and in 1718 rector of the University. In 1727 he published a collection of Latin hymns, many of which were adopted in the Paris Breviary of 1736. Several are well known in their English versions, e.g. 'On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry', 'The Advent of our God', and 'O Holy Spirit, Lord of Grace'.

The majority of Coffin's hymns were pub. in his Hymni Sacri (Paris, 1736) and in the Hymnes du nouveau bréviaire de Paris (ibid., 1736, to which he was one of the contributors; this was ed. J. H. *Newman, Oxford, 1838). Collected edn. of his works pub. in 2 vols., Paris, 1755. Bremond, 10 (1932), pp. 70–7, 90 f., and 159–63.

cogito ergo sum (Lat., 'I think, therefore I am'). The primary datum of truth accepted by R. *Descartes in his method of doubt, on the ground that, however much a man doubted, he could never think away himself as the doubting subject.

Coke, Thomas (1747–1814), pioneer of *Methodist missions and bishop of the American Methodist Church. Driven out of his curacy at South Petherton in Somerset for his Methodist leanings in 1777, he became J. *Wesley's assistant and after his death (1791) a leading figure in the Wesleyan connexion. In 1784 Wesley 'ordained' him as Superintendent (or 'Bishop') of the Methodist Episcopal Church formed at a conference in Baltimore later that year. He divided his time thereafter between the rapidly growing American Church and the earliest *West Indian missions, which he initiated and sustained. He died at sea on his way to launch a mission to *India.

Collected edn. of his Journals (Dublin, 1816), with Life by J. Sutcliffe, pp. 1–32. Authorized Life by S. Drew (London, 1817). Full modern study by J. [A.] Vickers, Thomas Coke, Apostle of Methodism (1969).

Colbertine Breviary. A breviary compiled for the household of J. B. Colbert, Louis XIV's finance minister, and printed between 1675 and 1680. It had close affinities with the breviary of Cardinal F. de *Quiñones. It appears to have been the work of the Abbé J. Gallois (1632–1707).

Ed. from the British Library copy (C. 35. f. 21) by T. R. Gambier-Parry (HBS 42–43; 1912–13).

Colenso, John William (1814–83), Bp. of Natal. Born at St Austell, Cornwall, he was educated at St John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1837. In 1836 he became a mathematics master at Harrow, in 1842 returned to St John's as a tutor, and in 1846 became vicar of Forncett St Mary, Norfolk. In 1853 he was appointed the first Bishop of the newly constituted see of Natal, where he soon became keenly interested in the native problem and provoked criticism from the orthodox by his leniency in not insisting on the divorce of the wives of polygamists on their baptism. In 1861 he issued a Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans which by its denial of eternal punishment and rejection of much traditional sacramental theology aroused a storm of protest; still greater opposition was provoked by his papers on The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined (in parts, 1862–79), challenging the traditional authorship and historical accuracy of these Books; and in 1863 he was declared deposed by his Metropolitan, Robert *Gray of Cape Town (Bp. 1847–72). Colenso, however, denied the Bp. of Cape Town's jurisdiction. He appealed to the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which delivered sentence in his favour (20 Mar. 1865), on the ground that the Letters Patent appointing him preceded those appointing Gray. Hence, although solemnly excommunicated in 1866 by Gray, who in 1869 consecrated W. K. Macrorie (1831–1905) as Bp. of Maritzburg and Natal with a jurisdiction conterminous with that of Natal, Colenso maintained his position and by a series of judicial decisions secured the cathedral and endowments of the see. Though his attitude to the native question and some of his practical activities on their behalf (which were carried on after his death by his daughter Harriette, 1847–1932) continued to alienate many, esp. in Great Britain, he retained the affection of his diocese.

On his death his followers, styled 'the Church of England in Natal', applied to the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York for the consecration of a successor. In 1891 Macrorie resigned and after protracted negotiations all parties agreed that the Abp. of Canterbury should appoint a Bishop of Natal; and in 1893 the Archbishop consecrated A. H. Baynes (1854–1942). On his failure to reconcile the Church of St Paul's, Durban, Baynes resigned (1901), though the Vestry agreed to reunion in the following year. The schism in Natal was formally ended in 1911, when the Bp. of Natal recovered the endowments of which Colenso had been registered proprietor.

Much relevant material in the correspondence of his wife, F. Colenso, Colenso Letters from Natal arranged with comments by W. Rees (Pietermaritzburg, 1958). Life by G. W. Cox (2 vols., London, 1888). Modern study by P. [B.] Hinchliff (ibid., 1964). J. [J.] Guy, The Heretic: A Study of the Life of John William Colenso 1814–1883 (Johannesburg and Pietermaritzburg, 1983). J. [W.] Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in the Nineteenth Century: England and Germany (1984), pp. 220–37. See also bibl. to SOUTH AFRICA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Coleridge, John Taylor (1790–1876), the biographer of J. *Keble. He was a nephew of S. T. *Coleridge. In 1809 he was elected a scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and from 1812 to 1818 was a Fellow of Exeter. After leaving Oxford he became a barrister of the Middle Temple. In 1832 he was appointed Recorder of *Exeter and from 1835 to 1858 was a Justice of the King's Bench. A keen Churchman, he published in 1869 his biography of J. Keble (d. 1866), whose lifelong friend he had been.

[B. J. S.] Coleridge, The Story of a Devonshire House (1905), esp. chs. 10–19.

Coleridge, Samuel Taylor (1772–1834), poet and thinker. He was born at Ottery St Mary, Devonshire, where his father was vicar. He was educated at Christ's Hospital and Jesus College, Cambridge, but left the university in 1793, probably on account of debts and a love affair. After a short-lived attempt to join the 15th Dragoons, he returned to Cambridge for a time but took no degree. In 1795 he married Sarah Fricker, and in the same year made the acquaintance of W. *Wordsworth. After some unsuccessful publishing ventures he thought of taking up the career of a *Unitarian minister, with which sect he had come into contact at Cambridge, but gave up the plan when Josiah and Thomas Wedgwood settled an annuity on him. In 1798 he published, in conjunction with Wordsworth, the Lyrical Ballads, his most famous contribution being 'The Ancient Mariner'. In the same year he went to Germany to study the *Kantian philosophy. The chief fruit of the journey was his brilliant translation of F. Schiller's Wallenstein (1800). During the next years he wrote his last great poems, among them the second part of 'Christabel' (1800) and the 'Ode to Dejection' (1802). From that time his poetic powers declined, possibly under the influence of his growing addiction to opium. After travelling in Malta (1804) and Italy (1805–6), he lectured in London on Shakespeare and other poets with considerable success (1810–13), and in 1813 had his tragedy 'Remorse' produced at Drury Lane. In 1816 he made a partly successful effort at conquering the opium habit, and in the same year published a volume of poems containing 'Christabel', 'Kubla Khan', and 'Pains of Sleep'. Also in 1816 appeared his Lay Sermons and in 1817 Sibylline Leaves and Biographia Literaria. On the Constitution of Church and State (1830) and the popular Aids to Reflection (1825) are among his most important religious publications. They were followed by the posthumous Confessions of an Enquiring Spirit (1840).

Coleridge's religious development partly reflects the trends of his time. After the rationalistic influences of his school-days and the Unitarian leanings of his early manhood he came under the sway of the *pantheism of J. *Boehme and B. *Spinoza, which had been revived by J. W. Goethe and other German thinkers. It was so congenial to his nature that he never seems to have really abandoned it, even in his avowedly Christian period, dating from *c.*1810. He preached the need of man for a spiritual interpretation of life and the universe against a fossilized Protestant orthodoxy as well as against the materialistic and rationalist trends of his time; but his thirst for freedom in every department of life frequently led him beyond the boundaries of the Christian revelation. His denial of any inherent opposition between the development of modern science and the essence of Christianity showed an insight rare in his time; but he refused to admit metaphysical proofs of religious truth and only conceded the pragmatic test of its beneficent influence on human life. This conviction, that Christianity is primarily ethical, led him to believe in the possibility of a unification of Christendom on a wide basis of common tenets; it earned him the title of 'Father of the Broad Church Movement'.

Complete Works, ed. W. G. T. Shedd (7 vols., New York, 1853); modern edn. by K. Coburn and others (16 vols., London and New York, 1969 ff.). The best edns. of his Poetical Works are those of J. D. Campbell (London and New York, 1893) and E. H. Coleridge (grandson, 2 vols., Oxford, 1912). Collected Letters, ed. E. L. Griggs (6 vols., Oxford, 1956–71); Notebooks, ed. K. Coburn (3 vols. in 6, London, 1957–73). The standard biography is the Life by J. D. Campbell (London, 1894). Other Lives and studies by E. K. Chambers (Oxford, 1938), L. Hanson (on his early years, London, 1938), H. House (ibid., 1953), M. Carpenter (ibid., 1954), J. B. Beer (ibid., 1959 and 1977),

J. Colmer (Oxford, 1959), M. Suther (New York, 1960), N. Fruman (ibid., 1971, London, 1972), and B. Willey (London, 1972). R. W. Armour and R. F. Howes (eds.), Coleridge the Talker: A Series of Contemporary Descriptions and Comments (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1940). E. Blunden and E. L. Griggs (eds.), Coleridge: Studies by Several Hands on the Hundredth Anniversary of his Death (1934); J. [B.] Beer (ed.), Coleridge's Variety: Bicentenary Studies (1974). R. Holmes, Coleridge: Early Visions (1989). J. Livingston Lowes, The Road to Xanadu (1927). T. McFarland, Coleridge and the Pantheist Tradition (Oxford, 1969). C. R. Sanders, Coleridge and the Broad Church Movement (Durham, NC, 1942), pp. 19–88; J. D. Boulger, Coleridge as Religious Thinker (New Haven, Conn., 1961); J. R. Barth, SJ, Coleridge and Christian Doctrine (Cambridge, Mass., 1969), and other works of this author. G. N. G. Orsini, Coleridge and German Idealism: A Study in the History of Philosophy with Unpublished Materials from Coleridge's Manuscripts (Carbondale, Ill., and London [1969]). E. S. Shaffer, 'Kubla Khan' and The Fall of Jerusalem: The Mythological School in Biblical Criticism and Secular Literature, 1770–1880 (1975), esp. pp. 17–190; S. Prickett, Romanticism and Religion: The Tradition of Coleridge and Wordsworth in the Victorian Church (Cambridge, 1976), pp. 9–69; L. S. Lockridge, Coleridge the Moralist (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1977); C. Welch in N. Smart and others (eds.), Nineteenth Century Religious Thought in the West, 2 (1985), pp. 1–28. G. [C. D.] Davidson, Coleridge's Career (1990). R. Gravil and M. Lefebure (eds.), The Coleridge Connection: Essays for Thomas McFarland (1990). J. L. Haney, A Bibliography of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (Philadelphia, 1903); T. J. Wise, A Bibliography of the Writings in Prose and Verse of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (London, 1913); id., Coleridgeana: Being a Supplement to the Bibliography of Coleridge (ibid., 1919; the two works are repr. in one vol., 1970); R. Haven and others, Samuel Taylor Coleridge: An Annotated Bibliography of Criticism and Scholarship (Boston, Mass., and London, 1976 ff.). L. Stephen in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 302–16.

Colet, John (1466?–1519), Dean of *St Paul's. The son of Sir Henry Colet, who had been twice Lord Mayor of London, he studied probably at Magdalen College, *Oxford, and later in Paris and Italy, where he learned Greek. He returned *c.*1497 to Oxford, where he delivered a series of lectures on St Paul's Epistles, notable for their critical spirit and their plea for a return to the discipline of the primitive Church. From this time onwards he constantly inveighed against the worldliness of the higher clergy, pluralities, and non-residence, and, though he never challenged the traditional dogmas of the Church, he was frequently suspected of heresy. His opinions were very sympathetically received by his two famous friends, *Erasmus (to whom he later paid an annuity) and Sir Thomas *More. From 1504 till his death he was Dean of St Paul's. On his father's death he received a large fortune, part of which he spent, in the face of opposition, in refounding St Paul's School, where 153 boys, without restriction of nationality, could gain the rudiments of education, be brought up in a sound Christian way, and learn Greek as well as Latin (first High Master of the School, William Lilly).

His Opus de Sacramentis Ecclesiae ed. as 'A Treatise on the Sacraments of the Church' (1867), Super Opera Dionysii as 'Two Treatises on the Hierarchies of Dionysius' (1869), Enarratio in Epistolam S. Pauli ad Romanos as 'An Exposition on St Paul's Epistle to the Romans' (1873), Enarratio in Primam Epistolam S. Pauli ad Corinthios as 'An Exposition on St Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians' (1874), Opuscula Quaedam Theologica as 'Letters to Radulphus on the Mosaic Account of the Creation, together with other Treatises' (1876), all ed. for the first time with Eng. tr., introd., and notes by J. H. Lupton. Edn. and Eng. tr. of his marginal comm. to the first edn. of M. *Ficino's Epistolae (1495), letters and certain other material by S. Jayne (Oxford, 1963). Comm. on 1 Cor. also ed., with Eng. tr. and introd., by B. O'Kelly and C. A. L. Jarrott (Medieval and Renaissance Texts and Studies, 21; Binghamton, NY, 1985). J. H. Lupton (ed. and tr.), The Lives of Jehan Vitrier . . . and John Colet . . . written . . . by Erasmus in a Letter to Justus Jonas (1883). Id., A Life of John Colet (1887); id., The Influence of Dean Colet upon the Reformation of the English Church (1893). J. A. R. Marriott, The Life of John Colet (1933); E. W. Hunt, Dean Colet and his Theology (1956); L. Miles, John Colet and the Platonic Tradition (La Salle, Ill., 1961; London, 1962); J. B. Gleason, John Colet [1989]. BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 462–4. S. L. Lee in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 321–8.

Colettines. A branch of the *Poor Clares founded by St Colette (1381–1447), a native of *Corbie in Picardy who was canonized in 1807 (Feast day, 6 Mar.). She established seventeen convents in her lifetime. Today the Colettine Sisters are found mainly in France.

U. d'Alençon, OM Cap. (ed.), 'Documents sur la Réforme de Ste. Colette en France', AFH 2 (1909), pp. 447–56, 600–12; 3 (1910), pp. 82–97; id. (ed.), 'Lettres inédites de Guillaume de Casal à Sainte Colette de Corbie et notes pour la biographie de cette sainte', Études Franciscaines, 19 (1908), pp. 460–81, 668–91. J. [G. A.] Goulven, Rayonnement de Sainte Colette (1952), esp. pt. 2; E. Lopez, Culture et sainteté: Colette de Corbie (1381–1447) (Saint-Etienne, 1994). S. Roisin in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 238–46, s.v. 'Colette de Corbie'; G. Odoardi, OFM, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 1211–7, s.v. 'Colettani', both with bibl.

Coligny, Gaspard de (1519–72), *Huguenot leader. A member of one of the greatest families in France, he spent much of his life at court and in the service of the French Army. He was converted to *Calvinism in 1560, and after the death of the Prince de Condé in 1569 became the recognized leader of the Huguenot cause. His influence at court over the young King, Charles IX, led France to aid the Netherlands in their revolt against the Duke of Alva. The queen mother, *Catherine de' Medici, who was a keen Catholic and also jealous of Coligny's position, tried to have him assassinated on 22 Aug. 1572; and when that had failed, provoked the Massacre of St *Bartholomew two days later, in which he was killed.

J. Delaborde, Gaspard de Coligny, amiral de France (3 vols., 1879–82); A. W. Whitehead, Gaspard de Coligny, Admiral of France (1904). J. Shimizu, Conflict of Loyalties: Politics and Religion in the Career of Gaspard de Coligny (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 114; Geneva, 1970). Actes du Colloque l'Amiral de Coligny et son temps (Paris, 24–28 octobre 1972) (1974). M. Prévost in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 248 f., s.v. See also works cited s.v. BARTHOLOMEW, MASSACRE OF ST.

collation. The word is used in several senses, secular and ecclesiastical. Among the latter are: (1) the light meal allowed on days of *fasting in addition to the one full meal (the 'comestio'); (2) the lives of the *Fathers, esp. as arranged for reading in monasteries. This usage perhaps derives from the title of John *Cassian's 'Collationes Patrum', a record of his conversations with the hermits of the Egyptian deserts; and (3) *institution to an ecclesiastical benefice when the *ordinary is himself the patron (i.e. when presentation and institution are one and the same act).

collect (Lat. oratio, also collecta). The short form of prayer, constructed (with many varieties of detail) from (1) an invocation, (2) a petition, and (3) a pleading of Christ's name or an ascription of glory to God; and one of the most characteristic items in the W. liturgy. The prayers later known as *Secrets and *Postcommunions are structurally indistinguishable, though the term 'collect' is normally confined to the prayer (or prayers) in the Eucharistic rite which immediately precedes the lections. The writings of Pope *Leo I show that such prayers were familiar in the middle of the 5th cent. They are fully developed in the earliest Latin *Sacramentaries (*Leonine, *Gelasian, *Gregorian). They also secured an established place in the daily *offices as well as in the Eucharist. Early collects were always directed to the Father; but since the Middle Ages collects addressed to the Son have been regularly admitted to the liturgy.

The term 'collect' (collecta) was orig. a title in the *Gallican rite. It denoted, as B. *Capelle (after *Walafrid Strabo) has shown, the 'collecting' of the petitions of the several members of the congregation into a single prayer (cf. Synod of *Agde, AD 506, can. 30). This sense of the word is thus not connected with the use of collecta for the assembly ('collection') of the congregation for worship, as has often been supposed.

Since the Middle Ages it has been the practice on certain days other than the Greater Feasts to recite more than one collect in the liturgy. In the Latin rite the choice and number of the additional collects followed elaborate rules: e.g. when two feasts of not widely different rank occurred on the same day, the inferior feast was normally commemorated by a second collect, while on days of relatively less importance, there were usually three collects. The Secrets and Postcommunions always corresponded in number and in general content with the collects. In the revisions of the liturgy after the Second *Vatican Council, however, all *commemorations have been abolished.

The collects in the BCP mostly derive from the medieval sources, esp. the *Sarum Missal and Breviary. Several, however, were T. *Cranmer's original compositions (e.g. those for Advent 1 and 2), while the wording of many which have a Latin basis was freely modified and adapted, to give a good English rhythm. In 1662 a few further collects were provided (e.g. those for Epiphany 6, for which the earlier forms of the BCP had made no provision, and Advent 3). At Mattins and Evensong two unalterable collects are provided for recitation after the collect for the day daily throughout the year.

Jungmann (1949), 1, pp. 445–81; Eng. tr. (1951), pp. 359–90 (full discussion with bibl. refs.). B. Capelle, OSB, 'Collecta', R. Bén. 42 (1930), pp. 197–204, repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (1962), pp. 192–203; O. Casel, OSB, 'Beiträge zu römischen Orationen', JLW 11 (1931), pp. 35–45; G. G. Willis, Further Essays in Early Roman Liturgy (Alcuin Club Collections, 50; 1968), pp. 91–131 ('The Variable Prayers in the Roman Mass'), esp. pp. 91–121. B. Capelle, OSB, in RAC 1 (1957), cols. 243–5, s.v. 'Collecta'.

On the collects in the BCP, M. R. Dudley, The Collect in Anglican Liturgy: Texts and Sources 1549–1989 (Alcuin Club Collections, 72; Collegeville, Minn. [1994]).

Collectar (Lat. Collectarium). A medieval liturgical book containing the collects used in the Divine *offices.

Collegialism. A term applied (prob. first by J. H. Boehmer of Halle, d. 1745) to the thesis esp. associated with H. *Grotius (1583–1645) and S. *Pufendorf (1632–94) that Church and State are both purely voluntary associations (collegia) in which supreme authority rests with the body of the members, and that the civil magistrate has no other relations with the Church than those which he enjoys with every other voluntary association within his territory.

collegiality. A word used in a theological context to signify that bishops constitute a body, of which each is a part, and not a mere collection of individuals. The term collegium was applied to bishops corporately by *Cyprian (Ep. 68), and the idea was prominent in writings on the *Conciliar theory. The Dogmatic Constitution Lumen Gentium of the Second *Vatican Council states that the bishops form an ordo analogous to the single apostolic college of *Peter and the other apostles. This ordo includes within it the Roman Pontiff, whose primacy, as the successor of St Peter, remains intact. To some extent the concept found expression in the establishment of the Synod of Bishops by *Paul VI in Apostolica Sollicitudo (15 Sept. 1965). The Synod, which consists predominantly of representatives of national episcopal conferences, is charged with advising the Pope on matters of importance to the whole Church; assemblies are normally summoned by the Pope at about three-yearly intervals.

J. Lécuyer, C.S.Sp., Études sur la collégialité épiscopale (1964); Y. M.-J. *Congar, OP (ed.), La Collégialité épiscopale: Histoire et théologie (Unam Sanctam, 52; 1965). M. J. Le Guillou, OP, 'L'expérience orientale de la collégialité épiscopale et ses requêtes', Istina, 10 (1964), pp. 111–24.

Collegiants. An obscure offshoot of the *Remonstrants (q.v.), founded in the *Netherlands *c.*1619, and so called because they termed their communities 'colleges'. They were also known as 'Rynsburgers' from Rynsburg, near *Leiden, where they held their early meetings. They held that the Church was an invisible society and every externally constituted Church a corruption. Apart from the belief that Christ was the Messiah and the Bible inspired Scripture, they admitted no confession of faith or organized ministry. Their theology in general was very liberal and their ethics pietistic. *Baptism was generally administered by *immersion when each year the whole sect met at Rynsburg for prayer, study and a commemoration of the Last Supper. At the end of the 17th cent. they were influenced by the views of B. *Spinoza (who resided at Rynsburg 1661–4), over whose teaching there were divisions within the sect. The sect seems to have died out towards the end of the 18th cent., when most of its adherents were absorbed in the Remonstrants or the *Mennonites.

J. C. Van Slee, De Rijnsburger Collegianten (1895). A. Fix, 'Radical Reformation and Second Reformation in Holland', Sixteenth Century Journal, 18 (1987), pp. 63–80. N. van der Zijpp in H. S. Bender and others (eds.), The Mennonite Encyclopedia, 1 (1955), pp. 639 f., s.v.

Collegiate Church. A church which is endowed for a body of canons and/or prebendaries (the 'chapter'), but is not, like a *cathedral, a bishop's see. Instances in the C of E are *Westminster Abbey and St George's Chapel, *Windsor.

Collier, Jeremy (1650–1726), English *Nonjuror. In 1685 he was made lecturer of Gray's Inn. He was detained in Newgate without trial for some months in 1689 for writing one of the earliest and most influential attacks on the Revolution, The Desertion Discuss'd, and in 1692 his refusal to accept bail led to a further period of imprisonment on the charge of corresponding with *James II. In 1696 he was outlawed for giving absolution on the scaffold to two attempted assassins of William III, but returned to London in 1697. For some years he wrote frequent attacks on the stage of his day, the best known being A Short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage (1698; facsimile repr. 1971); these provoked angry replies from W. Congreve and others. In 1713 he was consecrated as a 'bishop of the Nonjurors', and joined in their attempt at reunion with the Orthodox Church. He was also largely responsible for the production of the Nonjurors' Communion Office of 1718. This rite, which in some matters followed that of 1549, influenced the Scottish Liturgies of 1764 and 1929. His many writings include An Ecclesiastical History of Great Britain (2 vols., fol., 1708–14).

Life by T. Lathbury in his edn. of An Ecclesiastical History of Great Britain, 9 (1852), pp. i–xlviii. R. Anthony, SC, The Jeremy Collier Stage Controversy, 1698–1726 (Milwaukee, Wis., 1937); K. Ressler, 'Jeremy Collier's Essays', in Seventeenth Century Studies, ed. R. Shafer, 2nd ser. (Princeton, NJ, 1937), pp. 179–285. W. Hunt in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 341–7.

Collins, Anthony (1676–1729), *Deist. He was a native of Heston, Greater London, and educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. He subsequently lived in London until 1715, when he settled in Essex and became deputy-lieutenant. He was greatly influenced by J. *Locke, of whom he was an intimate friend, and his works are an epitome of English freethinking. In his first important publication, an Essay Concerning the Use of Reason (1707), he opposed the traditional distinction between things that are above and those that are against human reason. In Priestcraft in Perfection (1709) he tried to prove that the clause in Art. 20 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles on the power of the Church to decree rites and ceremonies and to decide religious controversies had been inserted by fraud. His principal work, A Discourse of Freethinking (1713), contains bitter attacks on the ministers of all denominations. It argued that free inquiry was the only means of attaining to the truth and was commanded by Scripture. The book, which was designed as a defence of Deism, was attacked by many Churchmen, among them R. *Bentley, B. *Hoadly, J. *Swift, and W. *Whiston. In 1715 he published his Inquiry Concerning Human Liberty, a concise and able statement of *Determinism, which was sharply attacked by S. *Clarke. In his Discourse of the Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion (1724) he denied that the OT contains prophecies of Christ. As he held fulfilled prophecies to be the only valid proof of the truth of Christianity, the book was intended as an implied rejection of it. He also denied the canonicity of the NT, as well as the immateriality and immortality of the soul.

Study by J. O'Higgins, SJ (International Archives on the History of Ideas, 35; The Hague, 1970). L. Stephen in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 363 f. See also DEISM.

Colloquy of Marburg. See MARBURG, COLLOQUY OF.

Colluthus (4th cent.), schismatic priest of *Alexandria. During the episcopate of St *Alexander (312–28) he assumed the power of conferring orders, though only a presbyter. In 324 he was deposed at the Council convened at Alexandria by *Hosius to deal with the *Arian issue (though Colluthus himself does not seem to have supported Arius). Nothing is known of his subsequent history. Some scholars have found in his career support for the view that in its early days ordination in the Alexandrian Church was conferred by presbyters.

The authorities include *Athanasius, Apol. c. Arianos, 12 and 75; *Epiphanius, Haer. 69. 2; *Theodoret, HE 1. 8; and *Augustine, Haer. 65. B. I. Pheidas, Τὸ Κολλουθιανὸν σχίσμα καὶ αἱ ἀρχαὶ τοῦ Ἀρειανισμοῦ (Athens, 1973). Brief art. by G. *Salmon in DCB 1 (1877), p. 596, s.v.

Collyridians. A 4th-cent. sect, mentioned by St *Epiphanius (Haer. 79). Acc. to him it originated in Thrace and consisted mostly of women, who offered an idolatrous cult to the BVM. They sacrificed cakes (κολλυρίς, hence the name) to her, which they afterwards consumed. The custom may have originated in connection with the popularization of the title '*Theotokos', and been influenced by the pagan habit of offering cakes to the goddess Ceres.

Brief notice by G. Bareille in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 369 f., s.v.

Colman, St (d. 676), leader of the *Celtic party in Northumbria. A native of Ireland, he became a monk of *Iona, and later (661) succeeded St *Finan as Bp. of *Lindisfarne. Here he supported the king, Oswiu, in maintaining Celtic customs against the Romanizing party in the court, headed by Eanfleda, Oswiu's Kentish queen. To settle the quarrel, Oswiu summoned the Synod of *Whitby in 664, at which Colman pleaded for the retention of such customs as the Celtic time of keeping Easter and the Celtic tonsure and appealed to the authority of St *Columba. St *Wilfrid, however, who claimed for the Roman practices the authority of St Peter, finally won the king over to his side. Colman then left Lindisfarne and passed the rest of his life at the monastery of Innisboffin, Co. Mayo. Feast day, 18 Feb.

The primary authority is *Bede, HE 3. 25 f., and 4. 4; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 125 f. and 128–30. W. Hunt in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 389 f.

Cologne. The see was founded in or before the reign of *Constantine (d. 337), and the city occupied by the Franks at intervals from 330 onwards. In the 11th–12th cents. the Abps. of Cologne became important secular princes and later (1356) were recognized as imperial electors. The see remained politically important until 1801, when its property was secularized, though the archbishopric was restored in 1821. The present cathedral dates from the 13th–15th and the 19th cents., and contains the shrine of the *Magi. Among other famous churches of the town are St Maria in Kapitol and St Gereon's, both built in the 11th cent. (both badly damaged in the Second World War; since largely restored).

There is a very large literature on the subject in its many aspects—topography, archbishopric, cathedral, churches, university, and schools. Modern works on the archbishopric incl. R. Knipping and others (eds.), Die Regesten der Erzbischöfe von Köln im Mittelalter (Publikationen der Gesellschaft für Rheinische Geschichtskunde, 21; 4 vols., Bonn, 1901–61); W. Neuss (ed.), Geschichte des Erzbistums Köln (1964 ff.; 2nd edn. by F. W. Oediger and others, 1972 ff.). R. Haass and J. Hoster (eds.), Zur Geschichte und Kunst im Erzbistum Köln: Festschrift für Wilhelm Neuss (Studien zur Kölner Kirchengeschichte, 5; Düsseldorf, 1960), and other vols. in this series (1952 ff.). P. Berglar and O. Engels (eds.), Der Bischof in seiner Zeit: Bischofstypus und Bischofsideal im Spiegel der Kölner Kirche. Festgabe für Joseph Kardinal Höffner, Erzbischof von Köln (1986). A. Franzen in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 275–311, s.v.; R. Lill in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 1013–18, s.v.; W. Janssen and others in TRE 19 (1990), pp. 289–305; P. Noelke and others in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 5 (1991), cols. 1254–68, these last both s.v. 'Köln'.

Colombini, Bl Giovanni (1304–67), founder of the *Gesuati. A wealthy wool-merchant who came from an old patrician family of Siena, he was deeply moved by reading the Life of St *Mary of Egypt when he was about 50. From that time he devoted himself to the service of the poor and the sick, many of whom he received into his house. After eight years of this life he persuaded his wife to accept a separation, settled an annuity on her, distributed the rest of his property to several religious institutions, and, together with his friend Francisco Mini, led a life of evangelical poverty, prayer, and works of mercy. When his example was imitated by many young men from noble Sienese families, the authorities of the city exiled him. With 25 followers he visited several Italian towns, and by his preaching and example effected a great number of conversions. When soon afterwards an epidemic broke out in Siena, it was regarded as a punishment, and Colombini was called back. In 1367 he and his disciples were formally constituted by *Urban V into the congregation of the Gesuati, and he died shortly after. He was beatified by *Gregory XIII. Feast day, 31 July.

Letters ed. A. Bartoli (Lucca, 1856); later ed. P. Cherubelli (Siena, 1957). Short Life by Bl John Tossignano (d. 1446), pr. by J. D. *Mansi (ed.), Stephani Baluzii ... Miscellanea, 4 (Lucca, 1764), pp. 566–71. Life by F. Belcari (Florence [*c.*1480]), ed. R. Chiarini (Arezzo, 1904); Eng. tr. from edns. of 1541 and 1832 (London, 1874). Life by J. B. Rossi, SJ (Rome, 1646), pr. in AASS, Jul. 7 (1731), pp. 354–98. Modern Life by the Comtesse de Rambuteau (3rd edn., Paris, 1893). G. Pardi, 'Della vita e degli scritti di Giovanni Colombini da Siena', Bullettino Senese di Storia Patria, 2 (1895), pp. 1–50 and 202–30, with docs.; id., 'Il Beato Colombini da Siena', Nuova Rivista Storica, 11 (1927), pp. 287–336. A. M. Piazzoni in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 27 (1982), pp. 149–53, s.v. See also bibl. to GESUATI.

Colonial and Continental Church Society. See CCCS.

Colonial Clergy Act 1874. The Act which regulated the conditions under which those ordained to the Anglican ministry in the British colonies could receive preferment or officiate in public in Great Britain. The written permission of the archbishop of the English province and a Declaration of *Assent in terms similar to that provided for in the *Clerical Subscription Act 1865 were required. It was superseded by the *Overseas and Other Clergy (Ministry and Ordination) Measure (No. 3) 1967.

Colonna family. A distinguished Roman family which has played a considerable part in Papal and European politics, esp. between the 12th and 18th cents. The Colonnas were vassals of the Pope, but their political leanings in the Middle Ages were mostly Ghibelline and pro-Imperial. They were the hereditary adversaries of the Orsini family. The Colonnas gave a number of cardinals to the Church, the first being the Benedictine monk, Giovanni Colonna (d. 1216), who was created cardinal in 1193 by Pope *Celestine III. A protector of the *Franciscan Order, he was praised for his virtues by St *Bonaventure. His nephew, also called Giovanni (d. 1245), was made cardinal in 1212. He took part in the conquest of Damietta (1219) during the Fifth Crusade, and later assisted the Emp. *Frederick II against the Pope. His nephew Giacomo (d. 1318) was created cardinal in 1278 by Nicholas III, of the house of Orsini, who hoped by this step to reconcile the two hostile families. Together with his nephew Pietro he bitterly opposed *Boniface VIII, who in 1297 deprived both cardinals of their dignity, excommunicated the whole family, and seized their property. They were reinstated by *Clement V in 1305. The family, which continued to be given cardinalates by the Popes in the 14th cent., received fresh distinction through the election of one of its members, Oddo, to the Papacy (1417), who, as *Martin V, ended the W. schism in 1429. After continued strife with the Orsini in the latter half of the 15th cent., a reconciliation was effected in the 16th, for the perpetuation of which *Sixtus V arranged a marriage between the two houses. The most famous woman of the family was Vittoria Colonna (1490–1547); remarkable alike for her literary talents and for her gift of attracting the finest spirits of her time, among them esp. *Michelangelo. She was deeply interested in the reform of the Church, and probably at one time leant towards the Reformation, but her connection with Card. R. *Pole kept her faithful to the Catholic Church. Among the later members of the family were Marcantonio (d. 1584), who took part in the victory of *Lepanto (1571), and his learned namesake (d. 1597), who was appointed head of the Commission of the *Vulgate by Sixtus V and librarian of the Vatican by *Clement VIII.

P. Colonna, I Colonna dalle origini all'inizio del secolo XIX (1927); P. Paschini, I Colonna (Rome, 1955). 29 members of the family are treated by G. Mollat and others in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 328–40, s.v., and 76 members of the family in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 27 (1982), pp. 253–457.

colophon. The paragraph often found at the end of MSS and early printed books giving information about authorship, title, printer, place of printing, date, and sometimes (in the case of MSS) the scribe himself. The use of the colophon tended to decline when many of these particulars were transferred to the title page. The word used in this special sense does not seem to be earlier than 1749.

A. W. Pollard, An Essay on Colophons (Chicago, 1905), with introd. by R. Garnett. Benedictines of Le Bouveret, Colophons de manuscrits occidentaux des origines au XVI^e siècle (Spicilegii Friburgensis Subsidia, 2–7; 1965–82).

Colosseum. The name by which the 'Flavian Amphitheatre' at *Rome has been known since about the 8th cent. The largest arena in the world, it was completed by Titus *c.*80, and has long been venerated as the scene of many martyrdoms in the early Church, though the truth of this tradition has been questioned by modern scholars, notably H. *Delehaye. Its present imperfect state is due partly to destruction by earthquakes and partly to its use as a quarry for stone until *Benedict XIV forbade its further demolition. The Cross erected in the centre of the arena in the 18th cent. was removed in 1874, but replaced in 1927. Excavation and restoration has been undertaken intermittently in recent generations and continues.

R. Rea and others, Anfiteatro Flavio: Immagine, Testimonianze, Spettacoli, ed. A. M. Reggiani (Archeologia e Storia a Roma [1988]), with bibl. G. Lugli, The Flavian Amphitheatre (Rome, 1960 [pamphlet]). M. E. Blake, Roman Construction in Italy from Tiberius through the Flavians (Washington, DC, 1959), pp. 91–96, with refs. H. Delehaye, 'L'Amphithéâtre flavien et ses environs dans les textes hagiographiques', Anal. Boll. 16 (1897), pp. 209–52.

Colossians, Epistle to the. A letter included in the NT, traditionally held to have been written by St *Paul when he was in prison, prob. at *Rome, but possibly at *Ephesus. In modern times an increasing number of scholars have attributed it to an early follower, but Pauline authorship has been equally strongly defended, esp. on the ground of the similarities of the personal details with those in *Philemon (which virtually all critics regard as authentic). The Church at Colossae, a city on the Lycus (Churuk Su), had been founded not by St Paul in person, but by Epaphras (1: 7), apparently when St Paul was working at Ephesus. The primary purpose of the epistle is to recall its readers to faith in Christ as their all-sufficient Redeemer and Lord. After a solemn statement of Christ's position in relation to God, creation, and the Church (1: 3 ff.), a warning is given against a certain 'philosophy' which was making converts at Colossae (2: 1 ff.). In the course of the epistle St Paul refers to certain features of the Hellenistic and Judaic religion of the period, e.g. the 'rudiments' or 'elements' (τὰ στοιχεῖα) of the world, angelic mediators, law-keeping, and asceticism, which later filled a prominent place in *Gnosticism. The epistle has important passages dealing with the Person of Christ (1: 15), the redeemed life (3: 1 ff.), and Christian morals (3: 5–4: 6). There are many close verbal parallels with the Ep. to the *Ephesians (q.v.).

Comm. by J. B. *Lightfoot (London, 1875; with Philemon), C. F. D. Moule (Cambridge Greek Testament Comm., 1957; with Philemon), F. F. Bruce (New London Commentary on the NT, 1957; with E. K. Simpson on Eph.; rev. 1984, with Philemon and Eph.), E. Lohse (KEK, 1968; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1971; with Philemon), R. P. Martin (New Cent. Bib., 1974; with Philemon), E. Schweizer (Evangelisch-Katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 1976; Eng. tr., 1982), J.-N. Aletti, SJ (Études Bibliques, 1993), M. Barth and H. Blanke, tr. into Eng. by A. B. Beck (Anchor Bible [1994]), and J. D. G. Dunn (New International Greek Testament Commentary, Carlisle, 1996; with Philemon). E. Percy, Die Probleme der Kolosser- und Epheserbriefe (Acta Reg. Soc. Human. Litt. Lundensis, 39; Lund, 1946). H. J. Gabathuler, Jesus Christus: Haupt der Kirche—Haupt der Welt. Der Christushymnus Colosser 1, 15–20 in der theologischen Forschung der letzten 130 Jahre (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 45; 1965). Kümmel, pp. 335–48. P. Benoît, OP, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 157–70, s.v. 'Paul, Colossiens (Épître aux)', with bibl. See also bibl. to EPHESIANS, EPISTLE TO THE.

colours, liturgical. A sequence of colours at different seasons of the ecclesiastical year for vestments and other liturgical objects is first found in the use of the *Augustinian Canons at *Jerusalem at the beginning of the 12th cent. They are mentioned by Pope *Innocent III in his De Sacro Altaris Mysterio. But it is not until much more recent times that a standard sequence in general use in the W. Church became established. The colours prescribed by the modern Roman service books are five—white (albus), red (rubeus), green (viridis), purple (violaceus), and black (niger). White is used e.g. on *Trinity Sunday, on the Feasts of Christ (so far as they are not memorials of His Passion) and of the BVM, on *Corpus Christi, and on the feasts of virgins and confessors, and since 1970 also in some countries for funerals; red, e.g. at *Whitsun and on the feasts of apostles (except St John) and of martyrs, and since 1970 also on *Palm Sunday and *Good Friday; green on the Sundays and *ferial days between the *Epiphany and *Lent and between Trinity Sunday and *Advent, both exclusive; purple, e.g. in Lent and Advent, and often for funerals; and black (which was formerly obligatory on these occasions) is still sometimes used in Masses and offices of the dead (also, until 1969, on Good Friday). Rose pink may be used on *Gaudete and *Laetare Sundays. In the *Sarum use, red was commonly used on the days for which the Roman books prescribe green, and in a few Anglican churches the Sarum sequence has been introduced in modern times, though the Roman sequence is that usually followed. It has recently been permitted in the RC Church to use the best vestments, of whatever colour, on more important feast days. Of the Eucharistic vestments, the *stole and *chasuble are usually of the appropriate colour, as are also the *chalice veil and *burse, and the *altar hangings. In the 14th cent., the custom of veiling statues, pictures, etc., in linen or other white material during Lent was in many places extended to the use of such material for vestments and altar-hangings; hence the so-called 'Lenten array' adopted in some Anglican churches in modern times. In the E. Church there are no definite rules about colours, though there is a natural tendency to use more sombre colours at penitential seasons, while white (or red in some Russian Churches) is used at all services, including funerals, from Easter to Ascensiontide.

J. W. Legg, Notes on the History of the Liturgical Colours (1882); W. St J. Hope and E. G. C. F. Atchley, English Liturgical Colours (1918). Braun, LG, pp. 728–60.

Columba, St (*c.*521–97), known in Irish as Colum Cille, 'dove of the Church', Abbot of *Iona and missionary. He came of Irish royal lineage, but from an early age preferred the religious life. He was trained in Irish monasteries by some of the leading teachers of his day, incl. St *Finnian. After the battle of Cúl-drebene (561), for which he was held in part responsible, in 563 he sailed from Ireland to Britain as 'a pilgrim for Christ', and founded a monastery at Iona. He made at least one journey to the King of the Picts, Bridei, whom, acc. to *Bede, he converted, though his biographer, St *Adomnán is equivocal on the point. In 574 Columba anointed Aedán mac Gabráin as King of the Scots of Dalriada, and in the following year attended the convention of the kings at Druim Cett in Ireland. He founded the monastery of Durrow in Ireland (in 585 or later acc. to Adomnán, though Bede says before 565). He is said to have established many other churches in Ireland and Scotland and is widely venerated. Feast day, 9 June.

Crit. edn. of the 'Altus Prosator', the best known of the poems attributed to St Columba, by C. Blume in AHMA 51 (1908), pp. 275–83: other hymns, pp. 283–8 and 325 f. For lit. on St Columba's authorship of various other works, see Kenney, below. The principal sources for his career are Bede, HE 3. 4 (comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, Oxford, 1988, pp. 92–4, 128–9, and 229) and the Life by Adomnán (for edns. and discussions, see s.v.). Other sources are listed by J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, 1 (Records of Civilizations; New York, 1929), pp. 422–48, with details of works attributed to Columba, pp. 263–5. M. Herbert, Iona, Kells, and Derry: The History and Hagiography of the Monastic Familia of Columba (Oxford, 1988), incl. crit. edn. and Eng. tr. of Middle Irish homiletic Life, pp. 218–86; also extensive bibl. Other modern discussions incl.: D. A. Bullough, 'Columba, Adomnan and the Achievement of Iona', Scottish Historical Review, 43 (1964), pp. 111–30 and 44 (1965), pp. 17–33; J. Bannerman, Studies in the History of Dalriada (1974), esp. pp. 79–85; and A. P. Smyth, Warlords and Holy Men: Scotland, AD 80 1000 (The New History of Scotland, 1; 1984), pp. 84–115. More devotional studies incl. those of J. Smith (Edinburgh, 1798), L. Menzies (London, 1920), and W. I. R. Finlay (ibid., 1979); also C. R. F. *Montalembert, Les Moines d'Occident, 3 (1866), pp. 101–331 (Eng. tr., 3, 1867, pp. 97–313).

Columbanus, St (d. 615), abbot and missionary. An Irishman and monk of the community of St *Comgall in *Bangor, *c.*590 Columbanus left Ireland on perpetual pilgrimage and sailed to Gaul. Here he set up monasteries with strict rules at Annegray and *Luxeuil, in the Vosges. His religious fervour and his encouragement of private *Penance did much to respiritualize barbarized areas of Gaul, where Christianity was at a low ebb. However, he aroused opposition from the episcopate by his uncompromising adherence to the traditions of the Irish Church. He vigorously defended these in letters to Popes and to a Gallic synod (603), but later he lost royal protection through his outspoken attacks on the king's polygamy, and he was expelled from the country with his closest followers (610). They began missionary work among the heathen Alamanni near Lake Constance, but were driven out by political upheavals in 612, though St *Gall stayed on. Finally Columbanus and his companions settled at *Bobbio, which later became a great centre of learning. Feast day, 23 Nov.

Columbanus' surviving works include letters, 13 sermons, and the Monks' Rule; the Communal Rule and the Penitential ascribed to him are also substantially his work, but controversy continues about the poetry.

Crit. edn. of his Opera, by G. S. M. Walker (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, 2; Dublin, 1957), with bibl. to date; cf. A. Mundó, OSB, in Scriptorium, 12 (1958), pp. 289–93. 'Penitential' ed. J. Laporte, OSB (Monumenta Christiana Selecta, 4; Tournai, 1961). Life by Jonas of Susa and other material ed. B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 4 (1902), pp. 1–156, and 7, pt. 2 (1920), pp. 822–7; also pr. in Ionae Vitae Sanctorum Columbani, Vedastis, Iohannis (Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, 1905), pp. 1–294. Eng. tr. by D. C. Munro (Translations and Reprints from the Original Sources of European History, no. 7; Philadelphia, 1895). 'Miracula Sancti Columbani', ed. H. Bresslau in MGH, Scriptores, 30, pt. 2 (1934), pp. 993–1015. Full bibl. details of sources in M. Lapidge and R. Sharpe, A Bibliography of Celtic-Latin Literature 400–1200 (Dublin, 1985), pp. 165–8, 171 f., and 331 (nos. 639–42, 650–6, and 1251).

Mélanges Colombaniens: Actes du Congrès International de Luxeuil 20–23 juillet 1950 (Bibliothèque de la Société d'Histoire Ecclésiastique de la France [1951]); San Colombano e la sua opera in Italia (Convegna Storico Colombaniano, Bobbio, 1–2 settembre 1951; Bobbio, 1953). J. W. Smit, Studies on the Language and Style of Columba the Younger (Columbanus) (Amsterdam, 1971); M. Lapidge, 'The Authorship of the Adonic Verses "ad Fidolium" attributed to Columbanus', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 18 (1977), pp. 815–80; H. B. Clarke and M. Brennan (eds.), Columbanus and Merovingian Monasticism (BAR International Series, 113; Oxford, 1981); K. Schäferdiek, 'Columbans Wirken im Frankenreich', in H. Löwe (ed.), Die Iren und Europa im früheren Mittelalter, 1 (Stuttgart, 1982), pp. 171–201; P. C. Jacobsen, 'Carmina Columbani', ibid., pp. 434–67; D. Schaller, 'Die Siebensilberstrophen "de mundi transitu"—eine Dichtung Columbans?', ibid., pp. 468–83. M. Lapidge, 'Columbanus and the Antiphonary of Bangor', Peritia, 4 (1985), pp. 104–16. Id. (ed.), Columbanus (forthcoming). J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 63–73. D. Bullough in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 27 (1982), pp. 113–29, s.v. 'Colombano'.

Colvill, John. See COVEL, JOHN.

Combefis, François (1605–79), *patristic scholar. A native of Aquitaine, he entered the *Dominican Order in 1624. He published first editions of the Greek text of several of the Fathers, among them *Amphilochius of Iconium, *Methodius of Olympus, and *Andrew of Crete (all in one vol., 1644), and also an excellent edition of *Maximus the Confessor (1675). He also produced an edition (1679) of St *Basil the Great, though this was superseded by the still better *Maurist edition (1721–30).

Quétif and Échard, 2, pp. 678–87, incl. list of his works. R. Coulon in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 385–7, s.v.

Comber, Thomas (1645–99), Dean of *Durham from 1691. He was the author of A Companion to the Temple and Closet; or a Help to Publick and Private Devotion, in an Essay upon the Daily Offices of the Church (1672–6), written with the intention of reconciling Protestant dissenters to the services of the C of E. Comber strongly resisted *James II's attempts to fill Anglican benefices with RCs, and unreservedly welcomed William and Mary.

C. E. Whiting (ed.), The Autobiographies and Letters of Thomas Comber (Surtees Society, 156–157, for 1941–2; 1946–1947), incl. list of MS sources for life.

Comboni, Bl [Antonio] Daniele (1831–81), first RC Bishop of Central Africa and founder of the *Verona Fathers. Born near Brescia, he was ordained priest for the African mission in 1854 in the Institute founded at Verona by Nicholas Mazza, and joined its Nile expedition three years later. In 1861 he was sent to Aden to bring ransomed Black slaves to Verona for education, and was then appointed Vice-Rector of the Mazza Institute's African colleges. In Rome in 1864 he conceived his 'Plan for the Regeneration of Africa', the basic idea of which was to 'save Africa with Africa', and in the following year he went again to Egypt to study its feasibility. In 1867, after the Mazza Institute abandoned its African work, Comboni founded the Missionary Institute for Africa, now officially called the Comboni Missionaries of the Sacred Heart, but commonly known as the Verona Fathers. Between further journeys to Egypt, he presented a stirring 'Petition on behalf of the Black Populations of Central Africa' to the First *Vatican Council in 1870, and was entrusted by *Pius IX with the mission to Central Africa. In 1872 he founded the Institute of the Missionary Sisters of Verona (Comboni Missionary Sisters). After starting missionary work in the *Sudan, he was appointed *Vicar Apostolic of Central Africa in 1877 and died at Khartoum in 1881. Comboni was deeply involved in the struggle against *slavery and he travelled extensively in Europe to bring the plight of Africans to the attention of statesmen and philanthropists. He was beatified in 1996. Feast day, 10 Oct.

Comboni pub. his 'Plan', Piano per la Rigenerazione dell'Africa at Turin, 1864. M. Grancelli, Mons. Daniele Comboni e la Missione dell'Africa Centrale (Verona, 1923); Il Servo di Dio, Mons. Daniele Comboni [by A. Capovilla, MCCJ] (ibid., 1928). P. Chiochetta [MCCJ], Daniele Comboni: Carte per l'Evangelizzazione dell'Africa (Bologna, 1978). O. Branchesi, Safari for Souls: Bishop Daniel Comboni, Founder of the Sons of the Sacred Heart (Verona Fathers) and of the Missionary Sisters of Verona (Cincinatti [1951]). B. Ward, A Heart for Africa (pamphlet issued by Comboni Missionary Publications, London, etc., 1989).

Comboni Missionaries. See VERONA FATHERS.

Comenius, Johannes Amos (in Czech, Jan Amos Komensky) (1592–1670), Bohemian educationist. He belonged to the *Bohemian Brethren (Moravian), and studied theology at the *Calvinist universities of Herborn and Heidelberg, where he came under the influence of *millenarianism. From 1618 to 1621 he was a Moravian minister at Fulnek, and later at Lissa in Poland where he wrote his most important educational works, Didactica Magna (published 1657) among them. From 1641 onwards he travelled in England, Sweden, and Germany, collecting material for further educational writings and promoting the international Protestant cause. He returned to Lissa in 1648 and became first senior of the Brethren; and from 1650 to 1654 he lived in Hungary, where he founded a school on his principles at Sárospatak. After Lissa had been destroyed by Polish Catholics in 1656, Comenius found a refuge in the Netherlands, where he finished his last work, the Unum Necessarium, in 1668.

His educational ideals were deeply influenced by his personal religious experience. Hoping for a Utopian Church which would unite all religions in Christian love, the 'unum necessarium', he regarded education as the surest way to its fulfilment. In numerous schools men were to be formed into images of Christ by means of the 'pansophia', i.e. an organic development of all elements of Divine wisdom. The methods he advocated were far in advance of the ordinary practice of his time. Coercion was to be avoided; the senses were to be employed wherever possible; and everything to be learnt was first to be properly understood. Not much learning, but the development of the character on Christian lines, was to be the ultimate aim. His ideas have had considerable influence on modern pedagogy. Since the 1890s a wider interest in Comenius' religious and philosophical ideas has revived, and institutes for the study of them exist both in Germany and in the Czech Republic, where he occupies a prominent place in the national pantheon.

His main works are collected as Vybrané spisy (8 vols. + index, Prague, 1958–78) and repr. in facsimile as Ausgewählte Werke, ed. D. Tschiżewskij and K. Schaller (4 vols. in 6 parts, Hildesheim, 1973–83). A complete edn. of his Opera Omnia is being pub. at Prague, 1969 ff. His rediscovered pansophic testament, De rerum humanarum emendatione consultatio catholica was first ed. in full by J. Červenka and V. T. Miškovská-Kozáková (2 vols., Prague, 1966). Eng. tr. of pt. 4 of this work, Pampaedia, by A. M. O. Dobbie (Dover [1986]). Other modern Eng. trs. of Didactica Magna (London, 1896; 2nd edn. with additions, 1910), Labirynt Swěta a Lusthauz Srdce ... ('The Labyrinth of the World and the Paradise of the Heart', London, 1901; repr., 1950), Via Lucis (London, 1938), Angelus Pacis (New York [1944]), and Didactica Analytica (Chicago, 1953). Facsmile repr. of the London, 1672, edn. of Orbis Sensualium Pictus, with introd. by J. Bowen (Sydney, 1967). Studies on his educational significance by A. Heyberger (Travaux publiés par l'Institut d'Études Slaves, 8; Paris, 1928) and J. E. Sadler (London, 1966). The fullest Life is M. Blekastad, Comenius (Oslo and Prague, 1969 [in Ger.]). J. F. Young, Comenius in England (1932); J. Needham (ed.), The Teacher of Nations (1942); M. Spinka, John Amos Comenius: That Incomparable Moravian (Chicago, 1943); W. Rood, Comenius and the Low Countries (Amsterdam, 1970); E. Földes and I. Mészáros (eds.), Comenius and Hungary: Essays (Budapest, 1973).

Comes (Lat., Liber comitis, Liber comicus, or Liber commicus), a book containing the passages to be read at Mass as *Epistles, or containing both the Epistles and *Gospels. Originally a collection of complete readings, the terms came to be used for lists containing only references to the passages to be read, usually the opening words of each reading. The word 'comes' used to be thought to come from the Latin meaning of 'companion' but perhaps derives from comma, a section or *pericope.

W. H. *Frere, Studies in Early Roman Liturgy, 3, The Roman Epistle-Lectionary (*Alcuin Club Collections, 32; 1935), esp. pp. 1–25 (text of 'Liber Comitis' from Corbie lectionary at St Petersburg) and pp. 45 f., 49–61, and 73–84. T. Klauser, Das römische Capitulare Evangeliorum, 1 (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 28; 1935), esp. pp. xv f. and xix. A Mundó, OSB, 'Frammenti palinsesti del "Liber commicus" visigoto', in Studi sulla Chiesa Antica e sull'Umanesimo: Studi presentati nella Sezione di Storia Ecclesiastica del Congresso Internazionale per il IV Centenario della Pontificia Università Gregoriana, 13–17 ottobre 1953 (Analecta Gregoriana, 70; 1954), pp. 101–6. Vogel, Sources, p. 392, note 138. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 1, 1930), cols. 220–43, s.v. 'Liber Comicus'.

Comfortable Words, the. Four passages from the NT (Mt. 11: 28, Jn. 3: 16, 1 Tim. 1: 15, 1 Jn. 2: 1 f.) recited by the celebrant at the Holy Communion in the C of E after the Absolution of the people, to confirm the pardon just given. They are based on Abp. *Hermann's 'Consultatio' (1543), where (with the exception of the first, which was added by the Anglican Reformers) they appear between the Confession and Absolution. They were prescribed first by the Order of the *Communion (1548) and subsequently in all editions of the BCP. In the ASB their use is optional.

A short 'Pastoral and Theological Commentary' by W. W. S. March (London, 1961).

Comforter, the. The title of the Holy Spirit found in the AV, RV, and some modern English translations of Jn. 14: 16 and 26; 15: 26, and 16: 7. The Greek word (παράκλητος) means 'advocate' at 1 Jn. 2: 1, where, however, it refers to Christ. The earlier Latin versions rendered it by 'advocatus' in the Gospels also, but the functions assigned are wider than judicial, and the *Vulgate left it untranslated as paracletus. The more general word 'helper' is now widely favoured. The translation consolator, which first appeared in the 7th cent., gave rise through the French to the rendering 'Comforter'.

Comgall, St (d. *c.*600), abbot of *Bangor (Co. Down), is one of the best attested founders of monastic churches in 6th-cent. Ireland. The 7th-cent. Life of St *Columbanus by Jonas of Bobbio describes Columbanus' years of study with Comgall, and his virtues are praised in a hymn preserved in the later 7th-cent. Antiphonary of *Bangor. His name was known on the Continent, probably as a result of the activity of Columbanus' disciples; he is praised, for example, in the martyrology by *Notker Balbulus, and a copy of his rule appears in a 9th-cent. booklist from *Fulda. None of the Latin Lives now preserved is older than the early 13th cent., though a text was known in the 12th cent. to Jocelin of Furness. Feast day, 10 May.

The older of two Lat. Lives (as revised in the 13th cent.) is ed. C. Plummer, Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae, 2 (Oxford, 1910), pp. 3–21; the other (based on it) is ed. W. W. Heist, Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae ex codice olim Salmanticensi nunc Bruxellensi (Subsidia Hagiographica, 28; Brussels, 1965), pp. 332–4; they are complemented by P. Grosjean, SJ (ed.), 'S. Comgalli Vita Latina. Accedunt duae narrationes Gadelicae', Anal. Boll. 52 (1934), pp. 343–56. J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland. 1: Ecclesiastical (Records of Civilization, New York, 1929), pp. 396 f.

Comma Joanneum. See JOHANNINE COMMA.

commandery. Among the *Hospitallers, an estate or manor in the charge of a member of the order. In 1540 all commanderies which survived in England were seized by the Crown. The corresponding institution among the *Templars was the '*preceptory'.

Commandments, the Ten, also called the 'Decalogue' (from Gk. δέκα, 'ten', and λόγος, 'word'), the precepts divinely revealed to *Moses on Mt. *Sinai and engraved on two tables of stone. Acc. to Exod. 32: 19, the tables were broken by Moses on coming down from the mountain because of the idolatry of the people, but later replaced by another pair (Exod. 34: 1) which were deposited in the *Ark. The text of the Commandments is preserved in the OT in two closely similar versions (Exod. 20: 1–17 and Deut. 5: 6–21). The chief differences are that whereas in Exod. the observance of the *Sabbath is motivated by a religious reason, namely Yahweh's rest on the seventh day of Creation, in Deut. the ground is humanitarian. Also, in the prohibition of covetousness, Exod. classes a man's wife with his other domestic property, whereas Deut. treats her separately. These differences are perhaps to be explained in terms of the less developed social teaching of the writer of the Exod. account. As regards the origin of the Decalogue, many of the older critical scholars, e.g. F. *Delitzsch, R. Kittel, and S. R. *Driver, held it to be of the Mosaic age. J. *Wellhausen, C. H. *Cornill, R. Smend, and others argued that it legislates not for wandering nomads but for a settled agricultural community, and that its moral teaching reflects the ideals of the 8th and 7th cent. Prophets; they therefore dated it in the 7th cent. More recently there has been some reaction against this view, and the dating of the Decalogue is now regarded as an open question among scholars, with many again accepting the possibility that the code in its primitive form may go back to Moses himself. There is another and, acc. to many OT critics, older version of the 'Ten Words' preserved in Exod. 34: 11–28, where much more emphasis is laid on ritual prescriptions.

The Ten Commandments, as we have them today, form an organic body of religious and moral principles, based on the Hebrew monotheistic conception of God. They are clear and succinct; and, apart from the prohibition of images and the precept of observing the Sabbath, they contain only rules of life that are the common property of mankind. Hence they were never abrogated in the New Dispensation, but rather deepened and supplemented by the Lord's teaching in the *Sermon on the Mount, and summed up by Him in the double precept of love towards God and one's neighbour (Mk. 12: 29–31 and parallels). This summary of the Law draws together Deut. 6: 4–5 and Lev. 19: 18. Acc. to *Tertullian the Divine precepts were engraven on the hearts of men even before being written on the tables of stone (cf. Jer. 31: 31–4), an opinion later found also in St *Augustine and St *Gregory the Great. Acc. to St *Thomas Aquinas, St *Bonaventure, and other Schoolmen, all precepts of the Old Law belong to the *Natural Law, and hence the Commandments were given only to remind men of their obligations which had been obscured by sin.

By the time of St Augustine the Ten Commandments had gained a prominent place in the instruction of catechumens. They were esp. used to counteract the moral errors of the *Manicheans, who alleged the Decalogue to be the work of the evil principle. They came to the fore again in the development of the penitential system in the 9th cent., and from the 13th cent. have kept their central place in Christian instruction. They received an esp. prominent place in the popular systems of teaching of the *Reformers, and were fully commented on by M. *Luther in his 'Grosser' and 'Kleiner Katechismus'. There is a difference in the enumeration in the different Churches. In the C of E as well as in the Greek and the Reformed (Calvinist and Zwinglian) Churches the prohibitions relating to false worship are reckoned as two, whereas the RC Church and the Lutherans count them as one. Thus the enumeration of the subsequent Commandments differs, e.g. the fourth (Anglican, etc.) Commandment on the sanctification of the Sabbath is reckoned as the third by those following the RC method. The number ten is made up by the latter splitting up the last Commandment forbidding covetousness into two. In the 1552 BCP the recitation of the Ten Commandments was introduced into the Communion Office, where they are to be regarded as a substitute for the lessons from the OT in ancient liturgies or, more probably, for the *Kyrie Eleison of the medieval rite. The rubric requiring their recitation at every Celebration remains in the BCP, though in modern practice they are often omitted, replaced by the Kyrie Eleison or summed up in the Lord's two Great Commandments (Mk. 12: 29–31); provision is made for either of the last alternatives in the ASB.

S. *Mowinckel, Le Décalogue (Études d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses publiées par la Faculté de Théologie protestante de l'Université de Strasbourg, 16; 1927). H. H. Rowley, 'Moses and the Decalogue', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 34 (1952), pp. 81–118. J. J. Stamm, Die Dekalog im Lichte der neueren Forschung (Berne, 1958; 2nd edn., 1962; Eng. tr., with additions, by M. E. Andrew, Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser., 2; 1967).

A. C. J. Phillips, Ancient Israel's Criminal Law: A New Approach to the Decalogue (Oxford, 1970). E. W. Nicholson, 'The Decalogue as the Direct Address of God', Vetus Testamentum, 27 (1977), pp. 422–33. P. Delhaye, Le Décalogue et sa place dans la morale chrétienne (2nd edn., 1963). G. Bourgeault, SJ, Décalogue et morale chrétienne (1971). F. E. Vokes, 'The Ten Commandments in the New Testament and in First Century Judaism' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Evangelica, 5 (TU 103; 1968), pp. 146–54. A. Eberharter in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 2 (1934), cols. 341–51, s.v. 'Décalogue'; L. Perlitt and others in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 408–30, s.v. 'Dekalog'; R. F. Collins in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 383–7, s.v. 'Ten Commandments' each with bibl. See also comm. on EXODUS and DEUTERONOMY.

Commandments of the Church (also Precepts of the Church). Certain moral and ecclesiastical precepts, imposed by the RC Church on all her members. They were tabulated in the Middle Ages, and later more strictly classified. Thus St Peter *Canisius in his Summa Doctrinae Christianae (1555) mentions five and St Robert *Bellarmine in his Doctrina Christiana (1589) lists six, though the 'Roman Catechism' (1566) does not speak of them. The Catechism of the Catholic Church (1992) lists five, namely (1) to attend Mass on Sundays and *Feasts of Obligation; (2) to go to Confession (see PENANCE) at least once a year; (3) to receive Holy Communion during the *Easter season; (4) to keep holy the Feasts of Obligation; (5) to observe the days of *fasting and *abstinence; to these is added the duty of providing for the material needs of the Church (nos. 2042–3).

J. W. Melody in CE 4 (1908), pp. 154 f., s.v.; E. Dublanchy in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 388–93, s.v. 'Commandements de l'Église', both with bibl.

Commemoration. Acc. to traditional W. liturgical custom, when two feasts fell on the same date, that of lesser rank was commonly only 'commemorated'. This was done, e.g. at Mass, by its *collect, *secret, and *postcommunion being read after the corresponding prayers of the feast of greater rank which was being observed. See also OCCURRENCE, CONCURRENCE.

commendam (Med. Lat. commenda, a 'trust' or 'custody'). An individual was said to hold an ecclesiastical benefice in commendam when its revenues were granted to him temporarily during a vacancy. The person so provided might be a layman, in which case he would ipso facto be debarred from performing the duties. Gradually the word came to be restricted, esp. to benefices which a bishop or other dignitary held more or less permanently along with his see. The first reference to the custom is in the writings of St *Ambrose, who mentions a Milanese church which he had 'commended'. The practice not unnaturally led to great abuses. The holding of benefices in commendam in the C of E is prohibited by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act 1836.

Commendatio Animae (Lat., 'Commendation of the soul'). The prayers formerly prescribed in the *Rituale Romanum to be said at the bedside of a dying person. The 1972 'Order for the Anointing of the Sick and their Pastoral Care' (Ordo Unctionis Infirmorum eorumque Pastoralis Curae) calls the corresponding section Commendatio morientium ('Commendation of the dying'). Both plead that the soul may go forth in the name of God, but the 1972 rite provides a wider choice of biblical readings, psalms and prayers.

L. Gougaud, OSB, 'Étude sur les "Ordines Commendationis Animae" ', EL 49 (1935), pp. 3–27. R. Rutherford, The Death of a Christian (Studies in the Reformed Rites of the Catholic Church, 7; New York, 1980), pp. 65–9; 2nd edn. (Collegeville, Minn., 1990), pp. 67–71.

commendation, final. See ABSOLUTIONS OF THE DEAD.

Commination service. The service drawn up by the compilers of the BCP for use on *Ash Wednesday (as a substitute for earlier penitential discipline) and on other days appointed by the *ordinary. It consists of an exhortation, clearly intended for use by a non-preaching clergy (during which the Curses are solemnly recited), Psalm 51, suffrages, and prayers. It first appeared in the BCP of 1549, and has, with various modifications, been included in all subsequent revisions. It is now seldom used.

Commodian, Christian Latin poet. He is generally held to have flourished in Africa in the middle of the 3rd cent., despite the doubts of some scholars, who put him later, e.g. in the 5th cent. in S. Gaul. He was certainly a convert from paganism. Two of his poems have survived, 'Instructiones adversus Gentium Deos pro Christiana Disciplina' and 'Carmen Apologeticum adversus Judaeos et Gentes'. Although altogether wanting in literary style, his work is a landmark in the history of Latin verse, as his rhythm is based on accent alone, without attention to quantities. Theologically he was a *Chiliast and Patripassianist, and in the Decretum Gelasianum his works were reckoned as apocryphal.

Editio princeps of 'Instructiones' by N. Rigaltius, Toul, 1649, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 5. 201–62; of 'Carmen Apologeticum' by J. B. *Pitra in Spicilegium Solesmense, 1 (1852). Crit. edns. of Works by E. Ludwig (Teub., 1877–8), B. Dombart (CSEL 15; 1887), and J. Martin in CCLS 128 (1960), pp. 1–122, with bibl. A. F. van Katrijk, Lexicon Commodianeum (Amsterdam, 1934); P. Courcelle, 'Commodien et les invasions du V^e siècle', Revue des Études Latines, 24 (1946), pp. 227–46; J. Martin, 'Commodianus', Traditio, 13 (1957), pp. 1–71. J. Perret, 'Prosodie et Métrique chez Commodien', Pallas, 5 (1957), pp. 27–42; L. Callebat, 'Tradition et novation dans la poésie de Commodien', ibid. 13 (1966), pp. 85–94; A. Salvatore, Interpretazioni Commodianee: Nuove ricerche sul Carme Apologetico (Naples, 1974). J. *Daniélou, SJ, Les Origines du christianisme latin (Histoire des doctrines chrétiennes avant Nicée, 3; 1978), pp. 93–111 and 224–34; Eng. tr. (1977), pp. 99–125 and 273–88. J. Fontaine, Naissance de la poésie dans l'Occident chrétien (Etudes Augustiniennes, 1981), pp. 39–52 and 292 (bibl.). A. di Berardino, OSA, in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 259–65, with bibl. L. Krestan in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 248–52, s.v.

Common Life, Brethren of the. See BRETHREN OF THE COMMON LIFE.

Common of the Saints (Lat. Commune Sanctorum). In the W. Church, those parts of the *Missal and *Breviary containing the office for such saints as do not have a complete individual office (a '*proper') of their own.

Common Order, Book of. (1) The directory of worship drawn up by J. *Knox in 1556 for the English Protestant congregations in Geneva. It is also known as 'The Order of Geneva' and as 'Knox's Liturgy'. It was appointed for use in Scotland by the General Assembly in 1562; revised and enlarged in 1564; and continued in general use among the *Calvinists of Scotland until 1645, when it was replaced by the Directory of Public *Worship compiled by the *Westminster Assembly.

(2) In modern times the title has been revived for various service-books, none of them mandatory, used in Scotland by Churches of the *Presbyterian tradition. After the union of the Church of Scotland and the *United Free Church in 1929, the Committee on Public Worship and Aids to Devotion prepared the 1940 Book of Common Order, which was authorized by the *General Assembly; this drew extensively on two earlier books, Prayers for Divine Service (1923, 1929) from the pre-Union Church of Scotland, and the Book of Common Order (1928), from the United Free Church. The 1979 Book of Common Order was essentially a revision of the 1940 Book carried out by the Committee on Public Worship and Aids to Devotion under the supervision of the General Assembly. It attracted considerable criticism, and in 1994 a new book, entitled simply Common Order, and following the 1940 rather than the 1979 model, was published by the Assembly's Panel on Worship. Common Order (1994) contains orders for Morning and Evening Worship (five each); Baptism; 'Public Profession, Confirmation, and Admission to the Lord's Supper' (one service); Communion (five, in which classical, Celtic, Reformed and modern ecumenical patterns are evident); and Marriage (three); together with orders for daily and occasional services, funerals and private devotions, and prayers for the seasons of the Christian Year. The Revised English Bible is used throughout; the lectionary is the Revised Common Lectionary; and ample provision is made for congregational participation, e.g. through responses. The language (which is inclusive, and replaces 'thou' with 'you') aims at simplicity and directness, and the layout is in short lines, like verse, rather than in paragraphs.

(1) G. W. Sprott and T. Leishman (eds.), The Book of Common Order of the Church of Scotland . . . and the Directory for the Public Worship of God, agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster (1868), pp. 1–253, with introd. pp. xiii–lxvii.

(2) D. B. Forrester, 'Worship since 1929', in id. and D. M. Murray (eds.), Studies in the History of Worship in Scotland (Edinburgh, 1984), pp. 156–70. J. A. Whyte in J. G. Davies (ed.), A New Dictionary of Liturgy and Worship (1986), pp. 446–8, s.v. 'Presbyterian Worship'.

Common Prayer, The Book of. The official service book of the C of E containing the daily offices of Morning and Evening Prayer, the forms for administration of the *Sacraments and other public and private rites, the *Psalter and (since 1552) the *Ordinal. The book was compiled originally through the desire of T. *Cranmer and others to reform, simplify and condense the Latin services of the medieval Church and to produce in English a single, convenient, and comprehensive volume as an authoritative guide for priest and people. A printed edition of the (Latin) Sarum *Breviary (1543) and the issue of the *Litany in English (1544) and of the Order of the *Communion (1548), which was an English supplement to the Latin Mass, paved the way for the complete reform.

In 1548 Cranmer discussed the draft of a new Prayer Book with a conference of scholars, and in 1549 Parliament had the 'First Prayer Book of Edward VI' printed, and by the first Act of *Uniformity enforced it as the national Use. An Ordinal was issued in 1550. In doctrine and ritual this First BCP was a compromise between the old and the new schools, and it failed to please either. The criticisms of the latter, represented by e.g. *Peter Martyr and M. *Bucer, were concerned chiefly with *vestments, prayers for the *dead, and the invocation of the Holy Spirit in the Prayer of Consecration. Revision in the light of these criticisms led to the issue in 1552 of the 'Second Prayer Book of Edward VI', authorized by another Act of Uniformity. This added the present introduction to Morning and Evening Prayer, recast the Holy Communion office, radically reordered the burial service, excluding all prayers for the dead, ordered the use of the surplice instead of other vestments, and omitted all reference to 'Mass' and 'Altar'. The *Black Rubric was added without the sanction of the Act of Uniformity. *Mary's Act of Repeal (1553) restored the ancient services. As the 'Elizabethan BCP' (1559) the 1552 book was reissued with a few slight alterations, and, except for a few minor details, it remained unchanged for the rest of the 16th cent. The part played by Convocation in the issue of these three books is obscure; so also is the origin of the *Ornaments Rubric which was attached to *Elizabeth I's book.

Puritan objections to the BCP, which had been accumulating under Elizabeth, were ventilated on the accession of *James I by the *Millenary Petition. Hence 1604 saw the *Hampton Court Conference between bishops and Puritan divines, and a further minor revision in which the most important change was the addition of the second part of the *Catechism. After the 16 years in which the Book was officially superseded by the Directory of Public *Worship (1645), the *Restoration of *Charles II was followed by the re-establishment of the Church's episcopal structure, and in 1661 the *Savoy Conference met to consider afresh Puritan grievances. On its proving abortive, Convocation took over the task of yet another revision, and the Act of Uniformity of 1662 authorized the BCP as revised (see DURHAM BOOK). The re-insertion, with modification, of the Black Rubric, omitted in Elizabeth's BCP, was the principal concession to Puritans. The most important change was the introduction of the AV of 1611 for the Epistles and Gospels.

Despite further proposals, most notably in 1689, the 1662 BCP has remained almost unchanged. The *lectionary (q.v.) has been revised a number of times since 1871, and the Shortened Services Act (1872) allowed a more elastic interpretation of some of the rubrics. There were, however, persistent ritualistic controversies in the late 19th cent., and these led to the appointment in 1904 of a Royal Commission on *Ecclesiastical Discipline which in 1906 recommended that 'Letters of Business' be issued to the *Convocations with a view to Prayer Book revision. After nearly two decades the Convocations decided to retain the 1662 Book and to incorporate all changes in a new book, which should include the 1662 texts with alternatives whose use would be wholly permissive. The new Book, which represented a compromise, permitted *Reservation of the Sacrament and in its (Alternative) Eucharistic rite approximated more closely to the medieval services than the 1662 Book had done. Though passed by the Convocations and the *Church Assembly, it was rejected by the House of Commons on 15 Dec. 1927. An amended form was again rejected by the Commons in 1928. In response to this rejection the bishops issued a unanimous statement that the Church must retain its inalienable right to order its forms of worship, and in July 1929 the Upper House of the Convocation of Canterbury resolved that bishops should be guided by the proposals of 1928. The legal basis of these actions is unclear.

Despite fairly widespread use in some quarters of individual services, such as *Baptism and *Matrimony, the 1928 Book did not win general acceptance. Dissatisfaction and doubts about the legal position led to the adoption of the *Interim Rite by many *Anglo-Catholics, while *Evangelicals tended to be uninterested in, or even opposed to, a revision of the 1662 Book which they valued as a doctrinal safeguard. Nearly all churchmen, however, departed to a considerable extent from the strict observance of the 1662 Book, and the desire for a generally acceptable liturgy found expression in the convening of the Lambeth Round Table Conference of 1938 and elsewhere. In 1955 the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York appointed a Liturgical Commission to prepare a revision which, after a period of authorized experiment with individual services from 1965, led to the publication in 1980 of the *Alternative Service Book (q.v.).

Outside England, the BCP has undergone numerous revisions, beginning with the Scottish BCP of 1637, issued under the influence of W. *Laud; this was abortive at the time, but historic in its influence on later revisers. Revisions by the *Nonjurors had no legal force, but led to the first effective Scottish (Episcopalian) Eucharistic rite of 1764, which in turn, through S. *Seabury, influenced the first American BCP of 1789 (revised 1892). Elsewhere the English 1662 Book was used until the Church of *Ireland, freed by disestablishment from the Act of Uniformity, in 1877 produced its own BCP, a conservative revision in a Protestant direction. In the early 20th cent., parallel to the English revision of 1928, but free from parliamentary control, new editions of the BCP were issued in *Canada (1922), the *United States of America (1928), and Scotland (1929). In other parts of the Anglican Communion the BCP or parts of it were generally translated into the local languages, though in several areas different forms of the Communion Service in particular appeared in book or pamphlet form in the first half of the 20th cent. Until 1948 the Lambeth Conferences viewed the BCP as a bond of the Anglican Communion, and it was only from 1958 that encouragement was given for provincial revisions; this change of attitude stemmed partly from appreciation of the rites of the Church of *South India. The last of the revisions which closely followed the 1662 BCP were the (alternative) Book of *South Africa (1954) and those of *India, Pakistan, Burma and Ceylon (1960), and of Canada (1962).

In the 1960s modern English was introduced into the Anglican liturgy and new experimental rites began to address God as 'you' rather than 'Thou'. One influence here was the choice of modern English for the RC vernacular liturgy after the Second *Vatican Council; for a while it met with considerable resistance. As in the C of E, the revision of individual services was widely followed by the issue of a single Book. In a few cases, where some provision for the use of traditional language was included in the Book, its use was made mandatory, e.g. the American BCP (1979) or that of Wales (1984). More often the new Books are alternative to the BCP, e.g. those of *Australia (1978), Ireland (1984), Canada (1985), Southern Africa and *New Zealand (both 1989), though in practice they often seem to be tending to replace it.

The privilege of printing the BCP is confined to the Queen's Printer and the University Presses of Oxford and Cambridge, to which an Order in Council from the Privy Council Office is transmitted on the occasion of any necessary change (e.g. of names in the State Prayers). The various edns. of the BCP, with sources, are set out in parallel columns, with meticulous accuracy, in F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (2 vols., 1915), with important introd. E. C. Ratcliff, The Booke of Common Prayer of the Churche of England: Its Making and Revisions M.D.XLIX M.D.CLXI (with 80 illustrations, 1949). More recent rites pr. in W. J. Grisbrooke (ed.), Anglican Liturgies of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries (Alcuin Club Collections, 40; 1958); T. J. Fawcett (ed.), The Liturgy of Comprehension, 1689: An abortive attempt to revise the Book of Common Prayer (ibid. 54; 1973); B. [J.] Wigan (ed.), The Liturgy in English (ibid. 43; 1962); C. O. Buchanan (ed.), Modern Anglican Liturgies 1958–1968 (1968); id. (ed.), Further Anglican Liturgies 1968–1975 (Nottingham, 1975); id. (ed.), Latest Anglican Liturgies 1976–1984 (1985). Among the classic comm. on the BCP are those of A. *Sparrow (1661), R. *Sanderson (1674), and C. *Wheatly (1710). F. Procter, A History of the Book of Common Prayer (1855; new edn. by W. H. Frere, CR, 1901); W. K. Lowther Clarke (ed.), Liturgy and Worship: A Companion to the Prayer Books of the Anglican Communion (1932). D. E. W. Harrison, The Book of Common Prayer (1946; 3rd edn. as Common Prayer in the Church of England, 1969). G. J. Cuming, A History of Anglican Liturgy (1969). E. C. Whitaker, Martin Bucer and the Book of Common Prayer (Alcuin Club Collections, 55; 1974). G. [J.] Cuming, The Godly Order: Texts and Studies relating to the Book of Common Prayer (ibid. 65; 1983). F. A. *Gasquet and E. *Bishop, Edward VI and the Book of Common Prayer (1890). P. N. Brooks, Thomas Cranmer's Doctrine of the Eucharist (2nd edn., 1992), pp. 112–62. S. Brook, The Language of the Book of Common Prayer (1965). R. C. D. Jasper, Prayer Book Revision in England 1800–1900 (1954). J. Dowden, The Scottish Communion Office, 1764 (Oxford, 1922). M. J. Hatchett, The Making of the First American Book of Common Prayer, 1776–1789 (New York, 1982); id., Commentary on the American Prayer Book (ibid., 1980). G. Harford, M. Stevenson, and J. W. Tyrer (eds.), Prayer Book Dictionary (1912; rev. edn., 1925).

Commonwealth and Continental Church Society. See CCCS.

Communicantes. The section of the *Canon of the Roman Mass, so named from its first word, which comes shortly before the Words of *Institution. Like the 'Hanc igitur' and 'Qui pridie', it is subject to some modification acc. to the ecclesiastical calendar, having variant forms for *Christmas, *Epiphany, *Maundy Thursday, *Easter, *Ascensiontide, and *Pentecost. It consists of a memorial of the saints, mentioning by name the BVM, St *Joseph, the eleven Apostles and St *Paul, eleven Roman martyrs, and one African (St *Cyprian). In earlier times local saints were sometimes added in particular districts, but since 1570 the prayer has been recited everywhere in the same form as at Rome, though since 1969 it has been permissible to omit all but the first five names.

Jungmann (1952), 2, pp. 213–25; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 170–9. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Vatican City, 1938), passim. A. *Baumstark, 'Das Communicantes und seine Heiligen-Liste', JLW 1 (1921), pp. 5–33; C. Callewaert, 'S. Léon, le Communicantes et le Nobis quoque peccatoribus', Sacris Erudiri, 1 (1948), pp. 123–64; B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Problèmes du "Communicantes" de la Messe', Rivista Liturgica, 40 (1953), pp. 187–95, repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (Louvain, 1962), pp. 269–75; L. Eizenhöfer, OSB, 'Te igitur und Communicantes im römischen Messkanon', Sacris Erudiri, 8 (1956), pp. 14–75.

communicatio idiomatum (Lat., 'interchange of the properties'; Gk. ἀντίδοσις τῶν ἰδιωμάτων). The doctrine propounded by several of the Fathers, e.g. *Cyril of Alexandria, that while the human and Divine natures in Christ were distinct, the attributes of the one may be predicated of the other in view of their union in the one Person of the Saviour. The doctrine received conciliar authority by its inclusion in the '*Tome' of St *Leo (449). The term, in its Greek form, was first regularly used in the 6th cent. by theologians who defended the *Chalcedonian Definition; the Latin form, which derived from it, seems to have become a technical phrase in the Middle Ages. Communicatio idiomatum played an important part in *Lutheran Eucharistic theology, where it was held to establish the ubiquity of Christ's body (hence 'ubiquitarianism', q.v.).

Communion, frequency of. On a possible interpretation of Acts 2: 46, the apostolic community communicated daily, and from such passages as Acts 20: 7 and various 2nd cent. writers, it seems that the members of the local churches all communicated at the Sunday Eucharist. But in later times, even though attendance at the Liturgy was general, communion became very infrequent. The Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) (cap. 21) provided that all Christians should communicate at least once a year, and this minimum was the normal later medieval practice. In post-medieval times, nearly all religious revivals, both Catholic and Protestant, have aimed at increasing frequency of communion; the BCP in 1549 and later editions fixed the minimum at three times a year; the Restoration Church witnessed a concerted effort by the hierarchy to provide monthly communion in all cathedral churches; the *Wesleys communicated two or three times a week; the leaders of the *Oxford Movement urged frequent communion; and in 1905 Pope *Pius X strongly pressed it upon RCs (Decree of 20 Dec. 1905). The relaxation in the rules about the *Eucharistic fast (q.v.) was directed to the same end, and in the second half of the 20th cent. communion has been allowed for a second time on the same day in some circumstances, e.g. at a *Nuptial Mass. At present weekly communion is fairly common among the laity of the RC Church and the C of E; in religious communities and among a small proportion of the laity in both Churches daily communion is normal, but the majority of people adopt a standard of less frequent communion. The same change from infrequent communion (not more often than once a month) to weekly (or even more frequent) communion has occurred in the E. Orthodox Churches and many Protestant non-episcopal bodies in the course of the 20th cent., though in both cases there have been earlier, isolated attempts to restore the ancient practice of weekly communion.

P. Browe, SJ, De Frequenti Communione in Ecclesia Occidentali usque ad annum Christi 1000: Documenta Varia (Rome, 1932); id., Die häufige Kommunion im Mittelalter (1938). H. Bohl, Kommunionempfang der Gläubigen: Probleme seiner Integration in der Eucharistiefeier (Frankfurt etc. [1980]). R. Taft, 'The Frequency of the Eucharist throughout History', Concilium, 152 (1982), pp. 13–24. E. Dublanchy in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 515–52, s.v. 'Communion eucharistique (fréquente)', with bibl.; J. Dühr, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 1234–92, s.v. 'Communion fréquente'.

Communion, The Order of the (1548). A form for administering Holy Communion, drawn up in English for use in conjunction with the *Sarum (Latin) Mass. It was the first step towards the English Communion Service, and it came into use on *Easter Day 1548. Its essential parts were an exhortation, a brief address to the intending communicants, the *General Confession followed by the Absolution, the *Comfortable Words, the Prayer of *Humble Access, the Words of Administration (for both kinds), and the Blessing; and it was interpolated into the Latin Mass between the communion of the priest and that of the people. The whole of its contents found a place in the later Anglican BCPs, though the position of its several items has varied. An early copy sent to Frankfurt was translated into German by Miles *Coverdale.

The interpolation of this Order into the rest of the Eucharistic rite in the 1549 BCP bore the title 'The Supper of the Lord and the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass', which in turn became 'The Order of the Administration of the Lord's Supper, or Holy Communion' in 1552 and later revisions. Hence the origin of the most commonly used title for the Eucharist in the C of E.

A facsimile of the British Library copy C. 25, f. 15 was ed. for the *Henry Bradshaw Society by H. A. Wilson (1908). See also bibl. to COMMON PRAYER, BOOK OF.

Communion anthem or antiphon (Lat. Communio). In the Roman Mass the short passage said or sung during the administration of the communion. It was formerly said by the priest, but is now usually recited by the reader, choir or people. If there is music, it is sung by the choir with a psalm, between the verses of which the antiphon is interpolated. It may be replaced by a hymn or other chant. The practice of singing a chant during the communion of the people is recorded in the Apostolic Constitutions* (4th cent.) and elsewhere. It came to be reduced to merely the antiphon of the Psalm and was placed after the communion until the earlier practice was restored in 1958. It would seem that Ps. 34 was commonly chosen, doubtless because of the appropriateness of verse 8.

Jungmann (1952), 2, pp. 486–96; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 391–400. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2427–36, s.v. 'Communion (rite et antienne de la)'; M. Huglo in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 39–41, s.v. 'Communion Antiphon'; H. Hucke and M. Huglo in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 4 (1980), pp. 591–4, s.v. 'Communion'.

Communion in both kinds. The custom of receiving Holy Communion under the two species of bread and wine was general until about the 12th cent. There were, however, exceptions. *Tertullian and St *Cyprian, e.g., attest the widespread African custom of the laity taking the consecrated bread home with them for private Communion. This usage, which had probably sprung up during the persecutions, is attested in the 4th cent. for Egypt and *Alexandria by St *Basil and for *Rome by St *Jerome. In the E. it seems to have survived till the 8th cent. Another exception to the rule was the practice of the 3rd-cent. anchorites of communicating with the reserved Eucharistic bread alone. The sick and the children seem also to have been habitually communicated under one species only, in the case of infants usually that of wine. The Mass of the *Presanctified, too, presupposed, for priests and people alike, Communion under the species of bread only. From the 7th cent. the 'intinctio panis', i.e. the dipping of the bread into the consecrated wine, became a widespread usage. Forbidden by the Third Council of Braga (675), the custom again became popular in the 11th cent., chiefly because it prevented the spilling of the Precious Blood. It was again forbidden, e.g. by the Council of Westminster in 1175. In the E. the 'intinctio' seems to have been unknown during the first nine centuries, but acc. to the testimony of Card. *Humbert (d. 1061), was generally practised before the 11th. By the 13th cent. the practice of communicating under the species of wine had almost universally disappeared in the W., the Synod of *Lambeth of 1281, e.g., restricting in can. 1 the consecrated wine to the celebrant. The legitimacy of this practice was denied by the *Hussites, esp. the party of the *Calixtines, who were condemned by the Council of *Constance in 1415. The chalice was conceded to them, however, by the Council of *Basle (1437), but the decision, which had never been confirmed by the Pope, was revoked in 1462. See also INTINCTION, UTRAQUISM.

The subject again became a matter of acute controversy in the 16th cent. The Reformers insisted that Communion in both kinds alone had scriptural warrant. In reply the Council of *Trent ruled that there was no Divine precept to communicate under the two species and that existing practice was justified by the doctrine of concomitance (q.v.). Hence, in the RC Church, Communion in both kinds was restricted to the celebrating priest. During the Second *Vatican Council, however, there was evidence of a strong desire to restore the chalice to the laity, particularly on special occasions such as marriage and religious professions, and the Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy envisaged the reception of Communion in both kinds in some instances. On 7 March 1965 the Congregation of Rites listed the instances in which bishops could permit reception in both kinds and published the rite to be observed; it provided for the four alternatives of drinking from the chalice, using a tube or a spoon, or by intinction. The occasions when it is allowed have since been much extended, and it has become more general. In the E. it is the almost general practice to give Communion from a spoon containing the Eucharistic Bread, which has previously been placed in the Wine. The C of E and all the reformed Churches have always administered Communion in both kinds.

The Tridentine doctrine was formulated in Session 21 (16 July 1562); the relevant canons are pr., with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 726–8. Classic discussion by J. B. *Bossuet, Traité de la communion sous les deux espèces (1682). J. J. Megivern, CM, Concomitance and Communion: A Study in Eucharistic Doctrine and Practice (Studia Friburgensia, NS 33; Fribourg and New York, 1963). E. Dublanchy in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 552–72, s.v. 'Communion eucharistique (sous les deux espèces)'. See also bibl. to EUCHARIST, and works cited under CALIXTINES.

Communion of Saints (Lat. Communio Sanctorum). Part of the ninth article of the *Apostles' Creed. It has been interpreted in several senses: (1) The spiritual union existing between each Christian and Christ, and so between each and every Christian, whether in *Heaven (the 'Church *Triumphant'), in *Purgatory (the 'Church *Expectant'), or on earth (the 'Church *Militant'). J. *Pearson (On the Creed, s.v.) expounds this communion as the communion of holy persons on earth with the Holy Trinity, with the Angels, with nominal Christians (e.g. in Baptism), with other holy persons, and with the saints in Heaven. He does not mention the Church Expectant. (2) The fellowship of Christians upon earth only. (3) The sharing of holy things, i.e. the share which all Christians have in the Sacraments, esp. the *Eucharist, sanctorum here being taken as neuter. Of these, (1) is the traditional view.

J. P. Kirsch, Die Lehre von der Gemeinschaft der Heiligen im christlichen Altertum (1900; Eng. tr., 1911); G. *Morin, OSB, 'Sanctorum Communionem', Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature Religieuses, 9 (1904), pp. 209–36; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), pp. 388–97; A. Michel, La Communion des Saints (Doctor Communis, 9, fasc. 1; Rome, 1956); S. Benko, The Meaning of Sanctorum Communio (Studies in Historical Theology, 3; 1964). P. Bernard in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 429–54, s.v. 'Communion des saints, son aspect dogmatique et historique', with bibl.; R. S. Bour, ibid., cols. 454–80, s.v. 'Communion des saints d'après les monuments de l'antiquité chrétienne', with bibl.

Communion plate. In the RC Church, a plate of silver or metal gilt held under the chin of the communicant at the reception of Holy Communion. It may be held either by the communicant himself or by a server. It use was directed by an instruction of the Congregation of the Sacraments (26 Mar. 1929) but has become obsolescent.

The term is also applied collectively to the vessels used for the celebration of the Eucharist, which are often plated with gold.

Communion Sunday. A Sunday on which the Holy Communion is celebrated. The phrase was in common use in England until the general revival in the latter part of the 19th cent. of celebrations in the C of E at least every Sunday.

Communion table. The table at which the Holy Communion is celebrated. In the C of E the word is used esp. by *Low Churchmen, *High Churchmen commonly preferring the word 'altar' as better expressive of the Eucharistic sacrifice, which they believe is offered upon it. Since in 'high' churches the altar (for the same doctrinal reason) is often of stone and not of wood, there is a further reason in such cases against its being described as a 'table'. In Latin theology the word mensa, however, is of widespread and ancient usage for the 'altar'. In the E. Church it is called the 'Holy Table'.

The placing of the communion table at the E. end of the church, richly covered and railed in, became almost universal in the 17th cent. This reversion to pre-Reformation practice reflected the changing emphasis within Anglican sacramental theology. In modern times there has been a tendency to bring the communion table forward and adopt a *westward position.

G. W. O. Addleshaw and F. Etchells, The Architectural Setting of Anglican Worship (1948), pp. 108–244.

Communion tokens. Metal tokens stamped with such devices as texts, initials, chalices, and the *Good Shepherd, which were used as certificates of fitness for admission to the Communion. There is evidence of the employment of '*houselling tokens' in England in 1534. In the Church of *Scotland, where they have been most generally used, they were common from the first, and the institution has survived, their place being taken today by printed cards on which the communicants' names are written. As these cards are distributed previously by the elders and collected at the service, a check is kept on those who do not communicate. In isolated Presbyterian churches in Scotland and other parts of the Commonwealth, however, the old metal tokens are still retained.

Communion under both kinds. See COMMUNION IN BOTH KINDS.

Community of the Resurrection. This Anglican community was founded at *Oxford in 1892 by C. *Gore, then principal of Pusey House. Its original members were, besides C. Gore, its first superior: J. O. Nash, J. Carter, M. C. Bickersteth, G. Longridge, and W. H. *Frere. In 1893 the Community moved to Radley, Oxon, and five years later to Mirfield, Yorks. From the beginning one of the chief aims of the Community was to adapt the religious life to the changed circumstances of the modern age. Most of the original members continued to combine the scholarly, educational, and evangelistic work in which they had been engaged before profession with common life; but with growing numbers the Community began to develop work of its own, notably the College of the Resurrection at Mirfield for the training of ordinands, and pastoral and educational work in South Africa.

A. Wilkinson, The Community of the Resurrection: A Centenary History (1992). G. P. H. Pawson, CR, Edward Keble Talbot: His Community and his Friends (1954); N. Mosley, The Life of Raymond Raynes (1961).

Comnena, Anna. See ANNA COMNENA.

Company of Jesus. See JESUITS.

comparative religion. A modern name, not (as its form would imply) for a particular kind of religion, but for the branch of study which investigates by scientific and historical methods the religions of the world in their mutual relations. Its development dates from the later 19th cent., under the influence of evolutionary ideas and the greatly increased factual knowledge of other religions through the researches of anthropologists. Its successful pursuit as a science rests on the universality of religion among primitive as well as civilized peoples and the frequent recurrence of certain patterns of religious experience and activity in widely separated ethnological and social groupings. In scope, comparative religion studies the conditions under which these various forms of religious behaviour manifest themselves, the processes of their growth and the part which they play in the cultures and traditions to which they belong. On the other hand, questions relating to the ultimate philosophical and theological validity of the various religions are beyond its purview, its avowed purpose being to describe and classify phenomena and their functional purposes rather than to evaluate them.

None the less, despite this theoretical exclusion of questions of validity, the discipline has raised various pressing questions for the Christian faith, notably by its recognition that much in the Christian tradition is not, as was long supposed, exclusive to it, but is held in common with other world religions. It is at this point that comparative religion and *philosophy of religion (q.v.) overlap. The recognition of these parallels has acutely raised the question of the 'Absoluteness' of Christianity (E. *Troeltsch). On the other hand, Christian students of the subject have argued with great cogency that the study has emphatically brought out the distinctiveness of certain elements in the Christian religion which, judged even by purely historical criteria, indicate its pre-eminence above all other religions. Among these are its conceptions of God and of human personality and certain features of the Christian ethic. On the practical side the study has brought Christian apologists a deeper understanding of other religions and exercised a far-reaching influence on missionary methods. It is also reflected in the Second *Vatican Council's 'Declaration on the Relationship of the Church to Non-Christian Religions' (Nostra Aetate).

J. G. Frazer, The Golden Bough: A Study in Comparative Religion (2 vols., 1890; 3rd edn., 12 vols., 1907–15); E. Durkheim, Les Formes élémentaires de la vie religieuse (1912; Eng. tr., 1915); H. Pinard de la Boullaye, SJ, L'Étude comparée des religions (2 vols., 1922–5); W. Schmidt, Handbuch der vergleichenden Religionsgeschichte (Münster, 1930; Eng. tr., 1931); G. van der Leeuw, Phänomenologie der Religion (Tübingen, 1933; Eng. tr., Religion in Essence and Manifestation, 1938); E. O. James, Comparative Religion (1938; revised edn., 1961); A. C. Bouquet, Comparative Religion (1941); M. Éliade, Traité d'histoire des religions (1949; Eng. tr., 1958); R. C. Zaehner, At Sundry Times: An Essay in the Comparison of Religions (1958); W. A. Lessa and E. Z. Vogt (eds.), Reader in Comparative Religion (Evanston, Ill., 1958; 2nd edn., New York and London, 1965); M. Eliade and J. M. Kitagawa (eds.), The History of Religions: Essays in Methodology (Chicago, 1959); H. Kraemer, World Culture and World Religions: The Coming Dialogue (1960); [E.] G. [S.] Parrinder, Comparative Religion (1962); H. D. Lewis and R. L. Slater, World Religions: Meeting Points and Major Issues (1966); R. C. Zaehner, Concordant Discord: The Interdependence of Faiths (Gifford Lectures for 1967–9; Oxford, 1970); E. J. Sharpe, Comparative Religion: A History (1975); W. C. Smith, Towards a World Theology: Faith and the Comparative History of Religion (1981); J. Hick, An Interpretation of Religion (Gifford Lectures, 1986–7; 1989). J. Finegan, The Archaeology of World Religions (Princeton, NJ, 1952). On the relation of Christianity to the non-Christian religions, H. Kraemer, The Christian Message in a non-Christian World (1938); S. [C.] Neill, Christian Faith and Other Faiths: The Christian Dialogue with other Religions (Moorhouse Lectures, 1960; 1961); E. O. James, Christianity and Other Religions (1968); G. D'Costa, Theology and Religious Pluralism (Oxford, 1986). Much valuable material in J. *Hastings (ed.), Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics (12 vols., and index, 1908–26), esp. art. by S. A. Cook, ibid. 10 (1918), pp. 662–93, s.v. 'Religion'; R. C. Zaehner (ed.), The Concise Encyclopaedia of Living Faiths (1959); S. G. F. Brandon (ed.), A Dictionary of Comparative Religion (1970); M. Eliade and others (eds.), Encyclopedia of Religion (15 vols. + index [1987]), esp. art. by S. Cain, E. J. Sharpe, and T. L. Benson, vol. 14, pp. 64–92, s.v. 'Study of Religion'. Numen: International Review for the History of Religions (Leiden, 1954 ff.); History of Religions: An International Journal for Comparative Historical Studies (Chicago, 1961 ff.). See also bibl. to ANIMISM, ANTHROPOLOGY, and THEOLOGY OF RELIGIONS.

competentes (Lat., 'those qualified'). In the early Church *catechumens admitted to the final stage of preparation for *Baptism. They were also known as 'electi', or, in the E., as 'those being illuminated' (φωτιζόμενοι).

Compline (Lat. Completorium). The last of the canonical day-hours (see OFFICE) in the W. Church, said before retiring for the night. There is evidence that St *Basil compiled an office approximating to Compline, and in the W., before the time of St *Benedict, who incorporated Compline in his Rule, there were forms used in the city of Rome which influenced the offices of the early medieval secular churches. All probably formalized less structured prayers customarily said in the evening. The corresponding service in the E. Church is known as *Apodeipnon (ἀπόδειπνον, Gk. 'after supper'). Ps. 91 occurs in most forms of Compline, and usually also Pss. 4 and 134 (with the addition of Ps. 31: 1–6 in medieval secular breviaries). Other elements, such as the hymn Te lucis ante terminum and the '*Nunc Dimittis' (not taken into the Benedictine rite until 1977) were soon added to the earliest core. The details of the service varied greatly in the different W. breviaries; since 1912 the Roman breviary has included a wider selection of Psalms than in the past. The essential parts of the office were incorporated into the *Evensong of the BCP. A form of Compline was included in the proposed 1928 revision of the BCP as a separate service to be used 'when Evensong has previously been said'. Several of the more recent revisions of the Prayer Book in other parts of the Anglican Communion include Compline, either under that name (e.g. the American BCP of 1979) or under a different title (e.g. 'Prayer at the End of the Day' in the Australian Prayer Book of 1978).

In the RC Church Novum Rubricarum* (1960; sect. 147) strongly recommended that Compline be recited as the final office of the day, even if for a just cause Mattins of the following day had already been anticipated. The 1971 Breviary allows that it be said before or after midnight, so long as it is recited before retiring for the night.

N. Gihr, Prim und Komplet des römischen Breviers, liturgisch und aszetisch erklärt (Theologische Bibliothek, 1907). J. Pargoire, 'Prime et Complies', Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature Religieuses, 3 (1898), pp. 281–8 and 456–67. C. Callewaert, JCD, 'De Completorio ante s. Benedictum', Collationes Brugenses, 30 (1930), pp. 225–30, repr. in id., Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), pp. 127–30. V. Raffa, FDP, 'Alcuini problemi relativi a Compieta', EL 82 (1968), pp. 315–34. O. Klesser in LW 1 (1965), cols. 443–6, s.v. See also appropriate parts of works cited under OFFICE, DIVINE.

Complutensian Polyglot. The first polyglot edition of the whole Bible, begun in 1502 at the expense of Card. F. *Ximénes de Cisneros, who assembled a group of scholarly editors at the university which he had founded at Alcalá (Lat. 'Complutum'), where the Bible was finely printed in six folio volumes, 1514–17. The OT has the Hebrew, Latin *Vulgate, and Greek *Septuagint (with interlinear Latin) in parallel columns; in the *Pentateuch only, the Chaldee paraphrase, printed in Hebrew characters with a Latin translation beside it, is added at the foot of the page. Vol. 6 (1515) is a Hebrew and Chaldee vocabulary, with a short Hebrew grammar. The NT Greek in vol. 5 was the earliest ever printed (1514), but prob. it was the four-year privilege granted to the Greek Testament of *Erasmus (1516) that held up the circulation of the whole Complutensian Bible until *c.*1522. The large Greek type, used here only in the NT and based on an early book-hand, is justly much admired.

J. P. R. Lyell, Cardinal Ximenes . . . with an account of the Complutensian Polyglot Bible (1917), pp. 24–52. B. Hall, Humanists and Protestants 1500–1900 (Edinburgh, 1990), pp. 1–51 ('Cardinal Jiménez de Cisneros and the Complutensian Bible'). Darlow and Moule, 2, pp. 2–6.

Compostela. A city in NW Spain, properly Santiago [i.e. 'St James'] de Compostela, traditionally supposed to be the place of burial of St *James the Apostle. The seat of the bishops of the ancient see of Iria from the 9th cent., Compostela was raised to metropolitan status in 1120. The military Order of *Santiago, founded in 1170, played a role in the reconquest of Spain from the Muslims. The shrine of St James is a centre for pilgrimages from all over Spain, and from many other parts of the world.

Liber Sancti Jacobi: Codex Calixtinus, ed. W. M. Whitehill, G. Prado, OSB, and Jesús C. Garcia (3 vols., Santiago de Compostela, 1944). P. David, Étude sur le Livre de Saint-Jacques attribué au Pape Calixte II (4 parts, Lisbon, 1946–9; repr. from the Bulletin des Études Portugaises); M. C. Díaz y Díaz, El Códice Calixtino de la Catedral de Santiago (Centro de Estudios Jacobeos, Monografías de Compostellanum, 2; 1988). A. López Ferreiro, Historia de la Santa A[postólica] M[etropolitana] Iglesia de Santiago de Compostela (11 vols., Santiago de Compostela, 1898–1911). R. A. Fletcher, Saint James's Catapult: The Life and Times of Diego Gelmírez of Santiago de Compostela [Bp. of Santiago, 1100–40] (Oxford, 1984), with survey of the earlier history of the city and the cult of St James, pp. 1–101. K. J. Conant, The Early Architectural History of the Cathedral of Santiago de Compostela (Cambridge, Mass., 1926). See also bibl. to SPAIN, CHRISTIANITY IN.

comprecation. The word is used esp. of the intercession which the saints are believed to make on behalf of the rest of the Church. Some Anglican theologians (e.g. J. *Bramhall) have maintained that, though direct *invocation of the saints is an unwarranted practice, it is legitimate to request God for their prayers; and such requests for the saints' intercessions have also loosely been called comprecation.

Compton, Henry (1632–1713), Bp. of London. He was educated at Queen's College, *Oxford, and in early life served in the army. After ordination in 1662, he held various preferments, was appointed Bp. of Oxford in 1674, and translated to London in 1675. As Dean of the Province of Canterbury, he was responsible for supervising the 'Compton Census' of 1676, a detailed record of the number of RCs and Protestant Dissenters in each parish and now an important demographic source. A friend of Danby, the Lord Treasurer, Compton was tutor to the princesses Mary and Anne, and officiated at the marriages of both of them. His stoutly anti-Papist attitude and his friendliness towards Protestant Dissenters failed to commend him to *James II, and he was restrained by the Ecclesiastical Commission from the exercise of his spiritual functions, nominally on the ground of his refusal to suspend J. *Sharp, then Rector of St Giles'-in-the-Fields, for his anti-Roman sermons. Having signed the invitation to William of Orange, he took an active part in the events which led to James II's deposition and he officiated in place of W. *Sancroft, at the coronation of William and Mary. He strongly supported the project for comprehension and the *Toleration Act. For some not very clearly known reason, he was twice passed over when the primacy was vacant, in favour of J. *Tillotson and T. *Tenison successively; and during the reign of *Anne he became regarded as a High Churchman, if not a Tory, since he voted for the *Occasional Conformity Bill and in favour of the resolution that the Church was in danger. In 1686 he published under the title Episcopalia a set of addresses to his clergy.

Anon. Life, perh. by N. Salmon, London, *c.*1715. New edn. of his Episcopalia, with brief memoir of Compton by S. W. Cornish, Oxford, 1842. [E.] A. [O.] Whiteman (ed.), The Compton Census of 1676 (Records of Social and Economic History, NS 10; 1986). E. [F.] Carpenter, The Protestant Bishop (1956). D. H. Hosford, 'Bishop Compton and the Revolution of 1688', JEH 23 (1972), pp. 209–18. S. L. Lee in DNB 11 (1887), pp. 443–7.

Comte, Auguste (1798–1857), founder of French *Positivism and of the 'Religion of Humanity'. He was a native of Montpellier and educated at the École Polytechnique, *Paris, where he studied esp. science and mathematics. Having lost his religious faith he came under the influence of H. *Saint-Simon, whose disciple he was from 1816 to 1824. His Système de politique positive (1822; Eng. tr., 1875–7) contains in germ most of his later ideas. His principal work was his Cours de la philosophie positive (6 vols., 1830–42; condensed Eng. tr. by H. Martineau, 2 vols., 1853). The foundation of his system is the law of the three stages—the theological, the metaphysical, and the 'positive'—which constitute the phases of development of the human race as a whole as well as of its individual members. Whereas in the theological and metaphysical stages the human mind seeks a cause or essence to explain phenomena, in the third or positive phase explanation is discovered in a law. Comte advocated the organization of mankind in one vast system in which altruism was to conquer egoism. Conceiving this to be possible only on a religious basis, he constructed a new kind of religion, with humanity, the 'great being', in the place of God. He introduced an elaborate cultus, borrowed chiefly from Catholicism, with its priests and sacraments, and even produced a 'Positivist Calendar' in which the names of scientists and scholars replaced those of the saints. His revolutionary ideas lost him his post as examiner in mathematics at the École Polytechnique, which he had held from 1837 to 1844, and from this time he was supported chiefly by the generosity of his disciples, among whom, with reservations, was J. S. Mill. In 1848 he founded the 'Positive Society' which aimed at applying the principles of Positivism to the reconstruction of society. In his chief sociological work, Système de politique positive, he attempted to apply his utilitarian ethical principles to social and political questions.

Crit. edns. of Correspondance générale et Confessions by P. E. de Berrêdo Carneiro and others (Archives Positivistes, 8 vols., 1973–90) and of Écrits de jeunesse 1816–1828 by idd. (ibid., 1970). Life by H. Gouhier (Paris, 1931; rev. edn., 1965). The numerous studies include those of J. F. E. Robinet (Paris, 1860), [M. P.] E. Littré (ibid., 1863; photographically repr., Farnborough, 1971), J. S. Mill (London, 1865; repr. from the Westminster Review; repr., Ann Arbor, Mich., 1961), E. *Caird (Glasgow, 1885), L. Lévy-Bruhl (Paris, 1900; Eng. tr., 1903), H. Gouhier (3 vols., ibid., 1933–41), F. S. Marvin (London, 1936), P. Arnaud (Paris, 1969), E. E. Evans-Pritchard (lecture; Manchester [1970]), C. Rutten (Paris, 1972), and S. de Acevedo and others (Lyons [1988]). T. R. Wright, The Religion of Humanity: The Impact of Comtean Positivism in Victorian Britain (Cambridge, 1986).

concelebration. The joint celebration of the *Eucharist by a number of priests. This was prob. usual in the early Church, when the bishop was normally the celebrant. In the W. the practice gradually gave way to separate celebrations, each priest saying Mass at a different time or place, except at *Ordinations, when the newly ordained priests regularly concelebrated with the bishop. In 1963 the 'Constitution on the Liturgy' of the Second *Vatican Council restored the practice of concelebration in the W. Church, and it is now widespread, esp. in religious communities. It is required that all concelebrating priests recite the central part of the Canon together (normally silently). In the E. concelebration by a number of priests survived, though in modern times in most E. rites the Canon is actually said by the celebrant alone.

A. A. King, Concelebration in the Christian Church (1966). Articles by B. Botte, OSB, A. Raes, SJ, and others, in Maison-Dieu, 35 (1953), pp. 9–75. A. G. Martimort, 'Le Rituel de la concélébration eucharistique', EL 77 (1963), pp. 147–68. R. Taft [SJ], 'Ex Oriente Lux? Some Reflections on Eucharistic Concelebration', Worship, 54 (1980), pp. 308–25; revised in id., Beyond East and West: Problems in Liturgical Understanding (Washington, DC [1984]), pp. 81–99. R. Cabié in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (1983–4 edn.), 2, pp. 238–46; Eng. tr. (1986), pp. 221–30, with bibl. P. de Puniet, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2470–88, s.v. with bibl.

Concentus. See ACCENTUS.

Conception of the BVM. See IMMACULATE CONCEPTION OF THE BVM.

'Concerning the Service of the Church.' The present title of the preface to the original (1549) edition of the BCP. When the present 'Preface' was added in 1662 (immediately before the 1549 preface) it was necessary to give the original preface a new name, and it then received the above title. Its contents were based on the preface to the reformed Roman *Breviary of F. de *Quiñones, and it is probably the work of T. *Cranmer. Its object was to explain the merits of the new Book over its Latin predecessors.

Conciliar theory. The doctrine that supreme authority in the Church lies with a *General Council. The movement associated with this theory culminated in the 15th cent., but the foundations of it were laid in the early years of the 13th, when canonists found difficulty in reconciling the increasing claims of Papal authority with the theoretical possibility of a heretical Pope. Hugh of Pisa (d. 1210), for instance, in his Summa super Decreta taught that a heretical Pope could err, and sought to maintain the inerrancy of the Church by distinguishing between the local Roman Church and the Catholic Church as a whole. In the following century, with the further growth of Papal power, the movement gained increasing support and its principles were invoked in the dispute between Philip IV of France and *Boniface VIII in an attempt to depose the latter. John of Paris (d. 1306), the most important advocate of the theory at the time, in his treatise De Potestate Regia et Papali (1302) taught that the Pope was the steward of God in matters spiritual and temporal; as such he could be deposed for injustice by those who had elected him, who had themselves acted as representatives of the whole Christian people. *Marsiglio of Padua in his Defensor Pacis (1324) maintained the supremacy of the state in all matters, spiritual as well as temporal. *William of Ockham, attacking the indefectibility of both Pope and General Council, sought the fulfilment of the Lord's promise of the inerrancy of the Church in the survival of truth in any part of it, however obscure.

The outbreak of the *Great Schism in 1378 raised the question of the supremacy of authority in an acute form. In 1380 *Conrad of Gelnhausen in his Epistola Concordiae advocated the summoning of a General Council, arguing that the absence of a single recognized Pope left the duty of convoking it to the *cardinals. The success of the Council of *Constance in ending the schism to some extent undermined the position of the conciliarists, though the Council in its 4th and 5th sessions had already declared that any Christian, including the Pope, was bound by the decisions of a General Council, which derived its authority directly from God. In 1418 *Martin V prepared a prohibition of appeals from the Pope to a future General Council; *Pius II, who before becoming Pope had been an exponent of the Conciliar theory, in 1460 promulgated the bull 'Execrabilis' formally forbidding such appeals. Although the De Concordantia Catholica of *Nicholas of Cusa embodied a balanced scheme for the reform of the Church, the failure of the conciliar theory to win general acceptance after the 15th cent. may be taken as one of the factors at least indirectly leading to the *Reformation, and within the RC Church to such movements as *Gallicanism. It is of interest that the Second *Vatican Council has again emphasized the corporate authority of the episcopate, though not over against the Papacy. See also COLLEGIALITY.

Eng. tr. of various primary docs., with introd., by C. M. D. Crowder, Unity, Heresy and Reform, 1378–1460: The Conciliar Response to the Great Schism (1977). V. Martin, 'Comment s'est formée la doctrine de la supériorité du Concile sur le Pape', Rev. S.R. 17 (1937), pp. 121–43, 261–89, 405–27. B. Tierney, Foundations of the Conciliar Theory (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, NS 4, 1955). P. de Vooght, Les Pouvoirs du Concile et l'autorité du Pape au Concile de Constance (Unam Sanctam, 56; 1965). F. Oakley, Council over Pope? Towards a Provisional Ecclesiology (New York, 1969). A. J. Black, Monarchy and Community: Political Ideas in the Later Conciliar Controversy 1430–1450 (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser., 2; 1970). G. Alberigo, Chiesa Conciliare: Identità e significato del conciliarismo (Brescia, 1981). H. J. Sieben, Traktate und Theorien zum Konzil von Beginn des Grossen Schismas bis zum Vorabend der Reformation, 1378–1521 (Frankfurter theologische Studien, 30; 1983). W. Brandmüller, Papst und Konzil im Grossen Schisma (1378–1431): Studien und Quellen (1990). See also works cited under writers mentioned in the article.

conclave (Lat. cum clave, 'with a key'). The closed apartment in which the college of *cardinals is shut up during the entire process of electing a new Pope. The custom of keeping the cardinals enclosed was adopted in 1271 to hasten a Papal election which was still not made after nearly three years, and this practice has been followed ever since. The word 'conclave' is also applied to the meeting itself, either on this particular occasion or, more loosely, of the cardinals for any purpose.

L. Lector [really Mgr. J. Guthlin], Le Conclave, origines, histoire, organisation, législation ancienne et moderne (1894); A. Ceccaroni, Il conclave: Storia, costituzioni, cerimonie (1901). E. Ruffini Avondo, 'Le origini del conclave papale', Atti della Reale Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, 27 (1927), pp. 409–31. The procedure for the election of a Pope is now governed by Pope *Paul VI's Apostolic Constitution 'Romano Pontifici Eligendo' (AAS 67 (1975), pp. 609–45), modified by Pope *John Paul II's Apostolic Constitution 'Universi Dominici Gregis' (ASS 88 (1966), pp. 305–43. Further bibl., with refs. to doc. sources, in F. Cerroti, Bibliografia di Roma medievale e moderna, 1 (1893), esp. pp. 544–52. A. Molien in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 1319–42, s.v.

concomitance. The doctrine that in the Eucharist the Body and Blood of Christ are present in each of the consecrated species. It implies that the fullness of communion is to be had in either element alone, and it has been held, esp. among RCs, to justify the withdrawal of the chalice from the laity. In a more extended sense, the word is also used for the doctrine that in virtue of the *hypostatic union of God and man in Christ, the Godhead and the human soul of Christ are also present in the Eucharistic elements after their consecration. See also COMMUNION IN BOTH KINDS.

J. J. Megivern, CM, Concomitance and Communion: A Study in Eucharistic Doctrine and Practice (Studia Friburgensia, NS 33; Fribourg and New York, 1963), esp. pp. 51–257. See also works cited s.v. EUCHARIST.

Concord, Formula (1577) and Book (1580) of. The 'Formula of Concord', the last of the classical *Lutheran formulae of faith, was drawn up in Mar. 1577, by a number of theologians, among them Jacob *Andreae, M. *Chemnitz, and Nikolaus Selnecker (1530–92). Internal disagreements within Lutheranism over the proper interpretation of the *Augsburg Confession (1530) followed the external peace established with the Peace of *Augsburg (1555). In 1567 Andreae was commissioned to produce a union formula. Initially unsuccessful, he later preached a series of six sermons which were summarized in 11 theses, known as the Swabian Concord of 1573 (revised by Chemnitz in the Swabian-Saxon Formula of 1575). Other Lutherans produced the Maulbronn Formula in 1576. The Elector of Saxony then assembled theologians to work on a common statement. The result was the Torgau Book, which was produced in 1576, combining the Swabian–Saxon Concord and the Maulbronn Formula. Andreae was asked to edit the results of these efforts and to provide a summary of their content. Thus the Solid Declaration (the Bergen Book of 1577) was produced along with an Epitome, which together constitute the Formula of Concord. The Formula treats various topics, such as original sin and free will, the relationship between law and gospel, the Person of Christ, adiaphora (things 'nonessential' to salvation), and eternal foreknowledge and Divine election. It denies that human merit and free will have any role in the justification of man and just as resolutely rejects *antinomianism; it upholds the bodily presence of Christ in the Lord's Supper irrespective of the faith of the recipient, affirms the Divine majesty of the man Jesus and thus also the omnipresence of the human as well as the Divine nature of Christ, stresses the necessity of resistance when a declaration of faith is demanded, and closely links Divine election to the word of the gospel. It appeals first to Scripture as the only 'rule and norm' of doctrine, followed by the early Church Fathers, the *Apostles', *Nicene, and *Athanasian Creeds, the Augsburg Confession of 1530 (to which P. *Melanchthon's 'Treatise on the Power and Primacy of the Pope' was appended in 1537) and its Apology (1531), the *Schmalkaldic Articles (1537) and M. *Luther's two catechisms (1529). These documents consequently became the basis for the Book of Concord (Konkordienbuch), published in German at Dresden in 1580 (the Latin edition appeared in 1584). Finally, an extensive 'catalogue of testimonies' (catalogus testimoniorum) from Scripture and the writings of the early church appeared in an appendix, testifying to the avowed ecumenical character of Lutheran doctrine, particularly its Christology. Thus while the Book of Concord represents a definitive collection of the principal confessional documents of Lutheranism, a certain hierarchy of authorities among the documents is recognised, the Augsburg Confession and Luther's Small Catechism assuming pride of place.

Crit. text by H. *Lietzmann and others, Die Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche, herausgegeben im Gedenkjahr der Augsburgischen Konfession 1930 (10th edn., Göttingen, 1986). Eng. tr. by T. G. Tappert and others (Philadelphia, 1959). E. Schlink, Theologie der lutherischen Bekenntnisschriften (1940; 3rd edn., 1948; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1961]). [G.] F. Bente, Historical Introductions to the Book of Concord (St Louis, 1965). L. W. Spitz and W. Lohff (eds.), Discord, Dialogue, and Concord: Studies in the Lutheran Reformation's Formula of Concord (Philadelphia [1977]); W. Lohff and L. [W.] Spitz (eds.), Widerspruch, Dialog und Einigung: Studien zur Konkordienformel der Lutherischen Reformation (Stuttgart, 1977). R. Preus and W. Rosin (eds.), A Contemporary Look at the Formula of Concord (St Louis, 1978). See also works cited s.v. LUTHERANISM.

Concord of Wittenberg. See WITTENBERG, CONCORD OF.

concordance. An alphabetical list of words in the Bible giving, for each appearance of a word, its location and a brief context. The first such list, a concordance to the *Vulgate, was the product of efforts by the *Dominican Order in the 13th cent. to provide preachers with the tools necessary for writing sermons. Compiled at St Jacques in Paris and related to the compilation of collections of biblical distinctions for use in preaching, the development of the concordance can be seen in at least three stages. The first, completed under the direction of Hugh of St Cher some time between 1230 and 1240, provided only locations without context. Before mid-century, there were various efforts to make the concordance easier to use. The multi-volume concordance associated with Richard of Stavensby and other English Dominicans working at St Jacques provided an eight- to ten-word context for each entry, which proved to be too cumbersome for efficient use. A third version, in one volume and with briefer contexts, was produced at St Jacques before 1286. This concordance, published in Strasbourg in 1474 and adapted by F. P. Dutripon (Paris, 1838), has remained in use until modern times.

Concordances to the Hebrew Old Testament and the Greek Septuagint were both products of W. Europe, made in imitation of the Latin concordance. A Hebrew concordance, compiled 1437–45 by Rabbi Isaac b. Kalonymus, was pub. at Venice in 1523 and tr. into Lat. 1556; it was revised by M. de Calasio, OFM (Rome, 1621). A Hebrew Concordance adapted to the English Bible was pub. by John *Taylor (2 vols., 1754–7). A concordance to the *Septuagint was compiled by C. Kircher (3 vols., Frankfurt, 1607); the standard modern work is that of E. *Hatch and H. A. Redpath (3 vols., Oxford, 1892–1906). The pioneer concordance to the Gk. NT was that of S. Birck, pub. at Basle, 1546; in 1638 it was followed by the Ταμεῖον of Erasmus Schmidt (pub. Wittenberg), which was ed. by C. H. Bruder (Leipzig, 1842; rev., with readings of S. P. *Tregelles, and B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort, Leipzig, 1888). This was generally replaced among English scholars by the concordance of W. F. *Moulton and A. S. Geden (Edinburgh, 1897). The standard concordance to the Gk. NT is now that of K. Aland and others (Berlin, 1978–83). A more concise concordance based on this was issued in 1987.

The first concordance in English was that to M. *Coverdale's translation of the NT by T. Gybson (1535); that to the whole Bible was made by J. *Merbecke (1550). Others followed but all were superseded by A. *Cruden's (1737), which in its later editions is extremely detailed and complete. The most significant revision of it was made by J. Eadie and others (Glasgow, 1840). The chief later concordance to the English Bible is R. Young's Analytical Concordance to the Bible (Edinburgh, 1879). A concordance incl. refs. to the RV was pub. in 1894 (ed. J. Strong, London); a concordance to the translation of J. *Moffatt appeared in London, 1950. More recently there have been published concordances to the RSV in 1957, with a concise concordance by B. M. Metzger in 1962, and a concordance to the main English versions of the NT by M. Darton in 1976. There are separate concordances to most modern translations of the Bible (often produced by computer assisted methods).

A. Kleinhans, OFM, 'De Prima Editione Catholica Concordantiarum Hebraico-Latinarum Sacrorum Bibliorum' [1621 edn.], Biblica, 5 (1924), pp. 39–48. On concordances to the Vulgate, R. H. and M. A. Rouse, 'The Verbal Concordance to the Scriptures', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 44 (1974) pp. 5–30; idd., 'Concordances et index', in H.-J. Martin and J. Vezin (eds.), Mise en page et mise en texte du livre manuscrit [1990], pp. 218–28. S. L. Greenslade (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, [3] The West from the Reformation to the Present Day (1963), pp. 526–8 ('Concordances'). E. Mangenot in Dict. Bibl. 2 (1899), cols. 892–905, s.v. 'Concordances de la Bible'. See also bibl. to CRUDEN, A.

concordat. An agreement between the civil and ecclesiastical authorities upon some matter of vital concern to both parties. See also, besides the following entry, LATERAN TREATY (1929).

Concordat of 1801. The agreement concluded, on 16 July 1801, between *Pius VII and Napoleon Bonaparte, then First Consul, which led to the formal restoration of the Catholic Church in France. By its terms the French government recognized the Catholic religion as that of the great majority of French citizens. All existing bishops were to resign their sees; fresh dioceses were mapped out; and the state was given the right of nominating new bishops. Napoleon insisted on having an amalgam of the old

*Constitutional bishops (12 of them) and the old orthodox bishops who had been dispossessed by the state in 1791 (16 of them), together with 32 priests from both parties. Alienated Church property was to remain in the hands of those who had acquired it, but the government agreed to ensure a fitting maintenance to the bishops and parish priests. The expected benefits of these terms to the Church were considerably reduced by Napoleon's subsequent publication of the *Organic Articles (q.v.).

Le Cte Boulay de La Meurthe (ed.), Documents sur la négociation du concordat et sur les autres rapports de la France avec le saint-siège (6 vols., 1891–1905), with Texte Définitif du Concordat in Lat. and Fr., no. 645, vol. 3, pp. 213–19; the Fr. version, lacking the preamble, also pr. in Mirbt, no. 558, pp. 419 f. Le Cte Boulay de La Meurthe, Histoire de la négociation du concordat de 1801 (Tours, 1920). [F. D.] Mathieu, Le Concordat de 1801: Ses origines—son histoire (1903). H. H. Walsh, The Concordat of 1801: A Study of the Problem of Nationalism in the Relations of Church and State (New York, 1933). J. Leflon, Étienne-Alexandre Bernier, évêque d'Orléans, 1762–1806 (2 vols., 1938), vol. 1, pp. 121–313, vol. 2, pp. 1–169; id., Monsieur Emery: L'Église concordataire et impériale [1946], esp. pp. 39–199. S. Delacroix, Le Réorganisation de l'Église de France après la Révolution (1801–1809), 1 (1962). See also bibl. to CONSTITUTIONAL CHURCH.

Concordia Regularis. See REGULARIS CONCORDIA.

concupiscence. In moral theology the inordinate desire for temporal ends which has its seat in the senses. The notion of concupiscence has its biblical foundations esp. in the teaching of St *Paul (Rom. 7: 7 ff., etc.) and was developed by St *Augustine in his struggle against *Pelagianism. Acc. to Augustine the cause of concupiscence is the *Fall of *Adam, who, having lost *Original Righteousness, transmitted to us a nature in which the desires of the flesh are no longer subordinated to reason. St *Thomas Aquinas, elaborating the Augustinian teaching, regards it as the material (i.e. passive, because residing in the senses) element of Original Sin, the formal (active, residing in the will) element being loss of Original Righteousness. From the moral point of view it is materia exercendae virtutis, for it provides reason and will with opportunities for resisting the disordered movements of the senses. Orthodox Protestant theology, on the other hand, both in its *Lutheran and in its *Calvinist forms, regards concupiscence itself as sin and its very existence as an offence against God; and the *Jansenists held a similar view. The Council of *Trent (sess. 5) followed St Thomas's teaching against the Reformers, and in post-Tridentine theology it is usually regarded as a consequence of Original Sin rather than as part of it.

K. *Rahner, SJ, 'Zum theologischen Begriff der Konkupiszenz', ZKT 65 (1941), pp. 61–80, repr. in his Schriften zur Theologie, 1 (1954), pp. 377–414; Eng. tr. (1961), pp. 347–82. R. Biot and C. Baumgartner in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 1334–73; L. Scheffczyk in Sacramentum Mundi, 1 (1968), pp. 403–5, both s.v.

concurrence. The falling on consecutive days of ecclesiastical feasts or other days to be observed, so that Second *Vespers or *Evensong of the first coincided with First Vespers or Evensong of the second. The complicated rules which used to govern the use of collects, etc., in such situations in the RC Church no longer apply; First Vespers of a *Solemnity cancels all other observances.

concursus divinus (Lat., 'Divine concourse'). A technical theological term for the co-operation of the *grace of God with the actions of finite creatures.

Catholic theologians are in general agreement that it is of two forms, namely (1) mediate, such as God's gift of capacities to His creatures appropriate to the performing of certain tasks, and (2) immediate, such as the direct dependence of man on God in the actual exercise of these capacities; but the exact manner in which the concursus takes place has been much disputed. *Thomists have held that immediate concursus precedes the action (praemotio physica), whereas *Molinists have maintained that the concursus and the action are simultaneous (concursus simultaneus). Among Protestant theologians, the fact of the 'Divine concourse' was allowed by *Lutherans and rejected by *Calvinists. The two facts which the several accounts of the 'Divine concourse' have been concerned to maintain are man's own responsibility for his sinful acts and the universality of God's sovereign rule.

condignity. In the Scholastic theology of *grace, those actions which fallen man performs as a Christian in conscious reliance on the Holy Spirit are held to merit the grace of God 'by condignity' (gratia de condigno), i.e. as from a debtor. NT support is found in the case of Cornelius, whose prayers and alms are said to have come up for a memorial before God. (Cf. Acts 10: 31, esp. *Vulgate text.)

conditional Baptism. See BAPTISM.

conditional immortality (also known as annihilationism). A theory acc. to which immortality is not a necessary attribute of the immaterial soul but conditional on its behaviour during its life in the body. Though this opinion had a solitary representative in the 4th-cent. African Christian author *Arnobius, it was never held in Christendom until recent times, except in isolated cases of philosophical speculation, and it was formally condemned at the Fifth *Lateran Council in 1513. In the 19th cent., however, it found favour with many thinkers as a possible way of accounting for the fate of the impenitently wicked without accepting either the orthodox doctrine of eternal punishment or the *Origenistic theory of universalism. It was elaborated by Edward White, a *Congregational minister, in his Life in Christ (1846; expanded and wholly recast, 1875), which attempted to prove from Scripture that 'Immortality is the peculiar privilege of the regenerate', and it found some acceptance among English and American as well as Continental thinkers. It was restated in a milder form by J. *Martineau, acc. to whom the wicked are not annihilated, but lose their personal being, and this belief was admitted to be tolerable by C. *Gore. The teaching of the mortality of the soul is generally considered to be opposed to the Christian doctrine of man and to the dignity and responsibility of the human soul. It has, however, been recently revived by some *Evangelical theologians, who hold that annihilation follows a period of torment in *Hell.

E. W. Fudge, The Fire that Consumes. A Biblical and Historical Study of Final Punishment (Houston [1982]; 2nd edn., revised by P. Cousins, The Fire that Consumes. The Biblical Case for Conditional Immortality, Carlisle [1994]). H. W. Fulford in HERE 3

(1901), pp. 822–5, s.v.; G. C. Joyce, ibid. 1 (1908), pp. 544–9, s.v. 'Annihilation'; both with bibl.; B. J. Warfield in the New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, 1 (1908), pp. 183–86, s.v. 'Annihilationism'.

Condren, Charles de (1588–1641), French theologian and spiritual director. Though intended by his father for a military career, an early vocation to a life of prayer led him to study theology at the *Sorbonne. He was ordained priest in 1614, entered the *Oratory in 1617, and succeeded P. de *Bérulle as Superior-General in 1629. He founded houses in Nevers, Langres, and Poitiers. His spirituality was centred on an intense devotion to the mysteries of the Incarnate Christ and on the sacrifice of the Mass, related to the eternal sacrifice of Christ. His pessimistic outlook saw in man only his sinfulness. Although he was much sought after as a spiritual director, he published nothing in his lifetime. His letters were posthumously issued in 1642 and L'Idée du sacerdoce et du sacrifice de Jésus-Christ, put together by his disciples, in 1677. He had considerable influence on J.-J. *Olier. In Britain his Eucharistic teaching came to be appreciated through the *Tractarians; an Eng. tr. of L'Idée was issued in 1906.

The best collected edn. of his Works is that of L. M. Pin (2 vols., Paris, 1857–8); crit. edn. of his Letters by P. Auvray, Cong. Orat., and A. Jouffrey, Cong. Orat. (ibid., 1943). The primary source for his life is the biog. by D. Amelote (anon, 2 pts., Paris, 1643). Study (in Eng.) by M. V. Woodgate (Dublin, 1949), with bibl. Bremond, 3, pp. 283–340; Pourrat, 3, pp. 521–5 and 551–67; L. Cognet, La Spiritualité Moderne, 1 (1966), pp. 382–90. A. Molien, Cong. Orat., in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 1373–88, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to ORATORIANS.

conduct. A name formerly in general use for any priest who was engaged to read the prayers in the chapel of a college of which he was not on the foundation. The chaplains at Eton College are still so described.

Confessing Church (Bekennende Kirche), also known as the 'Confessional Church' (Bekenntnis-Kirche). The group of German Evangelical Christians most actively opposed to the '*German Christian' Church Movement sponsored by the Nazis between 1933 and 1945. It consisted of the 'Pastors' Emergency League' founded in Nov. 1933 under the leadership of M. *Niemoller, the Lutheran Landeskirchen which had not succumbed to the German Christians, and a strong parish movement particularly in the W. provinces of Germany. In 1934 the Church opposition began to set up its own canonical authorities (esp. the Councils of the Brethren, Bruderräte) at all levels in those regions where the official administration was 'German Christian'; the Synod of Barmen in May 1934 issued the *Barmen Declaration (q.v.) which laid the foundation for subsequent resistance to all attempts to make the Evangelical Churches an instrument of Nazi policy. Persecution of clergy and laity failed to prevent the opposition of the Confessing Church until the outbreak of War in 1939 brought open resistance to an end. Many of the younger confessional pastors were conscripted and fell in battle.

At the end of the War, in 1945, leaders of the Confessing Churches met a delegation of the Provisional *World Council of Churches under G. K. A. *Bell at Stuttgart and made to them a 'Declaration of Guilt'. This action opened the way to a restoration of fellowship between the German Churches and the World Council of Churches, which gave considerable assistance to the Confessing Church. In 1948 the '*Evangelical Church in Germany' was founded from a federation of all the regional Lutheran, Reformed and United Churches in Germany. The 'Confessing Church' continued to be an active movement, though no longer claiming to be the only Church government.

In its earlier days the adherents of the movement generally called themselves the 'Confessional Church' to emphasize that their opposition was primarily religious (based on confessions of faith) and not political; later this name was felt to be no longer appropriate and they came to prefer 'Confessing Church', with the sense of being a Church of confessors for the faith rather than those who owed allegiance to a formal dogmatic Confession.

H. Hermelink (ed.), Kirche im Kampf: Dokumente des Widerstands und des Aufbaus in der Evangelischen Kirche Deutschlands von 1933 bis 1945 (Tübingen, 1950); C. Nicolaisen and G. Kretschmar (eds.), Dokumente zur Kirchenpolitik des dritten Reiches (vols. 1–2, Munich, 1971–5; vol. 3, Gütersloh, 1994). K. D. Schmidt (ed.), Die Bekenntnisse und grundsätzlichen Äusserungen zur Kirchenfrage (3 vols., Göttingen, 1934–6). W. Niemöller, Kampf und Zeugnis der Bekennenden Kirche (Bielefeld, 1948); id., Die Evangelische Kirche im Dritten Reich: Handbuch des Kirchenkampfes (ibid., 1956). J. S. Conway, The Nazi Persecution of the Churches, 1933–45 [1968]. K. Meier, Die evangelische Kirchenkampf (3 vols., Göttingen, 1976–84). K. Scholder, Die Kirchen und das Dritte Reich (2 vols. [1977–85], incomplete; Eng. tr., 1987–8). A. Boyens, Kirchenkampf und Ökumene 1933–1939: Darstellung und Dokumentation (Munich [1969]; id., Kirchenkampf und Ökumene 1939–45 (ibid. [1973]). V. Conzemius, 'Églises chrétiennes et totalitarisme national-socialiste', RHE 63 (1968), pp. 437–503 and 868–948, esp. pp. 437–58, repr. as Bibliothèque de la RHE, 48 (1969), esp. pp. 5–26. O. Diehn, Bibliographie zur Geschichte des Kirchenkampfes 1933/1945 (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Kirchenkampfes, 1; Göttingen, 1958), and other specialized studies in the same series (Registerband, ed. G. Grünzinger-Siebert and others, the final vol. 30; 1984).

Confessio Augustana. See AUGSBURG CONFESSION.

Confessio Helvetica. See HELVETIC CONFESSION.

Confessio Scotica. See SCOTTISH CONFESSION.

confession. (1) A tomb of a *martyr ('*confessor'). The term is used also of the structure built over such a tomb, and of a crypt or shrine under the *High Altar of a church in which relics are placed. In the Middle Ages the word was further applied to the entire church in which a martyr was buried. The confessio of St Peter in the *Vatican is perhaps the most celebrated of all such tombs.

(2) The profession of faith made by a martyr or confessor (e.g. 1 Tim. 6: 13, 2 Cor. 9: 13), and so in general a declaration of religious belief. In this sense the word has been occasionally applied to the ancient ecumenical *creeds, but it is more generally used of the Protestant professions of faith in the 16th and 17th cents., of which the Confession of *Augsburg (1530) was the earliest. From this sense derives its use for a communion, or religious body.

(3) An acknowledgment of sin, made either in general terms by a congregation in the course of liturgical worship, or specifically by an individual penitent in public confession, or more usually in private or *auricular confession. See also ABSOLUTION and PENANCE.

confession rooms. In some RC churches small rooms have been set aside for the administration of *Penance because of the emphasis laid on the importance of the dialogue between penitent and confessor in the 1973 Ordo Poenitentiae. Such rooms, usually furnished with two chairs, a table, and a kneeler, make it possible for difficulties to be discussed face to face in a way precluded by the use of the confessional 'box' which became common in the 16th cent.

Confessions of St Augustine, The. A prose-poem ostensibly addressed to God, written *c.*398–400, soon after the author had become Bp. of Hippo and when some critics were anxious about his *Manichaean past. The title means both 'confessing' in the biblical sense of praising God, and also avowal of faults; there is an undercurrent of self-vindication and pervasive anti-Manichaean polemic. The main theme is announced in the opening paragraph: 'You have made us for yourself, and our heart is restless until it rests in you'. Books 1–9 are autobiographical, describing his loss of faith, his decade of adherence to Mani, succeeded by deep scepticism, and a conversion to *Neoplatonism which led to the recovery of his childhood faith and to baptism. The climaxes are the description of his decision in a Milan garden in July 386 (how far this is factual is controversial), the vision shared with St *Monica at Ostia, and the account of her death. The last four books deal with memory (10), time (11), creation (12), and an allegory of the Church in Gen. 1 (13); they portray on a cosmic scale the theme of return to and rest in the ultimate ground of being in God.

Modern edns. by E. B. *Pusey (Oxford, 1838; inaugurating the *Tractarian Bibliotheca Patrum), P. Knöll (CSEL 33; 1896), J. Gibb and W. Montgomery (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1908), P. de Labriolle (2 vols., Paris, 1925–7), A. C. Vega, OSA (Escurial, 1930), F. Skutella (Teub., Leipzig, 1934; rev. H. Juergens and W. Schaub, ibid., Stuttgart, 1969, with further corrections, 1981; rev. L. Verheijen, CCSL 27; 1981) and, with comm., by J. J. O'Donnell (3 vols., Oxford, 1992). Eng. trs. by Sir Tobie Matthew (St-Omer, 1620; mod. edn. by R. Huddleston, OSB, London, 1923), W. Watts (ibid., 1631; repr. in Loeb, 2 vols., 1912), E. B. Pusey (LF 1, 1838; rev. of tr. of W. Watts), F. J. Sheed (London, 1943), J. K. Ryan (Garden City, NY, 1960), R. S. Pine-Coffin (Harmondsworth, 1961), R. Warner (New York, 1963), and H. Chadwick (Oxford, 1991).

The more important works on the Confessions include P. Alfaric, L'Évolution intellectuelle de saint Augustin (thesis, Paris, 1918); R. L. Ottley, Studies in the Confessions of St Augustine (1919); C. Boyer, SJ, Christianisme et néoplatonisme dans la formation de saint Augustin (thesis, Paris, 1920); K. *Holl, Augustins innere Entwicklung (Abh. (Berl.), Jg. 1922, Heft 4; 1923), repr. in Holl's Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte, 3 (1928), pp. 54–116; K. Nörregaard, Augustins Bekehrung (1923); M. Zepf, Augustins Confessiones (Heidelberger Abhandlungen zur Philosophie und ihrer Geschichte; 9; 1926); W. J. Sparrow Simpson, St Augustine's Conversion (1930); K. *Adam, Die geistige Entwicklung des heiligen Augustinus (1931; Eng. tr., Saint Augustine: The Odyssey of his Soul, 1932); P. Henry, SJ, La Vision d'Ostie: Sa place dans la vie et l'œuvre de saint Augustin (1938; Eng. tr., The Path to Transcendence, Pittsburgh Theological Monograph Series, 37; 1981); M. Verheijen, OESA, Eloquentia Pedisequa: Observations sur le style des Confessions de saint Augustin (Latinitas Christianorum Primaeva, 10; Nijmegen, 1949); P. Courcelle, Recherches sur les Confessions de saint Augustin (1950; 2nd edn., 1968); J. M. Le Blond, Les Conversions de saint Augustin (1950); J. O'Meara, The Young Augustine (1954); G. N. Knauer, Die Psalmenzitate in Augustins Konfessionen (1955); M. Pellegrino, Le 'Confessioni' di Sant'Agostino: Studio introduttivo (1956; Fr. tr., 1961); F. Bolgiani, La conversione di S. Agostino e l'VIII° Libro delle 'Confessioni' (Università di Torino. Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, 8, fasc. 4; 1956); P. Courcelle, Les Confessions de Saint Augustin dans la tradition littéraire: antécédents et postérité (1963); R. J. O'Connell, St Augustine's Confessions (Cambridge, Mass., 1969); C. [J.] Starnes, Augustine's Conversion: A Guide to the Argument of Confessions I–IX (Waterloo, Ont. [1990]). See also works cited under AUGUSTINE.

confessor. (1) In the early Church one who suffered for confessing his or her faith, but only to an extent which did not involve martyrdom. Later the term was applied loosely to markedly holy men, and ultimately to those pronounced to be such by the Pope. King *Edward (d. 1066) was declared a Confessor by *Alexander III in 1161.

(2) A priest who hears (esp. private) confessions.

Confirmation. In Sacramental theology, the rite whereby the grace of the Holy Spirit is conveyed in a new or fuller way to those who have already received it in some degree or fashion at *Baptism. Though the rite goes back to very early times, there have been wide differences as to its method of administration, as well as to the theological interpretation put upon it. It has been held, at least among Catholic theologians, to imprint a *character on the recipient, so that the same person cannot be confirmed more than once.

Many theologians have found early instances of Confirmation in the imposition of hands by the Apostles, e.g. by St *Peter and St *John on the converts of Samaria (Acts 8: 14–17) and by St *Paul on the disciples at *Ephesus (19: 1–7). Other NT passages which may refer to it are the 'laying on of hands', as distinct from the 'teaching of baptisms', in Heb. 6: 2, or again the frequent mention in the NT of the 'sealing with the Spirit' (e.g. 2 Cor. 1: 20 f., Eph. 1: 13, 4: 30), though perhaps these belong with more probability to Baptism. The difficulty of fitting the NT references into a wholly unified pattern becomes clear when we observe that, whereas in many places the full imparting of the Holy Spirit is closely linked with the actual Baptism, e.g. in the Baptism of the Lord Himself (Mk. 1: 10) and of the first converts on the Day of *Pentecost (Acts 2: 38), in others the Spirit is given prior to, and seemingly independently of, Baptism (Acts 9: 17 f.).

In the sub-Apostolic age, a similar variety of practice is met with. Washing with water, anointing with oil, and the laying on of hands all come to be associated with initiation into the fullness of Christian life, and the aggregate spiritual effect which flowed from these outward observances was held to include the removal of sin, admission to the Church of the Redeemed, 'sealing' to eternal life, and the imparting of the Spirit. There was, however, very considerable variety alike of practice and interpretation.

The laying on of hands appears as an integral part of the Baptismal liturgy in *Tertullian (De Baptismo 8, and De Res. Carnis 8) and, together with anointing, in the Apostolic Tradition*. It is distinguished from the actual Baptism by St *Cyprian (Epp. 70, 74) and by Pope *Cornelius (ap. *Eusebius, HE 6. 43). By the 4th cent. 'Confirmation', whether conferred by anointing or laying on of hands, was in the W. frequently a distinct rite separated from Baptism. In the course of time the number of candidates seeking admission to the Church meant that the bishop could no longer baptize them all in person; the parish clergy came regularly to administer Baptism and the part of the bishop in the initiation ceremonies was deferred until the next episcopal visitation. What had once been scarcely distinguishable elements in the Baptismal complex were performed at different times by different ministers.

The practice, however, became stereotyped in different ways in the E. and W. In the E. the primitive custom of conferring 'Confirmation' in immediate relation to Baptism was retained. This was achieved by confining the bishop's part to the consecration of the oil used for the anointing. This was then conveyed to the parish priest, who performed the actual rite of Confirmation as occasion required. After anointing, it was the regular custom in the E. to dispense Holy Communion at once, so that the infant received all three Sacraments in a single service. Such has remained the practice in the E. down to the present day.

In the W., on the other hand, the bishop retained his function as the regular minister of the rite (as he had been originally also of Baptism). Confirmation was therefore deferred until an opportunity arose of presenting the candidate to the bishop in person. One result was that, owing to difficulties of communication and the manifold duties apt to claim the attention of the bishop, Confirmation became very irregular in the Middle Ages and later. But, at least until the 16th cent., the separation was accidental and the ideal of the two rites being conferred together never lost. *Elizabeth I was brought by *Henry VIII to Baptism and Confirmation when but three days old.

The precise theological significance of the rite has been, and still is, disputed. Some regard it as an integral part of, and in its effects indistinguishable from, Baptism. Others regard it as conveying a new gift of the Spirit, esp. the grace necessary to strengthen the candidate in his conflict with evil. The latter view, elaborated in a homily by *Faustus of Riez (formerly attributed to *Eusebius of Emesa), gained wide currency through its incorporation in the *Forged Decretals and it is still widely held in the W. In the Middle Ages Confirmation came to be accounted one of the *Seven Sacraments. St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol. 3, q. 72) and other *Dominican theologians held that it was immediately instituted by Christ; St *Bonaventure (for whom it was 'the sacrament of warriors') believed that it was instituted by the Holy Spirit under the 'successors of the Apostles' (In Sent. 4, dist. 7, art. 1); while the Summa (4, q. 9) of *Alexander of Hales expressed the curious view that it was constituted a Sacrament by the Council of Meaux of 845. The *Tridentine theologians were remarkably reticent on the subject. In the RC Church there have been wide differences as to wherein the 'matter' of the Sacrament consists. Acc. to some (J. *Sirmond, D. *Petavius), it was the laying on of hands; acc. to others (St Thomas Aquinas, Card. *Bellarmine), anointing with chrism; acc. to still others (J. Morinus), the two together, a view reflected in the Catechism of the Catholic Church (1992).

Since the later Middle Ages the usual practice in the RC Church has been to confer Confirmation as soon as convenient after the seventh birthday, but since 1971 it has been open to national Conferences of bishops to decide on a later age. According to the 1971 rite, Confirmation is normally administered during Mass. After the homily the candidates renew their Baptismal promises. The bishop then extends his hands over them and prays that they may receive the Holy Spirit; he then traces the sign of the Cross with *chrism (oil blessed on *Maundy Thursday) on the forehead of each candidate. The Mass continues, ending with the special blessing provided. Priests may also confirm with the bishop, provided that the chrism is given to them by the bishop. Faculties for priests to confirm on their own with chrism blessed by the bishop have long been given in exceptional cases; in cases of candidates in articulo mortis they were given to all parish priests in 1947 and later to other priests; and in 1971 they were widely extended, so that a priest can confirm adults whom he baptizes or receives into the RC Church from another communion.

At the Reformation, the C of E continued the medieval practice; but the use of oil ceased in 1549 and the sign of the Cross in 1552. The 1552 BCP introduced the formula of administration, recited by the bishop while laying his hand on the head of each candidate: 'Defend, O Lord, this [Thy] child with Thy heavenly grace, that he may continue Thine for ever; and daily increase in Thy Holy Spirit more and more, until he come unto Thy everlasting kingdom. Amen.' In 1662 a solemn ratification of the Baptismal vows was introduced, serving to emphasize the primitive link between the two rites, giving expression to the truth that we have not experienced all that the NT means by Baptism until we have publicly made a personal confession of our faith, and thereby going some way to meeting *Baptist objections to Infant Baptism. The *Alternative Service Book provides a much shorter formula for the Bishop including the name of each candidate, while the 1552 prayer is recited for all the candidates by the bishop and people. Acc. to a rubric in the BCP (taken over from the *Sarum rite) no one is to be admitted to Communion until he is confirmed or 'ready and desirous to be confirmed'. The usual practice is for a course of instruction in Christian faith and practice to precede Confirmation, which is administered at various ages; the title of the *Catechism states that it shall be learnt of every child before he be brought to Confirmation. Hence in the C of E Confirmation provides a regular opportunity for giving young people systematic instruction in the Christian faith. The rite is also in general use, and with similar pastoral purposes, among *Lutherans and some other Protestant bodies.

In modern times there has been much discussion among Anglican theologians about the nature of the gift conveyed by Confirmation. Acc. to one group (D. *Stone, G. W. H. Lampe, and E. C. Whitaker) the fullness of the Holy Spirit is imparted to the Christian in Baptism, and to ascribe to Confirmation a special objective giving of the Spirit is to detract from the grace offered in Baptism. Another school (F. W. Puller, SSJE, A. J. Mason, and L. S. Thornton, CR) regards the gift of the Holy Spirit in Confirmation to be of such fundamental importance that without it Baptism is virtually incomplete. This view seems to many to detract from the grace conferred in Baptism. The form of words used by the bishop in the ASB Confirmation ('Let your Holy Spirit rest upon them') is acceptable both to those who emphasise the action of God (in bestowing the Holy Spirit) and those who stress the part of the candidate in making a personal commitment. The latter group tend to favour a later age for Confirmation and are often not averse to giving Communion to the young before they are confirmed; the former, seeking to preserve the traditional sequence of Baptism, Confirmation, Communion, often wish to allow children to be confirmed at an earlier age.

The main RC legislation is contained in CIC (1983), cans. 879–96. Among the classical RC works are J. Morin, Cong. Orat., De Sacramento Confirmationis (part of his Opera Posthuma; Paris, 1703); cf. also L. *Holste, De forma Sacramenti Confirmationis apud Graecos (orig. ed. in Holste's Annotationes, Rome, 1666). Anglican works incl. J. *Hall, Χειροθεσία, or the Apostolic Institution of Imposition of Hands (1649); H. *Hammond, De Confirmatione (1661); J. *Taylor, Χρῖσις Τελειωτική. A Discourse of Confirmation (1663); cf. also R. *Baxter, Confirmation and Restauration (1658).

Among modern treatises should be mentioned F. W. Puller, SSJE, What is the Distinctive Grace of Confirmation? (1880); M. Heimbucher, Die heilige Firmung (Augsburg, 1889); A. J. Mason, The Relation of Confirmation to Baptism (1891; 2nd edn., 1893); A. T. Wirgman, The Doctrine of Confirmation considered in Relation to Holy Baptism as a Sacramental Ordinance of the Catholic Church (1897); A. C. A. Hall, Confirmation (Oxford Library of Practical Theology, 1900); F. Dölger, Das Sakrament der Firmung (Theologische Studien der Leo-Gesellschaft, 15; 1906); F. H. Chase, Confirmation in the Apostolic Age (1909); J. B. Umberg, SJ, Die Schriftlehre vom Sakrament der Firmung (1920); J. Coppens, L'Imposition des mains et les rites connexes dans le Nouveau Testament et l'Église ancienne (Louvain diss., Wetteren and Paris, 1925); G. *Dix, OSB, Confirmation or the Laying on of Hands? (Theology Occasional Papers no. 5; 1936); id., The Theology of Confirmation in Relation to Baptism (lecture; 1946); G. W. H. Lampe, The Seal of the Spirit: A Study of the Doctrine of Baptism and Confirmation in the New Testament and the Fathers (1951; 2nd edn., 1967), with bibl.; L. S. Thornton, CR, Confirmation: Its Place in the Baptismal Mystery (1954); B. Neunheuser, OSB, Taufe und Firmung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, 4, Heft 2; 1956; 2nd edn., 1983; Eng. tr., 1964); M. Thurian, La Confirmation: Consécration des laïcs (Collection Communauté de Taizé, 1957); K. B. Cully (ed.), Confirmation: History, Doctrine and Practice (Greenwich, Conn., 1962); J. D. C. Fisher, Christian Initiation: Baptism in the Medieval West. A Study in the Disintegration of the Primitive Rite of Initiation (*Alcuin Club Collections, 47; 1965); L. A. van Buchem, OP, L'Homélie pseudo-Eusebienne de Pentecôte: L'Origine de la confirmatio en Gaule Méridionale et l'interprétation de ce rite par Fauste de Riez (Nijmegen, 1967), esp. pp. 87–205; J. P. Bouhot, La Confirmation: Sacrement de la communion ecclésiale (Lyons, 1968); A. Hamman, OFM, Le Baptême et la Confirmation (1969); E. C. Whitaker, Sacramental Initiation Complete in Baptism (Grove Liturgical Study, 1; Bramcote, 1975). There was also a special issue of La Maison-Dieu, no. 54 (1954), with arts. by B. Botte, OSB, T. Camelot, OP, and others.

Comprehensive discussions in A. *Tanquerey, Synopsis Theologiae Dogmaticae, 3 (25th edn., 1947), pp. 383–412; Confirmation, or the Laying on of Hands, vol. 1; Historical and Doctrinal; vol. 2: Practical (1926–7). P. Fransen in Sacramentum Mundi, 1 (1968), pp. 405–10. On its liturgical aspects see E. *Martène, OSB, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus (1699), 1. 1. 2; F. Procter and W. H. *Frere, A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (1901), esp. pp. 602–7. J. D. C. Fisher, Christian Initiation: The Reformation Period. Some Early Reformed Rites of Baptism and Confirmation and other Contemporary Documents (Alcuin Club Collections, 51; 1970), pp. 159–260; id., Confirmation, Then and Now (ibid. 60; 1978); P. J. Jagger, Christian Initiation 1552–1969: Rites of Baptism and Confirmation since the Reformation Period (ibid. 52; 1970). J. Behrens, Confirmation, Sacrament of Grace: The theology, practice and law of the Roman Catholic Church and the Church of England (Leominster, 1995). On the current RC rite, see J. D. Crichton, Christian Celebration: The Sacraments (1973), esp. pp. 88–113. J. Ysebaert, Greek Baptismal Terminology (Graecitas Christianorum Primaeva, 1; Nijmegen, 1962). Various writers in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 975–1103; H. J. Lawlor and H. Thurston, SJ, in HERE 4 (1911), pp. 1–10; P. de Puniet, OSB, and H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2515–51; T. Camelot, OP, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 145–50, s.v. See also bibl. to BAPTISM.

Confiteor (Lat., 'I confess'). One of the forms of confession of sins (so named from its first word) used in the RC Church, e.g. at *Mass and *Compline. In its usual form confession used to be made to God, to the BVM, to St *Michael, St *John the Baptist, St *Peter, St *Paul, and 'all the saints'; from 1969 confession has been addressed to God and those present, and prayers asked of the BVM, angels and saints. The RC forms have been widely adopted in the C of E, though not contained in the BCP, where there are several other forms provided for liturgical use.

confraternity. See FRATERNITIES.

Congar, Georges-Yves (1904–95), theologian. Born at Sedan in the French Ardennes, he trained for the priesthood in Paris and in 1925 entered the *Dominican Order, taking the names Marie-Joseph, which he added to Yves in many of his works. At Le Saulchoir (in Belgium) he developed his passionate interests in ecclesiology and *ecumenism, making contact with L. *Beauduin, P. I. *Couturier, and various Protestant and *Orthodox theologians. After publishing a controversial article in which he ascribed the alienation of French culture from the Church to the latter's 'disfigured visage', in 1936 he announced a series of ecclesiological studies under the title 'Unam Sanctam'. The first of these was his own Chrétiens désunis (1937; Eng. tr., Divided Christendom, 1939), in which he sought to work out 'principles for Catholic ecumenism' in the light of the different conceptions of unity, and so of ecumenism, among liberal Protestants, Anglicans, and the Orthodox. As a prisoner-of-war at Colditz (1940–45), he came into contact with typical members of other Churches and became aware of their hostility to RCism, and shortly after the end of the war in Vraie et fausse réforme dans l'Église (1950) he made a courageous appeal for a reform of the Church's structures by a 'return to the sources', a reform which would neither disrupt the continuity of the Church's history nor disturb the peace and charity of her members. Following earlier warnings about 'false eirenicism', the publication of an article in support of the 'worker-priest' movement in France led to Congar's being forbidden to teach in 1954. He was sent first to the École Biblique at Jerusalem and then to Cambridge, where he found the restrictions on his contacts with Anglicans burdensome. In Dec. 1955 he was able to move to Strasbourg. With the election of Pope *John XXIII in 1958, the situation changed radically. Congar was appointed theological consultor to the preparatory commission of the Second *Vatican Council, he helped to write the 'Message to the World' given at its opening, and he influenced a number of its most important documents.

In 1965 he became a member of the Catholic–Lutheran commission of dialogue, in 1969 *Paul VI added his name to the newly founded Pontifical International Theological Commission, and in 1985 *John Paul II invited him to attend the Extraordinary Synod convoked to consider the fruits of the Council; infirmity prevented his acceptance. He was created a *cardinal in 1994. His other works include Esquisse du mystère de l'Église (1941; Eng. tr., 1960); L'Ecclésiologie du haut moyen âge (1968); L'Église: De saint Augustin à l'époque moderne (1970); and Je crois en l'Esprit Saint (3 vols., 1979–80; Eng. tr., 1983), a full-scale treatment of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, to which his attention turned in his later years.

There is a list of Congar's many works by P. Quattrocchi in J.-P. Jossua, OP, Le Père Congar: La Théologie au service du peuple de Dieu [1967], pp. 213–72 (Eng. tr., Chicago, 1968, pp. 185–241); A. Nichols, OP, 'An Yves Congar Bibliography 1967–1987', Angelicum, 66 (1989), pp. 422–66. Id., Yves Congar (London, 1989); M.-M. Wolff, Gott und Mensch: Ein Beitrag Yves Congars zum ökumenischen Dialog (Frankfurter Theologischer Studien, 38; 1990). A. Nichols, OP, in D. F. Ford (ed.), The Modern Theologians, 1 (Oxford, 1989), pp. 219–36.

congé d'élire (Fr. 'permission to elect', sc. a bishop). Royal nomination of bishops was an ancient practice in England. Henry II felt it necessary to define the procedure in the Constitutions of *Clarendon. In 1214 King *John agreed that bishops should be elected by the Dean and Chapter of the cathedral, but that royal permission to proceed to the election, the congé d'élire, was to be first secured, and the election to be confirmed by Royal Assent afterwards. This settlement, later confirmed by Edward I and again by Edward III, remained in force until the Reformation. Under *Henry VIII, by the Appointment of Bishops Act 1533, the appointment of bishops was from 1534 vested in the Crown. When a bishopric fell vacant a congé d'élire, that is, a licence under the Great Seal, was granted to the Dean and Chapter, who were required to elect the person named by the King in the accompanying 'letter missive'. Failure to elect the royal nominee rendered the Dean and Chapter subject to the penalties of *Praemunire, and the King was then empowered to appoint to the see by letters patent. Under *Edward VI a fresh Act (1547) substituted for the congé d'élire nomination by letters patent in all cases, but this Act was repealed under *Mary. The Act of 1533 was revived in 1559 by the Act of *Supremacy 1558; it remains substantially in force, though the penalties of Praemunire have been abolished by the Criminal Law Act 1967.

The Appointment of Bishops Act 1533 is pr. in Halsbury's Statutes of England and Wales (4th edn., 1986) 14, pp. 138–42; see also E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law (3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, 1992), pp. 18 and 26, and bibl. s.v. BISHOP.

Congo, Kingdom of, Christianity in. A *Portuguese expedition reached the ancient Congo kingdom in 1483. In 1491 the king, Nzinga Nkuvu, was baptized, receiving the name of João, that of the reigning king of Portugal. One of his sons, Mvemba Nzinga, governor of the province of Nsundi, was baptized as Afonso. King João soon reverted to paganism, but Afonso did not, and in 1506, on the death of his father, he defeated a pagan brother, with some Portuguese assistance, and became king. Afonso I (1506–43) remains an extraordinary figure: as seen through his surviving letters he was consistent in a policy of Christianization, and his capital, San Salvador, was endowed with a number of churches. His son Henry, sent to Lisbon for education, was there made a bishop in 1521 and returned to Africa, but died a few years later. Afonso continued to appeal for more priests and to complain of the effect of the slave trading of the Portuguese.

No subsequent king had the moral qualities of Afonso, but for centuries all of them regarded themselves as Christian and regularly appealed both to Portugal and Rome for assistance. In 1596 Pope *Clement VIII made San Salvador into a diocese but effectively the diocesan centre soon moved to the Portuguese colonial town of Luanda. A *Jesuit college was opened in San Salvador in 1625 and a catechism in Kikongo was printed at the same time (by far the earliest literary work in any Bantu language). A number of local priests (mostly mesticos) were ordained in this period. In 1645 a *Capuchin mission, mostly Italian, arrived in the Congo and over the next 150 years hundreds of Capuchins worked in the country.

In 1665 Antonio I and most of his nobility were killed in a crushing defeat by a Portuguese army at the Battle of Ambuila. The kingdom largely disintegrated and San Salvador was abandoned for some decades. In 1704 a young woman named Kimpa Vita (or Beatrice) claimed to be possessed by St *Antony [of Padua] and begged the king, Pedro IV, to return to San Salvador. When he failed to do so, she led the return herself, taking up residence by the ruined cathedral where the bishop formerly lived. Under Capuchin influence, she was tried for heresy and burnt at the stake in 1706. In this period Church life continued to flourish in the almost independent western coastal province of Soyo, but in the course of the 18th cent. the supply of missionaries faded away and without a local priesthood Christian life slowly disappeared almost everywhere, though it was sustained to some extent by the maestri, trained catechist interpreters, who led the Church in the absence of a priest. Fra Cherubino da Savona in the 1770s was the last priest to reside in the country for any length of time, but when the British *Baptist missionaries arrived at San Salvador in the 1870s, Pedro V, who welcomed them, still thought of himself as a Christian king. For later history see ANGOLA and ZAIRE.

The largest collection of material is A. Brásio, C.S.Sp. (ed.), Monumenta Missionaria Africana (20 vols., Lisbon, 1952–88). More convenient collections of docs. in Fr. tr.: L. Jadin and M. Dicorato (eds.), Correspondance de Dom Afonso, roi du Congo 1506–1543 (Académie royale des Sciences d'Outre-Mer, Classe des Sciences morales et politiques, NS 41, no. 3; Brussels, 1974); J. Cuvelier and L. Jadin (eds.), L'ancien Congo d'après les archives romaines (1518–1640) (Académie royale des Sciences coloniales, section des Sciences morales et politiques, Mémoires, Collection in-8°, 36, fasc. 2; ibid., 1954); and L. Jadin (ed.), L'ancien Congo et l'Angola 1639–1655 d'après les archives Romaines, Portugaises, Néerlandaises et Espagnoles (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 20–22; 1975). The earliest account by a Capuchin, Giovanni Francesco da Roma, Breve Relatione (Rome, 1648), was tr. into Fr. by F. Bontinck, CICM, Brève Relation de la Fondation de la mission des Frères Mineurs Capucins . . . au Royaume de Congo (Publications de l'Université Lovanianum de Leopoldville, 13; 1964). Later accounts incl. G. A. Cavazzi, Capuchin, Istorica Descrizione de' tre' Regni Congo, Matamba, et Angola, ed. F. Alamandini, Cap. (Bologna, 1687); R. Rainero, Il Congo agli Inizi del Settecento nella Relazione di P. Luca da Caltanissetta (Florence [1974]); and C.

Piazza, La Missione del Soya (1713–1716) nella relazione inedita di Giuesppe da Modena, OFM Cap. (Rome, 1973).

Good general account by A. Hilton, The Kingdom of Kongo (Oxford, 1985). A. Hastings, The Church in Africa 1450–1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994), pp. 71–129. T. Filesi, Le Relazioni tra il Regno del Congo e la Sede Apostolica nel XVI Secolo (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto Italiano per l'Africa, 1st ser., no. 10; Como [1968]). Id., 'Nazionalismo e Religione nel Congo all'Inizio del 1700: la Setta degli Antoniani', Africa: Rivista trimestrale di studi e documentazione dell'Istituto Italiano per l'Africa, 26 (1971), pp. 267–303, 463–508; 27 (1972), pp. 645–68, incl. Eng. summary. R. Gray, 'Come Vero Prencipe Catolico: the Capuchins and the Rulers of Soyo in the late seventeenth century', Africa. Journal of the International African Institute, 53, no. 3 (1983), pp. 39–54. Comprehensive survey of lit. by T. Filesi and I. de Villapadierna, La 'Missio Antiqua' dei Cappuccini nel Congo (1645–1835): Studio Preliminare e Guida delle Fonti (Subsidia Scientifica Franciscalia, 6; 1978).

Congregation of the Lord (also Congregation of Christ or simply the Congregation). The title was assumed in *Mary's reign by the Scottish Reformers who supported J. *Knox. It appears to derive from the language of the *National Covenant (1557), where the word 'congregation', in the sense of a religious community, occurs eight times.

Congregational Council for World Mission. See COUNCIL FOR WORLD MISSION.

Congregationalism. Congregationalism is that form of Church polity which rests on the independence and autonomy of each local church. It professes to represent the principle of democracy in Church government, a polity which is held to follow from its fundamental belief in Christ as the sole head of His Church. All the members of the Church, being Christians, are 'priests unto God'. Where two or three such meet in Christ's name He is in their midst guiding their thoughts and inspiring their actions, and each such community, duly constituted with its officers, is regarded as an outcrop and representative of the Church Universal. It has been held that the system is primitive in that it represents the earliest form of Church order. It requires a very high standard of Christian devotion to maintain it, though it is admitted that in practice it has fallen sometimes sadly below that ideal.

Modern Congregationalism begins with the Reformation. M. *Luther himself taught the priesthood of all believers, though he never carried the doctrine to what Congregationalists consider to be its logical conclusion. As early as 1550 there is evidence of bodies of men and women meeting together to preach the pure Word of God and administer the Sacraments as *Separatists from the national Church. When it became apparent that *Elizabeth I did not intend any drastic reformation of the Church, the number of these companies increased. When, therefore, R. *Browne, in 1582, wrote A Book which sheweth the Life and Manners of all true Christians and A Treatise of Reformation without tarrying for any and of the Wickedness of those Preachers which will not reform till the Magistrate command or compel them, the little books found a public prepared to receive them. Browne maintained that 'the Kingdom of God was not to be begun by whole parishes, but rather of the worthiest, were they never so few', and, in insisting that these 'gathered Churches', bound under God by covenant, should be independent of the state and have the right to govern themselves, he laid down the lines of essential Congregationalism. He was followed by H. *Barrow, J. *Greenwood, and J. *Penry. In 1589 Barrow wrote A true Description out of the Word of God of the visible Church which set forth a doctrine of the Church practically identical with that of Browne.

From the 1580s there is evidence that Brownists (as outsiders generally called them) increased in numbers, particularly in southern England. Somewhat amorphous Separatism gradually became more clearly defined Congregationalism, and Churches were formed in *Norwich, London, and elsewhere. Under persecution, the movement was driven underground, with some Separatists emigrating to regroup in Amsterdam, *Leiden, and ultimately in the *United States of America, esp. in New England. There Congregationalism played a great part in shaping both the religion and the politics of the new country. But in England also the leaven continued to work and the Independents, as they were then called, became leaders in the struggle against *Charles I and W. *Laud, and ultimately formed the backbone of O. *Cromwell's army. At the *Westminster Assembly in 1643, the Five Dissenting Brethren stoutly defended the Congregationalist cause and the *Savoy Declaration (q.v.) of 1658 laid down their polity afresh in the light of experience gained in the Netherlands and America.

The Act of *Uniformity 1662 made Nonconformists of Independents and Presbyterians alike, but the *Toleration Act 1688 restored to them at least the right to exist. Attempts at fusion between these two types of Church were not successful mainly because of theological differences. Independents, in spite of their *Calvinism, were the broader in outlook and the more evangelical in tone. They grew in numbers and influence, and being excluded from the ancient universities, set up Dissenting Academies of their own which did fine educational work, and they played a leading role in the foundation of London University. As R. W. *Dale pointed out in 1891, 'Congregationalists for many generations were accustomed to assert the claims of the intellect in religion far more earnestly than other evangelical Churches'. At the same time they were evangelistic in practice, as is witnessed by their founding of the London Missionary Society (*LMS). An independent product of the 18th cent. evangelical revival was the indigenous growth of Congregationalism in Scotland, largely due to the activities of two brothers, Robert (1764–1842) and Alexander (1768–1851) Haldane.

The independency of Congregational Churches did not involve them in complete isolation. From the first they recognized the bond of a common faith and order, and the stronger among them used to help the weaker. In time they came to form County Associations of Churches for mutual intercourse and support. The Congregational Union of Scotland was formed in 1812 and that of England and Wales in 1832. The basis of such Unions was a full recognition of the distinctive principle of Congregationalism, characteristically expressed by the 1832 Union of England and Wales, namely, 'the scriptural right of every separate church to maintain perfect independence in the government and administration of its own particular affairs'. They had therefore no legislative authority, but served to advise, encourage, and help the Churches and to express their common mind. In 1966 the Assembly of the Union of England and Wales agreed that the Churches of the Union should covenant together in the Congregational Church in England and Wales, in which the local autonomy of the Church is practised alongside a mutual concern and care. In 1972 the greater part of the Congregational Church in England and Wales united with the *Presbyterian Church of England to form the *United Reformed Church. Continuing Congregational Churches outside the union include the Fellowship of Evangelical Congregational Churches (founded in 1966) and the Congregational Federation (founded in 1972). In the USA most of the Congregational Christian Churches in 1957 joined with the Evangelical and Reformed Churches to form the *United Church of Christ (q.v.), and Congregationalists have been involved in modern unions in many other parts of the world (see REUNION).

R. W. Dale, A Manual of Congregational Principles (1884). J. Waddington, Congregational History (5 vols., 1869–80). R. W. Dale (ed. A. W. Dale), History of English Congregationalism (1907). D. [T.] Jenkins, Congregationalism: A Restatement (1954). E. [R.] Routley, The Story of Congregationalism (1961). G. F. Nuttall, Visible Saints: The Congregational Way 1640–1660 (Oxford, 1957). R. Tudur Jones, Congregationalism in England 1662–1962 (1962). A. Peel, These Hundred Years: A History of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, 1831–1931 (1931); id. (ed.), Essays Congregational and Catholic issued in commemoration of the Centenary of the Congregational Union of England and Wales [1931]. R. W. Cleaves, Congregationalism 1960–1976: The Story of the Federation (Swansea, 1977). B. D. Spinks, Freedom or Order? The Eucharistic Liturgy in English Congregationalism, 1645–1980 (Pittsburgh Theological Monographs, NS 8; Allison Park, Pa., 1984). A. P. F. Sell, Saints: Visible, Orderly and Catholic: The Congregational Idea of the Church (Princeton Theological Monograph Series, 7; Allison Park, Pa., 1986). H. Escott, A History of Scottish Congregationalism (Glasgow, 1960). W. Walker, A History of the Congregational Churches in the United States (New York, 1894); G. G. Atkins and F. L. Fagley, History of American Congregationalism (Boston and Chicago [1942]). J. Corrigan, The Prism of Piety: Catholick Congregational Clergy at the Beginning of the Enlightenment (New York and Oxford, 1991). Transactions of the Congregational Historical Society (21 vols., London, 1901–72), cont. as Journal of the United Reformed Church History Society (ibid., 1973 ff.). See also bibl. to HALF-WAY COVENANT and SEPARATISTS.

Congregations, Monastic. A group of monasteries united under a superior, usually known as Abbot President or Abbot General. The purpose of the union is to foster good discipline, but individual monasteries retain their independence. Examples in the *Benedictine Order are the *Cassinese Congregation, named after the central house at *Monte Cassino, as well as various national Congregations, e.g. the English and the Swiss. Most Monastic Congregations are unions of monasteries of monks but there are a few Congregations of nuns, e.g. the Polish Congregation.

V. Dammertz, OSB, Das Verfassungsrecht der Benediktinischen Mönchskongregationen in Geschichte und Gegenwart (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, 6; St Ottilien, 1963).

Congregations, Religious. Those Religious *Institutes within the RC Church in which members take simple vows were, until the promulgation of the Codex Iuris Canonici of 1983, officially designated Religious Congregations, and they were subject to different rules from those applied to Religious Orders, in which solemn vows are taken. The terminology, no longer officially recognized, is still in general use. The earliest Religious Congregations trace their origins back to the Middle Ages, but they developed strongly only after the *Counter-Reformation. During the 20th cent. the differences between the rules of canon law governing Religious Congregations and those governing Religious Orders have gradually been reduced. See also INSTITUTES OF CONSECRATED LIFE.

Congregations, Roman. See ROMAN CONGREGATIONS.

Congruism. The doctrine that God confers *grace for the performance of good works ('gratia de congruo') in accordance with such human circumstances as He foresees will be most favourable to its use. The doctrine is an attempt to reconcile the dependence of human moral action upon Divine grace with the freedom of the human will. It was strongly advocated *c.*1580 by certain *Jesuits, esp. the *Molinists, and imposed upon all schools of the Society of Jesus in 1613 by C. *Aquaviva, then its General. The 13th of the Anglican *Thirty-Nine Articles denies that works done before justification 'as the School-authors say, deserve grace of congruity'.

The classical expositions of Congruism are to be found in the writings of F. *Suárez, SJ (d. 1617), and of St Robert *Bellarmine (d. 1621). For Aquaviva's decree ('De Observanda Ratione Studiorum, deque Doctrina S. Thomae Sequenda'), issued 14 Dec. 1613, see Praepositorum Generalium Selectae Epistolae et Documenta ad Superiores (Besançon, 1877), pp. 54–60. H. Quilliet in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 1120–38, s.v.; F. Courtney, SJ, in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 95–9, s.v.

Connolly, Richard Hugh (1873–1948), *patristic scholar. Born at Carcoar in Australia, he was educated at *Downside and at Christ's College, Cambridge. He made his solemn profession at Downside Abbey in 1896, was ordained priest in 1899, and became Head of Benet House, Cambridge (1904–16), where he was closely associated with some outstanding patristic scholars in the university (J. A. *Robinson, F. C. *Burkitt, J. F. Bethune-Baker). His main work lay in the field of early Syrian Christianity. He co-operated with J. F. Bethune-Baker in introducing *Nestorius' 'Bazaar of Heracleides' to the notice of European scholars (1908), edited the Liturgical Homilies of Narsai (1909; important appendix by E. *Bishop), made out a strong case for the Hippolytean authorship of the '*Apostolic Tradition' (The So-called Egyptian Church Order, 1916), edited (in English) the Didascalia Apostolorum* (1929), and established the Ambrosian authorship of the De Sacramentis (1942). He also contributed frequent papers to the Journal of Theological Studies, among them some important articles on the *Didache.

Conrad of Gelnhausen (*c.*1320–90), theologian. He studied in *Paris, taking his first degree in 1344, then in *Bologna, where he became Doctor decretorum in 1375. After this he became Provost of Worms. Returning to Paris in 1378, he wrote his two principal works, the Epistola Brevis and the Epistola Concordiae. He left Paris in 1382 to become the first Chancellor of the University of Heidelberg at the invitation of Ruprecht I of the Palatinate, to whom he had addressed the Epistola Concordiae. He died as Chancellor in 1390, and the 200 books he left behind became the basis of the new Heidelberg University library. Heavily influenced by *Marsiglio of Padua and *William of Ockham, he was, along with his co-patriot Henry of Langenstein, one of the first publicists of the via concilii (see CONCILIAR THEORY) since the outbreak of the *Great Schism. The foundation of his thought lay in his appeal to the underlying authority of the Church understood as the whole congregation of the faithful as opposed simply to the Pope and his immediate curia. This gave him sufficient reason to argue for the summoning of a General Council by the cardinals on behalf of the universal Church even without the convocation of the Pope.

His 'Epistola Concordiae' was ed. F. P. Bliemetzrieder, Literarische Polemik zu Beginn des grossen abendländischen Schismas (Publikationen des Österreichischen Historischen Instituts in Rom, 1; 1910), pp. 111–40. A. Kneer, Die Entstehung der Konziliaren Theorie: Zur Geschichte des Schismas und der Kirchenpolitischen Schriftsteller Konrad von Gelnhausen († 1390) und Heinrich von Langenstein († 1397) (RQ, Suppl. 1; 1893); K. Wenck, 'Konrad von Gelnhausen und die Quellen der konziliaren Theorie', HZ 76 (1896), pp. 6–61. G. [G. B.] Ritter, Die Heidelberger Universität, 1 (1936), pp. 46 f., 50–2, 56–60, and 261–9. R. N. Swanson, Universities, Academics and the Great Schism (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 12; 1979), pp. 59–63, 66–8, and 211 f. G. Kreuzer in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 5 (1985), cols. 179–81, s.v. 'Konrad von Gelnhausen', with further bibl.

Conrad of Marburg (*c.*1180–1233), Papal *Inquisitor. He was prob. a native of Marburg and his title 'Magister' shows that he studied at one of the universities, perhaps *Paris or *Bologna. A man of strong force of character and much learning and severely ascetic, in 1213 he appeared as an ardent preacher of the *Crusade of *Innocent III. Soon afterwards he was charged with various reforming missions in Germany, including the visitation of certain convents. These tasks won him the confidence of the Landgrave Ludwig IV of Thuringia, who entrusted him with important ecclesiastical appointments in his dominions. In 1225 he became the spiritual director and confessor of St *Elizabeth (q.v.), Ludwig's wife, whom he treated, esp. in her later years, with excessive severity; and after her death (19 Nov. 1231) he was appointed as one of the witnesses in the cause of her canonization. Meanwhile he proved himself a zealous opponent of heresies (*Cathari, *Waldenses) and on 11 Oct. 1231 *Gregory IX (1227–41) nominated him the first Papal Inquisitor in Germany, with absolute authority over heretics. He exercised his authority ruthlessly, often condemning persons on insufficient evidence and handing them over for punishment to the secular arm. When he charged Henry II, Count of Sayn, with heresy (1233) he was publicly denounced at a court of bishops and princes at Mainz and murdered on his way back to Marburg on 30 July 1233.

B. Kaltner, Konrad von Marburg und die Inquisition in Deutschland (Prague, 1882); A. Hausrath, Kleine Schriften (1883), pp. 137–233 ('Der Ketzermeister Konrad von Marburg'). P. Braun, 'Der Beichtvater der heiligen Elisabeth und deutsche Inquisitor Konrad von Marburg (†1233)', Beiträge zur Hessischen Kirchengeschichte, 4 (1911), pp. 248–300 and 331–64. A. Patschovsky, 'Zum Ketzerverfolgung Konrads von Marburg', Deutsches Archiv, 37 (1981), pp. 641–93. P. Segal in Neue Deutsche Biographie, 12 (1980), pp. 544–6, s.v. 'Konrad von Marburg', with bibl. See also works cited under ELIZABETH, ST.

Consalvi, Ercole (1757–1824), Italian statesman. He entered the Papal service at an early age, and was thrown into prison as a declared anti-Revolutionary after the French occupation of the Papal States in 1798. On recovering his freedom he joined the new Pope, *Pius VII, and in 1800 was created a cardinal and made Secretary of State. In this office he was chiefly responsible for the negotiation of the *Concordat with Napoleon, and for fostering opposition to the *Organic Articles. Though Napoleon managed to secure his dismissal, Consalvi would not be intimidated, and became the leader of the 'black cardinals' in Paris until he was forcibly retired to *Reims. On Napoleon's abdication (1814) he was immediately reappointed as Secretary, and, after a short visit to England, represented the Pope at the Congress of Vienna (1815). Here he secured the restoration of the Papal States, the reorganization of which occupied his remaining years.

Mémoires du Cardinal Consalvi ... Avec une introduction et des notes par J. Crétineau-Joly (2 vols., Paris, 1864; enlarged edn. by J. E. B. Drochon [*c.*1896]); M. N. Rocca di Corneliano (ed.), Memorie del cardinale Ercole Consalvi (1950); A. Roveri and others (eds.), La Missione Consalvi e il Congresso di Vienna (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia pubblicate dall'Istituto Storico Italiano per l'Età Moderna e Contemporanea, 105, 115, 127, etc.; 1970 ff.). E. L. Fischer, Cardinal Consalvi: Lebens und Charakterbild des grossen Ministers Papst Pius VII (1899); M. Petrocchi, La restaurazione, il cardinale Consalvi e la riforma del 1816 (1941). J. T. Ellis, Cardinal Consalvi and Anglo-Papal Relations, 1814–1824 (Washington, DC, 1942). A. Roveri, La Santa Sede tra Rivoluzione Francese e Restaurazione: Il Cardinale Consalvi 1813–1815 (Biblioteca di Storia, 16; Florence, 1974). Life by J. M. Robinson (London, 1987). L. von *Ranke, Historisch-Biographische Studien (1877), pp. 1–180 ('Cardinal Consalvi und seine Staatsverwaltung unter dem Pontificat Pius VII'). G. Mollat in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 509–23, s.v.; A. Roveri in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 28 (1983), pp. 33–43, s.v.

consanguinity, blood-relationship. By Scripture and *canon law, consanguinity within certain degrees is a *diriment impediment to marriage; that is, it makes the marriage of the persons concerned not only unlawful but null and void. See also under KINDRED AND AFFINITY, TABLE OF, and PROHIBITED DEGREES.

Current RC legislation is contained in CIC (1983), can. 1091. G. Oesterlé in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 232–48, s.v., with full bibl.

conscience (Lat. conscientia, 'knowledge with another', 'knowledge within oneself'). The word has followed its Lat. predecessor in acquiring a moral significance, and now denotes the capacity for judging the rightness of actions, either considered generally, or actually proposed or already performed. Christians agree that it is unique to man and that its effectiveness is increased by experience and through *grace.

NT writers adopted the equivalent term 'syneidesis' from Hellenistic Greek philosophers, who seem to have understood it mainly as an index of moral failings or as a moral dissuasive; on this view it never gives positive encouragement: a good conscience is a quiet conscience. The NT associates the good conscience with *faith and with the *Holy Spirit.

In medieval Western thought it became usual to distinguish between the general knowledge of moral principles (termed *synteresis after a copyist's error for syneidesis) and its application to particular cases, called conscientia in a stricter sense. The former presupposed a moral discernment left untouched by the *Fall, and opinions differed as to whether its source lay in the affections and the will, as the *Franciscans held, or in the practical reason, as St *Thomas Aquinas and the *Dominicans taught. (Some modern writers suggest that the affections, will, and reason are all involved, as in much other mental activity.) The Reformers reacted strongly against the theory of an uncorrupted natural power to discern good and evil, and emphasized the dependence of the Christian conscience upon faith.

More recent thinkers have been sharply divided on the reality and authority of conscience. English writers on ethics influenced by T. *Hobbes and D. *Hume have tended to discard the concept and speak simply of moral judgement; others, esp. Bp. J. *Butler, have seen in conscience a kind of moral sense, in the exercise of which man becomes aware of a Being higher than himself. Such an idea was reinforced by Protestant teaching on the 'internal witness' of the Holy Spirit. In the teaching of I. *Kant conscience is the awareness of the universal claim of the moral dictates of reason (the '*Categorical Imperative'). Religion is the recognition of this claim as the will of God, but, since the ground on which the claim is recognized is that it is rational, man, as a rational being, remains (or becomes) autonomous in submitting himself to it. From such a point of view conscience can be considered as a mediator between the Law of God and the will of man, or even as the voice of God (an influential idea found in the writings of some of the early Fathers and in much popular teaching); it is also by following the dictates of conscience that man realizes his independence of purely conventional and social codes. Such ideas have been seriously challenged by modern psychology (esp. the teaching of S. Freud) which regards conscience as the activity of the super-ego, which is formed in childhood and represses drives that are socially unacceptable.

In much modern philosophy it is suggested that where conscience passes beyond moral judgement it is simply an internalized moral habit formed in response to social pressures. Nevertheless, a critical attitude to such social pressures (and an increased awareness of their relativity), combined with the sense that man's freedom implies some kind of ultimate autonomy, has meant that the notion of conscience has seemed useful where an individual's sense of value conflicts with those imposed by the state or society. Moral theologians have stressed the need for conscience to be informed by attention to the teaching of Scripture and the Church; conscience, thus informed, is to be followed. If the resulting action is faulty as a result of *invincible ignorance, the imperfection in conscience is excusable. Nevertheless, it is wrong for a person to do what he thinks wrong, even if apparently legitimate authority seems to require it. To follow one's conscience in such circumstances (e.g. conscientious objection to military service; see WAR, CHRISTIAN ATTITUDE TO), is now increasingly regarded as legitimate. Since the Enlightenment, freedom of religious belief and practice has also come to be seen as a matter of conscience which the state has no right to restrict; the Virginia Bill of Rights of 1776, for instance, insists that 'all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience' (§ 16), and the same right is embodied in the Universal Declaration on Human Rights adopted by the United Nations in 1949 (Art. 18). In contrast to much earlier teaching of the RC Church (e.g. in the Syllabus Errorum, 1864), the Second *Vatican Council in 1965 affirmed the rights of conscience in matters of religion (Dignitatis Humanae Personae, 3).

H. *Rashdall, The Theory of God and Evil (2 vols., 1907), esp. 1, pp. 164–8 and 175 f.; cf. also id., Conscience and Christ (1916). K. E. *Kirk, Conscience and its Problems (1927). E. D'Arcy, Conscience and its Right to Freedom (1961); P. Delhaye, La Conscience morale du chrétien [1964]; O. [M. T.] O'Donovan, Resurrection and Moral Order (Leicester and Grand Rapids, 1986), esp. pp. 114–20 and 190–97. C. A. Pierce, Conscience in the New Testament (Studies in Biblical Theology, 15; 1955). On the classical roots and biblical and patristic understanding, H. Chadwick in RAC 10 (1978), cols. 1025–107, s.v. 'Gewissen'. Useful collection of texts, in Eng. tr., with introd. by T. C. Potts, Conscience in Medieval Philosophy (Cambridge, 1980); cf. also id. in N. Kretzmann, A. Kenny and J. Pinborg (eds.), The Cambridge History of Later Medieval Philosophy (1982), pp. 687–704. The basic work on medieval theories is O. Lottin, OSB, Psychologie et morale aux XII^e et XIII^e siècles (6 vols., Louvain, 1942–60), esp. vol. 2. [R.] P. Ramsey, War and the Christian Conscience (Durham, NC, 1961).

consecration. The separation of a thing or person for Divine service. In Christian theology the term has commonly been used: (1) Of the Eucharist, for the act whereby the bread and wine become the Body and Blood of Christ. (2) Of the making of bishops. In the RC Church, however, bishops are now usually said to be ordained rather than consecrated; this terminology is also used in the ASB. See ORDERS and ORDINAL. (3) Of clergy or laity professing the *counsels of perfection through vows or other sacred bonds recognized by the Church. Acc. to the 1983 CIC (can. 207) such persons are said to be 'consecrated to God in their own special way'. (4) Of churches and altars. The permanent setting apart of these things for the service of God was formerly described as their consecration; in official documents it is now more usually called their dedication. See DEDICATION OF CHURCHES.

Consecration, the Prayer of. The central prayer in the Eucharistic Rite of the BCP, corresponding to the middle of the *Canon in the Roman Mass and (to a lesser extent) of the *Anaphora in E. rites. In the 1662 form of the BCP it consists of: (1) a 'memorial' of the death of Christ; (2) a prayer that in the reception of the Sacrament the faithful may partake of the Body and Blood of Christ; (3) a recital of the narrative of institution, with a performance of the *manual acts; (4) Amen, said by the congregation.

Consensus Genevensis (also known as the De aeterna Dei Praedestinatione). J. *Calvin's elaborate reformulation of his teaching on *Predestination. Directed primarily against A. *Pighi, it was also intended to combat H. H. *Bolsec and other theologians who had attacked Calvin's doctrine. After obtaining the support of the ministers of Geneva on 18 Dec. 1551, Calvin presented it to the City Council of Geneva on 1 Jan. 1552.

The text, besides being pr. among Calvin's works, is pr. in H. A. Niemeyer (ed.), Collectio Confessionum in Ecclesiis Reformatis Publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 218–310; part is repr. in Kidd, pp. 643–5 (no. 314). Eng. tr., with introd., by J. K. S. Reid (London, 1961). See also bibl. to CALVINISM.

Consensus Tigurinus (Lat., 'the Zurich Agreement'). The formula of faith agreed upon in May 1549 by J. *Calvin and G. *Farel, representing the Protestants of French Switzerland, and H. *Bullinger (H. *Zwingli's successor in the town of Zurich), representing those of German Switzerland. Its 26 arts. were primarily concerned to set forth a doctrine of the Eucharist which conformed to *Calvinist principles and was free from the objections which, in the eyes of the Zwinglians, attached to *consubstantiation. The Consensus contributed to widening the breach between Calvinism and *Lutheranism.

The text, besides being pr. among Calvin's works, is pr. in Registres de la Compagnie des Pasteurs de Genève au temps de Calvin, ed. R.-M. Kingdon and J.-F. Bergier, 1: 1546–1553, ed. J.-F. Bergier (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 55; 1964), pp. 64–70; also in Kidd, pp. 652–6 (no. 319). U. Gäbler in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 189–92, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to CALVINISM.

Conservative Evangelicalism. See under EVANGELICALISM.

consignatorium (also known as the chrismarium or locus chrismatis). The room or building sometimes adjoining the *baptistery in which the bishop on *Holy Saturday or the Vigil of *Pentecost (the two days on which Baptism was solemnly conferred in the early Church) used to confirm the newly baptized by 'signing' them with the *chrism. Some fine examples of such 'consignatoria' have been discovered in N. Africa.

F. J. Dölger, 'Die Firmung in den Denkmälern des christlichen Altertums', RQ 19 (1905), pp. 1–41, esp. pp. 26–41, with refs. F. Sühling in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 303–6, s.v., with bibl. refs.

consistory (Lat. consistorium). Orig. the ante-chamber of the Imperial palace at Rome where the Emperor administered justice from a seat on a tribunal with others standing around him (consistentes). The word is now used of certain ecclesiastical courts.

In the C of E the Consistory Court is the bishop's court for the administration of ecclesiastical law within his own diocese, except in the diocese of Canterbury where it is known as 'the Commissary Court'. The judge is styled the '*Chancellor' (in Canterbury, the Commissary General). In *faculty cases, except when the bishop in his letters patent appointing the Chancellor reserves to himself the power to try certain cases, the Chancellor is the sole judge. Since the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963, when the Chancellor gives a conclusive certificate that a case involves a point of doctrine, ritual or ceremonial, it becomes a 'reserved matter', and in faculty cases appeal from the Consistory Court then lies to the *Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved. Under the same Measure the Consistory Court is the court of first instance in cases against clerics not involving doctrine, ritual or ceremonial (known as 'conduct cases'). In these cases the Chancellor sits with two clerical and two lay assessors. In both faculty and conduct cases not involving doctrine, ritual or ceremonial, appeal from the Consistory Court lies first to the Provincial Court (the *Arches Court of Canterbury or the Chancery Court of York), and thence to the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Consistory Courts lost much of their former importance when their jurisdiction in matrimonial and testimentary matters was removed by the Matrimonial Causes Act 1857 and the Court of Probate Act 1857, and their powers have been even further curtailed by the 1963 Measure.

In the RC Church the Consistory is an assembly of *cardinals convoked by the Pope and meeting under his presidency. Acc. to current legislation (CIC (1983), can. 353), consistories are of two kinds: 'ordinary' and 'extraordinary'. An ordinary consistory, to which only those cardinals resident in Rome need be summoned, is held when the Pope wishes to consult them about some serious matter or perform some solemn act, such as conferring the *pallium, or the public celebrations when a new cardinal is created. On these occasions representatives of civil states and other invited persons may attend. Extraordinary consistories, to which all cardinals are summoned, take place when the special needs of the Church or more serious matters suggest it.

In many *Presbyterian Churches (Switzerland, the Netherlands, USA), the Consistory Court is the name given to the court corresponding to the *Kirk session (q.v.) in *Scotland.

On the C of E Consistory Court, E. G. More, Introduction to English Canon Law (3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, 1992), pp. 114–22.

On the RC Consistory, A. Boudinbon in EB (11th edn.), 6 (1910), pp. 978 f., s.v.; H. Papi, SJ, in CE 4 (1908), pp. 285 f., s.v.; J. Raffalli in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 354–6, s.v. See also bibl. to CURIA.

Consolata Missionaries, Institute of the Consolata for Foreign Missions (IMC). RC missionary congregation of men and women founded by Bl Giuseppe *Allamano at Turin. The Consolata Fathers were founded in 1901, the Sisters in 1910. The Institute received final, official approval in 1923. The Consolata Missionaries are characterized by devotion to the BVM 'Consolata' (Virgin of Consolation), and by the spirituality of bringing the consolation of the Gospel to the world. Allamano sent his missionaries to *Kenya, *Ethiopia, Tanzania, and Mozambique. Since his death (1926) houses and missions have been opened in many other countries of Africa, in Latin America, Europe, and N. America.

V. Merlo Pich, IMC, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 138–42, s.v. 'Istituto Missioni Consolata'; M. Gatti, ibid., cols. 1526 f., s.v. 'Missionarie della Consolata'; U. Viglino, IMC, in NCE 4 (1967), p. 217, s.v. See also works on ALLAMANO, cited s.v.

Constance, Council of (1414–18). The Council was convoked in 1414 by *John XXIII at the instigation of the Emp. Sigismund. Its purpose was to end the *Great Schism and also to reform the Church and combat heresy.

In 1414 there were three Popes: Gregory XII, in the line of *Urban VI; *Benedict XIII, the successor of Clement VII of Avignon; and John XXIII, who was in the line inaugurated at the Council of *Pisa. At Constance, since John had summoned the Council, only his obedience was represented, but it far outnumbered that of his rivals. This fact, together with the presence of a large number of Italian bishops, gave him a feeling of security, which was soon shaken by the general movement to secure ecclesiastical peace by the removal of all three Popes in favour of a fourth. When, in order to neutralize the Italian preponderance, the Council decided to vote by Nations (Italian, German, French, and English), and when accusations were being circulated against his personal behaviour, John became frightened and offered to resign if his rivals would do the same. He then left Constance in disguise on 20 March 1415. The Council was thrown into confusion, but was rallied by Sigismund. Besides summoning John to return, in order to give itself judicial standing in the absence of its Papal convenor, in its fifth session (15 April 1415) the Council enacted the decree 'Haec Sancta', declaring that 'this Council holds its power direct from Christ; everyone, no matter his rank or office, even if it be Papal, is bound to obey it in whatever pertains to faith, to the extirpation of the above-mentioned schism, as well as to the reform of the Church in its head and in its members'. This decree was the apex of *Conciliar Theory. John was brought back, condemned for scandalous conduct (but not for heresy) and deposed on 29 May.

Gregory XII abdicated on 4 July, but only after his representative, Cardinal Dominici, had convoked the Council anew. (Gregory did not recognize the earlier convocation, and the Council acquiesced in this action.) His cardinals then joined the assembly. Gregory himself was nominated permanent legate at Ancona and died on 18 Oct. 1417.

Benedict XIII with the King of Aragon met Sigismund at Perpignan on 18 Sept. 1416, but they failed to reach an agreement. Sigismund then signed a pact with the Spanish kings and their allies at Narbonne, whereby the assembly (not the Council) at Constance would invite the Spaniards to a council in Constance, and in the course of the next year various Spanish and Portuguese delegates arrived. Meantime Sigismund tried to restore peace between England and France, but because of his alliance with the English the French left the English–German combination at the Council and voted with the Italians and Spanish.

On 27 Jan. 1417 Sigismund returned to the Council, determined to effect ecclesiastical reform before electing a new Pope. There were serious divisions on the question, the Italians demanding an election first. On 26 July 1417 Benedict was deposed. A compromise on the reform-election issue was accepted whereby such reform decrees as had so far been agreed upon should be promulgated, and the Pope elected by a conclave of all the cardinals, with six additional members from each Nation, the successful candidate to need two-thirds of the votes of the cardinals and of each separate Nation. After a conclave of three days, Oddo *Colonna, a cardinal deacon, was elected on 11 Nov. 1417 and took the name of *Martin V.

Apart from the healing of the schism, reform of the Church had been demanded from the beginning. There were, however, numerous obstacles, esp. the diversity of interests of the different Nations and the desire of the various bodies, including the Universities, to preserve their own advantages. Apart from a decree concerning the *Franciscan Order (23 Sept. 1415), the first five reforming decrees were promulgated on 9 Oct. 1417. The first of these, 'Frequens', enacted that there should be a General Council after 5, 7, and then every 10, years, each one announced by the preceding one. The other four decrees concerned regulations for schisms, the profession to be made by a Pope, translation of bishops and the prohibition of spolia. A list of 18 points needing reform (avisamenta) was drawn up (30 Oct. 1417). After the election of Martin V a commission endeavoured to devise decrees on the lines of these avisamenta, but no unanimity was achieved. Then each Nation and the Pope proposed decrees, which resulted in seven enactments concerned mainly with exemptions and taxes. Many of the aspirations of the individual Nations were settled by *concordats, a term which seems to have been used here for the first time.

The Council also dealt with contemporary heresies, esp. those of J. *Wycliffe and J. *Huss. It condemned over 200 propositions of the former, and ordered his body to be removed from consecrated ground. The latter, who had taught doctrines allegedly similar to those of Wycliffe, came to Constance under safe-conduct from the Emperor. He was, however, imprisoned, and refusing to recant, he was condemned as a heretic on 6 July 1415 and handed over to the secular authorities to be burned at the stake. In the next year *Jerome of Prague, his follower and friend, suffered the same fate. The affairs of the French Franciscan, John Parvus (Jean Petit), and the Dominican, John Falkenberg, who had taught the legality of tyrannicide, were also treated at the Council, but not finally decided. The Council was dissolved on 22 Apr. 1418.

The Council of Constance is usually reckoned as the Sixteenth *Oecumenical Council, but opinions differ as to whether its oecumenicity dates from its beginning, Gregory's reconvocation or Martin's election. Consequently some hold the decree 'Haec Sancta' to be oecumenical, others not. Among the former, some hold it to be of permanent validity, others as conciliar but intended only as a temporary expedient to meet a transient situation. The Council's importance lay in its ending of the schism and in its crystallizing and diffusing of ideas about authority in general and especially about authority in the Church which were to have far-reaching effects.

Hardouin, 8, cols. 209–944; Mansi, 27 (1784), cols. 519–1240, and 28 (1785), cols. 1–958. Indispensable collection of sources by H. von der Hardt, Magnum Oecumenicum Constantiense Concilium (6 vols., Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1697–1700; indices, etc., 1742). Crit. edn. of the Acta Concilii Constantiensis by H. Finke (4 vols., Münster, 1896–1928). Text of the decrees, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 403–51. Eng. trs. of contemporary sources by L. R. Loomis, The Council of Constance, ed. and annotated by J. H. Mundy and K. M. Woody (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 63; 1961), with full introd., and of main docs. by C. M. D. Crowder, Unity, Heresy and Reform, 1378–1460: The Conciliar Response to the Great Schism (1977), pp. 65–138, with introd., pp. 7–28. U. Richental (d. 1436/7), Das Konzil zu Konstanz (reprod. in facsimile and ed. with comm. by O. Feger, 2 vols., Constance, 1964), with text, 2, pp. 149–278. Hefele and Leclercq, 7 (pt. 1; 1916), pp. 71–584. H. Jedin, Bischöfliches Konzil oder Kirchenparlament? Ein Beitrag zur Ekklesiologie der Konzilien von Konstanz und Basel (Vorträge der Aeneas Silvius Stiftung an der Universität Basel, 2; 1963). A. Franzen and W. Müller (eds.), Das Konzil von Konstanz: Beiträge zu seiner Geschichte und Theologie. Festschrift . . . Dr. Hermann Schäufele (1964). J. Gill, SJ, Constance et Bâle-Florence (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 9; 1965), esp. pp. 41–115. P. de Vooght, Les Pouvoirs du Concile et l'autorité du Pape au Concile de Constance: Le décret Haec Sancta Synodus du 6 avril 1415 (Unam Sanctam, 56; 1965). T. E. Morrissey, 'The Decree "Haec Sancta" and Cardinal Zabarella', Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum, 10 (1978), pp. 145–76. Collection of arts. of various dates ed. R. Bäumer, Das Konstanzer Konzil (Wege der Forschung, 415; Darmstadt, 1977). W. Brandmüller, Das Konzil von Konstanz

1414–1418 (1991 ff.). E. Delaruelle, E. R. Labande, and P. Ourliac in Fliche and Martin, 14 (1962), pp. 167–215. L. Cristiani in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 390–424; B. Tierney in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 219–23, s.v.; W. Brandmüller in TRE 19 (1990), pp. 529–35, s.v. 'Konstanz, Konzil von', with bibl. See also bibl. to D'AILLY, PIERRE; GERSON, JEAN LE CHARLIER; HUSS, JOHN; and WYCLIFFE, JOHN.

Constance Missal. See MISSALE SPECIALE.

Constantine the Great (d. 337), Roman emperor. The date of his birth is unknown; it has been variously placed between 272 and 288. The son of the Emp. Constantius Chlorus and St *Helena, he was sent in 293 to the court of *Diocletian, the senior emperor, under whose influence he learned the new Byzantine ideas of absolute sovereignty, which were rapidly replacing the Roman conception of the principate. In 306, on the death of Constantius, he was proclaimed Emperor at *York, and became senior ruler of the empire in 312, after defeating his rival Maxentius at the *Milvian Bridge. At that battle, following instructions received (according to Lactantius) in a dream on the previous night, Constantine fought under the sign of the Cross, which was subsequently modified into the Labarum standard. He attributed his victory to the Christian God, and shortly afterwards toleration and imperial favour were given to Christianity. In 313 he agreed with his fellow-emperor Licinius on a policy of religious freedom enshrined in the so-called Edict of *Milan.

Since Constantine's policy was to unite the Christian Church to the secular State by the closest possible ties, it was natural that even before he formally professed Christianity himself he should be concerned with the internal affairs of the Church. In 313 the *Donatist schismatics in Africa appealed to him to settle their controversy with the Church of that province, and at their request he referred the matter first to a commission of bishops, then to a synod of Gaul and Italy (*Arles, 314), and finally in 316 heard the case himself. In each trial the verdict went against the Donatists, who thereupon attacked not only their ecclesiastical opponents but also the State, encouraging rioting and brigandage. Constantine was therefore constrained to reinforce his verdict with repressive measures; he was, however, unable to end the schism, and in 321 he abandoned the Donatists to the judgement of God.

A similar appeal from the contending parties led Constantine to summon the Council of *Nicaea (325) to settle the *Arian dispute about the Person of Christ. The Emperor took an active part, though unbaptized, a circumstance which foreshadows the Byzantine theory of the emperors as supreme rulers of Church and State alike. The victory of orthodoxy which the creed of the council symbolized did not prevent Constantine from banishing prominent orthodox leaders in later years (e.g. St *Athanasius in 336) at the instance of their enemies. Constantine came under the influence of men of various beliefs, esp. *Hosius, Bp. of Córdoba, and Lactantius (in the W.), then *Eusebius, Bp. of Caesarea, and *Eusebius, Bp. of Nicomedia (in the E.).

The breach with the old traditions of Rome was complete when, after the victory at Chrysopolis (324) which had made him sole emperor, Constantine fixed his capital at Byzantium (rebuilt and inaugurated as 'Constantinople' in 330). As Roman emperor he had to deal cautiously with paganism, which remained important and influential among his subjects; yet throughout his reign his commitment to Christianity is clear, even though he was not baptized until just before his death (deferment of baptism was common in those days). His policy and legislation, though not free from grave blemishes, show a strongly Christian tendency from the first. He humanized the criminal law and the law of debt, mitigated the conditions of slavery, made grants to support poor children, thus discouraging the exposure of unwanted babies, freed celibates and unmarried persons from special taxation, legislated against incontinence, and exempted Christian clergy from the burden of the decurionate. In 321 he ordered that *Sunday should become a public holiday. He liberally endowed Christian church building, esp. at the Holy Places in Palestine, Rome, and Constantinople.

If the centralization of the empire at Constantinople led to an increasing Imperial control of the E. Church, it had also the consequence, perhaps unforeseen, of making the bishops of Rome more prominent than any other figure, lay or ecclesiastical, in the W.; and it is from the 4th cent. that the Papacy begins to assume its secular importance and the position which it held in the Middle Ages.

Legend has added much to history. A tradition going back to the 5th cent. asserts that he was baptized at the *Lateran by Pope *Sylvester, and his connections with the Pope are further embellished in the *Donation of Constantine (q.v.). In the E. Church he has been named the 'Thirteenth Apostle' and is venerated as a saint. Feast day in the E., 21 May (with St *Helena).

The chief primary sources are several official edicts of Constantine; some contemporary panegyrics by pagan orators; Lactantius, De Mortibus Persecutorum; and Eusebius, Vita Constantini. Useful collection of documents concerning the Donatist controversy pr. as an appendix to the works of *Optatus, ed. C. Ziwsa (CSEL 26; 1893), pp. 183–216. Eng. tr. of primary sources by P. R. Coleman-Norton, Roman State & Christian Church, 1 (1966), pp. 27–215. Crit. edn. of Eusebius' Vita by F. Winkelmann (GCS, 1975; 2nd edn., 1991). H. Grégoire, 'Eusèbe n'est pas l'auteur de la "Vita Constantini" dans sa forme actuelle et Constantin n'est pas "converti" en 312', Byzantion, 13 (1938), pp. 561–83, denied the genuineness of the whole work, but he has had little following. On the discovery of a papyrus containing a contemporary copy of one of the docs. in the Life, see A. H. M. Jones and T. C. Skeat, 'Notes on the Genuineness of the Constantinian Documents in Eusebius's Life of Constantine', JEH 5 (1954), pp. 196–200. F. Halkin, SJ (ed.), 'Une Nouvelle Vie de Constantin dans un Légendier de Patmos', Anal. Boll. 77 (1959), pp. 63–107; with refs. to other legends; id., 'L'Empereur Constantin converti par Euphratas', ibid. 78 (1960), pp. 5–17; A. Linder, 'The Myth of Constantine the Great in the West: Sources and Hagiographic Commemoration', Studi medievali, 3rd ser. 16 (1975), pp. 43–95.

The modern study of Constantine may be said to begin with J. Burckhardt, Die Zeit Konstantins des Grossen (1853). The problem posed here as to the genuineness of Constantine's acceptance of Christianity has been the subject of a large and important literature, notably N. H. Baynes's Raleigh Lecture, 'Constantine the Great and the Christian Church', Proceedings of the British Academy, 15 (1929), pp. 341–442.

Other works incl. F. J. Dölger (ed.), Konstantin der Grosse und seine Zeit: . . . Festgabe zum Konstantinsjubiläum (RQ, Suppl. 19; 1913); E. *Schwartz, Kaiser Konstantin und die christliche Kirche (1913; 2nd edn., 1936); A. Piganiol, L'Empereur Constantin (1932); A. Alföldi, The Conversion of Constantine and Pagan Rome (1948); A. H. M. Jones, Constantine and the Conversion of Europe (1948);

J. Vogt, Constantin der Grosse und sein Jahrhundert (Munich, 1949); P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, Constantiniana (ST 171; 1953); H. Dörries, Das Selbstzeugnis Kaiser Konstantins (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 34; 1954); H. Kraft, Kaiser Konstantins religiöse Entwicklung (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 20; 1955); H. Dörries, Konstantin der Grosse (Urban-Bücher, 29 [1958]; Eng. tr., 1972); id., Constantine and Religious Liberty, tr. by R. Bainton (D. H. Terry Lectures, 1958; New Haven, Conn., 1960); R. MacMullen, Constantine (New York, 1969; London, 1970); T. D. Barnes, Constantine and Eusebius (1981), esp. pp. 3–77 and 191–275; id., The New Empire of Diocletian and Constantine (1982). R. Lane Fox, Pagans and Christians (1986), pp. 609–62; R. Leeb, Konstantin und Christus (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 58; 1992); J. Bleicken, Constantin der Grosse und die Christen (Historische Zeitschrift, Beihefte, NF 15; 1992). There is also a useful collection of specialized papers in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 21 (1967). Modern summaries, with further bibl., C. Anc. H. 12. J. Vogt in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 306–79, s.v., with bibl. On the cult of Constantine, see esp. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2, 1914), cols. 2622–95, s.v.

Constantinople. In AD 330 *Constantine inaugurated Constantinople as his capital on the site of the Greek city of Byzantium. The town, which was later considerably enlarged, remained the capital of the E. Empire until 1453, except from 1204 to 1261 when, after capture by the *Crusaders, it was the capital of a Latin empire. From 1453 it was the Turkish capital until this was transferred to Ankara in 1923.

Byzantium had a Christian community at least from the 2nd cent., and Constantinople was a Christian city from its inauguration. The Bishop was at first subject to the see of Heraclea; but before long, as the Bishop of the 'New Rome', he took his place beside the Bps. of *Alexandria, *Antioch, and *Rome. At the council in the city in 381 he was given honorary pre-eminence after the Bp. of Rome, and in 451, though the Pope objected, patriarchal powers were formally conferred upon him (can. 28). Meanwhile Alexandria had striven with Constantinople for supremacy in the E., and *Theophilus and *Cyril of Alexandria obtained respectively the depositions of *Chrysostom (in 403) and *Nestorius (in 431). Finally Rome and Constantinople were left to struggle for pre-eminence. A gradual estrangement ensued: the final breach between the Catholic W. and the Orthodox E. is usually assigned to the year 1054, but the beginning of the schism cannot in fact be exactly dated. Since the 6th cent. the Patr. (as the Bp. was now designated) of Constantinople has been recognized in the E. as the *Oecumenical Patriarch.

Since the city has come under Turkish domination, most of its many ancient churches have become mosques, including the celebrated church of *Sancta Sophia (more recently, converted into a museum). By the Treaty of Lausanne (1923) the Turkish Republic is bound to protect the Greek Christians in Constantinople; but the Patriarch may be chosen only from Turkish citizens.

Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1: Les Actes des Patriarches, fascs. 1–3 [381–1206], ed. V. Grumel, AA (Constantinople, 1932–47; 2nd edn., Paris, 1972–89); fasc. 4 [1208–1309] ed. V. Laurent, AA (Paris, 1971); fascs. 5–6 [1301–1410], ed. J. Darrouzès, AA (ibid., 1977–9); fasc. 7 [1410–53] ed. id. (ibid., 1991), with index to fascs. 1–7. Id. (ed.), Notitiae Episcopatuum Ecclesiae Constantinopolitanae (Géographie Ecclésiastique de l'Empire Byzantin, 1; 1981). Das Register des Patriarchats von Konstantinopel [14th cent.], ed., with Ger. tr., by H. Hunger, O. Kresten, and others (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae, 19/1 etc.; Vienna, 1981 ff.). C. D. *Du Cange, Constantinopolis Christiana (Paris, fol., 1680; still useful). C. Diehl, Constantinople (Paris, 1912). R. Janin, AA, Constantinople byzantine: Développement urbain et répertoire topographique (Archives de l'Orient Chrétien, 4; 1950; 2nd edn., 1964); J. Ebersolt, Constantinople: Recueil d'études, d'archéologie et d'histoire (1951). P. Sherrard, Constantinople: Iconography of a Sacred City (1965). D. Talbot Rice, Constantinople: Byzantium Istanbul (1965). M. Maclagan, The City of Constantinople (Ancient Peoples and Places, 1968). G. Dagron, Naissance d'une Capitale: Constantinople et ses institutions de 330 à 451 (Bibliothèque Byzantine, Études, 7; 1974); C. [A.] Mango, Le Développement urbain de Constantinople (IVᵉ au VIIᵉ siècles) (Travaux et mémoires du centre de recherche d'histoire et civilisation de Byzance, Collège de France, Monographies, 2; 1985). G. Every, SSM, The Byzantine Patriarchate 451–1204 (1947; rev. edn., 1962). G. Downey, Constantinople in the Age of Justinian (Norman, Okla., 1960). S. Runciman, The Fall of Constantinople (1965). R. Janin, AA, Les Églises et les monastères [de Constantinople] (Géographie Ecclésiastique de l'Empire Byzantin, 3; 2nd edn., 1969). T. F. Mathews, The Early Churches of Constantinople: Architecture and Liturgy [1971]; id., The Byzantine Churches of Istanbul: A Photographic Survey [1976]. Valuable study, with full bibl., by S. Vailhé, AA, in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 1307–519, s.v. 'Constantinople (Église de)'; more recent study by R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 626–754. G. Downey in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 231–7, s.v., with further bibl.

Constantinople, First Council of (381). It was convened by the Emp. *Theodosius I to unite the E. Church at the end of the lengthy *Arian controversy on the basis of the *Nicene faith. It met under the presidency of *Melitius, Bp. of Antioch (who died during the Council) and was attended by 150 orthodox bishops and 36 bishops of *Pneumatomachian sympathies who later withdrew. Although neither W. bishops nor Roman legates were present, its achievement was sufficiently significant for it to come to be regarded as the Second *General Council in both E. and W. The work of the Council of *Nicaea with regard to the doctrine of Christ was ratified, and the humanity of Christ safeguarded by condemning *Apollinarianism. The so-called Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed, traditionally ascribed to this Council, was probably not drawn up by it, though it may well have been endorsed by it in the course of its deliberations (so A. M. Ritter, followed by J. N. D. Kelly; see NICENE CREED). In ecclesiastical matters the Council (a) appointed *Nectarius as Bp. of Constantinople, in place of St *Gregory of Nazianzus; (b) granted to Constantinople honorary precedence (τὰ πρεσβεῖα τῆς τιμῆς) over all Churches save Rome; and (c) misguidedly appointed as Bp. of *Antioch Flavian rather than Paulinus, who, by an agreement of the schismatic parties, should have succeeded Melitius.

Hardouin, 1, cols. 807–26; Mansi, 3 (1759), cols. 521–600; Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 21–35. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 1–48. Crit. edn. of Lat. versions of canons in EOMIA 2. 3 (1929), pp. 401–72. Gk. text of canons with names of Bishops ed. from two Patmos MSS by C. H. Turner in JTS 15 (1914), pp. 161–78. W. *Bright, Notes on the Canons of the First Four General Councils (2nd edn., 1892), pp. 90–128. I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Nicée et Constantinople (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 1; 1963), esp. pp. 139–242. A. M. Ritter, Das Konzil von Konstantinopel und sein Symbol: Studien zur Geschichte und Theologie des II. Ökumenischen Konzils (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 15; 1965). N. Q. King, 'The 150 Holy Fathers of the Council of Constantinople 381 A.D. Some notes on the Bishop-lists', in K. Aland and F. L. Cross (eds.), Studia Patristica, 1 (TU 63; 1957), pp. 635–41. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 25–7 (nos. 8598–8601).

J. Bois in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 1227–31, s.v.; R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 754–7, s.v.

Constantinople, Second Council of (553). This, the Fifth General Council, was convoked by the Emp. *Justinian to decide the prolonged controversy over the *Three Chapters: whether *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Theodoret of Cyrrhus, and *Ibas of Edessa should be condemned as tainted with *Nestorianism, or whether, following the attitude of the Council of *Chalcedon, they should be accepted. The Emperor, who wished to reconcile moderate *Monophysite opinion, was opposed to any toleration of Theodore, Theodoret, and Ibas. Justinian's first decree condemning the Three Chapters (543/4) met with W. opposition, though Pope *Vigilius himself vacillated, first condemning *Menas, the Patriarch of *Constantinople, and the Emperor's supporters (547), but then withdrawing his anathema. The Emperor's second decree against the Three Chapters (551) met with the same W. opposition, and again Vigilius first condemned Menas (552), but then retracted his condemnation. The Council was convoked to resolve the matter.

It was convened on 5 May 553 under the presidency of Eutychius, the new Patr. of Constantinople. The 165 bishops who signed the acts were almost all Easterns. The Three Chapters were condemned and their authors anathematized. During its course Vigilius, who refused to attend for fear of violence as well as in protest against the preponderance of E. bishops present, drew up the so-called 'Constitutum', signed by himself and 16 W. bishops, in which, while condemning 60 propositions of Theodore of Mopsuestia, he refused to anathematize his person on the grounds that he had not been condemned at *Ephesus (431) or Chalcedon (451) and that it was not the custom of the Church to condemn the dead. The Council replied by erasing the Pope's name from the diptychs in the 7th session. Vigilius was for a short time exiled, but as the Emperor had nothing to gain from a rupture with the Pope he used every means to bring about a reconciliation. Vigilius finally agreed to accept the Council and annulled his former decisions in favour of the Three Chapters.

Of the 14 anathemas pronounced by the Council the first 12 are directed chiefly against Theodore of Mopsuestia, the 13th against Theodoret of Cyrrhus, and the 14th against Ibas. In the 11th anathema the name of *Origen occurs in a list of heretics, but there are grounds for believing this to be an interpolation. Despite the Papal acceptance the Council was not at once recognized as oecumenical in the W. Milan and *Aquileia even broke off communion with Rome, and relations were not restored with Milan until the end of the 6th, and with Aquileia until the end of the 7th, cent. The Council, unlike the four preceding General Councils, issued no canons.

Hardouin, 3, cols. 1–328; Mansi, 9 (1743), cols. 157–658; crit. edn. by J. Straub, ACO, Tomus 4, vol. 1 (Berlin, 1971). Acts conveniently pr., with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 105–22. H. *Noris, Dissertatio Historica de Synodo Quinta Oecumenica (1673; repr. in Noris's Opera, 1, Verona, 1729, cols. 550–820). F. Diekamp, Die origenistischen Streitigkeiten im sechsten Jahrhundert und das fünfte allgemeine Konzil (1899), pp. 77–98. R. Haacke, OSB, 'Die kaiserliche Politik in den Auseinandersetzungen um Chalkedon (451–553)', in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 2 (Würzburg, 1953), pp. 95–177, esp. pp. 141–77. F.-X. Murphy, CSSR, and P. Sherwood, OSB, Constantinople II et Constantinople III (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 3; 1974), pp. 13–130. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 2; 1909), pp. 1–156. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 159–66 (nos. 9332–66). J. Bois in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 1231–59, s.v.; R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 757–60, s.v., both with bibl. See also bibl. to MONOPHYSITISM, THEODORE OF MOPSUESTIA, and THREE CHAPTERS.

Constantinople, Third Council of (680–81). This, the Sixth General Council, was convoked at the demand of the Emp. Constantine IV (Pogonatus) to settle the prolonged *Monothelite controversy in the E. Church. Pope *Agatho, having held a Synod at *Rome (680) in which the doctrine of the Two Wills in Christ was again affirmed, sent his delegates to the Emperor with a letter expounding this teaching. On their arrival the Emperor called a Council of the bishops of the patriarchates of *Constantinople and *Antioch. The debates of its 18 sessions, conducted chiefly by the Papal envoys, were concerned solely with the Monothelite question. Macarius, the Patr. of Antioch, was condemned as a Monothelite, and in the 13th session the principal leaders of the heresy, among whom the Council included the former Pope *Honorius, were anathematized.

The Dogmatic Decree of the Council is principally a reproduction of the profession of faith drawn up at *Chalcedon, affirming the doctrine of the Two Natures, to which is added, as a necessary consequence, the statement of the reality of the Two Wills (θελήματα) and the Two Operations (ἐνέργειαι). The Council rejected all natural unity of the two wills, but admitted the existence of a moral unity, resulting from the complete harmony between the Divine and the human will in the God-man. The same position was affirmed regarding the duality of operations. The decree concluded with a résumé of the Christological teaching of the various Councils. This Council issued no canons.

Hardouin, 3, cols. 1043–644; Mansi, 11 (1765), cols. 189–922. Crit. edn. by R. Riedinger (ACO, 2nd ser. 2; 2 parts, 1990–92). Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 123–30. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 472–538. F.-X. Murphy, CSSR, and P. Sherwood, OSB, Constantinople II et Constantinople III (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 3; 1974), pp. 133–260. P. Conte, 'Il significato del primato papale nei padri del VI concilio ecumenico', Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, 15 (1977), pp. 7–111. L. Bréhier in Fliche and Martin, 5 (1938), pp. 183–91. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 178–84 (nos. 9416–42). J. Bois in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 1259–73; R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 760–3, s.v. See also bibl. to MONOTHELITISM.

Constantinopolitan Creed. See NICENE CREED.

Constitutional Church. The State Church set up in the French Revolution by the *Civil Constitution of the Clergy (q.v.). Its clergy were those who took the oath of 27 Nov. 1790 as prescribed by the Constituent Assembly. When the Papal condemnation became known, some retracted, but most stayed on in office accepting the inevitability of schism. Under the pressure of war, invasion and civil strife the Revolution turned to the cruelties of Terror, and the clergy became regarded as traitors. On 23 Sept. 1793 the registration of births, marriages, and deaths was taken from them, and in Oct. 1793 the Christian calendar was abolished in favour of a revolutionary one. Having stayed in France and in public office, the Constitutional clergy were available for victimization, and were subject to grim pressures to renounce their orders. Forty-seven of their bishops saved their lives by giving up their episcopal functions, though only 23 actually apostasized. When the Terror ended and the decree of 21 Feb. 1795 allowed a limited toleration, the Constitutional Church was resurrected by Henri Grégoire, Bp. of Blois, and held a national Council in 1797. Its end came with the *Concordat of 1801.

There is an extensive lit. on the Catholic Church in France at the time of the Revolution. L. Sciout, Histoire de la constitution civile du clergé, 1790–1801 (4 vols., 1872–81). P. de La Gorce, Histoire religieuse de la Révolution française (5 vols., 1909–23), esp. vol. 1, pp. 349–506. H. *Leclercq, OSB, L'Église constitutionnelle, juillet 1790–avril 1791 (1934). A. Latreille, L'Église Catholique et la Révolution française (2 vols., 1946–50). J. McManners, The French Revolution and the Church (1969), with bibl. A. Dansette, Histoire religieuse de la France contemporaine, 1 (1948), pp. 76–187. See also bibl. to CIVIL CONSTITUTION OF THE CLERGY and CONCORDAT OF 1801.

Constitutions of Clarendon. See CLARENDON, CONSTITUTIONS OF.

consubstantial. Of one and the same substance or being. The word is used esp. of the eternal relationship which subsists between the three Persons of the Holy Trinity. The Latin consubstantialis is the W. counterpart of the Greek ὁμοούσιος (see HOMOOUSION), the test-word of theological orthodoxy in the *Arian controversy.

consubstantiation. In the doctrine of the *Eucharist, the belief, esp. associated with the name of M. *Luther, that, after the consecration, the substances both of the Body and Blood of Christ and of the bread and wine coexist in union with each other. Luther illustrated it by the analogy of the iron put into the fire whereby both fire and iron are united in the red-hot iron and yet each continues unchanged. The doctrine was formulated in opposition to the medieval doctrine of *transubstantiation, acc. to which the substances of the bread and wine were no longer present after consecration, but only their '*accidents' persisted.

J. H. Crehan, SJ, in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 114–17. See also works cited under EUCHARIST.

Consuetudinary. See CUSTOMARY.

Consultation on Church Union (COCU). A Church union negotiating committee of American Churches of Protestant and Anglican tradition seeking a form of union which would be at once 'truly catholic, truly evangelical, and truly reformed'. The Consultation began in 1962 in response to a sermon by Eugene C. Blake of the former United *Presbyterian Church in the USA. Its original members were the United Presbyterian Church, the (then Protestant) *Episcopal Church, the *United Church of Christ, the Christian Church (*Disciples of Christ), the *Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Evangelical United Brethren. It has subsequently been joined by the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and the International Council of Community Churches (formerly known as the National Council of Community Churches). It thus includes both Black and White Churches. (Mergers between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Evangelical United Brethren to form the United Methodist Church in 1968, and between the United Presbyterian Church in the USA and the Presbyterian Church in the United States to form the Presbyterian Churches (USA) in 1983, reduced the number of Churches participating, but not the range.) Other Churches which have observer-participant status include the Evangelical *Lutheran Church in America, the Reformed Church in America, and the RC Church. In 1970 a draft Plan of Union was put forward for consideration; it described a plan of full and organic union among the Churches. The responses to this proposal, which was dropped in 1973, led the participating Churches to redefine their ecumenical goal as a relationship of full communion among the various continuing traditions, Church union now being understood as communion in faith, sacraments, ministry, and mission. The COCU Consensus (1984), which is the theological basis for this second plan of union, has been approved as a whole or in part by the governing bodies of the participating Churches. The plan itself, Churches in Covenant Communion was in 1988 approved by a plenary session of the Consultation and has been referred to the participating Churches; they are expected to have completed voting upon it by 1998.

G. F. Moede in N. Lossky and others (eds.), Dictionary of the Ecumenical Movement [1991], p. 227, s.v. See also bibl. to ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT.

contakion (Gk. κοντάκιον, from κοντός, 'pole' or 'shaft'; hence a vellum roll wound round a piece of wood). In the E. Church, a hymn composed in a series of strophes and intended for liturgical use. Contakia, esp. those of St *Romanos, enjoyed very wide popularity during the 6th–7th cents., but from the 8th cent. onwards they came to be largely replaced by a new form of liturgical hymnography, the *canon. In modern editions of the service books, usually only the first strophe of the contakion is included; this is read or sung after the sixth ode of the canon, after the *Little Entrance in the Liturgy, and at most offices.

P. Maas, 'Das Kontakion', Byzantinische Zeitschrift, 19 (1910), pp. 285–306, repr. in id., Kleine Schriften, ed. W. Buchwald (1973), pp. 368–91. E. Wellesz, A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (Oxford, 1949), esp. pp. 152–67; 2nd edn. (1961), pp. 179–97, with refs.

Contarini, Gasparo (1483–1542), cardinal. He belonged to one of the foremost families of Venice. After education at the University of Padua, where he was won for the New Learning, he served as Venetian ambassador at the court of *Charles V (attending in this capacity the Diet of *Worms of 1521), in England, in Spain, and at the Papal court. He soon became famous as a theologian. In 1516 he published a treatise defending (against P. *Pomponazzi) the immortality of the soul, and *c.*1530 a book against M. *Luther, Confutatio Articulorum seu Quaestionum Lutheri. His popularity at Rome led him, though only a layman, to be created a cardinal by *Paul III in 1535. In 1536 he was put on the commission which was to prepare the way for the Council (of *Trent) and in 1536–7 he issued the 'Consilium de emendanda ecclesia', proposing many radical reforms. In 1536 he became Bp. of Belluno. At the Conference of *Ratisbon (1541), where he championed the doctrine of '*double justice', he took an active part in this last attempt at reunion with the Lutherans, before the influence of the *Counter-Reformation ideals finally closed the possibility of reconciliation. It was while searching at Ratisbon for a common formula on justification that he wrote his 'Epistola de justificatione' (25 May 1541), a profession of faith in which Contarini was believed in many quarters to have compromised the Catholic doctrine. His own mystical experience of 1511, which led him to put his trust in the merits of Christ rather than religious observances, antedated Luther's Turmerlebnis by several years.

Opera [ed. by L. Contarini, with a Life by G. della Casa] (Paris, 1571). Gegenreformatorische Schriften (*c.*1530–42) ed. F. Hünermann (Corpus Catholicorum, 7; 1923). F. Dittrich (ed.), Regesten und Briefe des Cardinals Gasparo Contarini, 1483–1542 (1881). Id., Gasparo Contarini, 1483–1542: Eine Monographie (1885). G. Bianchini, Un magistrato-cardinale del secolo XVI (1895); H. Rückert, Die theologische Entwicklung Gasparo Contarinis (1926); H. Hackert, Die Staatsschrift Gasparo Contarinis und die politischen Verhältnisse Venedigs im sechzehnten Jahrhundert (Heidelberger Abhandlungen zur mittleren und neueren Geschichte, Heft 69; 1940). H. Jedin, Kardinal Contarini als Kontroverstheologe (Katholisches Leben und Kämpfen im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 9; 1949). Id., 'Ein "Turmerlebnis" des jungen Contarini', Hist. J. 70 (1951), pp. 115–30, repr. in id., Kirche des Glaubens—Kirche des Geschichte, 1 (1966), pp. 167–80; id., 'Contarini und Camaldoli', Archivio Italiano per la Storia della Pietà, 2 (1959), pp. 51–118, incl. text of 30 letters. P. Matheson, Cardinal Contarini at Regensburg (Oxford, 1972). G. Fragnito, Gasparo Contarini (Bibliotheca della Rivista di Storia e Letteratura Religiosa, Studi e Testi, 9; 1988). D. Fenlon, Heresy and Obedience in Tridentine Italy: Cardinal Pole and the Counter Reformation (Cambridge, 1972), esp. pp. 6–11, 45–50, and 55–68. K. Ganzer, 'Gasparo Contarini', in E. Iserloh (ed.), Katholische Theologen der Reformationszeit, 1 (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 44; 1984), pp. 107–15, with bibl. H. Jedin in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 771–84; G. Fragnito in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 28 (1983), pp. 172–92, s.v.

contemplation, contemplative life. The Lat. contemplatio, like its Gk. equivalent (θεωρία), primarily means looking at things, whether with the eyes or with the mind; in either sense it can be contrasted with doing things (πρᾶξις). On this basis a distinction can be made between practical and speculative kinds of science, and practical and speculative elements in a human life. *Aristotle surmised that a purely contemplative (i.e. intellectual) life would be the best, should it be possible, but this was disputed by others, such as the *Stoics. The Stoics and *Epicureans subordinated speculation to practical ethics, but the Middle and *Neo-Platonists maintained the superiority of contemplation, whose goal was stated to be knowledge of, or union with, God. On this basis a 'contemplative life' could be identified as one devoted to God rather than to any kind of activity.

Many of the Greek Fathers adopted the ideal of the 'contemplative life', proceeding through the philosophical study of creatures to the knowledge of God. But θεωρία also retains the important sense of 'study of the Scriptures', with particular emphasis on the spiritual sense.

St *Augustine maintained that there is a contemplative element (namely faith) and a practical element (morals) in every Christian life, but he came to be doubtful about the propriety of a purely contemplative life. St *Gregory the Great gave a classic definition of the contemplative life as one devoted exclusively to the love of God (Hom. in Ez. 2. 2. 8; PL 76. 953 AB); he also argued that we know God precisely in loving Him (Hom. in Evang. 2. 27. 4; PL 76. 1207 A). In later tradition there is a bifurcation in the use of contemplative words: some writers continued to use them with reference to the intellectual life (*Thomas Aquinas defining the 'contemplative life' as that of the person whose bias is speculative rather than practical), while others began to contrast 'contemplation' with the intellectual life.

In the latter part of the Middle Ages there was a tendency to conflate the notions of meditation, prayer and contemplation around the idea of an intense love of God, felt in the affections. This eventually led to the notion of contemplation as a form of prayer, and so to 'contemplative prayer', distinguished by St *Teresa of Avila and St *John of the Cross from '*mental prayer' or meditation. They defined it as being a supernatural state of prayer, in which the exercise of the natural powers of the mind and will is suspended. Since the 17th cent. some writers have distinguished between this kind of strictly supernatural contemplation ('infused contemplation') and 'acquired contemplation', in which the working of the natural powers is not entirely suspended. Various states have been designated as 'acquired contemplation', chiefly (a) a simplified intellectual gazing, (b) simplified affective prayer, and (c) a state in which the soul receives a supernatural illumination, but without its natural powers ceasing to operate (also called 'active contemplation'). Other writers have insisted that 'acquired contemplation' is a contradiction in terms.

Inasmuch as the goal of the Christian life is the vision of God in heaven, Augustine and others maintain that the 'contemplative life' is the eschatological goal of all Christians, the fruit and reward of the entire Christian life. 'Contemplation' on earth can thus be seen as a foretaste of heaven.

In modern times 'contemplative life' has been equated with the life of members of strictly enclosed religious orders, such as the *Carthusians and *Carmelite nuns.

Contemplation is discussed in books on the spiritual life: see bibl. to PRAYER. M. E. Mason, OSB, Active Life and Contemplative Life: A Study of the Concepts from Plato to the Present (Milwaukee, Wis., 1961). J. Lebreton, SJ, and others, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 1643–2193, s.v.

contemplative life. See previous entry.

Contestatio (Lat.). In *Gallican service books, the usual name for the *Preface at the *Eucharist.

contingency. A property of entities, events, or propositions. Contingent entities are things which do not have to exist. Contingent events are ones which do not have to occur. Contingent propositions are those which do not have to be true. In metaphysics it has been held that created things are contingent and that God, by contrast, is 'necessary'. The idea here is that God alone exists of necessity, i.e. He has the quality of *aseity. In St *Thomas Aquinas and other medieval thinkers 'contingent' means 'able to be generated and able to perish in the course of nature'. This account allows for there being created necessary things (e.g. heavenly bodies, angels, human souls). The concept of contingency has been invoked in versions of the *Ontological Argument and the *Cosmological Argument (qq.v).

contraception, procreation, and abortion, ethics of. The fundamental principles applied by Christians in reflecting on moral problems associated with procreation are the sacredness of human life, love of neighbour, and respect for the sovereignty and providence of God. On the basis of these principles early Christian thinkers (including the authors of the *'Didache' and Epistle of *Barnabas, *Athenagoras, *Clement of Alexandria, *Tertullian, Sts *Ambrose, *Chrysostom, *Jerome, and *Augustine) were united in their condemnation of infanticide and abortion, in contrast to their pagan contemporaries. Abortion was forbidden at the Council of *Elvira (c.306, can. 61). The general patristic teaching against contraception was related to this set of attitudes and was shaped by an insistence against *Gnostics and *Manichees on the integrity of OT teaching that procreation within marriage was good, combined with reasoning (paralleled in *Stoic thought) which asserted the unnaturalness of a sexual act which did not have procreation as its end.

These early established prohibitions predominated in Christian teaching until recent times when there has been some questioning of traditional attitudes to contraception and abortion. The 1930 *Lambeth Conference declared that where there is 'a clearly felt moral obligation to limit or avoid parenthood, and where there is a morally sound reason for avoiding complete abstinence, ... other methods may be used' (Resolution 15). This qualified acceptance in the Anglican Communion of the propriety of artificial contraception was a sign of the change of view on this topic which has prevailed in the mainstream Protestant Churches and finds some support among RC moralists. It was reinforced by the 1958 Lambeth Conference's commendation of 'responsible parenthood' (Res. 115). The official teaching of the RC Church, however, remains that affirmed in *Pius XI's encyclical Casti Connubii (1930) condemning any use of marriage 'in the exercise of which the act, by human effort, is deprived of its natural power of procreating life'. This document in passing acknowledges the legitimacy of intercourse during the infertile period; the so-called 'rhythm method', positively accepted by *Pius XII in 1951 and approved in Paul VI's encyclical Humanae Vitae (1968), is the only form of birth-control, other than abstinence, apparently allowed to RCs. The teaching of Humanae Vitae on contraception was specifically repudiated by the 1968 Lambeth Conference (Res. 22) and within the RC Church it has been found difficult by the laity and is criticized by some priests, esp. in the developing world where there are grave problems of over-population. It was nevertheless reiterated in *John Paul II's encyclical Evangelium Vitae (1995). In the E. Church various local Church authorities have issued statements condemning artificial contraception, but there have been no modern pronouncements on the subject endorsed by the Orthodox Church, and it appears that individually given advice varies in different areas.

The underlying differences in Christian thought about the proper use of sexual intercourse within marriage which are expressed in disagreement over contraception are reflected in the different responses to recent technological advances aimed at the alleviation of infertility and which have made possible artificial insemination by husband or (an anonymous) donor (AIH and AID), egg donation, and in vitro fertilization (where sperm and egg are united in the laboratory). Against artificial insemination by the husband and in vitro fertilization Pope Pius XII objected that these techniques, contrary to *natural law, separated the procreative and unitive meanings or aspects of sexual intercourse, a point which is central to the condemnation of artificial contraception in the encyclical Humanae Vitae (1968) and to the elaboration of Pius's teaching by the Congregation of the Doctrine of the Faith in Donum Vitae (1987); this last also emphasized that they failed to respect the dignity of the human and personal act that procreation ought to be. Additional grounds for rejecting artificial insemination by donor and in vitro fertilization which employs donated material are found in the invasive nature of each in relation to the exclusive covenant between husband and wife. Other moralists, including some RCs, have argued that, while a Christian marriage must be open to the goods for which it was ordained (the W. theological tradition identified these as the procreative, unitive, and sacramental goods), it can be so even if each individual act of sexual intercourse is not. Thus the separation of the meanings of intercourse which is alleged to occur when contraception is used and to which the traditional RC teaching objects, is judged to be morally acceptable, provided there is no outright rejection of the procreative good of marriage but only a temporary concern for considerations of, e.g., responsible parenthood. This position, implicit in the report of the Lambeth Conference of 1930, opens the way for a different approach to the problems of the treatment of infertility, though it does not necessarily entail conclusions markedly different from those defended by the RC Church. According to this approach, artificial insemination by the husband and in vitro fertilization is judged to be in principle acceptable in enabling marriage to achieve one of its goods, though in so far as the practice of in vitro fertilization normally involves the production of spare embryos to increase the likelihood of success of this uncertain intervention, it is open to serious criticism. In the case of procedures using donated material, many have regarded as decisive the objection that they allow procreation to take place outside marriage. Surrogacy (where a fertilized egg is carried to term on behalf of a couple who have contributed one or both parts of the genetic material) is acceptable to few, if any, moral theologians of any denomination. It separates from marriage not only the act of procreation but the entire pregnancy and delivery, and is thought to entail a view of children as transferable commodities. Indeed concern has been voiced that all technological manipulation of procreation leads to our viewing children as products of human ingenuity, with the danger that those so regarded will be used as objects and not honoured as sharing our nature.

The development of techniques for combating infertility have involved the use of human embryos, and debates on the legitimacy of such research have become linked with questions of abortion. Though by no means as widespread as those relating to contraception, there have been changes in attitude here. The advent of modern surgery renders it possible in certain circumstances, by aborting the foetus, to save a woman whose life would be endangered by the birth of a child, and some Christians, including a number of Anglicans and Orthodox, regard abortion as permissible in such cases, while maintaining that the foetus is usually deserving of protection. A minority of W. Christians go further and accept abortion where the mother's interests or the interests of her family are seriously threatened and it is in this direction that the civil law in many countries has changed. In Britain the Abortion Act 1967 allowed legal termination of pregnancy prior to the 28th week in order to avoid injury to the 'physical or mental health' of the mother or 'any existing child of her family', or 'where there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer such physical and mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped'. The Act specifically exempts conscientious objectors from any obligation to take part in the treatment authorized except where it is necessary 'to save the life or to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health' of the mother. The judgement of the Supreme Court of the USA in Roe v. Wade in 1973 was more radical in holding that the prohibition of abortion prior to viability was unconstitutional, thereby denying the foetus the prima facie protection which the English law enshrines. However, the 1967 Act has been applied in such a way that there has been little difference in practice between the two countries. These legal changes have gone too far in the view of probably a majority of Christians. The RC Church maintains that any abortion as an end in itself ('direct abortion') is always unlawful, though an operation which will result in the destruction of a foetus may be licit, since it is permissible, for sufficient reason, to perform an action in itself good or indifferent from which two results, one good and one bad, may follow. Thus the removal of a womb which is cancerous may be considered an indirect and licit abortion. Even among those Christians who do not subscribe to the RC position, there is widespread unease over a situation in which abortion is virtually available 'on demand', an unease reflected for example in the resolution of the General *Synod of the C of E in 1983 accepting abortion only when the mother's life was endangered. In the USA a woman's right to an abortion as defined in Roe v. Wade was limited by the decision of the Supreme Court in 1989 in Webster v. Reproductive Health Services and it is likely that there will be other challenges to the earlier decision. In Britain the 1967 Act was amended in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990. Termination of pregnancy may now take place no later than the 24th week, except where there is a risk of handicap to the child or a grave threat to the health of the mother, in which case there is no limit on when an abortion may occur. The same Act introduced regulations on experimentation on embryos which is allowed during the first 14 days of development, but not thereafter. The controversy surrounding the passing of this legislation demonstrates the importance and the difficulty of the question of when a human life begins and an embryo must be judged to be a person. The RC belief that 'from the time that the ovum is fertilized, a human life is begun', is the basis of its repeated condemnation of direct abortion, and, more recently, of 'the use of human embryos or foetuses as an object of experimentation' or 'as providers of organs or tissue for transplants in the treatment of certain diseases' (Evangelium Vitae, 1995). For all Christians, a clear answer to the question of when a human life begins would be decisive, and the balancing of benefits and harms secondary. But differing answers are put forward by Christians as well as others, as is the view that no clear answer is to be had.

The Papal encyclicals Casti Connubii are pr. in AAS 22 (1930), pp. 539–92, and Humanae Vitae, ibid. 60 (1968), pp. 481–503; the statement of the Congregation of the Doctrine of the Faith 'On Respect for Human Life in its Origins and on the Dignity of Procreation' (Donum Vitae), ibid. 80 (1988), pp. 70–102; the encyclical Evangelium Vitae, ibid. 87 (1995), pp. 401–522. The Report of The Lambeth Conference 1930 [1930] includes, besides the resolution (pp. 43 f.), the findings of the relevant committee, pp. 89–92; The Lambeth Conference 1958 (1958), resolution 115, pt. 1, p. 57, with committee report on 'Family Planning', pt. 2, pp. 146–50. There is a full survey of the subject, incl. patristic references, in J. T. Noonan, Contraception: A History of its Treatment by the Catholic Theologians and Canonists (Cambridge, Mass., 1965; enlarged edn., ibid. and London, 1986). See also bibl. to HUMANAE VITAE.

Pius XII's views on artificial insemination and on in vitro fertilization are contained in addresses to conferences of RC doctors, pr. in AAS 41 (1949), pp. 557–61; 43 (1951), pp. 835–54; and 48 (1956), pp. 467–74, the second of these incidentally containing the first positive Papal endorsement of the use of the infertile period as a means of birth-control. For text of Humanae Vitae, Donum Vitae, and Evangelium Vitae, see above. Personal Origins: The Report of a Working Party on Human Fertilisation and Embryology of the Board for Social Responsibility of the C of E (1985) was a response to the Report of the Committee of Inquiry into Human Fertilisation and Embryology, commissioned by the Department of Health and Social Security and pub. by the Stationery Office [Cmnd. 9314; 1984], the so-called Warnock report, which was repr. with preface by M. Warnock, A Question of Life (1985). [Personal Origins, which carries no authority beyond that of group which compiled it, holds that Christians may judge that the protection due to human life need not be afforded to the early embryo.] The many other works dealing with these problems incl. B. Häring, Medical Ethics (Slough, 1972), pp. 65–94; J. Mahoney, Bioethics and Belief: Religion and Medicine in Dialogue (1984); and G. R. Dunstan and M. J. Seller (eds.), The Status of the Human Embryo: Perspectives from Moral Tradition [1988]. The concern that the new technologies encourage us to relate to children as products is expressed by K. *Rahner, 'Zum Problem der genetischen Manipulation', Schriften der Theologie, 8 [1967], pp. 286–321; Eng. tr. in Theological Investigations, 9 (1972), pp. 225–52; [R.] P. Ramsey, Fabricated Man: The Ethics of Genetic Control (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1970); and O. M. T. O'Donovan, Begotten or Made? (Oxford, 1984).

The RC ruling of the Congregation of the Doctrine of the Faith 'On Procured Abortion' is pr. in AAS 66 (1974), pp. 730–47. Abortion: An Ethical Discussion. The Report of a Committee established by the C of E Board for Social Responsibility (1965), countenances therapeutic abortion where there is a threat to the 'physical and mental health of the mother'; it carries no authority beyond that of the body which compiled it. J. T. Noonan, (ed.), The Morality of Abortion (Cambridge, Mass. [1970]), incl. a historical account by the ed., pp. 1–59; B. Häring, op. cit., pp. 94–119; [R.] P. Ramsey, Ethics at the Edges of Life (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1978), pp. 1–142; M. Tooley, Abortion and Infanticide (Oxford, 1983); G. R. Dunstan and M. J. Seller, op. cit.

Contra-Remonstrantie. The counter-declaration in which the more rigid Dutch *Calvinists stated their objections to the *Arminian '*Remonstrance' (q.v.). It was drawn up for the Conference which met at The Hague on 11 Mar. 1611. Its main points were: (1) Unconditional and absolute predestination of some souls to damnation. (2) Children as well as adults may be among the elect. (3) Election is not acc. to works or belief, but only at God's pleasure. (4) Christ died only for the elect. (5) The Holy Spirit speaks in Scripture only to the elect. (6) The elect can never lose the true belief. (7) This preservation does not lead to carelessness of life, but to positive virtue.

The text is in G. J. Hoenderdaal, 'Remonstrantie en Contraremonstrantie', Nederlands Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, NS 51 (1970–1), pp. 49–92 (the seven articles on pp. 85–7).

contrition (Lat. contritio, 'a wearing away of something hard'). Contrition is a form of interior repentance, defined by the Council of *Trent as 'sorrow of heart and detestation of sin committed, with the purpose of not sinning in future' (sess. 14, cap. 4). Moral theologians commonly hold that to be real it must have its grounds in the love of God, and hence distinguish it from *attrition (q.v.), an imperfect form of sorrow for sin, inspired by such lower motives as the fear of punishment. The classic utterance of the contrite heart in the OT is the *Miserere (Ps. 51). In the Gospels the need for contrition is taught esp. in the Parables of the Prodigal Son (Lk. 15: 11–32) and of the Pharisee and the Publican (Lk. 18: 9–14).

*Leo X replied to M. Luther's attack on the medieval notions of contrition in his bull, Exsurge, Domine (15 June 1520; list of heresies condemned repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 488–92, nos. 1451–92). H. Dondaine, OP, L'Attrition suffisante (Bibliothèque Thomiste, 25; 1943). C. R. Meyer, The Thomistic Conception of Justifying Contrition (Mundelein, Ill., 1949). P. de Letter, SJ, 'Perfect Contrition and Perfect Charity', Theological Studies, 7 (1946), pp. 507–24; id., 'Two Concepts of Attrition and Contrition', ibid. 11 (1950), pp. 3–33. T. Ortolan in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 1671–94; P. de Letter, SJ, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 278–83, s.v. See also works cited s.v. PENANCE.

convent. The name 'convent' is derived from the Lat. conventus, a meeting or association of men for some purpose. In ecclesiastical usage it can refer either to the buildings in which a body of religious live together, or to the religious community itself. Historically it has been applied to the domicile of religious of either sex, though in English it tends now to be restricted to houses of women religious.

Conventicles Acts 1664 and 1670. The 1664 Act declared illegal all meetings in private houses or elsewhere of more than five persons (in addition to the household) for worship other than that prescribed in the BCP, while the 1670 Act mitigated the penalties laid down in 1664, but gave wider powers to those employed in suppressing conventicles. The penalties were suspended by the *Toleration Act 1688 ('Declaration of Indulgence'), but the Acts themselves were not finally repealed until the 19th cent.

The 1670 Act is pr. in Gee and Hardy, pp. 623–32 (no. 119). A. Fletcher, 'The Enforcement of the Conventicle Acts 1664–1679', in W. J. Sheils (ed.), Persecution and Toleration (Studies in Church History, 21; Oxford, 1984), pp. 235–46.

Conventual Mass. The public Mass sung (or occasionally said) in religious communities where public choir *office is recited. This Mass is attended by the whole community. In cathedrals and collegiate churches the conventual Mass is properly known as a *Capitular Mass, though the more general term 'conventual' is sometimes used.

Conventuals. The branch of the *Franciscan Order which allowed adaptations and mitigations to the Rule of St *Francis and the use of Papal privileges, including those permitting the accumulation of property. In reaction to their policy there arose the reform of the *Observantines. *Leo X favoured the Observantines and only reluctantly allowed the Conventuals to continue to exist. The term is also used of a similar division in the *Carmelite Order.

The position of the Conventuals is defended by R. M. Huber, OFM Conv., A Documented History of the Franciscan Order, 1182–1517 (Milwaukee and Washington, DC, 1944). G. Odoardi, OFM Conv., in DIP 3 (1976), cols. 1–94, s.v. 'Conventuali', and cols. 94–106, s.v. 'Conventuali Riformati', with extensive bibl. See also other works cited under FRANCISCAN ORDER.

conversi, a name widely used of *lay brothers (q.v.) in monasteries. Their exact relation in medieval times to the other members of the community is a matter of considerable obscurity.

Conversion of St Paul, Feast of. The feast, kept on 25 Jan., is peculiar to the W. and of *Gallican origin, as contrasted with that of Sts Peter and Paul (29 June), which originated in *Rome. In some early *martyrologies it is called the translatio of St Paul, a fact which suggests that the date in the calendar was connected with the *translation of the relics of the Apostle (to his *basilica outside Rome?), though this still leaves its non-Roman origin unexplained.

Convocations of Canterbury and York. The two ancient provincial assemblies of the clergy of the C of E. Traces of Church assemblies of the nation are already met with in *Bede, but their history properly begins with the ecclesiastical reorganization under Abp. *Theodore (668–90). In 735 began the separate provincial authority of *York, which henceforth remained a separate body.

Originally the assemblies consisted only of prelates, but in 1225 Stephen *Langton summoned in addition *proctors for the cathedral and monastic chapters. In 1258 archdeacons were also convoked with letters of proxy from their clergy. The future form of the Convocation of Canterbury was finally reached under Abp. *Pecham in 1283; it consisted of the bishops, abbots, deans, and archdeacons, together with two representatives from the clergy of each diocese and one representative from each chapter. At first the bishops and lower clergy sat together and the whole body of clergy still constitute what is properly one assembly; but since the 15th cent. the convocations have sat as two Houses—the 'Upper' and 'Lower' Houses. The Abp. of Canterbury (or York) presides in the Upper House and in Full Synod (which consists of both Houses sitting together). At the beginning of each Convocation the Lower House is directed to elect one of its members *Prolocutor or Referendary; he presides over the Lower House when it sits separately, is responsible for communications between the Houses, and ascertains the opinion of the Lower House when a vote is taken in Full Synod. Business is normally initiated in the Upper House and sent down to the Lower House for its concurrence, which may be refused. It is possible to initiate business in the Lower House and send it for consideration by the President and Upper House either by a motion of the Lower House or by a process known as gravamen et reformandum; in this a schedule is introduced in the Lower House stating a grievance and usually proposing a remedy. If a grievance is adopted by the Lower House as an articulus cleri, it is transmitted to the Upper House as a united complaint of the inferior clergy. Since the Reformation the heads of religious houses have not sat in Convocation. From 1936 to 1970 the older Universities (Oxford, Cambridge, and London) were represented in the Province of Canterbury, the electors being the clerks in Holy Orders resident or holding offices in the Universities concerned. In 1970 the representation of the Universities was broadened to include more recent foundations.

From a very early date these assemblies were the means through which the clergy taxed themselves. Edward I's attempt under the 'praemunientes clause' (1295) to summon representatives of the clergy to Parliament and thus compel the clergy to grant their taxes in this body failed, and it was not until after the Restoration that Convocation surrendered the right of making its own grants to the King (1664).

In the Middle Ages and later the legislative powers of Convocation varied considerably. The normal method of legislation was by canons. The King was always on the look-out for any infringement of the Royal prerogative; and in 1532 *Henry VIII extorted from Convocation the '*Submission of the Clergy' (q.v.), later embodied in an Act of Parliament (1534). This Act severely limited the powers of Convocation and had a far-reaching effect on its subsequent fortunes. After the Reformation Convocation was both summoned and dissolved at the same time as Parliament, and the validity of the canons enacted by Canterbury Convocation in 1640, after the dissolution of Parliament, has been called in question. The Church of England Convocations Acts 1966, however, laid down that from 1970 there should be quinquennial elections to Convocation, which should meet without reference to Parliamentary sessions.

With the return of the Church of England following the Stuart Restoration in 1660 care was taken to ensure the revival of the Convocations. In 1661 and 1662 a number of projects, including schemes for the reform of Church courts, discipline and clerical income, were debated, but only one item of business was perfected, namely the revision of the BCP in 1662. After 1664 the Convocations ceased to be licensed for business, a seemingly unforeseen consequence of Abp. *Sheldon's surrender of the clergy's right to tax themselves independently of the laity. The next two decades saw repeated attempts to secure a working Convocation, but without success. Its suspension was a major obstacle to the reforming zeal of the episcopate under Sheldon and *Sancroft.

After the Revolution of 1688 the Convocations entered upon a stormy period, when they were drawn into the current disputes about *Divine Right, Non-Resistance, and Passive Obedience. But while the majority of the clergy were *High Churchmen and often Jacobite in sympathy, the Government secured in the early 18th cent. a Whiggish Bench of Bishops, so that the Upper House of Convocation was often in disagreement on important questions with the High Church clergy of the Lower House. This conflict was brought to an end with the *Bangorian Controversy in 1717, when, to prevent the condemnation of a sermon and book by Bp. B. *Hoadly, the Convocations were prorogued by Royal Writ. For nearly a century and a half the powers of the Crown under the Act for the Submission of the Clergy were interpreted as making it inexpedient for the Convocations to discuss any business whatever, and its meetings were purely formal. It was not until 1852, under the combined influence of the *Evangelical and *Oxford Movements, that the Convocation of Canterbury took the bold step of discussing business again. York followed the example of Canterbury in 1861.

The Houses of Convocation have always been, and still are, exclusively clerical assemblies. But from 1885 there was associated with Convocation a 'House of Laymen' in each Province chosen by the Diocesan conferences. At the beginning of the 20th cent. the practice of joint sittings of the two Convocations was also initiated, and in 1904 a Representative Council consisting of the members of both the Convocations together with the two Houses of Laymen, sitting conjointly, was begun. This Representative Council, however, had no legal position or authority until 1920, when it was superseded by the *Church Assembly (q.v.), whose powers were defined in the Church of England Assembly (Powers) Act 1919, commonly known as the *Enabling Act. By the *Synodical Government Measure 1969, practically all the functions of Convocation, including the power to legislate by canon, were transferred to the General Synod, consisting of three Houses of Bishops, Clergy and Laity. Provision was made, however, for each Convocation to meet separately in its own Province and matters before the General Synod concerning doctrine and worship can be referred to them for separate consideration if they exercise their right to require this. Apart from this provision, and a few other minor exceptions, the Convocations may transact formal business only.

E. *Gibson, Synodus Anglicana, or the Constitution and Proceedings of an English Convocation, shown from the Acts and Registers thereof to be Agreeable to the Principles of an Episcopal Church (1702; ed. E. *Cardwell, 1854), with numerous primary docs.; E. Cardwell (ed.), Synodalia: A Collection of Articles of Religion, Canons, and Proceedings of Convocations in the Province of Canterbury, from the Year 1547 to the Year 1717, 2 (1842). The proceedings of the Convocation of Canterbury are pub. in the Chronicle of Convocation (London, 1859 ff.); those of the Convocation of York in the York Journal of Convocation (London, 1874 ff.). A. F. Smethurst and H. R. Wilson (eds.), Acts of the Convocations of Canterbury and York (together with certain other resolutions) passed since the reform of the Convocations in 1921 (1948; enlarged edn. to end of 1970, 1971). T. Lathbury, A History of the Convocation of the Church of England [to 1742] (1842); J. W. Joyce, England's Sacred Synods: A Constitutional History of the Convocations of the Clergy, from the Earliest Records of Christianity in Britain to the date of the Promulgation of the Present Book of Common Prayer (1855). D. B. Weske, Convocation of the Clergy: A Study of its Antecedents and its Rise with special emphasis upon its Growth and Activities in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries (CHS, 1937). E. W. Kemp, Counsel and Consent: Aspects of the Government of the Church as Exemplified in the History of the English Provincial Synods (*Bampton Lectures for 1960; 1961). E. Barker, The Dominican Order and Convocation (1913), pp. 31–76. N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker (1959), pp. 36–67. A. F. Smethurst, Convocation of Canterbury: What it is; what it does; how it works (1949). G. Crosse in DECH (3rd edn. 1948), pp. 144–50, s.v.

Convulsionaries. Adherents of a movement initiated by supposedly miraculous phenomena in 1731 at the tomb of the *Jansenist François de Paris (1690–1727) at Saint-Médard, Paris, that evolved into a prophetic and mystical sect. Its members, who came from a diversified background, were mostly Jansenist *Appellants against the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713). Their prophetical behaviour ('convulsions') and association of pain with spiritual experience is interpreted as an extreme expression of the uneasiness produced in French society by the Jansenist crisis, both in religion and politics. The sect disappeared at the beginning of the 19th cent.

Primary sources collected and ed. by C.-L. Maire, Les convulsionnaires de Saint-Médard: Miracles, convulsions et prophéties à Paris au XVIII^e siècle (Collection Archives, 95 [1985]). R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), esp. ch. 16, 'The Convulsionaries of Saint-Médard', pp. 372–88. B. R. Kreiser, Miracles, Convulsions, and Ecclesiastical Politics in Early Eighteenth-Century Paris (Princeton, NJ, 1978). D. Vidal, Miracles et convulsions jansénistes au XVIII^e siècle (1987). L. Loevenbruck in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 1756–62, s.v. 'Convulsionnaires', with refs. See also works cited s.v. JANSENISM.

Conybeare, Frederick Cornwallis (1856–1924), *Armenian scholar. He was a Fellow of University College, Oxford, from 1881 to 1887, and spent much of his life travelling in search of Armenian MSS. Among his works were a Collation with the Ancient Armenian Versions of the Greek Text of Aristotle's Categories (1892), and editions of important early documents of the Armenian Church, some of which he published in his Rituale Armenorum (1905). His discovery of an Armenian MS in which the concluding verses of St Mark's Gospel (16: 9–20) were assigned to the 'Presbyter Ariston' (whom he identified with *Aristion), attracted much attention. For several years he was a member of the Rationalist Press Association, and his Myth, Magic and Morals, a Study of Christian Origins (1909), written as an attack on Christianity, evoked a reply from W. *Sanday under the title A New Marcion (1909).

L. Mariès, 'Frederick Cornwallis Conybeare (1856–1924). Notice biographique et bibliographie critique', Revue des Études Arméniennes, 6 (1926), pp. 185–332. D. S. Margoliouth in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 210 f.

Conybeare, William John (1815–57), joint author with J. S. *Howson of The Life and Epistles of St Paul (1852). From 1842 to 1848 he was first principal of the Liverpool Collegiate Institute, where he was joined in 1845 by Howson. After resigning on account of poor health, he became Vicar of Axminster, Devon (1848–54). See also HOWSON, J. S.

Unsigned art. (based on information from his son) in DNB 12 (1887), pp. 62 f.

Cook, Stanley Arthur (1873–1949), biblical critic and Semitic historian. A native of King's Lynn, he was educated at Wyggeston School, Leicester, and at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, where he was afterwards Fellow and lecturer (1904–32). From 1932 to 1938 he was Regius Professor of Hebrew. His extensive writings were marked by a wide knowledge, esp. of early Semitic customs and archaeology, which he interpreted with freshness and imagination, though the unconventionality of his conclusions set his work somewhat apart from the main stream of OT discussion. From 1896 to 1903 he was a member of the editorial staff of the Encyclopaedia Biblica, and from 1902 to 1932 edited the journal of the *Palestine Exploration Fund. His writings include The Study of Religions (1914), The Religion of Ancient Palestine in the Light of Archaeology (Schweich Lectures, 1930), The Old Testament: A Reinterpretation (1936), and The 'Truth' of the Bible (1938).

Select bibl. of his works in D. W. Thomas (ed.), Essays and Studies Presented to Stanley Arthur Cook . . . in Celebration of his Seventy-fifth Birthday 12 April 1948 (Cambridge Oriental Series, no. 2, 1950), pp. 1–13. Id. in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 174 f.

Cooper, Thomas (d. 1594), also 'Cowper', Bp. of *Winchester. In 1531 he became a chorister at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he was a Fellow (1540–45) and later Master of Magdalen College School. His Protestant beliefs led him to abandon his project of ordination on *Mary's accession (1553), but he fulfilled his intention shortly after her death (1558). He was a man of great learning, and among his works were a Latin Dictionary (1548), a Chronicle ('Cooper's Chronicle', 1549, a continuation of an unpublished chronicle of Thomas Lanquet, d. 1545), and a Thesaurus Linguae Romanae et Britannicae (1565). In 1562 he wrote An Answer in Defence of the Truth against the Apology of Private Mass directed against an attack on Bp. J. *Jewel's Apology. In 1567 he became Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford, in 1569 Dean of *Gloucester, in 1571 Bp. of *Lincoln, and in 1584 Bp. of Winchester. In the latter capacity he wrote against the *Marprelate tracts and was then himself attacked, esp. in Hay any Work for Cooper.

Cooper's Admonition to the People of England [against Martin Marprelate] (orig. pub. 1589), ed. J. Petherham (London, 1847) and E. Arber (English Scholar's Library, 15; Birmingham, 1882); his Answer in Defence of the Truth against the Apology of Private Mass ed. W. Goode (*Parker Society, 1850), with list of Cooper's works, pp. xi–xv. C. W. Foster (ed.), Lincoln Episcopal Records in the Time of Thomas Cooper (Publications of the Lincoln Record Society, 2; 1912; repr. by the *Canterbury and York Society, 9; 1913). BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 135 f.

Coornhert, Dirck Volckertszoon (1522–90), Dutch theologian. Born in Amsterdam of a wealthy family, he was sent for a time to Spain and Portugal, but soon returned and settled in Haarlem. Here he practised as an engraver in copper and, self-educated, also published translations of the Latin classics into Dutch. As a civic official he became one of the leading supporters of William the Silent suffering exile (1568–72). He defended liberalism against the strongly *Calvinist doctrines then current in the Netherlands, advocating toleration, opposing capital punishment for heretics, and criticizing the *Heidelberg Catechism esp. on the issue of predestination. Influenced by the writings of S. Castellio, and esp. by the Theologia Germanica, he urged the necessity of interior piety and the inward dominion of the Holy Spirit. He rejected the idea of a visible Church and maintained the sufficiency of a faith inspired by the Bible and the Apostles' Creed. Rejecting the notion of original sin and stressing the freedom of the human will, the strongly ethical nature of his thought is especially evident in his Zedekunst dat is Wellevenskunste (1586). The *Arminians and the *Pietists owed something to his influence. A Dutch version of the NT on which he was engaged was incomplete at his death.

Works pub. at Amsterdam (3 vols., 1630). Studies by B. Becker (Rijks Geschiedkundige Publicatiën, Kleine Serie, 25; 1928) and H. Bonger (Amsterdam, 1978). J. A. L. Lancée in Biografisch Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, 3 (1988), pp. 78–83.

cope. A semicircular cloak worn at certain liturgical functions when the *chasuble is not used. Both vestments took their origin in the Roman paenula or pluviale, the cope gradually reaching its present form by being opened in front. It has been held that it did not become a liturgical vestment until the 9th cent. or later, but H. *Leclercq has collected a large number of examples from primitive frescoes and mosaics which suggest that it was regarded as typical of the clergy at least by the 6th cent. The term cappa first appears in *Gregory of Tours (d. 594). In the Middle Ages it was widely used as a ceremonial choir habit by whole communities on feasts, while the 'cappa nigra', a cloak of thick black material serving the same purpose as the original pluviale, was worn in choir as a protection against the cold. The hood of the original garment survives as an ornament (often triangular) on the back of the cope.

In the BCP of 1549 the celebrant at the Holy Communion was ordered to wear a cope or vestment (i.e. chasuble), but in 1552 the rubric was withdrawn. The use of a cope by the celebrant at the Communion in cathedral and collegiate churches was prescribed by can. 24 of 1604. Probably its use never wholly died out in the C of E. It has been extensively revived in England since the middle of the 19th cent. Copes made for the coronation and funeral of *Charles II are still in use in *Westminster Abbey.

Braun, LG, pp. 306–58. E. *Bishop, 'The Origins of the Cope as a Church Vestment', Dublin Review, 120 (1897), pp. 17–37, repr. in id., Liturgica Historica (1918), ch. 11. H. *Leclercq, OSB, and E. Mombert in DACL 3, pt. 1 (1913), cols. 365–81, s.v. 'Chape'.

Copernicus, Nicholas (1473–1543), astronomer. He studied first at the University of Cracow and then read law and medicine in *Bologna and Padua. Owing to the early death of his father, he grew up under the influence of his uncle, Lucas Walzelrode, Bp. of Warmia (in NE Poland), who secured ecclesiastical preferments for him. After serving for some time in his uncle's immediate entourage, he spent the latter part of his life (from 1510) in Frauenburg (the cathedral city of the diocese of Warmia), in which he had held a canonry since 1495 (confirmed in 1497). By 1514 Copernicus had written a short treatise known as the Commentariolus (first published in 1878), sketching out a new system of astronomy in which the sun rather than the earth was the centre of the universe, and the earth became one of the planets revolving round it. This was given mature expression in his De revolutionibus orbium caelestium (1543). The arguments for this at the time were by no means conclusive, but after developments by J. *Kepler, G. *Galileo, I. *Newton and others the system became astronomical orthodoxy. At first theological objections were muted, but when the issues were popularized though the work of Galileo, religious debate became intense, and in 1616 the De revolutionibus was placed on the *Index pending correction. An anonymous preface to the work, written without Copernicus' knowledge by the Lutheran pastor A. *Osiander, and asserting that the system should be treated as merely hypothetical, had probably been intended to ward off theological controversy. Copernicus himself dedicated his book to the Pope and included in it both an appreciative letter from Card. Nicolaus von Schönberg and a brusque dismissal of those who might cavil with it on scriptural grounds.

Crit. edns. of De Revolutionibus [by M. Curtze] for the Societas Copernicana Thorunensis (Toruń, 1873), by F. and C. Zeller (vol. 2 of projected edn. of his works, Munich, 1949), and by R. Gansiniec and others for the Polish Academy of Sciences (Warsaw and Cracow, 1975). Eng. tr. of his Complete Works sponsored by the Polish Academy of Science (3 vols., London, Warsaw, and Cracow, 1972–85: vol. 1 being a facsimile repr. of the MS of De Revolutionibus; vol. 2, Eng. tr. of De Revolutionibus with comm. by E. Rosen; vol. 3, Minor works by id.). Eng. tr. of De Revolutionibus also by A. M. Duncan (London, etc., 1976), and of the Commentariolus, Copernicus' 'Letter against Werner' (a minor astronomical work), and a letter of George Joachim von Lauchen, known as Rheticus, giving a summary of Copernicus' views, with introd. and notes, by E. Rosen, Three Copernican Treatises (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 30; New York, 1939; 3rd edn., with rev. Life of Copernicus and bibl. to 1970, 1971). The Commentariolus is also tr., with comm., by N. W. Swerdlow in the Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society, 117 (1973), pp. 423–512. The standard Life is L. Prowe, Nicolaus Coppernicus (2 vols., Berlin, 1883–4). Other works incl. J. L. E. Dreyer, History of Planetary Systems from Thales to Kepler (Cambridge, 1906; repr. as A History of Astronomy from Thales to Kepler, New York [1953]), pp. 305–44; A. Armitage, Copernicus: The Founder of Modern Astronomy (1938); T. S. Kuhn, The Copernican Revolution (Cambridge, Mass., 1957); A. Koyré, La Révolution Astronomique [1961], pp. 13–115; Eng. tr. (1973), pp. 13–116; O. Pedersen and M. Phil, Early Physics and Astronomy (1974), esp. pp. 299–319; R. S. Westman, 'The Melanchthon Circle, Rheticus, and the Wittenberg Interpretation of the Copernican Theory', Isis, 66 (1975), pp. 165–93; id. (ed.), The Copernican Achievement (UCLA Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies, Contributions, 7; 1975); N. M. Swerdlow and O. Neugebauer, Mathematical Astronomy in Copernicus's De Revolutionibus (New York, etc., 1984). H. Baranowski, Bibliografia Kopernikowska 1509–1955 (Warsaw, 1958); cont. for 1956–71 (ibid., 1973); and for 1972–5 in Studia Copernica, 17 (1977), pp. 179–201.

Copleston, Edward (1776–1849), Bp. of *Llandaff. A fine classical scholar, he was elected a Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, in 1795 and Provost of the college in 1814. In 1826 he became Dean of *Chester, and in 1827 both Bp. of Llandaff and Dean of *St Paul's, holding the offices in plurality. While at Oxford he played a large part in instituting the Honours School with its system of examinations which in essence still survives, and in raising his college to its position of intellectual pre-eminence in the earlier half of the 19th cent., thus providing the setting for the *Oxford Movement. In his theological views Copleston was a '*Noetic', who, despite his scant sympathy with the *Tractarians, counted himself a *High Churchman. His writings, which are few, included some brilliant replies to attacks made on Oxford in the Edinburgh Review.

Copleston's Advice to a Young Reviewer with a Specimen of the Art, orig. pub. Oxford, 1807, was repr. ibid., 1926; also ed. G. [S.] Gordon, Three Oxford Ironies (1927), pp. 49–73, with introd., pp. 7–17 and 37–44. Memoir by W. J. Copleston (London, 1851), with selections from his diary and correspondence. Further extracts from his works pr. by R. *Whately, Remains of the late Edward Copleston (1854), with introd. reminiscences, pp. 1–98. W. Tuckwell, Pre-Tractarian Oxford (1909), pp. 17–50. T. E. Kebbel in DNB 12 (1887), pp. 174–6. See also bibl. to NOETICS.

Coptic (language). 'Copt' is a European form of the Arabic 'Kibt', which is itself derived from the Gk. Αἰγύπτιοι ['Egyptians']. Coptic was the language usually spoken by the 'Copts', the native populace of Egypt, from about the 3rd to the 10th cents. AD. After the 10th cent. the language was gradually supplanted by Arabic; but it appears to have survived in a few places down to the end of the 17th cent., and is still that of the liturgy of the *Coptic Church. In essence it was the language of ancient Egypt, into which a large number of Greek words had been incorporated, and was written in an alphabet closely akin to that of the Greeks. It occurs in four main dialects, namely *Sahidic, *Bohairic, *Fayumic, and Akhmimic. The NT was translated into all four, first into the Sahidic, the dialect used in the south of Egypt, where the need was greatest as the influence of Greek culture was least. Of the extensive remains of early Christian literature in Coptic, much the greater part consists in translations from the Greek. This applies also to the large number of Gnostic writings now known, some of which show little or no Christian influence (see NAG HAMMADI). Among the surviving works originally composed in Coptic are the writings of *Shenoute, some homilies and legends of the saints.

Coptic grammars by J. M. Plumley (Sahidic; London, 1948), A. Mallon, SJ (Fr.; Beirut, 1904; 4th edn. by M. Malinine, 1956, with valuable bibl., pp. 254–401), G. Steindorff (Berlin, 1894; rev. edn., Chicago, 1951), and T. O. Lambdin (Sahidic; Macon, Ga., 1983). W. Till, Achmîmisch-koptische Grammatik (1928); id., Koptische Dialektgrammatik (1931; 2nd edn., 1961); id., Koptische Grammatik, saïdischer Dialekt (1955; 3rd edn., 1966). W. E. Crum, A Coptic Dictionary (1929–39); R. Kasser, Compléments au dictionnaire copte de Crum (Publications de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale. Bibliothèque d'Études Coptes, 7; Cairo, 1964); id., Dictionnaire auxiliaire, étymologique et complet de la langue copte (Geneva, 1967 ff.). W. Kammerer, A Coptic Bibliography (Ann Arbor, Mich., 1950). W. C. Till, 'Coptic and its Value', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 40 (1958), pp. 229–58. A. S. Atiya (ed.), The Coptic Encyclopedia, 8 ('Linguistics') (New York, etc. [1991]). R.-G. Coquin, 'Langue et littérature coptes', in M. Albert and others, Christianismes orientaux (1993), pp. 167–217.

Crit. edns. of Coptic NT by G. Horner: in Bohairic dialect, 4 vols., Oxford, 1898–1905; in Sahidic dialect, 7 vols., ibid., 1911–24. Coptic OT ed. very incompletely and in scattered places; cf. A. Vaschalde, 'Ce qui a été publié des versions coptes de la Bible', R. Bibl., 28 (1919), pp. 220–43, 513–31; 29 (1920), pp. 91–106, 241–58; 30 (1921), pp. 237–46; 31 (1922), pp. 81–8 and 234–58; cont. in Le Muséon, 43 (1930), pp. 409–31; 45 (1932), pp. 117–58; 46 (1933), pp. 299–313. G. Mink, 'Die koptischen Versionen des Neuen Testament', in K. Aland (ed.), Die alten Übersetzungen des Neuen Testaments, die Kirchenväterzitate und Lektionare (Arbeiten zur Neutestamentlichen Textforschung, 5; 1972), pp. 160–299; B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 99–141. G. Mink and S. P. Brock in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 196–200, s.v. 'Bibelübersetzungen, 1. 5'; S. Emmel in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 180–88, s.v. 'Languages (Coptic)', with recent. bibl.

Coptic Church. One of the *Oriental Orthodox Churches. *Eusebius (HE 2. 16) records the tradition that the Church in Egypt was founded by St *Mark the Evangelist, and *Alexandria ranked with *Antioch and *Rome as one of the chief sees of the early Church. The Egyptian Church suffered severely in the persecution under *Diocletian, and it has ever since reckoned its era from AD 284, the year of his accession. In the early 4th cent. Christian *monasticism was founded in Egypt by St *Antony and others, and the fame of the monasteries of *Nitria and *Scete spread throughout Christendom.

The theological controversies of the 5th cent. on the Nature of Christ were embittered by opposition between Alexandria and *Constantinople. At the Council of *Chalcedon (451), *Dioscorus, Patr. of Alexandria, was deposed; the majority of the Copts, however, rejected the Council and its Definition of the two natures in the incarnate Christ and became increasingly isolated from the rest of Christendom. The Orthodox (*Melchite) body established in Alexandria received little support from the native population, and bitter disputes persisted. In Upper Egypt, however, the rapid development of monasticism is attested by the many Coptic 'Lives of the Saints' and 'Sayings of the Fathers' and abundant ruins of their buildings. In 616 the Copts passed for a time under Persian domination. In 642 they were conquered by the Arabs, whose rule in varying form has lasted to the present day. Long periods of comparative peace would be suddenly broken by persecution, e.g. under the Caliph el Hakim (996–1021), who is said to have destroyed 3,000 churches and caused large numbers to apostatize.

In the course of centuries their numbers gradually declined. They are now said to total about 4 million. Their hierarchy consists of a Patriarch, some 24 bishops, and priests and deacons. Outside Egypt there are Coptic dioceses at Jerusalem, in the Sudan, and in South Africa. The *Ethiopian Church is a daughter Church of Egypt, and since 1959 has been autonomous and *autocephalous. The Coptic language is found only in the service-books, which are equipped with an Arabic text in parallel columns. The normal liturgy is that of St *Basil. Five important fasts are observed: (1) The pre-Lenten 'Fast of *Nineveh'; (2) The Great Fast of Lent (55 days); (3) The Fast of the Nativity, before *Christmas (28 days); (4) The Fast of the Apostles, after the Ascension; and (5) The Fast of the Virgin, before the Assumption (15 days). Since *c.*1960 there has been a remarkable revival of monastic life, esp. in the Nitrian Desert.

There is also a small *Uniat Coptic Church, dating from 1741, when Athanasius, the Coptic Bishop of Jerusalem, joined the RC Church. It is said to number *c.*105,000.

J. M. Wansleben, Histoire de l'Église d'Alexandrie, fondée par S. Marc (1677). A. J. Butler, The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt (2 vols., 1884). M. Roncaglia, Histoire de l'Église copte (6 vols., Dar Al-Kalima, 1966 ff.). J. Maspero (posthumous), Histoire des patriarches d'Alexandrie depuis la mort de l'empereur Anastase jusqu'à la réconciliation des Églises jacobites, 515–616 (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, fasc. 237; 1923); R. Strothmann, Die koptische Kirche in der Neuzeit (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 7; 1932). M. Cramer, Das Christlich-Koptische Ägypten einst und heute: Eine Orientierung (Wiesbaden, 1959). P. Verghese (ed.), Koptisches Christentum: Die orthodoxen Kirchen Ägyptens und Äthiopiens (Die Kirchen der Welt, 12; Stuttgart, 1973), pp. 11–129. S. C. Malan (ed. and tr.), Original Documents of the Coptic Church (3 pts., 1872–3); R. M. Woolley (ed. and tr.), Coptic Offices (1930); A. A. King, The Rites of Eastern Christendom, 1 (Rome, 1947), ch. 5, pp. 337–495, with bibl. O. H. E. Burmester, The Egyptian or Coptic Church: A Detailed Description of her Liturgical Services and the Rites and Ceremonies observed in the Administration of her Sacraments (Cairo, 1967); id. (ed. and tr.), Ordination Rites of the Coptic Church (Publications de la Société d'Archéologie Copte, Textes et documents, 16; Cairo, 1985). H. Quecke, Untersuchungen zum koptischen Stundengebet (Publications de l'Institut Orientaliste de Louvain, 3; 1970), with texts. O. F. A. Meinardus, Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts (Cairo, 1961; rev. edn., 1989); id., Christian Egypt Ancient and Modern (ibid., 1965), and other works of this author. A. *Fortescue, The Lesser Eastern Churches (1913), pp. 163–290; D. Attwater, The Dissident Eastern Churches (Milwaukee [1937]); id., The Catholic Eastern Churches (ibid. [1935]), pp. 135–49, both rev. as The Christian Churches of the East (2 vols., [Leominster] 1961; London, 1963), 1, pp. 128–37, 2, pp. 184–92; A. S. Atiya, A History of Eastern Christianity (1968), pp. 11–145. M. Jugie, AA, Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissidentium, 5 (Paris, 1935), pp. 349–787 passim, esp. pp. 458–64. Id. in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2251–306, s.v. 'Monophysite (Église Copte)', with bibl.; C. D. G. Müller in TRE 1 (1977), pp. 512–33, s.v. 'Ägypten IV'; T. Orlandi in TRE 19 (1990), pp. 595–607, s.v. 'Koptische Kirche'; A. S. Atiya in M. Eliade (ed.), Encyclopedia of Religion, 4 (1987), pp. 82–6, s.v.

Corban ('oblation'). A Heb. word (קָרְבָּן), peculiar to *Ezekiel and the Priestly material of the *Pentateuch, for altar offerings, either the fixed obligatory dues, or free-will votive gifts. It is probably to this latter kind of gift that Christ refers in Mk. 7: 11 when He objects to the practice of letting 'Corban' take precedence over the duty of maintaining one's parents.

K. H. Rengstorf in TWNT 3 (1938; Eng. tr., 1966), pp. 860–66, s.v. Κορβᾶν, with further bibl., ibid. 10 (pt. 2; 1979), pp. 1146 f. See also comm. on Mark, Gospel of St, cited s.v.

Corbie. This celebrated monastery, some 10 miles E. of Amiens, was founded from *Luxeuil *c.*660. It possessed a very fine library from which more early MSS have survived than from any other abbey; they played an important part in the transmission of Latin classical and patristic texts. It also had one of the most important *Carolingian theological schools. In 1624 a selection of its books were transferred to *Saint-Germain-des-Prés. At the time of the Revolution (1794) some of these passed to the Bibliothèque Nationale; others were taken to Russia and are now at St Petersburg.

P. Héliot, L'Abbaye de Corbie: Ses églises et ses bâtiments (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique, 29; 1957). Corbie Abbaye Royale: Volume du XIII^e Centenaire (Lille, 1963). D. Ganz, Corbie in the Carolingian Renaissance (Beihefte der Francia, 20; Sigmaringen, 1990). L. Delisle, Le Cabinet des MSS. de la Bibliothèque Nationale, 2 (1874), pp. 104–41, 427–40. O. Dobiaš-Roždestvenskaïa, Histoire de l'atelier graphique de Corbie de 651 à 830 reflétée dans les Corbeienses Leninopolitani (St Petersburg, 1934). B. Bischoff, 'Hadoardus and the Manuscripts of Classical Authors from Corbie', Didascaliæ: Studies in honor of Anselm M. Albareda, ed. S. Prete (New York, 1961), pp. 39–57; Ger. text in his Mittelalterliche Studien, 1 (Stuttgart, 1966), pp. 49–63. C. de Merindol, La Production des Livres peints à l'abbaye de Corbie au XII^ème siècle (Paris thesis, 3 vols., Lille, 1976) E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, 6 (Oxford, 1953), pp. xxii–xxvi. A. *Wilmart, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2, 1914), cols. 2913–58, s.v. 'Corbie (Manuscrits liturgiques de)'. H. Peltier in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 809–24; M. Rouche in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 3 (1986), cols. 224–8, both s.v. with bibl.

Cordeliers. A name sometimes given in France to the Franciscan *Observantines from the knotted cord which they wore round the waist. The word was also assumed by a political club during the French Revolution, as the convent in which it met had once belonged to the Cordeliers.

Corinth. In NT times Corinth was the capital of the Roman province of Achaia. It lay on the great trade route between *Rome and the E. and occupied a very important site for the propagation of the Christian Gospel on account of its political and geographical position, its cosmopolitan population, and its commercial supremacy. The Church was established here by St *Paul *c.*50, and included many prominent Jewish converts (Acts 18: 4 and 8; 1 Cor. 9: 20), but it appears, both from Acts and the two Epp. of Paul to Corinth, that the Christian community consisted largely of Gentiles. It seems to have contained some who prided themselves on their intellect, and certainly many from the poorer classes (1 Cor. 1: 26), including slaves (who were often well-educated). The Corinthian Church took a leading part in the collection for the saints (2 Cor. 9: 2–5). Paul was helped by *Silas and *Timothy and, in spite of Jewish opposition, 'he dwelt there a year and six months' (Acts 18: 11). During his stay, the proconsul *Gallio dismissed a charge against Paul of worshipping contrary to the Jewish Law, a decision which in effect amounted to permission to preach in the province. Paul left behind him a flourishing community, but the pagan antecedents of his converts seriously affected the life of the Church, as is seen in the Epistles to the *Corinthians. In fact the city was noted for its profligacy and moral laxity. In later Christian history Corinth took a relatively minor part.

See also CLEMENT OF ROME.

Good summary by W. M. *Ramsay in HDB 1 (1898), pp. 479–83, s.v. Reports of the modern excavations carried out under the direction of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens have been pub. by H. N. Fowler and others, Corinth (Cambridge, Mass., 1929–43; Princeton, NJ, 1948 ff. [17 vols. in 35 parts to 1985]). R. Carpenter, Ancient Corinth: A Guide to the Excavations (1928; 4th edn. by O. Broneer, 1949). L. Cerfaux, L'Église des Corinthiens (1946). F.-J.[-M.] de Waele, Corinthe et Saint Paul (Les Hauts Lieux de l'Histoire, 15 [1961]). J. Murphy-O'Connor, OP, St Paul's Corinth: Texts and Archaeology (Good News Studies, 6; Wilmington, Delaware, 1983). T. Lenschau and others in PW, Suppl. 4 (1924), cols. 991–1036, s.v. 'Korinthos'; J. Finegan in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, 1 (1962), pp. 682–8, s.v.; C. L. Thompson, ibid., Suppl. Vol. (1976), pp. 179 f., s.v. See also bibl. to following entry.

Corinthians, Epistles to the. These two Epistles of St *Paul to his converts were prob. written from *Ephesus and Macedonia, *c.*52–6.

1 Cor. was occasioned by news which St Paul had received from the Church at Corinth. The subjects dealt with include party-feeling among the Corinthian Christians, and their tendency to think too highly of a certain kind of human 'wisdom' (1: 10–4: 21); his own position as an apostle (4: 1–13; 9); a sexual scandal at Corinth and the treatment of a particular offender (5 and 6); the question of litigation between Christians (6: 1–8); and certain points on which they had consulted him in a letter, namely marriage and celibacy in relation to the Christian gospel (7), problems regarding the relations of Christians with the surrounding paganism (8), behaviour at Christian worship (10 and 11), 'spiritual gifts' such as prophecy and speaking with tongues (12), and the *resurrection of the dead (15). The sections on the Eucharist (10: 16 ff., 11: 20 ff.), on love (agape) as the highest of spiritual gifts (13), and on the Resurrection (15), are among the most important in the NT.

In 2 Cor. the principal topic is apostleship, negatively defined in chs. 10–13, positively in 2: 14–7: 4. Paul's own status as an *apostle had been challenged and his conduct attacked. In the earlier chapters he defends his conduct, setting out at length the authority and ministry of the Christian apostle, which is derived from Christ's New *Covenant, far superior to the *Torah and the Old Covenant of Sinai in both glory and efficacy, in that it effects the reconciliation of humanity with God by the atoning death of Christ (3: 4–6: 10). He rejoices that he and the Corinthians are now one again (7: 8 ff.). Chs. 8–9 deal with the collection for the Church at *Jerusalem which Paul was organizing. Both seem so loosely attached to what proceeds that some think they were originally separate letters. The passage 6: 14–7: 1 may also be a separate fragment, possibly from an earlier epistle (cf. 1 Cor. 5: 9), but conceivably not even written by Paul. Ch. 10 starts afresh with a new treatment of Paul's relations with the Church at Corinth and a severe condemnation of his opponents (ψευδαπόστολοι, 'false apostles'). The content and tone are so different from the earlier celebration of reconciliation that many critics believe they stem from a different epistle, possibly that referred to at 2: 4. Hypotheses about several fragments being combined are common, but many scholars defend the integrity of this epistle and most accept that of 1 Cor. Apart from 2 Cor. 6: 14–7: 1 and 1 Cor. 14: 34–5 the authenticity of neither is seriously questioned today.

Ancient commentators incl. *Chrysostom (Gk.), *Theodoret (Gk.), *Ambrosiaster (Lat.), and *Pelagius (Lat.). Modern comm. on 1 Cor. by H. *Lietzmann (Hb. NT, 1907; 4th edn., with 2 Cor., by W. G. Kümmel, 1949), J. *Weiss (KEK, 1910; repr. 1970), A. *Robertson and A. Plummer (ICC, 1911), E.-B. Allo, OP (Études Bibliques, 1934), C. Spicq, OP (La Sainte Bible, 11, pt. 2, 1948, pp. 161–306), J. Héring (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, 7, 1949; Eng. tr., 1962), C. K. Barrett (Black's NT Comm., 1968), H. Conzelmann (KEK, 1969; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1975]), F. F. Bruce (New Cent. Bib., 1971, with 2 Cor.), W. F. Orr and J. A. Walther (Anchor Bible, 32; 1976), and G. D. Fee (New International Comm. on the NT, 1987); on 2 Cor. by A. Plummer (ICC, 1915), E.-B. Allo, OP (Études Bibliques, 1937), C. Spicq, op. cit., pp. 307–99, W. G. Kümmel, op. cit., J. Héring (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, 8, 1958; Eng. tr., 1967), F. F. Bruce, op. cit., C. K. Barrett (Black's NT Comm., 1973), R. *Bultmann, ed. E. Dinkler (KEK, 1976), V. P. Furnish (Anchor Bible, 32 A; 1984), R. P. Martin (Word Biblical Comm., 40; Waco, Texas, 1986), and M. E. Thrall (ICC, 2 vols., 1994 ff.). W. Schmithals, Die Gnosis in Korinth: Eine Untersuchung zu den Korintherbriefen (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, NF 48; 1956; 2nd edn., 1965; Eng. tr., Nashville [1971]). G. Bornkamm, Die Vorgeschichte des sogenannten Zweiten Korintherbreifes (Sb. (Heid.), 1961, Abh. 2; summary in Eng., 'The History of the Origin of the so-called Second Letter to the Corinthians', New Testament Studies, 8 (1962), pp. 258–64). J. C. Hurd, Jun., The Origin of I Corinthians (1965). G. Theissen, The Social Setting of Pauline Christianity, tr. from essays in various places and ed. J. H. Schütz (1982).

Corinthians, Third Epistle to the. An apocryphal letter written in reply to an equally apocryphal letter from the Church of Corinth. The two are sometimes incorporated in the 'Acts of *Paul' (*c.*170). The Gk. originals survive only in a papyrus codex (containing inter alia the Nativity of Mary) of the 3rd cent. in the *Bodmer collection. The text also survives, as a separate entity, in the biblical *canon of the *Armenian Church as well as in two *Vulgate Latin MSS (one at Milan, the other at Laon) and in a Coptic version of the 'Acts of Paul', while St *Ephraem Syrus (*c.*360) commented on it as though it were a genuine Pauline document. The author insists on the authority of the OT prophets, the resurrection of the flesh, the birth of Christ from Mary, and the creation of man, facts which show that its purpose was anti-*Gnostic.

M. Testuz (ed.), Papyrus Bodmer x–xii (Geneva, 1959), pp. 9–45 (Gk. text with Fr. tr. and introd.). Coptic text in C. Schmidt's crit. edn. of the 'Acta Pauli' (1936, q.v.). Armenian recension in Ger. tr. and two Lat. texts in P. Vetter, Der apokryphe dritte Korintherbrief (1894). Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 380–2. A. F. J. Klijn, 'The Apocryphal Correspondence between Paul and the Corinthians', VC 17 (1963), pp. 2–23. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 601–5; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 136 f.

Cornelius (d. 253), Bp. of *Rome. He was elected Pope in April 251, when, owing to the *Decian persecution and the martyrdom of *Fabian, the see of Rome had been vacant for 14 months. He found himself faced with strong opposition from the *Novatianist schismatics, who objected to his relatively lenient policy towards those who had lapsed during the persecutions; but he had the support of synods at Rome and *Carthage (251–2). Several of his letters, written in a colloquial 'vulgar Latin', have survived, including a correspondence with St *Cyprian. He died in exile, traditionally as a martyr, at Centum Cellae (Civitavecchia), and was buried at Rome in the crypt of Lucina in the 'Coemeterium Callisti', where his tomb is still to be seen with the Latin inscription 'Cornelius Martyr'. Feast day, 16 Sept.

His Epp. to Cyprian are pr. inter Epp. Cypr., nos. 49 and 50. P. *Coustant, Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum, 1 (1721), cols. 123–206; M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, 3 (2nd edn., 1846), pp. 11–89. G. Mercati, D'alcuni nuovi sussidii per la critica del testo di S. Cipriano (1899), pp. 72–86 ('Le lettere di S. Cornelio papa'). M. Bévenot, 'Cyprian and his Recognition of Cornelius', JTS NS, 28 (1977), pp. 346–59. L. Reekmans, La tombe du pape Corneille et sa région cémétériale (Roma Sotterranea Cristiana, 4; Vatican City, 1964). G. Bardy in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 891–4, s.v. 'Corneille (Saint)'.

Cornelius a Lapide (1567–1637), Cornelis Cornelissen van den Steen, Flemish biblical exegete. He was born at Bocholt nr. Liège, and educated at the *Jesuit colleges of Maastricht and *Cologne. In 1592 he entered the Society of Jesus, and was professor of exegesis at Louvain from 1596. In 1616 he was called to Rome, where he taught the same subject and finished his celebrated commentaries, comprising all the Canonical Books except Job and the Psalms, though several of them were published only after his death. His works have owed their enduring popularity, esp. among preachers, to their clarity, deep spirituality, and allegorical and mystical exegesis, buttressed by a wide erudition which enabled the author to draw extensively on the Fathers and on medieval theologians.

Complete edns. of his Comm. on the Bible pub. in 10 vols., Amsterdam, 1681; 11 vols., Venice, 1717; 11 vols., Cologne, etc., 1732; 11 vols., Venice, 1740; and several later edns. Eng. tr. by T. W. Mossman of his Comm. on the Gospels (5 vols., 1876–86) and by W. E. Cobb of his Comm. on 1 Cor. (1896) and on 2 Cor. and Gal. (1897). S. Pagano, OMI, 'Analysis Notionis Inspirationis S. Scripturae apud Cornelium a Lapide', Revue de l'Université d'Ottawa, 15 (1945), pp. 65*–85*. G. Boss, Die Rechtfertigungslehre in den Bibelkommentaren des Kornelius a Lapide (Katholisches Leben und Kämpfen im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 20; 1962). Sommervogel, 4 (1893), cols. 1511–26; 9 (1900), col. 573; Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 379–81. G. Heinrici in PRE (3rd edn.), 4 (1898), pp. 289–91, s.v.

Cornill, Carl Heinrich (1854–1920), OT scholar. He was professor of OT exegesis at Königsberg (1888), Breslau (1898), and Halle (1910). In the main he was a disciple of J. *Wellhausen. He wrote several books, notably an Introduction to the Canonical Books of the OT (1891) (Eng. tr. of 5th edn., 1907) and a History of the People of Israel (1898, Eng. tr. also 1898), which through their wide circulation did much to spread Wellhausen's methods of criticism and exegesis.

K. v. Rabenau in Neue Deutsche Biographie, 3 (1957), pp. 367 f.

Coronation of our Lady. The final triumph of the Blessed Virgin in heaven, wherein she was crowned by her Divine Son. It is the subject of the fifth *Glorious Mystery of the *Rosary. The octave-day of the *Assumption of the BVM was observed in a few places as the feast of her Coronation, and the calendar introduced in 1969 has a *memoria of the BVM as Queen on this day (22 Aug.).

Coronation Rite in England. The rite for the coronation of English kings falls into three parts: (1) the promises made by the king and his acclamation by the people; (2) the consecration and anointing of the king; (3) the vesting, coronation, and enthronement of the king (and coronation of the queen consort), followed by the homage and the king's Communion. These three divisions appear throughout the history of the rite.

The earliest surviving rite for the coronation of an English king (based on texts of both English and Continental origin) dates from the 9th cent. It was amplified thereafter, prob. in the early 10th cent., and was used, for example, at the coronation of King Edgar in 973. In the course of time it underwent various further modifications, the most elaborate form of it being that in the Liber Regalis, which was used in 1308 for Edward II. For the coronation of *James I in 1603 it was translated into English, the penitential psalms were omitted, and the Eucharist was conformed, with certain variations, to that in the BCP. A drastic rearrangement and curtailment was made in 1685 by Abp. W. *Sancroft to suit current ideas, and since *James II, being a RC, could not communicate, the Communion Service was omitted. For the coronation of William and Mary in 1689 the Eucharist was reinstated in its central position, and among other changes Parliament caused an oath to be added for the defence of *Protestantism. Since 1689 the only changes have been minor abbreviations.

The most useful collection of docs. is L. G. Wickham Legg, English Coronation Records (1901). Much interesting material is assembled in A. Taylor, The Glory of Regality (1820). Texts of the rite in J. Wickham Legg (ed.), Three Coronation Orders (HBS 19; 1900; contains the Order of William III and Mary, an Anglo-French version of the English Coronation Order, and the Consecration of the Anglo-Saxon King); C. Wordsworth (later Subdean of Salisbury), The Manner of the Coronation of King Charles the First (HBS 2; 1892); F. Sandford, The History of the Coronation of . . . King James II . . . and Queen Mary (1687). The Coronation Service of her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. With a short historical Introduction, Explanatory Notes, and an Appendix by E. C. Ratcliff (1953).

Modern studies include R. M. Woolley, Coronation Rites (Cambridge Handbooks of Liturgical Study, 1915); E. C. Ratcliff, The English Coronation Service (1936; with text of Rite used in 1911); R. H. Murray, The King's Crowning (1936), with bibl. P. E. Schramm, A History of the English Coronation (Eng. tr. by L. G. Wickham Legg, 1937). E. Eichmann, Königs- und Bischofsweihe (Sb. (Bayr.), 1928, Abh. 6); id., Der Kaiserkrönung im Abendland (2 vols., Würzburg, 1942). C. A. Bouman, Sacring and Crowning: The Development of the Latin Ritual for the Anointing of Kings and the Coronation of an Emperor before the Eleventh Century (Bijdragen van het Instituut voor Middeleeuwse Geschiedenis der Rijks-Universiteit te Utrechts, 30; 1957). P. L. Ward, 'The Coronation Ceremony in Mediaeval England', Speculum, 14 (1939), pp. 160–78, with refs. C. Dawson, Beyond Politics (1939), pp. 93–115 ('Considerations on the Coronation of an English King'). H. G. Richardson, 'The Coronation in Medieval England', Traditio, 16 (1960), pp. 111–202. J. L. Nelson, 'The Earliest Royal Ordo: Some Liturgical and Historical Aspects', in B. Tierney and P. Linehan (eds.), Authority and Power: Studies on Medieval Law and Government Presented to Walter Ullmann (Cambridge, 1980), pp. 29–48, repr. in her Politics and Ritual in Early Medieval Europe (1986), pp. 341–60; id., 'The Second English Ordo', ibid., pp. 361–74; see also nos. 10–14 and 17. A. Hughes, 'The Origins and Descent of the Fourth Recension of the English Coronation', in J. M. Bak (ed.), Coronations: Medieval and Early Modern Monarchic Ritual (Berkeley, Los Angeles, and Oxford [1990]), pp. 197–216.

corporal (from Lat. corpus, 'body', since it holds the Body of the Lord). In W. liturgical usage, a square piece of linen on which the bread and wine are placed and consecrated in the *Eucharist. Such a cloth was used in the 4th cent., but there was no distinction between the corporal and the ordinary linen altar cloth now used under the corporal before the 9th cent. Formerly it was large enough to cover the chalice also (as it still is among the *Carthusian monks), but later a second folded corporal (now called the *pall) was introduced for this purpose. See also ANTIMINSION, FILETON, and BURSE.

Braun, LP, pp. 205–9. E. G. C. F. Atchley, 'On Certain Variations from the Rule Concerning the Material of the Altar Linen', Transactions of the St Paul's Ecclesiological Society, 4 (1900), pp. 147–60, esp. pp. 156–60. N. F. Robinson, SSJE, 'Concerning Three Eucharistic Veils of Western Use', ibid. 6 (1906–10), pp. 129–60, esp. pp. 129–40. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 4 (1908), pp. 386 f., s.v.

corporal works of mercy. There are traditionally seven: (1) feeding the hungry; (2) giving drink to the thirsty; (3) clothing the naked; (4) harbouring the stranger; (5) visiting the sick; (6) ministering to prisoners; (7) burying the dead. Cf. Mt. 25: 35 f. See also SPIRITUAL WORKS OF MERCY.

Corporation Act 1661. The Act of the 'Cavalier Parliament' requiring all members of municipal corporations to take an oath abjuring rebellion against the king, declaring the *Solemn League and Covenant null and unlawful, and affirming that they had received the Sacrament of Communion acc. to the rites of the C of E within the year preceding their election. It was repealed in 1828.

Text repr. in Gee and Hardy, pp. 594–600 (no. 116).

Corpus Christi, Feast of, officially called 'Festum Corporis et Sanguinis Christi' in the RC Church since 1970. The feast commemorating the institution and gift of the Holy *Eucharist, observed in the W. Church on the Thursday after *Trinity Sunday. The natural day in the Christian calendar for this commemoration would be *Maundy Thursday, on which the Eucharist was instituted; but the memory of the Passion on that day made a separate day for the Eucharist desirable, and the Thursday after Trinity Sunday was chosen as the first free Thursday after Eastertide. The institution of the feast was largely due to the influence of Blessed *Juliana (d. 1258), a devout nun of Liège who was led to take action in the matter *c.*1230 in response to a vision. In 1264 its observance was commanded by the bull 'Transiturus' of Urban IV, and in the 14th cent. the keeping of the feast became universal in the W. The services of the day have traditionally been attributed to St *Thomas Aquinas; though modern scholarship has challenged the authenticity of the material on which this ascription is based, it is defended on internal evidence. Outdoor processions with the Bl Sacrament are common in some countries.

See also LAUDA SION and PANGE LINGUA.

P. Browe, SJ (ed.), Textus antiqui de Festo Corporis Christi (Münster, 1934). E. Dumoutet, Corpus Domini: Aux sources de la piété eucharistique médiévale (1942). C. Lambot, OSB, and I. Fransen, OSB, L'Office de la Fête-Dieu primitive: Textes et mélodies retrouvés (Maredsous, 1946). Studia Eucharistica: DCC Anni de Condito Festo Sanctissimi Corporis Christi 1246 1946 (Antwerp, 1946). L. M. J. Delaissé, 'A la recherche des origines de l'office du Corpus Christi dans les manuscrits liturgiques', Scriptorium, 4 (1950), pp. 220–39; P.-M. Gy [OP], 'L'Office du Corpus Christi et S. Thomas d'Aquin: État d'une recherche', RSPT 64 (1980), pp. 491–507. M. Rubin, Corpus Christi: The Eucharist in Late Medieval Culture (Cambridge, 1991), pp. 164–212.

Corpus Iuris Canonici. The chief collection of *canon law in the W. Church before the promulgation of the *Codex Iuris Canonici in 1917. It was composed of: (1) the 'Decretum' of *Gratian, a collection of canons of Councils, decrees of Popes, and other material put together in the middle of the 12th cent. This collection had no authority other than that of the individual canons which composed it; (2) the collection of *Decretals of *Gregory IX, compiled at the command of that Pope by St *Raymond of Peñafort, and intended as a supplement to the 'Decretum' of Gratian. It was divided into five books and promulgated in 1234. In addition to the authority already possessed by its component parts, it received the further authority of Gregory IX; (3) the *Sext. A sixth book added to the Decretals of Gregory by *Boniface VIII in 1298; (4) the '*Clementines', a further collection compiled by *Clement V and promulgated after his death by *John XXII in 1317; (5) the '*Extravagantes' of John XXII, namely the decrees of that Pope collected by a private person and published in 1325; (6) the 'Extravagantes Communes', the decrees of various Popes between 1261 and 1484. These several items, the last two of which were unofficial insertions, are found in a single collection in printed editions from 1499 onwards, though the name did not come into general use till after Gregory XIII's bull 'Cum pro munere' (1 July 1580).

Best edn. by E. Friedberg (2 vols., Leipzig, 1879–81). Crit. edn. of the Extravagantes of John XXII by J. Tarrant (Monumenta Iuris Canonici, 8th ser., vol. 6; Vatican City, 1983). P. Torquebiau and G. Mollat in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 610–64 s.v., incl. bibl.

correctoria (Lat., 'correctories'). The term is applied to two kinds of medieval works:

(1) Books containing sets of variant readings for 'correcting' the corrupted text of the Latin *Vulgate Bible. The *Dominican and *Franciscan friars took an active part in the composition and diffusion of such books.

(2) Polemical writings between Franciscans and Dominicans, criticizing or defending the teachings of St *Thomas Aquinas, after the Paris and Oxford condemnations of 1277 and the Correctorium Fratris Thomae (1278) of the English Franciscan, William de la Mare.

(1) R. Loewe in G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 2 (1969), pp. 148–52.

(2) D. A. Callus, OP, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 349–52, s.v., both with further refs.

corrody. Originally the right possessed by some benefactors of religious houses or their nominees to board and lodging within them. The term came also to be applied to pensions and other similar allowances (mostly in kind) made by the monastery to those who served its various needs or who, by the payment of a lump sum, had secured a corrody as a kind of annuity for life. Their prevalence was one of the causes of monastic impoverishment in the later Middle Ages.

On the etymology of the word see OED, s.v. J. R. H. Moorman, Church Life in England in the Thirteenth Century (1945), pp. 46 and 269–71; J. M. Tillotson, 'Pensions, Corrodies and Religious Houses: An Aspect of the Relations of Crown and Church in Early Fourteenth-Century England', Journal of Religious History, 8 (1974–5), pp. 127–43; B. Harvey, Living and Dying in England 1100–1540: The Monastic Experience (Oxford, 1993), pp. 179–209.

Cosin, John (1594–1672), Bp. of *Durham. He was a member of a wealthy family of *Norwich and educated at Caius College, Cambridge. After holding several other benefices he was collated to a canonry at Durham in 1625 and became rector of Brancepeth in Co. Durham in 1626. He was a personal friend of W. *Laud and R. *Montague, and as such incurred the hostility of the *Puritan party. This was increased when he published, in 1627, his famous Collection of Private Devotions, a book of prayers compiled at the instigation of *Charles I for the use of Queen *Henrietta Maria's English maids of honour. In 1635 he was elected master of Peterhouse, whose chapel he decorated acc. to High Church principles, and in 1640 he was appointed Dean of *Peterborough. The Long Parliament deprived him of all his benefices and in 1644 he was ejected from the mastership of Peterhouse. In the same year he went to *Paris, where he became chaplain to the C of E members of the Queen's household. He showed sympathy for the *Huguenots, and engaged in bitter controversy with the RCs, disinheriting his son on his reception into the RC Church. After the Restoration he returned to England and was made Bp. of Durham in 1660. He attended the *Savoy Conference in 1661 and had considerable influence on the subsequent revision of the BCP. This included his new translation of several of the collects, and his translation of the '*Veni Creator' was incorporated into the *Ordinal. A diligent administrator and pastor, as bishop he used all the powers at his command to induce both Puritans and RCs to conform to the C of E. He was also a keen business man who sanctioned the sale of offices in his patronage, and he was one of the three bishops who advocated divorce in cases of adultery. Most of his literary works are of a controversial nature, being directed esp. against RC doctrine. He attacked *transubstantiation in his Historia Transubstantiationis Papalis (written 1656, pub. 1675), and the inclusion of the so-called Apocrypha in the RC Canon of the Scriptures in A Scholastical History of the Canon of Holy Scripture (1657). See also DURHAM BOOK.

Works pub. in the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology (5 vols., 1843–55), with Life in vol. 1, pp. xiii–xx; G. Ornsby (ed.), The Correspondence of John Cosin (Surtees Society, 52 for 1868, and 55 for 1870; 1869–72). Crit. edn. of A Collection of Private Devotions by P. G. Stanwood and D. O'Connor (Oxford, 1967). Modern Life by P. H. Osmond (London, 1913). J. G. Hoffman, 'The Puritan Revolution and the "Beauty of Holiness" at Cambridge', Proceedings of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, 72 (for 1982–3; 1984), pp. 94–105, and other arts. by this author there mentioned. C. W. Dugmore, Eucharistic Doctrine in England from Hooker to Waterland (1942), pp. 102–10. J. H. Overton in DNB 12 (1887), pp. 264–71.

Cosmas and Damian, Sts, the patron saints of physicians. Nothing precise as to their lives seems discoverable, though it is unnecessary to suppose that their legend has a mythological basis founded on that of the 'Dioscuri'. Acc. to later tradition, the twin brothers practised their profession without claiming reward from their patients, and were hence known as the 'moneyless' (ἀνάργυροι). Both are also supposed to have suffered martyrdom. Their Passion, which exists in several forms and languages, is late and historically valueless. Their cultus was firmly established in the E. in the 5th cent., and at *Rome a church was constructed in their honour on the edge of the Forum out of a temple of Romulus, by Felix IV (526–30), with the saints depicted in mosaics. The two saints are mentioned in the *Canon of the Roman Mass. Feast day, in the E., 1 July (also 1 Nov.); in the W., 26 (previously 27) Sept.

The Gk. and Lat. recensions of the Acta and Passio are listed in BHG (3rd edn., 1957), 1, pp. 126–36, and in BHL 1 (1898–9), pp. 297 f., and Novum Supplementum (1986), pp. 227–9. Discussion and extracts in AASS, Sept. 7 (1760), pp. 430–77. L. Deubner, Kosmas und Damian: Texte und Einleitung (1907). The oldest Greek text, discovered in 1907, ed. E. Rupprecht (Neue Deutsche Forschungen. Abteilung Klassische Philologie, 1; Berlin, 1935). Evidence for growth of the cult in AASS, Nov. 2, pt. 2 (1931), pp. 528 f. M.-L. David-Danel, Iconographie des saints médecins Côme et Damien (Lille, 1958), A. Wittmann, Kosmas und Damian: Kultausbreitung und Volksdevotion (1967). M. van Esbroeck, SJ, 'La diffusion orientale de la légende des saints Cosme et Damien', Hagiographie, Cultures et Sociétés, IV^e–XII^e siècles: Actes du Colloque organisé à Nanterre et à Paris (2–5 mai 1979) (1981), pp. 61–77. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; 1938), pp. 137–40. R. Krautheimer, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 1, fasc. 3 (Rome [1946]), pp. 137–43.

Cosmas Indicopleustes (Κοσμᾶς Ἰνδικοπλεύστης, i.e. 'Cosmas, the Indian navigator'; mid-6th cent.), geographer. He was a merchant of *Alexandria who may have become a monk. His 'Christian Topography' (Χριστιανικὴ τοπογραφία), in 12 books *c.*547, attacks the Ptolemaic system in favour of various fantastic astronomical doctrines intended to harmonize with a literal understanding of the Bible. The chief value of the book lies in its geographical information (esp. on *Sri Lanka) and its witness to the spread of the Christian Church at his time. In exegesis Cosmas follows *Theodore of Mopsuestia; he was probably a *Nestorian.

Editio princeps by B. *Montfaucon, OSB, Collectio Nova Patrum, 2 (1707), pp. 113–345, from Vat. gr. 699, the oldest MS (8th–9th cent.); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 88. 9–476. Crit. edns. by E. O. Winstedt, Cambridge, 1909, and, with Fr. tr., by W. Wolska-Conus (SC 141, 159, 197; 1968–74). Eng. tr., with notes, by J. W. McCrindle (Works issued by the Hakluyt Society, 98; 1897). W. Wolska, La Topographie chrétienne de Cosmas Indicopleustès: Théologie et Science au VI^e siècle (Bibliothèque Byzantine, 3; 1962); T. Hainthaler in A. Grillmeier, Jesus der Christus im Clauben der kirche, 2/4 (1990), pp. 150–65; Eng. tr. (1996), pp. 147–61. E. Peterson, 'Die alexandrinische Liturgie bei Kosmas Indicopleustes', EL 46 (1932), pp. 66–74. M. V. Anastos, 'The Alexandrian Origin of the Christian Topography of Cosmas Indicopleustes', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 3 (1946), pp. 73–80. Krumbacher, pp. 412–14; Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 95–8. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 820–49, s.v. 'Kosmas Indicopleustès'.

Cosmas Melodus, St (*c.*675–*c.*751) also 'Cosmas of Jerusalem' and 'Cosmas of Maïuma', author of Greek liturgical hymns. He was adopted by the father of St *John of Damascus and educated by a monk, also called Cosmas, who also wrote poetry, whence a certain confusion regarding the authenticity of some of the poetry of the younger author. Early in the 8th cent. he entered the *Laura of St *Sabas nr. *Jerusalem, and in 735 became Bp. of Maïuma nr. Gaza. The most famous of his works are his '*canons' (κανόνες), odes in honour of the great Christian feasts such as the *Nativity, the *Epiphany, and *Exaltation of the Cross, of which 14 were incorporated in the liturgical books of the E. Church. He also wrote ἰδιόμελα, which are smaller poems, also dealing with religious subjects. His poetry is brilliant in form and metrical design, inspired by the language of the Bible and the doctrine of the Church, though the clarity of thought and expression is frequently impaired by the artificial structure of the verse. Cosmas is also most probably the author of a Commentary on the poems of St *Gregory of Nazianzus, first pub. by A. *Mai in Spicilegium Romanum, 2. 2 (1839), pp. 1–306. Feast day in E., 14 Oct.

His 14 canons are pr. in W. Christ and M. Paranikas (eds.), Anthologia Graeca Carminum Christianorum (Leipzig, 1871), pp. 161–204. His Comm. on the Carmina of St Gregory of Nazianzus repr. from A. Mai in J. P. Migne, PG 38. 339–680. Comm. on these canons by Theodore Prodromus (early 12th cent.; cf. Krumbacher, pp. 87 f., 749–60), pub. in part by H. M. Stevenson (Rome, 1888); further comm., based on that of Theodore Prodromus, by *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain, Ἑορτοδρόμιον (Venice, 1836; subsequently repr.). T. E. Detorakis, Κοσμᾶς ὁ Μελωδός. Βίος καὶ ἔργο (Thessalonica, 1979; with summary in Fr.). On the canon on the Recovery of the Cross cf. H. J. W. Tillyard, 'A Canon by Saint Cosmas', BZ 28 (1928), pp. 25–37 (with edn. of music).

Cosmocrator (Gk. κοσμοκράτωρ, lit. 'Ruler of the World'). The word, taken from pagan religious vocabulary, is used in the NT (Eph. 6: 12) in the plural for the devil and his demons (cf. Jn. 12: 31; 2 Cor. 4: 4). In Hellenistic writers, it was esp. employed of the supposed rule of malignant spirits over the powers of nature, and thus came to be used as a technical term for Satan, e.g. by the *Gnostics and *Marcion. In the system of *Valentinus the Cosmocrator was contrasted with the *Demiurge.

cosmogony (Gk. κοσμογονία). A doctrine or myth about the origin of the universe. The word is used esp. of the speculations of the early Greek philosophers and also of the pagan mythologies.

Cosmological Argument (from Gk. κόσμος, 'world'). The name is used to refer to a family of arguments all of which hold that the existence of the world or universe (as opposed to its character) must be caused by God. In some forms the argument maintains that God must be postulated as a cause of the world's beginning (this form of the argument is sometimes called 'the kalām cosmological argument', after the Arabic school of thought which advocated it). Other forms of the argument suggest that the existence of the world implies the existence of God whether or not the world had a beginning. The philosophical roots of the argument lie in the work of ancient Greek philosophers such as *Plato and *Aristotle. More developed versions can be found in Jewish, Islamic and Christian writers including *Maimonides, Al-Ghazali (1056–1111), St *Anselm, St *Thomas Aquinas, *Duns Scotus, R. *Descartes, J. *Locke, and G. W. *Leibniz. The argument has been subjected to much philosophical criticism (notably by D. *Hume and I. *Kant). It is, however, still probably the most popular theistic argument with those who believe that the existence of God can be proved or in some sense rationally supported.

The subject regularly finds a place in philosophical discussions of belief in God as well as in works on the philosophers mentioned above. Works specifically devoted to it incl. W. L. Rowe, The Cosmological Argument (Princeton, NJ, and London [1975]); A. [G. N.] Flew, 'What are Cosmological Arguments?', in id. (ed.), The Presumption of Atheism and Other Philosophical Essays on God, Freedom and Immortality (1976), pp. 53–60; and W. L. Craig, The Cosmological Argument from Plato to Leibniz (1980).

cosmology (Gk. κόσμος, 'the world' + λόγος, 'a doctrine'). The part of *metaphysics which deals with the world, considered as a totality of phenomena in time and space. It was one of the accepted divisions of philosophy among thinkers of the *Enlightenment, and the word was adopted thence by I. *Kant, who denied, however, that its conclusions were capable of ultimate justification by the speculative intellect.

Cotelier, Jean Baptiste (1627–86), French *patristic scholar. In 1667 he was appointed by J. B. Colbert to assist with the cataloguing of the Greek MSS in the Royal Library at Paris. His writings include a celebrated edition of the *Apostolic Fathers published in 1672, as well as Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta (3 vols., 1677–86).

J. B. Martin in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 1922–4.

cotta. A shortened form of the *surplice reaching to the waist or a little lower, with less ample sleeves, and a square-cut yoke at the neck. In comparatively modern times it virtually ousted the medieval shape of surplice in the RC Church. More recently, however, the surplice has sometimes been preferred.

Braun, LG, pp. 136–46.

Cottonian Library. The large collection of MSS, state papers, and books brought together by Sir Robert (Bruce) Cotton (1571–1631). It was in the possession of his descendants until an Act of Parliament (the British Museum Act 1770) brought it under public control. In 1731, while housed at Ashburnham House, part of the collection was destroyed by fire. When the British Museum was founded in 1753, it was transferred to Bloomsbury, its present home. Among its many MSS of theological and religious interest are the 'Cottonian Genesis' (Otho B. vi; a MS of the *Septuagint text but now surviving only in fragments) and the 'Lindisfarne Gospels' (Nero D. iv). The curious shelf-marks with the names of the Roman emperors were introduced when the books were arranged under a series of Imperial busts.

A Catalogue of the Manuscripts in the Cottonian Library deposited in the British Museum (1802). K. Sharpe, Sir Robert Cotton 1586–1631 (Oxford, 1979), esp. pp. 48–83. On Cotton's early life, see also H. Mirrlees, A Fly in Amber (1962).

Council. A formal meeting of bishops and representatives of several churches convened for the purpose of regulating doctrine or discipline. General or *Oecumenical Councils are assemblies of the bishops representing the whole Church. The decrees of such General Councils are held to possess the highest authority which the Church can give, and RCs assert that such councils must be summoned, and their decrees confirmed, by the Pope. Local or 'particular' councils represent the various units—e.g. *provinces, *patriarchates, *exarchates—of the Church, but these are now more often called by other names, e.g. 'synods'. Acc. to Acts 15, the first Council of the Church was held at Jerusalem. See also CONCILIAR THEORY.

Of the many edns. of the Acta of Ecclesiastical Councils, the first was that of J. Merlin (2 vols., Paris, 1524). Later important collections incl. those of J. *Hardouin, J. D. *Mansi, C. H. *Turner, and E. *Schwartz (qq.v.). Fullest ed. of British Councils by D. *Wilkins (q.v.), now partially superseded by Councils & Synods with other Documents Relating to the English Church: 1. A.D. 871–1204, ed. D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke (2 vols., Oxford, 1981); 2. 1205–1313, ed. F. M. Powicke and C. R. Cheney (2 vols., ibid., 1964). C. J. *Hefele and H. *Leclercq, OSB, Histoire des conciles (11 vols. in 22 parts, 1907–52); W. Brandmüller (ed.), Konziliengeschichte (Paderborn, etc., 1979 ff.). On early Greek Councils, CPG 4 (1980), pp. 1–184 (nos. 8500–9444). Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum (Amsterdam, 1969 ff.). See also bibl. to OECUMENICAL COUNCILS.

Council for World Mission. In 1966 the Congregational Council for World Mission was formed to succeed the *LMS and the Commonwealth Missionary Society. Its members were the *Congregational Churches of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. Though a Congregational Council, it encouraged Churches 'to assume for themselves such form of church order as to them shall appear most agreeable to the Word of God'. When the *United Reformed Church was formed in 1972, the Council was enlarged, and in 1973 its name was changed to Council for World Mission (Congregational and Reformed). In 1977 the Council was fully internationalized, with 22 member Churches in all continents, but principally those Churches which had been associated with the LMS or *Presbyterian missionary work. Since some of these (e.g. the Church of *South India) are episcopal in form, it was agreed to call the Council simply the Council for World Mission.

Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland. The organization which in 1990 succeeded the *British Council of Churches (q.v.). It has the same basis, but a new commitment to the search for unity and to common evangelism and service. It embraces a wider spectrum of Christian traditions, including among its members the RC Church in England, Wales, and Scotland, *Pentecostal and *Holiness Churches, and the Russian, Greek, and Oriental *Orthodox Churches, as well as the *Anglican and mainstream Protestant Churches. It co-ordinates the work of the new national ecumenical bodies—Churches Together in England, ACTS (Action of Churches Together in Scotland), CYTUN (Churches Together in Wales)—and the Irish ecumenical bodies. It is directed and managed by an Assembly, Church Representatives Meeting, and a Steering Committee. It has six Presidents.

The Next Steps for Churches Together in Pilgrimage, pub. by the British Council of Churches and the *Catholic Truth Society [1989].

Counsels of Perfection. Traditionally three, i.e. poverty, or renunciation of private property (in some cases even of communal property); chastity, or renunciation of marriage; and obedience to the lawful commands of lawful superiors (sometimes regarded as involving the interior submission of the mind and will as well). Since the late Middle Ages, they have been regarded as forming the basis of religious life in nearly all its forms.

Counter-Reformation. The revival of the RC Church in Europe, usually considered as extending from about the middle of the 16th cent. to the period of the *Thirty Years War (1618–48). Both the conception and the term itself have their dangers, since, though greatly stimulated by Protestant opposition, reform movements within the RC Church had begun almost simultaneously with the Lutheran schism, and the two reforming movements may be regarded with some justification as streams proceeding in reverse directions but from the same source. F. *Ximénez de Cisneros, G. *Savonarola, and M. *Luther himself, in his early career as a Catholic reformer, represent early stirrings of conscience within the Church against the abuses of the Renaissance age, but the new religious orders of the 1520s (*Capuchins, *Theatines, *Barnabites) should probably be regarded as the first organic signs of the Counter-Reformation. These orders preceded by some years St *Ignatius Loyola's foundation of the *Jesuits, but soon after its confirmation by *Paul III in 1540 the latter organization became the spearhead of the movement both within Europe and as a missionary force in America and the East. The definitions of doctrine and various internal reforms accomplished in the last session of the Council of *Trent (1562–3) sealed the triumph of the Papacy both over those Catholics, like the Emp. Ferdinand I and Charles IX of France, who wished for conciliation with the Protestants, and over those French and Spanish bishops who had opposed Papal claims. The Popes of the later 16th cent., notably *Paul IV, *Pius V, and *Sixtus V, took advantage of peace in Italy to improve discipline and efficiency within the *Curia and amongst the episcopate. With the *Inquisition they paralleled a Spanish conception of ecclesiastical discipline at least in Italy, while Spain under *Philip II, the strongest military power of the day, constituted itself the secular arm of the Counter-Reformation throughout Europe. If, however, the movement in its later stages appears increasingly a product of Spanish hegemony and national ideals, there can be no question regarding the apostolic zeal which continued to mark such leaders as St *Francis de Sales and St Charles Borromeo, or regarding the spiritual qualities of the Spanish mystics. The all-pervasive zeal of the Jesuits, the co-operation of the Papal nuncios, the Index Librorum Prohibitorum, the skilful manipulation of the constitutional machinery of the Holy Roman Empire, and the conversion of several important princes were but a few of the factors making for success during the late 16th and early 17th cents. Within Europe the greatest triumph of the movement was the reconquest to the Roman obedience of S. Germany and Poland. In Central Europe the position was scarcely stabilized until the Peace of *Westphalia (1648).

M. Philippson, Les Origines du catholicisme moderne: La contre-révolution religieuse au XVIe siècle (Brussels, etc., 1884); P. Janelle, The Catholic Reformation (Milwaukee, 1949); H. O. Evennett, The Spirit of the Counter-Reformation (Birkbeck Lectures, 1951, ed. J. Bossy; Cambridge, 1968); A. G. Dickens, The Counter Reformation (1968); M. R. O'Connell, The Counter Reformation 1559–1610 (New York and London, 1974); A. D. Wright, The Counter Reformation: Catholic Europe and the Non-Christian World (1982); L. Châtellier, L'Europe des dévots (1987; Eng. tr., The Europe of the Devout: The Catholic Reformation and the Formation of a New Society, Cambridge, 1989). J. Delumeau, Le Catholicisme entre Luther et Voltaire (Nouvelle Clio, 30 bis; 1971; Eng. tr., 1977). H. Jedin, Katholische Reformation oder Gegenreformation? Ein Versuch zur Klärung der Begriffe nebst einer Jubiläumsbetrachtung über das Trienter Konzil (Lucerne, 1946). P. Broutin, L'Évêque dans la tradition pastorale du XVIe Siècle ([Fr. adaptation of an essay by H. Jedin, orig. pub. 1942], 1953). J. Bossy, 'The Counter-Reformation and the People of Catholic Europe', Past and Present, 47 (1970), pp. 51–70. D. Fenlon, Heresy and Obedience in Tridentine Italy: Cardinal Pole and the Counter Reformation (Cambridge, 1972). W. Reinhard, 'Gegenreformation als Modernisierung? Prolegomena zu einer Theorie des konfessionellen Zeitalters', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 68 (1977), pp. 226–52. E. Iserloh, J. Glazik, and H. Jedin, Reformation, Katholische Reform und Gegenreform (Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte, ed. H. Jedin, 4, 1967), pp. 449–686 (Eng. tr., History of the Church, ed. H. Jedin and J. Dolan, 5; 1980, pp. 431–645). J. O'Malley, SJ (ed.), Catholicism in Early Modern History: A Guide to Research (Reformation Guides to Research, 2; St Louis [1988]). L. Cristiani in Fliche and Martin, 17 (1948), and L. Willaert, SJ, ibid. 18 (1960). T. M. Parker in New Cambridge Modern History, 3, ed. R. B. Wernham (1968), pp. 44–71. There is also much material in the histories of the Popes by L. von *Ranke and L. *Pastor. J. H. Pollen, SJ, in CE 4 (1905), pp. 437–44, s.v., with bibl.; E. L. Lamp in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 384–9, s.v., with more recent bibl. See further bibl. to TRENT, COUNCIL OF.

Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion. See HUNTINGDON, SELINA, COUNTESS OF.

Courayer, Pierre François Le (1681–1776), French theologian. He became a *canon regular of St-Geneviève at Paris in 1697, professor of theology in 1706, and librarian of St-Geneviève in 1711. While at Paris he corresponded with Abp. W. *Wake on the subject of the episcopal succession in the English Church. In 1721 he completed a treatise defending the validity of *Anglican Ordinations, but the censorship caused publication to be delayed till 1723, when it was issued at Nancy in Lorraine (with the name of a Brussels bookseller on the title-page), as Dissertation sur la validité des ordinations des Anglais et sur la succession des évêques de l'église anglicane, avec les preuves justificatives des faits avancés (Eng. tr. by D. Williams, 1725). In 1726 Courayer issued a reply to his many (esp. *Jesuit) critics. His thesis was then formally condemned by the French bishops, and in 1728 he was excommunicated and fled to England. He received for the rest of his life generous hospitality in England, though he never joined the C of E. In his will he professed his continued adherence to the Church of Rome, though dissociating himself from some of her tenets.

Courayer later pub. a new Fr. tr. of P. *Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent (2 vols., London, 1736; new edn., Amsterdam, 3 vols., 1751). His Dissertation on the Validity of the Ordinations of the English was issued in a rev. tr. at Oxford, 1844, with a memoir of the author. Relation historique et apologétique des sentimens et de la conduite du P. Le Courayer (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1729). E. Préclin, L'Union des Églises gallicane et anglicane: Une tentative au temps de Louis XV. P. F. Le Courayer (de 1681 à 1732) et Guillaume Wake (1928). G. G. Perry in DNB 12 (1887), pp. 328–30.

Court of Delegates. See DELEGATES, COURT OF.

Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved. A court in the C of E established by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963. It has original jurisdiction over offences by clergy involving doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial ('a reserved matter'), and suits of *Duplex Querela; it also hears appeals from the *Consistory Courts in *faculty cases involving matters of doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial. It consists of five judges appointed by the Sovereign, of whom two are communicants who hold or have held high judicial office, and three are or have been diocesan bishops. Appeal lies to a Commission of Review.

Court of Faculties. See FACULTIES, COURT OF.

Court of High Commission. See HIGH COMMISSION, COURT OF.

Courtenay, William (*c.*1342–96), Abp. of *Canterbury. The fourth son of Hugh, Earl of Devon, and through his mother great-grandson of Edward I, he rose rapidly to high position in Church and State. In 1367 he was appointed Chancellor of Oxford and proved himself a vigorous upholder of the University's independence. In 1369 he was appointed Bp. of *Hereford, in 1375 Bp. of London, and in 1381 Abp. of Canterbury. As Archbishop he was a strong opponent of J. *Wycliffe and John of Gaunt and a supporter of Papal authority, save when national interests were directly attacked. He was responsible for the calling of the Blackfriars Council of 1382, which condemned Wycliffe's doctrines.

Register of William de Courtenay, Bp. of Hereford (A.D. 1370–5), ed. by W. W. Capes (Cantilupe Society, 1913; also in *Canterbury and York Society, 15; 1914). J. H. Dahmus, The Metropolitan Visitations of William Courteney, Archbishop of Canterbury 1381–1396: Documents transcribed from the original manuscripts of Courtenay's Register, with an Introduction describing the Archbishop's Investigations (University of Illinois Studies in the Social Sciences, 31, 2; 1950). Id., William Courtenay, Archbishop of Canterbury 1381–1396 (University Park, Pa., and London, 1966). K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1952 [1953]), pp. 70–80, 105–16, and passim. W. Hunt in DNB 12 (1887), pp. 342–7; BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 502–4.

Coustant, Pierre (1654–1721), French patristic scholar. He was a native of Compiègne, where he was educated at the *Jesuit College. After entering in 1671 the *Benedictine monastery of the *Maurist congregation of Saint-Rémi at *Reims, he was sent in 1681 to the abbey of *Saint-Germain-des-Prés in *Paris to help T. Blampin with the edition of St *Augustine. His principal achievement, however, was his edition of the works of St *Hilary (1693). It contains an elaborate preface, defending the orthodoxy of Hilary's doctrine, followed by a detailed biography of the saint, as well as separate prefaces to the various treatises. After a three-years' term as prior at Nogent-sous-Courcy he returned to Saint-Germain, where he was entrusted with the monumental undertaking of editing a complete collection of Papal letters from St *Clement of Rome to *Innocent III. After more than 20 years of work the first volume of the Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum, covering the period from AD 67 to 440, appeared in 1721, with erudite introductions and notes. Coustant also wrote two treatises, Vindiciae Manuscriptorum Codicum (1706) and Vindiciae Veterum Codicum (1715), in defence of the Maurist editions of the Fathers against the *Jesuit, B. Germon, who had questioned the genuineness of several of their sources.

M. Ott in CE 4 (1908), pp. 454 f., s.v.; M. Lalmant, OSB, in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 729–31, s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under MAURISTS.

Couturier, Paul Irénée (1881–1953), French priest and worker for Christian unity. Educated at Lyons, he was ordained priest in 1906, and after spending three years studying science he joined the staff of the Institut des Chartreux at Lyons, where he remained until 1951. During the 1920s he came in touch with the Russian refugees in the area and learnt much of their spiritual background. In 1932, when he was staying at the priory of Amay-sur-Meuse (see CHEVETOGNE), an introduction to the work of Cardinal *Mercier aroused his interest in the *Ecumenical Movement. The following year he introduced a Triduum or three-day period of prayer for Church unity at Lyons, followed in 1934 by an octave of prayer from 18 to 25 Jan. This was a development of the *Church Unity Octave founded by two Anglicans in 1908, but from the first prayer was specifically offered for the unity of all baptized Christians 'as and how Christ wills'; Orthodox and other religious bodies as well as Anglicans were included. From 1939 the octave was observed as the 'Week of Universal Prayer'. He also arranged interdenominational conferences at the monastery of *La Trappe des Dombes and at Presinge. He engaged in a vast correspondence in connection with his ecumenical work, produced and distributed innumerable tracts on prayer for unity, and was in close touch with leaders of the *World Council of Churches. In 1952 he was given the title of honorary Archimandrite by Maximus IV, the Greek *Melchite (RC) patriarch of Antioch.

A collection of his writings, ed. M. Villain, SM, as Œcuménisme spirituel, pub. Tournai, 1963. A la mémoire de l'Abbé Paul Couturier (Témoignages) (Lyons, 1954), incl. essay by M. Villain, pp. 9–42, sep. tr. into Eng. (Haywards Heath, 1959). M. Villain, L'Abbé Paul Couturier (Tournai, 1957); G. [W. S.] Curtis, CR, Paul Couturier and Unity in Christ (1964).

Covel, John (1638–1722), also 'John Colvill', master of Christ's College, Cambridge. Born at Horningsheath, Suffolk, he was educated at Bury St Edmunds and Christ's College, Cambridge, where he delivered a Latin oration on the return of the Stuarts. Appointed chaplain to the British Embassy at *Constantinople in 1669, he there amassed material for his unpublished diaries and future publications. On his return to England (1679) he was appointed Lady Margaret Preacher of Divinity at Cambridge, and in 1681 chaplain to the Princess of Orange at The Hague. He was master of Christ's from 1688 till his death, and vice-chancellor of Cambridge University in 1689 and 1708. His chief work on the Greek Church, Some Account of the present Greek Church, with Reflections on their present Doctrine and Discipline, particularly in the Eucharist and the rest of their seven Pretended Sacraments (1722), was published after many delays just before his death. Though not widely noticed, it was one of the few books that gave information on the Greek Church till the 19th cent. Covel's Diaries and Collections are preserved in the British Library.

'Extracts from the Diaries of Dr John Covel, 1670–1679', ed. J. T. Brent, Early Voyages and Travels in the Levant (Hakluyt Society, 87; 1893), pp. 101–287. W. Hunt in DNB 12 (1887), pp. 355 f.

covenant. A bond entered into voluntarily by two parties by which each pledges himself to do something for the other. The notion was employed in a range of secular senses (in association with marriages, commercial contracts, etc.) before it was used as a theological model for the relationship between Yahweh and His people Israel. As such, the idea of covenant (Heb. בְּרִית) became central to the religion of the OT. The *Ark was an important symbol of Yahweh's presence and covenant. The Prophets press the truth that the perfect relation between God and man is based on the inward righteousness of the heart, and *Jeremiah (31: 31 ff.) looks forward to a 'new covenant'. St *Paul sees this eschatological conception realized in the sacrificial death of Christ represented in the Eucharist (1 Cor. 11: 25), whereas the tradition found in Mk. 14: 24 and in the best MSS of Matt. 26: 28 echoes Exod. 24: 8 and probably sees the sacrificial death of Christ in terms of that foundational covenant with Israel. The Ep. to the *Hebrews quotes Exod. 24 in ch. 9 but contrasts that *Mosaic convenant with the new and better covenant foretold by Jeremiah and inaugurated by Christ's life, death, and exaltation (7: 22 and 12: 24)

E. W. Nicholson, God and his People: Covenant and Theology in the Old Testament (Oxford, 1986). J. Barr, 'Some Semantic Notes on the Covenant', in Beiträge zur Alttestamentlichen Theologie: Festschrift für Walter Zimmerli zum 70. Geburtstag, ed. H. Donner and others (Göttingen, 1977), pp. 23–38. J. Behm and G. Quell in TWNT 2 (1935), pp. 105–37 (Eng. tr., 2, 1964, pp. 104–34), with further bibl. ibid. 10 (pt. 2, 1979), pp. 1041–6, s.v. διατίθημι, διαθήκη; E. Kutsch in E. Jenni (ed.), Theologisches Handwörterbuch zum Alten Testament, 1 (1971), cols. 339–52, s.v. בְּרִית.

Covenant, National. See NATIONAL COVENANT.

Covenanters. The bodies of *Presbyterians in Scotland who in the 16th and 17th cents. bound themselves by religious and political oaths to maintain the cause of their religion. Various small covenants were signed between 1556 and 1562, leading up to the *King's Confession of 1581, which was signed by Scotsmen of all classes. In the next cent. the attempt of *Charles I to introduce the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637 prompted the *National Covenant of 1638, which was very widely signed, and even professed loyalty to the Crown. After the outbreak of civil war, the English Parliament made an alliance with the rebel Scots in the terms of a *Solemn League and Covenant (1643; often known simply as 'the Covenant'), which carried with it the attempt to force Presbyterianism on England, but, though temporarily successful, it led in the end to divisions among the Covenanters themselves. The persecution of the Presbyterians in Scotland between 1661 and 1688 gave rise to further new Covenants. With the collapse of the Stuart regime in December 1688 the Presbyterians reasserted themselves, and successfully called for the abolition of episcopacy. In the western shires there took place a series of incidents known as the 'Rabbling'; over Christmas some 200 episcopalian clergy were forcibly evicted from their livings. Even with the re-establishment of the Presbyterian Kirk these extreme Covenanters remained dissatisfied, and formed the *Cameronian sect, which was joined to the *Free Church in 1876.

J. K. Hewison, The Covenanters: A History of the Church in Scotland from the Reformation to the Revolution (2 vols., 1908). J. Dodds, The Fifty Years' Struggle of the Scottish Covenanters, 1638–88 (1860). W. L. Mathieson, Politics and Religion: A Study in Scottish History from the Reformation to the Revolution (2 vols., 1902). J. Barr, The Scottish Covenanters (Glasgow, 1946). I. B. Cowan, The Scottish Covenanters, 1660–1668 (1976). D. Stevenson, The Scottish Revolution 1637–1644: The Triumph of the Covenanters (Newton Abbot, Devon [1973]). W. Makey, The Church of the Covenant 1637–1651: Revolution and Social Change in Scotland (Edinburgh [1979]). J. [S.] Morrill (ed.), The Scottish National Covenant in its British Context (ibid. [1990]). A. I. Macinnes, Charles I and the Making of the Covenanting Movement 1625–1641 (ibid. [1991]). See also general works on the history of Scotland.

Coventry, W. Midlands. A Benedictine house was founded at Coventry in 1043 by Leofric, Earl of Mercia, and his wife, the famous 'Lady Godiva'. On the death of the Abbot in 1095, custody of the Abbey was granted to Bishop Limesey of *Chester, who transferred his see to Coventry; the title of *abbot was vested in the bishop as at *Worcester and *Winchester. During the episcopate of Hugh Nonant (1188–98) the double title of Bishop of Coventry and *Lichfield was adopted. Although this title stood until 1836, when the archdeaconry of Coventry was transferred to the diocese of Worcester, it was only during the 12th cent. that Coventry was the place of residence of the bishop and a genuine see town.

In 1918 the see was reconstituted with the archdeaconries of Coventry and Warwick. The collegiate church of St Michael (originally a parish church, completed in 1433) became the cathedral, but was largely destroyed during an air raid in 1940. A new cathedral, designed by Sir Basil Spence and built at right angles to the ruins of the old cathedral, was consecrated in 1962. Essentially modern in design, it is constructed of stone; its slender pillars cause attention to be focused on the 72-foot-high tapestry of Christ in Glory behind the altar. The tapestry was designed by Graham Sutherland and woven near Aubusson in France. The rich colouring of the huge stained glass windows is visible only from the north (altar) end of the nave, since the sides of the church are built on a zig-zag pattern to allow a clear light only on the altar. Other features of the church include the star-shaped Chapel of Unity attached to the cathedral (administered by a joint council of Anglican and Free Churches), the Chapel of Industry (symbolizing the close relationship of the cathedral with the city), the bronze sculpture of St Michael and the Devil by Jacob Epstein on the exterior of the east wall of the nave, the baptistery window designed by John Piper, and the huge glass screen at the south end of the nave, engraved with figures designed by John Hutton and allowing an uninterrupted view of the old cathedral ruins. The Charred Cross in the old ruins remains an emblem of the work of reconciliation with Germany, and the Cathedral authorities have fostered a number of initiatives, including the rebuilding of part of the Deaconesses' Hospital at Dresden in 1965–7.

For works on the diocese of Coventry and Lichfield, see s.v. LICHFIELD. On the Priory, J. C. Cox in VCH, Warwick, 2, ed. W. Page (1908), pp. 52–9. On the Cathedral, B. [U.] Spence, Phoenix at Coventry: The Building of a Cathedral (1962); id. and H. Snoek, Out of the Ashes: A Progress Through Coventry Cathedral (1963); J. Thomas, Coventry Cathedral (New Bell's Cathedral Guides, 1987). W. E. Rose, Sent from Coventry: A Mission of International Reconciliation (1980). H. Dauphin, OSB, in DHGE 13 (1965), cols. 994–1001, s.v., with further bibl.

Coverdale, Miles (1487 or 1488–1569) translator of the Bible. Ordained priest in 1514, he entered the house of the *Augustinian friars at Cambridge, where, under the influence of the prior, Robert Barnes (1495–1540), he became an enthusiast for ecclesiastical reform. After preaching against confession and images, he was forced to reside abroad, and in 1535 he produced on the Continent the first complete English Bible, a translation made from the *Vulgate, M. *Luther's Bible, W. *Tyndale's Pentateuch and NT, and other sources, and probably printed at Zurich. In 1538 he made a translation of the NT conforming more closely to the Vulgate, and in 1539 he issued with R. *Grafton the '*Great Bible'. After serving as pastor at Bergzabern, he returned to England, took part in the suppression of the W. Rebellion, and in 1551 became Bp. of *Exeter. He went into exile again in Mary's reign, returning in 1559. He assisted at M. *Parker's consecration, and for the rest of his life was a leader of the Puritan party. See also BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS).

G. Pearson (ed.), Writings and Translations of Myles Coverdale, Bishop of Exeter (*Parker Society, 1844); id. (ed.), Remains of Myles Coverdale (ibid., 1846), with biog. notice, pp. vii–xxiii. Memorials of Myles Coverdale (1836). J. F. Mozley, Coverdale and his Bibles (1953). R. A. Leaver, 'Goostly psalmes and spirituall songes': English and Dutch metrical Psalms from Coverdale to Utenhove 1535 1566 (Oxford, 1991), esp. pp. 62–86 and 286–99. H. R. Tedder in DNB 12 (1887), pp. 364–72, s.v.

cowl. A monastic garment which derives from the Roman hooded cloak. By the 10th cent. the cuculla or froccus had developed into the full, wide-sleeved robe (similar to an academic gown), often without a hood, worn over the tunic and *scapular by modern *Benedictines and *Cistercians during the liturgy. The hood (usually unattached) which forms part of the habit of most religious orders is sometimes called a 'cowl' (e.g. by the *Augustinian Friars, the *Franciscans, and the *Servites). The *Capuchins derive their name from their pointed cowls.

K. Hallinger, OSB, Gorze-Kluny: Studien zu den monastischen Lebensformen und Gegensätzen im Hochmittelalter, 2 (Studia Anselmiana, 24–5; Rome, 1951), pp. 661–96. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL, 2 (1910), cols. 2127–34, s.v. 'Capuchon'.

Cowley Fathers, the. A colloquial name for the priests of the *Society of St John the Evangelist, founded in the neighbourhood of Cowley, near Oxford.

Cowper, Thomas. See COOPER, THOMAS.

Cowper, William (1731–1800), poet and hymn-writer. Born at Great Berkhamstead, where his father was rector, he was a pupil at Westminster School from 1741 to 1747. In 1748 he was entered at the Middle Temple and in 1754 called to the Bar. In 1759 he moved to the Inner Temple and was appointed Commissioner of Bankrupts; he was, however, more interested in literature than law. From this period his attacks of depression appear to date. Fear of an examination for a disputed appointment to the clerkship of the House of Lords in 1763 provoked a suicidal mania, prob. aggravated by a frustrated love for his cousin. His delusions began to take a religious colouring, and he was sent to a private lunatic asylum near *St Albans. His terrors at first increased, but were gradually soothed by Dr Nathaniel Cotton (1705–88), who was himself something of a poet. In 1765 he moved to Huntingdon to be near his brother, eventually residing with the Revd Morley Unwin and Mary, his wife. He accompanied the latter to Olney on the death of her husband in 1767. Having become intensely devout since his illness, he worked as a lay assistant to the *Evangelical incumbent, John *Newton, at whose request he began composing hymns. A further attack of insanity (1773–6) prevented his marriage with Mary Unwin, who encouraged him to write secular poetry. In 1786 they moved to Weston Underwood and in 1795 to East Dereham. He does not seem entirely to have recovered from an attack of insanity in 1787, and suffered a serious relapse in 1794.

Cowper contributed his finest hymns to the 'Olney Collection', published in conjunction with J. Newton in 1779.

They include 'God moves in a mysterious way' (written as a period of madness approached; first pub. 1774), 'Hark, my soul! it is the Lord' (first pub. 1768; transl. into Italian by W. E. *Gladstone), 'Oh for a closer walk with God' (first pub. 1772), and 'Jesus, where'er Thy people meet' (first pub. in the Olney Hymns). His secular poetry, much of which has a religious bent, is marked by a love of nature and a tenderness which foreshadows the romantics. This includes The Task (1785), the famous ballad of John Gilpin (pub. 1783) and The Loss of the Royal George. He also published a translation of Homer (1791) and began to translate J. *Milton's Latin and Italian poems (posthumously pub., 1808).

Collected Works, ed. J. Newton (10 vols., London, 1817). Later edns. incl. those of R. Southey (15 vols., ibid., 1835–7, and 8 vols., Bohn's Standard Library, 1853–5) and of W. Hayley and T. S. Grimshawe (8 vols., London, 1835). Cowper first issued his (collected) Poems in 2 vols., London, 1782–5; many later edns., incl. those of H. S. Milford ('Oxford Edition', 1905; 4th edn., 1934, repr. with revisions 1967) and J. D. Baird and C. Ryskamp (Oxford, 1980 ff.). Life and Posthumous Writings, ed. W. Hayley (3 vols., Chichester, 1803–4); Life and Letters, ed. id. (4 vols., ibid., 1809). Letters and Prose Writings, also ed. J. King and C. Ryskamp (5 vols., Oxford, 1979–86); Selected Letters, ed. idd. (ibid., 1989). Lord David Cecil, The Stricken Deer (1929); G. Thomas, William Cowper and the Eighteenth Century (1935); M. J. Quinlan, William Cowper: A Critical Life (Minneapolis, 1953); C. Ryskamp, William Cowper of the Inner Temple, Esq.: A Study of his Life and Works to the Year 1768 (Cambridge, 1959); V. Newey, Cowper's Poetry: A Critical Study and Reassessment (Liverpool English Texts and Studies, 20; 1982); J. King, William Cowper: A Biography (Durham, NC, 1986). Bibl. to 1837 by N. [H.] Russell (Oxford Bibliographical Publications, NS 12; 1963) and of works from 1895 to 1960, by L. Hartley (Chapel Hill, NC, 1960). N. H. Russell in NCBEL 2 (1971), cols. 595–603.

Cox, Richard (*c.*1500–81), Bp. of *Ely. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, and held a number of ecclesiastical appointments. He sat on the commission which drew up the *King's Book (1543). On the accession of *Edward VI, to whom he had been tutor from 1540 and almoner from 1544, his reforming zeal came to the fore. He helped in compiling the 'Order of the *Communion' of 1548, and the Prayer Books of 1549 and 1552; and he was also on the commission appointed in 1551 for reforming the *canon law. As first Dean of *Christ Church (1546–53) and Chancellor of Oxford University (1547–52), he was mainly responsible for introducing *Peter Martyr and other foreign divines into the university, and his alteration of statutes, diversion of funds, and destruction of books, ornaments, and MSS in order to eradicate Popery won him the name of 'Cancellor' of the university. On *Mary's accession he was imprisoned for a time and deprived of preferments, and then went into exile at Frankfurt, where his successful disputes with J. *Knox gave rise to the names 'Coxians' and 'Knoxians'. Under *Elizabeth I he became Bp. of Ely in 1559, but he refused to minister in the Queen's chapel on account of its crucifix and lights. He contemplated resigning in 1580, but the formal document was never completed. He was an honest but narrow-minded ecclesiastic; he was severe on Romanists, and impatient of *Puritans.

Several of Cox's letters are pr. in the Correspondence of Matthew Parker, ed. H. Bruce for the *Parker Society (1853), pp. 151 f. and 281 f.; in The Zürich Letters, ed. H. Robinson for the Parker Society, 1 (1842), pp. 26–8, 65–7, 112 f., 207 f., 220 f., 234–8, 243–5, 268 f., 279–82, 282–6, 297–300, 306–9, 314–19, 328–30; 2 (1845), pp. 41 f., 192–5; and in Original Letters Relative to the English Reformation written during the Reigns of King Henry VIII, King Edward VI, and Queen Mary, chiefly from the Archives of Zürich, ed. id. for the Parker Society, 1 (1846), pp. 119–24. C. H. Garrett, The Marian Exiles (Cambridge, 1938), pp. 134–6. BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 146 f.

CPAS, the 'Church Pastoral Aid Society'. A society founded in 1836 to assist the home mission work of the Anglican Church by making grants of money for the stipends of curates and men and women lay workers. Its sympathies are markedly Evangelical.

Crakanthorpe, Richard (1567–1624), *Anglican divine. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he was elected Fellow in 1598. Hence he became a disciple of J. *Rainolds and a learned defender of *Calvinist principles. Early in the reign of *James I he accompanied the ambassador, Lord Evers, to the court of the Emp. Rudolph II. In 1605 he was appointed rector of Black Notley, nr. Braintree, Essex, and in 1617 rector of Paglesham. He interested himself esp. in the Romanist controversy. His principal work, Defensio Ecclesiae Anglicanae (1625; posthumous), was an answer to the Sui Reditus ex Anglia Consilium of M. A. *de Dominis, in which the Abp. of Spalato had defended his recantation. It was a learned work and written in excellent Latin, but its tone was ferocious and the argument too closely dependent on de Dominis's text to allow Crakanthorpe to develop his own views. His other writings include books on metaphysics (1619) and logic (1622) and a Defence of Constantine with a Treatise of the Pope's Supremacy (1621).

Modern edn. of his Defensio Ecclesiae Anglicanae [by C. Wordsworth] in LACT (1847). His treatise 'Of the Pope's Temporal Monarchy' is pr. in J. Brogden, Catholic Safeguards Against the Errors, Corruptions and Novelties of the Church of Rome, 3 (1851), pp. 44–109. G. G. Perry in DNB 13 (1888), p. 2 f.

Cramer, John Antony (1793–1848), Dean of *Carlisle. Educated at Christ Church, he became Principal of New Inn Hall, Oxford, in 1831, Regius professor of modern history in 1842 (in succession to T. *Arnold), and Dean of Carlisle in 1844. Besides several classical writings he published the '*Catenae' of many of the Greek fathers on the NT (8 vols., 1838–44).

[He is to be distinguished from Johann Andreas Cramer (1723–88), who translated St *Chrysostom's Homilies into German (1748–51).]

List of works in DNB 13 (1888), pp. 4 f.

Cranach, Lucas (1472–1553), 'the Elder', German painter. In his youth he was celebrated as a painter of altar-pieces and all his life of portraits. In the very early days of the *Reformation he espoused the *Lutheran cause, and was a friend and admirer of M. *Luther and the other reforming leaders, several of whom he painted. He also produced many woodcuts of religious subjects. His zeal for the new ideas is shown in a picture now at Leipzig, and dated 1518, which shows the soul of a dying man rising to meet the Trinity, in illustration of the doctrine of *justification by faith alone.

M. J. Friedländer and J. Rosenberg (eds.), Die Gemälde von Lucas Cranach (1932; 2nd edn., in Eng. tr., London, 1978), with extensive bibl.; J. Rosenberg (ed.), Die Zeichnungen Lucas Cranach d. Ä. (1960). E. Ruhmer, Cranach (Cologne, 1963; Eng. tr., 1963); W. Schade, Die Malerfamilie Cranach (Dresden, 1974); D. Koepplin and T. Falk, Lukas Cranach: Gemälde, Zeichnungen, Druckgraphik (2 vols., Basle and Stuttgart, 1974–6). F. Ohly, Gesetz und Evangelium: Zur Typologie bei Luther und Lucas Cranach (Schriftenreihe der Westfälischen Wilhelms-Universität Münster, NF 1 [1985]).

Cranmer, Thomas (1489–1556), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Aslockton, the second son of a Nottinghamshire squire, he was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, and ordained when he became a Fellow in 1523. From the marginal notes in his copy of J. Merlin's Quattuor conciliorum generalium (Paris, 1524) it appears that Cranmer was soon convinced that specifically English matters were not properly any concern of the Pope, and when in 1529 it seemed likely that *Henry VIII's 'divorce' proceedings against Catherine of Aragon were unlikely to succeed, Cranmer played an active part in marshalling University opinion on behalf of the King. Henry employed him on an unsuccessful embassy to the Emp. *Charles V (during which he secretly married Margaret Osiander, the niece of Andreas *Osiander), and when William *Warham died in the summer of 1532, the King quickly arranged for Cranmer to be elected as his successor.

Cranmer was consecrated Abp. of Canterbury on 30 Mar. 1533. If he accepted the office with reluctance, it was soon clear that he was to be Henry's chief instrument in overthrowing the Papal supremacy in England. In 1533 he annulled Catherine's marriage with Henry and three years later pronounced a similar judgement on the King's marriage with *Anne Boleyn. He also married Henry to and divorced him from Anne of Cleves. But despite this apparent subordination and subservience to the King's will, he acted not only at the behest of Henry but in conformity with his own opinions, based on his understanding of patristic and conciliar precedent. He was partly responsible for the '*Ten Articles' and, with Thomas *Cromwell, for the dissemination of the Bible in the vernacular. On the other hand, he took relatively little part in the *dissolution of the monasteries and opposed the '*Six Articles' of 1539, under which, indeed, he had to banish his own wife (whom he already kept in seclusion).

After Henry's death (1547), under *Edward VI Cranmer was able to achieve his ambition to revise Church services in the 'tongue understanded of the people', a process begun with the issue of the *Litany in English in 1544. His developing theology embraced the latest ideas of the Continental *Reformation, a fact discernible in his understanding of the Eucharist and his determination in the BCP of 1549 and that of 1552 to 'turn the Mass into a Communion'. On his initiative a number of continental theologians, among them *Peter Martyr and M. *Bucer, were invited to England, and Cranmer continued in other ways to push forward his project for union with the reforming Churches of Europe. He was largely responsible for the abolition of the old Church ceremonies, for the destruction of images and other relics, for the '*Forty-Two Articles', and, with Peter Martyr, for an attempt at canon law revision (Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum). He disagreed with Northumberland, Edward's unscrupulous adviser, and with reluctance acknowledged Lady Jane Grey as Edward's successor.

On the accession of *Mary Tudor (1553), Cranmer, who had been partly responsible for the tragedy of her mother's life, was accused of high treason, tried, and sentenced, but the Queen spared his life. He was, however, imprisoned and finally tried for heresy. He was sentenced and degraded, and then under duress and acute depression signed several recantations. On the day of his death he renounced his recantations and was burnt at the stake in Oxford on 21 Mar. 1556, putting his hand into the flames and saying 'This hand hath offended'. However his behaviour may be judged, his belief in the 'godly prince' placed him in a serious moral dilemma when the sovereign accepted Papal supremacy. To Cranmer the C of E owes not only the masterly English style of the liturgy in use almost universally for some 400 years, but also its essentially scriptural spirituality for which he was largely responsible. Feast day in the ASB, 21 Mar.; in the American BCP (1979), 16 Oct. (with H. *Latimer and N. *Ridley).

Works ed. H. Jenkyns, The Remains of Thomas Cranmer (4 vols., Oxford, 1833). Miscellaneous Writings and Letters also ed. E. Cox (*Parker Society, 1846); Writings and Disputations . . . Relative to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, ed. id. (ibid., 1844). Annotated extracts from his writings by P. N. Brooks, Cranmer in Context (Cambridge, 1989). Cranmer's Defence of the True and Catholic Doctrine of the Last Supper also ed. [C. H. H. Wright] (London, 1907). A MS showing his early attempts to frame the offices of *Mattins and *Evensong ed. J. W. Legg, Cranmer's Liturgical Projects (HBS 50; 1915), with introd. The principal source for his Life, apart from the Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII (see bibl. to HENRY VIII), is the biography by J. *Strype (London, 1694; later edns., 3 vols., Oxford, 1848–54, and 2 vols., London, 1853, both with docs. re-edited). The MS which forms the basis of the account by J. *Foxe, and other material, are ed. J. G. Nichols, Narratives of the Days of the Reformation (Camden Society [1st ser.], 77; 1859), pp. 218–75. Modern Lives by H. J. Todd (2 vols., London, 1831), A. F. Pollard (New York and London, 1904), A. C. Deane (London, 1927), G. W. Bromiley (ibid., 1956), J. [C.] Ridley (Oxford 1962) and D. [N. J.] MacCulloch (New Haven and London [1996]). C. H. Smyth, Cranmer and the Reformation under Edward VI (Cambridge, 1926); F. E. Hutchinson, Cranmer and the English Reformation (1951); G. W. Bromiley, Thomas Cranmer, Theologian (1956). P. [N.] Brooks, Thomas Cranmer's Doctrine of the Eucharist (1965; 2nd edn., 1992). P. Ayris and D. Selwyn (eds.), Thomas Cranmer, Churchman and Scholar (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1993). E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Liturgical Work of Archbishop Cranmer', JEH 7 (1956), pp. 189–203. J. *Gairdner in DNB 13 (1888), pp. 19–31.

Crashaw, Richard (*c.*1613–49), English lyrical and religious poet. The son of a *Puritan divine, he was educated at Charterhouse and at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of many High Church friends, esp. N. *Ferrar, whom he often visited at *Little Gidding. He was elected to a fellowship at Peterhouse in 1637, but expelled in 1644 owing to his refusal to subscribe to the *National Covenant. He then fled to France, where he was received into the RC Church. In 1646 his friend, A. Cowley, found him in great destitution at Paris and persuaded Queen *Henrietta Maria to exert her influence on his behalf. As a result he went to Italy, where he became an attendant to Card. Palotta. Owing to his denunciation of some persons of the cardinal's household he had to leave Rome for *Loreto in 1649 where he had obtained a small benefice. He died there soon afterwards. His sacred poetry, collected in Steps to the Temple (1646) and Carmen Deo Nostro (1652), is filled with a devotion nourished on the Song of Solomon and the mysticism of St *Teresa, and shows his talent in composing liturgical verses for sacred occasions. His style, though often somewhat heavy and diffuse, is vivid with unusual imagery, as in the famous 'Wishes to his Supposed Mistresse' and notorious 'The Weeper'. The ardour of his religious feeling is conveyed by the musical qualities of his verses. A few striking expressions in '*Paradise Lost', bks. 1 and 2, suggest that J. *Milton was indebted to 'Sospetto d'Herode', Crashaw's free rendering of G. Marino's poem. Alexander Pope's letter to Henry Cromwell (17 Dec. 1710) provides early and acute criticism of Crashaw's rhetoric; Shelley is believed to have read Crashaw; and 'Christabel', part 2, shows S. T. *Coleridge's fascination with some lines in the 'Hymn to St Teresa'.

Modern edns. of his Poems by L. C. Martin (Oxford, 1927; 2nd edn., 1957) and by G. W. Williams (Garden City, NY, 1970). G. W. Williams, Image and Symbol in the Sacred Poetry of Richard Crashaw (Columbia, SC, 1963); M. F. Bertonasco, Crashaw and the Baroque (University, Ala. [1971]); R. V. Young, Richard Crashaw and the Spanish Golden Age (Yale Studies in English, 191; New Haven, Conn., and London [1982]); T. F. Healy, Richard Crashaw (Medieval and Renaissance Authors, 8; Leiden, 1986). J. R. Roberts (ed.), New Perspectives on the Life and Art of Richard Crashaw (Columbia, Mo., and London [1990]). A. D. Cousins, The Catholic Religious Poets from Southwell to Crashaw (1991), pp. 126–76. J. R. Roberts, Richard Crashaw: An Annotated Bibliography of Criticism, 1632–1980 (Columbia, Mo., 1985).

Creation. In theology, the notion that the Universe was brought into being out of nothing by the free act of God, hence termed the Creator.

This doctrine, esp. characteristic of the Judaeo-Christian tradition, is to be contrasted with such theories as *pantheism and emanationism on the one hand and *dualism on the other. Since it finds a place at once for Divine Transcendence and Divine Immanence, it is closely linked with the philosophical position known as *Theism (q.v.), with its insistence on Personality in God. Its corollary is belief in the contingency of the world. And since on this view creatures owe their being to God, they partake of His goodness and hence are to be accounted 'very good' (Gen. 1: 31).

When fully elaborated the belief is clearly incompatible with the view that in constructing the universe God made use of pre-existing matter (*Plato). Certain Fathers, however, notably *Justin (Apol. 1. 59) and *Clement of Alexandria (Strom. 5. 14), accepted this Platonic view, finding support for it in Wisd. Sol. 11: 17. But it was rejected in favour of the view of creation 'out of nothing', e.g. by *Theophilus of Antioch (Apol. ad Autolycum, 2. 4); and it received its death-blow in the conflict with *Gnosticism. Hence from the end of the 2nd cent. the thesis of creation ex nihilo was almost universally accepted in the Church. It was dogmatically formulated at the Fourth *Lateran Council of 1215, and reaffirmed by the First *Vatican Council of 1870.

Though a doctrine of Creation does not as such require that the world took its beginning in or with time, Christian theologians in general have decisively rejected the eternity of the universe. But they have commonly held that its temporal origin is capable of being established only through revelation (cf. Gen. 1). St *Thomas Aquinas, e.g., asserted that it was incapable of rational proof, being 'credible, but not demonstrable or knowable' (credibile, non autem demonstrabile vel scibile, Cont. Gent. 2. 38). Similarly in the 18th cent. I. Kant, in his famous section on the 'Antinomies' in the Critique of Pure Reason, upheld the incompetence of reason to prove either the creation of the world in time or the contrary.

The changes in the traditional picture of creation brought about by increased scientific knowledge (astronomical, geological, palaeontological, biological) since the beginning of the 19th cent. have at times caused much religious unsettlement to orthodox Christians. But though they must radically affect our view of the order, dating, and character of the events (and hence also whether the OT can be conceived as a scientific book), they hardly touch the fundamental philosophical questions which surround the notion of creation. Nevertheless, the traditional picture of creation often suggested an event at the beginning of time (although St *Augustine had spoken of creation cum tempore rather than in tempore), and such a view has become increasingly untenable. Not only does the theory of evolution, involving the emergence of new species within the created order, demand an understanding of creation as a continuous process through time rather than as having been completed by a single Divine fiat once in the remote past, but developments in modern physics (relativity, quantum theory, etc.) make it difficult to see what could be meant by creation other than an affirmation of the dependence of the created order on God's sustaining and preserving power. These considerations are reflected in most modern theology.

Classical medieval discussion by St Thomas Aquinas, Cont. Gent. 2, qq. 6–38, and Summa Theol. 1, qq. 44–46. F. *Suárez, SJ, De Opere Sex Dierum (2 vols., Lyons, 1621); D. *Petavius, SJ, Theologica Dogmatica, 3 (Paris, 1644), pp. 220–585 ('De Opificio Sex Dierum'). Modern RC doctrine was summarized by the First Vatican Council, Sess. 3, can. 1 ('De Deo Rerum Omnium Creatore'). The doctrine figures prominently in the dogmatic works of K. *Barth and E. *Brunner (qq.v.). A. D. Sertillanges, OP, L'Idée de création et ses retentissements en philosophie (1945). L. Scheffczyk, Schöpfung und Vorsehung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, ed. M. Schmaus and A. Grillmeier, SJ, 2, Fasz. 2a, 1963; Eng. tr., 1970), with bibl. K. *Rahner, SJ, and others in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 2 (Einsiedeln [1967]), pp. 405–558. A. Ehrhardt, The Beginning: A Study in the Greek Philosophical Approach to the Concept of Creation from Anaximander to St John (Manchester, 1968). G. May, Schöpfung aus dem Nichts: Die Entstehung der Lehre von der Creatio ex nihilo (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 48; 1978; Eng. tr., 1994). A. R. Peacocke, Creation and the World of Science (*Bampton Lectures, 1978; Oxford, 1979). J. *Moltmann, God in Creation (*Gifford Lectures, 1984–5; 1985). K. Tanner, God and Creation in Christian Theology (Oxford, 1988). H. Pinard in DTC 2 (1908), cols. 2034–201, s.v.; J. Strahan in HERE 4 (1911), pp. 226–31, s.v.; P. F. Harris and E. A. Sillem in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 137–48, s.v., all with bibl. See also bibls. to METAPHYSICS, THEISM, and comm. on GENESIS.

Creationism (also Creatianism), the doctrine that God creates ex nihilo a fresh soul for each human individual at or after its conception. It is opposed to *Traducianism (q.v.), which maintains that the soul is generated with the body, as well as to any doctrine of the soul's pre-existence

(e.g. that upheld by *Origen and some of his followers). It was vigorously defended by St *Jerome as alone compatible with Catholic theology, though he admitted that W. tradition (*Tertullian, etc.) was in favour of Traducianism. St *Augustine was undecided in the matter. Creationism was supported by medieval theologians generally, who accepted *Peter Lombard's formula catholica ecclesia animas docet in corporibus infundi et infundendo creari (Sent. lib. 2, d. 18, n. 8); and St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol., q. 118, a. 2) held the contrary doctrine heretical.

The word is occasionally used also for the doctrine that the world was created (as opposed, e.g., to *monism and *pantheism), and also for a literal reading of the biblical accounts of creation (as opposed to the theory of evolution).

P. B. T. Bilaniuk in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 428 f., s.v., with refs.

credence. A small side table, also known as a 'credence table', usually placed conveniently in the sanctuary near the altar, to hold the bread, wine, and water to be used at the Eucharist, and other accessories of the service. The name (from Lat. credo, I believe, trust) seems to have developed from the use of the word for any side table on which meats were placed for tasting or assaying.

Crediton. Acc. to tradition, St *Boniface was born in Crediton, but the earliest authority for the belief is John Grandison, Bp. of *Exeter 1327–69, and it has generally been abandoned by scholars. About 909 Abp. Plegmund divided the diocese of *Sherborne and Crediton became the see of a new bishopric covering Devon and Cornwall. Before 931 King *Athelstan set up a separate diocese of Cornwall at St Germans, but on the death of Brihtwold, Bp. of St Germans (*c.*1027), Cornwall again became part of the see of Crediton. In 1050 (owing to its exposure to pirates) Leofric, Bp. of Crediton from 1046, with the approval of *Leo IX, moved the see to Exeter (q.v.). The church of Holy Cross at Crediton is a fine, mainly perpendicular, medieval building.

Since 1897 Crediton has provided the title of a *suffragan bishop.

credo ut intelligam (Lat., 'I believe so that I may understand'). A formula in which St *Anselm summarized his conception of the relations between faith and knowledge (Proslogion, ch. 1). In essence it was the teaching of St *Augustine.

creed. A creed is a concise, formal, and authorized statement of important points of Christian doctrine, the classical instances being the *Apostles' Creed and the *Nicene Creed. Originally, candidates for baptism accepted a short formula of belief which varied in detail in different localities. By the 4th cent. these baptismal confessions had become more uniform and were everywhere tripartite in structure, following Mt. 28: 19. Finally, the Apostles' Creed in the W. and the Nicene Creed in the E. became the only baptismal confessions in use until the liturgical changes in the W. Church in the 1960s. The Council of *Nicaea (325) put in a credal form the profession of faith which it promulgated as a general standard of orthodoxy; and the use of creeds for this purpose rapidly spread in the 4th cent. The present practice of reciting the (Nicene) Creed at the Eucharist did not begin until the 5th cent., when it was introduced as a local custom in the E. It was not included in the Roman Mass until 1014. See also RULE OF FAITH.

Texts in A. Hahn, Bibliothek der Symbole und Glaubensregeln der alten Kirche (3rd edn., rev. G. L. Hahn, 1897). The best single handbook on the whole subject is J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972). P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, with a History and Critical Notes (3 vols., New York, 1877). C. P. *Caspari, Ungedruckte, unbeachtete, und wenig beachtete Quellen zur Geschichte des Taufsymbols und der Glaubensregel (3 vols., Christiania, 1866–75); id., Alte und neue Quellen zur Geschichte des Taufsymbols und der Glaubensregel (ibid., 1879). C. H. *Turner, The History and Use of Creeds and Anathemas in the Early Centuries of the Church (CHS, 1906). C. H. *Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments (1936). D. van den Eynde, Les Normes de l'enseignement chrétien (1933). O. Cullmann, Die ersten christlichen Glaubensbekenntnisse (1943; Eng. tr., The Earliest Christian Confessions, 1949). R. P. C. Hanson, Tradition in the Early Church (1962), pp. 52–74. A. M. Ritter, 'Creeds' in I. Hazlett (ed.), Early Christianity: Origins and Evolution to AD 600: In Honour of W. H. C. Frend (1991), pp. 92–100. H. Lietzmann, 'Symbolstudien, I–XIV', ZNTW 21 (1922), pp. 1–34; 22 (1923), pp. 257–79; 24 (1925), pp. 193–202; and 26 (1927), pp. 75–95. See also bibls. to APOSTLES' CREED; ATHANASIAN CREED; NICENE CREED.

Creed, Apostles'. See APOSTLES' CREED.

Creed, Nicene. See NICENE CREED.

Creed of Pius IV. The formula, often called the Professio fidei Tridentinae, published by *Pius IV in the bull 'Injunctum nobis' of 13 Nov. 1564, and until 1967 imposed on holders of all the principal ecclesiastical offices in the RC Church. The Creed contains a summary of the doctrines promulgated at the Council of *Trent, among them the Tridentine doctrines of the relation between Scripture and ecclesiastical traditions, of original sin and justification, of the Mass and the *seven sacraments, of the saints, of *indulgences, and of the primacy of the Roman see. The form of it was slightly modified in 1877 so as to include subscription also to the decrees of the First *Vatican Council. It was replaced in 1967 by a shorter and less explicit formula.

The Creed, which is pr. in the main collections of conciliar decrees, is repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 587–9 (nos. 1862–70). Eng. tr. in Bettenson (2nd edn., 1963), pp. 375–7.

Creed of St Athanasius. See ATHANASIAN CREED.

Creeping to the Cross. See VENERATION OF THE CROSS.

Creighton, Mandell (1843–1901), Bp. of London. Educated at Merton College, Oxford, of which he became a Fellow and Tutor, he devoted himself to historical work, delivering lectures on ecclesiastical, Italian, and Byzantine history. In 1870 he was ordained to the diaconate and in 1875 was appointed Vicar of Embleton, Cumbria, where he became friendly with the Greys of Howick and Fallodon. In 1884 he was elected to the Dixie professorship of ecclesiastical history at Cambridge and to a fellowship at Emmanuel College. During his tenure of the professorship he continued his great but uncompleted work on the History of the Papacy (5 vols., London, 1882–94), a clear, dis-passionate, and erudite study, and acted as first editor of the English Historical Review on its foundation in 1886. In 1891 he succeeded W. C. Magee as Bp. of *Peterborough and six years later was translated to London. His episcopate was marked by statesmanship, scrupulous efficiency, and tact, esp. in dealing with the conflicts between *Ritualists and *Kensitites.

Mandell Creighton, his Life and Letters, by Mrs [Louise] Creighton [widow] (2 vols., 1904). W. G. Fallows, Mandell Creighton and the English Church (1964). [W.] O. Chadwick, Creighton on Luther (Inaugural Lecture; Cambridge, 1959). G. W. Prothero in DNB, Suppl. 2 (1901), pp. 82–8.

cremation. Disposal of the dead by reducing the body to ashes. The practice was not common in primitive times, but in the ancient civilized world it was the normal custom except in Egypt, Judaea, and China. Belief in the *resurrection of the body made cremation repugnant to the early Christians, whose use of burial is attested by the evidence of the *catacombs at *Rome. By the 5th cent. Christian influence had caused it to be abandoned throughout the Roman Empire. It was revived in the 19th cent., largely in free-thinking circles, though among some Christians it has now come into favour. The RC Church used to forbid its members to dispose of their dead in this way, mainly on account of the associations of the practice. It was, however, generally permitted by an instruction of the *Holy Office issued on 5 July 1963 and a form of service is now provided for use in a crematorium, though burial is still recommended (cf. CIC (1983), cans. 1176, § 3 and 1184, § 1. 2). In the C of E the legitimacy of cremation is recognized by the 1969 Canons (B 38), which add that 'save for good and sufficient reason the ashes of a cremated person should be interred or deposited . . . in consecrated ground'. Cremation is normally forbidden in the Orthodox Church.

E. Valton in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 2310–23, s.v. 'Crémation'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 502–8, s.v. 'Incinération'; P. Palazzini in EC 3 (1950), cols. 838–42, s.v. 'Cremazione'; A. Closs and M. B. Walsh in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 439–41, s.v., all with bibl.

Cremer, Hermann (1834–1903), German Protestant theologian. In 1870 he was elected to a professorship at Greifswald (an office he combined with a pastorate in the city until 1890), and held this till his death, refusing further preferment. He strongly resisted the liberalizing movement in theology, and in Die paulinische Rechtfertigungslehre (1899) reaffirmed a traditionalist interpretation of St Paul's teaching about redemption. His best-known work is his lexicon to the NT (Eng. tr., Biblico-Theological Lexicon of NT Greek, 1878), a forerunner of G. *Kittel's Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament.

Briefwechsel und Dokumente, ed. R. Stupperich (Mitteldeutsche Forschungen, 97; 1988). K. M. A. Kaehler, Wie Hermann Cremer wurde? Erinnerungen eines Genossen (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, Jahrg. 8, Heft 1; 1904); E. Cremer, Hermann Cremer: Ein Lebens- und Charakterbild (1912). W. Koepp, 'Die antithetische Paradoxtheologie des späten A. H. Cremer', Zeitschrift für Systematische Theologie, 24 (1955), pp. 290–341. H. Beintker in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 230–6, s.v.

crib, Christmas. By popular custom in the W. Church, a representation of the crib (or manger) in which Jesus was laid at His birth (Lk. 2: 7), containing a model of the Holy Child, is placed on Christmas Eve (24 Dec.) in church; it was usual for it to remain until the octave day of the *Epiphany (13 Jan.), but since the abolition of octaves in 1969 the day of its removal has become less uniform. Figures of the BVM and St *Joseph, cattle, angels, and shepherds are usually included, and figures of the *Magi are added on the Epiphany (6 Jan.). St *Francis of Assisi is thought to have made the first model of the crib at Greccio in 1223. The traditional site of Christ's birth is crowned with the Church of the Nativity at *Bethlehem, and the reputed remains of His crib are preserved at *Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome.

R. Berliner, Die Weihnachtskrippe (Munich [1955]). N. de Robeck, The Christmas Crib [1938]. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 2047–59, s.v. 'Âne'; 2 (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 966–71, s.v. 'Bœuf', and 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3022–9, s.v. 'Crèche'; R. F. McNamara in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 447 f., s.v.

Crisis, Theology of. Another name for the *Dialectical Theology of K. *Barth and his disciples, based on a triple set of associations of the Greek word κρίσις, namely: (1) 'separation', i.e. the sharpness of the dialectical distinction between temporal history and God's Eternity; (2) 'judgement', i.e. God's sentence of condemnation on all human effort and achievement; and (3) 'catastrophe', i.e. the suddenness and finality of that Divine verdict.

crisom. See CHRYSOM.

Crispin and Crispinian, Sts (*c.*285), martyrs. Acc. to the purely legendary account of their martyrdom, they were two Christian brothers who came of a noble Roman family. During the persecution of *Diocletian they fled to Soissons, where they set up as shoemakers, taking for their work only such money as was freely offered them, and finally were put to death. They are held to be the patrons of shoemakers, cobblers, and other leather-workers. Another tradition connects them with Faversham in Kent. Feast day, 25 Oct.

Martyrium and other material, with full comm., in AASS, Oct. 11 (1864), pp. 495–540. A. *Butler, The Lives of the Saints, ed. H. Thurston, SJ, and D. Attwater (rev. edn.), 4 (1956), pp. 197 f.

critical apparatus (Lat. apparatus criticus). In printed editions of texts (e.g. of the Greek NT), a list of MS readings differing from those in the accepted text. The apparatus is commonly printed at the foot of the page. The first edition of the Greek NT to contain a critical apparatus was that of Robert *Stephanus I (1550). See also TEXTUAL CRITICISM.

Critique of Pure Reason, The. The treatise in which I. *Kant set out for the first time the principles of the 'Critical Philosophy'. It was published at Riga in 1781. A much-altered 2nd edition appeared in 1787. Its difficulties and apparent contradictions are probably to be largely explained by the fact that its composition was extended over a period of 10 or 11 years and that it incorporates drafts representing several stages in the development of the philosopher's beliefs.

The best Eng. tr. is that of N. K. Smith (London, 1929). The standard comm. are those of H. Vaihinger (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1881–2) and, in Eng., by N. K. Smith (London, 1918; 2nd edn., 1923). Comm. for students by T. E. Wilkerson (Oxford, 1976). T. D. Weldon, Introduction to Kant's Critique of Pure Reason (Oxford, 1945; 2nd edn., 1958); P. F. Strawson, The Bounds of Sense: An Essay on Kant's Critique of Pure Reason (1966). See also bibl. to KANT, I.

Critopulos, Metrophanes. See METROPHANES CRITOPULOS.

Croce, Benedetto (1866–1952), Italian philosopher. He came under the influence of *Hegelianism while a law student at Rome and from 1886 onwards devoted himself to philosophical studies at Naples. His philosophy is a form of 'Creative Idealism' which concentrates on the forms taken by the life of the Spirit. Of these forms Croce recognizes four, namely, 'Intuition' (art), 'Concept' (science, philosophy, and history), 'Individuality' (economics), and 'Universality' (ethics). Religion he held to be a sub-form of Intuition, and Theology an illicit application of Concept, and both only transitory manifestations of the Spirit. His principal writings are the series collectively entitled Filosofia dello spirito, namely, 1, Estetica come scienza dell'espressione linguistica generale (1902); 2, Logica come scienza del concetto puro (1909); 3, Filosofia della practica: Economica ed etica (1909); 4, Teoria e storia della storiografia (1917). Many of his writings have been translated into English.

Cinquant' anni di vita intellettuale italiana, 1896–1946: Scritti in onore di Benedetto Croce (ed. C. Antoni and R. Mattioli, 2 vols., Naples, 1950). Bibliography of his writings by S. Borsari, L'opera di Benedetto Croce (Naples, 1964). Studies by R. Piccoli (London, 1922), M. Abbate (Turin, 1955), A. R. Caponigri (London, 1955), G. N. G. Orsini (Carbondale, Ill., 1961), A. Bausola (Milan, 1965 and 1966), and G. Galasso (Milan, 1990). A. Caracciolo, L'estetica e la religione di Benedetto Croce (Arona, 1958). F. Capanna, La religione in Benedetto Croce (Bari, 1964). A. Momigliano, 'Reconsidering B. Croce (1866–1952)' [Memorial Lecture], Durham University Journal, 59 (1966), pp. 1–12, repr. in his Quarto Contributo alla Storia degli Studi Classici e del Mondo Antico (1969), pp. 95–115, with valuable discussion of literature. C. Boulay, Benedetto Croce jusqu'en 1911 (Travaux d'histoire éthico-politique, 37; Geneva, 1981), with extensive bibl. D. D. Roberts, Benedetto Croce and the Uses of Historicism (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1987]). H. S. Harris in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 2 (1967), pp. 263–7; P. Craveri and G. Patrizi in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 31 (1985), pp. 181–205, both s.v.

Crockford's Clerical Directory. A biographical handbook of Anglican clergy, founded by Edward William Cox (1809–79), whose position as serjeant-at-arms obliged him to name the work after his clerk, John Crockford. Apart from the (then Protestant) *Episcopal Church of the USA, it included all the clergy of the *Anglican Communion (except for Japan from 1947 and China from 1955), but in 1985 was restricted to those of England (including the diocese of Gibraltar in *Europe), *Wales, and *Scotland, together with *Ireland from 1987; in 1985 responsibility for its publication was taken over by the *Church Commissioners and the Central Board of Finance of the C of E. The first edition appeared in 1858, entitled 'The Clerical Directory', Crockford's name being added only in 1860. Publication was at first occasional, and then annual between 1876 and 1948, except between 1916 and 1919, in 1921 and 1928, and between 1942 and 1946. (Attenuated Supplements came out in 1928, 1942, 1943, and 1945.) Since 1949 it has usually been biennial. The Clergy List, begun in 1841, has been incorporated in Crockford since 1917. The anonymous prefaces, which appeared until 1987, developed into essays on topics of current ecclesiastical interest.

Extracts from prefaces between 1922 and 1944 were collected in Crockford Prefaces: The Editor Looks Back (1947).

Cromwell, Oliver (1599–1658), Lord Protector. Born at Huntingdon, he entered Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, in 1616, married Elizabeth Bourchier, the daughter of a City merchant, in 1620, and was elected MP for Huntingdon in 1628.

The turning-point of his career was his election as MP for Cambridge in the Short Parliament of 1640, a position which he retained during the ensuing momentous Long Parliament. Henceforth he vehemently asserted the religious and political views of the *Puritan party which he combined with the fervent spirituality of the *Independents. Thus, when the Civil War broke out (1642), it appeared to him no less than to *Charles I as a religious struggle. He built up a magnificently trained and disciplined fighting force—the 'New Model Army'—which he used with startling effect on the battlefields of Marston Moor (1644) and Naseby (1645). In politics he exercised his influence on behalf of the Independents against the rigid intolerance of the Presbyterians. After the defeat of the Scots (who had supported the King in the Second Civil War) at Preston (1648), he foresaw that the Puritan cause could not be finally successful without the removal of the King, and accordingly he now urged the necessity for his execution. Cromwell's name stands fourth among the signatures on Charles I's death warrant.

Thereafter Cromwell used his army to repress any attempts at insurrection. The Irish revolt was crushed with a ruthlessness which can be understood only in the light of contemporary fears that Ireland might be used as a base for foreign intervention on behalf of the Stuarts. Cromwell defeated the insurgent Scots on 3 Sept. 1650 at Dunbar and a year later to the day at Worcester. He had long been dissatisfied with the inefficiency and oligarchical ways of the Long Parliament, and on 20 Apr. 1653 he forcibly dismissed it.

Henceforth Cromwell, who was installed as 'Lord Protector' on 16 Dec. 1653 under the Instrument of Government, ruled England by a series of constitutional experiments—from 'Barebones' Parliament' of 140 'Saints' to the Major-Generals—none of which really proved successful. Yet his rule was firm, efficient, and moderate. Bishops, deans, and cathedral chapters were removed from the life of the C of E, and the use of the BCP was discountenanced; the parishes survived, but under a miscellaneous ministry of ordained and non-ordained pastors. A committee of *Triers was set up to eject unfit clergy. Attempts were also made to improve public morals and manners, to further education, to reform the law, and to instil 'true godliness'. His government, never truly popular, rested on military force, and was opposed by one party or another.

It fell apart at his death on 3 Sept. 1658, the anniversary of the battles of Dunbar and Worcester. He was buried in *Westminster Abbey. At the Restoration his body was disinterred and hung at Tyburn.

Cromwell's character, a combination of religious inspiration and practical efficiency, is not easy to interpret, nor have historians past or present reached agreement about it. 'A great bad man' was Clarendon's final verdict. Cromwell believed that he was the instrument of a Divine providence: 'I have not sought these things; truly I have been called unto them by the Lord'. His conception of government was that of a 'constable set to keep the peace of the parish'. He was not without ambition, but refused to take the title of king urged upon him in the Humble Petition and Advice in 1657. At times ruthless and at others magnanimous, he was undoubtedly the presiding genius of the Commonwealth.

Letters and Speeches, ed. T. *Carlyle (2 vols., London, 1845; rev. edn. by S. C. Lomas, with introd. by C. H. Firth, 3 vols., ibid., 1904); new edn. by W. C. Abbott (4 vols., Cambridge, 1937–47). The best modern Lives are those of S. R. Gardiner (London, 1899), J. Morley (ibid., 1900), C. H. Firth (New York and London, 1900), G. R. S. Taylor (London, 1928), C. V. Wedgwood (ibid., 1939; rev. edn., 1973), and A. Fraser (ibid., 1973). M. [P.] Ashley, Oliver Cromwell (1937); id., The Greatness of Oliver Cromwell (1957); id., Oliver Cromwell and the Puritan Revolution (1958). D. Underdown, Royalist Conspiracy in England 1649–1660 (New Haven, Conn., 1960). [J. E.] C. Hill, God's Englishman: Oliver Cromwell and the English Revolution (1970). R. C. Richardson (ed.), Images of Oliver Cromwell: Essays for and by Roger Howell (Manchester [1993]). H. Kittel, Oliver Cromwell: Seine Religion und seine Sendung (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, ed. H. Lietzmann, 9; 1928); R. S. Paul, The Lord Protector: Religion and Politics in the Life of Oliver Cromwell (1955); H. F. L. Cocks, The Religious Life of Oliver Cromwell (1960). H. R. Trevor-Roper, 'Oliver Cromwell and his Parliaments', in R. Pares and A. J. P. Taylor (eds.), Essays Presented to Sir Lewis Namier (1956), pp. 1–48; repr. in I. Roots (ed.), Cromwell: A Profile (1973), pp. 91–135. C. H. Firth in DNB 13 (1888), pp. 155–86.

Cromwell, Thomas (*c.*1485–1540), Earl of Essex. After an adventurous and probably ill-spent early life, he returned to England from the Continent, where he may have served in the French army in Italy, and took up his father's trade as a cloth-dresser. For some time he seems to have combined this with legal work. Through the latter he gained the favour of T. *Wolsey and in 1523 he entered the House of Commons. From 1524 Wolsey made use of him for the suppression of a number of small monasteries to provide the endowment of his two proposed colleges at Ipswich and Oxford. On Wolsey's disgrace (1529), he entered the King's service and became a strong advocate of Protestantism and the royal supremacy in Church and State. His rise was rapid and in 1535 he was appointed Vicar General and Vice-Gerent in Spirituals, thus becoming the chief adviser and instrument of the King in all ecclesiastical affairs. It was he who arranged for the visitation, and finally the *dissolution, of the monasteries between 1536 and 1540. He also acted as the chief intermediary between Henry and the Reformation Parliament, in which he sat as MP for Taunton. In 1536 and 1538 he issued *Injunctions, ordering that a Bible should be provided in every church, that the clergy should perform certain definite duties, and that a register of births, marriages, and deaths should be kept. In his foreign policy he endeavoured to bring about the alliance of England with the Protestant princes of Germany, and with this in view he arranged a marriage between Henry VIII and Anne of Cleves. The King's disgust at the marriage and persistent intrigue by Cromwell's conservative enemies were the causes of his undoing; for though Cromwell had only recently been created Earl of Essex (17 Apr. 1540) and was the recipient of landed estates confiscated from the monasteries, he was arrested, sentenced for treason, and beheaded on 28 July 1540.

R. B. Merriman, Life and Letters of Thomas Cromwell (2 vols., Oxford, 1902). Letters to Cromwell and others on the Suppression of the Monasteries, ed. G. H. Cook (1965). A. G. Dickens, Thomas Cromwell and the English Reformation (1959). G. R. Elton, The Tudor Revolution in Government: Administrative Changes in the Reign of Henry VIII (Cambridge, 1953); id., Policy and Police: The Enforcement of the Reformation in the Age of Thomas Cromwell (ibid., 1972); id., Reform and Renewal: Thomas Cromwell and the Common Weal (ibid., 1973); id., Reform and Reformation: England 1509–1558 (1977), pp. 126–295; A. Fox and J. Guy, Reassessing the Henrician Age: Humanism, Politics and Reform 1500–1550 (Oxford, 1986), pp. 151–220. G. Redworth, In Defence of the Church Catholic: The Life of Stephen Gardiner (Oxford, 1990), pp. 105–29 ('The Fall of Thomas Cromwell'). See also works cited under HENRY VIII.

crosier. The bishop's staff, sometimes carried also by abbots and abbesses. It is now normally crook-shaped, but in earlier times was often in the shape of the letter T. Its origin has been traced by some to the rod used by Roman augurs in their divination, by others to the ordinary walking-stick. It is mentioned in Spanish documents of the 7th cent. as a symbol of the bishop's jurisdiction. In the E. Church the crosier is surmounted by a cross between two serpents. The familiar W. form resembling a shepherd's crook is due to later symbolism. In the 19th cent. antiquaries often applied the term wrongly to the archiepiscopal cross.

C. Rohault de Fleury, La Messe: Études archéologiques sur ses monuments, 8 (1889), pp. 75–110, with plates DCXLI–DCLIII. P. Hofmeister, OSB, Mitra und Stab der wirklichen Prälaten ohne bischöflichen Charakter (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, Heft 104; 1928), passim. P. Salmon, 'Aux origines de la crosse des évêques', in Mélanges en l'honneur de Monseigneur Michel Andrieu (Rev. S.R., volume hors série; 1956), pp. 373–83. H. *Leclercq, OSB, and L. Gougaud, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3144–59, s.v. 'Crosse'; R. Berger in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 2 (1994), cols. 501 f., s.v. 'Bischofsstab', both with bibl. On the Eng. word 'Crosier', cf. OED (2nd edn.), 4 (1989), p. 46, s.v.

Cross, Devotion to the. See EXALTATION OF THE CROSS; INVENTION OF THE CROSS; VENERATION OF THE CROSS.

Crowland Abbey. This monastery was founded on an island in the Fens by King Ethelbald in 716 in honour of St *Guthlac, who had lived as a hermit on the site. After a fire in 1091 it was rebuilt, and added to in the succeeding centuries. At the *Dissolution (1539), the E. part of the church and the transepts were demolished, but the nave and aisles were used as a parish church until the end of the 17th cent. Then the roof and S. aisle fell, and since that date the N. aisle only has been so used. The Early English W. front survives in a ruined state. The form 'Croyland Abbey' is also found.

The earliest account of the history of Crowland Abbey to the late 11th cent. is given by *Orderic Vitalis, Historia Ecclesiastica, bk. 4 (ed. with Eng. tr. by M. Chibnall, 2 (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1969), pp. 338–51; see also introd., pp. xxiv–xxix). Ingulfi Croylandensis Historia [ed. W. Fulman] (Rerum Anglicarum Scriptorum Veterum, 1 (1684), pp. 1–107); Historiae Croylandensis Continuatio (ibid., pp. 451–593). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum (ed. J. Caley, H. Ellis, and B. Blandinel, 2, 1819), pp. 90–126. R. Gough, The History and Antiquities of Croyland Abbey in the County of Lincoln (1783). F. M. Page, The Estates of Crowland Abbey (1934). R. Graham in VCH, Lincoln, 2, ed. W. Page (1906), pp. 105–18. H. Dauphin, OSB, in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 1066–71, s.v.

Crown Appointments Commission. Under a convention agreed with the leaders of the main political parties in 1976, when a diocese in the C of E becomes vacant the Crown Appointments Commission submits to the Prime Minister, on whose advice the Sovereign appoints diocesan bishops, the names of two candidates, which may be given in order of preference. The Prime Minister retains the right to recommend to the Sovereign either of these candidates or to ask the Commission for one or more further names. The Commission consists of 12 voting members: the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York, three members elected by and from the House of Clergy and three elected by and from the House of Laity of the General *Synod, and four appointed by and from the *Vacancy-in-See Committee of the vacant diocese. The Abp. of the province in which the vacancy occurs is chairman. In the case of a vacancy in the archbishopric of Canterbury, the chairman is a communicant lay member of the C of E appointed by the Prime Minister; in the case of the archbishopric of York such a lay person is appointed by the Standing Committee of the General Synod. The appointment of the Bp. of Gibraltar in *Europe falls outside the scope of the Commission.

The General Synod's regulations on the composition and powers of the Crown Appointments Commission constitute Standing Order 159.

Crown of Thorns. One of the instruments of Christ's Passion (Jn. 19: 2). Its supposed preservation as a relic is first mentioned in the 5th cent., and in the 6th *Cassiodorus refers to it as one of the glories of the earthly *Jerusalem. It is said to have been moved later to *Constantinople. In 1239 the Constantinople relic came into the possession of St *Louis IX, King of France, who built the *Sainte-Chapelle at Paris (completed 1248) to house it. Successive kings of France gave individual thorns to churches in various countries.

F. de Mély, Exuviae Sacrae Constantinopolitanae (Paris, 1904), pp. 165–440. J. E. A. Gosselin, Notice historique sur la sainte couronne d'épines de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ, et sur les autres instruments de sa passion, qui se conservent dans l'église métropolitaine de Paris (1828); C. Rohault de Fleury, Mémoire sur les instruments de la passion de N.-S. J.-C. (1870), bk. 2, ch. 3, pp. 199–224. H. St J. Hart, 'The Crown of Thorns in John 19, 2–5', JTS NS 3 (1952), pp. 66–75. J. Kopeč and A. Rayez, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1825 f., s.v. 'Instruments de la Passion', 3: 'La Couronne d'Épines'.

Crowther, Samuel Adjai (or Ajayi) (*c.*1809–91), African bishop. As a boy of about 13, Ajayi, who was a member of the Egba section of the Yoruba people (now W. *Nigeria), was captured in a Fulani attack and sold as a slave. The ship transporting him was arrested and brought to *Sierra Leone, where he came under the care of the *Church Missionary Society in 1822. At baptism he took the name of a CMS committee member. He was among the first students of the Fourah Bay Institution, served as a teacher in Sierra Leone, and was a CMS representative on the government's Niger Expedition of 1841. After studying at Islington College (the CMS training college in London), he was ordained in 1843 and was one of the foundation members of the CMS Yoruba mission. From 1857 he led the Niger Mission with an all African staff, covering the area from the Upper Niger to the Delta, and from 1864 he was Bishop of Western Africa beyond the Queen's jurisdiction (jurisdiction over White clergy being avoided). In his closing years his authority was bypassed, his staff superseded, and the African Niger mission effectively dismantled by European missionaries.

Crowther was the first African Anglican bishop, the exemplar of the younger H. *Venn's indigenous Church policy, and the victim of a more ethnocentric missionary approach in the imperial period. He was also the principal influence on the orthography of and translation into Yoruba, introducing the marking of tone, and he encouraged vernacular translation by his clergy. He conducted what was perhaps the first positive Christian dialogue with African Muslims.

Journals of the Rev. James Frederick Schön and Mr. Samuel Crowther, who . . . accompanied the Expedition up the Niger in 1841 (1842; repr., with introd. by J. F. A. Ajayi, Missionary Researches and Travels, 18; 1970), pp. 257–385; Crowther's Journal of an Expedition up the Niger and Tshadda Rivers . . . in 1854 (1855; also repr. with introd. by J. F. A. Ajayi, ibid. 15; 1970); his journal of the Niger Expedition of 1857–9, The Gospel on the Banks of the Niger (1859; repr., Colonial History Series, 1968), pp. 1–239. J. Page, The Black Bishop: Samuel Adjai Crowther (London, 1908). P. R. McKenzie, Inter-religious Encounters in West Africa: Samuel Ajayi Crowther's Attitude to African Traditional Religion and Islam (Leicester Studies in Religion, 1 [1976]). G. O. M. Tasie, Christian Missionary Enterprise in the Niger Delta 1864–1918 (Studies on Religion in Africa, 3; Leiden, 1978), esp. pp. 30–137. T. E. Yates, Venn and Victorian Bishops Abroad (Studia Missionalia Upsaliensia, 33; Uppsala and London, 1978), esp. pp. 114–17, 134–6, and 140–63. See also works cited under NIGERIA.

crozier. See CROSIER.

crucifix. A model of the cross, bearing an image of the crucified Lord. Crucifixes are widely used as objects of private and public devotion in the W. In the E. their place is taken by crosses with flat likenesses, i.e. a form of *icon. In pre-Reformation times the crucifix was common throughout the W. Church, esp. as the central object of the rood-screen, which ran across the entrance to the *chancel of many churches. As the central ornament of the altar it began to come into general use in the 13th cent., though it had occasionally been so used earlier. This use was until recently almost universal in RC churches. Since 1969 it has sometimes been replaced by a crucifix hung above the altar or on the wall behind it, or even by a processional cross in the vicinity. In the C of E a crucifix was occasionally used on the altar after the Reformation, e.g. in Queen *Elizabeth I's private chapel, but instances are very rare until the liturgical revival in the 19th cent.

Among Protestants, the sole body which habitually uses the crucifix is the *Lutheran Church.

L. Bréhier, Les Origines du crucifix dans l'art religieux (1904); E. Sandberg-Vavalà, La Croce dipinta italiana e l'iconografia della Passione (Verona [1929]); L. H. Grondijs, L'Iconographie byzantine du Crucifié mort sur la croix (Bibliotheca Bruxellensis, 1 [1941]; 2nd edn. [1947]); J. E. Hunt, English and Welsh Crucifixes 670–1550 (1956); P. Thoby, Le Crucifix des Origines au Concile de Trent: Étude iconographique (Nantes, 1959, with suppl., 1963); E. [J.] Hürkey, Das Bild des Gekreuzigten im Mittelalter (Worms, 1983); B. C. Raw, Anglo-Saxon Crucifixion Iconography and the Art of the Monastic Revival (Cambridge, 1990). Braun, AG, pp. 466–92, with plates 88–92. G. Schiller, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst, 2 [1968], pp. 98–176; Eng. tr., 2 (1972), pp. 88–164. R. Scheider Berrenberg, Kreuz, Kruzifix: Eine Bibliographie (Munich, 1973). O. *Marucchi, F. *Cabrol, OSB, and H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 4 (1908), pp. 517–39, s.v. 'Cross and Crucifix'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3045–131, s.v. 'Croix et crucifix'.

crucifixion. Infliction of death by nailing or binding to a cross. It arose in the E., and was also frequently used by the Carthaginians. By the Romans it was much used as the extreme punishment for slaves, but it might also be inflicted upon any person who could not prove Roman citizenship. It was preceded by scourging. From the reign of Galba (AD 68–9) the lower orders among Roman citizens might also suffer this penalty. *Constantine abolished crucifixion as a legal punishment, but isolated instances are recorded later in the 4th cent. Some of the Christian martyrs under the Roman Empire suffered in this way; and (acc. to tradition) some, as St *Peter, were crucified head downwards or, as St *Andrew, on an X-shaped cross.

The crucifixion of Jesus Christ between two thieves is recorded by all four Evangelists (Mt. 27: 35–8, Mk. 15: 24–7, Lk. 23: 33, Jn. 19: 18). He was offered and tasted, but declined to drink, the potion of medicated wine provided by a group of charitable women in Jerusalem for such sufferers. The Ep. of *Barnabas, which compares the cross with the letter T, implies that the Lord's Cross was of the shape known as a 'crux commissa'. But the more general view, held e.g. by St *Augustine (Enn. in Ps. 103. 14) on the basis of Eph. 3: 18, was that it was a 'crux immissa', with the upright extending above the transom.

M. Hengel, 'Mors turpissima Crucis', in Rechtfertigung: Festschrift für Ernst Käsemann, ed. J. Friedrich and others (1976), pp. 125–84; enlarged Eng. tr., Crucifixion (1977), repr. in id., The Cross of the Son of God (1986), pp. 91–185. D. Smith in DCG 1 (1917), pp. 397–9, s.v.; H.-W. Kuhn in TRE 19 (1990), pp. 713–25, s.v. 'Kreuz II'.

Cruden, Alexander (1701–70), compiler of the 'Biblical Concordance'. Born in Aberdeen, he was educated on strict *Presbyterian principles, taking his degree from Marischal College, *c.*1720. His subsequent life was marked by eccentricities bordering on insanity, apparently caused by disappointments in love; and he was several times put in confinement. Moving to London *c.*1726, he was employed successively as a private tutor, a proof-corrector, and French reader to the Earl of Derby. On dismissal from this last post, he established a bookshop in London in 1732 and was appointed bookseller to Queen Caroline in 1735. In 1736 he began to compile his Concordance (OT and NT), a task for which he was pre-eminently qualified by long study of the Scriptures, an ingrained conscientiousness, and esp. a habit of tracing words through the Bible for amusement. He completed the work in some 18 months and presented a copy to Queen Caroline in Nov. 1737. Later editions of this work remain the standard concordance for users of the AV. In later life Cruden set himself to reform the morals of the country. Calling himself 'Alexander the Corrector', a title prob. suggested by his work for the press, he even made application to Parliament (1755) for official nomination to the office. He published two further editions of the Concordance (1761 and 1769), as well as religious pamphlets.

E. Olivier, The Eccentric Life of Alexander Cruden (1934). The earliest Life is that by A. Chalmers (8 pp.) prefixed to the 6th edn. of the Concordance (1810). W. D. Macray in DNB 13 (1888), pp. 249–51.

cruets. Vessels of glass or precious metal in which the wine and water for the *Eucharist are brought to the altar.

Braun, CA, pp. 414–40, with illustrations, plates 80–6.

Crusades. The primary use of the term is to describe the series of expeditions from W. Europe to the E. Mediterranean, beginning in 1095, designed to recover the *Holy Land from Islam and then to retain it in Christian hands, and later to counteract the expanding power of the Ottoman Empire. The word itself was slow to evolve, the expeditions often being known at first as '*pilgrimages'; terms such as crux and croiserie were introduced c. the middle of the 13th cent., doubtless derived from the cross worn on the clothing of Crusaders and pilgrims to the Holy Land.

Many forces, ideological and social, combined to produce the Crusades. The long tradition of pilgrimages to the Holy Land was strengthened at this time by the growing devotion to the Lord's historical life, and hence to the places where He had lived. The W. Church had progressively abandoned the original Christian hostility to *war, and had come to a rapprochement with the military aristocracy. Crusaders were encouraged by the grant of *indulgences and by the status of *martyr in the event of death. At the same time, the prospect of acquiring land in the E., and the pressure of an expanding population, helped to persuade both the nobility and the peasantry to participate in the movement. However, the actual form and date of the First Crusade can be explained by the collapse of the E. frontier of the Byzantine Empire in the face of attack by the Seljuk Turks after the Battle of Manzikert in 1071, and the political consequences which arose from this in E. and W. Europe. The Crusades took the form of a series of expeditions among which the largest are numbered in a conventional order. The Crusades developed a characteristic pattern of devotion, but the participants on occasions behaved with extreme brutality, both towards the Jews at home and the subjected people in the East.

The history of the Crusades may be roughly divided into three periods.

(1) 1095–1204. The First Crusade was solemnly proclaimed by Pope *Urban II at the Council of *Clermont on 27 Nov. 1095, with the double object of relieving the pressure of the Seljuk Turks on the E. Empire and of freeing the church of *Jerusalem from Muslim control. Several armies proceeded from France and S. Italy across the Balkans and Asia Minor, under the leadership of *Adhémar, Bp. of Le Puy, Raymond of Toulouse, *Godfrey of Bouillon, Robert of Normandy, and *Bohemond and Tancred of Apulia. Antioch was captured in June 1098, and Jerusalem on 15 July 1099. Godfrey was appointed as the first Latin ruler of Jerusalem, and on his death his brother Baldwin succeeded him and was crowned King of Jerusalem on Christmas Day 1100. The following 20 years were occupied in extending the precarious hold of the conquerors and in establishing a series of Latin states (Antioch, Tripoli, and Jerusalem) extending along the whole coast-line of Syria and Palestine, with a fourth, *Edessa, to the east of Antioch.

In face of steady resurgence of Muslim power, the new states proved difficult to defend. The Second Crusade of 1147, provoked by the fall of Edessa (1144), was preached by St *Bernard of Clairvaux and led by Louis VII of France and Conrad III, King of the Romans. It failed to relieve the situation in the Frankish East, and in 1187 Saladin wholly overcame the army of the Kingdom of Jerusalem, captured the city and overran a great part of the Latin possessions. This disaster provoked the Third Crusade of 1189–1192, in which the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa, Richard I of England, and Philip II of France all took part. Considerable territory along the coast was recovered, but Jerusalem itself remained in the hands of Saladin. In 1202 the Fourth Crusade set out in an attempt to improve the situation, but under the influence of Boniface of Montferrat and the Venetians it was deflected from its original objective of Egypt to Constantinople, where a Latin Empire was established in 1204. Although this achieved a temporary reunion of the E. and W. Churches under the authority of *Innocent III, its long-term effect was to increase the bitterness of the division, and further to weaken the E. Empire as a defence against Muslim expansion.

(2) 1204–91. Attempts continued in the 13th cent. to defend the remaining Frankish possessions in Syria. Several expeditions went to the Holy Land, and Jerusalem was recovered through negotiation by *Frederick II and was once again in Latin hands from 1229 to 1244. The two largest Crusades (the international one of 1217–21 and the French one under *Louis IX) were directed against Egypt, but both failed after a promising beginning. The Latin states were slowly overrun, and in 1291 the last remaining possessions on the mainland fell. Public opinion in the W. was becoming critical of Papal conduct of Crusading, partly because the concept had been extended to cover expeditions against non-Christians in Europe (such as the Muslims of Spain or the pagan Slavs), against heretics (as in the Crusade against the *Albigensians) or against the political enemies of the Papacy (such as the Hohenstaufen in 13th-cent. Italy). At the same time attempts were made, esp. by the friars, to spread the Gospel by preaching. The establishment of Mongol rule over a great part of Asia presented a threat to E. Europe, but at the same time offered the prospect of trade, of contact with the '*Church of the East' throughout central Asia, and of bringing the Gospel to nations previously unknown.

(3) AFTER 1291. The final loss of the Latin states made it unlikely that Jerusalem would ever be recovered for Christendom, but W. powers continued to discuss plans for its reconquest, and the expansion of Ottoman power into E. Europe in the 14th cent. provoked a long series of attempts to organize expeditions against it. Major expeditions to the Balkans were defeated by the Turks at Nicopolis in 1396 and at Varna in 1444. Christian resistance to the Turks continued, clearly in the Crusading tradition, long after the fall of Constantinople in 1453. Crusading ideas helped to shape the Portuguese and Spanish oceanic expansion in the early 16th cent., and the history of the Crusades was thus interwoven with early colonialism. Islamic critics count the Crusades (along with colonialism and the foundation of the State of Israel) among the historical injustices which the West has perpetrated against Islam. In the W. world in the 19th and 20th cents. the titles 'Crusade' and 'Crusader' have been used for a variety of enterprises, usually in a favourable sense.

See also CHILDREN'S CRUSADE, HOSPITALLERS, TEMPLARS, WAR, CHRISTIAN ATTITUDE TO.

The standard collection is Recueil des historiens des croisades publié par les soins de l'Académie Royale des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres: Historiens occidentaux (5 vols. bound in 6, 1844–89); Historiens grecs (2 vols., 1875–81); Documents arméniens (2 vols., 1869–1906); Historiens orientaux (5 vols. bound in 6, 1872–1906); Lois (2 vols., 1841–3). Only a few texts have been re-edited, but there are numerous Eng. trs., incl. L. and J. Riley-Smith, The Crusades: Idea and Reality, 1095–1274 (Documents of Medieval History, 4; 1981); also J. A. Brundage, The Crusades: A Documentary Survey (Milwaukee, 1962) and A. C. Krey, The First Crusade (Princeton, NJ, and London, 1921). General histories of the movement include S. Runciman, A History of the Crusades (3 vols., 1951–4); K. M. Setton (ed.), A History of the Crusades (vols. 1–2, Philadelphia, 1955–62; 2nd edn. of vols. 1 and 2, and vols. 3–6, Madison, Wis., 1969–89), with extensive bibl.; H. E. Mayer, Geschichte der Kreuzzüge (1965, and later edns.; Eng. tr. of 2nd edn., Oxford, 1972; rev. Eng. tr., 1988); and J. Riley-Smith, The Crusades: A Short History (1987). On Frankish Syria there is J. L. La Monte, Feudal Monarchy in the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem 1100 to 1291 (Cambridge, Mass., 1932); J. Richard, Le Royaume latin de Jérusalem (1953; Eng. tr., 2 vols., Amsterdam etc., 1979); M. Benvenisti, The Crusaders in the Holy Land (Jerusalem, 1970); J. Prawer, The Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem (1972); and id., Crusader Institutions (Oxford, 1980). The military problems are analysed in R. C. Smail, Crusading Warfare (1097–1193) (Cambridge, 1956) and C. Marshall, Warfare in the Latin East, 1192–1291 (ibid., 1992). For Crusading ideology, see C. Erdmann, Die Entstehung des Kreuzzugsgedankens (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, 6; 1935; Eng. tr., Princeton, NJ, 1977); J. Riley-Smith, What were the Crusades? (1977); E. [É. H.] Delaruelle, L'idée de croisade au moyen âge (Turin, 1980); and the controversial P. Alphandéry and A. Dupront, La Chrétienté et l'idée de croisade (2 vols., 1954–9). The legal aspects of the movement are discussed in J. A. Brundage, Medieval Canon Law and the Crusader (Madison, Wis., and London, 1969). The reasons for the collapse of the defence of Latin Syria are discussed by P. A. Throop, Criticism of the Crusade: A Study of Public Opinion and Crusade Propaganda (Amsterdam, 1940), and E. Siberry, Criticism of Crusading 1095–1274 (Oxford, 1985). On the thinking behind the 'diversion' of the Crusaders from the Holy Land, see E. Christiansen, The Northern Crusades: The Baltic and the Catholic Frontier 1100–1525 (1980), and N. Housley, The Italian Crusades: The Papal-Angevin Alliance and the Crusades against Christian Lay Powers, 1254–1343 (Oxford, 1982); see also bibl. to ALBIGENSIANS. The continuation of the Crusades after 1300 is examined in J. Muldoon, Popes, Lawyers and Infidels: The Church and the Non-Christian World 1250–1550 (Liverpool [1979]), N. Housley, The Later Crusades, 1270–1580 (Oxford, 1992), and C. Tyerman, England and the Crusades 1095–1588 (Chicago and London, 1988).

Many of these works contain bibls., but full details can be found in H. E. Mayer, Bibliographie zur Geschichte der Kreuzzüge (Hannover, 1960; 2nd edn., 1965).

Crusius, Christian August (1715–75), German theologian. He became professor of philosophy at Leipzig in 1744, and of theology in 1750. He attacked the philosophies of G. W. *Leibniz and C. *Wolff as anti-Christian, and urged that their determinist doctrines were dangerous to morality. He also objected strongly to the view, which first became common in his time, that the Books of the Bible should be studied on the same principles of criticism as other literature. His chief writings were his Entwurf der notwendigen Vernunftwahrheiten (1745) and his Hypomnemata ad theologiam propheticam (3 vols., 1764–68). He was held in high regard by I. *Kant, whose ethical doctrines he probably influenced.

A. Marquardt, Kant und Crusius (Diss., Kiel, 1885); A. Seitz, Die Willensfreiheit in der Philosophie des C. A. Crusius (1899); M. Benden, Christian August Crusius: Wille und Verstand als Prinzipien des Handelns (Abhandlungen zur Philosophie, Psychologie und Pädagogik, 73; Bonn, 1972). G. Röwenstrunk in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 242–4.

crutched friars (fratres cruciferi). A general name given to several religious congregations, mostly of *canons regular, whose history is very obscure; they derive their name from their custom of carrying a cross in their hands or having one sewn on the front of their habit. The oldest body of crutched friars may be that founded in the Holy Land from Crusading times, of which practically nothing is known. Another order in Italy secured Papal confirmation in 1187, having been founded a little earlier; it was suppressed in 1650. A congregation of crutched brethren from Bohemia and Poland was established as a military order in 1234 at Prague. More permanent was the community founded in Flanders *c.*1210 by Theodore of Celles (d. 1236), which secured Papal confirmation in 1248. It had daughter houses not only in modern Belgium and the Netherlands, but also in France, Germany, and England. Most of its houses were suppressed at the time of the French Revolution or Napoleon, but a revival took place. The order now has houses in the Netherlands, Belgium, the United States of America, Brazil, Germany, and Austria, as well as an international college in Rome and a number of mission stations.

A. van de Pasch, OSC, De tekst van de constituties der Kruisheren van 1248 (Brussels, 1952). C. R. Hermans, Annales Canonicorum Regularum S. Augustini, Ordinis S. Crucis (3 vols., 's Hertogenbosch, 1858). H. van Rooijen, Theodorus van Celles (Cuyk, 1936); id., De Oorsprong van de Orde der Kruisbroeders of Kruisheren (Drest, 1961). H. F. Chettle, 'The Friars of the Holy Cross in England', History, NS 34 (1949), pp. 204–20. D. M. *Knowles and R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses: England and Wales (1953), pp. 204–5. H. Vinken in DHGE 13 (1956), cols. 1042–62, s.v. 'Croisiers'; J. W. Rausch in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 472 f., s.v. 'Crosier Fathers'; H. L. M. van Rooijen in DIP 3 (1976), cols. 303 f., s.v. 'Crocigeri', and cols. 304–11, s.v. 'Crocigeri belge', with extensive bibl.

crypt. A chamber or vault beneath a church, either partly or wholly below ground, often used as a chapel or a burying-place. These functions date from the earliest ages of the Church, when Christian services sometimes took place in the *catacombs or underground burying-places in Rome, the tombs of martyrs often serving as altars, and later as centres of pilgrimage. Anglo-Saxon crypts, such as those at *Hexham and *Ripon, were often modelled on the confessio of *St Peter's, Rome.

A. Grabar, Martyrium: Recherches sur le culte des reliques et l'art chrétien antique, 1 (1946), pp. 436–87. H. M. Taylor, 'Corridor Crypts on the Continent and in England', North Staffordshire Journal of Field Studies, 9 (1969), pp. 17–52.

Crypto-Calvinism. A term used by the *Gnesio-Lutherans to denigrate the teachings, esp. the Eucharistic teachings, of P. *Melanchthon. In the interests of conciliation with the *Calvinists, Melanchthon softened M. *Luther's dogmatism on the *Real Presence and unworthy reception of the Sacrament ('manducatio impiorum'), and was in consequence attacked by *Flacius Illyricus and his party. The resulting *Adiaphorist Controversy introduced those endless disputes among Lutherans which were to be a major cause of their political weakness in the next generation.

K. Algermissen in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 6 (1961), cols. 653 f., s.v. 'Kryptocalvinismus'; H. Junghans in TRE 20 (1990), pp. 123–9, s.v. 'Kryptocalvinisten', with bibl.

Cudworth, Ralph (1617–88), *Cambridge Platonist. Born at Aller in Somerset, where his father was rector, he became successively Fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge (1639), Master of Clare Hall (to which he was appointed by the Parliamentary visitors, 1645), Regius Professor of Hebrew (also 1645), and Master of Christ's College (1654). In addition he held the livings of North Cadbury from 1650, of Ashwell from 1662, and a prebendal stall at *Gloucester from 1678. Perhaps the most distinguished representative of the Cambridge Platonists, he was an opponent both of religious dogmatism and of atheism of the T. *Hobbes type. In his chief work, The True Intellectual System of the Universe (1678), a cumbrous composition which he never completed, he argued that the only real source of knowledge is the Christian religion. Religious truth was embodied in three great principles: the reality of the supreme Divine intelligence and the spiritual world which that intelligence has created, the eternal reality of moral ideas, and the reality of moral freedom and responsibility. It was in this way that Cudworth, who, as his conception of a 'Plastic Medium' indicates, was very strongly influenced by Platonic ideas, attempted to assert the necessity for a revealed religion against the atheism of his day. His ethical beliefs were worked out in his Treatise concerning Eternal and Immutable Morality (not published till 1731).

Cudworth's True Intellectual System of the Universe was tr. into Lat. by J. L. *Mosheim (2 vols., Jena, 1733); partly from this Lat. tr. the Eng. was ed. by T. Birch, along with Cudworth's Discourse concerning the true Notion of the Lord's Supper (orig. pub. 1642) and two Sermons, as The Works of Ralph Cudworth (4 vols., Oxford, 1829), with account of his life and writings in vol. 1, pp. 7–37. J. A. Passmore, Ralph Cudworth: An Interpretation (Cambridge, 1951). G. Aspelin, Ralph Cudworth's Interpretation of Greek Philosophy (Göteborgs Högskolas Årsskrift, 49, pt. 1; 1943); L. Gysi, Platonism and Cartesianism in the Philosophy of Ralph Cudworth (Berne, 1962); id. (now 'Mother Maria'), Ralph Cudworth: Mystical Thinker (Newport Pagnell [1973; brief]). F. J.

Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists (1926), pp. 110–29. L. Stephen in DNB 13 (1888), pp. 271 f.

cuius regio, eius religio (Lat., 'In a [prince's] country, the [prince's] religion'). The formula adopted at the Religious Peace of *Augsburg (1555), by which the princes of the Empire were to be permitted to settle whether the religion of their own lands should be RC or Lutheran.

Culdees. The name céle Dé, 'companion of God', was used in the 8th and 9th cents. of Irish religious who sought a life of stricter devotion in certain churches. The movement is particularly associated with Tallaght, Co. Dublin, in the time of its abbot St Máel Rúain (d. 792). Later the word was used of the clergy forming the permanent establishment at certain churches in Ireland and Scotland until, during the 12th cent. and later, they were replaced by *canons regular, as at *Armagh and St Andrews. The name, Latinized as Keledeus, in this period came to be derived from colo, 'I worship'; the English form goes back to Hector Boece (1526), 'Culdei, i.e. cultores Dei'. By this date it was used in a debased sense, esp. in Scotland, to mean any religious of Celtic observance in the loosest sense; during the 18th and 19th cents. it was used more narrowly of the religious of *Iona.

W. Reeves, The Culdees of the British Isles, as they appear in History (Dublin, 1864), repr. (apart from the preface and index) in The Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, Antiquities, 24 (1873), pp. 119–263. A 12th-cent. Litany of the Culdees in use at Dunkeld is pr. in A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 2 (pt. 1; 1873), pp. 278–85. E. J. Gwynn and W. J. Purton, 'The monastery of Tallaght', Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, 29 (1911), pp. 115–79; E. [J.] Gwynn (ed.), The Rule of Tallaght (Hermathena, Suppl. 2 to no. 40; 1927). G. W. S. Barrow, 'The Cathedral Chapter at St Andrews and the Culdees in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries', JEH 3 (1952), pp. 23–39; repr. in id., The Kingdom of the Scots (1973), pp. 212–32. P. O'Dwyer, O. Carm., Céli Dé: Spiritual reform in Ireland 750–900 (Dublin, 1977; 2nd edn., 1981). J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, 1 (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, New York, 1929), esp. pp. 468–77. C. McGrath in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 520 f., s.v., with bibl.

Cullmann Oscar (1902–), NT scholar and theologian. Born at Strasbourg, he studied at the universities of Strasbourg and *Paris, and in 1930 he became professor in the former. In 1938 he became professor at Basle and from 1948 to 1972 he was simultaneously also professor in the Protestant faculty of the University of Paris. Cullmann's work lay in the area of *Biblical Theology, and he was specially concerned in developing a theory of Heilsgeschichte. This was expounded in Christus und die Zeit (1946; Eng. tr., Christ and Time, 1951). According to Cullmann, what is most distinctive in the NT is its view of time and history. Running through the whole course of world history there has been a relatively narrow stream of sacred history. This sacred history, the midpoint of which was Jesus Christ, provides the clue to the understanding of general history, which is seen to be linear in form and to run from creation to consummation. Cullmann stressed the objectivity of this sacred history as against the existential interpretation favoured by R. *Bultmann. In Heil als Geschichte (1965; Eng. tr., Salvation in History, 1967) Cullmann restated his views and tried to meet some of the objections to his earlier work. Another important contribution to Biblical Theology was Die Christologie des Neuen Testaments (1957; Eng. tr., 1959). His *ecumenical interests were demonstrated in his important study on the place of St *Peter in the primitive Church, Petrus: Jünger, Apostel, Märtyrer (1952; Eng. tr., 1953). He was invited to be an observer at the Second *Vatican Council and has been active in developing relations between Protestants and RCs on the Continent of Europe.

J. Frisque, Oscar Cullmann: Une théologie de l'histoire du salut (Cahiers de l'actualité religieuse, 11; 1960), with bibl., incl. list of his works, pp. 263–76. Festschriften for Cullmann's 60th birthday, Neotestamentica et Patristica (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 6; 1962), repr. list of his works, brought up to date by W. Rordorf, pp. ix–xix; for his 65th birthday, Oikonomia: Heilsgeschichte als Thema der Theologie, ed. F. Christ (Hamburg, 1967); and for his 70th birthday, Neues Testament und Geschichte, ed. H. Baltensweiler and B. Reiche (Zurich and Tübingen, 1972), with bibl. for 1962–71 by H. Heck, pp. 329–44. H.-G. Hermesmann, Zeit und Heil: Oscar Cullmanns Theologie der Heilsgeschichte (Konfessionskundliche und kontroverstheologische Studien, 43 [1979]). K.-H. Schlaudraff, 'Heil als Geschichte'? Die Frage nach dem heilsgeschichtlichen Denken, dargestellt anhand der Konzeption Oscar Cullmanns (Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese, 29 [1988]).

Cum Occasione. The constitution of *Innocent X, dated 31 May 1653, condemning five propositions which embodied the dogmatic substance of *Jansenism.

Text in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 15 (Turin, 1868), pp. 720 f. The condemned propositions repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 614 f. (nos. 2001–7).

Cumberland, Richard (1632–1718), Bp. of *Peterborough and moral philosopher. Having turned from the study of medicine and anatomy to that of theology, he became Vicar of Brampton (Northants) in 1658, and of All Hallows, Stamford, *c.*1667. In 1691, though little known as an ecclesiastic, he was appointed to the see of Peterborough, which he administered faithfully, though without special distinction, for the rest of his life. His principal work, De legibus naturae disquisitio philosophica (1672), which, through being commended by S. *Pufendorf, established Cumberland's reputation abroad, was designed as a reply to T. *Hobbes. In it Cumberland maintained that the laws of nature are ethical and immutable, and that their root-principle was that of 'Universal Benevolence' (which he opposed deliberately to the 'Egoism' of Hobbes). He was the real founder of English *Utilitarianism.

S. Payne, A Brief Account of the Life, Character and Writings of . . . Richard Cumberland (1720). E. Sharp, 'The Ethical System of Richard Cumberland and its Place in the History of British Ethics', Mind, NS 21 (1912), pp. 371–98. L. Kirk, Richard Cumberland and Natural Law: Secularisation of Thought in Seventeenth-Century England (Cambridge, 1987). L. Stephen in DNB 13 (1888) pp. 289 f.

cuneiform (Lat. cuneus, 'wedge'). The characters of wedge-shaped or arrow-headed components in which the ancient Akkadian, Persian, and other inscriptions were written. It was probably invented by the Sumerians, who developed it out of what was originally a pictorial form of writing, and was widely used throughout the ancient Near East.

The name is said to have been first used by Thomas Hyde, Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford (d. 1703). For sign lists see R. Labat, Manuel d'épigraphie akkadienne: Signes, syllabaire, idéogrammes (1948; rev. edn. by F. Malbran-Labat, 1976); M. Dietrich and O. Loretz, Die Keilalphabete (Abhandlungen zur Literatur Alt-Syrien-Pälestinas, 1; Münster, 1988). G. R. *Driver, Semitic Writing: From Pictograph to Alphabet (Schweich Lectures for 1944; 1948; 3rd edn. by S. A. Hopkins, 1976), pp. 1–77; C. B. F. Walker, Cuneiform [1987], repr. in J. T. Hooker and others, Reading the Past: Ancient Writing from Cuneiform to the Alphabet [1990], pp. 15–73.

curate. Properly, a clergyman who has the care ('cure') of a parish, i.e. in England a *rector, *vicar, or *perpetual curate. Such a clergyman is also known as the 'incumbent'. He is chosen by the 'patron' (the person or body having the right to nominate a clergyman for the parish in question), and is admitted to the cure of souls ('instituted' or 'collated') by the bishop of the diocese. He can be removed only by resignation, exchange of cure, promotion to another benefice involving the cure of souls, or deprivation either as a 'censure' in a conduct case under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963 or automatically following a conviction in the temporal courts for some disgraceful offence.

In general speech, however, the word is now used to denote an assistant or unbeneficed clergyman, i.e. one appointed to assist the incumbent in the performance of his duties, or to take charge of a parish temporarily during a vacancy or while the incumbent is unable to perform his duties ('curate in charge'). Assistant curates are nominated by the incumbent or the bishop, and licensed by the bishop. The licence may be revoked by the bishop after due notice.

From 1662 to 1688 the episcopalian incumbents of Scottish parishes were styled curates.

A. T. Hart, The Curate's Lot: The Story of the unbeneficed English Clergy (1970).

Cur Deus Homo (Lat., 'Why [did] God [become] man?'). The title of St *Anselm's famous treatise on the *Atonement (1097–8), in which he rejected the theory that the death of Christ could be explained in terms of a ransom from the devil and interpreted it in the light of the justice and mercy of God. See SATISFACTION.

Lat. text repr. from edn. of Anselm's works by F. S. Schmitt, OSB, 2 (Edinburgh, 1946), pp. 37–133, with Fr. tr. and full introd. and notes, by R. Roques (SC 91; 1963). There have been various Eng. trs. See also bibl. to ANSELM.

Curé d'Ars, the, St Jean-Baptiste Marie Vianney (1786–1859). He was born at Dardilly, near Lyons, and intended for the priesthood from an early age. His education and training were interrupted by his conscription for the army, from which he deserted, and again considerably lengthened by his inability to learn Latin. After ordination at last in 1815, he was for three years assistant priest at Écully, and then appointed in Feb. 1818 parish priest at Ars. In this remote village he achieved almost worldwide fame. First from the neighbouring parishes, then from all France, finally from other countries too, came men and women, of all sorts and conditions, to seek his counsel. By 1855 the number of his visitors was computed at 20,000 a year, and during his last few years he was forced to spend 16 to 18 hours a day in the confessional. He was beatified in 1905, canonized in 1925, and in 1929 created the patron of parish priests. Feast day, 4 (formerly 9) Aug.

Sermons (4 vols., Lyons, 1883). A. Monnin, SJ, Le Curé d'Ars: Vie de M. Jean-Baptiste Vianney (2 vols., 1861; Eng. trs., 1907 and 1924); J. Vianney, Le Saint Curé d'Ars, 1786–1859 ('Les Saints', 1905; Eng. tr., 1906); F. Trochu, Le Curé d'Ars: Saint Jean-Marie-Baptiste Vianney (1786–1859) d'après toutes les pièces du procès de canonisation et de nombreux documents inédits (1925; Eng. tr., 1927); id., L'Admirable Vie du Curé d'Ars (1932; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1934–6). Other Lives by J. Darche (Paris, 1865), H. *Ghéon (ibid., 1928; Eng. tr., 1929), L. C. Sheppard (London, 1958), M. Trouncer (ibid., 1959), D. Pézeril (Paris, 1959; Eng. tr., 1961) and R. Fourrey (ibid., 1981). J. Genet, L'Énigme des sermons du Curé d'Ars (1961). B. Nodet in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 840–4, s.v. 'Jean-Marie Vianney'.

Cureton, William (1808–64), *Syriac scholar. Educated at Christ Church, Oxford, he was ordained in 1831, became a sub-librarian of the *Bodleian Library in 1834, and from 1837 to 1849 was on the staff of the British Museum. There it was Cureton's task to catalogue the Syriac MSS brought back from the *Nitrian monasteries by H. *Tattam. Among his discoveries were the Syriac text of three of St *Ignatius's Epistles (to *Polycarp, to the Eph., and to the Rom.; published 1845), which he argued were the only genuine ones (a position no longer held); the 'Curetonian' *Old Syriac text of the Gospels (published 1858); and the 'Festal Letters' of *Athanasius (published 1848).

His Ancient Syriac Documents relative to the earliest Establishment of Christianity in Edessa and the neighbouring Countries was posthumously pub. by W. Wright (1864), with preface, pp. i–ix. S. Lane-Poole in DNB 13 (1888), pp. 325 f., s.v.

Curia. The Papal court and its functionaries, esp. those through whom the government of the RC Church is administered. It includes the *Roman Congregations, Tribunals, and Pontifical Councils, and acts with the delegated authority of the Pope. General reforms of its structure and functioning were introduced by Pope *Paul VI in 1967 and then by Pope *John Paul II's Apostolic Constitution 'Pastor Bonus' of 28 June 1988. The current internal Regulations received Papal approval on 4 Feb. 1992. The term is also used in the RC Church of the court of diocesan officials (esp. legal officials) who act on behalf of an individual diocesan bishop. In medieval times the word was commonly used of any court, ecclesiastical or lay. Current RC canon law on the Roman and diocesan Curia is contained in CIC (1983), cans. 360–61 and 469–94.

There is an extensive specialized literature. More general modern works include F. M. Cappello, De Curia Romana iuxta Reformationem a Pio X sapientissime inductam (2 vols., Rome, 1911–'1912' [1913]); N. del Re, La Curia Romana: Lineamenti storico-giuridici (1941; 3rd edn., Sussidi Eruditi, 23; 1970), with bibl.; C. M. Berutti, OP, De Curia Romana: Notulae historico-exegetico-practicae (Rome, 1952). K. Jordan, 'Die Entstehung der römischen Kurie', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, 72, Kanon. Abt., 28 (1939), pp. 97–152, with refs. The Apostolic Constitution 'Pastor Bonus' is pr. in AAS 80 (1988), pp. 841–934; the Regulations are pr. ibid. 84 (1992), pp. 201–67. B. Ojetti, SJ, in CE 13 (1912), pp. 147–54, s.v. 'Roman Curia'; P. Torquebiau in DDC 4 (1939), cols. 971–1008, s.v. 'Curie romaine', and on the diocesan synod see id., ibid., cols. 961–71, s.v. 'Curie diocésaine'. See also bibls. to ROMAN CONGREGATIONS (also under the sep. headings) and CARDINAL.

cursive script was the basis of what became a formal book-hand, properly called 'Greek minuscule', which used small, rounded ('lower-case') letters, joined together for speed of writing. Its letter-forms are first found in Egyptian documentary hands of the 7th and 8th cents. AD. At the beginning of the 9th cent. the fully developed minuscule replaced *uncial (except in large volumes for liturgical use) as the only book-hand for copying Greek literary works. The earliest dated example is the Uspensky Gospels (St Petersburg MS 219) of AD 835. It continued in use, with only minor modifications, until the invention of printing.

Cursor Mundi. An early English poem on the history of the world, probably dating from the early 14th cent. It is based on the Bible, but incorporates much that is legendary. The first four books extend from the Creation to the successors of *Solomon, the fifth deals with the early life of Jesus and the BVM, the sixth with Christ's later life and the Apostles, and the seventh with the Last Judgement. It is in a northern dialect and seems to have been written in one of the large northern monasteries, but the author is unknown.

There is an edn. by R. Morris in four parallel columns from different MSS (EETS 57, 59, 62, 66, 68, 99, 101; 1874–93); see also The Southern Version of Cursor Mundi, ed. S. M. Horrall and others (Ottawa Medieval Texts and Studies, 5, 13, 14, 16, etc.; 1978 ff.). S. M. Horrall, '"For the commun at understand". Cursor Mundi and its Background', in M. G. Sargent (ed.), De Cella in Seculum: Religious and Secular Life and Devotion in Late Medieval England. An Interdisciplinary Conference in Celebration of the Eighth Centenary of the Consecration of St Hugh of Avalon . . . 20–22 July, 1986 (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 97–107. A. E. Hartung (ed.), A Manual of the Writings in Middle English, 1050–1500, 7 (New Haven, Conn., 1986), pp. 2276–8, with bibl. pp. 2503–7.

Cusanus, Nicolaus. See NICHOLAS OF CUSA.

Customary (also known as a Consuetudinary or Liber Ordinarius). The book containing (1) the rites and ceremonies for the services, and/or (2) the rules and customs of discipline, of a particular monastery, cathedral, or religious order. In the Middle Ages, when local differences were great, they were of considerable practical use; but the greatly increased standardization of worship and discipline in more recent times, e.g. by the Congregation of *Rites (founded in 1588), led to their disappearance. The medieval customaries are of great value as source-books for the historian and the liturgiologist.

Cuthbert, St (*c.*636–87), Bp. of *Lindisfarne. In 651 Cuthbert became a monk at Melrose. Somewhat later he went with his abbot, Eata, to found a monastery at *Ripon; but when they refused to conform to Roman usages as the sub-king Alhfrith demanded, they were expelled and returned north. Shortly afterwards the Synod of *Whitby (664) pronounced in favour of the Roman Easter and *tonsure, and they conformed. In 664 Cuthbert became Prior of Melrose, where he was a zealous pastor of the surrounding countryside. After some years he felt called to the solitary life, but Eata appointed him Prior of Lindisfarne; later he was allowed to become a hermit on Farne Island, where many had recourse to his spiritual counsel. In 684 he was reluctantly elected Bp. of *Hexham; but after agreeing to exchange sees with Eata, he was consecrated Bp. of Lindisfarne at Easter 685. After a brief but active episcopate, Cuthbert, aware that he had not long to live, withdrew again as a solitary to Farne, where he died on 20 Mar. 687. He was buried on Lindisfarne. In 698 his body was exhumed, apparently incorrupt, and his cult developed rapidly, with the Lindisfarne Gospels and also three Lives being produced in his honour before 720. In the 9th cent. the Scandinavian threat prompted the Lindisfarne community to take his body to a safer site; in 883 they settled at Chester-le-Street, moving thence to Durham in 995. Important *sanctuary rights developed early around Cuthbert's body, and his cult, surviving both the Scandinavian and Norman conquests, emerged as one of the most important in medieval England. His *pectoral cross, portable altar, coffin-reliquary, and other objects survived the destruction of his shrine in 1539–40, and were recovered when his tomb in Durham Cathedral was opened in 1827. Feast day, 20 Mar.

Life by an anonymous monk of Lindisfarne (written between 699 and 705) and *Bede's prose Life are ed., with Eng. tr., by B. Colgrave, Two Lives of Saint Cuthbert (Cambridge, 1940; repr. 1985). Bede's metrical Life ed. W. Jaager (Palaestra, 198; Leipzig, 1935). Further information in Bede's Ecclesiastical History, 3. 25 and 4. 26–32 (edns. and comm. listed under Bede). Further Eng. tr. of Bede's prose Life by J. F. Webb, Lives of the Saints (Penguin Classics, 1965), pp. 69–129; rev. edn. as The Age of Bede, ed. D. H. Farmer (ibid., 1983), pp. 41–102. Various 10th–12th-cent. works on the posthumous miracles and translations of Cuthbert are included in T. Arnold's edn. of *Simeon of Durham's Opera Omnia (2 vols., RS, 1882–5). J. Raine, Saint Cuthbert (Durham, 1828); C. F. Battiscombe (ed.), The Relics of Saint Cuthbert (Oxford, 1956). G. Bonner, D. [W.] Rollason, and C. [E.] Stancliffe (eds.), St Cuthbert, his Cult and his Community to AD 1200 (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1989). Useful brief introd. ed. D. W. Rollason, Cuthbert, Saint and Patron (Durham, 1987).

Cynewulf (early 9th cent.), Anglo-Saxon poet. His name, spelled out in runic letters, is found in the epilogues of four Anglo-Saxon poems which are therefore certainly his work. They are all religious in content. The second part of Christ, the only part by Cynewulf, celebrates the mystery of the Ascension; Juliana is the account of the martyrdom of the saint; Elene, which many scholars consider his masterpiece, tells the story of the finding of the true Cross by St *Helena, and The Fates of the Apostles is a fragment incorporating legends about the apostles after their dispersal. The poems, which are obviously inspired by great devotion to the mysteries of the Christian faith and to the saints, have many passages of great beauty. Besides the authentic four, others have been attributed to Cynewulf, but these assignations are conjectural. Of the author himself nothing is known; he has been identified with Cynewulf, Bp. of *Lindisfarne (d. 783), and also with Cynwulf, an otherwise unknown priest whose signature is appended to the decrees of the Council of *Clovesho (803). The first identification is chronologically impossible; the second incapable of proof. See also DREAM OF THE ROOD.

C. W. Kennedy, The Poems of Cynewulf translated into English Prose (1910), with important introd., pp. 1–83, and bibl., pp. 335–

47. Good crit. edns., with full notes, by A. S. Cook of 'The Christ' (Boston, 1900), of 'Elene', with the 'Phoenix' and 'Physiologus' (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1919); by R. Woolf of 'Juliana' (London, 1955); by P. O. E. Gradon of 'Elene' (ibid., 1958); and by K. R. Brooks of 'Andreas' and 'The Fate of the Apostles' (Oxford, 1961). C. Schaar, Critical Studies in the Cynewulf Group (Lund Studies in English, 17; 1949), with bibl. K. Sisam, 'Cynewulf and his Poetry', Proceedings of the British Academy, 18 (1932), pp. 303–31. D. G. Calder, Cynewulf (Boston, 1981). S. B. Greenfield and F. C. Robinson, A Bibliography of Publications on Old English Literature to the end of 1972 (Toronto and Manchester, 1980), pp. 207–10 (nos. 3368–408).

Cyprian, St (d. 258), Bp. of Carthage. Thascius Caecilianus Cyprianus was a pagan rhetorician converted to Christianity *c.*246. Within two years he was elected Bp. of Carthage, having by that time acquired a profound knowledge of the Scriptures and the writings of *Tertullian. A few months later the Decian persecution broke out (autumn 249), and he was forced to flee, but continued to rule his Church from exile by letter. He returned in 251. Large numbers of Christians had lapsed from their faith, and many more had become libellatici. The confessors, i.e. those who had stood firm, were reconciling the lapsed on easy terms, by virtue of the merits of the martyrs. Cyprian was strongly opposed to their practice and two councils (251, 252) decided that the lapsed should be reconciled after suitable penance and delay. In 252 there occurred an outbreak of the plague in Carthage, which was ascribed to the crimes of the Christians. In spite of their charitable works, organized by Cyprian, hatred of them, and esp. of their leader, increased. Meanwhile the schism of *Novatian, arising out of the question of the lapsed, gave rise to the rebaptism controversy. Cyprian received the support of the African bishops in two councils (255–6) in demanding the rebaptism of schismatics, on the ground that no one outside the Church could administer her sacraments. As the Church at Rome held that both schismatics and heretics could validly administer baptism, there followed a violent correspondence between Cyprian and *Stephen, Bp. of Rome, which has also acquired significance for later controversy concerning the Papal claims. But for the moment the controversy was cut short by the persecution of the Emp. Valerian. Cyprian having been banished, an attempt was made in 258 to arrest him. For the time being he hid himself, in order that he might suffer in his own city; but on the second attempt he gave himself up, and was martyred in Carthage on 14 Sept. 258.

Cyprian's writings, mainly short treatises and letters, enjoyed great popularity from the first. He had none of the brilliance of his predecessor, Tertullian, but his sober judgement and pastoral instincts gained him his hearing. Some of his works are also of theological importance, esp. those dealing with the Church, the ministry, and the Sacraments. They include: (1) Ad Quirinum or Testimonia (*c.*248), a collection of biblical proof-texts in three books, arranged under subjects; (2) De Habitu Virginum (*c.*249), in praise of virginity; (3) De Lapsis (*c.*251), dealing with the conditions for reconciling the lapsed; (4) De Catholicae Ecclesiae Unitate (251), a treatise held in special esteem, on the nature of true unity in the Church in its relation to the episcopate ('habere non potest Deum patrem qui ecclesiam non habet matrem', cap. 6). Acc. to M. Bévenot, SJ, Cyprian issued this work in two recensions; (5) De Dominica Oratione (*c.*252); and (6) De Opere et Eleemosynis (*c.*253), on almsgiving as a means of obtaining grace.

A like importance attaches to his correspondence, some of his letters (e.g. Ep. 63, on the Eucharist) being virtually short treatises. The corpus consists of 81 items (65 Cyprian's own and 16 replies). Here again the subjects are practical rather than dogmatic, and we gain a clear picture of his ideals as a bishop.

Though slain on 14 Sept., he is commemorated in the BCP calendar on 26 Sept. (by confusion with a converted magician of Antioch venerated on that day; see foll. entry) and in the Roman Missal on 16 Sept. (to avoid *Holy Cross Day and the former *Octave of the *Nativity of the BVM). The proposed 1927–8 revision of the BCP had another date, 13 Sept., adopted in the ASB and elsewhere.

Editio princeps of Cyprian's works by J. Andreas (Rome, 1471). Important later edns. by *Erasmus (Basle, 1520), J. *Fell and J. *Pearson (Oxford, 1682), and S. *Baluze and P. *Maran (Paris, 1726). This last repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 4 (unsatisfactory). Crit. edns. by W. Hartel in CSEL (3 vols., 1868–71), and by R. Weber and others (CCSL, 3 3A, etc.; 1972 ff.). Letters also ed., with Fr. tr., by L. Bayard ('Collection des Universités de France', 2 vols., 1925; 2nd edn., 1961); De Dominica, ed., with Fr. tr., by M. Réveillaud (Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses, 58; 1964); De Lapsis and De Ecclesiae Catholicae Unitate, ed., with Eng. tr., by M. Bévenot, SJ (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1971); Ad Demetrianum, ed., with Ital. tr., by E. Gallicet (Corona Patrum, 4; 1976); Ad Donatum and De Bono Patientiae, ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Molager (SC 291; 1982). Eng. tr. by R. E. Wallis in ANCL (2 vols., 1868–9); also of his Letters by G. W. Clarke (ACW 43, 44, 46, and 47 [1984–9]), with useful introds. There survive a contemporary Life (not wholly reliable), acc. to St *Jerome by Cyprian's deacon *Pontius, and the official description of his martyrdom ('Acta Proconsularia'); convenient edn. of the 'Acta', with Eng. tr., by H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 168–75. Modern Lives by E. W. *Benson (London, 1897), and P. Hinchliff (ibid., 1974). Also P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, 2: Saint Cyprien et son temps (1902). H. von Soden, Die Cyprianische Briefsammlung: Geschichte ihrer Entstehung und Überlieferung (TU 25, Heft 3; 1904). On the variant texts of the De Catholicae Ecclesiae Unitate, the fullest study is that of M. Bévenot, SJ, St Cyprian's De Unitate, chap. 4, in the Light of the Manuscripts [1939]; id., The Tradition of Manuscripts: A Study in the Transmission of St Cyprian's Treatises (Oxford, 1961). A. d'Alès, La Théologie de S. Cyprien (1922); H. Koch, Cathedra Petri: Neue Untersuchungen über die Anfänge der Primatslehre (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 11; 1930), and other works of this author; B. Poschmann, Ecclesia Principalis: Ein kritischer Beitrag zur Frage des Primats bei Cyprian (1933). I. Schrijnen and C. Mohrmann, Studien zur Syntax der Briefe des heiligen Cyprian (2 vols., Nijmegen, 1936–7); G. S. M. Walker, The Churchmanship of St Cyprian (Ecumenical Studies in History, 9; 1968); M. A. Fahey, SJ, Cyprian and the Bible (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Biblischen Hermeneutik, 9; 1971); U. Wickert, Sacramentum Unitatis: Ein Beitrag zum Verständnis der Kirche bei Cyprian (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 41; 1971); H. Gülzow, Cyprian und Novatian: Der Briefwechsel zwischen den Gemeinden in Rom und Karthago zur Zeit der Verfolgung des Kaisers Decius (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 48; 1975); C. Saumagne, Saint Cyprien, évêque de Carthage, 'Pape' d'Afrique (Études d'Antiquités Africaines, 1975); S. Deléani, Christum sequi: Étude d'un thème dans l'œuvre de Saint Cyprien (1979). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 172–81 and 582 f. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 11–20 (nos. 38–67). M. Bévenot, SJ, in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 246–54, s.v.

Cyprian, St (*c.*300), a converted magician of *Antioch. Acc. to a prob. worthless legend which apparently influenced the legend of Faust, Cyprian was a pagan magician and astrologer who, when using his arts to ensnare a Christian virgin, Justina, was converted to her faith. Cyprian eventually became a bishop and Justina the head of a convent. In the *Diocletianic Persecution both were apprehended, brought to the Imperial residence at Nicomedia, and beheaded. Their reputed relics are in the Baptistery of St John *Lateran at Rome. Feast day, with St Justina, in the E. 2 Oct.; in the W., formerly 26 Sept., dropped from the calendar of the RC Church in 1969; the date, 26 Sept., was wrongly allotted to St *Cyprian of Carthage, q.v., in the BCP.

In an early form the legend was known to St *Gregory of Nazianzus (d. 389/90) and *Prudentius (d. c.410). Gk. and Lat. text of Legend, with comm., in AASS, Sept. 7 (1750), pp. 195–246. H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'Cyprien d'Antioche et Cyprien de Carthage', Anal. Boll. 39 (1921), pp. 314–32. T. *Zahn, Cyprian von Antiochien und die deutsche Faustsage (1882). R. *Reitzenstein, 'Cyprian der Magier', Nachr. (Gött.), 1917, pp. 38–79. L. Radermacher, Griechische Quellen zur Faustsage, Sb. (Wien), 206, Abh. 4; 1927, pp. 1–41 ('Der Zauberer Cyprianus'). L. Krestan and A. Hermann in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 467–77, s.v. 'Cyprianus II (Magier)'.

Cyprian, St (d. by 549), Bp. of Toulon. He was the principal author of the first book of a Life of his friend, *Caesarius of Arles. In 529 at the Council of *Orange he took an active part in combating *Semipelagianism. A letter to Maximus of Geneva is extant in which Cyprian shows knowledge of the '*Te Deum', and defends himself against the charge of *Theopaschitism. Feast day, 3 Oct.

Book 1 of the Life of St Caesarius of Arles in AASS, Aug. 6 (1743), pp. 64–75, and in J. P. Migne, PL 67. 1001–24. Crit. edns. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 3 (1896), pp. 457–83, and by G. *Morin, OSB, Sancti Caesarii . . . Opera Omnia, 2 (Maredsous, 1942), pp. 296–323. Cyprian's letter to Maximus ed. W. Gundlach in MGH, Epistolae, 3 (1892), pp. 434–6, and with introd. by C. Wawra in Th. Q. 85 (1903), pp. 576–94. S. Cavallin, Literarhistorische und text-kritische Studien zur Vita S. Caesarii Arelatensis (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, NF, Avd. 1, Bd. 30, Nr. 7; 1934). Discussion of material for his life in AASS, Oct. 2 (1768), pp. 164–78.

Cyprus, Christianity in. Cyprus was evangelized by Sts *Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13). The many Cypriot saints mentioned in Byzantine Synaxaria point to the firm hold Christianity secured in the island at an early date. At the Council of *Nicaea (325), Cyprus was represented by three bishops, including St *Spyridon, while later in the century St *Epiphanius (d. 403) was a distinguished Bp. of Salamis. About this time definite claims to independence of the patriarchates, esp. of *Antioch, were made by the Church of Cyprus, and in spite of the adverse view of Pope *Innocent I (402–17), the Council of *Ephesus in 431 formally recognized the claims of the Cypriot bishops in its 7th Session. A subsequent decision by *Acacius, Patr. of *Constantinople, confirmed this independence when it was challenged in 488 by *Peter the Fuller, Patr. of Antioch. Since then the archbishop, or *exarch, has been held to rank immediately after the five patriarchs. Arcadius and Sergius, Abps. of Constantia (Salamis) in the 7th cent., are famous as opponents of the Emp. *Heraclius.

The Cypriots passed under Arab rule, but were set free in the 10th cent., and at this time the great monasteries of the island were built. The Crusaders were welcomed, but soon caused trouble by introducing in 1196 a Latin hierarchy, which with unrelenting cruelty took control of Church affairs, so that the history of the next four centuries contains in Church events nothing but Greco-Latin strife. But the Latin Church was completely extinguished when the Turks took the island in 1571. The Greeks were more fortunate. Though many were massacred, they were permitted eventually to reconstitute their Church in four dioceses. In 1821, at the beginning of the Greek War of Independence, all four Cypriot bishops were executed. After the establishment of British rule in 1878, the bishops and clergy occasionally found relations strained with the authorities because they tended to be nationalist leaders. In 1960 Abp. Makarios became first President of the Republic of Cyprus. The Church in Cyprus is governed by the Holy Synod of the four dioceses. After the Turkish invasion in 1974, nearly 40 per cent of the island was occupied; most of the Greeks were expelled from the area and the churches and monasteries closed, demolished, or turned into mosques. In the whole of Cyprus there are a very few RCs, who are under the spiritual care of *Franciscan friars, and also some *Uniats.

J. Hackett, A History of the Orthodox Church of Cyprus from the Coming of the Apostles Paul and Barnabas to the Commencement of the British Occupation (A.D. 45–A.D. 1878) together with Some Account of the Latin and other Churches existing in the Island (1901). H. T. F. Duckworth, The Church of Cyprus (1900). There is much information and extensive refs. in G. Hill, A History of Cyprus (4 vols., Cambridge, 1940–52). A. and J. A. Stylianou, The Painted Churches of Cyprus (Stourbridge, 1964; 2nd edn., London, 1985). R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 791–820, s.v. 'Chypre', with full bibl.

Cyril, St (c.315–87), Bp. of *Jerusalem from about 349. In 357 *Acacius, the extreme *Arian Bp. of *Caesarea, who claimed ecclesiastical jurisdiction over Jerusalem, had Cyril banished from his see on the ground of his opposition to Arianism, but the Council of *Seleucia recalled him in 359. Two further banishments followed. Meanwhile Cyril's beliefs on the burning question of the Godhead of Christ had been suspect in the opposite quarter, since he disliked the *Homoousios (the watchword of the Nicene faith) as being a man-made term. Accordingly the Council of *Antioch in 379 sent St *Gregory of Nyssa to Palestine to report on the situation. He brought back word that though the life of the Jerusalem Church was morally corrupt and full of factions, its faith was sound. It has been suggested that Cyril, to prove his orthodoxy, recited the creed traditionally in use at Jerusalem (which like the *Nicene Creed contained the Homoousios) at the Council of *Constantinople in 381, and that its adoption by the Council fixed it in its present form.

The most important surviving work of Cyril is a series of catechetical instructions delivered to the candidates for Baptism on *Holy Saturday: a pre-Lenten 'Procatechesis', 18 'Catecheses' delivered during Lent, and 5 'Mystagogic Catecheses' delivered in Easter week after Baptism. The Procatechesis and the Catecheses were delivered about 350. The 'Mystagogic Catecheses' must be placed at the end of Cyril's episcopate, if indeed they are by him. If, as many think, they are by his successor, John, they may well reflect Cyril's own teaching. They give a full and very illuminating picture of the preparation for Baptism then in use and much material for reconstructing the Palestinian liturgy of the 4th cent. Cyril does not mention the Words of *Institution in the Eucharist, perhaps because they were too familiar, perhaps because they were too sacred; but it is just possible that his rite did not contain them. He speaks of non-communicating attendance at the Eucharistic rite, and stresses the Real Presence. He strongly affirms the value and efficacy of Baptism with its anointing, renunciations, washing-away of sins, and laying on of hands. Feast day, 18 Mar.

Early edns. by J. Prévost (Paris, 1608) and T. Milles (London, 1703). Much improved edn. by the *Maurists, A. A. Touttée and P. *Maran (Paris, 1720), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 33. More recent edns. by W. K. Reischl and J. Rupp, 2 vols., Munich, 1848–60, (of Procatechesis and Mystagogical Lectures only) by F. L. Cross, London, 1951, with bibl., and of the Mystagogical Lectures by A. Piédagnel, Cong. Orat., with Fr. tr. by P. Paris, PSS (SC 126; 1966; 2nd edn., 1988). Eng. tr. by R. W. *Church in LF, with pref. by J. H. *Newman (Oxford, 1838); rev. by E. H. Gifford in NPNCF 7 (1894), pp. 1–157; and by L. P. McCauley, SJ, and A. A. Stephenson (Fathers of the Church, 61 and 64; 1969–70). Eng. tr. of selections in W. Telfer, Cyril of Jerusalem and Nemesius of Emesa (Library of Christian Classics, 4; 1955), pp. 19–199. Important 'Dissertationes' by A. A. Touttée, op. cit. J. Lebon, 'La Position de St Cyrille de Jérusalem dans les luttes provoquées par l'arianisme', RHE 20 (1924), pp. 181–210 and 357–86; B. Niederberger, Die Logoslehre des hl. Cyrillus von Jerusalem (Paderborn, 1923). The ascription of the five Mystagogical Catecheses to Cyril has been challenged by W. J. Swaans, 'A propos des catéchèses mystagogiques attribuées à St Cyrille de Jérusalem', Le Muséon, 40 (1942), pp. 6–43. J. H. Greenlee, The Gospel Text of Cyril of Jerusalem (Texts and Studies, 17; 1955). A. Paulin, Saint Cyrille de Jérusalem Catéchète (Lex Orandi, 29; 1959). P. Nautin, 'La date du "De Viris Inlustribus" de Jérôme, de la mort de Cyril de Jérusalem et celle de Grégoire de Nazianze', RHE 56 (1961), pp. 33–35. P. W. L. Walker, Holy City, Holy Places? Christian Attitudes to Jerusalem and the Holy Land in the Fourth Century (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1990), esp. pp. 31–4, 116–30, and 311–46. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 289–96 (nos. 3585–618). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 312 f. and 614, with further bibl. X. Le Bachelet in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 2527–77; E. J. Yarnold, SJ, in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 261–6, s.v.

Cyril, St (d. 444), Patr. of *Alexandria. In 412 he succeeded his uncle Theophilus in the patriarchal see. He soon opened warfare with impartial vigour upon *Novatianism, *Neoplatonism, the Jews, and the Imperial prefect, Orestes, and if he himself bore no personal responsibility for the death of the distinguished philosopher *Hypatia, her murder was certainly the work of his supporters. The chief contest of his life, however, came *c.*430. It arose out of the support given by *Nestorius, Patr. of *Constantinople, to his chaplain, Anastasius, who had preached against the application of the word *Theotokos to the BVM on the ground that she was the mother of only the humanity of Christ. The rivalry of the patriarchal sees, the antipathy of *Alexandrian to *Antiochene theological thought, and a personal love of conflict, made Cyril the obvious champion of the contested word, and he defended it in his Paschal letter for 429. He then persuaded Pope *Celestine to summon a synod at *Rome in 430 and condemn Nestorius, had the condemnation repeated in his own synod at Alexandria, and sent notice of both decrees to Nestorius with a covering letter and 12 anathemas. This letter, which epitomized Cyril's faith, was formally approved by the councils of *Ephesus (431) and *Chalcedon (451; after Cyril's death), but at the latter council his anathemas were omitted. At the Council of Ephesus, Cyril himself assumed control and had Nestorius condemned before the Antiochene bishops had arrived. On their arrival the Antiochenes held a separate council, and Cyril in turn was pronounced deposed. The Emperor at first confirmed both depositions, though that of Cyril was quickly reversed. In 433 an agreement was reached by Cyril and the more moderate Antiochenes.

Whatever may be thought of some of the methods adopted by Cyril in his controversies, his distinction and ability as a theologian are beyond dispute. The most brilliant representative of the Alexandrian theological tradition, he put into systematic form, on the basis of the teaching of St *Athanasius and the *Cappadocian Fathers, the classical Greek doctrines of the Trinity and of the Person of Christ. Where, in points of detail, his Christology appears to differ from that of the Council of Chalcedon, the divergence is partly, if not wholly, terminological. He appears to have used the Greek word φύσις as almost if not quite the equivalent of ὑπόστασις ('person'), and not in its later sense of 'nature'; and it was this use of language which gave a ready handle to those who later sought to claim his authority for *Monophysitism.

His writings reflect Cyril's outstanding qualities as a theologian. They are marked by precision in exposition, accuracy in thought, and skill in reasoning, though they lack elegance in style. They include a large collection of letters (among them, 29 'Paschal homilies'); many exegetical books, e.g. commentaries on Jn. and Lk., and many other Books of both the OT and the NT, much of which survives in fragments or versions; several treatises on dogmatic theology; an Apology against *Julian the Apostate; and a rather meagre (in view of Cyril's celebrity as a preacher) collection of sermons. Feast day in E., 9 June; in W., 27 June (formerly 9 Feb.).

The only collected edn. of Cyril's Opera is due to J. Aubert, Canon of Notre-Dame, Paris (6 vols., Paris, 1638; repr., with additions, J. P. Migne, PG 68–77). Further texts ed. A. *Mai, Rome, various dates. New edn. of certain treatises, mainly comm., by P. E. *Pusey (7 vols., Oxford, 1868–77). Crit. edns. of several of Cyril's letters in E. *Schwartz, ACO 1: Consilium Ephesinum (5 parts, Berlin, 1922–30) passim, and of Select Letters, with Eng. tr., by L. R. Wickham (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1983); also of 'De Incarnatione Unigeniti' and 'Quod unus sit Christus', with Fr. tr., by G. M. de Durand, OP (SC 97; 1964); of 'De sancta trinitate', with Fr. tr., by id. (ibid. 231, 235, and 246; 1976–8); of 'Contra Iulianum', with Fr. tr., by P. Burguière and P. Évieux (ibid. 322, etc.; 1985 ff.), and of his Festal Letters, by W. H. Burns, with introd. by P. Évieux and Fr. tr. by id. and others (ibid. 372, 392, etc.; 1991 ff.). Syr. text of his Comm. on Luke, pt. 1, ed. J. B. Chabot in CSCO, Scriptores Syri, 4th ser. 1 (1912); Lat. tr. by R. M. Tonneau (ibid. 70; 1953). Eng. tr. of selected writings, Oxford, 1872 and 1881. J. Kopallik, Cyrillus von Alexandrien: Eine Biographie (Mainz, 1881). E. Schwartz, Cyrill und der Mönch Viktor (Sb. (Wien), 208, Abh. 4; 1928). Kyrilliana: Études variées à l'occasion du XV^e centenaire de saint Cyrille d'Alexandrie (various authors, Cairo, 1947). H. du Manoir de Juaye, SJ, Dogme et spiritualité chez S. Cyrille d'Alexandrie (1944). M. Richard, 'Les Traités de Cyrille d'Alexandrie contre Diodore et Théodore et les fragments dogmatiques de Diodore de Tarse', Mélanges dédiés à la mémoire de Félix Grat, 1 (1946), pp. 99–116. N. Charlier, CSSR, 'Le Thesaurus de Trinitate de Saint Cyrille d'Alexandrie', RHE 45 (1950), pp. 25–81. J. Liébaert, La Doctrine christologique de saint Cyrille d'Alexandrie avant la Querelle nestorienne (1951). A. Kerrigan, OFM, St Cyril of Alexandria, Interpreter of the Old Testament (Analecta Biblica, 2; Rome, 1952). L. M. Armendáriz, SJ, El Nuevo Moisés: Dinámica cristocéntrica en la tipología de Cirilo Alejandrino (Estudios Onienses, 3rd ser. 5; 1962); R. L. Wilken, Judaism and the Early Christian Mind: A Study of Cyril of Alexandria's Exegesis and Theology (Yale Publications in Religion, 15; 1971). R. M. Siddals, 'Logic and Christology in Cyril of Alexandria', JTS NS 38 (1987), pp. 341–67. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 1–57 (nos. 5200–438). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 283–8 and 605 f., with bibl. J. Mahé in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 2476–527, s.v.; M. Jugie, AA, in EC 3 (1950), cols. 1715–24, s.v. 'Cirillo d'Alessandria'; W. J. Burghardt, SJ, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 571–6, s.v.

Cyril, St (826–69), and Methodius, St (*c.*815–85), the 'Apostles of the Slavs'. They were brothers who came of a Greek family of *Thessalonica, with a tradition of public service. The younger brother, originally 'Constantine', did not assume the name of Cyril until he became a monk in 868. Methodius, the elder, after holding the post of governor of a Slav province of the Empire, became a monk on Mount Olympus in Asia Minor. Constantine, after completing his studies in *Constantinople, was appointed to a chair of philosophy there. In 860–1 both brothers went on an imperial diplomatic mission to the Khazars, north of the Caucausus. In 862 the Emp. Michael III sent them as missionaries to what is now Moravia, where they taught in the vernacular. Before leaving Constantinople, Constantine invented an alphabet called *Glagolitic (see also CYRILLIC), and thus became the founder of Slavonic literature, adopting Slavonic also for the celebration of the Liturgy and circulating a Slavonic version of the Scriptures. A few years later they journeyed to Rome. Here Cyril died in a monastery shortly after taking his vows and was solemnly buried in the church of San Clemente. Methodius was then consecrated bishop and returned to Moravia. But, though he was fortified with full Papal authority, he was opposed by the German bishops and imprisoned for over two years. Pope John VIII secured his release, but deemed it expedient for a time to withdraw his permission to use Slavonic as the regular liturgical language. Acc. to some sources, it was Constantine who brought the reputed remains of St *Clement to Rome from the Crimea. Feast day in the E., 11 May; in the W., now 14 Feb. (formerly 9 Mar. and later 7 July). In 1980 *John Paul II declared them 'Patrons of Europe'.

Their anonymous, and almost contemporary biographies, are of great historical value. The principal Slavonic texts are ed., with Lat. tr., by F. Grivec and F. Tomšič (Radovi Staroslavenskog Instituta, 4; Zagreb, 1960). Eng. tr. by M. Kantor and R. S. White of The Vita of Constantine and the Vita of Methodius (Michigan Slavic Materials, 13 [1976]). Further material in the Greek Life of St Clement of Ochrid (one of their principal disciples), ascribed to *Theophylact, conveniently pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 126. 1193–240; Eng. tr. by S. Nikolov in I. Duichev (ed.), Kiril und Methodius (East European Monographs, 172; Boulder, Colo. [1985]), pp. 93–123. F. Dvornik, Les Légendes de Constantin et de Méthode vues de Byzance (Byzantinoslavica, 1; 1933), with bibl.; F. Grivec, Konstantin und Method: Lehrer der Slaven (Wiesbaden, 1960); P. Duthilleul, L'Évangélisation des Slaves: Cyrille et Méthode (Bibliothèque de Théologie, série IV. Histoire de la Théologie, 5; 1963). Cyrillo-Methodiana: Zur Frühgeschichte des Christentums bei den Slaven 863-1963. Im Auftrage der Görres-Gesellschaft, herausgegeben von M. Hellmann and others (Slavistische Forschungen, 6; Cologne, 1964). I. Dujčev, 'Problèmes cyrillométhodiens', Byzantion, 37 (1968), pp. 21–56, with bibl. F. Dvornik, Byzantine Missions among the Slavs: SS. Constantine-Cyril and Methodius (New Brunswick, NJ, 1970). A. P. Vlasto, The Entry of the Slavs into Christendom (Cambridge, 1970), esp. pp. 29–81. D. Obolensky, 'Sts Cyril and Methodius, Apostles of the Slavs', St Vladimir's Seminary Quarterly, 7 (1963), pp. 1–11, repr. in id., Byzantium and the Slavs: Collected Studies (1971), no. 9; see also nos. 10 and 11. Id., The Byzantine Commonwealth: Eastern Europe, 500–1453 (1971), pp. 73 and 136–53. A.-E. N. Tachiaos, Cyril and Methodius of Thessalonica: The Acculturation of the Slavs (Thessaloniki [1989]), with sumptuous illustrations. P. Devos in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 579–81, s.v.

Cyril Lucar. See LUCAR, CYRIL.

Cyril of Scythopolis (b. *c.*525), Greek monk and hagiographer. Born at Scythopolis, the ancient Bethshan, of parents who kept a hospice for travelling monks, Cyril, while still a child, came under the influence of St *Sabas (q.v.; d. 532). In 543 he received the *tonsure and made his way to Jerusalem, where St John the Hesychast sought to win him for his monastery. Cyril, however, at first determined to live the life of an anchorite on the banks of the *Jordan. Before long (544) he attached himself to the monastery of St *Euthymius (d. 473). The *Origenist controversies having brought this community to an end (555), Cyril entered the neighbouring monastery of St Sabas two years later. He was the author of the Lives of seven Palestinian abbots (St Euthymius, St Sabas, St John the Hesychast, St Cyriacus, St Theodosius, St Theognius, St Abraham). They are among the best of the Greek hagiographical productions, being remarkable for their accurate detail. Written in popular Greek, they also have considerable philological interest.

Collected edn. of the 'Lives' by E. *Schwartz (TU 49, Heft 2; 1939), but for critique of Schwartz's datings of them cf. E. Stein in Anal. Boll. 62 (1944), pp. 169–86. Eng. tr. by R. M. Price, with notes and introd. by J. Binns (Cistercian Studies series, 114; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1991). Fr. tr. by A.-J. Festugière, OP, Les Moines d'Orient, 3, parts 1–3 (1962–3). The Georgian text of his Life of St Cyriacus ed., with Lat. tr., by G. Garitte in Muséon, 75 (1962), pp. 339–440, with refs. to edns. and MSS of Georgian versions of other Lives. F. Diekamp, Die origenistischen Streitigkeiten im sechsten Jahrhundert (1899), pp. 1–25. T. Hermann, 'Zur Chronologie des Kyrill von Skythopolis', ZKG 45 (1926), pp. 318–39. B. Flusin, Miracle et Histoire dans l'Œuvre de Cyrille de Scythopolis (Études Augustiniennes, 1983). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 405–8 (nos. 7535–43). Beck, pp. 408–10; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), p. 241. I. Hausherr, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 2687–90.

Cyrillic. The alphabet used by the Slavonic peoples of the E. Church. It is so named from its attribution to St *Cyril, one of the two 'Apostles of the Slavs' (9th cent.), though in fact *Glagolitic and not 'Cyrillic' is generally believed to be the alphabet Cyril devised. Cyrillic dates, however, from about the same time. It differs from Glagolitic in being based on Greek *uncial writing, whereas Glagolitic seems to be of composite origin.

Czechoslovak Church, the. The origins of the so-called Czech National Church (Československá Církev) lie in long-standing Bohemian traditions of national Catholicism (see HUSS, J.) and go back to an association of Catholic priests in 1890, called 'Jednota'. It aimed at the introduction of the Czech language into the Liturgy, the abolition of compulsory celibacy for the priesthood, and the participation of the laity in the government of the Church. In 1919, when Czechoslovakia became an independent state, these demands were submitted to Rome. On their rejection the Jednota, whose main inspiration was nationalist, decided to form an independent religious body in 1920. Within a few months it had won many adherents and was recognized by the government.

The Czechoslovak Church was constituted on Presbyterian lines, though with four bishops. These were elected, but not consecrated, and there is no belief in the *Apostolic Succession. In doctrine the Church was strongly rationalistic, owing to the influence of its first patriarch, Karel Farský. The Divine Sonship of Christ and the Eucharist were interpreted on modernist lines, and the doctrines of *Original Sin, *Purgatory, and the Veneration of Saints were rejected. Scriptural exegesis rested on the principles of reason, experience, and the results of scholarship. After Farský's death (1927) the doctrines became more conservative. When the first attraction was past, numbers remained static; the Czechoslovak Church has prob. never included much more than 5 per cent of the population. In 1971 it adopted the title 'Czechoslovak Hussite Church', emphasizing its affinities with the teaching of J. Huss.

F. M. Hník, A. Spisar, and F. Kovář, The Czechoslovak Church (Prague, 1937). R. Urban, Die Tschechoslowakische Hussitische Kirche (Marburg, 1973). L. Nemec, The Czechoslovak Heresy and Schism: The Emergence of a National Czechoslovak Church (Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, NS 65, pt. 1; 1975). G. A. Procházka, 'Die tschechoslowakische Nationalkirche', in F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia, 5, Lfg. 20 (1937), pp. 175–85, with bibl.

D

'D'. A symbol used by scholars who follow the 'documentary hypothesis' of the origins of the *Pentateuch; it denotes the source most characteristically represented by the Book of Deut. (nearly all of which is assigned to 'D'). In contrast with the precisely expressed ritual and ceremonial interests of '*P' and the more simple narrative style of '*J' and '*E', it is predominantly hortatory. From its apparent points of contact with the provisions of 'the book of the law' said to have been found in the Temple in the reign of Josiah (2 Kgs. 22 f.), it is by many associated, if not identified, with that 'book' and its composition generally assigned to the early 7th cent. See DEUTERONOMY, BOOK OF.

d'Achery, Jean Luc (1609–85), historian and patristic scholar. He was professed at the *Maurist abbey at Vendôme in 1632. In 1637 he became librarian of the abbey of *Saint-Germain-des-Prés, where he helped to put in order the large collection of books and manuscripts and initiated scholarly work among the Maurists. Among his most important publications are an edition of the works of *Lanfranc (1648) and the 13 vols. of his Veterum aliquot Scriptorum . . . Spicilegium (1655–77). Among those he trained was J. Mabillon, with whom he shared in the production of the first volume of the Acta Sanctorum Ordinis S. Benedicti.

J. Fohlen, 'Dom Luc d'Achery (1609–1685) et les débuts de l'érudition mauriste', Revue Mabillon, 55 (1965), pp. 149–75; 56 (1966), pp. 1–30, 73–98; 57 (1967), pp. 17–41 and 56–156. Y. Chaussy, OSB, Les Bénédictins de Saint-Maur, 1 (Études Augustiniennes, 1989), pp. 67–72. B. Heurtebize in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 175–7, s.v. 'Achery, Luc d' '. See also other works cited under MAURISTS.

Daillé, Jean (1594–1670), French Reformed theologian and controversialist. He was born at Châtellerault, studied at Poitiers and Saumur, and in 1612 became tutor to P. *du Plessis-Mornay's grandsons, with whom he travelled in Italy and England. In 1625 he became pastor in Saumur, and from 1626 until his death was pastor at Charenton, where the Reformed Church of Paris held its services. He had a great reputation as a preacher and theologian. In his Traité de l'employ des saints Pères (1632; Eng. tr., 1651) he rejected the authority of the Fathers as irrelevant for his time and was attacked by both Protestant and Catholic theologians. He followed up the controversy in La Foi fondeé sur les saintes écritures (1634), in which he attempted to prove that all Christian doctrines are either explicitly stated in Scripture or can be deduced from it. In De Scripturis quae sub Dionysii Areopagitae et Ignatii Antiocheni nominibus circumferuntur (Geneva, 1666) he compiled 66 objections to the genuineness of the *Ignatian literature; his main contentions were refuted by J. *Pearson (1672). As a friend and fellow-minister, he defended the teaching of Moïse *Amyraut (1596–1664), in particular his belief that Christ died for all men and not only for the elect. He was moderator of the last national synod of the French Reformed Church at Loudun in 1659. His other works include Apologie des Églises Réformées (1633; Eng. tr., 1653), De Pseudepigraphis Apostolicis (1653), Adversus Latinorum de Cultus Religiosi Objecto Traditionem (1664), and De Cultibus Religiosis Latinorum (1671).

Abbrégé de la vie de Mr Daillé [by Jean Daillé, son] pr. with Les Deux Derniers Sermons de Mr Daillé (Paris, 1670). Study by E. Mettey (Strasbourg, 1863). A. [R.] *Vinet, Histoire de la prédication parmi les Réformés de France au dix-septième siècle (1860, posthumously pub.), pp. 182–216; P. [J.] Bayley, French Pulpit Oratory 1598–1650 (Cambridge, 1980), esp. pp. 117–21 and 225–30. B. G. Armstrong, Calvinism and the Amyraut Heresy (Madison, Wis., and London, 1969), esp. pp. 12 f. E. and E. Haag, La France Protestante, 4 (1853), pp. 180–6; 2nd edn. by H. Bordier, 5 (1886), pp. 23–38, incl. list of his works. J. de la Servière, SJ, in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 3–5.

d'Ailly, Pierre (1350 or 1351–1420), French cardinal and theologian. He was a native of Compiègne, and in 1363 or 1364 entered the College of Navarre in *Paris, then a stronghold of *Nominalism, where he became master of arts in 1368 and doctor of theology in 1381. During this period he commented on the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard and wrote several scientific, philosophical, and theological treatises which show the great influence of R. *Bacon and esp. of *William of Ockham. Having become canon at Noyon in 1381, he was made Rector of the College of Navarre in 1384, Chancellor of the University of Paris in 1389, and soon afterwards confessor and almoner to Charles VI. In 1391 he obtained the archdeaconry of Cambrai in addition to many other benefices which he held in plurality. After the death of *Clement VII he became a favourite with his successor *Benedict XIII, who appointed him Bp. of Le Puy in 1395. He never entered this diocese, and in 1397 was translated to the more important see of Cambrai. The chief concern of his life was to find a means of healing the *Great Schism. With this end in view he broke with Benedict XIII in 1408 and in 1409 attended the Council of *Pisa, where he supported the newly elected third Pope, *Alexander V. In 1412 he assisted at the Council of Rome, convoked by Alexander's successor, *John XXIII, for which he outlined a programme of reforms entitled 'Capita Agendorum'. In the same year John XXIII created him cardinal in the hope of retaining his support, and shortly afterwards he was made Papal Legate to the German Emperor Sigismund. From 1414 to 1418 he attended the Council of *Constance, where he supported the theory of the supremacy of the General Council over the Pope, without, however, entirely approving the famous 'Decrees of Constance'. In 1416 he published his 'Tractatus super Reformatione Ecclesiae', the third part of an elaborate work 'De Materia Concilii Generalis'. Its first part was published among the works of his friend and disciple J. *Gerson, the second was published in full only in 1964. Several of its suggestions for ecclesiastical reforms were later adopted by the Council of *Trent. The 'Tractatus' had a great influence esp. in England and Germany.

In his doctrinal teaching he most frequently accepted the views of Ockham. He held that the existence of God was not a rationally demonstrable truth, and that sin was not as such inherently evil but sinful only because God wills it to be so. He maintained that bishops and priests received their jurisdiction directly from Christ and not mediately through the Pope, and that neither Pope nor Council was infallible. These and other of his opinions were later adopted and developed by M. *Luther and the other Reformers; and his teaching on the Church exercised a decisive influence on *Gallicanism. D'Ailly is also notable for his studies concerning astronomy, astrology, and geography; his Imago Mundi, in which he suggested that the Indies could be reached from the W., was known to Columbus.

Most of his Latin sermons were pr. by the *Brethren of the Common Life under the title Tractatus et Sermones (Brussels, c.1484). Nine French sermons ed. E. Brayer, Notices et extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale et autres bibliothèques, 43 (1965), pp. 248–325. Modern edn., with Fr. tr., of Imago Mundi by E. Buron (3 vols., Paris, 1930), with valuable introd. in vol. 1, pp. 5–113, and bibl., pp. 113–24. Facsimile of a collection of autograph texts, with introd. by G. Ouy (Umbrae codicum occidentalium, 9; Amsterdam, 1966). Studies by L. Salembier (Lille, 1886; also other works by this author incl. important posthumously pub. synthesis of his earlier works, Tourcoing, 1932) and P. Tschackert (Gotha, 1877). M. Patronnier de Gandillac, 'De l'usage et de la valeur des arguments probables dans les questions du Cardinal Pierre d'Ailly sur le "Livre des Sentences"', AHDLMA 8 (1933), pp. 43–91. G. Lindbeck, 'Nominalism and the Problem of Meaning as illustrated by Pierre d'Ailly on Predestination and Justification', HTR 52 (1959), pp. 43–60. B. Meller, Studien zur Erkenntnislehre des Peter von Ailly (Freiburger theologische Studien, 67; 1954); F. Oakley, The Political Thought of Pierre d'Ailly (Yale Historical Publications, Miscellany, 81; 1964), with text of the De Materia Concilii Generalis, pp. 252–342. P. Glorieux, 'La vie et l'œuvre de Pierre d'Ailly', Mélanges de science religieuse, 22 (1965), pp. 61–78; id., 'Les années d'études de Pierre d'Ailly', RTAM 44 (1977), pp. 127–49. W. Courtenay, 'Covenant and Causality in Pierre d'Ailly', Speculum, 46 (1971), pp. 94–119, repr. in id., Covenant and Causality in Medieval Thought (1984), no. 9, with refs. A. E. Bernstein, Pierre d'Ailly and the Blanchard Affair: University and Chancellor of Paris at the Beginning of the Great Schism (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 24; Leiden, 1978). B. Guenée, Entre l'Église et l'État [1987], pp. 125–299, with notes pp. 461–77; Eng. tr., Between Church and State (Chicago and London, 1991), pp. 102–258, with notes pp. 388–405. L. Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science, 4 (New York, 1934), pp. 101–13. L. Salembier in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 1154–65, s.v. 'Ailly, Pierre de'. See also bibl. to CONSTANCE, COUNCIL OF, and GERSON, JEAN LE CHARLIER DE.

Dair Balaizah Fragments. See DER BALYZEH FRAGMENTS.

Dale, Robert William (1829–95), *Congregational preacher, theologian, and educational reformer. From 1853 until his death he was pastor (co-pastor 1853–9) of Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham. He came to take a leading part in municipal affairs in Birmingham, co-operating closely with Joseph Chamberlain, and in 1870 he keenly supported W. E. Forster's Education Bill. In 1891 he was President of the International Congregational Council. He stood for progressive, but in fundamentals orthodox, Evangelicalism. In The Atonement (1875), his most influential work, he strongly maintained a penal doctrine against the liberal views of such men as B. *Jowett and H. *Bushnell. But his orthodoxy here differed from that of traditional *Protestantism. He sought to put the emphasis on the ethical rather than the forensic, and in some respects his teaching on the Atonement has points of contact with that of H. *Grotius. His other writings include sets of lectures on Preaching (1877) and on Ephesians (1882).

Biography by his son, A. W. W. Dale (London, 1898). A. Gordon in DNB, Suppl. 2 (1901), pp. 104–6.

D'Alembert, Jean Le Rond (1717–83), French mathematician, philosopher, and *Encyclopaedist. A foundling discovered near the church of St Jean le Rond, *Paris (hence his name), he was educated by the *Jansenists at the Mazarin College. He soon showed remarkable mathematical talents and, after short-lived attempts to train as a lawyer and a physician, resolved to devote himself wholly to mathematics. In 1741 he was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences. In 1743 in his Traité de dynamique he developed the mechanical principle henceforward known as 'D'Alembert's Principle'. Several important other works and papers on mathematics followed. He was drawn into various religious disputes by his extensive collaboration for some years in *Diderot's Encyclopédie and his association with the 'philosophic' circle of freethinkers that produced it. D'Alembert contributed the Discours préliminaire, which dealt, along lines laid down by F. *Bacon and J. *Locke, with the rise, progress, and affinities of the several sciences, as well as many articles on literary, and esp. mathematical, subjects. His article on 'Geneva' provoked the *Calvinists to a lively controversy. Among his other writings were an attack on the *Jesuits (1765) and a collection of biographies of members of the Academy who died between 1700 and 1772.

Collected Works, 18 vols., Paris, 1805. Unpub. items ed. M. C. Henry (Paris, 1887). Eng. tr. of 'Miscellaneous Pieces' (London, 1764). Studies by J. Bertrand (Paris, 1889), R. Grimsley (Oxford, 1963), and T. L. Hankins (ibid., 1970). M. Muller, Essai sur la philosophie de Jean d'Alembert (1926). G. J. Van Treese, D'Alembert and Frederick the Great (Philosophical Questions Series, 9; Louvain and Paris, 1974). M. Emery and P. Monzani (eds.), Jean d'Alembert, savant et philosophe: Actes du Colloque organisé par Centre International de Synthèse-Fondation pour la Science, Paris, 15–18 juin 1983 [1989]. A special number of the periodical Dix-Huitième Siècle, 16 (1984) is devoted to D'Alembert, with Eng. summaries. See also bibl. to ENCYCLOPAEDISTS.

Dalgairns, Bernard (baptismal names John Dobree) (1818–76), priest of the *Oratory. He was a supporter of the *Oxford Movement in its earliest days, but in 1845, after spending some time in retirement with J. H. *Newman at Littlemore, was, like him, received into the RC Church. While at Littlemore he wrote the Life of St *Stephen Harding for the series 'Lives of the English Saints' (1844). In 1849, after some months in France and Italy, he joined Newman and F. W. *Faber in the Oratory, and was later caught up in the tensions between the London and Birmingham houses. A member of the *Metaphysical Society, he wrote various devotional and theological works.

A letter of Newman about him pr. in Newman the Oratorian, ed. P. Murray, OSB (Dublin, 1969), pp. 349–59; cf. [L.] M. Trevor, Newman (2 vols., 1962), passim. H. N. Oxenham, Short Studies in Ecclesiastical History and Biography (1884), pp. 309–17. T. Cooper in DNB 13 (1888), pp. 388 f.; S. Bowden in CE 4 (1908), pp. 604 f., s.v. See also other works on Newman and Faber, cited s.vv.

Dallæus, Johannes. See DAILLÉ, JEAN.

Dalman, Gustaf Herman (1855–1941), biblical scholar. In 1895 he was appointed professor of the Institutum Delitzschianum (see DELITZSCH, FRANZ) at Leipzig. From 1902 to 1917 he was Director of the German Evangelical Institute for Archaeology in Palestine, and afterwards professor at Greifswald. In 1925 he went out again to Palestine as director of the Gustaf Dalman-Institut für Palästinawissenschaft. He conducted many important researches into the language, ideas, and customs of 1st-cent. *Judaism, and his work may be said to have established that Christ spoke ordinarily in Aramaic and not in Greek. His writings include Grammatik des jüdisch-palästinischen Aramäisch (1894); Christentum und Judentum (1898; Eng. tr., 1901); Die Worte Jesu (1898; Eng. tr., 1902); Orte und Wege Jesu (1919; Eng. tr., 1935); Jesus-Jeschua (1922; Eng. tr., 1929); Arbeit und Sitte in Palästina (1928–39).

A. Alt in Palästinajahrbuch des deutschen evangelischen Instituts für Altertumswissenschaft des heiligen Landes zu Jerusalem, Jahrg. 37 (1941), pp. 5–18. List of his works by K. H. Rengstorf in Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Ernst Moritz Arndt-Universität Greifswald, 4 (1955), pp. 209–32.

dalmatic. An over-tunic reaching to the knees worn in the W. Church at *High Mass by *deacons, and on certain occasions also by bishops. The E. bishop's 'sakkos' is almost identical. Perhaps of Dalmatian origin, it became a popular garment among the upper classes in Rome in the 2nd cent. Till the 10th cent. it was invariably white and made of linen or wool; later it was coloured and of silk. It is ornamented with two clavi or coloured strips running from front to back over the shoulders, which at one time were invariably red. The dalmatic is bestowed upon the deacon at his ordination in the Latin Rite. In England, the sovereign wears a dalmatic at his (or her) coronation. See also TUNICLE.

Braun, LG, ch. 12, 'Dalmatik und Tunicella', pp. 247–305. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 4 (1921), cols. 111–19, s.v. 'Dalmatique'.

Damascus. The ancient capital of Syria. Mentioned as far back as the early 15th cent. BC by the Egyptian king Thutmoses III, it is frequently referred to in the OT, owing to the conflicts and alliances between Syria, Israel, and Judah in the earlier days of the Hebrew monarchy. After its fall in 732 BC to the Assyrian king Tiglath Pileser III, it lost most of its importance for several centuries. In the Seleucid period it was overshadowed by the new Syrian capital of *Antioch. It was on the road from *Jerusalem to Damascus that St *Paul was converted to the Christian faith (Acts 9). A Christian community has existed here continuously from Apostolic times. It is now the seat of the Greek Orthodox, the Greek Catholic (*Melkite), and *Syrian Orthodox Patriarchs of Antioch.

C. Watzinger and K. Wulzinger, Damascus (2 vols., 'Die Antike Stadt' and 'Die Islamische Stadt', Wissenschaftliche Veröffentlichungen des Deutsch-Türkischen Denkmalschutz-Kommandos, Hefte 4–5; 1921–4). J. Sauvaget, Les Monuments historiques de Damas (Beirut, 1932). W. T. Pitard, Ancient Damascus: A Historical Study of the Syrian City-State from Earliest Times until its Fall to the Assyrians in 732 B.C.E. (Winona Lake, Ind., 1987). L. Jalabert in DACL 4 (pt. 1; 1920), cols. 119–45; R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 42–7, both s.v. 'Damas'; N. Elisséeff in Encyclopaedia of Islam (2nd edn.), 2 (1965), pp. 277–91, s.v. 'Dimashk'.

Damascus Fragments. See DEAD SEA SCROLLS.

Damasus, St (c.304–84), Pope from 366. Of Spanish descent, he entered the service of his predecessor, Pope *Liberius, who appointed him a deacon. On Liberius' death (24 Sept. 366), a fierce conflict broke out between the supporters of Damasus and those of his rival, Ursinus (or Ursicinus). Ursinus was elected Pope in the basilica of Julius (S. Maria in Trastevere), while Damasus was chosen by the great majority of the clergy and people of *Rome in S. Lorenzo in Lucina. In the ensuing struggle, during which the supporters of Ursinus gained possession of the Liberian Basilica (S. Maria Maggiore), acc. to Ammianus Marcellinus 137 persons (acc. to the Gesta inter Liberium et Felicem, 160) were killed. The Emp. Valentinian I intervened in support of Damasus and banished Ursinus for a time to *Cologne, though it was not until c.381 that the troubles ceased.

Damasus was very active, by synods and with the help of the Imperial power, in suppressing heresy (*Arianism, *Donatism, *Macedonianism, *Luciferians). From 371 he was engaged in protracted dealings with St *Basil of Caesarea with a view to the overthrow of Arianism; and at Antioch he supported the party of *Paulinus. Damasus did much to strengthen the position of the see of Rome (Decree of Gratian, 378), made provision for the proper housing of the Papal archives, and was keenly interested in the monuments of the martyrs, adorning their tombs with the series of famous marble inscriptions engraved by Filocalus. He also erected the titular church of S. Lorenzo in Damaso, and a church on the Via Ardeatina at the catacombs of Sts Marcus and Marcellianus. At a Council prob. held at Rome in 382 he promulgated a Canon of Scriptural Books and commissioned his secretary, St Jerome, to revise the biblical text (see VULGATE). In the Middle Ages he was erroneously held to be the author of the Liber Pontificalis. See also FIDES DAMASI and TOME OF DAMASUS. Feast day, 4 (formerly 11) Dec.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL 13. 109–424. Crit. edn. of the docs. on the Ursinian schism in CSEL 35 ('Collectio Avellana'), pp. 48–58. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 212–15. M. Ihm (ed.), Damasi Epigrammata (Leipzig, 1895); A. Ferrua, SJ, Epigrammata Damasiana (Sussidi allo studio delle antichità cristiane, 2, 1942; 59 Epigrams are here recognized as genuine). A. Salvatore, L'epigramma damasiano 'in Laudem Davidis' (Naples, 1960), with anthology of epigrams. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 2 vols., 1976), 1, pp. 405–884 passim; and see index. H. M. Shepherd, Jun., 'The Liturgical Reform of Damasus I', in P. Granfield and J. A. Jungmann (eds.), Kyriakon: Festschrift Johannes Quasten, 2 (Munich, 1970), pp. 847–63. J. Fontaine, Naissance de la Poésie dans l'Occident Chrétien (Études Augustiniennes, 1981), pp. 111–25. A. Di Berardino in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 273–8. A. Van Roey in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 48–53, with bibl.

Damian, St. See COSMAS AND DAMIAN, STS.

Damian, St Peter. See PETER DAMIAN, ST.

Damien, Father (1840–89), leper missionary. Joseph de Veuster, the son of a small farmer, became a member of the Picpus Society (Fathers of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary) in 1859, taking the religious name 'Damien'. Sent to the Hawaiian Islands in 1863, he was ordained priest at Honolulu in the following year, and later put in charge of several districts in the islands of Hawaii and Molokai, where he converted the natives and built them chapels. In 1873 he was sent at his own request to a settlement of lepers at Molokai who were without any attendance. Here he ministered single-handed to the spiritual and physical needs of 600 lepers, dressing their wounds, building them houses, and digging their graves. Even after he had caught the disease himself he continued his work, now assisted by other members of his order and Sisters of Charity, until he became helpless.

Letters ed. by his brother, Father Pamphile [A. P. de Veuster] (London, 1889), with introd. V. Jourdan, SSCC, Le Père Damien de Veuster (Braine-le-Comte [1931]). Other lives include those by I. Caudwell (London, 1931), P. Compton (ibid., 1933), J. V. Farrow (ibid., 1937), and O. Englebert (Paris, 1940; Eng. tr., Derby, NY [1955]).

damnation. In general, 'condemnation', but esp. to eternal loss (damnum) in hell. Some theologians have distinguished the loss of the *Beatific Vision, the attainment of which constitutes the joy of heaven, from positive retributive punishment for the sins done on earth, and asserted that both are present in the sufferings of the damned; others have held that the deprivation and conscious loss of heaven and of God is itself the natural and sufficient consequence of persistence in sin. The eternity of damnation for those who finally reject the will of God appears to follow from various sayings of Christ, e.g. Mt. 25: 46.

Dance of Death. An allegorical subject in European art, in which the figure of Death, usually represented as a skeleton, is shown meeting various characters in different states of life and leading them all in a dance to the grave. The cycle in the Cemetery of the Innocents in Paris (1425; destroyed in the 16th cent.) served as a model for numerous similar series of wall-paintings in graveyards throughout Europe in the later Middle Ages. Examples survive chiefly in engravings, e.g. the series by the Paris printer G. Marchant and by H. Holbein (the younger). It was called in German Totentanz and in French Danse macabre.

Modern facsimile edn. of The Dance of Death by Hans Holbein (1497–1543), with introd. and notes by J. M. Clark (London, 1947). G. Buchheit, Der Totentanz: Seine Entstehung und Entwicklung (Leipzig, 1926). J. M. Clark, The Dance of Death in the Middle Ages and Renaissance (Glasgow, 1950), with bibl.; H. Rosenfeld, Der mittelalterliche Totentanz (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 3; 1954; 2nd edn., 1968); S. Cosacchi, Makabertanz: Der Totentanz in Kunst, Poesie und Brauchtum des Mittelalters (Meisenheim am Glan, 1965); R. Hammerstein, Tanz und Musik des Todes: Die mittelalterlichen Totentänze und ihr Nachleben (1980); A. Breeze, 'The Dance of Death', Cambridge Medieval Celtic Studies, 13 (1987), pp. 87–96.

Daniel, Book of. The Book falls into two main divisions:

1. A narrative section describing the experiences of Daniel and his three companions under Nebuchadnezzar (1–4) and Belshazzar (5), kings of Babylon, and Darius the Mede (6). These include their refusal to eat unclean meats (1), Daniel's successful interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream (2), the miraculous release of the three companions from the fiery furnace (3), Nebuchadnezzar's madness (4), the supernatural writing on the wall ('Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin') at Belshazzar's feast (5), and Daniel's preservation in the lions' den (6).

2. A series of visions granted to Daniel in the reigns of Belshazzar (7, 8), Darius the Mede (9), and Cyrus (10–12), which reveal the future destinies of the Jewish people. Several of the passages in these later chapters bear all the characteristics of *Apocalyptic literature.

The traditional belief that the Book was written in the 6th cent. BC by Daniel, one of the Jewish exiles in Babylon, is now almost universally regarded as untenable. A number of historical errors make it next to impossible to believe that it dates from the period of the Exile, and a much later date is borne out also by its doctrinal standpoint, by its position in the *canon of Scripture, and by its language (the section 2: 4–7: 18 is written in *Aramaic, not Hebrew, and even Greek loan-words occur). The consensus of modern critical opinion is that it was written between 167 and 164 BC. On this hypothesis the purpose of the Book was to encourage the reader during the persecution of the Jews at the hands of *Antiochus Epiphanes (175–164 BC).

There is only one passage where Daniel is directly quoted in the NT, namely, the reference to the 'abomination of desolation' in Mk. 13: 14 and parallels. But there are many points where its teaching has been taken up and developed, e.g. the use of the figure of the *Son of Man (7: 13), the conception of angels mediating between a transcendent God and man, and above all the doctrine of the *resurrection of the dead in 12: 2.

In the *Apocrypha there appear three 'books', viz. 'The Song of the Three Holy Children', 'The History of Susanna', and 'The History of the Destruction of Bel and the Dragon', all of which are found in the Gk. text of Daniel, though not in the Heb.; and all seem to be Gk. writings, later than the Book itself. On these, see the separate entries.

Commentaries by S. R. *Driver (Camb. Bib., AV, 1900), J. A. Montgomery (ICC, 1927), with bibl. pp. xv–xxvi, R. H. *Charles (Oxford, 1929), A. Bentzen (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 9; 1937; 2nd edn., 1952), E. W. Heaton ('Torch Bible' Comm., 1956), N. W. Porteous (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 23; 1962, 2nd edn., 1968; Eng. tr., 1965, 2nd edn., 1979), O. Plöger (KAT 18; 1965), M. Delcor (Sources Bibliques, 1971), A. Lacocque (Commentaire de l'Ancien Testament, 15b; 1976; Eng. tr., 1979), and L. F. Hartman, CSSR, and A. A. di Lella, OFM (Anchor Bible, 23; 1978). P. R. Davies, Daniel (Old Testament Guides, Sheffield [1985]). Among the older writers, upholding the conservative view, the best known is E. B. *Pusey, Daniel the Prophet: Nine Lectures (1864). H. L. Ginsberg, Studies in Daniel (New York, 1948). H. H. Rowley, 'The Unity of the Book of Daniel', Hebrew Union College Annual, 23 (pt. 1, 1952), pp. 233–73; repr. in The Servant of the Lord and Other Essays on the Old Testament (1952), pp. 235–

68; rev. edn. with further bibl. (Oxford, 1965), pp. 249–80. Id., Darius the Mede and the Four World Empires in the Book of Daniel (1935). [P.] M. Casey, Son of Man: The Interpretation and Influence of Daniel 7 (1979). R. Bodenmann, Naissance d'une Exégèse: Daniel dans l'Église ancienne des trois premiers siècles (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Biblischen Exegese, 28; 1986).

Daniel, St (409–93), *Stylite. He was the most famous of the disciples of St *Simeon Stylites, whose cowl he received. After spending his early years at Samosata and other monasteries in the E., at the age of 51 he took up his position on a pillar four miles from *Constantinople, on which he was ordained priest by St *Gennadius and lived for thirty-three years. Generally regarded as an oracle, he only once left his pillar (*c.*476), to rebuke the Emp. Basiliscus for supporting *Monophysitism. Feast day, 11 Dec.

Early Gk. Life, ed. H. *Delehaye, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 32 (1913), pp. 121–229; repr. in id. (ed.), Les Saints stylites (Brussels, 1923), pp. 1–94. Eng. tr. in E. [A. S.] Dawes and N. H. Baynes, Three Byzantine Saints (1948), pp. 1–71, with notes, pp. 72–84. On this Vita cf. N. H. Baynes in EHR 40 (1925), pp. 397–402. Other Lives listed in BHG (3rd edn., 1957), pp. 150 f. V. Laurent, AA, in DHGE 14 (1960), col. 73, s.v. 'Daniel (11), (Saint) le Stylite'.

Daniélou, Jean (1905–74), *Jesuit theologian. Born at Neuilly-sur-Seine, he became a Jesuit in 1929. He then studied in Jersey, at Lyons (where he came under the influence of H. de *Lubac), and at Mongré, and he received a doctorate from the *Sorbonne for a thesis, Platonisme et théologie mystique (1944), on the spiritual theology of St *Gregory of Nyssa in whom he had an abiding interest. From 1943 he was a professor at the Institut Catholique in Paris. A peritus at the Second *Vatican Council, he was made a cardinal in 1969. His importance as a theologian rests mainly on his patristic scholarship. In addition to monographs on *Origen (1948) and *Philo (1958), his work in this field includes his Histoire des Doctrines Chrétiennes avant Nicée (1958–78; Eng. tr., 1964–77). In the first volume and in several other works he explored the Jewish roots of Christianity. Closely connected with this interest was his work on patristic *exegesis, notably in Sacramentum Futuri (1950; Eng. tr., 1960), in which he popularized the distinction between *allegory and types (see TYPES). He also contributed to the patristic revival of the 20th cent. by his promotion of a number of publishing ventures; these included the collection of 'Sources Chrétiennes', an important series of patristic and medieval texts, with French translation, of which the first volume (because of wartime difficulties containing only the French translation) was issued in 1942.

Epektasis: Mélanges patristiques offerts au cardinal Jean Daniélou, ed. J. Fontaine and C. Kannengiesser (1972), incl. 'bibliographie patristique', pp. 675–89. M.-J. Rondeau and others, Jean Daniélou 1905–1974 [1975]. A 'Société des Amis du Cardinal Jean Daniélou' was founded in Paris in 1975 to collect material on his activities and to promote the study of his writings and the continuance of his influence. It issues an annual bulletin. Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 549–53.

Dante Alighieri (1265–1321), Italian poet and philosopher. Little is known of his early life except that he was born in Florence, lost his parents before he was 18, was betrothed at the age of 12 and married in 1293. In 1274 he first met his Beatrice (prob. Bice Portinari, the daughter of a Florentine citizen and wife of Simone dei Bardi), and he became her poet nine years later. Her death in 1290 led to a crisis, resolved by writing the Vita nuova (prob. in 1292, possibly later) in which he promised her a poem 'such as had been written for no lady before', a promise fulfilled in the Divina Commedia*. He then turned to the study of philosophy, prob. under the *Dominicans at Florence, and wrote a series of allegorical Canzoni or odes on the Lady Philosophy and literal ones on Courtesy, Nobility, Liberality, and Justice. In 1294 he entered politics but, having supported the opponents of Pope *Boniface VIII, he was exiled from Florence in 1301 and travelled widely in Italy. He returned to the study of philosophy and wrote the incomplete De Vulgari Eloquentia in Latin and began the Convivio (Banquet), which was designed to comment freely on his earlier philosophical Canzoni. In the course of the fourth book he became aware of the significance of the Roman Empire; the appearance of the Emp. Henry VII in Italy at the same time (1310) converted Dante into an ardent supporter of the Emperor, for whom he wrote in Latin the treatise De Monarchia (1312–14?). This work, which was condemned as heretical (*Averroist) in 1329, argued the need for a universal monarchy to achieve the temporal happiness of mankind and the independence of the Empire from the Pope and the Church, which should abandon all temporal authority and possessions and concentrate on happiness in the world to come. Dante's political prospects were shattered by the death of Henry VII in 1313, and in 1315 his native city of Florence renewed its sentence against him. He spent some years at *Verona and from *c.*1316 lived at *Ravenna, where he died. The last period of his life was devoted to the completion of the Divina Commedia (q.v.), which established him as one of the few poets who belong to all times and all nations.

Best collected edn. of Opere by the Società Dantesca Italiana, ed. M. Barbi, E. G. Parodi and others (Florence, 1921; appendix, 1922; 2nd edn., 1960). Crit. edn. of Vita nuova by M. Barbi (Florence: Edizione Nazionale delle Opere di Dante, 1; 1932); of Rime (Canzoni) by G. Contini (Turin, 1939; 2nd edn., 1946); Eng. tr. and comm. by K. Foster and P. Boyde, Dante's Lyric Poetry (2 vols., Oxford, 1967); De Vulgari Eloquentia ed. A. Marigo (Florence: Nuova Edizione diretta da M. Barbi, 6; 1938; 2nd edn. by P. G. Ricci: Edizione sotto auspici della Fondazione Giorgio Cini, 6; 1957); Convivio ed. G. Busnelli and G. Vandelli (Florence: Nuova Edizione diretta da M. Barbi, 4–5; 1934–7); De Monarchia ed. P. G. Ricci (Verona: Edizione Nazionale, 5; 1965); Il Fiore and Il Detto d'Amore ed. G. Contini (Milan: Edizione Nazionale, 8; 1984); Letters ed. P. Toynbee (Oxford, 1920; 2nd edn., 1966); and Eclogue ed. P. H. Wicksteed and E. G. Gardner (London, 1902). Edns., with comm. by various authors, of all minor works in Opere Minori (La Letteratura Italiana, Storia e Testi, 5; 2 vols., Milan and Naples [1979–84]). A. Solerti (ed.), Le vite di Dante, Petrarca e Boccaccio (Storia Litteraria d'Italia; Milan, 1904), pp. 3–236. E. Moore, Studies in Dante (4 series, Oxford, 1896–1917); P. Toynbee, Dante Alighieri (1900; 4th edn., 1910); N. Zingarelli, Dante (Storia Litteraria d'Italia, 1903; rev. edn., 2 vols., Milan, 1944); K. Vossler, Die Göttliche Komödie (4 pts., Heidelberg, 1907–10; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1929); B. *Croce, La poesia di Dante (Bari, 1921; Eng. tr., 1922); B. Nardi, Saggi di filosofia dantesca (Milan, 1930; 2nd edn., Florence, 1967); id., Dante e la cultura medievale (Bari, 1942); id., Nel mondo di Dante (1944); E. *Gilson, Dante et la philosophie (1939; Eng. tr., 1948); U. Cosmo, Guida a Dante (Turin, 1947; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1950);

C. S. Singleton, Dante Studies (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1954–8); U. Limentani (ed.), The Mind of Dante (Cambridge, 1965); K. Foster, OP, The Two Dantes, and other Studies [1977]; P. Boyde, Dante, Philomythes and Philosopher (Cambridge, 1981); J. Freccero, Dante: The Poetics of Conversion, ed. R. Jacoff (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1986). Introduction by G. [A.] Holmes, Dante (Past Masters; Oxford, 1980). P. Toynbee, A Dictionary of Proper Names and Notable Matters in the Works of Dante (Oxford, 1898; rev. by C. S. Singleton, 1968). Enciclopedia Dantesca (5 vols., Rome, 1970–6, + Appendix, 1978). See also bibl. to DIVINA COMMEDIA.

Darboy, Georges (1813–71), Abp. of *Paris. He was ordained priest in 1836, and after holding some teaching and other appointments became Bp. of Nancy in 1859 and Abp. of Paris in 1863. In his first year at Paris he consecrated the newly restored cathedral of *Notre-Dame. His *Gallican sympathies and claims to episcopal independence brought him into conflict with Rome, and before and during the First *Vatican Council he was one of the chief opponents of the definition of Papal infallibility, although he eventually subscribed to it. During the siege of Paris in 1870–1, he devoted himself wholeheartedly to the care of the destitute and helpless. When in 1871 the Commune secured control of the city, he was seized and shot in cold blood on 24 May 1871, blessing his executioners. His writings include a Life of St Thomas *Becket (2 vols., 1858).

Œuvres pastorales de Mgr Darboy, comprenant ses mandements et ses allocutions, depuis son élévation au siège de Nancy jusqu'à sa mort (2 vols., 1876). 'Monseigneur Darboy et le saint-siège. Documents inédits', Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature religieuses, 12 (1907), pp. 240–81; Diary kept during the Vatican Council, ed. A. Duval and Y. *Congar in RSPT 54 (1970), pp. 417–52. J. A. Foulon, Histoire de la vie et des œuvres de Mgr Darboy, archevêque de Paris (1889). Further Life by J. A. Guillermin (Paris, 1888). M. O'Gara, Triumph in Defeat: Infallibility, Vatican I, and the French Minority Bishops (Washington, DC [1988]), passim. F. Guédon in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 83–6, s.v. See also works cited under GALLICANISM.

Darby, John Nelson (1800–82), *Plymouth Brother and founder of the 'Darbyites'. He was ordained to a title in Wicklow *c.*1826, but resigned in 1827, and shortly after joined a sect called the 'Brethren', then newly founded by A. N. Groves, which rejected all Church order and outward forms. In 1845 a quarrel within this body caused a local schism at Plymouth, and in 1847 at Bristol; and Darby became the leader of the stricter Brethren, who were organized as a separate body ('Darbyites'). Both before and after this time Darby made many tours abroad to lecture and preach, visiting France, Switzerland, Germany, Canada, the USA, the West Indies, and New Zealand between 1830 and his death. Darby wrote countless controversial, doctrinal, and devotional works. He was also a hymn-writer, and edited the hymn-book generally used by the Plymouth Brethren.

Collected Writings ed. by W. Kelly (London, 32 vols. and index [1867–83]). There is much autobiographical material in his Personal Recollections of many Prominent People whom I have Known, and of Events . . . during the First Half of the Present Century (St Louis, 1880). Modern Life by W. G. Turner (London, 1926). A. Reese, The Approaching Advent of Christ: An Examination of the Teaching of J. N. Darby and his Followers [1937]. C. B. Bass, Backgrounds to Dispensationalism: Its historical genesis and ecclesiastical implications (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1960]).

D'Arcy, Martin Cyril (1888–1976), *Jesuit philosophical theologian. Educated at *Stonyhurst, *Oxford, and the *Gregorian University at Rome, he entered the Society of Jesus and was ordained priest in 1921. From 1933 to 1945 he was Master of Campion Hall, Oxford, and from 1945 to 1950 Provincial of the English Province of the Jesuits. He expounded Catholic principles and philosophy to a public with less narrowly theological interests. His larger works include St Thomas Aquinas (1930); The Nature of Belief (1931), an analysis of faith which, following J. H. *Newman's Grammar of Assent, emphasized its affective and non-logical elements; and The Mind and Heart of Love (1945), an assessment of the Christian conception of love (*agape, as contrasted with eros and philia), strongly influenced by D. Saurat and A. Nygren. Much of his most characteristic writing was in essays, articles, and contributions to collective works.

Reminiscences recorded in Georgetown University (1960–1) were pub. under the title Laughter and Love of Friends, ed. W. S. Abell (Westminster, Md., 1991).

Dark Ages, the. A term in current use for the period in W. Europe extending from the decay of classical culture c. the 5th cent. to the beginning of medieval culture c. the 11th cent. It was formerly in common usage to cover also the medieval period down to the Renaissance.

Darwinism. The form of the theory of evolution put forward by Charles Darwin (1809–82), esp. in his works The Origin of Species (1859) and The Descent of Man (1871). He held that species of living beings evolve by natural selection, the individuals best adapted to their circumstances in any generation being those most likely to survive and propagate. He became gradually more and more of an agnostic in religion.

G. Himmelfarb, Darwin and the Darwinian Revolution (1959); M. Banton (ed.), Darwinism and the Study of Society (1961); N. C. Gillespie, Charles Darwin and the Problem of Creation (Chicago and London, 1979); J. R. Moore, The Post-Darwinian Controversies: A Study of the Protestant Struggle to come to terms with Darwin in Britain and America 1870–1900 (1979); J. Durant (ed.), Darwinism and Divinity: Essays on Evolution and Religious Belief (Oxford, 1985); A. Desmond and J. Moore, Darwin (London, 1991).

d'Aubigné, Jean Henri Merle. See MERLE D'AUBIGNÉ, JEAN HENRI.

Davenport, Christopher (in religion Franciscus a Sancta Clara) (*c.*1595–1680), English RC theologian. There has been some confusion about his early life. Probably while studying at *Oxford, he was converted to the RC faith and by 1616 he was in *Douai. He entered the *Franciscan Order at Ypres in 1617, and later returned to England, where he became chaplain successively to Queens *Henrietta Maria and Catherine of Braganza. He was on good terms with many of the Anglican clergy, and in his Paraphrastica Expositio Articulorum Confessionis Anglicanae (published separately in 1634, afterwards as an appendix to his Deus, natura, gratia) he endeavoured to show that the *Thirty-Nine Articles could be interpreted in conformity with Catholic tradition.

Collected edn. of his works (corrected), Douai, 2 vols., 1665–7. Paraphrastica Expositio Articulorum Confessionis Anglicanae was repr. from the Lat. edn. of 1646, with Eng. tr., ed. F. G. *Lee (London, 1865), with sketch of the author's life, pp. xix–xxx. J. B. Dockery, OFM, Christopher Davenport, Friar and Diplomat (1960). R. I. Bradley, SJ, 'Christopher Davenport and the Thirty-Nine Articles', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 52 (1961), pp. 205–28. G. G. Perry in DNB 14 (1888), pp. 108 f.; H. Dauphin, OSB, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 109–11, s.v.

Davenport, John (1597–1670), *Puritan divine. Prob. the uncle (rather than the brother, as used to be thought) of Christopher Davenport (see preceding entry), he was educated at Merton and Magdalen Colleges, Oxford, and in 1624 became Vicar of St Stephen's, Coleman Street, in London. He incurred the hostility of W. *Laud, who nevertheless called him 'a most religious man', through a 'feoffment scheme' for the purchase of lay impropriations and his efforts to raise money for distressed ministers in the Palatinate. In 1633 he resigned his living and became co-pastor of the English church in Amsterdam. In 1637 he sailed to Boston with other well-known refugees, and in 1638 founded at Quinnipiac the colony of New Haven. In the colony, which was governed by 'The Seven Pillars of the State' (of which he was one), Church membership was obligatory for electors and civil officers, until in 1665 the colony was absorbed in Connecticut. In 1662 he became involved in a controversy over Baptism, connected with the '*Half-Way Covenant'. In 1668 he was ordained a minister, and set over the first church at Boston. He was the author of many works, including A Catechism containing the chief Heads of the Christian Religion (1659) and The Power of Congregational Churches Asserted and Vindicated (1672). In 1642 there appeared The Profession of the Faith of the Reverend and Worthy Divine, Mr. John Davenport.

Letters ed. I. McB. Calder (New Haven, Conn., 1937), with short biog. sketch, pp. 1–12. J. T. Adams in Dict. Amer. Biog. 5 (1930), pp. 85–7.

David (d. prob. c.970 BC), first king of the Judaean dynasty. His reign is recounted in 1 Sam. 16–1 Kgs. 2 and in the idealized description in 1 Chron. 2 f. and 10–29.

David, the youngest son of Jesse, a Judaean of *Bethlehem, first appears when at God's command he is anointed by Samuel to the future kingship (1 Sam. 16: 13). Acc. to one tradition (1 Sam. 16: 14–23), he was summoned to the court of Saul as a skilful player upon the harp and eventually appointed the king's armour-bearer. Acc. to another, he appears to have first attracted Saul's attention when as an untried youth he gained his victory over Goliath, the Philistine giant (1 Sam. 17: 12–18: 4). He was promoted by Saul, won the affection of Jonathan, Saul's son, and married Michal, Saul's daughter. Then, however, he excited the king's jealousy and came in danger of his life. He fled to Nob (1 Sam. 21: 1) and thence prob. to the territory of western *Judah; here he gathered a band of supporters. After defeating a body of Philistines near Keilah (1 Sam. 23: 1–5), he established himself at Ziklag as a vassal of Achish, King of Gath (1 Sam. 27: 6). He was saved from taking part in a campaign against the Israelites only by the distrust of the Philistine lords (1 Sam. 29).

On the death of Saul on Mt. Gilboa (c.1010 BC), David, prob. still under Philistine patronage, set himself up at *Hebron as king of the Judaean tribes (2 Sam. 2: 1–4). Seven and a half years later, when Ishbosheth, Saul's son, had been murdered, he was accepted also by the Israelites (2 Sam. 4 f.). As soon as he had captured *Jerusalem from the Jebusites, he established it as his capital (2 Sam. 5) and brought the *Ark to the city (2 Sam. 6). Acc. to tradition, David planned to build a temple, but was told by the prophet Nathan that this would be achieved by his son (2 Sam. 7). In a series of battles David broke the supremacy of the Philistines and secured ascendancy over the neighbouring tribes (2 Sam. 8). He was undoubtedly an outstanding general and politician; he established *Israel as an independent power with a small but significant empire. Concerning his reign of 33 years in Jerusalem relatively little information survives, though we have an extended account of the struggles over the succession among his sons (Absalom, *Solomon, etc) and their supporters (2 Sam. 9–20; 1 Kgs. 1–2).

Our portrait of David, one of the most lifelike in the OT, is that of a ruler who both gave and inspired deep affection, not least through the magnanimity which he frequently showed to his personal enemies. The narrative reports, with striking honesty, his lapses into sin (adultery with Bathsheba and murder of Uriah; 2 Sam. 11), but also gives a moving picture of his repentance (2 Sam. 12).

David has traditionally been regarded as the author of the *Psalms (q.v.), many of which have been associated in later times with particular incidents in his life, e.g. the *Miserere (Ps. 51) with his repentance after the Bathsheba incident. But the tendency of modern OT scholarship is against assigning to David more than a small fraction of the Psalter. It is possible, however, that he composed the dirges over Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1: 19–27) and Abner (2 Sam. 3: 33 f.).

In Hebrew tradition, the name of David came to occupy a central position. He was the king whose house and dominion were to stand for ever (2 Sam. 7: 12–16). But though his dynasty continued to reign in Judah, it lost the allegiance of the northern tribes (Israel) on the death of Solomon (c.930 BC) and after frequent misfortunes and attacks fell to the Babylonians c.586 BC. These calamities led the Prophets to look to the re-establishment of the full sovereignty of 'David' (i.e. of the house of David) as part of the deliverance of the nation (e.g. Amos 9: 11, Hos. 3: 5, Is. 16: 5, Jer. 30: 9, and Ezek. 37: 24) to be achieved through a future prince of the house (Is. 9: 6 f.), a 'Branch' from the stock of Jesse (Is. 11: 1–10; Jer. 33: 14–26). As the hope of the *Messiah grew, the deliverer was awaited from among the descendants of David, while David himself was conceived as a *type of the expected Messiah on the basis of such references as Ps. 110.

In the NT the Evangelists assume the Davidic descent of the Messiah (see GENEALOGIES OF CHRIST). It is as the 'Son of David' (e.g. Mt. 21: 9) that the Lord is welcomed to Jerusalem before His Passion. His Davidic ancestry is also stressed in Rom. 1: 3, 2 Tim. 2: 8 and Rev. 5: 5, 22: 16.

In the Fathers the idea of David as the type of Christ is a commonplace. St *Augustine draws a parallel between David's victory over Goliath and that of the Lord over Satan; St *Cyril of Alexandria explains that David's sling foreshadows the Cross of Christ; while in both St Augustine and St *Gregory the Great the victory of David in his weakness foreshadows that of the Church and the Christian martyrs. In Christian art he is regularly depicted with a crown and a harp. His role as the ancestor of Christ is graphically represented in the *Jesse windows (q.v.).

L. Rost, Die Überlieferung von der Thronnachfolge Davids (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testaments, Dritte Folge, 6; 1926; Eng. tr., The Succession to the Throne of David, Sheffield, 1982); R. N. Whybray, The Succession Narrative: A Study of II Samuel 9–20 and I Kings 1 and 2 (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 9; 1968). D. M. Gunn, The Story of King David: Genre and Interpretation (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 6; Sheffield, 1978). H. Steger, David Rex et Propheta: König David als vorbildliche Verkörperung des Herrschers und Dichters im Mittelalter, nach Bilddarstellungen des achten bis zwölften Jahrhunderts (1961). J. M. Myers in Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, 1 (New York, etc., 1962), pp. 771–82, s.v. See also comm. to Sam. and Kings, cited s.vv., and histories of Israel.

David, St (d. *c.*601), patron saint of *Wales. Though he is one of the most famous British saints, there is no reliable biography of him. His earliest Life, that by Bp. Rhygyfarch or Ricimas, which dates from the second half of the 11th cent., was written with a view to supporting the claims of the Welsh bishops to independence of *Canterbury. Acc. to the legend, he belonged to a noble family; after having become a priest, he lived for a time in retirement; later he became the founder of 12 monasteries; finally he settled at Mynyw or Menevia, where he established an abbey whose religious led a life of extreme asceticism modelled on that of the Egyptian monks. About 560 he is said to have attended the Synod of Brefi (the modern Llanddewi Brefi), apparently one of the few historically established facts of his life; but the story that he spoke there with such eloquence that he was chosen primate of the Cambrian Church seems to be legendary, as well as the assertion that he transferred the episcopal see from Caerleon to Menevia, now *St Davids. He is related to have called in 569 a Council, generally styled the 'Synod of Victory', because held at a place the Latin name of which is given as 'Lucus Victoriae' (Caerleon). Other features of St David's life, such as his pilgrimage to *Jerusalem and his consecration as archbishop by its patriarch, are mere inventions. St David's cult seems to have been approved by Pope *Callistus II *c.*1120; in 1398 Abp. *Arundel ordered his feast to be kept throughout the province of Canterbury. Feast day, 1 Mar.

St David is mentioned in the 'Martyrology of St *Oengus' (*c.*800) and in the 'Catalogue of the Saints of Ireland' (9th–10th cent.), but without any details of his life being given. Text of Rhygyfarch's Life ed. A. W. Wade-Evans, Y Cymmrodor, 24 (1913), pp. 4–28. The same author pub. an Eng. tr. with copious notes, The Life of St David (1923). It is also ed., with Eng. tr., by J. W. James (Cardiff, 1967). See also D. S. Evans (ed.), The Welsh Life of St David (ibid., 1988). S. M. Harris, Saint David in the Liturgy (ibid., 1940). N. K. Chadwick in id. and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958), pp. 134–57.

David of Augsburg (*c.*1200–72), German preacher and spiritual writer. Prob. a native of Augsburg, he entered the *Franciscan Order at Regensburg, where he became novice-master. Later he was transferred to the newly founded house at Augsburg, where, with his friend Berthold of Regensburg (d. 1273), also a great preacher, he carried on active evangelism. His principal Latin writings, which have frequently been ascribed to St *Bernard and to St *Bonaventure, are a major three-part work 'De Exterioribus et Interioris Hominis Compositione' (usually referred to as 'De Compositione'), which is much influenced by *William of St-Thierry, and two letters. The authenticity of 'De Inquisitione Haereticorum' and various other Latin works has been disputed. He is generally regarded as the first author to publish spiritual treatises in German. Of those usually regarded as genuine 'Die sieben Staffeln des Gebetes' is a free rendering of 'Septem Gradus Orationis' (an anonymous work, thought by many to be by David himself); 'Die sieben Vorregeln der Tugend' is based on chapters in 'De Compositione'; and even independent compositions, such as 'De Spiegel der Tugend' and his commentary on the *Lord's Prayer, betray close affinities with 'De Compositione'. His teaching was eminently practical. He inculcated perfect obedience and humility, warned against illusions, and though enlarging more on the active than the contemplative life, kept in view the mystic union of the soul and its three faculties of memory, understanding, and will with God. His works continued to be used in the later Middle Ages, especially in the Netherlands.

David's 'De Compositione Hominis Exterioris' and other Lat. works for novices ed. Quaracchi, 1899; 'De Inquisitione Haereticorum' first ed. W. Preger, Abh. (Bayr.), 14 (1879), Abteilung 2, pp. 181–235; 'Septem gradus Orationis' first ed. J. Heerinckx, OFM, Revue d'ascétique et de mystique, 14 (1933), pp. 146–70; his German works in F. Pfeiffer (ed.), Deutsche Mystiker des vierzehnten Jahrhunderts, 1 (1845), pp. 309–405. Crit. edn. of 'Die sieben Staffeln des Gebetes' by K. Ruh (Kleine deutsche Prosadenkmäler des Mittelalters, 1; 1965). Eng. tr. of various Lat. works by D. Devas, OFM, under the title Spiritual Life and Progress (2 vols., 1937), with introd. D. Stöckerl, Bruder David von Augsburg (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, 4, Heft 4; 1914). K. Ruh, 'David von Augsburg und die Entstehung eines Franziskanischen Schrifttums in deutscher Sprache', in H. Rinn (ed.), Augusta 955–1955: Forschungen und Studien zur Kultur- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte Augsburg (Augsburg, 1955), pp. 71–82. F. M. Schwab, OCD, David of Augsburg's 'Paternoster' and the Authenticity of his German Works (Münchener Texte und Untersuchungen zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 32; 1971), incl. text. C. Rüegg, David von Augsburg (Deutsche Literatur von den Anfängen bis 1700, 4 [1989]). K. Ruh in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 2 (1980), cols. 47–58, s.v.

David of Dinant (fl. 1200), naturalist and philosopher. He prob. came from Dinant in Belgium. He is given the title 'Magister', which implies study in a school; he described himself as a physician, mentioned a stay in Greece, and said that he wrote a work De anatomia venarum et arteriarum et nervorum totius corporis (identified by B. Lawn with the De iuvamento anhelitus which circulated under the name of Galen). In a letter of Pope *Innocent III of 1206 he is called 'capellanus noster'. In 1210 a Council of the Province of Sens ordered that his writings (Quaternuli) should be brought to the Bp. of Paris and burnt. These writings have until recently been known only from fragments quoted by others, chiefly *Albertus Magnus. In 1933 A. Birkenmajer and R. de Vaux independently identified fragments of his work, and these were edited by M. Kurdzialek in 1963. The fragments, which contain passages reproduced by Albertus Magnus, apparently come from an incomplete work in various stages of elaboration. They show considerable knowledge of the physical works of *Aristotle derived from a reading of the original text. Together with discussion of natural phenomena (including natural explanations for some biblical miracles), some startling doctrines are set forth. David taught that all distinctions in real being (ens in actu) are to be explained by a primal possible being (materia prima), which he identified with the Divine Being. All things, material, intellectual, and spiritual, have one and the same essence, that is, God. The sources for David's views have been much discussed, but G. Théry is prob. right in maintaining that the preponderant influence is Aristotle. We do not know whether David taught in Paris, but the circulation of such views there led to the condemnation of the study of the Metaphysics of Aristotle and of his works on natural philosophy in Paris. Albertus Magnus attacked David's writings mercilessly. He was concerned to show that the materialistic view of David not only found no support in Aristotle, but that Aristotle's philosophy, rightly understood, was a condemnation of David's interpretation. David's position was entirely different from that of *Amalric of Bène, who was condemned at the same time.

'Quaternulorum Fragmenta' ed. M. Kurdzialek (Studia Mediewistycne, 3; Warsaw, 1963). G. Théry, OP, Autour du Décret de 1210: I. David de Dinant (Bibliothèque Thomiste, 6; 1925), with text of extracts from Albertus Magnus and Thomas Aquinas, and refs. to earlier works. A. Birkenmajer, 'Découverte de fragments manuscrits de David de Dinant', Revue Néo-scolastique de Philosophie, 35 (1933), pp. 220–9; R. de Vaux, OP, 'Sur un texte retrouvé de David de Dinant', RSPT 22 (1933), pp. 243–5. B. Lawn, I Quesiti Salernitani (rev. Ital. tr., 1969), pp. 100–5, identifying further fragments. M.-T. d'Alverny, 'Les nouveaux apports dans les domaines de la science et de la pensée au temps de Philippe Auguste: La Philosophie', in R.-H. Bautier (ed.), La France de Philippe Auguste: Le Temps des mutations (Colloques Internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, 602; 1982), pp. 863–80, esp. pp. 867–70.

Davidson, Andrew Bruce (1831–1902), Scottish OT scholar. He belonged to the *Free Church of Scotland and was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and at New College, Edinburgh. At the latter he became assistant professor of Hebrew in 1858 and professor of Hebrew and Oriental languages in 1863. He was one of the first to introduce historical methods of OT exegesis into Scotland, and though his own dogmatic orthodoxy was seldom challenged, that of several of his pupils, who carried his principles a stage further, notably W. R. *Smith, was fiercely contested. His writings include An Introductory Hebrew Grammar (1874); commentaries on Job (1884), Ezekiel (1892), and Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah (1896), in the 'Cambridge Bible'; The Theology of the Old Testament, ed. S. D. F. Salmond (1904); and a large number of articles in J. *Hastings's Dictionary of the Bible. He was also a member of the OT Revision Committee.

J. Strahan, Andrew Bruce Davidson (1917). Also biog. introd. by A. T. Innes to A. B. Davidson, The Called of God, ed. J. A. Paterson (1902), pp. 3–58. Complete list of his works in The Expository Times, 15 (1904), p. 453. R. A. Riesen, Criticism and Faith in late Victorian Scotland (Lanham, Md. [1985]), pp. 252–376. S. R. *Driver in DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 471 f.

Davidson, Randall Thomas (1848–1930), Abp. of *Canterbury. The son of Scottish Presbyterian parents, he was educated at Harrow (where he was confirmed) and at Trinity College, Oxford, and then trained for holy orders by C. J. *Vaughan. He was ordained deacon in 1874 to the curacy of Dartford, Kent, where he remained until in 1877 he became resident chaplain to the Abp. of Canterbury, A. C. *Tait, whose second daughter he married. An interview with Queen Victoria, on the occasion of Tait's death in 1882, greatly impressed her with his personality, and in 1883 he was appointed Dean of Windsor. In 1891 he became Bp. of *Rochester, in 1895 of *Winchester, and in 1903 Abp. of Canterbury. He resigned in 1928, the first Abp. of Canterbury to do so.

As the confidential adviser of Queen Victoria, and afterwards as Primate, Davidson exercised an exceptional influence upon the life of Church and nation. He endeavoured esp. to maintain the comprehensiveness of the C of E and to strengthen the Church as a spiritual and moral witness in national life. His primacy was a period of special difficulty, requiring him to take action with regard to such varied questions as the disestablishment of the Church in *Wales, the *Kikuyu Controversy, the *Enabling Act, the *Malines Conversations, the Coal Strike (1926), Prayer Book Revision, and relations with various E. Churches. Having been present at every *Lambeth Conference since 1878, when he was Tait's chaplain, he presided over those of 1908 and 1920. As episcopal secretary to the 1897 Conference he was instrumental in establishing the Lambeth Consultative Committee, and in 1908 he chaired some of the sessions of the first Pan-Anglican Congress in London. He was the first Abp. of Canterbury to make an official visit to the United States of America and Canada (1904). Though suffering from lifelong ill-health owing to an accident in boyhood, he was an indefatigable worker. He possessed the courage necessary in a leader, even if he more often preferred to exercise the caution of a chairman. His elevation to the peerage as 'Baron Davidson of Lambeth', after his resignation of the primacy, was the recognition of one whose service to the Church was also, in a high degree, service to the nation.

G. K. A. *Bell, Randall Davidson (2 vols., 1935; 3rd edn., 1952). Id. in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 240–8.

Day Hours. Traditionally the services of the *Breviary other than *Mattins (which constituted the 'night office'), i.e. *Lauds, *Prime, *Terce, *Sext, *None, *Vespers, and *Compline. The office-book containing these services is known as the *Diurnal. For the arrangement of offices in the 1971 Breviary, see under OFFICE, DIVINE.

Day of Atonement. See ATONEMENT, DAY OF.

Day's Psalter. A popular name (which does not appear on any title page) for the *metrical edition of the Psalms by Thomas *Sternhold (d. 1549) and John Hopkins (d. ?1570). It applies to the early complete editions of this Psalter, which were printed by John Day (1522–84) from 1562 onwards. More commonly called the Old Version, it had been in use, in incomplete form, since 1549. Reissued by other printers, it continued to circulate widely for over a hundred years.

deacon (Gk. διάκονος, 'servant', 'minister'; cf. διακονέω, 'I serve'), the rank in the Christian ministry next below the presbyter (priest) and bishop. The institution of the diaconate is traditionally seen in the ordination of the 'seven men of honest report' (including *Stephen and *Philip), by the imposition of hands for the service of the poor and the distribution of alms (Acts 6: 1–6), though the word διάκονος is not found here. Where it occurs in the NT in a technical sense (Phil. 1: 1, 1 Tim. 3: 8) it is in conjunction with 'bishop' (ἐπίσκοπος); deacons seem to be assistants to the bishops. In the *Pastoral Epp. the deacons are a separate class of Church officers, charged chiefly with material duties.

In post-NT times deacons continued to exercise similar functions. They are mentioned in *Clement of Rome's Ep. to the Corinthians, and in the Epp. of *Ignatius they appear for the first time in the third place, after bishops and presbyters. In the patristic age, when the office was normally held for life, their functions varied from place to place. While the celebration of the Eucharist was reserved for the bishop or priest (along with the giving of *absolution and pronouncement of the *blessing), deacons commonly read or chanted the *Epistle and *Gospel at the Eucharist, received the offerings of the faithful and inscribed the names of the donors in the *diptychs, assisted the bishop (and later the priest) in the distribution of the consecrated elements to the people or distributed them themselves, directed the prayers of the laity during the service, and gave the signal for *penitents and *catechumens to leave the Church before the beginning of the *Eucharistic Prayer. These liturgical functions were considerably curtailed in the W. when, in 595, *Gregory the Great transferred many of their musical functions to the *cantors.

Their original office of collecting and distributing the alms gave them considerable importance and the *archdeacon, the chief deacon of a given place, became the bishop's principal administrative officer. In Rome their influence was esp. marked through their association with the Pope; here their number was long restricted to seven, a tradition which was perpetuated in the seven *Cardinal Deacons. It gave rise, however, to abuses. Already at *Nicaea (325; can. 18) their powers were curbed and the Council of *Toledo in 633 and the *Trullan Synod of 692 had to stress their hierarchical inferiority to the priesthood. Their influence diminished considerably during the Middle Ages, and in most W. episcopal Churches in modern times the diaconate has become merely a necessary stage in preparation for the priesthood. The E. Church, however, has always retained a permanent diaconate. Candidates for the diaconate cannot be ordained until they have reached the canonical *age. The characteristic vestments of the deacon in the W. are the *dalmatic, and *stole worn over the left shoulder; in the E. the *orarion.

In the post-Tridentine RC Church the deacon had hardly any functions beyond his ministrations at High Mass and *Benediction. Only with special permission was he allowed to preach or administer Solemn Baptism, though he retained the right to chant the Gospel, to present the offerings to the celebrant, to invite the congregation to pray, and to chant the '*Ite, missa est' at Mass; to expose the Bl Sacrament and put it back in the Tabernacle at Benediction; and to sing the *Exultet. Because of the short time normally spent in the diaconate and hence the fewness of deacons, the liturgical functions proper to a deacon came to be frequently performed by a priest. The Second *Vatican Council (1962–5) envisaged the possibility of the restoration of a permanent diaconate; following the procedure envisaged, bishops in some countries have ordained older married men as deacons, though young men ordained deacon are still bound to *celibacy. The Council's Constitution 'On the Church' (Lumen Gentium, 29) also defined the duties of a deacon, allowing him, when authorized, to baptize solemnly, administer Communion, assist at and bless weddings, give *Viaticum to the dying, instruct and exhort the people, and officiate at funerals.

At the Reformation the C of E retained the order of deacon, though, as it abolished the *minor orders, this then became the lowest rank of ecclesiastical minister. In 1986 the order became open to women as well as men, as was already the case in certain other Provinces of the Anglican Communion. The functions of Anglican deacons are similar to those of their modern RC counterparts. Men who are to be made priests normally remain deacons for one year.

In many of the Protestant Churches the name is applied to the holders of an office in the ministry. In the *Lutheran Church the word 'deacon' is applied to assistant parochial ministers, even though they are in full Lutheran orders. J. *Calvin's Institutes (4. 3. 9) recognized two classes of deacons, those who administered the alms and those who cared for the poor and sick. These remain the functions of deacons in *Presbyterianism, where there is also provision for a deacons' court, directly responsible to the presbytery and concerned with the proper distribution of Church goods. Where such a court does not exist, the deacons' functions are performed by *elders. In the *Baptist and *Congregational Churches more definitely spiritual functions are assigned to the deacons, who assist the pastor and also distribute the elements at the Communion. See also the following entry.

H. Krimm (ed.), Das Diakonische Amt der Kirche (Stuttgart, 1953; 2nd edn., 1965); id. (ed.), Quellen zur Geschichte der Diakonie (2 vols., ibid. [1960–64]). J. Colson, La Fonction diaconale aux origines de l'Église (Textes et Études Théologiques, 1960). K. *Rahner, SJ, and H. Vorgrimler (eds.), Diaconia in Christo: Über die Erneuerung des Diakonates (Quaestiones Disputatae, 15–16; 1962), with bibl. P. Winninger and Y. [M.-J.] *Congar, (eds.), Le Diacre dans l'Église et le Monde d'Aujourd'hui (Unam Sanctam, 59; 1966). J. N. Collins, Diakonia: Re-interpreting the Ancient Sources (New York, 1990). Deacons in the Ministry of the Church: A Report to the House of Bishops of the General Synod of the Church of England (General Synod Paper 802; 1988). H. W. Beyer in TWNT 2 (1935; Eng. tr., 1963), pp. 88–93, s.v. διάκονος. S. Cheetham in DCA 1 (1875), pp. 526–32, s.v.; J. Forget in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 703–31, s.v. 'Diacres'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 4 (pt. 1; 1920), cols. 738–46, s.v. 'Diacre'; F. Claeys-Bouuaert in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 1198–206, s.v. 'Diacre'; T. Klauser in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 888–909, s.v. 'Diakon'.

deaconess. A woman officially charged with certain functions in the Church. The practice of a woman fulfilling the office of *deacon goes back to the Apostolic age. St *Paul's mention of Phoebe 'deaconess (οὖσαν διάκονον) of the Church that is at Cenchreae' (Rom. 16: 1), as well as 1 Tim. 3: 11 are usually held to refer to a special office; and *Pliny, in his letter to Trajan, speaks of two 'ancillae quare ministrae dicebantur'. However, the term διακόνισσα (Lat. diaconissa) did not come into use until the 4th cent. Earlier documents use 'diacona', 'vidua', or 'virgo canonica', and the distinction between *widows and deaconesses is rather obscure.

The office, which developed greatly in the 3rd and 4th cents., is described in the '*Didascalia' and the '*Apostolic Constitutions'. The age of entry, fixed at 50 by the 'Didascalia', was reduced to 40 by the Council of *Chalcedon. The deaconess devoted herself to the care of the sick and the poor of her sex; she was present at interviews of women with bishops, priests, or deacons; instructed women catechumens, and kept order in the women's part of the church. Her most important function was the assistance at the baptism of women, at which, for reasons of propriety, many of the ceremonies could not be performed by the deacons. When, therefore, adult baptism became rare, the office of deaconess declined in importance. This process was helped by abuses which had crept in, when deaconesses undertook ministerial functions, e.g. in the *Oriental Orthodox Churches and the *Church of the East, where they administered Holy Communion to women. The Councils of Epaon (517) and of Orléans (533) abrogated the office, but it is found in other places till the 11th cent. In the E., where the prerogatives of deaconesses were more marked, including the investiture with the stole and the distribution of the chalice, the process was somewhat slower. The reception of stole and maniple by the *Carthusian nuns at their profession would seem to be a survival of the ancient office.

In the 19th cent. the office was revived in a modified form. The first Protestant community of deaconesses was that established by the German pastor, T. Fliedner, at *Kaiserswerth (q.v.) in 1836. From there it spread to other countries, notably England and the USA. In the C of E, the Deaconess Community of St Andrew was founded in 1861 and the first deaconess (Miss Elizabeth Ferard) was set apart for her work the following year by A. C. *Tait, Bp. of London. Diocesan institutes on the model of Kaiserswerth were founded in many parts of the country, and rules drawn up for them in 1871. The example was followed by the *Methodists in America in 1888, and in the same year deaconesses were established in the Church of Scotland.

In the C of E the order of deaconess was described in the 1969 Canons (can. D. 1) as 'the one order of ministry . . . to which women are admitted by prayer and the laying on of hands by the bishop'; at the same time it was stated that it was 'not one of the holy orders of the Church of England'. Acc. to the revised Canons, the main duties of the deaconess are 'to lead the people in public worship, to exercise pastoral care, to instruct the people in the Christian faith, and to prepare them for the reception of the sacraments'. She may be authorized to say Morning and Evening Prayer (except the Absolution), to read the Epistle and Gospel at the Holy Communion, and to distribute the Sacrament. At the invitation of the minister, she may also preach, in the absence of the minister baptize, and, with the goodwill of the persons concerned, conduct funerals. Under the Deacons (Ordination of Women) Measure 1986, women were admitted to the diaconate. Existing deaconesses could be ordained deacons. There were to be no further admissions to the order of deaconesses, but those already admitted who did not wish to become deacons remained deaconesses.

J. Mayer (ed.), Monumenta de Viduis, Diaconissis, Virginibusque Tractantia (Florilegium Patristicum, 42; Bonn, 1938), with refs. C. H. *Turner, 'Ministries of Women in the Primitive Church: Widow, Deaconess and Virgin in the First Four Christian Centuries', The Constructive Quarterly, 7 (1919), repr. in Catholic and Apostolic, ed. H. N. Bate (1931), no. 11, pp. 316–51, esp. pp. 328–43; A. Kalsbach, Die altkirchliche Einrichtung der Diakonissen bis zu ihrem Erlöschen (Römische Quartalschrift, Supplementheft 22; 1926); J. G. Davies, 'Deacons, Deaconesses and the Minor Orders in the Patristic Period', JEH 14 (1963), pp. 1–15, esp. pp. 1–6; R. Gryson, Le Ministère des femmes dans l'Église ancienne (Recherches et Synthèses, Section d'Histoire, 4; Gembloux [1972]); A. G. Martimort, Les Diaconesses: Essai historique (Bibliotheca Ephemerides Liturgicae, Subsidia, 24; Rome, 1982; Eng. tr., San Francisco, 1986); M.-J. Aubert, Les Femmes diacres: Un nouveau chemin pour l'Église (Le Point théologique, 47 [1987]). C. Robinson, The Ministry of Deaconesses (1898); The Ministry of Women: A Report by a Committee Appointed by the Abp. of Canterbury (1919); J. Grierson, The Deaconess (1981) [on deaconesses in the C of E]. A. Kalsbach in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 917–28, s.v. 'Diakonisse'.

dead, prayers for the. The custom of praying for the dead is a traditional practice independent of any biblical support: 'If you look in Scripture for a formal law governing these and similar practices, you will find none. It is tradition that justifies them, custom that confirms them, and faith that observes them' (*Tertullian, de cor., 4. 1). The only scriptural text where such prayer is clearly recorded is 2 Macc. 12: 40–5. There is, however, ample evidence for its use in the inscriptions of the *catacombs, with their constant prayers for the peace and refreshment of the souls of the departed, and the early liturgies commonly contain commemorations of the dead. Of the early Fathers, Tertullian, *Cyprian, and others are witnesses of the regular practice of praying for the dead, and in the 4th cent. one of the counts against the heretic *Aerius was that he denied its efficacy and legitimacy.

In the E. Church no limits are placed on such prayer. In the Liturgy of St *Chrysostom, the Eucharistic sacrifice is offered for (ὑπέρ) the saints and martyrs, and there is authority for praying for those 'bound in Hades' (Service of Kneeling, Pentecostarion, Rome, 1883, p. 414) and for pagans (cf. Apophthegmata Patrum*, Macarius, 38). In the W. prayer for the dead was closely connected with the development of the doctrine of *purgatory (q.v.); gradually such prayer was limited to prayer for the 'holy souls', i.e. the souls in purgatory. The W. Church does not pray for the martyrs, because they are believed to be in full possession of beatitude immediately after death, a refusal later extended to all canonized saints. Nor, it is held, can the damned, i.e. those who have died in unrepented mortal sin, be assisted by our prayers, though who they are is known to God alone. Thus the public offering of Mass for the excommunicate (and even for those outside the RC Church) was long forbidden, though private prayers and Masses for the Dead might be said for them. Acc. to modern RC Canon Law, unless they gave some sign of repentance before death, Masses for the Dead and funeral rites are not to be conducted for notorious apostates, heretics, schismatics, public sinners, or for those who for anti-Christian reasons desired *cremation. If, however, their own minister is not available, baptized persons belonging to another Church or ecclesial community may be given RC funeral rites, unless it is established that they did not wish this (CIC (1983), cans. 1183–5).

At first the Protestant Reformers continued the traditional custom of praying for the dead. But before long they came to denounce it, partly because they believed it to be without biblical foundation (2 Macc. 12: 40–5 was dismissed, since the 'Apocrypha' no longer ranked as Scripture), partly through their rejection of the doctrine of purgatory and the practices associated with it. In the C of E express prayers for the dead have been absent from the BCP since 1552 and the practice is denounced as unprofitable in the *Homily 'On Prayer' (part 3) on the ground that it is useless to intercede for the dead, who are already either in heaven or hell. The liturgy of the *Nonjurors, however, included prayers for the dead, and since the middle of the 19th cent. the practice has been increasingly adopted in the C of E. Prayers for the dead were included in an authorized 'Form of Intercession' put out in 1900 on behalf of the forces serving in South Africa and since then in other official forms of service. In a veiled form they were inserted for optional use in the proposed revision of the BCP in 1927–8; they are allowed in the ASB and some (though not all) other modern Anglican liturgies. Prayer for the dead is still avoided by those of marked *Evangelical belief and in the Free Churches. See also BURIAL SERVICES and REQUIEM.

The traditional Catholic teaching was reasserted at the Council of *Trent, sessions 22 (cf. can. 3) and 25 (for both, see Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), nos. 1743, 1753, 1820), as well as in the Decree of Union subscribed at the Council of *Florence of 1439 (ibid., no. 1304). Prayer and the Departed: A Report of the Archbishops' Commission on Christian Doctrine (1971). F. S. Paxton, Christianizing Death: The Creation of a Ritual Process in Early Medieval Europe (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1990). See also PURGATORY.

Dead Sea. The inland sea to the SE of Palestine into which the *Jordan flows. It is much the lowest lake in the world, being nearly 1,300 feet below sea-level. Acc. to Hebrew tradition, it was formed when the cities of the plain, Sodom and Gomorrah, were overthrown for their wickedness (cf. Gen. 13: 13 and 19: 24–8). There are several refs. to it in the OT (e.g. Zech. 14: 8), though never as the 'Dead Sea' by name. The vision of Ezek. 47 looks forward to a day when a river issuing from the *Temple at Jerusalem will flow into the sea and make its stagnant waters fresh. In the NT there is no mention of it. The designation 'Dead Sea' (θάλασσα νεκρά) is first found in Pausanias and Galen.

G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (25th edn.; 1931), ch. 23, pp. 497–530, with bibl. refs. F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 1 (1933), pp. 167–9. Modern guide by J. Murphy-O'Connor, OP, The Holy Land (2nd edn., Oxford, 1986), pp. 197–201.

Dead Sea Scrolls. The term denotes scrolls and fragments discovered for the most part between 1947 and 1960 at seven sites on the NW and W. shores of the Dead Sea: eleven caves near *Qumran, two caves in Wadi Murabba'at, the caves of Naḥal Ḥever, Naḥal Mishmar, and Naḥal Ṣe'elim, and at Khirbet Mird and Masada. Commonly it is used only in reference to the writings from the caves near Qumran. These writings are referred to by cave number, site, and abbreviated title; e.g. 1QH = cave number 1, Qumran, Hodayot (= Hymns of Thanksgiving).

From the Qumran caves there are remains of over 750 documents, in *Hebrew, *Aramaic, and *Greek, mostly written on skin, many of which remain largely unedited. Most of the Hebrew MSS are written in square script, though a few of the biblical ones are written in palaeo-Hebrew. Palaeographers assert that some of the texts may be as old as the 3rd cent. BC, but most of the MSS are written in the styles of script now labelled as Hasmonean (*c.*130–50 BC) or Herodian (*c.*50 BC to AD 50). In view of the fact that practically no other MS material in Hebrew and Aramaic has survived from this period, the scrolls are of great importance palaeographically.

About the origins of the scrolls all that can be said is that probably they once belonged to the library of the Jewish community which was based on a large building at Qumran. Many scholars have identified the community to whom the scrolls belonged with the *Essenes.

Among the biblical MSS nearly all the books of the canonical OT are represented. These MSS are important for aiding in the reconstruction of the history of the OT text. Not all of them were copied at Qumran. Some scholars group the biblical MSS in families according to the place of the supposed origin of the text-type; those that agree predominantly with the *Massoretic text are linked with Babylonian Judaism, those closer to the *Septuagint with *Alexandria, and those closer to the *Samaritan Pentateuch with Palestine. Other scholars draw attention to the variety of text-types in the OT quotations in the NT and reserve judgement on theories of textual families, especially since all the biblical MSS show affinities with more than one family.

The non-biblical MSS include copies of several *apocryphal and pseudepigraphical books already known (e.g. *Enoch, Jubilees) as well as many not previously known. Some MSS seem to relate more specifically to the Qumran community; among these are the Manual of Discipline (1QS, a community rule akin to the Didache), the pesharim (eschatological commentaries on prophetic texts), the War Scroll (1QM), and various liturgical texts (e.g. 1QH). Some texts, such as the Damascus Document (also known as the Zadokite Documents or Cairo Damascus Covenant), may have been composed elsewhere, then copied and extensively edited at Qumran.

Despite claims to the contrary, it is almost certain that no copies of any NT book have been found at Qumran. However, the wealth of evidence that the scrolls provide for Jewish life and thought at the time when Christianity was born mean that they are a source of information which no student of Christian origins can afford to ignore.

Principal edns. incl. M. Burrows (ed.), The Dead Sea Scrolls of St. Mark's Monastery (2 vols., New Haven, Conn., 1950–1); E. L. Sukenik, The Dead Sea Scrolls of the Hebrew University (Jerusalem, 1954; with introd. and notes in Eng., 1955); D. Barthélemy, OP, J. T. Milik, and others (eds.), Discoveries in the Judaean Desert (Oxford, 1955 ff.: about 30 vols. planned; 10 pub. to 1994); N. Avigad and Y. Yadin, A Genesis Apocryphon (Jerusalem, 1956); J. P. M. van der Ploeg, OP, and A. S. van der Woude, Le Targum de Job de la Grotte XI de Qumrân (Leiden, 1971); J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumrân Cave 4 (Oxford, 1976); Y. Yadin (ed.), The Temple Scroll (3 vols. with suppl. vol. of plates, Jerusalem, 1977 (Heb.); Eng. tr. of vols. 1 and 2, 1983); D. N. Freedman and K. A. Mathews, The Paleo-Hebrew Leviticus Scroll (11QpaleoLev) (Winona Lake, Ind. [1985]); C. Newsom, Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice (Atlanta, Ga. [1985]); E. M. Schuller, Non-Canonical Psalms from Qumran: A Pseudepigraphic Collection (ibid. [1986]). B. Z. Wacholder and M. G. Abegg, A Preliminary Edition of the Unpublished Dead Sea Scrolls: The Hebrew and Aramaic Texts from Cave Four (Washington, DC, 1991 ff.). E. Tov, The Dead Sea Scrolls on Microfiche, with pr. catalogue by S. A. Reid (Leiden, 1993). Selected Heb. pointed texts ed., with Ger. tr., by E. Lohse (Munich, 1964; 2nd edn., 1971); selected texts in Eng. tr. by G. Vermes (Harmondsworth, 1962; 3rd edn., 1987) and by M. Knibb, The Qumran Community (Cambridge, 1987). Eng. tr. of nearly all the non-Biblical material in F. García Martínez, The Dead Sea Scrolls Translated: The Qumran Texts in English (Leiden [1994]; an expanded Eng. tr. of Textos de Qumrán, 1992). Comm. with Heb. text and trs. incl. Y. Yadin, The Scroll of the War of the Sons of Light against the Sons of Darkness [= War Scroll] (Jerusalem, 1955; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1962; incl. text and Eng. tr.); S. Holm-Nielsen, Hodayot: Psalms from Qumran (Acta Theologica Danica, 2; Aarhus, 1960; Eng. tr. only); A. R. C. Leaney, The Rule of Qumran and its Meaning (1966; Eng. tr. only); W. H. Brownlee, The Midrash Pesher of Habakkuk (Society of Biblical Literature, Monograph Series, 24; Missoula, Mont. [1979]); M. P. Horgan, Pesharim: Qumran Interpretations of Biblical Books (Catholic Biblical Quarterly Monograph Series, 8; Washington, DC, 1979); P. R. Davies, The Damascus Covenant: An Interpretation of the 'Damascus Document' (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 25; Sheffield, 1983).

The extensive literature incl. J. T. Milik, Dix ans de découvertes dans le Désert de Juda (1957; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, 26; 1959); F. M. Cross, The Ancient Library of Qumrân and Modern Biblical Studies (1958); G. R. *Driver, The Judaean Scrolls (Oxford, 1965); F. M. Cross and S. Talmon (eds.), Qumran and the History of the Biblical Text (Cambridge, Mass., and London [1975]); L. H. Schiffman, The Halakhah at Qumran (Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity, 16; Leiden, 1975); G. Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls: Qumran in Perspective (1977; 2nd edn., 1982); G. J. Brooke, Exegesis at Qumran: 4QFlorilegium in its Jewish Context (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 29; Sheffield [1985]); P. R. Callaway, The History of the Qumran Community (Journal for the Study of the Pseudepigrapha, Supplement Series, 3; Sheffield [1988]). Works specifically on the relationship between the Dead Sea Scrolls and the NT include M. Black, The Scrolls and Christian Origins [1961]; J. Murphy-O'Connor, OP (ed.), Paul and Qumran (1968); J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), John and Qumran (1972); B. E. Thiering, The Qumran Origins of the Christian Church (Sydney, 1983). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 380–469. J. A. Fitzmyer, SJ, The Dead Sea Scrolls: Major Publications and Tools for Study (Society of Biblical Literature, Resources for Biblical Study, 20; rev. edn., Atlanta, Ga. [1990]). P. W. Skehan and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 9 (1979), cols. 805–1014, s.v. 'Qumran', sections 4–6.

Deadly Sins, Seven. See SEVEN DEADLY SINS.

De Aleatoribus (or Adversus Aleatores). A short homily, written in somewhat uncouth Latin, which vigorously denounces dice-players and all games of chance. Its authorship has been much disputed. At one time it was believed to be a work of *Cyprian (d. 258), but this view has now been almost universally abandoned. In 1888 A. *Harnack ascribed it to Pope *Victor I (189–99), thus making it the earliest piece of Christian Latin literature. Subsequently the parallels with Cyprian's writings suggested that it drew on them and thus could not be earlier than the middle of the 3rd cent.; Harnack himself came to believe that it was the work of a *Novatianist antipope at Rome. More recently J. *Daniélou has revived the case for an early date (late 2nd cent.).

Crit. edn. of text in Cyprian's Opera, ed. W. Hartel, CSEL 3 (1), pp. 92–104; text also in J. P. Migne, PL 4. 827–36. A. Harnack, Der pseudocyprianische Tractat De Aleatoribus, die älteste lateinische Schrift, ein Werk des römischen Bischofs Victor I. (saec. II) (TU 5, Heft 1; 1888); id., 'Zu Pseudocyprian, Adv. Aleat. 1 (p. 93, 1 f., ed. Hartel)' in TU 20, Heft 3 (1900), pp. 112–16. H. Koch, 'Zur Schrift adversus aleatores', in Festgabe für K. Müller (1922), pp. 58–67. J. Daniélou, Histoire des doctrines chrétiennes avant Nicée, 3: Les Origines du Christianisme latin (1978), pp. 87–91; Eng. tr. (1977), pp. 93–8. Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 496–9.

dean (Lat. decanus, from decem, 'ten'). The title of various, originally minor, officials, e.g. a monk supervising ten novices.

(1) *Rural deans assist the *bishop in administering a subdivision of an *archdeaconry. In the 9th cent. this office replaced the archpresbyterate. The modern RC equivalent of the rural dean is technically known as a 'vicar forane' but in England is commonly described merely as a dean.

(2) The dean of a *cathedral (also formerly an archpresbyter) controls its services and, with the *chapter, supervises its fabric and property. He ranks next to the bishop, of whom in the Anglican, but not the RC, Church he is considerably independent. In some recent foundations, however, the bishop is also dean, and decanal functions are largely discharged by a *provost under his authority.

(3) The heads of the *collegiate churches of *Westminster, *Windsor, and other *peculiars which are governed by deans (and chapters) are independent of episcopal authority.

(4) The 'Dean of the Province of *Canterbury' is the Bp. of London ex officio. He summons the Bishops of the Southern Province to meet in *Convocation under a mandate from the Abp. of Canterbury.

(5) For *Dean of the Arches, see following entry.

(6) In the RC Church, the Dean of the Sacred College is one of the *Cardinal Bishops, since 1965 elected by the suburbican cardinals from among their number.

(7) The *Lutheran superintendent and *Calvinist overseer are sometimes styled dean.

The title of dean of a college or of a university faculty, very often held by a layman, should not be confused with the ecclesiastical title; but the Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford, is both head of the college and dean of the cathedral.

Dean of the Arches and Auditor. The judge in the *Arches Court of Canterbury, who also holds the parallel post of Auditor in the Chancery Court of York. Formerly *Bow Church ('Sta. Maria de Arcubus'), from which he derived his title, was, with twelve other parishes, exempt from the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London, and the Dean exercised *peculiar jurisdiction over the 13 parishes. The original office is now extinct, because the parishes have been incorporated into the see of London, but the legal functions that gradually came to be attached to it are still performed by a judge who retains the title. He has to be a barrister of at least ten years' standing or a person who has held high judicial office, and, if a layman, a communicant. See also ARCHES COURT OF CANTERBURY.

I. J. Churchill, Canterbury Administration (2 vols., 1933), esp 1, pp. 436–46, and 2, pp. 186–92, with list of Deans, pp. 238–40. E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law (3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, 1992), pp. 112, 119, 122, 124 f.

Dearmer, Percy (1867–1936), writer on ceremonial subjects and religious music. He was educated at Westminster and at *Christ Church, Oxford, where he was much influenced by James Adderley and C. *Gore and became one of the first members of the Christian Social Union. Ordained deacon in 1891 and priest in 1892, he set himself to popularize the adaptation of medieval English ceremonial to the Prayer Book rite, setting out his ideals in The Parson's Handbook (1899), a widely used manual, and putting them into practice as Vicar of St Mary's, Primrose Hill, Hampstead (1901–15), where he attracted the interest of many leading artists. From 1919 to 1936 he was Professor of Ecclesiastical Art at *King's College, London, and in 1931 he became a Canon of Westminster. He was co-editor of the English Hymnal (1906), Songs of Praise* (1925), and the Oxford Book of Carols (1928); to these collections he contributed several hymns and translations. He also wrote many popular books on ecclesiastical, topographical, and other subjects.

The Parson's Handbook was extensively rev. and rewritten in an abbreviated form for the 13th edn. by C. E. Pocknee (1965). Life by his wife, N. Dearmer (1940, with bibl.). F. R. Barry in DNB, 1931 1940, pp. 216 f.

'Death of God' Theology. A movement that had considerable vogue in the 1960s, esp. in the *United States of America. The phrase 'God is dead' has been used in a number of ways. It occurs in a Good Friday hymn by M. Luther with reference to the death of Christ, an extreme example of communicatio idiomatum. G. W. F. *Hegel quoted the words, but gave them a new sense, namely that Absolute Spirit has given up its transcendence in order to enter the finite reality of history. Other German writers (e.g. the poet H. Heine and the novelist Jean Paul) spoke of the death of God in a cultural sense, meaning that man had now entered on a stage of civilization to which the concept of God had no relevance (see ATHEISM). This atheistic meaning was taken up by F. W. *Nietzsche, who proclaimed the death of God as a human act: to achieve their full stature as autonomous beings, men must abolish God and become responsible for the world and creators of moral values. These differences of meaning are reflected in the 'death of God' theologies. G. Vahanian in a book entitled The Death of God (1961) claimed that in contemporary W. culture God had ceased to be a meaningful factor. Ideas from D. *Bonhoeffer's posthumously published Widerstand und Erbegung (Eng. tr. as Letters and Papers from Prison), esp. his talk about 'religionless Christianity', were drawn into the debate, and a number of theologians sought to produce a variety of versions of Christianity without God. Paul van Buren believed that analytical philosophy had shown discourse about God to be incoherent; T. J. J. Altizer taught a quasi-Hegelian theory that God had entirely dispersed Himself among finite beings; and W. Hamilton, like many 19th-cent. atheists, held that a transcendent God was incompatible with human freedom. J. A. T. *Robinson's Honest to God (1963) was much less extreme than the writings of the Americans mentioned, but it did call in question the traditional doctrine of a transcendent deity. This dissatisfaction with traditional theism has been largely incorporated in more recent attempts to work out a doctrine of *God (q.v.).

G. Vahanian, The Death of God: The Culture of Our Post-Christian Era (New York, 1961); W. Hamilton, The New Essence of Christianity (New York, 1961; London, 1966); P. M. van Buren, The Secular Meaning of the Gospel Based on an Analysis of its Language (New York and London, 1963); T. J. J. Altizer, The Gospel of Christian Atheism (Philadelphia [1966]; London, 1967); id. and W. Hamilton (eds.), Radical Theology and the Death of God (Indianapolis, 1966; Harmondsworth, 1968); C. W. Christian and G. R. Wittig (eds.), Radical Theology: Phase Two. Essays on a continuing discussion (New York [1967]); S. M. Daecke, Der Mythos vom Tode Gottes [1969]; E. Jüngel, Gott als Geheimnis der Welt (3rd edn., Tübingen, 1978), esp. pp. 55–137; Eng. tr., God as the Mystery of the World (1983), pp. 43–104.

de Auxiliis. In 1597 *Clement VIII appointed the 'Congregatio de Auxiliis' to deal with the contemporary disputes on the manner in which Divine *grace operated. Though Reformation controversies had forced the subject on the attention of RC theologians, the Council of *Trent (1546–63) had left many of the issues unsettled, and towards the end of the 16th cent. division of opinion had become very acute. A fresh stage was reached when the *Jesuit theologian, L. de *Molina, published his Concordia liberi arbitrii cum gratiae donis (1588), and the *Dominican theologian, D. *Báñez, vigorously controverted his teaching. The 'Congregatio' reported for the first time on 19 Mar. 1598, advising that the circulation of Molina's book be forbidden and 90 propositions extracted from it condemned; but the Pope declined to ratify the decision. A second attempt to secure Papal confirmation when the number of offending propositions had been reduced to 20 was equally unsuccessful. Yet a further attempt, under *Paul V, to achieve the same object failed. Finally, on 5 Sept. 1607, in an attempt to satisfy both sides, the Pope decreed that the Dominicans could not justly be accused of *Calvinism nor the Jesuits of *Pelagianism, and that neither side should pronounce the contrary teaching heretical.

de Bruys, Pierre. See PETER DE BRUYS.

decadary cult. The system of worship instituted during the French Revolution on the basis of a 10-day 'week' (ending with 'Décadi', the day of rest) to supplant that associated with the Christian calendar.

decade (Lat. decem, 'ten'). The name technically used for each of the five divisions into which each *chaplet of the Rosary is subdivided, because each contains ten *Hail Marys, together with the *Lord's Prayer and a *Gloria Patri. As each decade is associated with one of the 15 *Mysteries of the Rosary, they form unities in themselves and are sometimes recited as such, without the whole chaplet being said.

decalogue. See COMMANDMENTS, THE TEN.

decani [sc. sedes] (Lat.), 'the place of the dean' (decani). As the dean's stall is on the south side of the cathedral, the term 'decani' is used to indicate those who in antiphonal singing sit on the decanal side of the choir. It is now in common usage for other churches, besides cathedrals. The opposite side is known as '*cantoris'.

de Cantilupe, St Thomas and Walter. See CANTILUPE, ST THOMAS DE and WALTER DE.

Decapolis, the. A region consisting of ten allied cities E. of the *Jordan in N. Palestine. It included the towns of *Damascus, Gerasa, and Gadara, and contained a Greek-speaking population. Cf. Mt. 4: 25, Mk. 5: 20 and 7: 31.

G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (25th edn. 1931), ch. 29, pp. 621–38; A. H. M. Jones, The Cities of the Eastern Roman Provinces (2nd edn. by A. Avi-Yonah and others, Oxford, 1971), pp. 259 and 279 f. C. H. Kraeling (ed.), Gerasa, City of the Decapolis (New Haven, Conn., 1938) [account of excavations, 1928–34]. J.-P. Rey-Coquais in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 116–21, s.v.

de Caussade, Jean Pierre. See CAUSSADE, JEAN PIERRE DE.

Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act 1907. The provisions of this Act, though enjoying full civil sanction, were in conflict with the ecclesiastical law of the C of E, which, until the *Canons were amended by *Convocation in 1946, disallowed the marriage of a widower with his wife's sister or a widow with her husband's brother. A corresponding Deceased Brother's Widow's Act was passed in 1921. The provisions, extended to include aunts, nieces, uncles, and nephews of the deceased party, are now contained in the Marriage (Enabling) Act 1960. Both classes of marriage were prohibited in M. *Parker's 'Table of *Kindred and Affinity', but they do not figure in the corresponding table in the 1969 Canons. An incumbent of the C of E who has scruples is not compelled to solemnize such a marriage, but he is not entitled to exclude from Communion anyone married under the statutory provisions as 'an open and notorious evil liver'. See also AFFINITY.

Decius (d. 251), Roman Emperor from 249. C. Messius Quintus Decius was appointed by the Emp. *Philip the Arabian to take command on the Danube against the Goths. After some military success, in 249 he was proclaimed Emperor by the troops, defeated Philip, and was accepted by the Senate. In 249 he commanded all subjects to sacrifice and obtain certificates of their obedience. What was perhaps intended as a general act of solidarity with the ancient religion caught the Christians and led to the first persecution of them on an imperial scale. Some Christians stood firm and were martyred, incl. *Fabian, Bp. of Rome, Alexander, Bp. of Jerusalem, and *Babylas, Bp. of Antioch. Others gave way or through bribery obtained false certificates (see LIBELLATICI). The intensity of the persecution waned by the beginning of 251; it ended when Decius was killed in battle in June of that year. The defections raised in an acute form the question whether penance was possible for the *lapsed and led to the conflict between St *Cyprian and the *Novatianists over their treatment.

See St Cyprian's works passim, and *Eusebius, HE 4–7. W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (Oxford, 1965), pp. 404–13; G. W. Clarke in his Eng. tr. of The Letters of St Cyprian of Carthage, 1 (ACW 43 [1984]) pp. 21–39; R. Lane Fox, Pagans and Christians (Harmondsworth, 1986), pp. 450–62; H. A. Pohlsander, 'The Religious Policy of Decius', in Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt, 2. 16. 3, ed. W. Haase (1986), pp. 1826–42. See also PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Declaration against Transubstantiation. The Declaration imposed in 1673 by the Popish Recusants Act 1672 (commonly called the *Test Act) on all persons holding civil or military office. It ran as follows: 'I, AB, do . . . declare that I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine . . . at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever'. See also DECLARATION OF THE SOVEREIGN.

Declaration of Assent. See ASSENT, DECLARATION OF.

Declaration of the French Clergy. See GALLICAN ARTICLES.

Declaration of the Sovereign. Also known as the 'Royal Declaration'. The Declaration repudiating the RC faith which was imposed on William III and Mary when they came to the throne in 1689 by Parliament in the Bill of Rights 1688. It has been taken by all subsequent sovereigns. In its original form it was based on the *Declaration against Transubstantiation (q.v.), but included also a repudiation of the Roman doctrines of the *Invocation of Saints and of the *Sacrifice of the Mass, and a 'long rigmarole' wherein the sovereign affirmed that he was not being dispensed by the Pope from taking the Oath in its plain meaning. The Oath survived the repeal of the Test Act by the Roman *Catholic Relief Act 1829; but to remove offence it was altered by the Accession Declaration Act 1910 to 'I, N, do solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God profess, testify, and declare that I am a faithful Protestant, and that I will, according to the true intent of the enactments which secure the Protestant succession to the Throne of my Realm, uphold and maintain the said enactments to the best of my powers according to law'.

Declarations of Indulgence. These were statements of government policy issued on the authority of the royal prerogative, and were the means chosen by *Charles II and *James II to give a lead to public opinion in the matter of religious *toleration. On 25 Oct. 1660 Charles II published his 'Declaration Concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs' (known as the Worcester House Declaration), in which he announced his intention of calling a conference to implement the Declaration of *Breda giving a 'liberty to tender consciences', and granting indulgence in certain matters, mainly ceremonial (the Cross in Baptism, bowing at the Holy Name, use of surplices), at least until after the projected (*Savoy) Conference (1661).

There were four Declarations of Indulgence, properly so called: (1) On 26 Dec. 1662 Charles II issued a Declaration, proclaiming his continued intention of honouring his promises at Breda and of placing before Parliament a bill allowing him to exercise more freely the power of suspending the penal laws against dissenters from the C of E.

But in Feb. 1663 the Commons petitioned for the stern enforcement of the Act of *Uniformity and the bill for toleration was defeated in the Lords.

(2) On 15 Mar. 1672 Charles II issued a further Declaration, suspending the execution of the penal laws in matters ecclesiastical against all nonconformists and recusants. This was a more serious attempt at toleration, and from it may be dated the existence of organized *nonconformity. Licences were issued to dissenting ministers and meeting-places. Anglican opposition was led by G. *Sheldon, and in 1673 Parliament resolved that 'penal statutes in matters ecclesiastical cannot be suspended but by Act of Parliament'. The Declaration and the licences were withdrawn.

(3) On 4 Apr. 1687 James II issued a Declaration allowing full liberty of worship. It suspended the operation of the penal laws, allowed peaceable meetings of nonconformists provided that the Justices of the Peace were notified, ordained that the oaths of supremacy and allegiance should not be required of those employed in the royal service and remitted all penalties pending for ecclesiastical offences. This endangered the Anglican monopoly in Church and State.

(4) On 27 Apr. 1688 James II issued a further Declaration of Indulgence, which was followed on 4 May by an Order in Council requiring that it be read in all churches on two successive Sundays (20 and 27 May in London, 3 and 10 June elsewhere). It provoked fierce Anglican opposition which led to the arrest and trial of the *Seven Bishops. The Order in Council was almost universally disobeyed.

The text of the Worcester House Declaration pr. in E. *Cardwell, Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England, 2 (Oxford, 1839), pp. 234–50; the 1662 Declaration, ibid., pp. 260–69; of 1672, pp. 282–6, and those of 1687 and 1688, pp. 308–15. The Worcester House Declaration is also pr. in A. Browning, English Historical Documents 1660–1714 (1953), pp. 365–70; the Declaration of 1662, ibid., pp. 371–4; that of 1672, pp. 387 f.; of 1687, pp. 395–7; of 1688, pp. 399 f.; and the Order in Council of 1688, ibid., p. 83. The 1688 Declaration is also pr. in Bettenson, pp. 407–10; 2nd edn. (1963), pp. 420–3. F. Bate, The Declaration of Indulgence 1672 (1908).

Declaratory Acts. Two Acts in Scottish *Presbyterian Churches relieving ministers from their obligation to subscribe to every item of the subordinate standards of faith, esp. the *Westminster Confession. (1) The Declaratory Act of 1879, passed by the *United Presbyterian Church, proclaimed the central doctrines of 'the love of God to all mankind, His gift of His Son to be the propitiation for the sins of the whole world, and the free offer of salvation to men without distinction' as 'vital in the system of Gospel truth', but went on to affirm that the damnation of infants and the heathen is not necessarily involved in *election and that total depravity and foreordination to death must allow for human responsibility. It disapproved of anything in the standards supposed to over-exalt the civil magistrates and asserted the Church's obligation to maintain *voluntaryism. It explicitly upheld liberty of opinion on such matters as the 'six days' in the creation story in Genesis. (2) The Declaratory Act of the *Free Church of Scotland of 1892 followed similar lines, but refrained from reference to voluntaryism and any implied attack on a State Church as such. This latter Act was rejected by a small conservative body, chiefly Highland, which formed themselves into the 'Free Presbyterian Church'. In the Church of Scotland its Act on the Formula of 1910 had an effect similar to that of the Declaratory Acts and freedom of opinion on non-fundamental matters was recognized. In the Basis and Plan of Union (1929), the two Declaratory Acts and the Act on the Formula are included among 'leading documents setting forth the constitution' of the reunited Church of Scotland.

Texts of the two Acts in J. T. Cox, Practice and Procedure in the Church of of Scotland, 6th edn. by D. F. M. MacDonald (Edinburgh, 1976), pp. 435–7. A. L. Drummond and J. Bulloch, The Church in Late Victorian Scotland (ibid., 1978), pp. 35–9 and 263–73, also incl. texts.

Decollation of St John the Baptist. The feast celebrated on 29 Aug. in commemoration of the martyrdom of St *John the Baptist at the hands of *Herod Antipas, as related in Mt. 14: 3–12 and Mk. 6: 14–30. It is already mentioned in the *Hieronymian Martyrology and the *Gelasian Sacramentary. It has been observed in England at least since 668. In the 1969 Roman Calendar it is called 'the Passion of St John the Baptist'. References in the Martyrology of *Ado and elsewhere indicate that it originally commemorated the translation of the head of John the Baptist from a monastery near Emesa known as the Spelaion to a church in the city. In the E. Church the date is observed as a fast-day.

*Augustine, Sermones, 307 and 308 (ed. Ben.).

de Condren, Charles. See CONDREN, CHARLES DE.

decretals. Papal letters, strictly those in response to a question. They have the force of law within the Pope's jurisdiction. The first decretal was prob. that sent in 385 by Pope *Siricius to Himerius, Bp. of Tarragona. The earliest influential collection was that made in about 520 by *Dionysius Exiguus. About 850 appeared the '*False Decretals' (q.v.), containing many forged letters of popes before Siricius. After *Gratian had systematized existing *canon law in his 'Decretum' (*c.*1140), authoritative collections of later decretals were published by *Gregory IX (1234), *Boniface VIII (1298), and *Clement V (1317).

Decretales ineditae saeculi XII, ed. from the papers of the late Walther Holtzmann by S. Chodorow and C. Duggan (Monumenta Iuris Canonici, Series B, vol. 4; Vatican City, 1982). A. van Hove, Commentarium Lovaniense in Codicem Iuris Canonici, vol. 1, tom. 1 (Mechlin and Rome, 1928; 2nd edn., 1945). C. Duggan, Twelfth-Century Decretal Collections and their Importance in English History (1963). G. Le Bras, C. Lefebvre, and J. Rambaud in G. Le Bras, Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en Occident, 7: L'Âge classique 1140–1378: Sources et théorie du droit (1965). G. Fransen, Les Décrétals et les Collections de Décrétales (Typologie des Sources du Moyen Âge Occidental, 2; Turnhout, 1972). Studies in the Collections of Twelfth-Century Decretals from the papers of the late Walther Holtzmann, ed., rev., and tr. C. R. and M. C. Cheney (Monumenta Iuris Canonici, Series B, vol. 3; Vatican City, 1979). A. Van Hove in CE 4 (1908), pp. 670–3, s.v.; C. Duggan in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 707–9, s.v. See also bibl. to DIONYSIUS EXIGUUS and FALSE DECRETALS.

Decretals, False. See FALSE DECRETALS.

Decretum Gelasianum. An early Latin document, handed down most frequently under the name of Pope *Gelasius (492–6), but in some MSS as the work of *Damasus (366–84) or *Hormisdas (514–23), containing inter alia a Latin list of the Books of the Bible. Acc. to E. von Dobschütz, it is not a Papal work at all, but a private compilation which was composed in Italy (but not at *Rome) in the early 6th cent. Other scholars, while accepting this date, think it originated in Gaul. The document is in five parts, dealing with: (1) Christ and the Holy Spirit; (2) the Canonical Scriptures; (3) the Roman Church and its dependent sees; (4) the orthodox Councils and Fathers; (5) the 'Books to be Received' (works of the Fathers) and the *Apocryphal writings (biblical and patristic). The last item (De libris recipiendis et non recipiendis) gives the usual title to the whole work.

Text in J. P. Migne, PL 19. 787–94 (pts. 1–3) and 59. 157–64 (pts. 2–5). Crit. edn. by E. von Dobschütz (TU 38, Heft 4; 1912). J. *Chapman, OSB, 'On the Decretum Gelasianum De Libris recipiendis et non recipiendis', R. Bén. 30 (1913), pp. 187–207 and 315–33. E. *Schwartz, 'Zum Decretum Gelasianum', ZNTW 29 (1930), pp. 161–8. Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 626 f. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 722–47, s.v. 'Gélasien (Décret)', with extensive bibl.; G. Bardy in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 3 (1938), cols. 579–90, s.v. 'Gélase (Décret de)'.

Dedication, Jewish Feast of the. The feast instituted by *Judas Maccabaeus in 165 BC, to commemorate the purification of the Temple and its altar after their defilement by *Antiochus Epiphanes (1 Macc. 4: 59; 2 Macc. 10: 6). It was ordered to be observed on the 25th day of Chislev each year and kept for 8 days. A special feature of the feast, apart from the fact that it could be celebrated outside Jerusalem, was the lighting of lamps; hence it was sometimes called the 'Feast of the Lights'. Modern Jews observe the feast as 'Hanukkah'; it falls in late Nov. or Dec. The only reference to it in the NT is at Jn. 10: 22.

O. S. Rankin, Origins of the Festival of Hanukkah (1930). S. Zeitlin, 'Hanukkah, its Origin and Significance', JQR NS 29 (1938), pp. 1–36; J. Morgenstern, 'The Chanukkah Festival and the Calendar of Ancient Israel', Hebrew Union College Annual, 20 (1947), pp. 1–136, and 21 (1948), pp. 365–496. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 420–25, with bibl. p. 460; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 510–14, with bibl. p. 552. M. D. Herr in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 7 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1280–8, s.v. 'Hanukkah'.

dedication of churches. The earliest recorded instance of the dedication of a Christian church is that of the cathedral at Tyre in 314, described in the 'oratio panegyrica' of *Eusebius (HE 10. 3 f.). There is a 7th-cent. formulary in the *Gelasian Sacramentary consisting of prayers, blessings, and sprinkling with *holy water. In the following cents. the ceremonies increased in number, and by the 13th cent. the ritual had reached in essentials the form used until modern times, as is witnessed by the '*Pontifical' of *Durandus. It already contained the six principal parts—the blessing outside, the blessing in the middle of the church, the preparation for the consecration of the altar, the actual consecration of the altar, the procession of the relics, and the blessing of the altar vessels, ornaments, etc.—followed finally by the Mass. The 1977 Ordo Dedicationis Ecclesiae et Altaris places the whole ceremony within the Mass. The first part consists of the solemn entry into the church (or *introit), sprinkling the walls with holy water, scriptural readings, homily, and Creed; the second part includes the actual rite of dedication, i.e. the *Litany of the Saints, the placing of the relics of a saint under the altar, if there are any relics to be so placed (see ALTAR), the Prayer of Dedication, the anointing of the altar and walls of the church (in 12 or 4 places) with *chrism, followed by their censing, and the lighting of candles at the altar and on the walls; the third part consists of the central portion of the Mass, ending with the inauguration of the Blessed Sacrament chapel, blessing, and dismissal.

Acc. to modern practice the dedication of churches is restricted to buildings that are exclusively and permanently set aside for public worship; it may normally be performed only by a bishop, though in very extraordinary circumstances a priest may be mandated to act. Other buildings, incl. private and public chapels, may be blessed by a simple rite. The walls are sprinkled with holy water at the beginning of the Mass, and after the Creed the altar is blessed and censed. In non-permanent buildings, altars, even if movable, may also be blessed. This rite may be performed by a priest.

The distinction between the dedication and blessing of churches and altars in current RC liturgical texts seems to replace the earlier distinction between their consecration and blessing. Consecration came to require the deposition of relics, but, as a letter of Pope *Vigilius (*c.*538: J. P. Migne, PL 69. 18) makes clear, the celebration of Mass was the essential element in the hallowing of a church, other items being of secondary importance. Although dedication is intended to be permanent, acc. to canon law (CIC (1983), can. 1222), where a church cannot be used for worship, the diocesan bishop may allow it to be used for a secular but not unbecoming purpose. Desecrated churches must be reconciled by a special rite.

The Feast of the Dedication is the annual celebration of the day of the dedication of the church, and is to be kept, strictly speaking, only by consecrated churches. It is to be distinguished, of course, from the Patronal Feast. The first recorded observance of such a feast is that of the dedication of the Church of the *Anastasis (see HOLY SEPULCHRE) in *Jerusalem, described by *Egeria. In 1536 the English Convocations ordered that the Feast of Dedication 'throughout this realm' should be kept on the first Sunday in October, and this practice is commonly followed in England where the date of consecration is not known, though no such feast is contained in the calendar of the BCP. The Revised Book of 1928, however, proposed the first Sunday in October, 'if the day of consecration be not known'. In the RC Church the dedication festival of the *Lateran is kept throughout the Church on 9 Nov.; the observance of those of the other three principal Roman *basilicas, those of Sts Peter and Paul (S. Pietro in Vaticano and S. Paolo fuori le mura; 18 Nov.) and *Santa Maria Maggiore (5 Aug.), is optional.

E. *Martène, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, 3 (1702), pp. 232–327, Lib. 2, cap. 13. R. W. Muncey, A History of the Consecration of Churches and Churchyards (1930). D. Stiefenhofer, Die Geschichte der Kirchweihe vom 1. 7. Jahrhundert, (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, 3. Reihe, No. 8; 1909). J. Baudot, OSB, La Dédicace des églises (1909). S. Benz, OSB, 'Zur Geschichte der römischen Kirchenweihe nach den Texten des 6. bis 7. Jahrhunderts', in H. Emonds, OSB (ed.), Enkainia: Gesammelte Arbeiten zum 800jährigen Weihengedächtnis der Abteikirche Maria Laach (Düsseldorf, 1956), pp. 62–109. M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du Haut Moyen Age, 4 (SSL 28; 1956), pp. 359–84 ('La Dédicace des églises à Rome et la déposition des reliques'). C. Vogel and R. Elze (eds.), Le Pontifical romano-germanique du dixième siècle, 1 (ST 226; 1963), pp. 82–194. W. H. *Frere, Pontifical Services Illustrated from Miniatures of the XVth and XVIth Centuries (*Alcuin Club Collections, 3 and 4; 1901), 'Pontifical Services not included in the Book of Common Prayer. 1. The Consecration of Churches', vol. 1, pp. 1–54, and vol. 2, pls. vii and xi, figs. 33 and 34. J. Wickham Legg (ed.), English Orders for Consecrating Churches in the Seventeenth Century, together with Forms for the Consecration of Churchyards, the First Stone of a Church, the Reconciliation of a Church and the Consecration of Altar Plate (HBS 41; 1911). J. *Wordsworth, On the Rite of Consecration of Churches, especially in the Church of England . . . together with the Form of Prayer and Order of Ceremonies in use in the Diocese of Salisbury (CHS Tract 52; 1899). J. D. Crichton, The Dedication of a Church (Dublin, 1980). P. Jounel in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en prière, 1, new edn. by I. H. Dalmais and others [1984], pp. 223–34; Eng. tr. (1987), pp. 215–25, with further bibl. P. de Puniet in DACL 4 (1921), cols. 374–404, s.v. 'Dédicace des églises', with refs. J. E. Swallow in PBD (1912), pp. 241–4, s.v. 'Consecration of Churches and Churchyards'. F. Arnold-Forster, Studies in Church Dedications or England's Patron Saints (3 vols., 1899); F. Bond, Dedications and Patron Saints of English Churches (1914); K. E. *Kirk, Church Dedications of the Oxford Diocese (Oxford, 1946).

de Dominis, Marco Antonio (*c.*1560–1624), 'Spalatrensis', Abp. of Spalato. He entered the Society of Jesus as a youth, became famous as a professor of mathematics at Padua and of rhetoric and logic at Brescia, left the *Jesuits in 1596, and was Abp. of Spalato and Primate of Dalmatia from 1602 to 1616. Political conflicts between Rome and *Venice, to whose territory his see belonged, and personal difficulties with his clergy led him to resign his office and go to England. On his way there he wrote a bitter pamphlet against Rome, Scogli del cristiano naufragio. He was warmly welcomed by *James I, received as a member of the C of E, and made Dean of *Windsor and Master of the Savoy in 1617. In the same year he assisted at the consecration of G. Montaigne (d. 1628) as Bp. of *Lincoln and published the first part of his main work De Republica Ecclesiastica, an attack on the monarchical government of Rome and a defence of national Churches. He edited P. *Sarpi's Historia del Concilio Tridentino (1619), which he dedicated to James I; his anti-papal additions displeased the author. But his pride and avarice soon lost him his English friends, and fearing for his security when negotiations began for the Spanish marriage of Prince *Charles, he sought reconciliation with Rome. He left England in 1622, and now attacked the C of E as violently as formerly the Church of Rome, in Sui Reditus ex Anglia Consilium (1623; Anglican reply by R. *Crakanthorpe, 1625). After the death of Gregory XV, however, he came into conflict with the *Inquisition and was confined to the castle of Sant'Angelo at Rome as a relapsed heretic, where he died soon after.

H. Newland, The Life and Contemporaneous Church History of Antonio de Dominis (1859). D. Cantimori, 'Su M. A. De Dominis', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 49 (1958), pp. 245–58. W. B. Patterson, 'The Peregrinations of Marco Antonio de Dominis, 1616–24', in D. Baker (ed.), Religious Motivation: Biographical and Sociological Problems for the Church Historian (Studies in Church History, 15; Oxford, 1978), pp. 241–57, with bibl. N. Malcolm, De Dominis (1560–1624): Venetian, Anglican, Ecumenist and Relapsed Heretic (1984). Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 558–62. S. Cavazza in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 33 (1987), pp. 642–50, s.v., with full bibl.

deduction. In logic, the process of reasoning whereby a conclusion is reached from an already known or accepted premiss. The opposite process is termed '*induction'.

Deer, Book of. A 9th–10th cent. MS which formerly belonged to the monastery of Deer in Buchan (Aberdeen). It contains a corrupt text of St John's Gospel, with portions of the other Gospels, the *Apostles' Creed, a fragment of a service for the *Visitation of the Sick (with Gaelic rubrics), and a series of grants to the monastery, the last being in a later hand. The Visitation of the Sick agrees in character with the Irish Books of Dimma and Mulling, while the grants throw important light on the social structure of *Scotland at the time. The MS, which was formerly in the library of John Moore, successively Bp. of *Norwich and *Ely (d. 1714), is now in Cambridge University Library (Ii. 6. 32).

Ed. J. Stuart for the Spalding Club (Edinburgh, 1869). K. [H.] Jackson, The Gaelic Notes in the Book of Deer (Osborn Bergin Memorial Lecture, 1970; Cambridge, 1972). K. Hughes, Celtic Britain in the Early Middle Ages: Studies in Scottish and Welsh Sources, posthumously ed. D. Dumville (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1980), pp. 22–37.

Defender of the Faith (Lat. Fidei Defensor). A title conferred at his own request on *Henry VIII in 1521 by Pope *Leo X in recognition of his treatise Assertio Septem Sacramentorum, in which, with the assistance of various leading theologians, he had defended the doctrine of the *seven sacraments against M. *Luther. In 1544 Parliament recognized the style as an official title of the English monarch and it has been borne since that date by all British sovereigns. It may be compared with the titles 'Christianissimus' and 'Catholicus' formerly taken by the kings of France and Spain respectively.

Text of bull conferring title in T. Rymer, Foedera, 13 (1712), pp. 756–8, with facsimile. J. M. Brown, 'Henry VIII's Book, "Assertio Septem Sacramentorum," and the Royal Title of "Defender of the Faith" ', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 8 (1880), pp. 242–61. R. Rex, 'The English Campaign against Luther in the 1520s', ibid., 5th ser. 39 (1989), pp. 85–106. See also studies of Henry VIII, cited s.v.

Defender of the Matrimonial Bond (Lat. Defensor Vinculi Matrimonialis). A person whose duty is to uphold the marriage bond when cases in which the nullity or dissolution of particular marriages is in dispute are heard in the RC ecclesiastical courts. The office was constituted by Pope *Benedict XIV in his *bull 'Dei Miseratione' (3 Nov. 1741).

R. Naz in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 1069–71, s.v. 'Défenseur du lien'; T. J. McNicholas in NCE 4 (1967), p. 717, s.v. 'Defender of the Bond', with further bibl.

Defenestration of Prague. The incident which precipitated the *Thirty Years War. On 23 May 1618 the Bohemian Protestant insurgents broke up a meeting of the Imperial Commissioners in the Hradschin Palace at Prague by throwing two of the Catholic councillors, Wilhelm von Slawata and Jaroslav von Martinitz, and their secretary out of the window.

C. V. Wedgwood, The Thirty Years War (1938), pp. 78–80, with refs. to sources. See also other works cited s.v. THIRTY YEARS WAR.

Defensor (late 7th cent.), monk of Ligugé, near Poitiers. He was the compiler of the 'Liber Scintillarum', an ascetical compilation which had a very wide circulation throughout the Middle Ages, often in a modified form, and was attributed to *Bede and others. The compiler drew on the Bible and on a considerable range of *patristic writers. He marked the extracts with the names of their authors, but sometimes derived them from indirect sources.

'Liber Scintillarum' pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 88. 598–718; crit. edn. by H. M. Rochais, OSB (CCSL 117, 1957, pp. 1–308; also, with Fr. tr., SC 77 and 86, 1961–2). Id. in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 88–90, s.v., with bibl.

de fide. In Catholic theology, a proposition is said to be de fide (or de fide catholica) if it has been expressly declared and defined by the Church to be true and that to contradict it would be heretical. The expression is used e.g. by F. *Suárez and John de *Lugo, and constantly by modern Catholic apologists.

de Foucauld, Charles Eugène (1858–1916), French explorer and 'Hermit of the Sahara'. After an easy and dissipated life as a lieutenant of cavalry, he became seized with a passion for Africa and in 1883–4 undertook a dangerous expedition through Morocco, the results of which he published in the fundamental work, Reconnaissance au Maroc (1888). A period of spiritual unrest followed this expedition, but he was brought back to the Catholic faith under the experienced direction of the Abbé *Huvelin (1886). After making a pilgrimage to the Holy Land in 1888–9, in 1890 he entered the *Trappist monastery of Notre-Dames-des-Neiges, and was sent to the daughter house at Akbès in Syria. Desirous of a life of even greater solitude and austerity, he left the order when the period of his temporary vows was completed in 1897, lived as a servant of the *Poor Clares at *Nazareth and *Jerusalem until 1900, and returned to France to be ordained priest in 1901. A few months later he went to Algeria, where he led a hermit's life, first in the oasis of Beni Abbès and, from 1905, in the still more remote Hoggar Mountains and at the oasis of Tamanrasset. Here, besides studying the language of the Tuaregs and composing dictionaries and translations, he made his chief occupations prayer, penance, and works of charity which won him the admiration and love of the French soldiers as well as of the Muslim desert tribes, though he did not obtain conversions. In 1916 he was assassinated for reasons which remain obscure, but probably in connection with the Holy War of the Senoussi. The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome in 1927.

Although he composed rules for communities of 'Little Brothers' and 'Little Sisters', no companions joined him during his lifetime. In 1933, however, René Voillaume and four other priests, inspired by his writings, settled at El Abiodh Sidi Cheikh, on the edge of the Sahara, and adopted a monastic way of life based on his first rule. They were scattered during the Second World War, but returned in 1945 and with other recruits established themselves in small fraternities which are now to be found in most parts of the world. While maintaining a deeply contemplative element in their lives, these 'Little Brothers of Jesus' seek to conform to the economic and social milieu in which they live; they mostly earn their living, wearing ordinary clothes, and working in factories, farms, fisheries, etc., exercising their influence by sharing the life of those around them. With similar aims, the Little Sisters of the Sacred Heart were founded near Montpellier in 1933, the Little Sisters of Jesus at Touggourt in the Sahara in 1939, to be followed by the Little Brothers and Little Sisters of the Gospel in 1958 and 1965 respectively. In addition, there are associations of priests and lay people inspired by the life of de Foucauld.

Œuvres spirituelles, ed. B. Jacqueline (Paris, 1973 ff.). Earlier selections ed. R. Bazin (ibid., 1923; Eng. tr., 'Meditations of a Hermit', 1930) and ed. D. Barrat (ibid. [1958]). Various collections of his correspondence have been pub., incl. that with the Abbé Huvelin, ed. J.-F. Six (Tournai [1957]). Other collections listed by R. Quesnel (see below). R. Bazin, Charles de Foucauld, explorateur du Maroc, ermite au Sahara (1921; Eng. tr., 1923). M. Carrouges, Charles de Foucauld, explorateur mystique (1954; Eng. tr., 1956); id., Foucauld devant l'Afrique du Nord (1961); J.-F. Six, Itinéraire spirituel de Charles de Foucauld (1958); M. M. Preminger, The Sands of Tamanrasset (New York, 1961; London, 1963); R. Quesnel, Charles de Foucauld: Les étapes d'une recherche (1966), with details of his works, pub. and unpub., pp. 297–302. Popular study by E. Hamilton, The Desert my Dwelling (1968). R. Aubert in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 1394–1402, s.v. 'Foucauld, Charles-Eugène de'.

On the Little Brothers, see R. Voillaume, Au cœur des masses: la vie religieuse des Petits Frères du Père de Foucauld (1952; Eng. adaptation as Seeds of the Desert, 1955). On the Little Sisters, G. Rocca, SSP, in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 1620–2, s.v. 'Piccole Sorelli di Gesù', cols. 1624 f., s.v. 'Piccole Sorelle del Sacro Cuore', and cols. 1625 f., s.v. 'Piccole Sorelli del Vangelo'.

de Groot, Hugo. See GROTIUS, HUGO.

De Haeretico Comburendo. The Latin title of the Suppressions of Heresy Act 1400, passed in 1401, which was the first step taken by Parliament to suppress *Lollardy. By it persons holding heretical views were to be arrested and tried by canon law. If the diocesan pronounced sentence of heresy, they were to be handed over to the secular courts, who would 'cause [them] to be burnt that such punishment may strike fear to the minds of others'. Its provisions were not altogether new. It had long been the custom that after degradation by an ecclesiastical council the state carried out the penalty of burning prescribed by canon law, and the execution of the Lollard William *Sawtrey was hurried through before the passing of this Act to maintain the principle. The Act was repealed by *Henry VIII, revived by *Mary, and finally repealed in 1559 by the Act of *Supremacy 1558 under *Elizabeth I.

Eng. tr. of text in Gee and Hardy, no. 42, pp. 133–7; repr. in Bettenson, pp. 251–5. F. W. *Maitland, Roman Canon Law in the Church of England (1898), pp. 158–79 ('The Deacon and the Jewess'), esp. pp. 176–9. K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity [1953], pp. 149–56.

de Hauranne, Duvergier. See SAINT-CYRAN, ABBÉ DE.

deification (Gk. θέωσις or θεοποίησις), 'becoming God', the normal term for the transforming effect of *grace in Greek patristic and E. *Orthodox theology. The only explicit biblical support for the notion of deification is provided by 2 Pet. 1: 4 ('that you might be partakers of the Divine nature'), but it is closely allied to the Pauline doctrine that through the Spirit we are sons of God (cf. Rom. 8) and to the Johannine doctrine of the indwelling of the Holy Trinity (cf. Jn. 14–17). St *Irenaeus develops the idea that as God shared our life in the Incarnation, so we are destined to share the Divine life and 'become what he is' (Adv. Haer. 5, praef.). *Clement of Alexandria links this conception with the *Platonic ideal of assimilation to God, ὁμοίωσις θεῷ. The concept of deification involves the belief that through grace man can overcome the effects of the *Fall and acquire 'Divine' attributes, notably incorruptibility and immortality, but its central tenet is that God through the Incarnation of His Son has called men to share the Divine life in the Son. As St *Athanasius put it, 'the Word became flesh . . . that we, partaking of His Spirit, might be deified (θεοποιηθῆναι)' (De Decretis, 14), or *Cyril of Alexandria: 'For we have all become partakers of Him, and have Him in ourselves through the Spirit. For this reason we have become partakers of the divine nature and are called sons' (In Joan. 9). In the W. such language became less popular. It was retained in the E. and the traditional teaching received its definitive formulation in the work of St *Gregory Palamas, who held that man can be united with the Divine energies, though not with the Divine essence. Although the language of deification is less prominent in W. theology, it remained in liturgical prayers and in the teaching of the mystics where it led to suspicions of *pantheism. The patristic revival in the *Oxford Movement led to a recovery of the concept of deification.

J. Gross, La Divinisation du Chrétien d'après les pères grecs (1938); V. *Lossky, Vision de Dieu (Bibliothèque Orthodoxe; Neuchâtel, 1962; Eng. tr., 1963); M. Lot-Borodine, La Déification de l'homme selon la doctrine des pères grecs (Bibliothèque œcuménique, 9; 1970). G. I. Mantzaridis, The Deification of Man: St Gregory Palamas and the Orthodox Tradition (Crestwood, NY, 1984; Eng. tr. of a work orig. pub. in Gk. in 1963). G. Bonner, 'Augustine's Conception of Deification', JTS NS 37 (1986), pp. 369–86. A. Louth, 'Manhood into God: The Oxford Movement, the Fathers and the Deification of Man', in K. Leech and R. [D.] Williams (eds.), Essays Catholic and Radical (1983), pp. 70–80. Brief account of the doctrine in the C of E by A. M. Allchin, Participation in God (1988).

Deiniol, St (d. *c.*584), Welsh saint. He is honoured as the founder of the monastery of *Bangor Iscoed and is alleged to have been consecrated first Bp. of Bangor by St *Dubricius in 516, but very little is known of him. Among the Welsh churches dedicated to him is that at Hawarden in Clwyd. St Deiniol's Library, Hawarden, a residential library for students in the arts, was founded by W. E. *Gladstone in 1896, and of the 100,000 books, some 30,000 are from Gladstone's own collection. Feast day, 11 Sept.

Brief note with refs. by C. Hole in DCB 1 (1877), p. 802, s.v.; T. F. Tout in DNB 14 (1888), pp. 18 f., s.v. 'Daniel'.

Deir Balyzeh Fragments. See DER BALYZEH FRAGMENTS.

Deism (from Lat. Deus, 'God'). The term, orig. interchangeable with *Theism (q.v.), i.e. belief in one Supreme Being as opposed to *atheism and polytheism, is now generally restricted to the system of natural religion which was first developed in England in the late 17th and 18th cents. Among its precursors are P. *Charron, J. Bodin (*c.*1530–96), and esp. Lord *Herbert of Cherbury (q.v.), who in his De Veritate (1624) set out five truths common to all religions. J. *Locke, though himself objecting to the title of 'Deist', also profoundly influenced subsequent developments through his Reasonableness of Christianity (1695). The classic exposition of Deism is J. *Toland's Christianity not Mysterious (1696), which argues against revelation and the supernatural altogether. S. *Clarke, in his Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God (1704–6), distinguished four classes of Deists. For the first, God is only the Creator, with no further interest in the world; the second group admit a Divine Providence, but only in the material, not in the moral and spiritual, order; the third believe in certain moral attributes of God, but not in a future life; and the fourth accept all the truths of natural religion, including belief in a life to come, but reject revelation. A. *Collins's Discourse on Freethinking (1713) argued that freedom of thought was sufficient for the discovery of truth, while the authority of the biblical records was doubtful. M. *Tindal in Christianity as Old as Creation (1730) maintained that the religion of nature is the common element of all creeds. As it developed, the negative elements in Deism received greater emphasis. Belief in Divine Providence, as well as in rewards and punishments, was gradually abandoned. The chief mark of later Deism was belief in a Creator God whose further Divine intervention in His creation was rejected as derogatory to His omnipotence and unchangeableness.

Deism, which was never widely accepted in this country, had a great influence in *France, where *Voltaire, J.-J. *Rousseau, and the *Encyclopaedists were its chief exponents. In Germany the movement became widespread during the reign of Frederick II of Prussia; Tindal's work, which was translated by J. L. Schmidt in 1741, was drawn upon by H. S. *Reimarus, whose fragments were published by G. E. *Lessing (1773–8); I. *Kant's Die Religion innerhalb der Grenzen der blossen Vernunft (1793) states the Deist position from the point of view of transcendental Idealism.

Deism, which by its separation of the Creator from His creatures undermined all personal religion, soon found vigorous critics. Among its most influential refutations was Bp. J. Butler's Analogy of Religion (1736), which argued that the difficulties in the way of accepting Revealed Religion are no more formidable than those confronting the advocate of the Natural Religion proposed by Deism.

J. Leland, A View of the Principal Deistical Writers (2 vols., 1754–6); G. V. Lechler, Geschichte des englischen Deismus (2 vols., 1841); A. S. Farrar, A Critical History of Free Thought (*Bampton Lectures, 1862); L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 1 (1876), chs. 2–4, pp. 74–277, with bibl. pp. 276 f. H. M. Morais, Deism in Eighteenth Century America (New York, 1934). H. Reventlow, Bibelautorität und Geiste der Moderne (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 30; 1980), pp. 470–671; Eng. tr., The Authority of the Bible and the Rise of the Modern World (1984), pp. 289–410. R. E. Sullivan, John Toland and the Deist Controversy: A Study in Adaptations (1982). C. Gestrich in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 392–406, s.v.

Deissmann, Adolf (1866–1937), Protestant theologian. In 1897 he became professor of the NT at Heidelberg, and in 1908 at Berlin. He did distinguished pioneer work in biblical philology, making full use of the material from the recently discovered *papyri. His many writings include two series of Bibelstudien (1895, 1897; Eng. tr. as Bible Studies, 1901), Licht vom Osten (1908; Eng. tr. as Light from the Ancient East, 1910), and The Religion of Jesus and the Faith of Paul (1923). In 1930 he edited (in conjunction with G. K. A. *Bell) Mysterium Christi, a collection of papers on Christology by British and German theologians. He also took a prominent part in the *Ecumenical Movement.

To mark his 60th birthday, there appeared a Festgabe für Adolf Deissmann (Tübingen, 1927), with a portrait. E. Plümacher in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 406–8, s.v. with further refs.

de La Bigne, Marguerin (*c.*1546–89), French patristic scholar. His chief work was Sacra Bibliotheca Sanctorum Patrum (8 vols., 1575; index vol., 1579), in which a vast number of patristic works were published, some of them for the first time.

J. P. Migne, PL 81. 209–12 ('Epistola Dedicatoria').

de Lagarde, Paul Anton. See LAGARDE, PAUL ANTON DE.

de la Taille, Maurice (1872–1933), *Jesuit theologian. A native of Semblançay, he was educated at St Mary's College, Canterbury, where he entered the Society of Jesus in 1890. From 1905 to 1916 he taught theology at the Catholic university of Angers, and from 1916 to 1918 was military chaplain to the Canadian army. From 1919 onwards he taught dogmatic theology at the *Gregorian university at Rome. His principal work, Mysterium Fidei (1921; Eng. tr. of first 2 of the 3 books, 2 vols., 1941–50), is an original and comprehensive study of the Mass. Divided into three books, dealing with the Sacrifice once offered by Christ Himself, with the Mass as the Sacrifice of the Church, and with the Eucharist as a Sacrament, its dominating thought is the unity of the Redeemer's sacrifice begun in the oblation of the Last Supper, consummated in the Passion, and continued in the Mass. Acc. to de la Taille there is only one real immolation, that on Calvary, to which the Supper looks forward and on which the Mass looks back. He uses a wealth of material, chiefly patristic and scholastic, to support his thesis, and to defend his doctrine against theologians who hold that there must be a real immolation in the Mass. In several minor writings occasioned by this controversy, among them The Last Supper and Calvary (1924) and The Mystery of Faith and Human Opinion (1930), the author defended himself against his critics.

J. Lebreton, SJ, 'Le Père Maurice de la Taille', Rech. S.R. 24 (1934), pp. 5–11; B. Leeming, SJ, 'A Master Theologian: Father Maurice de la Taille', Month, 163 (1934), pp. 31–40. M. Lepin, L'Idée du sacrifice de la messe d'après les théologiens depuis l'origine jusqu'à nos jours (1926), pp. 659–720. For his work on *grace and the whole supernatural order, see R. Del Colle, Christ and the Spirit: Spirit-Christology in Trinitarian Perspective (New York and Oxford, 1994), esp. pp. 64–90. Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 388 f., s.v. 'La Taille'. M. J. O'Connell, SJ, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 726 f., s.v.

Delegates, Court of. In England, under the Submission of the Clergy Act 1533 commissioners were appointed to hear, and pronounce final sentence upon, appeals from the Archbishops' courts, which until the passing, in Mar. 1533, of the Ecclesiastical Appeals Act 1532 had gone to Rome. These commissioners came to be known as the Court of Delegates, even though a fresh commission, consisting usually of three puisne judges and four civilians, was appointed for each separate case. The powers of the Court were transferred to the King in Council in 1832, and in 1833 its place was taken by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

H. C. Rothery (ed.), 'Introduction with Appendix to the Return of all Appeals in Causes of Doctrine and Discipline made to the High Court of Delegates' as Hist. App. 9 to the Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Constitution and Working of the Ecclesiastical Courts [Cd. 3760], pp. 253–66 of the MS pagination. The best historical account of the court is that drawn up by W. *Stubbs for the Hist. App. 1, ibid., pp. 46–9 (pr. among the Parliamentary Papers, 1883, 24, pp. 120–3 of the MS pagination). G. I. O. Duncan, The High Court of Delegates (Cambridge Studies in English Legal History, 1971).

Delehaye, Hippolyte (1859–1941), *Bollandist. A native of Antwerp, he entered the Society of Jesus (*Jesuits) in 1879. After studying philosophy at Louvain (1879–82), teaching mathematics at the Collège St-Barbe at Ghent (1882–6), and studying theology at Innsbruck (1886–7), he settled in Brussels in 1887. In 1891 he joined the Bollandists and for the rest of his life was actively engaged in hagiographical studies. In 1912 he became President of the Bollandists.

Delehaye contributed regularly to the Acta Sanctorum* [AASS] from 1894 until his death. He was joint editor of, and among the principal contributors to, the Propylaeum ad AASS Novembris (1902), the AASS, Nov. 3 (1910), Nov. 4 (1928), and Nov. 2 (2) (1931), and the Propylaeum ad AASS Decembris (1940); and for Nov. 2 (2) he prepared (with H. *Quentin) the important text and study of the *Hieronymian Martyrology. Under the influence of C. Smedt he undertook the cataloguing of scattered hagiographical MSS (Bibliotheca Hagiographica Graeca, 1895), and he assisted in the cataloguing of hagiographical MSS in various important libraries. His books, all based on wide erudition but many of them directed to a non-specialized public, include Les Légendes hagiographiques (1905; Eng. tr., 1907), Les Légendes grecques des saints militaires (1909), Les Origines du culte des martyrs (1912), Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921; posthumous rev. edn., 1966), Les Saints Stylites (1923), Sanctus (1927), and Étude sur le Légendier Romain (1936). He was also a constant contributor to the Analecta Bollandiana.

Collection of his articles orig. pub. outside Bollandist sources to mark the 25th anniversary of his death under the title Mélanges d'Hagiographie grecque et latine (Subsidia Hagiographica, 42; 1966). L'Ancienne Hagiographie Byzantine (lectures given in 1935), ed. B. Joassart and X. Lequeux (ibid. 73; 1991), with list of his works, pp. xxi–xxxvii (240 items). 'Le R. P. Hippolyte Delehaye', Anal. Boll. 60 (1942), pp. i–lii, incl. list of works and refs. to other notices; repr., with additions, in P. Peeters, SJ, L'Œuvre des Bollandistes (2nd edn.; Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques. Mémoires. Collection in-8°, 54, fasc. 5; 1961), pp. 103–49. Eng. tr. of memoir by Peeters in D. Attwater's tr. of Delehaye's Legends of the Saints (1962), pp. 187–244. R. Aubert, 'Le Père H. Delehaye et le Cardinal Mercier', Anal. Boll. 100 (1982), pp. 740–80, with docs.

de Lisle, Ambrose Lisle March Phillipps (1809–78), English RC writer. Born of Anglican parents, he was converted to Roman Catholicism in 1824. In 1835 he gave 230 acres of Charnwood Forest to the *Trappist Order for the building of the monastery of Mount St Bernard and in 1838 founded the 'Association of Universal Prayer for the Conversion of England'. Over much of his life he was active in furthering reunion between the C of E and Rome, and was on friendly terms with the leaders of the *Oxford Movement. In 1857 he joined in founding the 'Association for Promoting the Unity of Christendom' (*APUC), which included Anglicans and Orthodox as well as RCs, withdrawing, however, when it was condemned by Rome in 1864. In 1862 he assumed the name of de Lisle (signing prior to that date Ambrose Lisle Phillipps).

E. S. Purcell, Life and Letters of Ambrose Phillipps de Lisle (2 vols., 1900). M. Pawley, Faith and Family: The Life and Circle of Ambrose Phillipps de Lisle (Norwich, 1993). T. Cooper in DNB 14 (1888), pp. 321 f.

Delitzsch, Franz Julius (1813–90), OT scholar and orientalist. A native of Leipzig, where he taught for some years, he later held professorships at Rostock (1846–50), Erlangen (1850–67), and Leipzig (1867–90). Of a pietistic *Lutheran background and Jewish descent, he esp. sought to combat anti-Semitism and foster the conversion of the Jews, editing a periodical Saat auf Hoffnung from 1863, founding a Jewish missionary college, establishing at Leipzig an 'Institutum Judaicum' (1886; later 'Institutum Delitzschianum') and translating the NT into Hebrew (pub. 1877). He published a long series of Commentaries on the OT, conservative and practical in tendency, but displaying increasing understanding of the critical view of the OT. In 1857 he issued a commentary on Heb. (Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1868–70). He also wrote extensively on Rabbinic subjects, edited in conjunction with S. Baer the Heb. text of the OT (except Ex.–Deut.; 1861–97), and published some devotional works. As a final apology he issued Der tiefe Graben zwischen alter und moderner Theologie: Ein Bekenntnis (1888).

D. W. Volck (ed.), Theologische Briefe der Professoren Delitzsch und von Hofmann (1891); O. Eissfeldt and K. H. Rengstorf (eds.), Briefwechsel zwischen Franz Delitzsch und Wolf Wilhelm Graf Baudissin 1866 1890 (Abhandlungen der Rheinisch-Westfälischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, 43; Opladen [1973]). 'Memorial Tribute' by S. I. Curtiss (Edinburgh, 1891), with bibl. K. H. Rengstorf, Die Delitzsch'sche Sache: Ein Kapitel preussischer Kirchen- und Fakultätspolitik im Vormärz (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, 19; 1967). S. Wagner, Franz Delitzsch: Leben und Werke (Beiträge zur evangelischen Theologie, 80; 1978). J. W. Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in the Nineteenth Century: England and Germany (1984), pp. 111–20. A. Köhler in PRE (3rd edn.), 4 (1898), pp. 565–70; F. Vigouroux in Dict. Bibl. 2 (1899), cols. 1341 f., with complete list of Delitzsch's writings.

Delitzsch, Friedrich (1850–1922), German Assyriologist. He was the son of F. J. *Delitzsch, and held professorships at Leipzig (1878), Breslau (1893), and Berlin (1899). He published various works on oriental subjects, among them Prolegomena eines neuen hebräisch-aramaischen Wörterbuchs zum Alten Testament (1886), Assyrische Grammatik (1889), and Geschichte Babyloniens und Assyriens (1891). His most celebrated book, however, was his Babel und Bibel (2 parts, 1902–3; Eng. tr., 1903), based on lectures delivered before the Emp. Wilhelm II, which claimed that several OT narratives were of Babylonian origin and that Judaism was essentially dependent on Babylonian culture. He reviewed the controversy aroused by this book in Babel und Bibel: Ein Rückblick und Ausblick (1904). Among his later writings, all hostile to Christian orthodoxy, were Mehr Licht (1907) and Die grosse Täuschung (2 vols., 1920–1).

Obituary notice by I. M. Price in Beiträge zur Assyriologie, 10, Heft 2 (1927), pp. i–xii [in Eng.], with refs. E. G. Kraeling, The Old Testament since the Reformation (1955), pp. 149–63.

della Robbia, Florentine family of artists. The two most celebrated are:

(1) Luca della Robbia (1399/1400–1482). His early works were sculptures, of which the singing and dancing boys (1431–8), done in marble, for the organ gallery of the cathedral of Florence, is the most famous (now in the Museo dell'Opera del Duomo). His principal work in bronze is the north sacristy door of the cathedral (1446–69), which is divided into several panels representing the Madonna, St John the Baptist, the Evangelists, and Doctors of the Church. From 1442 he began to work chiefly in enamelled terracotta, a technique which he greatly improved. These reliefs show most often white figures on a pale-blue ground, framed by brilliantly coloured borders of fruits and flowers. His Madonnas of the Rose-Garden and of the Apple in the Bargello at Florence are of exquisite charm and real dignity, and the Chapel of the Crucifix at San Miniato, the Tabernacles at Impruneta, and other decorative works, belong to the finest specimens of Italian enamelled terracotta.

(2) Andrea della Robbia (1435–1525), nephew of Luca. He continued the tradition of his uncle and ran a large and highly productive family workshop. He did the fine series of medallions with infants for the front of the Foundling Hospital at Florence (1487) and a large number of Madonnas. Many of these are of great charm. The most elaborate work he executed was the series of altars for the Franciscan church at La Verna.

A. Marquand, Luca della Robbia (Princeton Monographs in Art and Archaeology, 3; 1913); id., Andrea della Robbia (2 vols., ibid. 11; 1922). On other members of the family, see id., Giovanni della Robbia (ibid. 8; 1920); id., The Brothers of Giovanni della Robbia (ibid. 13; 1928), all with illustrations and detailed bibl. M. Cruttwell, Luca and Andrea della Robbia and their Successors (1902). L. Planiscig, Luca della Robbia (Florence, 1948); J. Pope-Hennessy, Luca della Robbia (Oxford, 1980), with full bibl. C. Seymour, Jun., Sculpture in Italy 1400 to 1500 (Pelican History of Art, 1966), pp. 92–7, 119–21, and 141 f. (Luca), and 166 f. (Andrea).

de Lubac, Henri. See LUBAC, HENRI DE.

Deluge, the. See FLOOD, THE.

de Lugo, John. See LUGO, JOHN DE.

de Maistre, Joseph (1753–1821), French *Ultramontane writer. He was born at Chambéry in Savoy and educated by the *Jesuits. At first influenced by the 18th-cent. rationalists, after the Revolution of 1789 he became a reactionary, who saw in the Church the safeguard of political stability. In 1802 he was appointed Sardinian minister at St Petersburg, where he remained until 1817, when he returned to Savoy. In his principal work, Du pape (1819), he argued that the only true basis of society lay in authority, which took the double form of spiritual authority vested in the Papacy and temporal authority committed to human kings. The religious basis of history, which was to be understood as throughout under the direction of Divine Providence, was manifested in the redemptive power of suffering and blood. His other writings include De l'Église gallicane (1821) and Soirées de St-Pétersbourg, ou Entretiens sur le gouvernement temporel de la Providence (1821). De Maistre has been called the 'Prophet of the Past' (P. S. Ballanche, 1776–1847), but his ideas did much to further the overthrow of *Gallicanism and assist the rise of Ultramontanism (F. R. de *Lamennais, C. R. F. *Montalembert, the First *Vatican Council) in the later 19th cent.

Œuvres (7 vols., Brussels, 1838); Œuvres complètes (14 vols., Lyons, 1884–7), incl. his posthumous works and unpub. correspondence, with 'Notice biographique' by his son, R. de Maistre, in vol. 1, pp. v–xliii, orig. pub. in the latter's edn. of his father's Lettres et opuscules inédits (2 vols., 1851), vol. 1, pp. v–xxvi. Œuvres also ed. J.-L. Darcel and others (Geneva, 1980 ff.). Eng. tr. of selections from his works by J. Lively (London, 1965). F. Vermale, Joseph de Maistre émigré (Société Savoisienne d'Histoire et d'Archéologie, 64; 1927); C. J. Gignoux, Joseph de Maistre, prophète du passé, historien de l'avenir (1963); R. Triomphe, Joseph de Maistre: Étude sur la vie et sur la doctrine d'un matérialiste mystique (Geneva, 1968); R. A. Lebrun, Joseph de Maistre: An Intellectual Militant (Kingston, Ont., and Montreal [1988]), with bibl. C. Latreille, Joseph de Maistre et la papauté (1906); G. Goyau, La Pensée religieuse de Joseph de Maistre (1921); M. Jugie, AA, Joseph de Maistre et l'Église gréco-russe [1922]; E. Dermenghem, Joseph de Maistre mystique (1923; 2nd edn., 1946, repr., 1980). G. Breton, 'Du pape' de Joseph de Maistre: Étude critique (1931). F. Bayle, Les Idées politiques de Joseph de Maistre (1945). I. Berlin, The Crooked Timber of Humanity, ed. H. Hardy (1990), pp. 91–174 ('Joseph de Maistre and the Origins of Fascism' [written by 1960]).

de Marca, Pierre. See MARCA, PIERRE DE.

Demetrius. The name of two persons in the NT. (1) A silversmith of *Ephesus, who led an unsuccessful riot against St *Paul, on the ground that the Apostle's preaching would endanger the trade in silver images (Acts 19: 24 ff.). (2) A disciple commended by St *John, of whom nothing else is known (3 Jn., verse 12).

Demetrius, St (d. 231 or 232), Bp. of *Alexandria from 189. The interest in him centres in his relations to *Origen. As Bp. of Alexandria he began by supporting Origen, whom he recognized as head of the *Catechetical School in the city *c.*202. Later, however, when the Bps. of *Jerusalem and *Caesarea allowed him to preach in spite of his being a layman, Demetrius recalled him to Alexandria and censured his conduct. At a synod in 231 he finally banished him for having been ordained priest irregularly at Caesarea, and shortly afterwards deprived him of the priesthood. It is possible that there were doctrinal reasons behind the breach between Origen and Demetrius. He is greatly venerated in the Coptic Church. Feast day, in E., 26 Oct.; in W., 9 Oct.

*Eusebius, HE 5. 22; 6. 3, 8, 19, and 26. Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 194 f.; L. *Duchesne, Histoire ancienne de l'Église, 1 (1906), pp. 341–6. Brief note, with refs., by B. F. *Westcott in DCB 1 (1877), p. 803; V. Grumel in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 198 f., both s.v.

Demiurge. This, the English form of a Greek word (δημιουργός) meaning 'craftsman', was used of the Divine Being by *Plato in his account of the formation of the visible world, and so by Greek Christian writers simply of God as the Creator of all things. The *Gnostics used the word disparagingly of the inferior deity to whom they ascribed the origin of the material universe, distinguishing him from the supreme God. In its English form the word is commonly used in reference to this Gnostic doctrine.

demythologizing (Ger. Entmythologisierung). A term employed from 1941 by R. *Bultmann (q.v.) for his proposal to interpret the NT critically in order to express the theological meaning of its mythological language. Bultmann claimed that the biblical three-storied universe, belief in *miracles, *angels, demons, etc., was incredible in the modern world, and that the Gospel message could be freed from these false stumbling-blocks and expressed instead through an appropriate language, descriptive of human existence, such as that which he himself borrowed from M. *Heidegger's Sein und Zeit (1927; Eng. tr., 1962). In the ensuing controversy, the roots of Bultmann's position were often lost sight of in disputes about the definition of myth and modernity, and, despite his insistence that he was interpreting rather than simply eliminating myth, his slogan has come to be attached to a variety of reductionist interpretations of Christianity.

R. Bultmann, 'Neues Testament und Mythologie', incl. in his Offenbarung und Heilsgeschehen (Beiträge zur evangelischen Theologie, Bd. 7; 1941). H. W. Bartsch and others (eds.), Kerygma und Mythos (Theologische Forschung, 1–2, 5, 8–9, 19, 23, 30–1, 40, 44, 45, 52, and 56; 1948–75), with repr. of Bultmann's paper, 1, pp. 15–53; Eng. tr. of selections from vol. 1 by R. H. Fuller (1953), with Bultmann's paper pp. 1–44, and bibl. pp. 224–8; of selections from vols. 2–5 by id. (1962), with bibl. pp. 357 f. Revised Eng. tr. of Bultmann's orig. essay by S. M. Ogden in his collection of Bultmann's papers, New Testament and Mythology and Other Basic Writings (Philadelphia, 1984; London, 1985), pp. 1–43. J. Macquarrie, The Scope of Demythologizing (1960). R. A. Johnson, The Origins of Demythologizing: Philosophy and Historiography in the Theology of Rudolf Bultmann (Studies in the History of Religion, 28; Leiden, 1974).

Denifle, Heinrich Seuse (1844–1905), Church historian. Born at Imst in the Tyrol, he entered the *Dominican Order in 1861, was ordained priest in 1866, and taught philosophy and theology at Graz from 1870 to 1880. Called to Rome in 1880 as associate to the General of the Order, he became a collaborator in the projected new edition of the works of St *Thomas Aquinas, travelling all over Europe in search of MSS. In 1883 he was appointed sub-archivist at the *Vatican. In 1885 he founded, with F. *Ehrle, the Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, and in 1887 he was appointed editor of the records of Paris University.

His writings include his monumental Chartularium Universitatis Parisiensis, written in conjunction with A. Chatelain (Paris, 4 vols., 1889–97); several works on the German mystics of the 14th cent., Meister *Eckhart, J. *Tauler, and *Henry Suso; and an unfinished work on M. *Luther and Lutheranism. This last is a brilliant, but wholly unsympathetic, exposition of Luther's teaching and methods, based on a wide study and acute analysis of contemporary sources.

J. P. Kirsch, 'Le R. P. Denifle, OP', RHE 6 (1905), pp. 665–76. A. Walz, OP, 'Analecta denifleana', Antonianum, 32 (1955), pp. 124–40, 220–52, 317–58, with further refs. M. D. *Knowles, 'Denifle and Ehrle', History, 54 (1969), pp. 1–12. O. Spiess, OP, in Dict. Sp. 3 (1954), cols. 238–41; A. Walz, OP, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 221–45.

Denis. See DIONYSIUS.

Denison, George Anthony (1805–96), Archdeacon of Taunton from 1851. Ordained deacon and priest in 1832, he was Vicar of East Brent from 1845 till his death. He was throughout his life a vigorous defender of rigid *High Church principles. Between 1854 and 1858 he was unsuccessfully prosecuted in the civil courts for teaching the doctrine of the *Real Presence in the *Eucharist. From 1839 to 1870 he strongly supported the cause of Church education against the movement for universal and compulsory education in state schools, a cause which was largely lost when the Education Act of 1870 was passed.

G. A. Denison, Notes of My Life, 1805–1878 (1878). L. E. Denison (his niece), Fifty Years at East Brent (1902). J. Coombs, George Anthony Denison: The Firebrand 1805–1896 (1984). J. M. Rigg in DNB, Suppl. 2 (1901), pp. 127–9.

Denmark, Christianity in. After one or two unsuccessful missions to Denmark, the Christian faith gained a firm footing in the 9th cent., when the Danish chief, Harold, was baptized on a visit to *Louis the Pious, the Frankish king, and on his return brought with him St *Anskar. Under Sven I (985–1014) and Cnut the Great (1014–35) Christianity became generally accepted. In 1104 the Church in Denmark was separated from the metropolitan see of Hamburg-Bremen, to which it had been united since the time of St Anskar, and its seven bishops placed under the primacy of the Bp. of *Lund. During the later Middle Ages the bishops acquired considerable temporal power and became correspondingly unpopular.

The Reformation in Denmark took place between 1520 and 1540. The chief events were the formal proclamation of religious freedom at the Diet of Odense in 1527, the adoption of a *Lutheran creed (the Confessio Hafnica) in 1530, the expropriation of the hierarchy and the monasteries in the following years, and the visit of J. *Bugenhagen to set up a Lutheran episcopate and introduce a new liturgy in 1537. The Danish Bible appeared in 1550. Restrictions upon RCs were milder than in other Protestant countries, but in 1624 the death penalty was imposed by royal rescript upon any RC priests found performing their official duties, while the Danske Lov of 1683 ordered that converts to RCism should lose all their property.

In common with the rest of Lutheranism, Danish Christianity suffered from the dry intellectualism of Lutheran 'orthodoxy' in the 17th cent. and experienced the *Pietist reaction in the late 17th and early 18th. A revival of orthodox Lutheranism, in which the Libri Symbolici, or ecclesiastical creeds, were restored to honour, was largely due to N. F. S. *Grundtvig (1783–1872), whose view of Scripture and tradition inclined towards the Catholic standpoint. To him also was due the idea of the Folk High Schools (Folkehöjskoler), which have since proved a strong Christian influence. In contrast to him was S. *Kierkegaard (1813–55), who opposed both the State Church and the harmonizing theology of H. L. *Martensen (q.v.). By laws of 1849 and 1852, which gave complete religious liberty to Denmark, the Evangelical Lutheran Church was officially disestablished, but continued to receive state grants, and remained entirely subordinate to the state in all matters of legislation. In 1947 Parliament legislated for women pastors, despite resistance from all but one of the bishops. A commission to reform the liturgy sat from 1953 to 1963, but its proposals, after experimentation, were not accepted; a further commission was established in 1970, and in 1987 new rites for consecrating bishops and ordaining priests were adopted. About 90 per cent of all Danes are nominally Lutherans, though there is a small RC minority and a number of Baptists. The Lutheran primate, who ordains the other bishops, is the Bp. of Zealand; he resides at Copenhagen, but his cathedral church is at Roskilde. Danish missions abroad began in 1814, and have been established in various parts of the world; their most extensive and successful work has been done in Greenland.

A. Krarup (ed.), Bullarium Danicum: Pavelige Aktstykker Vedrørende Danmark, 1198 1316 (2 halvbind, Copenhagen, 1931–3); Acta Pontificum Danica: Pavelige Akstykker Vedrørende Danmark, 1316–1536, ed. L. Moltesen and others (7 vols., ibid., 1904–43). A. Krarup and W. Norvin (eds.), Acta Processus Litium inter Regem Danorum et Archiepiscopum Lundensem (ibid., 1932). M. C. Gertz (ed.), Vitae Sanctorum Danorum (ibid., 1908–12). L. N. Helveg, Den danske Kirkes Historie (5 vols., 1870); L. P. Fabricius, Danmarks Kirkehistorie (2 vols., 1934–5); H. Koch and others (eds.), Den Danske Kirkes Historie (8 vols., 1950–66). M. S. Lausten, Danmarks Kirkehistorie (1983), with bibl. P. Hartling (ed.), The Danish Church (Denmark in Print and Pictures, Copenhagen [1964]); L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches: A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965). P. G. Lindhardt, Skandinavische Kirchengeschichte seit dem 16. Jahrhundert (Die Kirche in ihrer Geschichte. Ein Handbuch, . . . ed. B. Moeller, Band 3, Lieferung M3; Göttingen [1982]), pp. 236–63, with bibl. pp. 308–10. E. H. Dunkley, The Reformation in Denmark (CHS, 1948), with bibl. J. O. Andersen, Der Reformkatholizismus und die dänische Reformation (1954); M. S. Lausten, Reformationen i Danmark (1987). J. Schnell, Die dänische Kirchenordnung von 1542 und der Einfluss von Wittenberg (1927). M. S. Lausten and L. C. Brøndum in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 300–19, s.v. 'Dänemark'.

Denney, James (1856–1917), Scottish *Free Church theologian. Educated at Glasgow University and Glasgow Free Church College, he was made minister of East Free Church, Broughty Ferry, in 1886. From 1897 till his death he taught theology at the Glasgow Free Church College. In his later years he became actively involved in the administration of the *United Free Church, becoming in 1913 convener of its Central Fund. He also took a prominent part in the movement for reunion with the Established Church of *Scotland. As a theologian he moved doctrinally from a liberal to an evangelical position. In his *Christology he asserted firmly the traditional doctrine of the Person of Christ. He held the Atonement to have a purely substitutionary character. His main works were The Death of Christ (1902), Jesus and the Gospel (1908), The Christian Doctrine of Reconciliation (1917), and editions of

I and II Thessalonians (1892), II Corinthians (1894), and of the Greek text of Romans (1900).

Letters of Principal James Denney to W. Robertson Nicoll, 1893–1917 [1920], with 'Appreciation' by W. R. *Nicoll (pp. xiii–xxvii) and 'Memoirs of a Student', by J. A. Robertson (pp. xxxi–xliii). J. *Moffatt (ed.), Letters of Principal James Denney to his Family and Friends [1922]. T. H. Walker, Principal James Denney, D.D.: A Memoir and a Tribute (1918). J. R. Taylor, God Loved Like That! The Theology of James Denney (1962). A. P. E. Sell, Defending and Declaring the Faith (Exeter and Colorado Springs, Colo. [1987]), pp. 195–220 and 264–71. A. S. *Peake in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 153 f.

de Noailles, Louis Antoine (1651–1729), Abp. of *Paris. Born in the Auvergne, he was educated at the *Jesuit college of Aurillac and then at the Collège du Plessis in Paris. Ordained in 1675, he became Doctor of Theology in 1676, was made Bp. of Cahors in 1679, and translated to Châlons-sur-Marne in 1680. He became Abp. of Paris in 1695 through the influence of Mme de Maintenon. He was created a cardinal by Innocent XII in 1700, and made head of the *Sorbonne in 1710. He was a zealous and devoted pastor, and an ardent reformer of clerical discipline (obligatory residence in seminaries before ordination, annual retreats, courses on moral theology). In accordance with *Gallican ideals, he fostered a renewal of the traditional French liturgical books (Breviary, Missal, Ritual, Ceremonial). He became involved in most of the controversies of the age, notably in 1699 over F. *Fénelon's Maximes des saints. His repeated commendation in 1695 and 1699 of P. *Quesnel's Réflexions morales caused him to be suspected of *Jansenism, even though he condemned certain intrinsic Jansenist doctrines in 1698. A staunch Gallican, by defending the rights of the French bishops in the *Assemblies of the Clergy over which he presided in 1700, 1704, and 1713, he incurred the antagonism of the *Ultramontanes. Similarly his objections to '*Vineam Domini' in 1705 and his opposition to '*Unigenitus' met with widespread disfavour. He formally appealed against the latter in Sept. 1718; though he was forced to sign an acceptance of it in 1728, he had previously prepared a recantation which was circulated later. He published two volumes of pastoral instructions in 1718–19. See also APPELLANTS.

E. de Barthélemy, Le Cardinal de Noailles, évêque de Châlons, archevêque de Paris, d'après sa correspondance inédite, 1651–1728 (1886). M. Fosseyeux, 'Le Cardinal de Noailles et l'administration du diocèse de Paris (1695–1729)', Revue Historique, 114 (1913), pp. 261–84; 115 (1914), pp. 34–54. L. Ceyssens, 'Autour de l'Unigenitus. Le cardinal de Noailles (1651–1728)', Lias, 11 (1984), pp. 169–252; repr. in id. and J. A. G. Tans, Autour de l'Unigenitus (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 76; 1987), pp. 649–733. J. Carreyre in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 678–81, s.v. 'Noailles', with notes on sources.

de Nobili, Robert (1577–1656), *Jesuit missionary. He was born in Rome, entered the order in 1596, and set out for *India in 1603. Observing the religious influence of the Brahmins in Hindu society, he adopted the penitent life-style of a Brahmin Sanyasi in the hope of winning public credibility. In response to objections from his fellow missionaries and from the Abp. of Goa, he defended this strategy in several theological treatises and in canonical proceedings. Once Pope Gregory XV had approved his method in 1623, de Nobili was able to work widely and successfully in S. India. A considerable theologian and linguist, he left writings in Latin, Italian, Portuguese, Sanskrit, Tamil, and Telugu, both on the Christian faith in general and on specific issues arising in India.

Of his works on missiology, written in Latin, that on Indian Customs (dating from 1615), ed., with Eng. tr., by S. Rajamanickam, SJ (Palayamkottai, 1972); on Adaptation (dating from 1619) ed., with Eng. tr., by id. (ibid., 1971). Fr. tr., with notes, of what is called his 'First Apology' (dating from 1610), by P. Dahmen, SJ (Paris, 1931). Various Tamil works ed. S. Rajamanickam, SJ (Tamil Literary Society, Tuticorin, 1963–8). P. Dahmen, SJ, Robert de Nobili S. I.: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Missionsmethode und der Indiologie (Münster, 1924; Fr. tr., Brugge, 1924; Eng. tr. serialized in Catholic Herald of India, 23 (1925; details in Polgár, cited below); V. Cronin, A Pearl to India (1959); S. Rajamanickam, SJ, The First Oriental Scholar (Tirunelveli, 1972); P. R. Bachmann, Roberto Nobili 1577–1656: Ein missionsgeschichtlicher Beitrag zum christlichen Dialog mit Hinduismus (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 32; Rome, 1972). S. Arokiasamy, SJ, Dharma, Hindu and Christian, according to Robert de Nobili (Rome, 1986). Sommervogel, 5 (1894), cols. 1779 f.; Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 578–83. V. Cronin in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 477–9, s.v. 'Nobili, Roberto de'.

Denys. See DIONYSIUS.

deodand (Lat. Deo dandum, 'to be given to God'). In old English law, a personal chattel or thing which had been the cause of the death of a person, and as such was forfeit to the Crown to be applied to pious uses, e.g. given in alms. The law regulating deodands was formally abolished in 1846.

Deo gratias (Lat., 'Thanks be to God'). A liturgical formula in constant use in the services of the W. Church. In the Roman Mass it (or its vernacular version) is said by the people after each of the first two lessons and as a response to *Ite, missa est or other form of dismissal. The Rule of St *Benedict requires its use by the doorkeeper in receiving a stranger or a beggar (cap. 66). During the *Donatist controversy in *Africa it was a mark of orthodoxy as contrasted with the 'Deo laudes' used by the schismatics. Instances are met with of 'Deogratias' as a Christian proper name.

deontology. A term used first by J. Bentham in 1826 for the science of ethics or moral obligation, esp. as distinct from jurisprudence.

deosculatorium (Lat., from deosculor, 'to kiss feelingly'). Another name for the object known as the *pax brede, sometimes used in the *Mass.

Deprecatio Gelasii (Lat., 'Intercession of Gelasius'). A Latin litany for the Church universal (pro ecclesia universali). Both the form and much of the content are of E. origin. The ascription to Pope *Gelasius (492–6) is now generally accepted. The litany appears to have been introduced by him into the Roman Mass, possibly at the place where the *Kyrie became established. The text has come down to us in collections of prayers for private use put together in France in the 9th cent.

B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Le Kyrie de la messe et le Pape Gélase', R. Bén. 46 (1934), pp. 126–44, with crit. text; repr. in Travaux liturgiques, 2 (Louvain, 1962), pp. 116–34. C. Callewaert, 'Les Étapes de l'histoire du Kyrie', RHE 38 (1942), pp. 20–45. P. De Clerck, La 'Prière Universelle' dans les liturgies latines anciennes (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 62; 1977), pp. 166–87, incl. text and full bibl.

De Profundis (Lat., 'Out of the deep'). A title of Ps. 130, from its opening words. The psalm is one of the fifteen '*Gradual Psalms' as well as one of the '*Seven Penitential Psalms'. Its appeal for help from the misery of sin, and its expression of trust in deliverance, have led to its traditional use in the W. Church, esp. in the Office for the Departed. In *Ireland it used to be regularly recited at Mass after the *Last Gospel for the victims of former religious persecution.

H. Thurston, SJ, 'The De Profundis', The Month, 132 (1918), pp. 358–68; repr. in id., Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, SJ (1953), no. 10, pp. 164–77.

de Rancé, Armand-Jean Le Bouthillier. See RANCÉ, ARMAND-JEAN LE BOUTHILLIER DE.

Der Balyzeh Fragments. A few incomplete pages of a Gk. papyrus codex containing liturgical prayers and a Creed (c. 6th cent.), discovered by W. Flinders Petrie and W. Crum at Der Balyzeh (Dair Balaizah), S. of Assiout, in 1907. They throw important light on the history of Christian worship in Egypt, e.g. the existence (cf. the liturgies of St *Serapion and of St *Mark, also Egyptian) of a Eucharistic *Epiclesis before the Words of *Institution. The compilation of the prayers has been variously dated (T. Schermann and P. Drews, *c.*225; F. E. *Brightman, *c.*350; B. *Capelle, *c.575). The Creed has affinities with the short Creed in the Apostolic Tradition of St *Hippolytus. The papyrus is preserved in the *Bodleian Library, MSS Gr. liturg. c. 3(P) and d. 4(P).

Earlier edns. of the text superseded by that of C. H. Roberts and B. Capelle, OSB, An Early Euchologium (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 23; Louvain, 1949). P. E. Kahle, Jun. (ed.), Bala'izah: Coptic texts from Deir Bala'izah in Upper Egypt (2 vols., 1954). J. Van Haelst, 'Une nouvelle reconstruction du papyrus liturgique der Dêr-Balizeh', Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, 45 (1969), pp. 444–55.

de' Ricci, Scipione. see RICCI, SCIPIONE DE'.

de Rossi, Giovanni Battista (1822–94), archaeologist and epigrapher. Born and educated in Rome, he was appointed a Scriptor of the Vatican Library in 1844, Prefect of the Museo Cristiano del Vaticano in 1878, and Secretary of the Pontificia Commissione di Archaeologia Sacra in 1884. In 1841 Giuseppe Marchi, SJ (d. 1860), fired his interest in the Roman *catacombs, to whose excavation and study he devoted the rest of his life. He made systematic use, as none of his predecessors had done, of literary sources (itineraries, martyrologies, the Liber Pontificalis), *iconography, and brick-stamps to find and interpret archaeological data. He put the catacombs into their legal and social context. He examined later materials and contents of rubble, as well as the original galleries and their monuments. He had strong support from *Pius IX, and numerous friends and pupils, including O. *Marucchi and G. Wilpert, continued his work. He contributed much to the study of pagan as well as Christian Rome, and to the preservation of Rome's monuments. At the First *Vatican Council, he used his learning to attest the priority of the *Apostolic See and so to defend *infallibility.

Of primary importance among his many publications were Inscriptiones Christianae Urbis Romae septimo saeculo antiquiores (1, 1861; 2.1, 1888), La Roma sotterranea cristiana (3 vols., 1864–77), Musaici cristiani e saggi dei pavimenti della chiesa di Roma anteriori al secolo XV (27 fascs., 1872–99), and Piante iconografiche e prospettiche di Roma anteriori al secolo XVI (1879). With G. Henzen and E. Bormann he collected the Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, 6, pts. 1–5 (Inscriptiones Latini Urbis Romae, 1876–94), with H. Stevenson catalogued the Codices Palatini Latini bibliothecae Vaticanae (1886), and with L. *Duchesne edited the Hieronymian Martyrology for the Acta Sanctorum (Nov. 2.1; 1894). His memorandum on the ampullae sanguinis*, circulated privately in 1862, was ed. by A. Ferrua in 1944. In 1863 he founded the Bulletino di Archaeologia Cristiana, which he edited for 30 years.

There is a list of his works up to 1892 in Mélanges G. B. de Rossi (Supplément aux Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 12; 1892), pp. 1–27, and to 1894 by H. *Leclercq (see below), cols. 92–9. P. M. Baumgarten, Giovanni Battista de Rossi, der Begründer der christlich-archäologischen Wissenschaft: Eine biographische Skizze (Cologne, 1892; Ital. tr., enlarged, 1892); O. Marucchi, Giovanni Battista de Rossi: Cenni Biografici [1901]; G. Ferretto, Note Storico-bibliografiche di Archeologia Cristiana (1942), pp. 318–71. E. Kirschbaum, SJ, 'P. Giuseppe Marchi SJ (1795–1860) und Giovanni B. De Rossi (1822–1894)', Gregorianum, 21 (1940), pp. 564–606. H. Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 18–100, s.v. 'Rossi, J.-B. de', with extensive bibl.; N. Parise in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 39 (1991), pp. 201–5, s.v.

De Sacramentis. A short liturgical treatise on the Sacraments, almost certainly the work of St *Ambrose (d. 397). Its six homilies ('Books'), addressed to the newly baptized in Easter week, treat of *Baptism, *Confirmation, and the *Eucharist. Its special interest is that it is the earliest witness to the Roman *Canon of the Mass in substantially its present form; also granted its Milanese provenance, it attests the influence of Roman usage in N. Italy. The author insists that it is the word of Christ which consecrates (conficit) the Eucharist; and in his canon he refers to the species as an unbloody offering (incruentam hostiam) and a figure (figura) of the Body and Blood of Christ (cf. *Serapion's ὁμοίωμα). In the 16th cent. doubts about its Ambrosian authorship were expressed by the *Zwinglians who disliked its strongly conversionist doctrine, and its authenticity was a point at issue at the *Marburg Colloquy of 1529. The Benedictine editors of Ambrose (1690) also had hesitations, which were shared by subsequent scholars, some of whom attributed it to *Maximus of Turin, and a date in the 5th or 6th cent. came to be commonly assumed. R. H. *Connolly, however, following hints in F. *Probst and G. *Morin, showed that the biblical text in De Sacramentis coincides with the idiosyncratic text used by Ambrose elsewhere and so put its Ambrosian authorship virtually beyond question.

J. P. Migne, PL 16. 409–62. Crit. edns. by O. Faller in Sancti Ambrosii Opera, 7 (CSEL 73, 1955), pp. 13–85, and by B. Botte, OSB (SC 25; 1950; 2nd edn., 1961), with important introd. Eng. tr. by T. Thompson (London, 1919), with introd. by J. H. Srawley; new and extensively rev. edn., 1950. G. Morin, OSB, 'Pour l'authenticité du De Sacramentis et de l'Explanatio Symboli de S. Ambroise', JLW 8 (1928), pp. 86–106; R. H. Connolly, OSB, The De Sacramentis a Work of Ambrose: Two Papers (*Downside Abbey, 1942). K. Gamber, Die Autorschaft von de Sacramentis: Zugleich ein Beitrag zur Liturgiegeschichte der römischen Provinz Dacia mediterranea (Studia patristica et liturgica, 1; Regensburg, 1967) [attributes the De Sacramentis to *Nicetas of Remesiana: a view not generally accepted]. Further bibl. in Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 383 and 630 f., and in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 172 f.

Descartes, René (1596–1650), philosopher. Born near Tours, he was educated at the *Jesuit college at La Flèche and at the University of Poitiers. As a young man he travelled widely and in 1619, after a day's meditation in a 'stove-heated room' in Bavaria, became convinced that he was destined to found a new philosophical system. After further travels, and some years spent in Paris, he settled in the Netherlands in 1629. On hearing of the condemnation of *Galileo in 1633, he suppressed his treatise on physics, Le Monde (pub. 1664), but his Discours de la Méthode (with essays on optics, meteorology, and geometry) appeared anonymously in 1637. The definitive statement of his metaphysics, Meditationes de Prima Philosophia, was published in 1641, and the mammoth philosophical and scientific textbook, Principia Philosophiae, in 1644. The Passions de l'âme, on physiology and psychology, appeared in 1649. The same year Descartes accepted an invitation to act as tutor to Queen *Christina of Sweden; he died in Stockholm the following February.

From the start Descartes was attracted by the clarity and certainty of mathematics, and aimed to extend its methods to the whole of human knowledge. To this end he devised his method of doubt, 'rejecting everything in which one can imagine the least doubt', so as to arrive at an unshakeable foundation for philosophy. This he finds in the famous 'Cogito ergo sum' ('I am thinking, therefore I exist'). He then proceeds to reconstruct human knowledge, establishing the existence first of God and then of an external world whose nature we can understand provided we restrict ourselves to the (God-given) 'clear and distinct perceptions' of the intellect.

Descartes's proof of God's existence starts from the idea of God which he finds within himself: whatever caused this idea must have all the perfections that are represented in the idea. Descartes adds the supplementary argument that he could not exist, possessing, as he does, the idea of God, unless he derived his existence from God. He also offers an a priori demonstration that God's existence cannot be separated from His essence (see ANSELM, ST, and ONTOLOGICAL ARGUMENT).

Descartes's most controversial doctrine is his mind/body 'dualism'—the claim that the mind is an unextended incorporeal substance entirely distinct from the body. He also contributed importantly to the 17th-cent. scientific revolution by arguing for the elimination of 'real qualities' from physics in favour of explanations involving only 'the divisions, shapes, and motions of matter'.

Standard edn. of his Œuvres by C. Adam and P. Tannery (12 vols., 1897–1910, + index, 1913; rev. edn., 1964–76). Eng. tr. of his more important Philosophical Writings by J. Cottingham, R. Stoothoff, and D. Murdoch (2 vols., Cambridge, '1984'–1985 [both vols. 1985]). Eng. tr. of his Philosophical Letters by A. [J.] Kenny (Oxford, 1970). M. Gueroult, Descartes selon l'ordre des raisons (Philosophie de l'Esprit, 2 vols., 1953); F. Alquié, Descartes: L'Homme et l'œuvre (1956); H. Gouthier, La Pensée métaphysique de Descartes (Bibliothèque d'histoire de la philosophie, 1962) and other works of this author; A. [J.] Kenny, Descartes: A Study of his Philosophy (New York, 1968); B. Williams, Descartes: The Project of Pure Enquiry (Harmondsworth, 1978); M. D. Wilson, Descartes (London, 1978); J. Cottingham, Descartes (Oxford, 1986). W. Doney (ed.), Descartes: A Collection of Critical Essays (1968). G. Sebba, Bibliographia Cartesiana: A Critical Guide to the Descartes Literature, 1800–1960 (The Hague, 1964). L. J. Beck in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 784–8, s.v., with bibl.

Descent of Christ into Hell, the. This belief is based on such biblical passages as Mt. 27: 52 f., Lk. 23: 43, 1, and Pet. 3: 18–20, though various opinions have been held as to their exact meaning. Some have thought that the descent into hell refers to the victory over the powers of evil, others have connected it with the Dereliction on the Cross and the full bearing by Christ of the fruits of sin in our stead. Most Christian theologians, however, believe that it refers to the visit of the Lord after His death to the realm of existence, which is neither heaven nor hell (qq.v.) in the ultimate sense, but a place or state where the souls of pre-Christian people waited for the message of the Gospel, and whither the penitent thief passed after his death on the cross (Lk. 23: 43).

The earliest known occurrences of the article in the Creeds are in 4th-cent. *Arian formularies, namely, the Fourth Creed of *Sirmium of 359 and those of Nike and Constantinople of 360. Thence it found its way into the Aquileian Creed of *Rufinus (it is not found in the *Old Roman Creed), gradually spread over the W., and found a place in the *Apostles' Creed. It also occurs in the *Athanasian Creed and is the subject of Art. 3 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles, but is absent from the *Nicene Creed. See also HELL.

J. Monnier, La Descente aux Enfers: Étude de pensée religieuse d'art et de littérature (Paris thesis, 1904); C. Schmidt, 'Der Descensus ad inferos in der alten Kirche', appended to his edn. of Gespräche Jesu mit seinen Jüngern der nach der Auferstehung [Epistula Apostolorum] (TU 43; 1919), pp. 453–576 (Excurs 2); J. A. MacCulloch, The Harrowing of Hell: A Comparative Study of an Early Christian Doctrine (1930); J. Kroll, Gott und Hölle: Der Mythos vom Descensuskampf (Studien der Bibliothek Warburg, 20; 1932). B. Reicke, The Disobedient Spirits and Christian Baptism: A Study of 1 Pet. III. 19 and its Context (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, 13; 1946). W. Bieder, Die Vorstellung von der Höllenfahrt Jesu Christi (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 19; 1949). A. Grillmeier, SJ, 'Der Gottessohn in Totenreich. Soteriologische und christologische Motivierung der Descensuslehre in der älteren christlichen Überlieferung', ZKT 71 (1949), pp. 1–53, 184–203, with extensive refs. W. J. Dalton, SJ, Christ's Proclamation to the Spirits: A Study of 1 Peter, 3: 18–4: 6 (Analecta Biblica, 23; Rome, 1965). W. Maas, Gott und die Hölle: Studien zum Descensus Christi (Sammlung Horizonte, NS 14; Einsiedeln [1979]). J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), pp. 378–83. See also comm. on 1 Pet. 3: 18–20 (esp. E. G. Selwyn, pp. 314–62), on the Apostles' Creed (among older works, esp. J. *Pearson), and on the Thirty-Nine Articles. F. *Loofs in HERE 4 (1911), pp. 654–63, s.v. 'Descent into Hades (Christ's)'; J. Chaine in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 2 (1934), cols. 395–431, s.v. 'Descente du Christ aux Enfers'; A. Grillmeier, SJ, and E. Lucchesi-Palli in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 5 (1960), cols. 450–5, s.v. 'Höllenabstieg Christi'; E. Koch in TRE 15 (1986), pp. 455–61, s.v. 'Höllenfahrt Christi', with extensive bibl.

Determinism. The view that all events (including human actions) are somehow inevitable or necessitated. Versions of Determinism were defended by ancient thinkers such as Democritus (*c.*460–*c.*370 BC) and *Stoic philosophers; later defenders of deterministic positions included T. *Hobbes, A. *Schopenhauer, and numerous writers reacting to the scientific developments of the 17th and 18th cent. An influential argument urged in favour of Determinism is that all events must be caused and causes necessitate their effects. Other arguments include logical ones (e.g. that the truth value of statements about the future cannot be altered—an argument famously discussed by *Aristotle) and theological ones (e.g. that God foreknows all human actions, which must therefore occur in accordance with His knowledge—an argument considered by St *Augustine, *Boethius, and St *Thomas Aquinas). The most frequently raised objections to Determinism as a theory of human action are: (1) that it makes nonsense of praise and blame; (2) that belief in Determinism is incompatible with belief in the propriety of deliberating; (3) that people can be directly aware of their power to choose other than as they do; and (4) that causation does not imply necessitation. Arguments to this effect can be found in such authors as Aristotle, Thomas Aquinas, R. *Descartes, Thomas Reid (1710–96), and W. *James. See also PREDESTINATION.

De Thou, Jacques Auguste (1553–1617), historian and book-collector. Coming from a family of magistrates, De Thou ('Thuanus') held high legal office, and helped to enact the Edict of *Nantes (1598). His Latin history of contemporary France, Historiae sui temporis (5 vols., 1604–20), describes the religious wars in detail. It was placed on the *Index, though its author remained a (very *Gallican) Catholic. He built up an important library which was doubled in size by his son, Jacques Auguste De Thou (1609–77). The MSS from it came eventually to the Bibliothèque Royale in 1732 and 1754; the printed books were dispersed at the De Soubise sale in 1789.

For edns of his works see H. Hauser, Les Sources de l'histoire de France: XVI^e siècle (1494–1610), 2 (1909), p. 35, no. 775. Catalogus Bibliothecae Thuanae (Paris, 1679). H. Harrisse, 'Les De Thou et leur célèbre Bibliothèque 1573–1680–1789', Bulletin du Bibliophile, 1903 and 1904. Further studies by J. Collinson (London, 1807) and S. Kinser (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 18; The Hague, 1966). A. Soman, De Thou and the Index (Geneva, 1972).

Deusdedit, St (before consecration known as Frithuwine) (d. 664), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was the first Anglo-Saxon to hold this position, to which he was consecrated in 655. Hardly anything is known of the events of his primacy. Feast day, 14 July.

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 3. 20, 28, and 4. 1; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), p. 116. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), pp. 67 f.

Deus Misereatur. The Psalm (67) provided in the BCP of 1552 and later editions as an optional alternative to the *Nunc Dimittis at *Evensong, except on the 12th day of the month.

Deuterocanonical Books, the. An alternative name for the Books contained in the Greek (*Septuagint) version of the OT, but not in the Hebrew. They are more commonly known as the *Apocrypha.

Deutero-Isaiah. The name commonly given to the unknown author of most or all of the later chapters of the Book of Is. Earlier OT critics, e.g. S. R. *Driver, G. A. *Smith, in the belief that Is. 40–66 was a unity, applied the term to the author of all these chapters; it is now usually restricted to the author of 40–55 (56–66 being probably of later date). Deutero-Isaiah was active in the later years of the Babylonian Exile (*c.*550–539 BC). See also ISAIAH and TRITO-ISAIAH; and, esp. for bibl., SERVANT SONGS.

Deuteronomistic History. The name given by M. *Noth and others to the Books Deut.–2 Kgs., all of which appear to have been compiled on the same editorial principle, i.e. originally independent units of material, such as collections of laws, stories about the Judges, the so-called 'Court History' (2 Sam. 9–1 Kgs. 2), and the Elijah and Elisha 'cycles', have been assembled together and set in a framework by an editor or editors who believed that obedience to the Divine commands led to success and disobedience to disaster. The Divine commands are set out in Deut. with appropriate warnings, and in the subsequent Books Israel's history is recounted and commented on in the light of this retributive theory. The editor's purpose is thus not so much to record history as to draw out its religious lessons, with the particular intention of giving a theological explanation for the conquest of *Judah by the Babylonians in the early 6th cent BC. As examples of his method, style, and outlook may be cited the farewell speeches of Moses (Deut. 31), Joshua (Jos. 24) and Samuel (1 Sam. 12), and also the comments on the fall of Samaria (2 Kgs. 17: 7–23) and of Jerusalem (2 Kgs. 23: 26–7 and 24: 2–4).

M. Noth, Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Studien, 1 (Halle/Salle, 1943; 2nd edn., Tübingen, 1957), pp. 3–110; Eng. tr., The Deuteronomistic History (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 15; Sheffield, 1981); R. D. Nelson, The Double Redaction of the Deuteronomistic History (ibid. 18; 1981). A. D. H. Mayes, The Story of Israel between Settlement and Exile: A Redactional Study of the Deuteronomistic History (1983). See also recent comm. to DEUTERONOMY cited s.v.

Deuteronomy, Book of. The fifth and last Book of the *Pentateuch. Its English title comes via the Lat. Deuteronomium from the Gk. Δευτερονόμιον ('repetition of the law'), a *Septuagint mis-rendering of Deut. 17: 18 where the Heb. means 'a copy of the law'. In Heb. tradition the Book is commonly referred to by its two opening words אֵלֶּה הַדְּבָרִים ('These are the words').

The Book, which contains *Moses' final utterances on the E. side of the *Jordan before his death, consists essentially of seven mainly legislatory and hortatory addresses as follows: (1) After a brief introduction (1: 1–5), a survey of the journey from Mount Sinai to the Promised Land with its lessons (1: 6–4: 40). (2) Exhortations to serve Yahweh as the only true God, with certain laws interspersed (4: 45–11: 32); 5: 6–21 contains the Ten *Commandments in their Deuteronomic form and 6: 4–9 the principal section of the *Shema. (3) The central core of the legislation in the Book, the so-called 'Deuteronomic Code' (12: 1–28: 68). 12–16 deal mainly with religious duties (Law of the One Sanctuary; *Tithes; Feasts of *Passover, of Unleavened Bread, and of *Weeks, etc.); 17–20 with civil enactments (Monarchy; *Cities of Refuge; Laws of War; etc.); and 21–5 with social and domestic regulations (aliens, usury, vows, etc.). (4) Exhortations to keep the Covenant with Yahweh, with the threat of punishment for disobedience and the promise of restoration for repentance (29 f.). (5) The appointment of Joshua as Moses' successor and the giving of the custody of the 'Book of the Law' to the *Levites (31: 1–29). (6) The 'Song of Moses', with an appendix (31: 30–32: 52). (7) The 'Blessing of Moses' (33), followed by an account of Moses' death (34). Some scholars have argued that the ordering of the Book reflects the pattern of a (postulated) Covenant Renewal Ceremony.

The distinctive style and diction of Deut. mark it off from the other Pentateuchal Books. Throughout, emphasis is laid on the fact that Yahweh is the only true God, that His love for His peculiar people Israel is unbounded, and that Israel must love Him in return.

Acc. to the traditional view, the Book was written by Moses. Most modern critics, however, have sought to bring it to a much later date. The view most widely held assigns it to the 7th cent. BC. Stress is laid on the close contact with, and apparent dependence of its theology on, the teaching of the 8th-cent. Prophets, e.g. its emphasis on the love of God (esp. characteristic of *Hosea), its monotheism, and its humane modifications of the supposedly earlier laws of the 'Book of the Covenant' (Ex. 20: 22–23: 33). On the other hand its apparent identification of 'the sons of Aaron' with 'the Levites' (two classes later distinguished) and the absence of ref. to the Day of *Atonement and the Levitical system in general, indicate a date earlier than the 'Priestly Code' (6th cent. or later). It has hence commonly been supposed that the Book of the Law found in the Temple which was the basis of Josiah's Reformation (621 BC; cf. 2 Kgs. 22 f.) is to be identified with some form of the central section of Deuteronomy with which it shares a concern for the concentration of worship in one sanctuary (cf. Deut. 12). If so, it was not improbably compiled shortly before this date, perhaps in the reign of Manasseh (*c.*690–643) or even in the early part of that of Josiah himself (640–609 BC). Some critics, however, have argued for a date even as early as the 10th or 11th cent.; others have favoured an exilic or post-exilic setting. The tendency of much recent scholarship has been to concern itself with the tradition which the Book embodies and to emphasize that in its present form it exhibits evidence of a lengthy literary history.

Comm. by S. R. *Driver (ICC, 1895), G. von *Rad (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 8; 1964; Eng. tr., 1966), A. D. H. Mayes (New Cent. Bib., 1979), and E. Nielsen (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 6; 1995). G. Hölscher, 'Komposition und Ursprung des Deuteronomiums', ZATW 40 for 1922 (1923), pp. 161–255. A. C. Welch, The Code of Deuteronomy: A New Theory of its Origin [1924]; id., Deuteronomy: The Framework of the Code (1932). G. von Rad, Deuteronomium-Studien (1947; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, 9; 1953). E. W. Nicholson, Deuteronomy and Tradition (Oxford, 1967). M. Weinfeld, Deuteronomy and the Deuteronomic School (Oxford, 1972). J. G. McConville, Law and Theology in Deuteronomy (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 33; Sheffield, 1984). N. Lohfink (ed.), Das Deuteronomium: Entstehung, Gestalt and Botschaft (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 68; 1985). M. Weinfeld in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 168–83.

Deutsche Christen. See GERMAN-CHRISTIANS.

Deutsche Theologie (Ger.). The vernacular title of Theologia Germanica (q.v.).

Deutscher Orden. See TEUTONIC ORDER.

de Veuster, Joseph. See DAMIEN, FATHER.

devil (Gk. διάβολος, 'calumniator', 'accuser'). In theological terminology the chief of the fallen angels. He is mentioned very rarely in the older books of the OT, where a clear contrast between good and evil on a cosmic scale is lacking. In the narrative of the *Fall (Gen. 3) the serpent, which seduces *Eve and is thus the cause of man's first sin, has traditionally been considered an embodiment of the devil, through whom, acc. to the Book of *Wisdom (2: 24), 'death entered into the world'. The evil spirit tormenting Saul (1 Sam. 18: 10) has also traditionally been regarded as a devil, as also the lying spirits that deceive the prophets of Ahab (1 Kgs. 22: 21–3). In the Book of Job, *Satan acts as a tempter and tormentor, always, however, in submission to the will of Yahweh. In 1 Chron. 21: 1 *David's decision to number Israel is attributed to Satan (though 2 Sam. 24: 1 provides a different explanation), and in the vision of *Zechariah Satan acts as the accuser of the high priest Joshua (Zech. 3: 1–2). In the pseudepigraphical Jewish literature there is a much more developed demonology with many traces of pagan influence. 1 *Enoch 6–16 interprets the narrative of Gen. 6: 1–4 about the 'sons of God' whose intercourse with women produced a race of giants, as fallen angels, and says that they were condemned to eternal punishment. Similar stories are reported in the Book of *Jubilees, the *Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, and other Jewish writings of the period between OT and NT.

The NT embodies and develops the later Jewish teaching on the devil. He tempts the Lord at the beginning of His public ministry (Mk. 1: 13, Mt. 4: 1–11, Lk. 4: 1–13), presenting himself as the master of the world (Mt. 4: 8–9), and Christ shows by His teaching and example his powerlessness over those who resist him. Later Satan renews his attacks in the persons of the demoniacs, thus manifesting the enmity between his kingdom and the kingdom of God, which is also taught in several parables, e.g. that of the tares among the wheat (Mt. 13: 24–30). He has wanted the disciples, esp. St *Peter, but the Lord has prayed for him, that his faith might not fail (Lk. 22: 31–2); for the power of Satan, whom Jesus saw 'fallen as lightning from heaven' (Lk. 10: 18), is already broken. Being 'a murderer from the beginning' (Jn. 8: 44), he is the 'prince of the world' but has no power over Christ (Jn. 14: 30), for he is already judged (Jn. 16: 11), and at the Last Judgement he and all those who belong to him will depart into eternal fire (Mt. 25: 41). St *Paul and the other Apostles follow this teaching. 1 Peter recommends sobriety and vigilance as the chief means of resisting him (5: 8–9), and in Jude we find a brief allusion to the fall of the angels (1: 6; cf. 2 Pet. 2: 4). A fuller account of the angels' fall is given in Rev. 12: 7–9, which chapter also contains a detailed description of the devil's persecution of the Church under the figure of the Woman clothed with the sun.

In *patristic times there was no fixed teaching on the subject. Great influence was exercised by the apocryphal literature, esp. by the Books of Enoch. The view that demons are the sons of the fallen angels and human mothers is reproduced by many early Fathers, e.g. St *Justin Martyr, and similar opinions were held by *Tertullian and St *Cyprian. Others, e.g. St *Irenaeus and *Clement of Alexandria, distinguish between the serpent, the seducer of Eve, and the other fallen angels, and most of them hold that the fall of the angels was caused by their envy of man. *Origen, however, rejects the tales in 1 Enoch 6–16 about the carnal intercourse between angels and women and attributes the fall of the former not to envy but to pride. His view was accepted first in the E., e.g. by St *Athanasius and also by St *Basil, who affirms that the devil is a spiritual being fallen from heaven through pride, and later also in the W., though the idea of angelic marriage was not at once rejected. St *Augustine held that the devil fell through pride, because he would not submit to God, and that his envy of man was only a later consequence of his first sin. Though refusing to explain the fall of the angels by concupiscence, he assumed that they have bodies. He rejected the opinion advanced by Origen that the devils may finally be reconciled to God (*Apocatastasis).

In the Middle Ages there was much speculation on the subject, represented esp. by the *Dominican and the *Franciscan schools. Acc. to the former, following St *Albert the Great and St *Thomas Aquinas, all angels were created in a state of grace, though not of beatitude. The initial sin of the devil, which fixed him in evil, was committed after the first instant of his creation had passed. It consisted in pride, manifesting itself in the desire not for equality with God, which the angelic intellect knows to be impossible, but for a natural beatitude obtained by his own powers. The fall of the other angels was caused by their consent to his sin. The Franciscans, on the other hand, following *Duns Scotus, held that the devils committed various kinds of sin before becoming obstinate in evil, that *Lucifer, their chief, desired equality with God, and that his sin consisted in an immoderate love of his own excellence. From the 15th cent. Latin theologians have in general followed either the Thomist or the Scotist view. A compromise was attempted by F. *Suárez, who advanced the novel opinion that the sin of the devil consisted in the desire of being himself hypostatically united to the Word. Since the 16th cent. the traditional teaching in its main outlines has been accepted by the majority of Christians, but there has been a marked reaction against the speculative elaborations of the Middle Ages.

There have been very few doctrinal decisions on the subject. The Council of Braga (561) defined against the *Priscillianists that the devil was created good and could not himself create; and the 4th *Lateran Council (1215) affirmed that he became evil by his own will.

G. Roskoff, Geschichte des Teufels (2 vols., Leipzig, 1869). L. Coulange [pseud. for J. Turmel], The Life of the Devil (1929; Eng. tr. of work pub. under his own name, Histoire du diable, 1931). G. Bazin and others, Satan (Études carmélitaines, 1948), with full bibl.; Eng. tr. of part, with additional essays and introd., by C. Moeller, Satan (1951). H. A. Kelly, Towards the Death of Satan: The Growth and Decline of Christian Demonology (1968). J. B. Russell, The Devil: Perceptions of Evil from Antiquity to Primitive Christianity (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1977); id., Satan: The Early Christian Tradition (ibid., 1981); id., Lucifer: The Devil in the Middle Ages (ibid. [1984]). N. Forsyth, The Old Enemy: Satan and the Combat Myth (Princeton, NJ, 1986). G. *Papini, Il Diavolo (Florence, 1954; Eng. tr. 1955). E. Mangenot and T. Ortolan in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 321–409; S. Lyonnet, SJ, J. *Daniélou, SJ, and others in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 141–238, both s.v. 'Démon', with bibl. W. Foerster and K. Schäferdiek in TWB 7 (1964), pp. 151–65 (Eng. tr., 7, 1971, pp. 151–65), s.v. σατανᾶς.

Devil's Advocate. See PROMOTOR FIDEI.

Devotio Moderna (Lat., 'Modern Devotion'). The term is applied to the revival and deepening of the spiritual life which, from the end of the 14th cent., spread from the Netherlands to parts of Germany, France, and Italy. It originated in the circle round G. *Groote, and found its classic expression in *Thomas à Kempis's '*Imitation of Christ'. It laid great stress on the inner life of the individual and encouraged methodical meditation, esp. on the Life and Passion of Christ. St *Augustine, St *Bernard, and St *Bonaventure were among its acknowledged spiritual guides. The Modern Devotion made its way among the people chiefly through free associations of secular priests and lay people, called '*Brethren of the Common Life' (q.v.), whereas among the religious the *Windesheim Canons were its principal representatives.

The Lives of G. Groote, *Florentius Radewijns, and their followers by Thomas à Kempis tr. into Eng. by J. P. Arthur (London, 1905). A. Hyma, The Christian Renaissance: History of the 'Devotio Moderna' (New York, 1925; repr., with additional chs., as 2nd edn., Hamden, Conn., 1965). S. Axters, OP, Geschiedenis van de Vroomheid in de Nederlanden, 3: De Moderne Devotie 1380–1550 (Amsterdam, 1956). R. R. Post, The Modern Devotion: Confrontation with Reformation and Humanism (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 3; Leiden, 1968), with extensive refs. G. Epiney-Burgard, Gérard Grote (1360–1384) et les débuts de la dévotion moderne (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, 54; Wiesbaden, 1970); J. Andriessen and others (eds.), 'Geert Grote & Moderne Devotie', Ons Geestelijk Erf, 59 (1985), pp. 113–505 (also issued separately, Nijmegen, 1985); P. Bange and others (eds.), De doorwerking van de Moderne Devotie Windesheim 1387–1987 (Hilversum, 1988). P. Debongnie, CSSR, in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 727–47, s.v. 'Dévotion moderne'.

Devout Life, Introduction to the. The celebrated treatise on the spiritual life by St *Francis de Sales. It is one of the earliest guide books of its period for people living in the world. It grew out of the spiritual direction which Francis gave to his cousin's wife, Mme de Charmoisy. It deals, in a style full of imagery, with the practical problems of people of social standing and their obligations, but its teaching is of universal application. The first edition appeared at Lyons in 1609, but Francis frequently revised it until 1619, the date of the definitive edition. Jeremy *Taylor's Holy Living is much influenced by it.

In addition to the many popular editions there are good crit. edns. by C. Florisoone (Collection Guillaume Budé, 2 vols., 1930; 2nd edn., 1961) and by E.-M. Lajeune, OP (Collection Livre de Vie [1962]). The numerous Eng. trs. include that by R. *Challoner (London, 1762). Convenient modern Eng. tr. by de Wette, Wilhelm Martin Leberecht (1780–1849), German theologian. He was born at Ulla, near Weimar, studied at Jena, and held theological chairs at Heidelberg (1809) and Berlin (1810). From 1806 he published works on biblical criticism and from 1813 on systematic theology. His radical rationalism raised a storm of opposition and, nominally because he had supported the murderer of A. F. F. von Kotzebue, he was deprived of his professorship and had to leave Berlin (1819). After a short stay at Weimar he accepted the theological chair at Basle (1822). In his later years he became more conservative. Under the influence of J. F. Fries and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, he sought to do justice to the transcendent by faith and to the finite by scientific knowledge, to emphasize the importance of religious experience, to spiritualize dogma, and to construct a theology without a metaphysical basis. But his condemnation of cold reason displeased the rationalists, and his doubts regarding biblical miracles and his reduction of the stories of the Birth, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ to myths offended the *Pietists. His numerous writings include Kommentar über die Psalmen (1811), Lehrbuch der historisch-kritischen Einleitung in die kanonischen und apokryphischen Bücher des AT (1817), Christliche Sittenlehre (1819–23), Einleitung ins NT (1826; Eng. tr., 1858), and Das Wesen des christlichen Glaubens (1846).

M. Day, Cong. Orat. (Orchard Books, 1956). See also bibl. to FRANCIS DE SALES.

A. F. J. Wiegand, W. M. L. de Wette, 1780 1849 (1879). E. Staehelin, Dewettiana (Basle, 1956); R. Smend, Wilhelm Martin Leberecht de Wettes Arbeit am Alten und am Neuen Testament (ibid., 1958); P. Handschin, Wilhelm Martin Leberecht de Wette als Prediger und Schriftsteller (ibid., 1958); J. W. Rogerson, W. M. L. de Wette, Founder of Modern Biblical Criticism (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 126; Sheffield [1992]).

d'Hulst, Maurice (1841–96), French scholar and priest. He played a prominent part in founding the Catholic University of Paris (1875), and in 1881 he became first rector of the newly constituted *Institut Catholique. Throughout his life he laboured for the higher education of the French clergy. In his first years at the Institut Catholique he was closely associated with many of those who later became *Modernists, but after the encyclical '*Providentissimus Deus' (18 Nov. 1893), he became more conservative. His Question biblique (1893) represented his earlier attitude. D'Hulst was also much esteemed as a preacher and spiritual director.

A. Baudrillart, Vie de Mgr d'Hulst (2 vols., 1912–14). [C.] Cordonnier, Monseigneur d'Hulst: Sa vie, ses luttes, son rayonnement (1952). Y. Marchasson in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 944–7, s.v. 'Hulst, Maurice d' '.

diaconicon (Gk., 'appertaining to the deacon'). The area to the south of the sanctuary in a Byzantine church, so called because it is in the charge of the deacons. In it the sacred vessels are kept and cleansed, and the vestments, service-books, and other necessaries of Divine service are stored. It thus corresponds with the *sacristy in the W. The corresponding area to the north of the sanctuary is termed the *prothesis. The word is also used of the book containing the deacon's part in the Liturgy.

G. Bandmann, 'Über Pastophorien und verwandte Nebenräume im mittelalterlichen Kirchenbau', in W. Braunfels (ed.), Kunstgeschichtliche Studien für Hans Kauffmann [1957], pp. 19–58. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 4 (1921), cols. 733–5, s.v.

Diadochus (mid-5th cent.), Bp. of Photike after 451. Hardly anything is known of his life. He was the author of 100 'Capita Gnostica' (κεφάλαια γνωστικά) on the means of attaining spiritual perfection, which enjoyed great popularity in succeeding generations and were cited by St *Maximus the Confessor, in the Doctrina Patrum, and by *Photius. He fashions an orthodox synthesis from both *Messalian and *Evagrian ideas, basing his understanding of the spiritual life on Baptism. He is one of the earliest witnesses to the devotion which found expression in the *Jesus Prayer (q.v.). Besides a homily on the Ascension, which has long been known, Diadochus is also very prob. the author of a work entitled the 'Vision', which takes the form of a dialogue with *John the Baptist. Some late MSS also ascribe to him a series of questions and answers, called by E. des Places a catechism; this work is elsewhere attributed to *Simeon the New Theologian.

Works ed., with Fr. tr., by E. des Places, SJ (SC 5 bis, 1955; repr., with additional material, ibid. 5 ter, 1966). Eng. tr. of 'Capita Gnostica' by G. E. H. Palmer, P. Sherrard, and K. [T. R.] Ware, The Philokalia, 1 (1979), pp. 251–96. F. Dörr, Diadochus von Photike und die Messalianer: Ein Kampf zwischen wahrer und falscher Mystik im fünften Jahrhundert (Freiburger theologische Studien, 47; 1937). P. Chrestos, Διάδοχος ὁ Φωτικῆς (Thessalonica, 1952). H. Dörries, Wort und Stunde, 1 (1966), pp. 352–422 ('Diadochos und Symeon'). E. des Places, SJ, 'Diadoque de Photicé et le Messalianisme', in Kyriakon: Festschrift Johannes Quasten, ed. P. Granfield and J. A. Jungmann, 2 (1970), pp. 591–5. K. [T. R.] Ware, 'The Jesus Prayer in St Diadochus of Photice', in Aksum-Thyateira: A Festschrift for Archbishop Methodios of Thyateira and Great Britain, ed. G. D. Dragas (1985), pp. 557–68. E. des Places, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 817–34; D. Stiernon, AA, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 374–8, with further bibl.

Dialectical Theology. A title applied to the theological principles of K. *Barth (q.v.) and his school on the ground that, in distinction from the dogmatic method of ecclesiastical orthodoxy, which treats of God as a concrete Object (via dogmatica), and the negative principles of many mystics, which forbid all positive affirmations about God (via negativa), it finds the truth in a dialectic apprehension of God which transcends the 'Yes' and the 'No' of the other methods (via dialectica). Its object is to preserve the Absolute of faith from every formulation in cut-and-dried expressions.

After the publication of Barth's Römerbrief in 1919 the Dialectical Theology rapidly spread, at first esp. in Continental Protestantism. Rejecting the whole liberal tradition in modern theology, whose spirit it saw classically embodied in F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, it sought to go back to the principles of the Reformers, esp. J. *Calvin, and drew its inspiration from thinkers in revolt against the humanist ideal, notably S. *Kierkegaard, F. M. *Dostoevsky, and the *Blumhardts. Its principal exponents (with varying degrees of emphasis) include E. *Brunner, F. *Gogarten, and E. *Thurneysen (qq.v.). Before long its stress on the Divine transcendence commended it also to many theologians of other traditions. In Great Britain its influence has been greatest in the Church of *Scotland; but it has also been considerable in the C of E, esp. since E. C. *Hoskyns's translation of the Römerbrief in 1933. The rise of *Existentialism (q.v.) in the RC Church also owed much to its influence.

For bibl., see BARTH, K.

Dialogue of the Redeemer. A fragmentary document, sometimes called the 'Dialogue of the Saviour', found in Codex III of the *Nag Hammadi library. It presents a conversation between Christ (possibly after His Resurrection) and His disciples, particularly *Matthew, Judas, and *Mary [Magdalene]. There are parallels with Mt., Lk., and Jn., and also with the Gospel of *Thomas, but literary dependence appears unlikely.

Coptic text and Eng. tr., ed. S. Emmel, Nag Hammadi Codex III, 5 (Nag Hammadi Studies, 26; Leiden, 1984), with introd. by H. Koester and E. H. Pagels. Eng. tr., with brief introd., also in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 244–55. B. Blatz in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 244–55; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 300–12.

Diamper, Synod of (1599). A diocesan synod of the native (St Thomas) Church of *India, held under Alexis Menezes, Abp. of Goa, at Diamper (now Udiyamperūr, some 12 miles SE of Cochin). It brought the *Malabar Uniat Church (q.v.) into being. *Nestorianism was renounced, complete submission to Rome imposed, and many westernizing reforms were made. Continuity of worship and practice was preserved, including the use of the (Syriac) Liturgy of *Addai and Mari, though with several modifications. For a long time Portuguese authority enforced the decisions of the synod, but as its influence waned the Church began to disintegrate and there were many secessions, notably in 1653. In recent years there have been various moves to restore the Syro-Malabar liturgy.

[C. J. *Hefele and H. *Leclercq] Histoire des conciles d'après les documents orginaux, 11: C. de Clercq, 'Conciles des Orientaux catholiques', pt. 1 (1949), pp. 36–67. J. Thaliath, TOCD, The Synod of Diamper (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 152; 1958). S. [C.] Neill, A History of Christianity in India, 1 (Cambridge, 1984), pp. 208–19. A. Thazhath, The Juridical Sources of the Syro-Malabar Church (Kottayam, 1987), pp. 133–44 (with bibl.). J. Vellian, Syro-Malabar Liturgy, 1: Raza: The Most Solemn Qurbana (Syrian Churches Series, 14; 1989), pp. 21–57. C. de Clercq in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 1207–10, s.v.

Diario Romano ('The Roman Daybook'). An official annual publication giving particulars of all feasts and fasts to be observed, of the special ceremonies celebrated in particular churches, and of the days on which they are celebrated, in the diocese of Rome.

Diaspora, Jewish. The Dispersion (διασπορά) of the Jews had its beginnings in the Assyrian and Babylonian deportations (*c.*721 and *c.*597 BC). Originally confined to parts of Asia, esp. Armenia and Iran, it later spread throughout the Roman Empire to Egypt, Asia Minor, Greece, and Italy. By NT times, acc. to *Philo, there were not less than a million Jews in *Alexandria. The Jews of the Diaspora remained in close touch with their home country, paying the *Temple taxes and keeping their religion. The Jewish *synagogues in Asia and Asia Minor were the first scenes of Christian preaching (cf. Acts); in the 4th cent. the missionary activities of the Jews in the Roman Empire were eliminated by the growing power of Christianity. Henceforth the Jews of the W. Diaspora became more and more cut off from the surrounding Gentile civilization, and the E. Diaspora, with its centre in Babylon, became increasingly important. The Hebrew for 'diaspora' (גולה, גלות, galuth or golah) strictly means 'exile', an ancient conception which in modern times has surfaced prominently in the ideology of Zionism.

In Germany the word 'diaspora' is used of members of any religious body living as a minority among those of other beliefs, and esp. of Protestants living in Catholic parts and vice versa.

E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 1–176. M. Stern, 'The Jewish Diaspora' in S. Safrai and M. Stern (eds.), The Jewish People in the First Century, 1 (Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum, Section 1, vol. 1; Assen, 1974), pp. 117–83; S. Safrai, 'Relations between the Diaspora and the Land of Israel', ibid., pp. 184–215; S. Appelbaum, 'The Legal Status of the Jewish Communities in the Diaspora', ibid., pp. 420–63; id., 'The Organization of the Jewish Communities in the Diaspora', ibid., pp. 464–503. See also works cited under JUDAISM.

Diatessaron. The edition of the four Gospels in a continuous narrative, compiled by *Tatian about 150–60. From an early date it circulated widely in *Syriac-speaking Churches, where it became the standard text of the Gospels down to the 5th cent., when it gave way to the four separate Gospels. Its original language may have been Syriac, Greek, or (so F. C. *Burkitt) even Latin. Its publication in the 2nd cent. is a notable witness to the authority already enjoyed by the Four Gospels.

Our knowledge of its structure is derived principally from six sources: (1) The 'Commentary' on it made by St *Ephraem Syrus in the 4th cent. This survives in its entirety only in an *Armenian version, first published by the *Mechitarist Fathers in 1836; a considerable part of the Syriac text was acquired by the *Chester Beatty Library and published in 1963. (2) An Arabic harmony, available in five MSS, which is more valuable for the sequence than the text (which has been adapted to the *Peshitta). (3) A Persian harmony, also translated from Syriac, preserved in a single MS. (4) The Latin *Codex Fuldensis, where the order of the Diatessaron has been preserved, though the text has been assimilated to that of the *Vulgate. (5) A number of medieval harmonies of the Gospels, of which the most important is that in medieval Dutch, known as the 'Liège Diatessaron'. (6) A short Greek papyrus fragment of 14 imperfect lines containing the account of the request for the body of Christ made by *Joseph of Arimathaea. This fragment, which was found at *Dura Europos and identified at Yale in 1933, has strengthened the case for the Diatessaron's having been originally compiled in Greek.

Crit. edn. of the Armenian version of Ephraem's comm. by L. Leloir, OSB (CSCO 137: Scriptores Armeniaci, 1; 1953; with Lat. tr., ibid. 145: Scriptores Armeniaci, 2; 1954); Syriac text in Chester Beatty MS 709 ed., with Lat. tr., by id. (Chester Beatty Monographs, 8; Dublin, 1963; additional pages, also Chester Beatty Monographs, 8: Louvain, 1990). Fr. tr. from Syriac and Armenian texts by id. (SC 121; 1966). Arab. text ed. P. A. Ciasca, Rome, 1888 (2nd edn., 1934); also by A. S. Marmardji, OP, Beirut, 1935. Eng. tr. of Arab. text pub. by J. H. Hill as The Earliest Life of Christ ever compiled from the Four Gospels (1894). Persian text ed., with introd. and Ital. tr., by G. Messina, SJ (Biblica et Orientalia, 14; Rome, 1951). The Liège Diatessaron ed. by D. Plooij, C. A. Phillips, and A. H. A. Bakker, with Eng. tr. by A. J. Barnouw (8 pts., Verhandelingen der Koninklijke [Nederlandse] Akademie van Wetenschappen [te Amsterdam], Afd. Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks, 29 and 31; 1929–70), and, repr. the Eng. tr., but with less crit. app., by C. C. de Bruin (Corpus Sacrae Scripturae Neerlandicae Medii Aevi, Series Minor, Tomus 1: Harmoniae Evangeliorum, 1; Leiden, 1970); other Dutch harmonies (ibid. 2–4; 1970). 13th–14th cent. Ital. version ed. V. Todesco, A. Vaccari, SJ, and M. Vattasso (ST 81; 1938). C. H. Kraeling, A Greek Fragment of Tatian's Diatessaron from Dura (Studies and Documents, 3; 1935). Syriac text reconstructed from comm. and other early material, with Sp. tr., by I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Vetus Evangelium Syrorum et exinde excerptum Diatessaron Tatiani (Biblia Polyglotta Matritensia, 6; Madrid, 1967), pp. 207–99, with introd. pp. ix–xv; cf. R. Murray, SJ, in Heythrop Journal, 10 (1969), pp. 43–9. F. C. Burkitt (ed.), Evangelion Da-Mepharresche: The Curetonian Version of the Four Gospels, with the readings of the Sinai Palimpsest and the early Syriac Patristic Evidence, 2 (1904), esp. pp. 173–212. S. Lyonnet, SJ, Les Origines de la Version arménienne et le Diatessaron (Biblica et Orientalia, 13; Rome, 1950). L. Leloir, OSB, 'Le Diatessaron de Tatien', L'Orient Syrien, 1 (1956), pp. 208–31 and 313–34; id., L'Évangile d'Éphrem d'après les œuvres éditées: Recueil des textes (CSCO 180: Subsidia, 12; 1958); id., Le Témoignage d'Éphrem sur le Diatessaron (ibid. 227: Subsidia 19; 1962). W. Henss, Das Verhältnis zwischen Diatessaron, christlicher Gnosis und 'Western Text' (Beiheft zur ZNTW 33; 1967). W. L. Petersen, Tatian's Diatessaron: Its Creation, Dissemination, Significance, and History in Scholarship (Supplement to VC 25; 1994). B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 10–36. T. Baarda, Early Transmission of Words of Jesus: Thomas, Tatian and the Text of the New Testament, ed. J. Helderman and S. J. Noorda (Amsterdam, 1983), esp. pp. 65–78, 'In Search of the Diatessaron text'.

Dibelius, Martin (1883–1947), NT scholar. A native of Dresden, he was educated at Neufchâtel, Leipzig, Tübingen, and Berlin. From 1910 to 1915 he was a Privatdozent at Berlin. In 1915 he succeeded J. *Weiss as Professor of NT Exegesis and Criticism at Heidelberg, holding office until his death. He was an active supporter of the *Ecumenical Movement and a leader of the *Faith and Order Commission.

At first interested esp. in the study of Semitic languages and of comparative religion, he concentrated increasingly on the NT. Here he was a pioneer of the Formgeschichtliche* method (q.v.), the technique of which he applied to the Epistles as well as the Gospels. Working on the foundations of Weiss, he laid great emphasis on preaching as a medium of transmission of the Lord's words; and in general his attitude to the Gospel traditions was more conservative than that of most members of the school. His most considerable work in this field was Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums (1919; 2nd edn., 1933; Eng. tr., From Tradition to Gospel, 1934).

Dibelius's other publications include Die Geisterwelt im Glauben des Paulus (1909), Die Isisweihe bei Apuleius und verwandte Initiations-Riten (1917), Geschichtliche und übergeschichtliche Religion im Christentum (1925), Geschichte der urchristlichen Literatur (1926; Eng. tr., 1936), Die Botschaft von Jesus Christus (1935; Eng. tr., 1939), Gospel Criticism and Christology (1935), Jesus (Sammlung Göschen, 1939). He also contributed to the Handbuch zum Neuen Testament (ed. H. *Lietzmann) commentaries on 1 and 2 Thess. and Phil. (1911), Col., Eph., and Philem. (1911), 1 and 2 Tim. and Tit. (1913), and *Hermas (1923), and to the H. A. W. *Meyer series (Kritisch-exegetischer Kommentar über das N.T.) that on James (1921; Eng. tr., 1976).

List of his works in 'Bibliographia Dibeliana atque Bultmanniana', in Coniectanea Neotestamentica, ed. A. Fridrichsen, 8 (1944), pp. 1–22. M. Dibelius, Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Apostelgeschichte (ed. H. Greeven, 1951). Further collected papers, Botschaft und Geschichte, ed. G. Bornkamm (2 vols., 1953–6).

Dibelius, Otto (1880–1967), Bp. of Berlin. The cousin of M. *Dibelius, he was born in Berlin, and, after several other pastoral cures in the *Lutheran Church, was appointed to the church 'Zum Heilsbronnen' in Berlin in 1915. In 1921 he was given responsibility for education and minority questions in the Berlin Konsistorium, and this led him to travel to *Sweden and the *United States of America. In 1925 he became *General Superintendent of the Kurmark. Although conservative and nationalist in his political views, he consistently advocated that the Church should be independent of the State. His books were widely read and he was active in promoting religious journalism. He was on friendly terms with Abp. N. *Söderblom and G. K. A. *Bell and took part in various early conferences of the *Ecumenical Movement. He was dismissed from his post in 1933 and, though put under restraint by the Nazis, worked with the Bruderrat of the *Confessing Church in Berlin. Accused of treason by the '*German-Christians' for his earlier defence of the rights of conscientious objectors, he took them to court in a celebrated trial in 1934–6 and won his case. In 1937 he circulated an open letter to Hitler's Minister for Church Affairs, Hanns Kerrl, attacking his attempt to interfere in matters of belief. Kerrl brought a libel suit against Dibelius, but again Dibelius won. In 1945 he became Bp. of Berlin and in 1949 Presiding Bishop of the *Evangelical Church in Germany, in which capacity he vigorously upheld religious freedom in the face of Communistic atheism. In 1954 he became a President of the *World Council of Churches. His works include Das Vaterunser: Umrisse zu einer Geschichte des Gebets in der alten und mittleren Kirche (1903), Das Jahrhundert der Kirche: Geschichte, Betrachtung, Umschau und Ziele (1926), Friede auf Erden? Frage, Erwägungen, Antwort (1930) and Grenzen des Staates (1949).

His autobiography was pub. under the title Ein Christ ist immer im Dienst (1961; Eng. tr., New York, 1964; London, 1965). Life by R. Stupperich (Göttingen, 1989). Id. (ed.), Otto Dibelius: Sein Denken und Wollen. Eine Gedenkschrift zu seinem 90. Geburtstag (1970). C. Nicolaisen in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 729–31, s.v., with further bibl.

didache (Gk. διδαχή, 'teaching'). The elements in primitive Christian apologetic of an instructional kind, as contrasted with *kerygma or 'preaching'.

Didache (Διδαχὴ Κυρίου διὰ τῶν δώδεκα ἀποστόλων), a short early Christian manual on morals and Church practice. Of its 16 brief chapters, chs. 1–6 describe the 'Two Ways', the 'Way of Life' and the 'Way of Death'; they include quotations from the *Sermon on the Mount. Chs. 7–15 contain instructions on *Baptism, *fasting, *prayer, the *Eucharist, and how to treat *apostles and *prophets, *bishops, and *deacons. Ch. 16 is a prophecy of the *Antichrist and the *Second Coming. The treatise contains much of interest to the student of early Christian liturgy. The *Lord's Prayer is given in full. Baptism is by *immersion if possible, otherwise by threefold *affusion. Fasting on *Wednesdays and *Fridays is ordered. Two Eucharistic Prayers, of an unusual and primitive kind, are given. The ecclesiastical organization described is underdeveloped. An itinerant ministry of 'apostles and prophets' is of great importance; they are described as 'your chief priests' and may celebrate the Eucharist. At the same time a local ministry of bishops and deacons is also envisaged and seems to be taking the place of the itinerant ministry.

The author, date, and place of origin are unknown. The work was quoted as Scripture by *Clement of Alexandria, and is mentioned by *Eusebius of Caesarea and by *Athanasius. It is the earliest of the series of 'Church Orders', and forms the basis of the 7th Book of the '*Apostolic Constitutions'. Although in the past many English and American scholars (J. A. *Robinson, R. H *Connolly) tended to assign it to the late 2nd cent., most scholars nowadays place it in the 1st cent., including J.-P. Audet, OP, who dates it c. AD 60. It describes the life of a Christian community, prob. in Syria. The author knew the tradition of Christ's teaching which lies behind the Gospels. The 'Two Ways' section is closely paralleled in the Ep. of *Barnabas (18 ff.) and the Latin Doctrina Apostolorum (once thought to be a translation of the Didache); it seems likely that they are all based on an earlier Jewish source.

The only known MS (written in 1056) was discovered by P. *Bryennios at the 'Jerusalem Monastery of the Holy Sepulchre' at *Constantinople in 1875 and published by him in 1883.

The publication of the 'Didache' in 1883 evoked a vast literature. Ed., with facsimile, by J. R. *Harris (Baltimore and London, 1887). Other edns. by A. *Harnack (TU 2, Hefte 1–2; 1884). P. *Schaff (New York and London, 1885), H. *Lietzmann (Kleine Texte, 6; 1936), T. Klauser (Florilegium Patristicum, 1; Bonn, 1940), as well as in the modern edns. of the *Apostolic Fathers (q.v.). Text also ed., with crit. comm. by J.-P. Audet, OP (Études Bibliques, 1958) and by W. Rordorf and A. Tuilier (SC 248; 1978). Eng. tr. by C. *Bigg (1898; rev. by A. J. Maclean, 1922). Doctrina Apostolorum, ed. J. Schlecht from Cod. Monac. 6264 (11th cent.) at Freiburg i.B., 1900; cf. B. *Altaner, 'Zum Problem der lateinischen Doctrina Apostolorum', VC 6 (1952), pp. 160–7; repr. in his Kleine patristische Schriften (TU 83; 1967), pp. 335–42. Coptic frag. in Brit. Lib. (MS Or. 9271), ed. G. Horner, JTS 25 (1923–4), pp. 225–31; cf. C. Schmidt in ZNTW 24 (1925), pp. 81–99. J. A. Robinson, Barnabas, Hermas and the Didache (Donnellan Lectures for 1920; 1920); R. H. Connolly, OSB, 'The Didache in Relation to the Epistle of Barnabas', JTS 33 (1932), pp. 237–53. F. E. Vokes, The Riddle of the Didache (1938), with bibl. E. Peterson, 'Ueber einige Probleme der Didache-Ueberlieferung', Riv. A.C. 27 (1951), pp. 37–60. B. C. Butler, OSB, 'The Literary Relations of Didache, Ch. xvi', JTS NS 11 (1960), pp. 265–83; id., 'The "Two Ways" in the Didache', ibid. 12 (1961), pp. 27–38. L. Clerici, Einsammlung der Zerstreuten: Liturgiegeschichtliche Untersuchung zur Vor- und Nachgeschichte der Fürbitte für die Kirche in Didache 9, 4 und 10, 5 (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 44; 1965); A. Vööbus, Liturgical Traditions in the Didache (Stockholm, 1968). S. Giet, L'Énigme de la Didachè (posthumously pub., 1970); G. Schöllgens, 'Die Didache als Kirchenordnung', Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 29 (1986), pp. 5–26. C. N. Jefford (ed.), The Didache in Context: Essays on its Text, History and Transmission (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 77; 1995). On the Eucharistic Prayers, see also Jungmann, 1 (1958 edn.), pp. 15–17; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 11–13, and lit. cited. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 225 f. (nos. 1735 f.). J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 29–39; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 79–82 and 557.

Didascalia Apostolorum. An early 'Church Order', professedly 'the Catholic Teaching of the Twelve Apostles and holy Disciples of our Redeemer' (Syriac title). Its author, prob. a physician who had been converted from Judaism, seems to have composed it in N. Syria in the earlier half of the 3rd cent. The work is addressed to readers in various states of life, esp. married persons (chs. 2–3), and deals with such subjects as the Bishop's duties, penance, liturgical worship, behaviour during persecution, widows and deaconesses, the settlement of disputes and the administration of offerings; but the arrangement is unmethodical and disorderly. A double anointing precedes Baptism; none follows. It is esp. directed against Christians who regard the Jewish ceremonial law as still binding. The author is far more lenient than his W. contemporaries (*Tertullian, *Cyprian) in allowing repentant sinners back to Communion. A six-days' fast before Easter is enjoined.

The work, orig. in Gk., survives complete only in a Syriac version, with substantial portions in Latin. As it was worked over and embodied in the *Apostolic Constitutions, much of the Greek text can be reconstructed with tolerable certainty. Among the sources used are the '*Pericope Adulterae' (Jn 7: 53–8: 11), the *Didache, the *Ignatian Epp., *Hermas, and the *Sibylline Oracles (Book 4); the author prob. also made use of other 2nd-cent. sources.

Syr. text ed. P. de *Lagarde, Leipzig, 1854; crit. edn., with Eng. tr., by A. Vööbus (CSCO 401–2 and 407–8, Scriptores Syri, 175–6 and 179–80; 1979). Lat. text, partly constructed by Funk, in F. X. Funk (ed.), Didascalia et Constitutiones Apostolorum, 1 (Paderborn, 1905), pp. 2–384, with introd., pp. iii–xiv. R. H. *Connolly, OSB, Didascalia Apostolorum: The Syriac Version translated and accompanied by the Verona Latin Fragments (Oxford, 1929). Lat. version ed. E. Tidner (TU 75; 1963). Gk. frags. ed. J. V. Bartlet, 'Fragments of the Didascalia Apostolorum', JTS 18 (1916–17), pp. 301–9. Convenient Eng. tr. by S. [P.] Brock and M. Vasey, The Liturgical Portions of the Didascalia (Grove Liturgical Study, 29; 1982). P. Galtier, SJ, 'La Date de la Didascalie des Apôtres', RHE 13 (1947), pp. 315–51. K. *Rahner, SJ, 'Busslehre und Busspraxis der Didascalia Apostolorum', ZKT 72 (1950), pp. 257–81., repr. in revised form in id., Schriften zur Theologie, 11 (1973), pp. 327–59 (Eng. tr., 15, 1983, pp. 225–45). CPG 1 (1983), p. 229 (no. 1738). J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 147–52; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 84 f. and 558, both with bibl.

Diderot, Denis (1713–84), French *Encyclopaedist. A native of Langres in Burgundy, he studied there with the *Jesuits and in Paris, but soon gave up ideas of a career in the Church or the law, and after a bohemian youth worked as a translator from English. He published two controversial works, Pensées philosophiques (1746), a defence of rational *deism against atheism, and Lettre sur les aveugles (1749), whose materialist and anti-religious implications earned him a spell in prison. A publisher's suggestion in 1746 that he should translate Ephraim Chambers's Cyclopedia developed into a project to edit, with the help of J. Le R. *D'Alembert, a new and more ambitious French encyclopaedia, which became the source of Diderot's livelihood and his chief occupation for some 20 years (see ENCYCLOPAEDISTS). His initial estrangement from the Church can perhaps be attributed primarily to impatience with the sexual restraints which it imposed, but intellectual obstacles increased it. Influenced by the natural religion of the third Earl of Shaftesbury (whose Inquiry Concerning Virtue he had translated in 1745), the epistemology of J. *Locke, and contemporary scientific enquiry, Diderot moved from rationalist deism to a materialist empiricism on *Epicurean lines, which dispensed with belief in a deity. Atheism, however, confronted him with severe moral difficulties. His original work as a dramatist and art critic is permeated with a desire to see the stage and picture gallery take over from the pulpit; and his later creative writings, often in dialogue form and all intended only for posthumous publication, show a striking preoccupation with ethical problems. The trio of dialogues usually known as Le Rêve de D'Alembert (1769, pub. 1830) is a brilliant presentation of his boldest philosophical and scientific ideas and their moral implications. La Religieuse (1760, pub. 1796) is an attack, in a vivid fictional narrative, not only on the contemporary social abuse of forced religious vows, but on the physical and psychological unnaturalness of the monastic life itself. Le Neveu de Rameau (begun *c.*1761, pub. 1823) presents a picture of a cynical parasite which involves discussion of the nature of social morality and of the place of genius in society. Jacques le fataliste (1773, pub. 1796) explores the conflict between materialist *determinism and moral freedom in a mock-picaresque tale influenced by Sterne's Tristram Shandy.

The old standard edn. of his collected works (ed. J. Assézat and M. Tourneux, 20 vols., Paris, 1875–7) is being superseded by that ed. H. Dieckmann and others (Paris, 1975 ff. [33 vols. projected]). Correspondence, ed. G. Roth and J. Varloot (16 vols., ibid., 1955–70). Studies by J. Morley (2 vols., London, 1878), H. Gillot (Paris, 1937), F. Venturi (tr. into Fr., Paris, 1939), L. G. Crocker (East Lansing, Mich., 1954; London, 1955; 2nd edn., 1966), R. Pomeau (Paris, 1967), and A. M. Wilson (New York, 1972). P. Hermand, Les Idées morales de Diderot (Bibliothèque de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Paris, 2nd ser. 1; 1923); J. Thomas, L'Humanisme de Diderot ([1932]; 2nd edn., 1938); J. R. Loy, Diderot's Determined Fatalism: A Critical Appreciation of Jacques le Fataliste (New York, 1950); G. May, Diderot et 'La Religieuse' (New Haven, Conn., and Paris, 1954). Collection of arts. from various sources ed. J. Schlobach, Denis Diderot (Wege der Forschung, 655; 1992). See also bibl. to ENCYCLOPAEDISTS.

Didymus (the Gk. form of the Heb. 'Thomas', i.e. 'twin'). An alternative name in Jn. 11: 16, 20: 24, 21: 2 for the Apostle *Thomas.

Didymus the Blind (*c.*313–98), *Alexandrian theologian. He was blind from infancy. Of immense erudition, he was, acc. to *Rufinus, entrusted by St *Athanasius with the direction of the '*Catechetical School' at Alexandria, where he numbered St *Jerome and Rufinus among his pupils. Though a staunch *Nicene in trinitarian theology, he was regarded by Jerome as too deeply influenced by *Origen, and indeed he was condemned as an Origenist at the Council of *Constantinople in 553. As a result of this condemnation much of his vast literary output (mainly scriptural commentaries, but also incl. a commentary on Origen's De Principiis) has perished. His 'On the Holy Spirit' (in Jerome's translation) and a mutilated text of 'Against the Manichees' have long been known, as well as many fragments of his exegesis. In the 18th cent. J. A. Mingarelli claimed 'On the Trinity' for Didymus, though doubts have been cast on this attribution in modern times. Books 4 and 5 of St *Basil's Contra Eunomium have been attributed to him, and (less plausibly) St *Gregory of Nyssa's Adversus Arium et Sabellium. An accidental discovery of a group of 6th- or 7th-cent. papyrus codices near Toura, south of Cairo, in 1941 (which also includes some works of Origen) brought to light his commentaries on Job, Zechariah, and Genesis, as well as commentaries on Ecclesiastes and Psalms 20–44, the authenticity of which is uncertain. These discoveries confirm Origen's influence on his writings and provide much greater insight into his methods of scriptural exegesis which significantly develop the Origenist heritage.

Editio princeps of De Trinitate, by J. A. Mingarelli, Bologna, 1769; repr., with other writings of Didymus, in J. P. Migne, PG 39. 131–1818 (the only collected edn.). Crit. edn. of De Trinitate, with Ger. tr., by J. Hönscheid and I. Seiler (Beiträge zur klassischen Philologie, 44, 52, etc.; Meisenheim am Glam, 1975 ff.). Many exegetical frags. in a crit. edn. by K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 15; 1933), pp. 1–45; frags. of comm. on Psalms ed. E. Mühlenberg, Psalmenkommentare aus der Katenenüberlieferung, 1 (Patristische Texte und Studien, 15; 1975), pp. 119–375, and 2 (ibid. 16; 1977). Comm. on Job ed. A. Henrichs and others (Papyrologische Texte und Abhandlungen 1, 2, 3, 31/1, etc.; 1968 ff.); that on Zech. ed. with full introd., notes, and Fr. tr., by L. Doutreleau, SJ (SC 83–5; 1962); that on Gen., with Fr. tr., by P. Nautin and L. Doutreleau, SJ (ibid. 233 and 244; 1976–8). Comm. on Eccles. ed. G. Binder, L. Liesenborghs, and others (Papyrologische Texte und Abhandlungen, 9, 13, 16, 22, 24–6; 1969–83) and on Pss. by M. Gronewald and others (ibid. 4, 6, 7, 8, 12; 1968–70), with suppl. by id. in B. Kramer, Kleine Texte aus dem Tura-Fund (ibid. 34; 1985), pp. 121–35, with other frags. from Toura in the same vol. G. Bardy, Didyme l'Aveugle (1910). J. Lebon, 'Le Ps.-Basile (Adv. Eunom., iv–v) est bien Didyme d'Alexandrie', Muséon, 1 (1937), pp. 61–83; W. M. Hayes, SJ, 'Didymus the Blind is the Author of Adversus Eunomium IV/V', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 17 (Oxford, 1982), pp. 1108–14, with survey of earlier lit. L. Doutreleau, SJ, 'Le De Trinitate est-il l'œuvre de Didyme l'Aveugle?', Rech. S.R. 45 (1957), pp. 514–57; L. Béranger, 'Sur deux énigmes du De Trinitate de Didyme l'Aveugle', ibid. 51 (1963), pp. 255–67. W. A. Bienert, 'Allegoria' und 'Anagoge' bei Didymos dem Blinden von Alexandria (Patristische Texte und Studien, 13; 1972). J. [H.] Tigcheler, Didyme l'Aveugle et l'Exégèse allégorique: Étude sémantique de quelques termes exégétiques importants de son commentaire sur Zacharie (Graecitas Christianorum Primaeva, 6; Nijmegen, 1977). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 104–11 (nos. 2544–72). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 280 f. and 604 f. F. M. Young, From Nicaea to Chalcedon (1983), pp. 83–91, 341, and 367 f. W. *Bright in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 827–9, s.v.; A. Van Roey in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 416–27, s.v. 'Didyme l'Aveugle'.

Dies Irae (Lat., 'Day of wrath'), the opening words, and hence the name, of the *sequence in the Mass for the Dead in the W. Church. It is now thought to go back to a rhymed prayer of late 12th-cent. *Benedictine origin. To this prayer, depicting the soul awaiting judgement, a *Franciscan (possibly *Thomas of Celano) has added a greater sense of urgency, reflecting the eschatological mood of the mid-13th cent. The first printed Missal containing it as the sequence for Requiem Masses is that of Venice, 1485. Until 1969 its use was obligatory in Masses on *All Souls' Day, on the day of decease or burial of the person for whom the Mass was offered, and on the anniversary of the death, though it could be omitted on other days. It may now also be omitted in all Masses of the Dead. Many translations into English have been made (e.g. EH 351), but the vigour of the concise Latin original is usually lost.

F. Ermini, Il Dies Irae e l'innologia ascetica nel secolo decimoterzo: Studi sulla litteratura latina del medio evo (1903). Raby, pp. 443–50, incl. orig. text, p. 448, and note of trs., p. 449, with bibl., p. 485. J. C. Payen, 'Le Dies Irae dans la prédication de la mort et des fins dernières au Moyen-Age', Romania, 86 (1965), pp. 48–76. K. Vellekoop, Dies irae, dies illa: Studien zur Frühgeschichte einer Sequenz (Utrecht diss., Bilthoven, 1978).

Dietrich of Nieheim (or of 'Niem') (*c.*1340–1418), Papal notary and historical writer. Entering the service of the curia he became Abbreviator and Scriptor, and published two treatises on curial administration. He was appointed Bp. of Verden by Boniface IX in 1395 without, however, receiving consecration, and was deprived of the office four years later. After the election of Gregory XII he took a prominent part in the efforts to end the *Great Schism. He was present at the Council of *Constance (1415), where he renounced *John XXIII and vigorously upheld the *conciliar standpoint. His historical works, though one-sided, are an invaluable source for contemporary events, esp. 'Nemus Unionis' (1408) and 'De Schismate' (1409/10). Of his writings advocating reform the most important is 'Avisamenta edita in Concilio Constanciensi' (1414/15), in which he asserted the plenary powers of a General Council including its right to depose the Pope, attacked clerical abuses, and put forward schemes for ecclesiastical reform.

Crit. edns. of 'De Schismate' by G. Erler (Leipzig, 1890); of 'Avisamenta' in the Acta Concilii Constanciensis, ed. H. Finke, 4 (1928), pp. 584–636; of 'De Modis uniendi et reformandi ecclesiam in concilio universali' by H. Heimpel (Quellen zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters und der Renaissance, 3; 1933); id., 'Eine unbekannte Schrift Dietrichs v. Niem über die Berufung der Generalkonzilien (1413/1414)', Sb. (Heid.), 1929/30, Abh. 1. Political and historical writings which have come to light since 1948, ed. A. Lhotsky and others (MGH, Staatsschriften des späteren Mittelalters, 5; 2 parts, 1956–80), with introd. by K. Colberg in pt. 2, pp. vii–lvii, and list of his works with edns., p. lviii. G. Erler, Dietrich von Nieheim (Leipzig, 1887); H. Heimpel, Dietrich von Niem (Westfälische Biographien, Bd. 2; 1932); K. Pivec and H. Heimpel, Neue Forschungen zu Dietrich von Niem (Nachr. (Gött.), 1951, Heft 4). E. F. Jacob, 'Dietrich of Niem. His Place in the Conciliar Movement', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, Manchester, 19 (1935), pp. 388–410; repr. in id., Essays in the Conciliar Epoch (Manchester, 1943), pp. 24–43, with additional notes in 3rd edn. (1963), pp. 241–4. K. Colberg in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 3 (1986), cols. 1037 f., s.v. See also works cited under CONCILIAR THEORY digamy. In the early Church, second marriages were generally looked upon with disfavour (cf. 1 Cor. 7: 39 f.). *Athenagoras went so far as to regard them as 'a specious adultery' (Legat. 33), and this view became part of the official teaching of certain heretical bodies (*Montanists, *Novatianists). Even the orthodox Council of *Neocaesarea (314) presupposed the imposition of a slight penance on digamists (can. 7). The Council of *Nicaea (325), however, in providing for the reconciliation of Novatianists, insisted (can. 8) that those who had married twice should not be excluded from Christian fellowship.

The E. Church has always been more severe in this matter than the W. Second marriages were often held not to be marriages at all, and even now the nuptial blessing is not given in the same form as for a first marriage. Even more suspect were third marriages, and since the 10th cent. fourth marriages have been forbidden altogether.

St Paul's words that a bishop must be the husband of one wife (1 Tim. 3: 2: μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἄνδρα) were widely held, e.g. by *Innocent I and St *Augustine, to make digamy a disqualification for Ordination, though St *Jerome held the contrary view (Ep. 69). In RC canon law, the impediment, still retained in the 1917 Code (CIC, can. 984, § 4), no longer persists.

diggers. See FOSSORS.

Diggers (17th cent.). A section of the *Levellers, founded in 1649 by Gerrard Winstanley. Its adherents held that Christian principles required a communistic mode of life and the cultivation of crown property and common land with the spade. Work was started in April 1649 on waste land at St George's Hill and Oatlands, Surrey. Winstanley expounded his principles and schemes in several pamphlets and other camps were set up briefly in the Home Counties and Midlands, but the movement was suppressed within a year.

G. H. Sabine (ed.), The Works of Gerrard Winstanley, with appendix of docs. relating to the Digger Movement (New York, 1941); [G.] Winstanley, The Law of Freedom, and other Writings, ed., with introd., [J. E.] C. Hill (Penguin Classics, 1973; reissued, with postscript, 1983). A hitherto unknown pamphlet by Winstanley, 'England's Spirit Unfoulded', was ed. G. E. Aylmer in Past and Present, 40 (1968), pp. 3–15; 'A Declaration of the grounds and Reasons, why we the poor Inhabitants of the Parrish of Iver in Buckinghamshire, have begun to digge . . .' (issued 1 May 1650) was ed. K. Thomas, ibid. 42 (1969), pp. 57–68. O. Lutaud, Winstanley, Socialisme et Christianisme sous Cromwell (1976); [J. E.] C. Hill, The Religion of Gerrard Winstanley (Past and Present, Suppl. 5; 1978); T. W. Hayes, Winstanley the Digger: A Literary Analysis of Radical Ideas in the English Revolution (Cambridge, Mass., 1979); G. E. Aylmer, 'The Religion of Gerrard Winstanley', in J. F. McGregor and B. Reay (eds.), Radical Religion in the English Revolution (Oxford, 1984), pp. 91–119. N. Baxter, 'Gerrard Winstanley's Experimental Knowledge of God (The Perception of the Spirit and the Acting of Reason)', JEH 39 (1988), pp. 184–201.

dikirion, trikirion (Gk. δικήριον, τρικήριον). Candles, held in candlesticks with two and three branches respectively, used by E. bishops when giving the blessing during a pontifical Liturgy. They symbolize the two Natures of Christ and the three Persons of the Trinity.

Dillmann, Christian Friedrich August (1823–94), German biblical scholar and orientalist. He studied at Tübingen under H. *Ewald and F. C. *Baur, and later worked on Ethiopic MSS in Paris, London, and Oxford, producing catalogues of the Ethiopic MSS in the British Library and the Bodleian Library (1847–8). In 1848 he returned to Tübingen, where in 1853 he obtained a professorship, and later he held chairs at Kiel (1854), Giessen (1864), and Berlin (1869). To him more than any other scholar is due the revival of Ethiopic studies in the 19th cent. He was also a capable OT critic. Among his works were a grammar (1857; 2nd edn., 1899; Eng. tr., 1907) and lexicon (1865) of Ethiopic, and editions of Ethiopic texts of the OT down to Kings, of the Apocrypha, and of some non-canonical books, while late in life he produced commentaries on the *Hexateuch (1875–86; Eng. tr. of Genesis by W. B. Stevenson, 1897) and on Isaiah (1890).

Dillmann's Handbuch der alttestamentlichen Theologie, posthumously ed. R. Kittel (1895). Portrait and very brief Life prefixed to vol. 5 of Dillmann's edn. of the Ethiopic OT (Libri Apocryphi, Berlin, 1894; no pagination). W. Baudissin in PRE (3rd edn.), 4 (1898), pp. 662–9, s.v., with list of obituary notices.

Dilthey, Wilhelm (1833–1911), German philosopher of history and culture. Born at Biebrich, nr. Wiesbaden, he was professor successively at Basle (1866), Kiel (1868), Breslau (1871), and Berlin (1882, in succession to H. Lotze). He was also a leading member of the Prussian Academy and entrusted with its edition of I. *Kant (1902 ff.). In the front rank of historians of modern culture and ideas and also the virtual creator of the philosophy of history in its present form, Dilthey stressed the fundamental differences between the methods of the humanities or 'human sciences' (Geisteswissenschaften), employed in the study of culture, art, religion, etc., and those adapted to the natural sciences (Naturwissenschaften). He worked out his position in his Einleitung in die Geisteswissenschaften (vol. 1, 1883) which, like many of Dilthey's other works, was never completed. His belief that the current methods of empirical psychology failed to reach the real spiritual life of persons as studied in the humanities issued in his Ideen über eine beschreibende und zergliedernde Psychologie (1894), in which he elaborated the ideal of a 'descriptive and analytic' psychology. He was much influenced by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, on whom he wrote a massive Life (Part 1, 1870; Part 2, pub. 1966); like him, he saw the act of understanding as an attempt to recreate the creative process of the writer or artist. He was critical, however, of the possibility of a philosophy of history in the traditional sense, as well as of a systematic sociology, holding that the spiritual life was too complex to be comprehended in formulae. Dilthey's own studies in religion were esp. directed to it as an element in human culture. The religious Weltanschauung, unlike the philosophical, was restricted in that it did not aim at universality. His doctrines on history have exercised influence on Christian thought, esp. through E. *Troeltsch. His extended studies in hermeneutics, which, however, take the word in a very wide sense, are very relevant to the problems of biblical exegesis.

Dilthey's works, most of which were orig. pub. in the Abh. (Berl.), were collected and ed. G. Misch and others (Berlin, 1914 ff.; the first 12 vols. were repr. and the edn. cont. by M. Redeker and others, Göttingen, 1957 ff.; 20 vols. to 1990). Diary and letters for 1852–70 ed. C. Misch (Leipzig and Berlin, 1933); further collections of correspondence ed. S. von der Schulenburg (Halle, 1923) and E. Weniger (Abh. (Berl.), 1936, no. 9). Eng. tr. of various extracts, with introd., by H. P. Rickman, Meaning in History: W. Dilthey's Thought on History and Society (1961), and Selected Writings, tr. by id. (Cambridge, 1976). Selected Works [in Eng. tr.] also ed. R. A. Makkreel and F. Rodi (6 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1985 ff.). Separate Eng. tr. of Einleitung in die Geisteswissenschaften (Introduction to the Human Sciences), with introd., by R. J. Betanzos [1988]. H. A. Hodges, Wilhelm Dilthey: An Introduction (1944); id., The Philosophy of Wilhelm Dilthey (1952), both with detailed bibl.; H. Diwald, Wilhelm Dilthey: Erkenntnistheorie und Philosophie der Geschichte (Göttingen, 1963); R. A. Makkreel, Dilthey: Philosopher of the Human Studies (Princeton, NJ [1975]); M. Ermarth, Wilhelm Dilthey: The Critique of Historical Reason (Chicago and London, 1978); H. P. Rickman, Wilhelm Dilthey: Pioneer of Human Studies (1979); T. Plantinga, Historical Understanding in the Thought of Wilhelm Dilthey (Toronto, etc. [1980]). H. P. Rickman in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 2 (1967), pp. 403–7.

diocese. In ecclesiastical use, normally the territorial unit of administration in the Church. In the RC Church a diocese is now defined as 'a portion of the people of God entrusted for pastoral care to a bishop' (CIC (1983), can. 369), but in practice a diocese normally comprises a particular area. It is governed by a bishop, with the assistance of the lower clergy, and sometimes one or more other bishops; it is usually divided into parishes, which may be grouped into *rural deaneries and *archdeaconries (though the latter have not survived in the RC Church). Dioceses are commonly associated to form a *province, over which one of the diocesan bishops presides, with varying powers of intervention in the affairs of other dioceses. Traditionally the bishop is supreme in his diocese and possesses *ordinary jurisdiction.

In the early days of the Church, when Christianity was chiefly an urban religion, dioceses covered only the principal towns and cities. As the new religion spread, the limits of the various dioceses were extended and new rural dioceses were created, until now there is hardly any part of the world which is not within the jurisdiction of some diocesan bishop.

The word 'diocese' (Gk. διοίκησις) only gradually established itself in its current Christian sense. The original word for a local group of Christians was simply a 'church' (ἐκκλησία). Later, e.g. in the *Apostolic (cans. 14, 15) and *Nicene (can. 16) Canons, it was 'parish' (παροικία), and in the E. Church this word is still retained for the territory subject to a bishop, διοίκησις being used for the *patriarch's area of control. In the W., however, the word was in use in Africa in its modern sense at the end of the 4th cent., though parochia continued to be employed down to the 9th cent. and even later. The word also had a long secular history for the larger administrative units of the later Roman Empire. Meaning primarily 'administration', it was first used in Cicero's time of a territorial area over which supervision was exercised, namely of the three regions of Cibyra, Apamea, and Synnada added to Cilicia (Cic., Ep. ad Fam. 3. 8. 4; 13. 67. 1). Under *Diocletian it was adopted for the 12 new regions into which the Empire was divided for the purposes of civil government, the largest of these dioceses being 'Oriens' (16 provinces) and the smallest Britain (4 provinces). Its ecclesiastical use was of slow growth. As late as *Anastasius Bibliothecarius it was applied to the ecclesiastical province, as distinct from the area governed by a single bishop.

On the history of the word, see C. D. *Ducange, Glossarium, s.v.; J. *Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticae, 9, esp. cap. 2, sect. 2; W. *Bright, The Canons of the First Four General Councils (2nd edn., 1892), pp. 101–5. See also G. Hill, English Dioceses: A History of their Limits (1900).

Diocletian (Gaius Aurelius Valerius Diocletianus) (245–313), Roman Emperor from 284 to 305. Diocles, who was born of humble parents at Salona in Dalmatia, took up a military career, serving with distinction under Probus and Aurelian. On 17 Sept. 284, on the murder of Numerian, the army proclaimed him Emperor at Chalcedon. He was defeated in the ensuing hostilities against Carinus, Numerian's joint-Emperor; but as Carinus was promptly slain by his own officers, Diocletian (as he now chose to call himself) became undisputed master. Endowed with immense energy, great gifts of organization, and a mind dominated by logic, he made it his main purpose to stabilize and reform the Empire. To this end, he created an absolute monarchy, centring all power in himself as the semi-Divine ruler, and making his palace the domus divina and his own person sacred; and henceforth the Senate was to be permanently in a subordinate position. In 286 he associated Maximian in the government as co-Augustus, taking the Eastern Empire for himself and giving Maximian the West. In 293 he turned the 'imperial college' into a tetrarchy by the creation of two 'Caesars', Constantius Chlorus and Galerius. He further divided the Empire into twelve *dioceses, each consisting of several provinces, which, from the 4th cent., formed the basis of the territorial organization of the Church. With this strong organization, the Empire was consolidated and somewhat extended. Diocletian also introduced far-reaching military, administrative, fiscal, and economic reforms, including the celebrated Edict on Maximum Prices ('De pretiis rerum venalium') of 301. On 1 May 305 he formally abdicated at Nicomedia, compelling his reluctant colleague Maximian to take the same step. He lived his last years in retirement at his large palace at Spalato (Split).

For the greater part of his reign the Christians seem to have enjoyed the tranquillity which had been theirs since the Rescript of Gallienus (260). Only the *Manichees were repressed, by an edict of *c.*298 (dated 31 March but without the year), as a sect lately originating in Persia. It was in 303 that the Great *Persecution broke out. An edict issued at Nicomedia on 23 Feb. enjoined the demolition of churches and the burning of Christian books. Some incidents which followed (fires in the palace at Nicomedia, reports of unrest at Melitene and in Syria) led to further edicts. The next two were directed solely against the clergy. The punishment inflicted for resistance was imprisonment, torture, and, in some cases, death. A fourth edict issued early in 304 enjoined sacrifice to the gods on all subjects. The persecution brought a considerable number of martyrs. Its severity varied in different parts of the Empire acc. to the changing fortunes of the Imperial rulers in the next decade. Its final collapse was due to *Constantine's defeat of Maxentius at the *Milvian Bridge on 28 Oct. 312 and the 'Edict of *Milan' (q.v.) early in the next year.

Good discussion in C. Anc. H. 12 (1939), esp. chs. 9 (by H. Mattingly), 10, and 11 (by W. Ensslin); and, for the Persecution, ch. 19 (by N. H. Baynes). W. Ensslin, Zur Ostpolitik des Kaisers Diokletian, Sb. (Bayr.), 1942, Heft 1; W. Seston, Dioclétien et la tétrarchie. 1. Guerres et réformes, 284–300 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 162; 1946); S. Williams, Diocletian and the Roman Recovery (1985). T. D. Barnes, The New Empire of Diocletian and Constantine (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1982), passim. A. H. M. Jones, The Later Roman Empire 284–602 (3 vols., Oxford, 1964), 1, pp. 37–76, with refs. in 3, pp. 2–10. W. Ensslin in PW, Zweite Reihe, 7 (1948), cols. 2419–95, s.v. 'Valerius (142) Diocletianus'; W. Seston in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 1036–53, s.v. For works on the Persecution, see bibl. to PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Diocletianic Era. The reckoning of time from the year of *Diocletian's accession (AD 284). It is also known as the Era of the Martyrs (though in fact the *persecution of the Christians did not break out till 303; see previous entry). It is still followed by the *Ethiopians and *Copts.

Diodore (d. *c.*390), Bp. of Tarsus. A native of *Antioch, Diodore studied at *Athens and then ruled a monastery near Antioch until the strength of *Arianism drew him into the city to combat it. He also opposed *Julian the Apostate. Banished to Armenia in 372, he later returned and became Bp. of Tarsus in 378. In 381 he was named by *Theodosius I one of the bishops communion with whom was a test of orthodoxy.

As a teacher, he followed the *Antiochene tradition in theology, insisting on literal and historical exegesis and, against *Apollinarius, on the complete humanity of Christ. His pupils included St John *Chrysostom and *Theodore of Mopsuestia. Apart from the recently published Comm. on the Psalms, only fragments of his very extensive writings (largely biblical commentaries) survive. Many were destroyed by Arians, while others perished when the condemnation of his pupil Theodore made Diodore himself suspect of Christological heresy.

Comm. on Psalms, ed. J.-M. Olivier (CCSG 6, etc.; 1980 ff.). Considerable frags. of his 'De Fato' are preserved in *Photius, Bibl. cod. 233; cf. ibid. 102 and also 18, where Photius asserts, apparently by an error, that Diodore was condemned by the Fifth General Council of 553. Frags. ed. by B. Corderius (Antwerp, 1643–6) and by A. *Mai; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 33. 1545–1628. Syriac frags. ed. P. [A.] de *Lagarde, Analecta Syriaca (Leipzig, 1858), pp. 91–100. Further frags. in K. Staab (ed.), Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 15; 1933), pp. 82–112, and R. Devreesse, Les Anciens Commentateurs grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (ST 201; 1959), pp. 155–67. M. Brière, 'Quelques Fragments syriaques de Diodore, évêque de Tarse (378–394?)', Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, 30 (1946), pp. 231–83, incl. text and Fr. tr.; R. Abramowski, 'Der theologische Nachlass des Diodor von Tarsus', ZNTW 42 (1949), pp. 19–69, with text. A. *Harnack, Diodor von Tarsus: Vier pseudojustinische Schriften als Eigentum Diodors nachgewiesen (TU 21. 4; 1901). M. Richard, 'Les Traités de Cyrille d'Alexandrie contre Diodore et Théodore et les fragments dogmatiques de Diodore de Tarse', in Mélanges dédiés à la mémoire de Félix Grat, 1 (1946), pp. 99–116, repr. in his Opera Minora, 2 (Turnhout and Louvain, 1977), no. 51; R. Abramowski, 'Untersuchungen zu Diodor von Tarsus', ZNTW 30 (1931), pp. 234–62; E. Schweizer, 'Diodor von Tarsus als Exeget', ibid. 40 (1941), pp. 33–75. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 342–4 (nos. 3815–22). J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 397–401; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 318 f. and 615, with further bibl. L. Abramowski in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 496–504, s.v. 'Diodore (4) de Tarse'; C. Schäublin in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 763–7, s.v. 'Diodor von Tarsus'.

Diognetus, the Epistle to. A letter written by an unknown Christian to an otherwise unknown inquirer. It probably dates from the 2nd, or perhaps the 3rd, cent. Answering three questions (ch. 1), the author explains why paganism and Judaism cannot be tolerated (2–4), describes Christians as the soul of the world (5–6), and insists that Christianity is the unique revelation of God, whose love works man's salvation (7–10). Chs. 11 f., which contain a *Logos-doctrine and a comparison of the Church to Paradise, are widely regarded as a fragment of another work. The letter survived antiquity in a single 13th–14th-cent. MS (which was destroyed at Strasbourg in 1870), in which it followed certain treatises wrongly ascribed to St *Justin Martyr.

Ed. princeps, by H. *Stephanus (Paris, 1592). The Epistle is commonly included in edns. of the *Apostolic Fathers; also repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 2. 1167–86. Good modern edns., with introd. and notes, by H. G. Meecham (Manchester, 1949) and by H. I. Marrou (SC 33; 1951; 2nd edn., 33 bis, 1965). Eng. trs. by L. B. Radford (1908) and in collected trs. of Apostolic Fathers. G. N. Bonwetsch and E. *Schwartz have argued that chs. 11 f. are to be ascribed to *Hippolytus. R. Brändle, Die Ethik der 'Schrift an Diognet' (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 64; Zurich [1975]). T. Baumeister, 'Zur Datierung der Schrift an Diognet', VC 42 (1988), pp. 105–11. M. Rizzi, La questione dell' unità dell' 'Ad Diognetum' (Studia Patristica Mediolanensia, 16; 1989), with summary in Eng. CPG 1 (1983), p. 55 (no. 1112). J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 248–53; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 77 f., and 556 f. S. Zincone in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 969–71, s.v. 'Diogneto'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 237.

Dionysius (1) the Areopagite. His conversion by St Paul at Athens is recorded in Acts 17: 34. Dionysius (2) of Corinth calls him the first bishop of the Church at Athens. Later, confusion was caused by the attempt to identify Dionysius (3) of Paris with him, and to assign to him the writings on mystical theology described below under (6).

Dionysius (2) (*c.*170), Bp. of *Corinth. He wrote several letters briefly described by *Eusebius (HE 4. 23), in one of which he thanks the Roman Church for assisting Corinth and mentions that *Clement's letter was habitually read in their Church. Feast day in the E., 8 Apr.

Four frags. of Dionysius' Ep. to Rome are preserved in Eusebius (HE 4. 23. 10–12, and 2. 25. 8), who also records that Dionysius wrote an Ep. to the Nicomedians directed against *Marcion (4. 23. 4). Frags. collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, 1 (2nd edn., 1846), pp. 175–201. W. Bauer, Rechtgläubigkeit und Ketzerei im ältesten Christentum (1934), esp. pp. 110–12 and 128–31 (Eng. tr., 1972, pp. 106–8 and 124–7). P. Nautin, Lettres et écrivains chrétiens des IIe et IIIe siècles (Patristica, 2; 1961), pp. 13–32 ('Denys de Corinthe et ses correspondants'). Id. in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 261 f., s.v. 'Denys (9) de Corinthe'.

Dionysius (3) of Paris, St (*c.*250), also St Denys, patron saint of France. Acc. to *Gregory of Tours (6th cent.), he was one of seven 'bishops' sent to convert Gaul and, after becoming Bp. of Paris, suffered martyrdom. In 626 his remains were translated to King Dagobert's foundation at *St-Denis, near Paris. In the 8th cent. it was believed that he had been sent by *Clement of Rome, c. AD 90; and in the 9th-cent. Life by Hilduin, Abbot of St-Denis (d. 840), he was further identified with Dionysius the Areopagite (1), and consequently believed to be the author of the Pseudo-Dionysian writings (6). Feast day, 9 Oct. (when he is commemorated with Sts Rusticus and Eleutherius).

Gregory of Tours, Hist. Franc. 1. 30. AASS, Oct. 4 (1780), pp. 865–987. BHL 1 (1898–9), nos. 2171–89. Good survey of problem in Eng., with refs. to lit. to date, by S. McK. Crosby, The Royal Abbey of Saint Denis from its Beginnings to the Death of Suger, 475–1151, ed. P. Z. Blum (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1987), pp. 3–12 ('Saint Denis, Legend and History'). R. J. Loenertz, OP, 'La Légende parisienne de S. Denys l'Aréopagite. Sa genèse et son premier témoin', Anal. Boll. 69 (1951), pp. 217–37. G. M. Spiegel, 'The Cult of Saint Denis and Capetian Kingship', Journal of Medieval History, 1 (1975), pp. 43–69; repr. in S. Wilson (ed.), Saints and their Cults (1983), pp. 141–68. J. Semmler, 'Saint-Denis: von der bischöflichen Coemeterialbasilika zur königlichen Benediktinerabtei', in H. Atsma (ed.), La Neustrie: Les pays au nord de la Loire de 650 à 850, 2 (Beihefte der Francia, 16/2; Sigmaringen, 1989), pp. 75–123. A. Patschovsky and G. Binding in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 3 (1986), cols. 1077–9, s.v.

Dionysius (4) the Great, St (d. *c.*264), Bp. of *Alexandria. Acc. to *Eusebius, Dionysius was a pupil of *Origen and became head of the *catechetical school in Alexandria, *c.*233; both assertions have been questioned by some modern scholars. He became Bp. of Alexandria in 248. During the *Decian persecution (250) he fled from the city, was captured, escaped, and lived in hiding. He returned (?251), but was banished during the persecution of Valerian (257). Again he returned to face civil war, famine, and plague, and died an old man, *c.*264. Feast day, 17 Nov.

His importance as a theologian rests on the writings evoked by the many controversies in which he was engaged. He decided to readmit the lapsed to the Church (see CYPRIAN) and, with Pope *Stephen, not to rebaptize heretics and schismatics, though he refused to break with the Churches which did so. He attacked *Sabellianism, but was himself accused of tritheism by *Dionysius of Rome (5, below), who, however, accepted his defence. Later, *Athanasius defended, but *Basil rejected, his orthodoxy. He also opposed *Paul of Samosata. He showed notable independence as a biblical critic, setting out strong arguments for denying the common authorship of the Fourth Gospel and Rev. His treatise De Natura is the earliest extant Christian refutation of *Epicureanism.

His writings have survived mainly in extracts preserved by Eusebius, Athanasius, and others.

Frags. ed. S. de Magistris (Rome, 1796); also in J. P. Migne, PG 10. 1233–344 and 1575–602. Crit. edn. by C. L. Feltoe (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1904). Eng. tr. also by C. L. Feltoe [1918]. W. A. Bienert, Dionysius von Alexandrien (Patristische Texte und Studien, 21; 1978). P. Nautin, Lettres et écrivains chrétiens des IIe et IIIe siècles (Patristica, 2; 1961), pp. 151–65. C. Andresen, ' "Siegreiche Kirche" im Aufstieg des Christentums. Untersuchungen zu Eusebius von Caesarea und Dionysius von Alexandrien', in Aufstieg und Niedergang der Römischen Welt, 2. 23. 1 (1979), pp. 387–459. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 187–99 (nos. 1550–612). J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 101–9. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 210 f. and 590. B. F. *Westcott in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 850–2; A. Van Roey in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 248–53, s.v. 'Denys (4) Le Grand'; W. A. Bienert in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 767–71, s.v. 'Dionysius von Alexandrien'.

Dionysius (5), St (d. 268), Bp. of *Rome from 259. Little is known of him except his controversy on *subordinationism with *Dionysius (4) of Alexandria. *Basil of Caesarea (Ep. 70) records that he sent help to the Church of Caesarea when it was invaded by barbarians (perh. 264). Feast day, 26 Dec.

Genuine and spurious writings in J. P. Migne, PL 5. 99–136. The chief authorities are scattered refs. in Eusebius, HE 7, and in *Athanasius, De Decretis, 25 and 26, and De Sententiis Dionysii, passim. J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 22 f., s.v.

Dionysius (6) the Pseudo-Areopagite (*c.*500), mystical theologian. The name given to the author of a corpus of theological writings to which the supporters of *Severus (Patr. of Antioch, 512–18) appealed at a colloquy at Constantinople in 533, attributing them to Dionysius (1) of Athens. Though at an early date Hypatius, Bp. of Ephesus (*c.*520–40), rejected the attribution, it was normally accepted until, and even after, the 16th cent. Since the author draws on *Proclus (410/2–85) and is first cited by Severus, he is believed to have written in the early 6th cent. (perhaps as late as the 520s), probably in Syria.

His extant writings, which combine *Neoplatonism with Christianity, are the following: (1) The 'Celestial Hierarchy' (Περὶ τῆς οὐρανίας ἱεραρχίας), which explains how the nine orders of angels mediate God to man. (2) The 'Ecclesiastical Hierarchy' (Περὶ τῆς ἐκκλησιαστικῆς ἱεραρχίας), which deals with the Sacraments and the orders of clergy and laity. (3) The 'Divine Names' (Περὶ θείων ὀνομάτων), which examines the being and attributes of God. (4) The 'Mystical Theology' (Περὶ μυστικῆς θεολογίας), which describes the ascent of the soul to union with God. There also survive ten letters, and Dionysius mentions other parts of an elaborate theological system, probably never achieved.

The aim of all Dionysius' works is the union of the whole created order with God, which union is the final stage of a threefold process of purification, illumination, and perfection or union: a triad which has been vastly influential in the Christian mystical tradition. The way to such union (ἕνωσις) with God, or *deification (θείωσις) as Dionysius is fond of calling it, has several aspects. One aspect is concerned with the use of the sensible created order in achieving deification; this embraces both the use of images as metaphors in theology (e.g. 'God is a consuming fire') and the use of material elements in sacramental action: Dionysius calls this aspect 'symbolic' (συμβολική) theology. In pursuit of it he develops a view of the cosmos as hierarchically ordered with the Trinity at the top, descending through nine choirs of angels, to the terrestrial order, where three sacraments (*Baptism, *Eucharist, and the consecration of *Chrism) are administered by three orders of clergy (bishops, priests and deacons) to the three ranks of those who receive their ministrations (monks, ordinary laity, and those excluded from communion). Another aspect concerns the perfecting of our intellectual concepts in their application to God (or in our praise of God, as Dionysius puts it): this is called 'cataphatic' (καταφατική) theology. But both of these reveal that God is beyond symbols and concepts, and this discovery points to '*apophatic' (ἀποφατική) theology, in which the soul, passing beyond the perceptions of the senses as well as the reasoning of the intellect, is united with the 'ray of divine darkness' and comes to know God through unknowing.

The supposed apostolic authority of these writings, added to their intrinsic value, caused them to exercise a profound influence on medieval theology both in the E. and the W. In the E. Church they were commented on by, among others, John of Scythopolis, St *Maximus the Confessor, and George Pachymeres. In the W. the approval of St *Gregory the Great and *Martin I, and esp. that of the *Lateran Council of 649 which quoted them against the *Monothelites, established the authority of the Dionysian writings. The 9th-cent. translations into Latin by Hilduin and John Scotus *Erigena had little influence in the W., but in the 12th cent. renewed interest in Dionysius, manifest among the *Victorines and in the translation by John the Saracen, led to the adoption of the Dionysian works as one of the bases of medieval theology. They were the subject of commentaries by such doctors as *Hugh of St-Victor, Robert *Grosseteste, St *Albert the Great, St *Thomas Aquinas, and St *Bonaventure; and the medieval mystics, e.g. Meister *Eckhart, John *Tauler, and the author of 'The *Cloud of Unknowing', are deeply indebted to them. A great change in the earlier estimate of them took place in the 16th cent., when not only the Reformers but a few Catholic scholars such as T. *Cajetan, J. *Sirmond, and D. *Petavius contested their authenticity, which was warmly defended by C. *Baronius, St Robert *Bellarmine, L. *Lessius, and others. Only the researches of modern scholars, esp. J. Stiglmayr and H. Koch, have definitely established their 5th-6th cent. date and the relations of the author with Syria and those who showed their opposition to the Definition of *Chalcedon by ignoring it.

The edn. of his works by B. Corderius, SJ (2 vols. fol., Antwerp, 1634) has frequently been repr., e.g. in J. P. Migne, PG 3 and 4 (incl. Lat. tr. and comm. on Dionysius). Crit. edn. by B. R. Suchla ('Divine Names'), G. Heil ('Celestial Hierarchy' and 'Ecclesiastical Hierachy'), and A. M. Ritter ('Mystical Theology' and Letters) (Patristische Texte und Studien, 33 and 36; 1990–1). Earlier edn. of the 'Celestial Hierarchy' by G. Heil, with notes and Fr. tr. by M. de Gandillac and introd. by R. Roques (SC 58; 1958). For Lat. versions see P. Chevallier, OSB (ed.), Dionysiaca: Recueil donnant l'ensemble des traductions latines des ouvrages attribués au Denys de l'Aréopage (2 vols., Paris, 1937). Eng. tr. of his works by C. Luibheid and P. Rorem (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1987). Fr. tr. of his works, with introd. and bibl., by M. de Gandillac (Bibliothèque Philosophique, 1945). J. Stiglmayr, SJ, 'Der Neuplatoniker Proclus als Vorlage des sog. Dionysius Areopagita in der Lehre vom Übel', Hist. J. 16 (1895), pp. 253–73 and 721–48. H. Koch, Pseudo-Dionysius Areopagita in seinen Beziehungen zum Neoplatonismus und Mysterienwesen (Forschungen zur christlichen Litteratur- und Dogmengeschichte, 1, Hefte 2–3; 1900). R. Roques, L'Univers dionysien: Structure hiérarchique du monde selon le Pseudo-Denys (Théologie, 29; 1954); id., Structures théologiques de la gnose à Richard de Saint-Victor (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Section des Sciences Religieuses, 72; 1962), pp. 61–240. W. Völker, Kontemplation und Ekstase bei Pseudo-Dionysius Areopagita (Wiesbaden, 1958). J. Vanneste, SJ, Le Mystère de Dieu: Essai sur la structure rationnelle de la doctrine mystique du Pseudo-Denys l'Aréopagite (Museum Lessianum, Section Philosophique, 45 [1959]). S. Gersh, From Iamblichus to Eriugena: An Investigation of the Prehistory and Evolution of the Pseudo-Dionysian Tradition (Studien zur Problemgeschichte der antiken und mittelalterlichen Philosophie, 8; Leiden, 1978). P. Rorem, Biblical and Liturgical Symbols within the Pseudo-Dionysian Synthesis (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 71; Toronto, 1984). A. Louth, Denys the Areopagite (1989). H. U. von *Balthasar, Herrlichkeit, 2 (1962), pp. 147–214 (Eng. tr., The Glory of the Lord, 2, 1984, pp. 144–210). I. P. Sheldon-Williams in A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (1967), pp. 457–72, with select bibl. p. 685. A. van Daele, SJ, Indices Pseudo-Dionysiani (Louvain, 1941). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 501–5 and 657 f. R. Roques in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 1075–121, s.v. 'Dionysius Areopagita'; id. and others in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 244–429, s.v. 'Denys (2), l'Aréopagite (Le Pseudo-)', with bibl.; R. Roques, M. Cappuyns, OSB, and R. Aubert in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 265–310, s.v. 'Denys (14) le Pseudo-Aréopagite'.

Dionysius (7) Exiguus (5th–6th cent), Scythian monk, famous for his contributions to ecclesiastical chronology and canon law. Very little is known of his life. He seems to have arrived in Rome shortly after the death of Pope *Gelasius I (496); he was certainly alive in 526 and clearly dead by *c.*556. Acc. to *Cassiodorus he dubbed himself 'Exiguus' out of humility. When called upon to construct a new Easter cycle, he abandoned the era of *Diocletian, and dated the first year in his Easter cycle from the (supposed) year of the Incarnation, making the 248th year from the accession of Diocletian (AD 284) the year 532 'from the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ'. This 'Christian Era' was adopted in England at the Synod of *Whitby, 664, and later became widespread on the Continent. His corpus of canon law was the first collection to gain wide influence. In its second edition, which was its classic form, it contained the *Apostolic Canons; the canons of the Councils of *Nicaea, *Ancyra, *Neocaesarea, *Gangra, *Antioch, *Laodicea, *Constantinople, *Chalcedon and *Sardica, and of *Carthage, 419; and 41 Papal decretals from *Siricius (384–98) to Anastasius II (496–8). This collection was in general use in the 6th and 7th cents., and, somewhat augmented, was sent by Pope *Hadrian to *Charlemagne in 774. This form circulated in the Frankish Church, even into the 12th cent. Dionysius also translated many important Greek patristic writings into Latin; some of these reflect his support for the *Theopaschites.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL 67. 9–520. The Dionysian Canons are pr. in all early canonical collections; most accessible in J. P. Migne, loc. cit., 139–316. Crit. text in EOMIA (under each council). 'First Recension' of Canons ed. A. Strewe, Die Canonensammlung des Dionysius Exiguus in der ersten Redaktion (1931). F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts, 1 (1870), pp. 132–6, 422–40, 960–5. H. Wurm, Studien und Texte zur Dekretalensammlung des Dionysius Exiguus (1939). W. M. Peitz, SJ, Dionysius Exiguus-Studien, ed. H. Foerster (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 33; 1960 [much criticized]). C. W. Jones, 'The Victorian and Dionysiac Paschal Tablets in the West', Speculum, 9 (1934), pp. 408–21, esp. pp. 413–21. B. Krusch, Studien zur christlichmittelalterlichen Chronologie, pt. 2: Dionysius Exiguus, der Begründer der christlichen Ära (Abh. (Berl.), 1938, no. 8), pp. 59–87. Mordek, pp. 241–9. J. Rambaud-Buhot in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 1131–52, s.v. 'Denys le Petit'; id. in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 877 f., s.v.; H. Mordek in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 3 (1986), cols. 1088–92, s.v. 'Dionysius (3) Exiguus', with extensive bibl.

Dionysius (8) the Carthusian (Denys van Leeuwen, Denys Ryckel) (1402–71), theologian and mystic. He was educated by the *Brethren of the Common Life at Zwolle in the Netherlands, studied at *Cologne University, and entered the Charterhouse at Roermund in 1424/5. He compiled a series of very extensive commentaries on the OT and NT, edited or commented on the works of *Boethius, *Peter Lombard, *John Climacus, and *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite (by whom he was much influenced), and also wrote books on moral theology, ecclesiastical discipline, homilies, and a tract against the Muslims. His writings became very popular in the centuries succeeding his death, though Dionysius has little real claim to be considered an original writer. His mystical experiences gained for him the title of 'Doctor Ecstaticus'. In 1451–2 he accompanied Cardinal *Nicholas of Cusa to Germany in the cause of Church reform and to preach a crusade against the Turks.

His works were ed. in various formats by D. Loer and others at Cologne between 1530 and 1559. New edn. by the Carthusians, Montreuil-sur-Mer and (later) Tournai, and Parkminster, 42 vols. in 44, 1896–1935 [vols. 1–14, comm. on whole Bible; 15 f., on Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite; 17 f., 'Summa Fidei' and 'Dialogion'; 19–25 bis, comm. on *Sentences + separate index; 26–8, on Boethius, *Cassian, and John Climacus; 29–32, Sermons; 33–42, 'Opera Minora' + additional index vol. Vol. 1 also contains a Life by D. Loer (orig. pub. 1532) and a list by Dionysius of his 187 writings and of the writers he had studied]. Opera Selecta, ed. K. Emery (CCCM 121, 121A, etc.; 1991 ff.), with important introd. K. Krogh Tonning, Der letzte Scholastiker (Freiburg i.B., 1904). P. Teeuwen, Dionysius de Karthuizer en de philosophisch-theologische Stroomingen aan de Keulsche Universiteit (Brussels, 1938). M. Beer, Dionysius' des Kartäusers Lehre vom Desiderium Naturale des Menschen nach der Gottesschau (Münchener Theologische Studien, 2. Systematische Abteilung, 28; 1963); N. Maginot, Der Actus Humanus Moralis unter dem Einfluss des Heiligen Geistes nach Dionysius Carthusianus (ibid. 35; 1968). R. Macken, OFM, Denys the Carthusian: Commentator on Boethius's 'De Consolatione Philosophiae' (Analecta Cartusiana, 118; Salzburg, 1984). Useful summary in English by A. Stoelin, 'Denys the Carthusian', Month, NS 25 (1961), pp. 218–30. Id. in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 430–49, s.v. 'Denys le Chartreux'.

Dioscorus (d. 454), Patr. of *Alexandria. During St *Cyril's patriarchate he became Archdeacon of Alexandria, and on his death in 444 succeeded to the see. When *c.*448 *Eutyches began to attract attention by his Christological doctrines Dioscorus gave him his support, and in 449 presided over the so-called '*Latrocinium' Council at Ephesus, in which *Flavian, Bp. of Constantinople, was deposed. Dioscorus' fortunes changed with the reversal of theological policy on the death of the Emp. *Theodosius II in 450. At the Third Session of the Council of *Chalcedon in 451, he was deposed, and he was banished by the civil authorities to Gangra in Paphlagonia. A few of his letters, and a legendary panegyric of his life by the deacon Theopistus, have survived in Syriac. He is accounted a saint in the *Coptic Church; feast day, 4 Sept.

Our most reliable source on Dioscorus is the 'Acta' of the Council of Chalcedon (q.v.). Syr. text of 'Life' by Theopistus, with Fr. tr., ed. F. Nau in Journal Asiatique, 10th ser. 1 (1903), pp. 5–108 and 241–310. F. Haase, 'Patriarch Dioskur I von Alexandrien nach monophysitischen Quellen', in M. Sdralek (ed.), Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen, 6 (1908), pp. 141–233. J. Lebon, Le Monophysisme sévérien (1909), pp. 84–93 ('Les Écrits de Dioscore I d'Alexandrie'). Id., 'Autour du cas de Dioscore d'Alexandrie', Muséon, 59 (1946), pp. 515–28, incl. Syriac text, with Fr. tr., of doc. in defence of Dioscorus. Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 78 f. W. *Bright in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 854–62; N. Charlier in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 508–14, with extensive bibl.

Dippel, Johann Konrad (1673–1734), German *Pietist and alchemist. The son of a *Lutheran pastor, he was educated at Giessen university, became a private tutor, and in the controversy between Lutheran orthodoxy and Pietism at first upheld the former, but later, under G. *Arnold's influence, himself became a Pietist. He wrote many controversial works in defence of his new convictions, the best known being Orthodoxia Orthodoxorum (1697) and Papismus Protestantium Vapulans (1698). They emphasized the alleged contrast between Christianity and the Church, between ethics and dogma, and between right living and right doctrine, maintaining that the development of Christianity from *Constantine onwards was a gradual declension from the high ideals of primitive times. His opposition to Protestant orthodoxy aroused the hostility of the Lutheran ecclesiastical authorities, who forbade him to issue further theological publications. He now turned to chemistry, becoming the inventor of the Prussian Blue, and also occupied himself with alchemy. In 1704 he went to Berlin, but he had to leave it in 1707 because of his continued Pietist activities and found refuge in the Netherlands. Here he took his medical degree at *Leiden (1711), but he again had to leave because of his theological views. In 1714 he went to Altona, which at that time belonged to Denmark, but becoming embroiled with the government in 1719 he was condemned to lifelong captivity on the island of Bornholm. Having been freed and expelled from Denmark in 1726, he went to Sweden, where, through his influence, Pietism began to gain ground, so that the orthodox Lutheran clergy brought about his expulsion. He now went back to Germany, where he finally found a refuge at Berleburg. The main inspiration of his life was his belief that the Christian religion consisted not in a dogmatic creed but in the practice of charity and self-sacrifice.

His Works were ed. (3 vols.) at Berleburg in 1747. Life by W. Bender (Bonn, 1882). K.-L. Voss, Christianus Democritus: Das Menschenbild bei Johann Conrad Dippel (Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, Beiheft; 12; 1970). Id. in M. Greischat (ed.) Orthodoxie und Pietismus (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 7; 1982), pp. 277–85.

diptychs. The lists of names of living and departed Christians for whom special prayer is made in the Greek and Latin Eucharistic Liturgies. Though until recently read secretly in the W., in early times the diptychs were recited publicly, and the inclusion or exclusion of a name was held to be a sign of communion or of excommunication. The term is derived from the two-leaved folder (Gk. δίπτυχον) within which the lists were written. See also BOOK OF LIFE.

A. F. Gori, Thesaurus Veterum Diptychorum Consularium et Ecclesiasticorum (3 vols., Florence, 1759; with full discussion and reproductions of 'Consular Diptychs', i.e. diptychs, usually with elaborately incised covers, which were distributed by consuls on taking office and became the artistic model for ecclesiastical diptychs). E. *Bishop in R. H. *Connolly, The Liturgical Homilies of Narsai (Texts and Studies, 8, no. 1; 1909), pp. 97–114. R. F. Taft, SJ, A History of the Liturgy of St John Chrysostom, 4: The Diptychs (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 238; 1991). F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 4 (pt. 1; 1920), cols. 1045–94, s.v. 'Diptyques (Liturgie)', and H. *Leclercq, OSB, ibid., cols. 1094–170, s.v. 'Diptyques (Archéologie)'; O. Stegmüller in RAC 3 (1957), cols. 1138–49, s.v. 'Diptychon'.

Directory of Church Government, A (1645). An English translation of a Book of *Discipline (Disciplina Ecclesiae Sacra) compiled by W. *Travers; the Latin original was completed by 1587. It was divided into 'Disciplina Sacra' and 'Disciplina Synodica'. In both Latin and English the work circulated in manuscript among the *Puritans, many of whom formally subscribed its articles. The English version was published early in 1645 in the interests of the projected introduction of the *Presbyterian system into England.

A facsimile of the 1645 edn. of the Directory (dated '1644' old style) pub., with introd. by P. Lorimer, in 1872. The Disciplina, with other related material, pub. by F. *Paget, Introduction to the Fifth Book of Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity (Oxford, 1899; 2nd edn., 1907), Appendices 3 and 4. P. Collinson, The Elizabethan Puritan Movement (1967), esp. pp. 291–302 and 317–29.

Dirge (Lat. Dirige). A traditional name for the *Office for the Dead. The office, which dates from the Middle Ages, is contained in the ancient *breviaries and in the early English *primers. The name, deriving from the former antiphon, 'Dirige Domine Deus meus in conspectu tuo viam meam' (Ps. 5: 8), was originally confined to the morning office; but it later came to include the *Vespers (the '*Placebo') sung on the evening before. It has often been set to music, one of its most famous settings being the Mattutino di Morti of David Perez of Lisbon (1752). The term has for some time been obsolete except in figurative use.

diriment impediment. In *canon law, a fact or circumstance relating to a person that makes him or her incapable of contracting a valid marriage. It used to be distinguished from an 'impedient impediment', which only rendered a marriage unlawful, but not null and void. Acc. to present RC canon law, the existing diriment impediments include insufficient age, impotency, an already existing marriage, abduction, a public perpetual *vow of chastity in a religious *institute, holy orders, disparity of religion, affinity, and consanguinity; but such of the impediments as are not of Divine Law may be dispensed by the ecclesiastical authorities for good reason.

J. Freisen, Geschichte des canonischen Eherechts bis zum Verfall der Glossenlitteratur (1888), esp. pp. 221–7. O. D. Watkins, Holy Marriage [1924], pp. 68–71. G. H. Joyce, SJ, Christian Marriage (1933; 2nd edn., 1948), passim. T. P. Doyle, OP, in J. A. Coriden and others (eds.), The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985), pp. 757–74. A. Bride in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 261–322, s.v. 'Empêchements de mariage', passim.

discalced (from Lat. discalceare, 'to make unshod'). The term is applied to certain religious orders and congregations whose members wear sandals, e.g. the Discalced *Carmelites, *Trinitarians, and *Passionists. The custom was followed by the primitive E. monks, who went barefooted, after Mt. 10: 10. It was introduced into the W. by St *Francis of Assisi, and was followed in its most rigorous form, i.e. without any kind of footwear, by the Discalced *Franciscans, founded by St *Peter of Alcántara. Today sandals are always worn, either with or without socks, though in the latter case exceptions are usually made in particularly severe climates.

Disciples of Christ (or Churches of Christ). A religious body which began in the *United States of America among *Presbyterians concerned for evangelism on the American frontier in the early 19th cent., particularly Thomas Campbell (1763–1854), his son Alexander * Campbell and Barton W. Stone (1771–1844). Under the influence of the ideas of John *Glas, the brothers Robert (1764–1842) and Alexander (1768–1851) Haldane, and the Scotch Baptists, it aimed at achieving the unity of all Christians through the restoration of New Testament Christianity and rejected credal formulae as tests of fellowship. It became a separate communion in 1832. The Churches are congregationally organized, regard the Scriptures as the exclusive basis of faith, practise believers' baptism and celebrate the Lord's Supper as the chief act of worship every Sunday. Parallel movements developed in Great Britain in the 1830s, and subsequently in *Australia, *New Zealand, and *Canada as a result of emigration, and in *India, *China, *Japan, Thailand, the *Philippines, *Malawi, *Zimbabwe, *Zaire, *South Africa, Jamaica, Puerto Rico, and elsewhere in Latin America as a result of missionary activity. Theological differences, particularly over instrumental music and congregational autonomy, enhanced by sociological differences, led to the formation of three main groups in the USA after 1906: (1) the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), (2) the Christian Churches/Churches of Christ, and (3) the Churches of Christ. These divisions were reflected to a certain extent elsewhere, but without the same distinction of name. Disciples have also been active in the *Ecumenical Movement and have joined in Church unions in Japan, *North India, Zaire, South Africa, Jamaica and Great Britain (where the majority of Churches of Christ joined the *United Reformed Church in 1981). Remaining outside the last union are the Fellowship of Churches of Christ (formed in 1980) and those Churches which left the Association of Churches of Christ in Great Britain in the early 20th cent. because of differences over biblical interpretation and instrumental music.

W. E. Garrison, Religion follows the Frontier (New York, 1931); R. Butchart, The Disciples of Christ in Canada since 1830 (Toronto, 1949); R. G. Nelson, Disciples of Christ in Jamaica, 1858–1958 (St Louis [1958]); D. E. Harrell, Quest for a Christian America: The Disciples of Christ and American Society to 1866 (Nashville, 1966); id., The Social Sources of Division in the Disciples of Christ, 1865–1900 (Atlanta [1973]); W. E. Tucker and L. G. McAllister, Journey in Faith: A History of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) (St Louis [1975]); D. M. Thompson, Let Sects and Parties Fall: A Short History of the Association of Churches of Christ in Great Britain and Ireland (Birmingham, 1980). See also bibl. to CAMPBELL, A.

Disciplina Arcani (Lat., 'Discipline of the Secret'). The practice ascribed to the early Church of concealing certain theological doctrines and religious usages from *catechumens and pagans. The term is said to have been coined by the Calvinist J. *Daillé (d. 1670); but in 1614 I. *Casaubon had already explained certain silences of the early Fathers on the supposition that they imitated the secrecy of the mystery religions. Daillé himself held that the practice was mainly educational, to give catechumens a greater desire and reverence for the Sacraments. A third explanation was put forward by E. *Schelstrate, who held that it was of Dominical institution and practised by the Apostles, and that its application extended not only to *Baptism and the *Eucharist, but also explained the scarcity or absence of early Christian evidences on such subjects as the *Trinity, the *Mass, the number of the *Sacraments, *transubstantiation, and the cult of the *saints. The discussion continued through the 18th and 19th cents., RC theologians generally defending Schelstrate's theory, whereas most Protestant scholars followed Casaubon in tracing the practice to a pagan model.

In recent times the traditional theories have been generally abandoned. Acceptance of theological development makes them largely superfluous. It is unnecessary to assume direct borrowing from the mysteries, but early Christians were moved by similar religious feelings to a restricted acceptance of a widespread practice. It was adopted partly through the reticence necessary in an age of persecution, partly through the natural human instinct to withdraw the most intimate and sacred elements of faith from the knowledge of outsiders; and it was reflected in the custom of not admitting catechumens to the central part of the Eucharist. Allusions to it are found in *Tertullian, St *Cyprian, and *Origen, and more definitely in 4th- and 5th-cent. writers, among them St *Cyril of Jerusalem, *Egeria, and St John *Chrysostom for the E., and St *Ambrose, *Innocent I, and St *Augustine for the W. By the 6th cent. the practice seems to have disappeared.

I. Casaubon, De Rebus Sacris et Ecclesiasticis (London, 1614), Exercitio 16, pars 43, 'Mysterium' (pp. 541–67). E. A. Schelstrate, De Disciplina Arcani (Rome, 1685). P. *Batiffol, Études d'histoire et de théologie positive (1902), pp. 3–41; F. X. Funk, 'Das Alter der Arkandisziplin', repr. in his Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, 3 (1907), pp. 42–57. G. Mensching, Das heilige Schweigen (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, 20, Heft 2; 1926), pp. 125–33. H. Clasen, Die Arkandisziplin in der Alten Kirche (Heidelberg Diss., cyclostyled, 1956; noted in TLZ 82, 1957, cols. 153 f.). P. Batiffol in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 1738–58, s.v. 'Arcane'; E. Vacandard in DHGE 3 (1924), cols. 1497–513, s.v. 'Arcane'; O. Perler in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 667–76, s.v. 'Arkandisziplin'; V. Recchia in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 315–17, 'Arcano (disciplina dell')'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 242, s.v., all with bibl.

discipline. The word has several religious connotations.

(1) The totality of ecclesiastical laws and customs regulating the religious and moral life of the Church. In this sense it comprises all Church activities not regulated by Divine law, such as the administration of the Sacraments, offices, feasts, devotions, etc.

(2) In a more restricted sense, a system of mortification, e.g. that involved in the religious life (monastic discipline).

(3) A scourge of knotted cords, chain, or other instrument used for penitential beating.

(4) As a technical term, the word is applied esp. to the *Calvinist polity, which, in contrast with that of M. *Luther, was built up on rigid principles. Its object is the good of the offender, the purity of the Church, and the glory of God. It is the duty of the consistories, formed by elders and pastors, to fix penalties for neglect of religious duties, culminating in excommunication. In grave cases, offenders were formerly handed over to the state. This practice was taken up by the *Presbyterians, who laid down their principles in the *Book of Common Order and the *First Book of Discipline (qq.v.). In the past disciplinary measures were often taken in the face of the congregation. Nowadays cases are generally dealt with by the minister. Processes against a minister are begun before his presbytery and appeal can be made to the *General Assembly.

W. Dürig, 'Disciplina. Eine Studie zum Bedeutungsumfang des Wortes in der Sprache der Liturgie und der Väter', Sacris Erudiri, 4 (1952), pp. 245–79, with refs.

Discipline, Books of. The 'First Book of Discipline' (1560), drawn up at Edinburgh at the government's request by J. *Knox and five of his fellow-Reformers as a plan for the ordering and maintenance of the new Scottish Church, was an adaptation of the Genevan 'Ordonnances' to the needs of a nation. Its nine heads were: (1) Doctrine; (2) Sacraments; (3) Abolishing of Idolatry; (4) Ministers and their Lawful Election; (5) Provision for the Ministers; (6) Rents and Patrimony of the Kirk; (7) Ecclesiastical Discipline; (8) Election of Elders, Deacons, etc.; and (9) The Policy of the Church. Knox's more ardent supporters welcomed its rigid discipline, but parts of the Book were obnoxious to the nobility, esp. the proposed system of national education, which threatened the newly possessed landlords with the loss of their revenues. Hence, civil authority being needed for its enforcement, the Book remained a dead-letter.

The so-called 'Second Book of Discipline' (1578), chiefly the work of A. *Melville, was prepared as a manifesto of the stricter Presbyterians against efforts to restore a modified episcopacy. It was endorsed by the General Assembly in 1581, though this Book also never obtained complete civil recognition.

The First Book was ed., with introd. and comm., by J. K. Cameron (Edinburgh, 1972); the Second Book by J. Kirk (ibid., 1980). J. H. S. Burleigh, A Church History of Scotland (1960), pp. 163–76 and 198–201. J. Kirk, '"The Polities of the Best Reformed Kirks": Scottish achievements and English aspirations in church government after the Reformation', Scottish Historical Review, 59 (1980), pp. 22–53; G. Donaldson, '"The Example of Denmark" in the Scottish Reformation' in id., Scottish Church History (Edinburgh, 1985), pp. 60–70.

discus (Gk. δίσκος, δισκάριον). In the E. Church, the plate on which the bread of the Eucharist is offered and consecrated, corresponding to the *paten in the W. It is commonly somewhat larger and more concave and normally stands on a central foot. It is never placed on the chalice. The *Last Supper is sometimes represented on its inner surface.

Dismas. The traditional name of the Good Thief (Lk. 23: 39–43) crucified with Christ. The name of the other is said to have been Gestas.

The name, from the Gk. δυσμή, 'dying', is found in the 'Gospel of *Nicodemus', ch. 10; cf. C. *Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (2nd edn., 1876), pp. 192 f., 362. A. Bessières, Le Bon Larron, Saint Dismas [1937]. H. Lesêtre in Dict. Bibl. 4 (1908), cols. 94–6, s.v. 'Larron'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 1402–4, s.v. 'Larrons (Les Deux)'.

dismissal. The traditional form of dismissal at the conclusion of the Eucharist is the '*Ite, missa est', from which the term '*Mass' derives. In the Roman Missal of 1970 alternative forms of dismissal are provided.

dispensations. Licences granted by ecclesiastical authority to do some act otherwise canonically illegal, or for the remittance of a penalty for breaking such a rule. The practice of granting dispensations began very early. By the 5th cent. the bishops of Rome were employing the dispensing power, and a similar power was also used on occasion by other bishops, councils, and even (in minor matters) parish priests. By the later Middle Ages the dispensation had become more or less a prerogative of the Pope, and this position, with the elimination of certain minor abuses, was maintained by the Council of *Trent. The Second *Vatican Council, in its decree on the Office of Bishops (Christus Dominus, 1965), however, gave diocesan bishops ordinary power to dispense from general laws of the Church in particular cases, except in matters specially reserved for the Pope. These last were further defined by Pope *Paul VI in 1966.

All writers on the subject are agreed that there must be an adequate reason for the use of the dispensing power. Thus St *Basil urges that the needs of the time and the advantages of the Church are the two main requisites for a just dispensation and this has been the consistent teaching of later canonists. The chief objects of the dispensing power are in relation to the ordination of clergy, the translation of bishops, vows, marriage, and divorce. The Church can suspend or abrogate, however, only laws of its own making, and not such as are natural (ius naturale) or Divine (ius divinum).

In England in 1534 the Ecclesiastical Licences Act 1533 transferred the Pope's dispensing power to the Abp. of *Canterbury. It is now used mainly in the granting of special *marriage licences. The Clergy (Ordination) Measure 1990 empowers the Abps. of Canterbury and *York to allow a divorced person whose former spouse is still living to be ordained.

Among Nonconformists, the *Methodist Conference sometimes grants dispensations allowing a lay person to preside at Holy Communion when the shortage of ordained ministers is such that the people would otherwise be deprived of regular sacramental ministry.

Early treatment of the subject by *Ivo of Chartres, 'Prologue in Decretum' (PL 161. 47–60). Classical discussions by F. *Suárez, SJ, Tractatus de Legibus (Antwerp, 1613), pp. 449–95 (lib. 6, capp. 10–24), and P. de *Marca, De Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii (Paris, 1641), pp. 512–56 (lib. 3, capp. 13–15). Current RC legislation is contained in CIC (1983), cans. 85–93. W. J. Sparrow Simpson, Dispensations (1933), with bibl. A. van Hove, Commentarium Lovaniense in Codicem Iuris Canonici, vol. 1, tom. 5: De Privilegiis, De Dispensationibus (Mechlin and Rome, 1939), pp. 293–459. J. Brys, De Dispensatione in Iure Canonico praesertim apud Decretistas et Decretalistas usque ad Medium Saeculum Decimum Quartum (Louvain thesis, 1925). Dispensation in Practice and Theory with special reference to the Anglican Churches: Being the Report of a Commission appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1935 under the Chairmanship of F. J. Palmer (1944). E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law, 3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson (1992), pp. 131–6. D. S. Chambers, Faculty Office Registers 1534–1549: A Calendar of the first two Registers of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Faculty Office edited with introduction and index (Oxford, 1966). R. Naz in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 1284–96. s.v. 'Dispense'.

Dispersion, the. See DIASPORA.

Disruption, the (1843). The great split in the Established Church of *Scotland, when the *Free Church of Scotland (at first, 'Free Protesting Church of Scotland') was formed by the secession of 474 (out of 1,203) ministers on 18 May 1843. The dispute centred in the demand of the presbyteries for a voice ('veto') in matters of patronage. In 1833 legislation (the 'Veto Act') had been introduced into the *General Assembly to secure the right to object to a presentee to a benefice on reasonable grounds. After being thrown out in that year, the Act passed in 1834, largely through the exertions of T. *Chalmers (q.v.). The consequence was a succession of conflicts in the next decade between the General Assembly and the civil court ('Court of Session'), culminating in the Disruption. At first the destinies of the Free Church were in the hands of T. Chalmers, who was elected the first moderator and organized the Church with great ability. He created a Sustentation Fund for the support of the clergy by imposing a subscription of one penny a week from every member of the Church. The schism was not finally healed until 1929.

R. Buchanan, The Ten Years' Conflict (2 vols., 1849); T. Brown, Annals of the Disruption; with Extracts from the narratives of ministers who left the Scottish Establishment in 1843 (1884). G. D. Henderson, Heritage: A Study of the Disruption (1943); H. Watt, Thomas Chalmers and the Disruption (1943); S. J. Brown, Thomas Chalmers and the Godly Commonwealth in Scotland (Oxford, 1982), esp. pp. 282–349. J. H. S. Burleigh, A Church History of Scotland (1960), pp. 334–69; G. I. T. Machin, Politics and the Churches in Great Britain 1832 to 1868 (1977), pp. 112–47. See also works cited under CHALMERS, T.

Dissenters. In a religious context, those who separate themselves from the communion of the Established Church. Originally the term included RCs, but it is now usually restricted to Protestant Dissenters. It is occasionally used in contradistinction to 'Nonconformists' of those who not only dissent from the national Church as at present established, but disagree with the principle of established Churches.

Dissenters' Marriage Act. The common designation of the Marriage Act 1836, which relieved Nonconformists of the need to be married in an Anglican church, allowing marriages to be solemnized in any registered place of religious worship, in a registrar's office, or acc. to the usages of *Jews and *Quakers. By the Marriage Act 1898, the presence of the registrar at the chapel, required since 1836, was no longer demanded. The law was consolidated by the Marriage Act 1949.

Dissolution of the Monasteries. The wealth of the English monasteries, a certain moral laxity, and what many regarded as their undue stress on the contemplative aspect of the religious life, had made them in the later Middle Ages an object of criticism. Spasmodic attempts at reform had met with little success and various small suppressions had taken place. It was, however, from personal motives that *Henry VIII effected the complete abolition of the system; among these were the need to replenish his treasury. He decided first on the suppression of the smaller monasteries. A biased report (based on a hurried visitation of a fraction of the monasteries involved) declared the evil condition of the houses, and the Suppression of Religious Houses Act 1535 was passed in 1536. It ordered the suppression of all religious houses having an annual value of less than £200, some 250 in all being involved. It is unlikely that at this stage a total dissolution was contemplated; some smaller houses were reprieved, and the King sponsored some refoundations which were technically new monasteries. However, the popularity of monasteries, particularly in the north, coupled with economic and other grievances, led to the popular risings collectively known as the *Pilgrimage of Grace (1536–7). Although a real threat, these were quickly put down, and their defeat provided a powerful incentive to begin a vigorous campaign of total monastic dissolution. Royal agents toured the country to obtain individual surrenders of the remaining monasteries and nunneries, while in 1538 two separate campaigns suppressed all the remaining friaries and removed the shrines which had been so prominent in many monastic churches. The Suppression of Religious Houses Act 1539 completed the process by vesting in the Crown all monasteries that had been or should be surrendered; the last houses surrendered in the spring of 1540. The King's principal adviser throughout was Thomas *Cromwell (q.v.).

Effected in a brutal and highly unscrupulous manner, the Dissolution of the Monasteries met with small resistance. Care was taken to observe the letter of the law, and the subsequent economic and social dislocation is now known to have been considerably less than used to be thought. Most religious, with the exception of the friars, were pensioned, and a considerable number in due course obtained benefices as secular clergy. Nuns, debarred from ecclesiastical office and, until the reign of *Edward VI, marriage, had mostly to subsist on very meagre pensions. The incidental losses to charity, art, and learning were considerable, many precious MSS and church furnishings perishing through destruction and decay.

Most of the spoils of the Dissolution sooner or later passed from the Crown to the Tudor nobility and gentry, but part of the proceeds went to the foundation of the six new sees of Bristol, *Chester, *Gloucester, *Oxford, *Peterborough, and *Westminster (the last soon suppressed). Where the local parishioners had their altar in the conventual church, this was spared, the old places of worship (usually the nave) continuing in use. In some dozen cases the parishioners bought the rest of the church concerned, e.g. at Christchurch, Dorset.

The Valor Ecclesiasticus* (q.v.) is an important source for the financial state of the monasteries immediately prior to the Dissolution. The principal authority for the actual Dissolution is the material calendared in Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII (details in bibl. to HENRY VIII). T. Wright (ed.), Three Chapters of Letters Relating to the Suppression of the Monasteries (Camden Society, 26; 1843); selections repr. in G. H. Cook (ed.), Letters to Cromwell and others on the Suppression of the Monasteries (1965); J. [A.] Youings, The Dissolution of the Monasteries (1971). G. Baskerville, English Monks and the Suppression of the Monasteries (1937); [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, The Religious Orders in England, 3 (Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 195–417; G. W. O. Woodward, The Dissolution of the Monasteries (1966). A. Savine, English Monasteries on the Eve of the Dissolution (Oxford Studies in Social and Legal History, 1; 1909). J. C. Dickinson, 'Early Suppressions of English Houses of Austin Canons', in Medieval Studies presented to Rose Graham, ed. V. Ruffer and A. J. Taylor (Oxford, 1950), pp. 54–77. G. A. J. Hodgett, 'The Unpensioned Ex-religious in Tudor England', JEH 13 (1962), pp. 195–202; C. Kitching, 'The Disposal of Monastic and Chantry Lands', in F. Heal and R. O'Day (eds.), Church and Society in England: Henry VIII to James I (1977), pp. 119–36, with bibl. on pp. 184 f.; E. M. Hallam, 'Henry VIII's Monastic Refoundations of 1536–7 and the Course of the Dissolution', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 51 (1978), pp. 124–31. List of monasteries dissolved in J. *Gairdner, The English Church in the Sixteenth Century from the Accession of Henry VIII to the Death of Mary (1902), pp. 419–30, and S. M. Jack, 'Dissolution Dates for the Monasteries Dissolved under the Act of 1536', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 43 (1970), pp. 161–181. Information on individual houses at the time of the Dissolution in [M.] D. Knowles and R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses: England and Wales (1953; rev. edn., 1971).

dittography (Gk. διττός, 'double', and γράφω, 'I write'). The repetition by a copyist, through carelessness, of the same letter(s) or word(s), e.g. in the text of Acts 2: 4 in the Codex Laudianus (et repleti sunt et repleti sunt omnes spiritu sancto). It is a frequent source of corruption in the transmission of MSS. The opposite error is known as '*haplography'.

Diurnal. The service-book containing the '*Day Hours' (horae diurnae), i.e. all the traditional canonical hours except *Mattins.

Dives (Lat., 'rich'). A word which has become a convenient, almost a proper, name for the unnamed rich man in the parable, Lk. 16: 19–31. He was condemned not for his wealth but for his selfish enjoyment of it.

Divina Commedia, La. The name commonly given to *Dante's sacred poem describing his vision of the three realms of the world to come, Inferno, Purgatorio, and Paradiso. Dante himself may have described the trilogy as a comedy; the epithet divine is a later addition. The poem describes a vision in which Dante travels for a week at Easter 1300 from a dark forest on this side of the world down through Hell to Satan at the centre of the Earth and up the seven terraces of the mount of Purgatory, an island in the Antipodes opposite Jerusalem, to its summit, the Earthly Paradise, where Adam and Eve were created. So far *Virgil has been his guide, but now he meets Beatrice, who conducts him through the nine planetary and stellar spheres to the Empyrean, where St *Bernard of Clairvaux takes her place. St Bernard presents Dante to the BVM, at whose intercession the poet is granted a glimpse of the *Beatific Vision.

The date, purpose and detailed interpretation of the poem are widely disputed. Dante may have begun writing in 1305 or possibly not until after 1310. The work was circulated in batches of Cantos before its completion and is mentioned early in 1314. The fictional date, 1300, means that many subsequent events are presented as prophecies, though some prophecies seem to remain unfulfilled. Virgil is commonly said to represent Natural Reason and Beatrice Faith, Revelation, Theology, or the Church, though it is clear that she is also the Florentine girl, jealous of the honours Dante has paid to other women. St Bernard is not merely a symbol but a man who in contemplation has been granted a glimpse of the Beatific Vision. The poem is not just a version of scholasticism; it interprets a personal vision and a story of individual salvation in which Dante claims the rare privilege of the vision of God's Essence in this life. He accepts the authority of the Church and the office of the Pope, however severe his comments on the persons of individual popes and other churchmen whom he depicts in Hell. The poem has survived in a large number of MSS, been the subject of commentaries from an early date, widely translated and has exercised a deep influence, esp. on 19th-cent. English literature and art (e.g. on drawings of W. *Blake).

Edns. of Dante's collected works are listed s.v. Crit. edn. of Divina Commedia, with introd., by G. Petrocchi (Opere di Dante Alighieri, Edizione Nazionale, 7; 4 vols., 1966–7). Eng. trs. incl. those of D. L. *Sayers (Harmondsworth, 1949–62), G. L. Bickersteth (Aberdeen, 1955), and in prose, with comm., by J. D. Sinclair (3 vols., London, 1939–46; rev. edn., 1948), and, with best comm. in Eng., by C. S. Singleton (Bollingen Series, 80; 6 vols., Princeton, NJ [1970–5]; vols. 1 2, Inferno, also pub. London, 1971). Comm. in Ital. by N. Sapegno (3 vols., Florence, 1955–7) and U. Bosco and G. Reggio (3 vols., ibid., 1979). J. Tambling, Dante and Difference: Writing in the 'Commedia' (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Literature, 2; 1988). E. H. Wilkins and T. G. Bergin, A Concordance to the Divine Comedy of Dante Alighieri (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1965). G. F. Cunningham, The Divine Comedy in English: A Critical Bibliography: 1782 1900 (1965); 1901 66 (1966).

Divine Praises, the. A series of praises, beginning with the words 'Blessed be God, Blessed be His Holy Name', sometimes said or sung after *Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament (usually in the vernacular) before the Host is replaced in the tabernacle. They are thought to have been compiled *c.*1779 by Louis Felici, SJ, to be used in reparation for blasphemy and profanity. In 1801 they were indulgenced by *Pius VII. The original Praises have been extended by the addition of Praise to the *Immaculate Conception in 1856, the *Sacred Heart in 1897, St *Joseph in 1921, the *Assumption of the BVM in 1950, the *Precious Blood in 1960, and the Holy Spirit in 1964.

H. T[hurston, SJ], 'The Divine Praises', The Month, 131 (1918), pp. 510–13, incl. refs. to earlier discussions.

Divine Right of Kings. The doctrine that monarchy is God's chosen form of government, and that rebellion against the monarch is always a sin. Where active obedience to an evil ruler is morally impossible, it is held that passive obedience (i.e. the willing acceptance of any penalty imposed for non-compliance) is demanded.

From the NT, St *Paul's injunction to obey 'the powers that be' (Rom. 13: 1–2) reverberated through the centuries, providing the mainstay of Christian political quietism, although it was constantly modified by the overriding need to 'obey God rather than man' (Acts 5: 29). The Divine Right of Kings involves also the larger claim that monarchy is ordained by God. This dates from the Christianization of the Roman Empire. While both the OT and the NT contain passages which make it hard to discern a consistent attitude to kingship or the secular power, generally the early Fathers (and esp. *Tertullian) regarded the pagan state as Babylonish, echoing the hostility found in Rev. But this attitude gave way to a triumphalist celebration of the Roman imperium as being God's instrument. The panegyrics of *Eusebius (*c.*330) upon the first Christian Emperor were crucial, and permanently established *Constantine as the model of the Godly Prince, deployed, for instance, in the 'caesaropapal' propaganda of *Henry VIII's Reformation in England. Eusebius also claimed that Christ's Incarnation at the time when Augustus was 'lord of the world' providentially allowed the fulfilment of the command to 'go and teach all nations', a view echoed in *Dante's Monarchy (*c.*1310).

Perhaps under the influence of *Neoplatonism, Greek theories of divine kingship became Christianized: the emperor was the earthly image of God's ruling wisdom. Divine attributes were used to describe kings, and, in parallel, imperial vocabulary used to describe Christ's Kingship. Jewish precedents also served: monarchs were to emulate the rulership of *Moses and *David. The Platonic ideal of hierarchy, the Great Chain of Being in the divine, human, and animal kingdoms, was transmitted through the Middle Ages by the writings of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite (*c.*500). Elaborate 'body politic' metaphors proliferated. To the monarch's Godlike nature was added his Christ-like nature; as Christ has a natural and mystic body, so the king had two bodies, natural and fictive; Christ and the king embody the Church and the State. Monarchs were quasi-sacerdotal, they were lay 'bishops' or 'priests' of the law. This 'liturgical' idea of kingship predominated in the Byzantine empire, in Anglo-Saxon kingship, and in the Carolingian and Ottonian empires of the early Middle Ages. Sacramental *anointings became a normal feature of coronations, and many Anglo-Saxon kings were venerated as saints. The practice of 'touching for the *King's evil' (q.v.) arose, persisting in France and England until the 18th cent.

With the revival of knowledge of *Aristotle and of Roman law from the 12th cent., the notion of liturgical kingship gave way to a more legalistic style of argument. The theory of Divine Right became a theological gloss upon Roman jurisprudence, and later upon ideas of absolute sovereignty. The absolutist tendency was mitigated, e.g. in the 'Mirror for Princes' books (13th–16th cents.), by stress on the royal duty to cultivate the virtues. God's power and the king's power were unlimited, but since God consults His reason and His goodness when legislating, so the king should emulate Him. Divine Right kingship confronted, and was provoked by, two opposing traditions: the claims to supreme authority by the Church and by popular representative institutions.

Scholastic emphasis on the naturalness of political communities encouraged a 'patriarchalist' theory of the king as father of his people, as inheritor of Adam's authority, and as one object of the commandment to 'Honour thy father'. This is exemplified in the books of King *James I of England (esp. The True Law of Free Monarchies, 1598), and in Sir Robert Filmer's Patriarcha (written *c.*1640; posthumously pub., 1680), which J. *Locke attacked in his Two Treatises of Government (written *c.*1680; pub. '1690' [in fact 1689]). Under the Stuarts the doctrine was widely accepted by Anglican divines and, although *James II's attack on the C of E eroded support for the doctrine, it continued to be loyally upheld by the *Nonjurors. Those who opposed it accepted that sovereign authority was ordained by God, but they insisted that God left people free to choose the form of government, whether monarchy or not. Thus they dislodged the special divinity of kingship, although the idea had a final resurgence at the beginning of the 19th cent. in the Romantic reaction against the French Revolution (e.g. in F. R. de *Chateaubriand).

P. Laslett (ed.), Patriarcha and Other Political Works of Sir Robert Filmer (Oxford, 1949). J. N. *Figgis, The Theory of the Divine Right of Kings (Cambridge Historical Essays, 9; 1896; 2nd edn., with additional essays, 1914). N. H. Baynes, Byzantine Studies and Other Essays (1955), esp. pp. 47–66. E. [M.] A. Isiche, Political Thinking and Social Experience: Some Christian Interpretations of the Roman Empire from Tertullian to Salvian (Christchurch, New Zealand [1964]). E. H. Kantorowicz, The King's Two Bodies: A Study in Mediaeval Political Theology (Princeton, NJ, 1957); W. Ullmann, Principles of Government and Politics in the Middle Ages (1961), pp. 117–211.

Divine service. A title which, like the Lat. servitium divinum from which it is derived, would seem properly to belong only to the Divine *Office, and hence to Mattins and Evensong, and not to be applicable, e.g., to the Holy Communion. Cf. the preface to the BCP which since 1662 has been headed '*Concerning the Service of the Church' and refers only to these offices. It was customary for English church notice-boards in the 19th cent. to distinguish between the times for Divine service and those for Holy Communion. The expression is, however, often used more loosely for any form of religious service.

F. E. *Brightman, 'Common Prayer', JTS 10 (1908–9), pp. 515–18.

Divine Word, Society of the (SVD), RC religious and missionary congregation of priests and lay brothers. It was founded in 1875 at Steyl in the Netherlands by Bl Arnold Janssen (1837–1909), a German priest who made his foundation outside Germany because of the *Kulturkampf. Originally a foreign mission society of German secular priests, it soon recruited lay brothers and by 1884 had become a religious congregation with public vows. It was officially approved in 1905. Foundations were made in *Argentina, *West Africa, the *United States of America, Papua New Guinea, *Japan, and the *Philippines, as well as in Britain and other European countries. Acc. to its 1983 constitutions, the Society understands its work to be focused 'first and foremost where the Gospel has not been preached at all, or only insufficiently, and where the local Church is not viable on its own'. It has been deeply involved in secondary and tertiary education, in promoting popular appreciation of Scripture, and in disseminating religious literature, for these purposes maintaining its own printing works. Notable achievements were made in the field of social anthropology, esp. by Wilhelm Schmidt (1868–1954) and the Anthropos Institute (now at St Augustin, near Bonn), which continues his work. In the USA Divine Word missionaries founded the first RC foreign missionary seminary in 1909 at Techny, Illinois, and pioneered the lay *retreat movement. They also initiated the Catholic apostolate to Black Americans, founding a special seminary to train Black priests, one of whom, Joseph Bowers, became Bp. of Accra, *Ghana, in 1953. The congregation has over 5,000 members.

H. Fischer, SVD, Arnold Janssen: Gründer des Steyler Missionswerkes (Steyl [1919]; Eng. tr., Techny, Ill., 1925); F. Bornemann, Arnold Janssen, der Gründer des Steyler Missionswerkes (Steyl, 1969; Eng. tr., Manila [1975]). V. J. Fecher, SVD, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 923 f., s.v.; C. Pape, SVD, and P. Sessolo, SVD, in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 1601–8, s.v. 'Società del Divin Verbo'.

Divine Worship, Congregation for. See RITES, CONGREGATION OF SACRED.

Divino Afflante Spiritu. See PROVIDENTISSIMUS DEUS.

Divino Afflatu (Lat., 'by God's inspiration'). The constitution of Pope *Pius X, issued on 1 Nov. 1911, which introduced important reforms into the manner of reciting the Divine Office and celebrating Mass. Among many other changes, it provided for the regular recitation of the whole Psalter each week, and also laid down revised rules for the Office when two or more feasts occurred on the same day.

Text in AAS 3 (1911), pp. 633–8, with 'Rubricae in Recitatione Divini Officii et in Missarum Celebratione Servandae ad Normam Constitutionis Apostolicae "Divino Afflatu"', pp. 639–51. E. Burton and E. Myers, The New Psalter and its Use (1912), incl. text of constitution, pp. 2–8, and Eng. tr., pp. 8–14.

divorce. The word is used in two senses: (1) a vinculo, i.e. as a dissolution of the marriage bond, and (2) a mensa et thoro, i.e. legal separation. Since W. *canon law has always insisted upon the principle of indissolubility, divorce in sense (1) is contrary to the canons and formularies of the C of E. In the RC Church the position is different. A sacramental and consummated marriage can be dissolved only by death, but marriages which are not sacramental (i.e. those not between two baptized persons), or are sacramental but not consummated, may be dissolved under various headings, incl. the *Pauline Privilege. In the E. Church, the civil legislation begun by the Emp. *Justinian has been tolerated, if not approved, and divorce is allowed on a wide number of grounds. Civil legislation in England, by a series of Acts of Parliament culminating in the Matrimonial Causes Act 1973, has extended the grounds on which a decree of divorce may be obtained; the irretrievable breakdown of marriage is now the sole criterion. In sense (2) W. canon law permits divorce for grave causes, the chief of which is adultery. In this case the separation granted is permanent. In all other cases the right to live apart holds good only for so long as the cause remains. RC legislation is contained in CIC (1983), cans. 1151–5. See also MATRIMONY and NULLITY.

R. Phillips, Putting Asunder: A History of Divorce in Western Society (Cambridge, 1988), with refs. to earlier works. See also bibl. to MATRIMONY, esp. the works of G. H. Joyce, SJ, K. E. *Kirk, T. A. *Lacey and R. C. Mortimer, and O. D. Watkins. L. G. Wrenn, 'Some Notes on the Petrine Privilege', The Jurist, 43 (1983), pp. 394–405. T. P. Doyle, OP, in J. A. Coriden and others (eds.), The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985), pp. 811–22. A. Villien in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 1455–78, s.v.

Dix, Gregory (1901–52), Anglican *Benedictine monk and liturgical scholar. Educated at Westminster School and Merton College, Oxford, from 1924 to 1926 he was a lecturer in modern history at Keble College, Oxford. He was ordained priest in 1925, entered Nashdom Abbey, Bucks, in the following year, and took his final vows in 1940. In 1946 he was appointed Select Preacher in the University of Cambridge and proctor in *Convocation for the diocese of Oxford. In 1948 he was elected Prior of Nashdom.

Dix, who became in his later years one of the best-known figures in the C of E, owed his influence to his brilliance, unconventionality, and good humour as a controversialist. These qualities largely contributed to the success of The Shape of the Liturgy [1945], his most considerable work; it did much to revive and popularize liturgical studies in the C of E. His other writings include The Treatise on the Apostolic Tradition of St Hippolytus of Rome (Church Historical Society, vol. 1 [all pub.], 1937; 2nd edn. by H. Chadwick, 1968), A Detection of Aumbries (notes on the history of *Reservation, 1942) and The Question of Anglican Orders: Letters to a Layman (1944), besides contributions to The Parish Communion (1937), to The Apostolic Ministry (ed. K. E. *Kirk, 1946) and to Laudate and other periodicals. Jew and Greek: A study in the primitive Church, was posthumously ed. by H. J. Carpenter (1953).

K. W. Stevenson, Gregory Dix 25 Years on (Grove Liturgical Study, 10; 1977). S. Bailey, A Tactful God (Leominster, 1995). A. H. Couratin in DNB, 1951–1960, pp. 301 f.

Dobeneck, Johann. See COCHLAEUS, JOHANNES.

Docetism (Gk. δοκέω, 'I seem'). In the early Church, a tendency, rather than a formulated and unified doctrine, which considered the humanity and sufferings of the earthly Christ as apparent rather than real. Evidence for its existence is to be found in the NT (1 Jn. 4: 1–3; 2 Jn. 7; cf. Col. 2: 8 f.), but it reached its zenith in the next generation, esp. among the *Gnostics. In some forms it held that Christ miraculously escaped the ignominy of death, e.g. by *Judas Iscariot or *Simon of Cyrene changing places with Him just before the Crucifixion. Docetic doctrines were vigorously attacked by St *Ignatius and all the leading anti-Gnostic writers. Among those esp. charged with Docetism was *Cerinthus. *Serapion, Bp. of Antioch (190–203), who is the first to use the name 'Docetists' (Δοκηταί), and some others wrote of them as a distinct body.

A. Orbe, SJ, Cristología gnóstica: Introducción a la soteriología de los siglos II y III, 1 (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 384; 1976), pp. 380–412. G. *Salmon in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 867–70, s.v.; A. *Fortescue in HERE 4 (1911), pp. 832–5, s.v.; G. Bardy in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 1461–8, s.v. 'Docétisme', all with patristic refs. See also bibl. to GNOSTICISM.

Doctors, Scholastic. In later medieval times, the outstanding Scholastic teachers and others were given distinguishing epithets, of which the following are among the better known:

Doctor angelicus (or communis or sanctus)	St *Thomas Aquinas
Doctor authenticus	*Gregory of Rimini
Doctor christianissimus	John *Gerson
Doctor ecstaticus	Jan van *Ruysbroeck (also of *Dionysius the Carthusian)
Doctor invincibilis (or singularis)	*William of Ockham
Doctor irrefragabilis (or doctorum)	*Alexander of Hales
Doctor mellifluus	St *Bernard of Clairvaux
Doctor mirabilis (or admirabilis)	Roger *Bacon
Doctor profundus	Thomas *Bradwardine (also of Jacobus de Esculo)
Doctor seraphicus (or devotus)	St *Bonaventure
Doctor solidus (or copiosus)	*Richard of Middleton
Doctor subtilis	*Duns Scotus
Doctor universalis (or venerabilis or expertus)	St *Albertus Magnus

F. *Ehrle, Die Ehrentitel der scholastischen Lehrer des Mittelalters (Sb. (Bayr.), 1919, Abhandlung 9; 1919); F. Lehmann, 'Mittelalterliche Beinamen und Ehrentitel', Hist. J. 49 (1929), pp. 215–39. J. C. Vansteenkiste in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 935–8, s.v., with more extensive list.

Doctors' Commons. A society of ecclesiastical lawyers founded in the late 15th cent., though not incorporated until 1768. It served as a college of advocates for those practising in the ecclesiastical courts, as also in the Court of Admiralty. The judges of the Abp. of *Canterbury's courts were usually selected from this college. From 1565 its headquarters were in Knightrider Street, near *St Paul's Cathedral. The advocates lost their exclusive rights of audience under the Court of Probate Act 1857 and the Matrimonial Causes Act 1857; in consequence the members sold the property and divided the proceeds among themselves, but the college remained in legal existence until the last member died in 1912.

G. D. Squibb, Doctors' Commons: A History of the College of Advocates and Doctors of Law (Oxford, 1977), with bibl.

Doctors of the Church (Lat. Doctores Ecclesiae). A title regularly given since the Middle Ages to certain Christian theologians of outstanding merit and acknowledged saintliness. Originally the W. theologians, *Gregory the Great, *Ambrose, *Augustine, and *Jerome, were held to be the 'four doctors' par excellence; but in later times the list has been gradually increased to over 30.

*Benedict XIV, De Servorum Dei Beatificatione, 4 (Bonn, 1738), pt. 2, cap. 11, no. 8–cap. 12, no. 9, pp. 96–107. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 42–6; J. de Ghellinck, SJ, 'Les Premières Listes des "Docteurs de l'Église" en Occident', Bulletin d'ancienne Littérature et d'Archéologie chrétienne, 2 (1912), pp. 132–4; rev. as appendix 3 of Le Mouvement théologique du XII^e siècle (2nd edn., 1948), pp. 514–17; C. A. Kneller, SJ, 'Zum Verzeichnis der Kirchenlehrer', ZKT 40 (1916), pp. 1–47. V. Pugliese, G. Löwe, CSSR, and G. Carandente in EC 4 (1950), cols. 1901–7, s.v. 'Dottori della chiesa', with list of doctors and bibl.; H. Rahner, SJ, in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 6 (1961), cols. 229–31, s.v. 'Kirchenlehrer.'

Doctrina Apostolorum. See DIDACHE.

Doctrine in the Church of England (1938). The Report of the Commission on Doctrine set up in 1922 by the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York. The Commission consisted of Anglican theologians of moderate *Catholic, *Evangelical, and *Modernist beliefs under the chairmanship first of H. M. Burge, Bp. of *Oxford, and, after his death in 1925, of W. *Temple, then Bp. of Manchester. Its terms of reference were 'to consider the nature and grounds of Christian doctrine with a view to demonstrating the extent of existing agreement within the C of E and with a view to investigating how far it is possible to remove or diminish existing differences'.

The body of the Report is in three parts. The first, on 'the Doctrine of God and of Redemption', contains a summary statement of some of the chief elements in the Christian doctrine of God and of the world, followed by detailed discussion of the fact of sin and of the Person and Work of Christ, esp. His Birth and Resurrection. In the second and longest part, which deals with the Church and Sacraments, the Ministry and the Eucharist are the chief subjects of discussion. The third part on Eschatology was added because of the widespread confusion, arising in part from the tendency to interpret literally the apocalyptic symbolism of the NT.

On its presentation to the *Convocations, the Report met with much hostile criticism, partly perhaps through a misunderstanding of its character and purpose. It did not claim to be an authoritative epitome of the doctrine of the C of E, but simply an examination of beliefs actually held. Theological perspectives had also changed since the time when the Commission was appointed.

The Report was repr. in 1982, with new introd. by G. W. H. Lampe, 'The 1938 Report in Retrospect', pp. ix–lx.

Doctrine of the Faith, Congregation of the. See HOLY OFFICE.

Dodd, Charles Harold (1884–1973), NT scholar and theologian. After studying at University College and Mansfield College, Oxford, and at Berlin, Dodd was ordained minister of Warwick *Congregational Church in 1912. In 1915 he was appointed Yates Lecturer in NT at Mansfield College, Oxford, in 1930 Rylands Professor at Manchester, and from 1935 to 1949 he was Norris-Hulse Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. Dodd's earlier works include The Authority of the Bible (1928), The Epistle to the Romans (*Moffatt NT Comm., 1932) and The Bible and the Greeks (1935). In The Parables of the Kingdom (1935), The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments (1936) and History of the Gospel (1938) he put forward his much discussed conception of 'realized eschatology', viz. that the OT promises of, and Christ's authentic words on, the coming of the *Kingdom of God (q.v.) received their realization in the Incarnation and its consequences for mankind. His study on The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (1953) and The Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel (Sarum Lectures, 1954–5; pub. 1963) argue that the tradition underlying St John's Gospel has greater claim to historical value than has often been thought. From 1950 Dodd was General Director and from 1965 Joint Director of what was to be the New English Bible (see BIBLE, ENGLISH VERSIONS, 5). He played a major part in the translation of the NT (pub. 1961).

Collections of his essays issued as New Testament Studies (Manchester, 1953) and More New Testament Studies (ibid., 1968). The Background of the New Testament and its Eschatology: In Honour of C. H. Dodd, ed. W. D. Davies and D. Daube (1956), with bibl. of Dodd's works, pp. xiii–xviii. Life by F. W. Dillistone (London, 1977).

Doddridge, Philip (1702–51), *Dissenting divine and hymn-writer. The twentieth child of his parents, after their death he owed much to the Dissenting minister at St Albans, Samuel Clark (1684–1750). Declining an offer from the Duchess of Bedford of university education if he would conform, and against the advice of E. *Calamy, he entered the Dissenting Academy at Kibworth, Leics, under John Jennings, and after Jennings's death in 1723 succeeded him as minister there. In 1729 the Academy was reconstituted at Northampton under Doddridge, who became minister of an important Dissenting congregation in the town. Both in Northampton, where he established a Charity School and was among the founders of the County Infirmary, and more widely, through his writings and his Academy, Doddridge's stature and influence quickly grew. In 1736 he received a DD from the university of Aberdeen. He died prematurely in 1751 at Lisbon, after a breakdown in his health.

'Ordained a presbyter' in 1730 by eight ministers, five of them *Presbyterians, Doddridge early opposed *Calvinist rigidity and throughout his ministry sought to obliterate party lines in the interests of reconciliation and unity; in 1748 he suggested to Abp. T. *Herring an interchange of pulpits between clergy of the C of E and Dissenting ministers. Following his friend and patron I. *Watts, he wrote a large number of hymns, many of which are still in use, e.g. 'O God of Bethel' and 'Hark the glad sound'. Acquainted with the *Wesleys, G. *Whitefield, the Countess of *Huntingdon, and the *Moravian N. L. von *Zinzendorf, he welcomed the first stirrings of the Evangelical Revival both in England and overseas, and was among the pioneers of the modern missionary enterprise. Of his many writings, which comprised sermons, commentaries, devotional pieces, and theological treatises (several of them translated into Dutch), The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul (1745) is perhaps the most effective.

Works, incl. Memoir by [J.] Orton, in 10 vols. (1802–5) and in 5 vols. (1803–4). J. D. Humphreys (great-grandson, ed.), The Correspondence and Diary of Philip Doddridge (5 vols. 1829–31). G. F. Nuttall, Calendar of the Correspondence of Philip Doddridge, DD (Historical Manuscripts Commission Joint Publications, 26, and Northamptonshire Record Society, 29; 1979). J. Orton, Memoirs of the Life, Character and Writings of the late Reverend Philip Doddridge (1766; ed. D. Russell, 1825). C. Stanford, Philip Doddridge (1880). M. Deacon, Philip Doddridge of Northampton, 1702–51 (Northampton, 1980). G. F. Nuttall (ed.), Philip Doddridge 1702–51: His Contribution to English Religion (1951); J. van den Berg and G. F. Nuttall, Philip Doddridge (1702–1751) and the Netherlands (Publications of the Sir Thomas Browne Institute, Leiden, NS 8; 1987). A. Gordon in DNB 15 (1888), pp. 158–64.

Dodwell, Henry (1641–1711), 'the elder', English theologian. Educated at *Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became a Fellow, he resigned his fellowship in 1666 from reluctance to take holy orders. Settling in London, he soon established a reputation as a patristic scholar; he later edited the posthumous works of J. *Pearson. In 1688 he was appointed Camden praelector of ancient history at Oxford. He contended that the replacement of the *Nonjuring bishops was uncanonical and was deprived of his post in 1691 when he declined to take the Oath of Allegiance. He retired to Shottesbrooke in Berkshire, where for a time the antiquary T. *Hearne was his pupil. In 1710 he rejoined the established Church.

Dodwell was one of the foremost of the Nonjuring apologists. In A Vindication of the Deprived Bishops (published anonymously, 1692) he anticipated many of the fears of *Erastianism and heresy that were to be debated in the *Convocation and *Bangorian controversies. His other works include Separation of Churches from Episcopal Government as practised by the present Nonconformists proved Schismatical (1679), Dissertationes Cyprianicae (1682), Occasional Communion fundamentally Destructive of the Discipline of the Primitive Catholic Church (1705), and A Case in View (1705), suggesting that when the last of the Nonjuring Bishops died, there would be no reason to maintain the schism.

His son, Henry Dodwell 'the younger' (d. 1784), was a *Deist, who secured some notoriety from his Christianity not founded on Argument (1742).

F. Brokesby, The Life of Henry Dodwell, with an Account of his Works (1715). M. Goldie, 'The Nonjurors, Episcopacy, and the Origins of the Convocation Controversy', in E. Cruickshanks (ed.), Ideology and Conspiracy: Aspects of Jacobitism, 1689–1759 (Edinburgh [1982]), pp. 15–35, passim. J. H. Overton in DNB 15 (1888), pp. 179–82 (on both Dodwells).

dogma (Gk. δόγμα, 'opinion', from δοκεῖν). The original meaning of the word was 'that which seems good', and hence it was applied by classical authors as a technical term either to the distinctive tenets of the various philosophical schools or to the decrees of public authorities. In this second sense it is used in the *Septuagint and the NT, e.g. Dan. 2: 13, Acts 16: 4, Eph. 2: 15, etc., whereas the patristic use developed from the first. 'Dogma', in the Christian sense as opposed to the teachings of the philosophers, soon acquired a definite theological significance. In the accepted Christian meaning the term signifies a religious truth established by Divine Revelation and defined by the Church.

Dold, Alban (1882–1960), liturgical scholar. Born at Villingen in the Black Forest, he was professed at the Benedictine monastery of *Beuron in 1903. He applied himself esp. to the study of liturgical *palimpsests; he elaborated new techniques and extended a photographic process, originally invented by Fr. Raphael Kögel, OSB, for reading difficult texts by fluorescence. By this means he was able to read a number of early liturgical pieces, incl. a *lectionary dating from the 5th or 6th cent. Most of the texts which he recovered were published in the series Texte und Arbeiten, which he founded in 1917.

B. Fischer and V. Fiala (eds.), Colligere Fragmenta: Festschrift A. Dold zum 70. Geburtstag am 7.7.1952 (Texte und Arbeiten, Beiheft 2; 1952), with bibl. [122 items], pp. i–xx; suppl. in K. Gamber, Sakramentartypen (Texte und Arbeiten, 49/50; 1958), pp. viii–x. P. Gordan, OSB, 'P. Alban Dold zum Gedächtnis', Benediktinische Monatschrift, 36 (1960), pp. 467–70; K. Gamber, 'Kurze Biographie und Bibliographie von Pater Alban Dold OSB', EL 75 (1961), pp. 244 f.

Dolling, Robert William Radclyffe, 'Father Dolling' (1851–1902), *Anglo-Catholic missioner. A nephew of William Alexander, who became Abp. of *Armagh, Dolling was an Irishman by birth, though not by descent. Educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1878 he came to London, where he soon fell under the influence of A. H. *Stanton at St Alban's, Holborn. Dolling in turn played a seminal part in the religious development of G. *Tyrrell. His work as warden of a fellowship for postmen (the 'St Martin's Postmen's League') earned him the name of 'Brother Bob'. In 1885, two years after his ordination, he was put in charge of St Agatha's, Landport, the Winchester College Mission, where for ten years he fought very successfully against the evils of slum life. The remarkable transformation that was achieved in the parish under his influence is vividly set out in his Ten Years in a Portsmouth Slum (1896). Though without any intrinsic interest in ceremonial, he refused to modify his practice where change might seem to imply concession in matters of faith. In consequence, following opposition from R. T. *Davidson, then Bp. of Winchester, he resigned from Landport in 1896. From 1898 till his death he was Vicar of St Saviour's, Poplar.

Life by C. E. Osborne (London, 1903); shorter memoir by J. Clayton (ibid., 1902). W. B. Owen in DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 512 f.

Döllinger, Johann Joseph Ignaz von (1799–1890), Bavarian Church historian. Ordained priest in 1822, he was from 1823 to 1826 professor of Church history at Aschaffenburg and from 1826 until 1873 at Munich. At first he held strong *Ultramontane opinions, and his early writings show few signs of the independence which characterized his later work. Contact with the newer tendencies of Church history in other countries, and his friendship with such men as J. H. *Newman and Lord *Acton, gradually aroused his critical sense. Before 1840 he had developed his notion of a German Church free from state control, but in full communion with Rome, and this project he defended in the National Parliament of Frankfurt, as well as in several of his writings, notably his Reformation (3 vols., 1845–8) and Luther (1851).

In the 1850s he wrote several important works on Church history, among them Hippolytus und Kallistus (1853), Heidenthum und Judenthum (1857), and Christentum und Kirche (1860). He gradually came to be distrustful of Roman influence, and in 1861, in two published lectures, he attacked the temporal power of the Pope, thereby arousing hostility esp. among the *Jesuits. In 1863 he took the leading part at the Congress of Munich, where a liberal form of Catholicism was defended. The publication of the '*Syllabus' in 1864 and the calling of the First *Vatican Council with the avowed intention of suppressing Liberalism further increased his disagreement with Roman policy. The *Letters of Janus (in conjunction with others; 1869) and *Letters of Quirinus (1869–70) revealed him as a formidable critic of the Council and of the doctrine of *infallibility. After refusing to submit to the Conciliar decisions, he was excommunicated in 1871 by Abp. G. v. Scherr of Munich. In his later years he largely identified himself with the *Old Catholic Churches, and worked for reunion (see BONN REUNION CONFERENCES). As a mark of general esteem, he was appointed in 1873 president of the Bavarian Royal Academy of Sciences in succession to J. von Liebig.

Döllinger's other writings included Die Papstfabeln des Mittelalters (1863), Geschichte der Moralstreitigkeiten in der römisch-katholischen Kirche seit dem 16. Jahrhundert (2 vols., 1889; with F. H. Reusch) and Briefe und Erklärungen über die vatikanischen Dekrete (1890). His publications showed that a background of dogmatic orthodoxy could produce work of no less brilliance and calibre than the destructive criticism of the *Tübingen School. His capacity for work was almost limitless and his personal life simple. He was also a great teacher.

Many of his works have been tr. into Eng. H. Schörs (ed.), Ignaz von Döllinger's Briefe an eine junge Freundin (1914). Correspondence with Acton, 1850–1890, ed. V. Conzemius (3 vols., Munich, 1963–71); vol. 4 of correspondence (with Charlotte, Lady Blennerhassett), ed. id. (ibid., 1981). A. Plummer, Conversations with Dr. Döllinger 1870–1890, ed. R. Boudens (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 67; 1985). J. *Friedrich, Ignaz von Döllinger: Sein Leben auf Grund seines schriftlichen Nachlasses (3 vols., 1899–1901). E. Michael, SJ, 'Döllinger. Ein Charakterbild', ZKT 15 (1891), pp. 401–76, 577–666; 16 (1892), pp. 1–81, 193–230, 385–427, rev. and reissued as Ignaz von Döllinger: Eine Charakteristik (2nd edn., 1892). L. von Kobell, Ignaz von Döllinger: Erinnerungen (1891; Eng. tr., 1892). S. Lösch, Döllinger und Frankreich (1955). J. Speigl, Traditionslehre und Traditionsbeweis in der historischen Theologie Ignaz Döllingers (Beiträge zur neueren Geschichte der katholischen Theologie, 5; Essen, 1964). J. Finsterhölzl, Die Kirche in der Theologie Ignaz v. Döllingers bis zum ersten Vatikanum (Studien zur Theologie und Geistesgeschichte des Neunzehnten Jahrhunderts, 9; 1975). W. Brandmüller, Ignaz v. Döllinger am Vorabend des I. Vatikanums (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, 9; 1977). Lord Acton, 'Doellinger's Historical Work', EHR 5 (1890), pp. 700–44; repr. in The History of Freedom and Other Essays, ed. J. N. *Figgis and R. V. Laurence (1907), pp. 375–435. V. Conzemius, 'Aspects ecclésiologiques de l'évolution de Döllinger et du Vieux Catholicisme', Rev. S.R. 34 (1960), pp. 247–79. W. Müller in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 553–63, s.v.

DOM, i.e. Deo Optimo Maximo (Lat., 'to God, the Best and Greatest'). Originally a pagan formula addressed to Jupiter, it came to be widely used with a Christian application over the doors of churches and on sepulchral monuments. The celebrated temple of Jupiter on the Capitol at *Rome was pre-eminently that to Jupiter 'Optimus Maximus', and this was no doubt the immediate source of the Christian application of the phrase.

Dom (abbreviation of Dominus, 'Master'). A title given to professed monks of the *Benedictine, *Cistercian, and *Carthusian orders, as well as to certain *canons regular. In the *Cassinese Congregation of the Benedictines it is also given to novices. The corresponding Italian 'Don' is used in a wider sense, e.g. of Don *Bosco.

Dome of the Rock (Arab. Kubbet es-Sakhra). The Muslim shrine in *Jerusalem, built in the area of the Jewish *Temple. It was completed in AD 691/2. The rock from which it takes its name is believed by *Muslims to be that from which Muhammad ascended to heaven, and by Jews to be that on which *Abraham prepared to sacrifice *Isaac. Both are also held to be on the site of Araunah the Jebusite's threshing-floor (2 Sam. 24: 18) and of the altar of burnt sacrifice of *Solomon's Temple. The shrine is also known as the 'Mosque of Omar', a name given to it in the belief that it was the work of the second Caliph, Omar (581–644).

R. Hartmann, Der Felsendom in Jerusalem und seine Geschichte (Zur Kunstgeschichte des Auslandes, Heft 69; 1909). K. A. C. Creswell, The Origin and Plan of the Dome of the Rock (British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem, Supplementary Papers, 2; 1924), with full refs. Id., A Short Account of Early Muslim Architecture, rev. J. W. Allan (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 18–42.

Domine quo vadis? (Lat., 'Lord, whither goest thou?'). Acc. to the apocryphal Acta Petri (see PETER, ACTS OF), St *Peter was persuaded by the Church towards the end of his life to flee from Rome to escape persecution. Meeting the Lord on the way, he addressed to Him the question 'Domine quo vadis?' and received the answer, 'I go to Rome to be crucified,' whereupon St Peter turned back and gave himself up for crucifixion. Legend connects the incident with the site of the '*Quo Vadis' chapel on the *Appian Way, half a mile from the Porta San Sebastiano.

Dominic, St (*c.*1172–1221), founder of the Order of Friars Preachers, known as the *Dominican Order. Born in Caleruega, Old Castile, he studied arts and theology at Palencia. During a famine he sold his possessions, including his annotated books, to help the poor. Shortly afterwards he joined the canons at Osma, where the bishop, Martin Bazán (1190–1201), was trying to restore full regular life under the Rule of St *Augustine. By 1201 Dominic was subprior of the community. In 1203–5 he accompanied Diego of Acebes, the new Bp. of Osma, on two embassies to N. Europe; in the course of these he and Diego became interested in missionary work to pagans. *Innocent III refused Diego's request to resign his see, but on their way back to Spain Diego and Dominic became involved in the mission against the *Albigensians. On Diego's advice, a new style of itinerant, mendicant preaching was adopted in imitation of the *Apostles. Dominic became a regular member of the mission, and in 1215 he was put in charge of its new base in Toulouse. With the support of Bp. Fulk of Toulouse he founded a permanent community of preachers there. On the advice of Innocent III, the preachers adopted the Rule of St Augustine, and between 1216 and 1218 they were progressively recognized by *Honorius III as a new religious order, the Order of Preachers. In 1217 Dominic began to disperse his friars to other parts of the world, and they made an important foundation in *Paris, attached to the University. He himself travelled in Italy, Spain, and France, preaching and making foundations. In 1220 he summoned a General Chapter at *Bologna, where the Order's first constitutions were completed; they emphasized the priority of preaching and the good of souls. The second General Chapter was held in 1221; it dispatched groups of Dominicans in all directions, including England.

In addition to the friars, Dominic also laid the foundations of an order of Dominican nuns. From 1207 he was responsible for a community of women established by Diego at Prouille, in Albigensian territory. In 1219 he took charge of a Papal project for establishing a reformed monastery of women at San Sisto, Rome. He also established a house of nuns at Madrid; his only surviving literary work is a letter to this community. He was particularly keen to set up another house in Bologna, though this was not actually founded until 1223.

Dominic was remarkable for the intensity of his zeal for souls and for his dedication to prayer, for his fearlessness, and for his friendliness. His single-minded determination to be a preacher and to send out preachers on the apostolic model made him refuse three bishoprics which he was offered. He is traditionally, but wrongly, held to have instituted the *Rosary. He died on 6 Aug. 1221. He was canonized in 1234. Feast day, 8 Aug.; formerly 5 Aug. until 1558, then 4 Aug. (as still in the ASB).

Gerald de Frachet, OP, Vitae Fratrum Ordinis Praedicatorum, ed. B. M. Reichert, OP (Monumenta Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum Historica, 1; Rome, 1897); M.-H. Laurent, OP, and others (eds.), Monumenta Historica Sancti Patris Nostri Dominici, fasc. 2 (ibid. 16; 1935); V. J. Koudelka, OP, and R. J. Loenertz, OP (eds.), Monumenta Diplomatica S. Domini (ibid. 25; 1966). Crit. edn. of 'The Nine Ways of Prayer of St. Dominic' by S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Mediaeval Studies, 47 (1985), pp. 1–124, and of Dominic's letter to the Madrid nuns by id., Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 56 (1986), pp. 5–13. Useful Fr. tr. of primary docs. ed. M.-H. Vicaire, OP, Saint Dominique de Caleruega d'après les documents du XIII^e siècle (1955; 2nd edn. as Saint Dominique: La Vie Apostolique, 1965, and Saint Dominique et ses Frères: Évangile ou Croisade?, 1967). Eng. trs. of primary material ed. F. C. Lehner, OP, Saint Dominic: Biographical Documents (Washington, DC, 1964); S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP (ed.), Early Dominicans: Selected Writings (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1982), pp. 51–119; Jordan of Saxony, OP, On the Beginnings of the Order of Preachers, ed. and tr. S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP (Dominican Sources [1]; Parable, Ill., and Dublin, 1982). AASS, Aug. 1 (1733), pp. 358–658. P. Mandonnet, OP, Saint Dominique: L'idée, l'homme et l'œuvre (1921; 2nd edn., much enlarged, with notes by M. H. Vicaire, OP, and R. Ladner, OP, 2 vols. [1937]; Eng. tr., St Louis, 1944); M.-H. Vicaire, OP, Histoire de saint Dominique (2 vols., 1957; 3rd edn., rev., 1982; Eng. tr., 1964); id., Dominique et ses Prêcheurs (Studia Friburgensia, NS 55; 1977; 2nd edn., 1979). G. Bedouelle [OP], Dominique ou la Grâce de la Parole (1982; rev. Ger. tr., Dominikus: Von der Kraft des Wortes, 1984; Eng. tr., San Francisco, 1987). V. J. Koudelka [OP], Dominikus (Olten and Freiburg, 1983). S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, 'Notes on the life of St Dominic', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 65 (1995), pp. 5–169. See also works cited under DOMINICAN ORDER.

Dominica in albis. In the W. Church, the name formerly given to *Low Sunday as that on which those newly baptized at *Easter put aside their white robes. The expression is an abbreviation of 'Dominica in albis deponendis' or 'depositis'. The previous Saturday was correspondingly known as 'Sabbatum in albis'. In 1969 it was designated 'Dominica in Octava Paschae seu Dom. II Paschae'.

Dominical Letter. See SUNDAY LETTER.

Dominican Order (Ordo Praedicatorum, OP), known in Britain also as Black Friars (from the black mantle worn over a white habit) and in France as Jacobins (from their first house in *Paris, the priory of St Jacques). The Dominicans are officially dedicated to preaching and the good of souls, and from the outset study has occupied a central position. Founded by St *Dominic, the order took definite shape at the General Chapter at *Bologna in 1220. At St Dominic's desire, the order adopted not only individual, but corporate poverty, owning nothing but its actual houses and churches; communities, as well as individual friars, were to be supported only by alms, not by properties or revenues. The order spread rapidly throughout Europe and into Asia, and in the great age of exploration Dominicans followed close upon the Portuguese and Spanish explorers in both the E. and W. hemispheres. During the Reformation and later during successive political upheavals they lost many of their houses and even provinces, but since the revival of the order in the 19th cent. it has again spread throughout the world.

The intellectual side of the order's work expanded greatly during the 13th cent., and a complex educational system was established, culminating in the '*Studia Generalia', usually associated with universities. Several Dominican houses contained public schools of theology. The adaptation of *Aristotle to Christian philosophy was the work esp. of the Dominicans, chiefly St *Albertus Magnus and St *Thomas Aquinas.

Although the Dominicans maintained elements of monastic observance, from the outset they abandoned manual labour, to facilitate preaching and study, and in 1220 they made constitutional provision for an unusually wide use of dispensations from conventual observances. These dispensations and the frequent absence of friars from the community (and slightly later, the setting up of houses where friars could live outside the community), together with the needs of the increasing number of academics in the order, led to a weakening of community life and to a privatizing of the control of funds. The tendency towards laxity of observance was reinforced by indiscriminate recruiting to restore the losses caused by the Black Death. During the 14th cent. there were attempts to reform the order, leading to the eventual establishment of reformed priories and later reformed congregations and provinces. In spite of the constitutional difficulties these posed, the reform succeeded in revitalizing conventual life in the order. But the law of corporate poverty was increasingly found to be unworkable and, after being progressively whittled away, it was finally abolished by *Sixtus IV in 1475, a move which was accepted even by most of the Dominican reformers.

The constitutional government of the order has been much admired, and it has been claimed that it influenced the development of *Convocation and even of Parliament in England and the Constitution of the USA. There is a balance between central government, under the Master of the Order and a bi-cameral system of General Chapters, and local government in the provinces and priories. All superiors are now elected for fixed terms of office.

In the Middle Ages the Dominicans were used extensively by the Papacy for such missions as the preaching of *Crusades, the collecting of monetary levies, visitations, diplomatic missions, and, in many places, the *Inquisition. They were also used by secular rulers and provided many royal confessors.

There are also cloistered nuns (the Second Order) and fraternities of lay Dominicans (the *Third Order (q.v.) or Tertiaries) under the jurisdiction of the Master of the Order; together with the numerous autonomous *congregations of Dominican sisters engaged in various active works, and 12 Secular *Institutes, these form the non-juridical 'Dominican Family'.

Works of individual Dominican writers in J. Quétif, OP, and J. Echard, OP, Scriptores Ordinis Praedicatorum Recensiti (2 vols., Paris, 1719–21); a continuation covering the period 1701–50 was compiled by R. Coulon, OP, and A. Papillon, OP (12 parts, Paris and Rome, 1910–34); T. Kaeppeli, OP, Scriptores Ordinis Praedicatorum Medii Aevi (4 vols., Rome, 1970–93). A. Walz, OP, Compendium Historiae Ordinis Praedicatorum (Rome, 1930; 2nd edn., 1948); W. A. Hinnebusch, OP, The History of the Dominican Order [to 1500] (2 vols., Staten Island, NY [1966–73]); A. D'Amato, OP, L'Ordine dei Frati Predicatori (Rome [1983]); B. M. Ashley, OP, The Dominicans (Collegeville, Minn. [1990]). A. H. Thomas, OP, De Oudste Constituties van de Dominicanen (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 42; 1965 [with resumé in Fr.]). W. R. Bonniwell, OP, A History of the Dominican Liturgy (New York, 1944); A. Gonzalez Fuente, OP, La Vida Liturgica en la Orden de Predicadores (Institutum Historicum FF. Praedicatorum Romae ad S. Sabinae, Dissertationes Historicae, 20; 1981). Bede Jarrett, OP, The English Dominicans (1921; rev. and abridged by W. Gumbley, OP, 1937). S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP (ed.), Early Dominicans: Selected Writings [in Eng. tr.] (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1982). W. A. Hinnebusch, OP, The Early English Friars Preachers (Institutum Historicum FF. Praedicatorum Romae ad S. Sabinae, Dissertationes Historicae, 14; Rome, 1951). B. Smalley, English Friars and Antiquity in the Early Fourteenth Century (Oxford, 1960). G. Anstruther, OP, A Hundred Homeless Years: English Dominicans 1558–1658 (1958). W. Gumbley, OP, Obituary Notices of the English Dominicans from 1552 to 1952 (1955). B. *Altaner, Die Dominikanermissionen des 13. Jahrhunderts (Breslauer Studien zur historischen Theologie, 3; Habelschwerdt, 1924); W. J. Loedding, OP, Die schwarz-weisse Legion: Missionsgeschichte des Dominikanerordens (Cologne, 1974); M. A. Medina, OP, Una Comunidad al Servicio del Indio: La Obra de Fr. Pedro de Cordoba, OP (1482–1521) (Madrid, 1983). M. Andrés Martín, Los Recogidos: Nueva visión de la mística española (1500–1700) (1975), pp. 392–449 ('Trayectoria del Recogimiento entre los Dominicos'). G. G. Meersseman [OP] and G. P. Pagini, Ordo Fraternitatis: Confraternite e Pietà dei Laici nel Medioevo (Italia Sacra, 24–6; 1977), pp. 578–1270 ('Le Antiche Confraternite Domenicane', i.e. vol. 2 and part of vol. 3). Monumenta Ordinis Praedicatorum (Rome, 1897 ff.). Dominican Sources: New Editions in English (Parable, Ill., and Dublin, 1982 ff.). Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum (Rome, 1931 ff.). There are also a number of series and journals issued in different provinces. P. Mandonnet, OP, in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 863–924, s.v. 'Frères Prêcheurs'; A. Duval, OP, in Catholicisme, ed. G. Jacquemet and others, 3 (1952), cols. 984–93, s.v. 'Dominicaines'; id. and P. M. Gy, OP, ibid. 4 (1956), cols. 1618–28, s.v. 'Frères Prêcheurs'; H.-D. Simonin, OCR, and others in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1422–524, s.v. 'Frères Prêcheurs'; W. A. Hinnebusch, OP, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 971–82, s.vv. 'Dominican Spirituality' and 'Dominicans'; H.-M. Vicaire, OP, and A. Duval, OP, in DHGE 18 (1977), cols. 1369–426, s.v. 'Frères Prêcheurs'. See also bibl. to DOMINIC, ST.

Dominis, Marco Antonio de. See DE DOMINIS, MARCO ANTONIO.

Dominus ac Redemptor. The brief of *Clement XIV of 21 July 1773, which suppressed the *Jesuit Order. It was issued mainly at the instigation of Joseph Moniño, the Spanish ambassador, to whom it probably owes most of its provisions. As its execution was left mainly to the local bishops, the treatment meted out to the Jesuits varied widely in different localities.

Text in A. Barbèri and A. Spetia (eds.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio, 4 (Rome, 1841), pp. 607–18; the main clauses are repr. in Mirbt, pp. 404–11 (no. 546), with refs. See also works cited under JESUITS.

Dominus vobiscum. A Latin liturgical salutation, meaning 'The Lord be with you', to which the response is Et cum spiritu tuo, 'And with thy spirit'. Both formulae are probably as old as Christianity. The salutation occurs in Ruth 2: 4; the closest scriptural approximation to the response is in 2 Tim. 4: 22. Both the salutation and the response are found in the Apostolic Tradition* of St *Hippolytus.

It was the subject of a short treatise by St *Peter Damian, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 145. 231–52. W. C. van Unnik, 'Dominus vobiscum: The Background of a Liturgical Formula', in A. J. B. Higgins (ed.), New Testament Essays: Studies in Memory of Thomas Walter Manson (Manchester, 1959), pp. 270–305. H. Ashworth, OSB, 'Et cum spiritu tuo. An Inquiry into its Origin and Meaning', Clergy Review, 51 (1966), pp. 122–30. F. J. van Beeck, SJ, 'A Note on Two Liturgical Greetings and the People's Reply', EL 103 (1989), pp. 519–22. Jungmann (ed. 1958), 1, pp. 463–9; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 361–6. A. Heinz in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.,) 3 (1995), col. 324, s.v.

Domitian, Titus Flavius (AD 51–96), Roman Emp. from 81. The son of Vespasian, he succeeded his brother Titus. He was assassinated in 96. Roman historians ranked him as a tyrant; Christian tradition (*Eusebius, HE 3. 13 ff.) held him to have been a persecutor, a view prob. confirmed by I Clement 7. Under his successor, Trajan, being a Christian was already a capital offence, but this may have been the case continuously since *Nero. Acc. to a very widespread tradition, it was during Domitian's reign that the Apostle *John, in exile at *Patmos, received the revelations recorded in the Apocalypse. See also the following entry and PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

The principal authorities include *Suetonius, 'Domitianus' in De Vita Caesarum, 8; Dio Cassius, Hist. Rom. 67 (ed., with Eng. tr. by E. Cary, Loeb edn. 8, 1925, pp. 316–59); and Eusebius, HE 3. 13–20. A. Garzetti, From Tiberius to the Antonines (rev. Eng. tr., 1974), pp. 265–95, with bibl. pp. 645–58, 750 f. and 754 f. B. W. Jones, The Emperor Domitian (1992). E. M. Smallwood, 'Domitian's Attitude toward the Jews and Judaism', Classical Philology, 51 (1956), pp. 1–13; P. Keresztes, 'The Jews, the Christians, and the Emperor Domitian', VC 27 (1973), pp. 1–28. See also bibl. s.v. PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Domitilla, Flavia (d. c. AD 100), Roman matron of the Imperial family, regarded since the 4th cent. as a Christian martyr. She was the daughter of the Emp. Vespasian (reigned 69–79) and married to Titus Flavius Clemens, *Domitian's cousin. Domitian banished her to the island of Pandateria when he put Clemens to death in 95. Acc. to the Roman historian Dio Cassius, both were accused of 'atheism', a charge which has sometimes been thought to imply either Judaism or Christianity. Domitilla is specifically said to have suffered as a Christian by *Eusebius; Clemens is not so described until some 400 years later by *George Syncellus. Both claims are open to serious doubt, though the 'Coemeterium Domitillae' on the Via Ardeatina outside Rome was used in her time as a place of burial by Christians, presumably of her household. See also GLABRIO and NEREUS AND ACHILLEUS, STS.

Dio Cassius, Hist. 67. 14; Eusebius, HE 3. 18. 4, and Chron. Dom. 16; George Syncellus, Chronographia, ed. W. Dindorf, p. 650. Prosopographia Imperii Romani, 3 (2nd edn., Berlin and Leipzig, 1943), pp. 142 f. (no. 240), s.v. 'Flavius Clemens', and pp. 188 f. (no. 418), s.v. 'Flavia Domitilla'. E. M. Smallwood, 'Domitian's Attitude toward the Jews and Judaism', Classical Philology, 51 (1956), pp. 1–13; P. Keresztes, 'The Jews, the Christians, and the Emperor Domitian', VC 27 (1973), pp. 1–28. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 4 (1921), cols. 1401–42, svv. 'Domitille (Flavie)' and 'Domitille (Cimetière de)'. See also works cited under PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Donatello (*c.*1385/6–1466) (Donato di Niccolò di Betto Bardi), Italian sculptor. He was born and died in Florence, and worked on its cathedral on and off for 30 years. In contrast to his contemporaries Lorenzo Ghiberti (under whom he briefly worked), Fra *Angelico, or Luca *della Robbia (who also worked on the cathedral), he realized that Christian pathos can be expressed by distortion and ugliness, and that physical and spiritual beauty are not the same; his ravaged Magdalen (*c.*1455; Florence, Baptistery) and to a lesser degree his St John the Baptist (1438; Venice, Frari) or the Baptist (*c.*1457; Siena Cathedral), all have an emotional impact far greater than that of their usual gentle imagery. His previous study, in Rome, of later antique and early Christian art—esp. portraits and *sarcophagi—taught him to use dramatic gesture and strong characterization, which he combined with the perspective then being evolved by his friend Filippo Brunelleschi. His low reliefs, such as the Ascension, with the Giving of the Keys (London, Victoria and Albert Museum) or Herod presented with the Head of the Baptist (1427; Siena, Baptistery) exploit perspective, as do the reliefs for the High Altar in the Basilica of St Antony at Padua (1443–*c.*1450; the altar has since been reconstructed). His works in Padua (his headquarters, 1443–53) were decisive in the formation of the Paduan and Venetian schools of painting, influencing esp. A. *Mantegna and Giovanni Bellini. Every later sculptor, including *Michelangelo, was deeply indebted to him.

H. W. Janson, The Sculpture of Donatello (2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1957). Other studies by G. Castelfranco (Florence [1981]), M. Greenhalgh (London, 1982), and B. A. Bennett and D. G. Wilkins (Oxford, 1984).

Donation of Constantine (Constitutum or Donatio Constantini). A document which was fabricated in the second half of the 8th cent. (perhaps in the interests of the church of St Saviour at the *Lateran, or possibly in the curia of Pope *Stephen II), and certainly before *c.*850, when it was incorporated in the *False Decretals. It purports to be a record by the Emp. *Constantine of his conversion, the profession of his new faith, and the privileges he conferred upon Pope *Sylvester I (314–35), his clergy, and their successors. These included primacy over all other Churches, particularly those of *Antioch, *Alexandria, *Constantinople, and *Jerusalem, and dominion over Rome and 'all the provinces, places, and civitates of Italy and the Western regions'. The Pope was also made supreme judge of the clergy, the chief of whom were to have the rank of Senators, and he was even offered the Imperial crown (which, however, he refused). These grants were prob. first used to support the universal claims of the Papacy in a letter written in 1053 by *Leo IX to *Michael Cerularius, and were frequently cited for the same purpose by his successors. The effect of the Donation, and even its authenticity, were occasionally challenged earlier, but its falsity was demonstrated in the 15th cent. by *Nicholas of Cusa, Bp. R. *Pecock, and L. *Valla.

Crit. edn. by H. Fuhrmann (MGH, Fontes Iuris Germanici Antiqui in Usum Scholarum, 10; 1968). Eng. tr., omitting the profession of faith, in S. Z. Ehler and J. B. Morrall (eds.), Church and State through the Centuries (1954), pp. 15–22. D. Maffei, La Donazione di Constantino nei giuristi medievali (Milan, 1964), with bibl. T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia [1964]), pp. 134–7, with bibl. to date. W. Levison, 'Konstantinische Schenkung und Silvester-Legende', Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, 2 (ST 38; 1924), pp. 159–247, repr. in Levison's Aus rheinischer und fränkischer Frühzeit (1948), pp. 390–465. H. Fuhrmann, Einfluss und Verbreitung der pseudoisidorischen Fälschungen, 2 (Schriften der MGH, 24/2; 1973), pp. 354–407, with refs. N. Huyghebaert, 'Une légende de fondation: le Constitutum Constantini', Moyen Âge, 85 (1979), pp. 177–209. H. Fuhrmann in TRE 8 (1981), pp. 196–202, s.v. 'Constitutum Constantini' with full refs., esp. to his own earlier papers; J. Van Engen in Dictionary of the Middle Ages, 4 [1984], pp. 257–9, s.v.; H. Fuhrmann in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 5 (1991), cols. 1385–7, s.v. 'Konstantinische Schenkung'.

Donatism. The Donatists were a schismatic body in the African Church who became divided from the Catholics through their refusal to accept Caecilian, Bp. of Carthage (consecrated most prob. in 311), on the ground that his consecrator, Felix of Aptunga, had been a traditor during the *Diocletianic *persecution. The Numidian bishops, supporting the objectors, consecrated Majorinus as a rival to Caecilian, and he was soon afterwards succeeded by Donatus, from whom the schism is named.

A commission under *Miltiades, Bp. of Rome, investigated the dispute in 313. It decided against the Donatists, who thereupon appealed unsuccessfully, first to the Synod of *Arles (314) and then to the Emperor (316). But the schism prospered, for theologically (with doubtful justification) it claimed St *Cyprian's authority, while politically it drew upon African regional feeling, since the Catholics were supported by Rome. It also relied upon Numidian jealousy of Carthage and on economic unrest. The Emperor began coercion in 316, but abandoned it in 321. When, later, the Donatist leaders associated themselves with violent bands of marauders, called circumcelliones, state repression began again (347) under Constans, but was relaxed under *Julian (361–3).

The theological attack on the Donatists was led first by St *Optatus, and later by St *Augustine. The efforts of their own more moderate supporters, such as the orator *Tyconius, probably did more harm than good to their cause. In 405 the state again intervened against them, and at a large conference at Carthage in 411 the Imperial commissioner pronounced finally against Donatism. The schism, though greatly weakened, persisted until the African Church was destroyed by the Arabs in the 7th–8th cent.

Theologically the Donatists were rigorists, holding that the Church of the saints must remain 'holy' (cf. *Novatianism), and that sacraments conferred by traditores were invalid. Apart from their denial that Felix of Aptunga was in fact a traditor, the Church maintained that the unworthiness of the minister did not affect the *validity of sacraments, since, as Augustine insisted, their true minister was Christ. The Donatists, on the other hand, went so far as to assert that all those who communicated with traditores were infected, and that, since the Church is one and holy, the Donatists alone formed the Church. Converts to Donatism were rebaptized, a proceeding repeatedly condemned by orthodox synods.

The chief sources are Optatus, De Schismate Donatistarum (*c.*368), and the anti-Donatist writings of Augustine (edn. Ben., vol. 9). Useful introd. by Y. M.-J. *Congar to the anti-Donatist writings in the edn. of Augustine pub. under the direction of the Études augustiniennes, Œuvres de Saint Augustin, 28 (1963), pp. 9–133, with refs. Collection of docs. in Fr. tr. by J.-L. Maier, Le Dossier du Donatisme (TU 134–5; 1987–9). P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, 4–6 (1912–22). G. G. Willis, Saint Augustine and the Donatist Controversy (1950). W. H. C. Frend, The Donatist Church: A Movement of Protest in Roman North Africa (1952), with useful preface to 3rd printing (1985), pp. v–vii. S. L. Greenslade, Schism in the Early Church (1953; 2nd edn., 1964), passim. J. P. Brisson, Autonomisme et Christianisme dans l'Afrique romaine de Septime Sévère à l'invasion vandale (1958). E. Tengström, Donatisten und Katholiken: soziale, wirtschaftliche und politische Aspekte einer nordafrikanischen Kirchenspaltung (Studia Graeca et Latina Gothoburgensia, 18; 1964). R. Crespin, Ministère et sainteté: Pastorale du clergé et solution de la crise donatiste dans la vie et la doctrine de saint Augustin (1965). B. Kriegbaum, Kirche der Traditoren oder Kirche der Märtyrer? Die Vorgeschichte des Donatismus (Innsbrucker theologische Studien, 16; 1986). P. [R. L.] Brown, 'Christianity and Local Culture in Late Roman Africa', Journal of Roman Studies, 58 (1968), pp. 85–95, repr. in id., Religion and Society in the Age of Saint Augustine (1972), pp. 279–300, with other relevant arts., pp. 237–78 and 301–31. A. Schindler in TRE 1 (1977), pp. 654–68, s.v. 'Afrika I. 3. 4: Der Donatismus', with bibl. pp. 690–700.

Donne, John (1571/2–1631), *Metaphysical poet and Dean of *St Paul's. He was a member of a RC family, his mother being the sister of the *Jesuit missionary priest Jasper Heywood, and a granddaughter of a sister of Sir Thomas *More. He entered Hart Hall, Oxford, in 1584 and possibly studied after this at Cambridge, or perhaps abroad. He entered Thavies Inn in 1591 and transferred to Lincoln's Inn in 1592. During this period he was much exercised over the problem of his religious allegiance and for a time, according to I. *Walton, 'betrothed himself to no Religion that might give him any other denomination than a Christian'. By 1598 he had certainly conformed to the Church of England. In 1596 he accompanied Essex and Raleigh to Cadiz and in 1597 to the Azores; and in 1598 became private secretary to the Lord Keeper, Sir Thomas Egerton, a post from which he was dismissed four years later owing to his secret marriage to Ann More, his master's wife's niece, in 1601. During the next years he and his growing family lived in poverty and dependence on the charity of friends. He found employment in controversial writing and in 1610 wrote the Pseudo-Martyr to persuade Catholics that they might take the Oath of Allegiance. In the next year he wrote a witty satire on the Jesuits, Ignatius his Conclave. Around this period he composed but did not publish Biathanatos, a casuistic discussion and defence of suicide. After repeated failures to find secular employment he at last complied with the wish of the King and was ordained in 1615. The reason he himself gave for delay was scruple at accepting orders as a means of making a living. In 1621 he became Dean of St Paul's, where he preached on all great festivals. He was also a regular preacher at court and a favourite with both James and Charles. During a serious illness in 1623 he wrote his Devotions upon Emergent Occasions (1624), and the famous 'Hymn to God the Father'. He died in 1631 and was buried in St Paul's. His monument, showing him standing in his shroud, survived the Great Fire. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 31 Mar.

Donne's secular poetry was mainly written in his youth: satires, love-elegies, and lyrics, though the date of these last is questionable. His religious poetry belongs mostly to his troubled and unhappy middle years of poverty and discouragement. After his ordination his genius found expression in preaching. His fame as a poet suffered eclipse after the Restoration but had a striking revival in the 20th century. His vigorous, dramatic style, his capacity for introspection, and the subtle blend of argument and passion in his love poems and religious poems attracted poets in revolt against the Romantic tradition, most notably T. S. *Eliot. His sermons are masterpieces of the old formal style of preaching, packed with patristic learning and adorned with brilliant images and striking rhetorical effects, but his great strength is as a moral theologian, preaching as a sinner who has found mercy to other sinners. Although the contrast between Jack Donne, the youthful rake, and Dr John Donne, the divine, has been overdrawn, there is no doubt that he was haunted by an intense consciousness of the gravity of sin as he was by the thought of physical death. His great theme as a love-poet was the bliss of union; his great theme as a preacher was God's mercy. Both themes are given singular force coming from one who wrote so often of a love that was 'rage' and not 'peace'; and knew in experience the meaning of working out one's salvation with fear and trembling.

Poems, orig. pub. 1633; enlarged edn., 1635; modern edns. of Divine Poems by H. Gardner (Oxford, 1952; 2nd edn., 1978); Elegies and Songs and Sonnets, ed. id. (ibid., 1965); Epithalamions, Anniversaries, and Epicedes, ed. W. Milgate (ibid., 1978); Satires, Epigrams, and Verse Letters, ed. id. (ibid., 1967). There are separate modern edns. of Biathanatos (pr. 1644, pub. 1647) by M. Rudick and M. P. Battin (New York, 1982) and E. W. Sullivan (Newark, Del., etc. [1984]); of Ignatius His Conclave by T. S. Healy, SJ (Oxford, 1969), and Essays in Divinity (orig. pub. 1651) by E. Simpson (ibid., 1952); facsimile repr. of Pseudo-Martyr (Delmar, NY, 1974). Collections of LXXX Sermons (1640), Fifty Sermons (1649), and XXVI Sermons (1660); modern edns. of Sermons by G. R. Potter and E. M. Simpson (10 vols, Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1953–62); of Sermons on the Psalms and Gospels, with a Selection of Prayers and Meditations by E. M. Simpson (ibid., 1963); of Prebend Sermons by J. M. Mueller (Cambridge, Mass., 1971). Modern edns. of Devotions upon Emergent Occasions by A. Raspa (Montreal and London, 1975) and E. Savage, SSJ (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Studies, 21–2; 1975). Donne's Letters to Several Persons of Honour were pub. in 1651, and a further Collection of Letters made by Sir Tobie Mathews (1660). Life by I. Walton (1640, successively enlarged 1658, 1670, and 1675); modern Life by R. C. Bald (Oxford, 1970). W. R. Mueller, John Donne: Preacher (Princeton, NJ, and London, 1962); W. Schleiner, The Imagery of John Donne's Sermons (Providence, RI, 1970); B. A. Doebler, The Quickening Seed: Death in the Sermons of John Donne (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Studies, 30; 1974); J. S. Chamberlin, Increase and Multiply: Arts-of-Discourse Procedure in the Preaching of John Donne (Chapel Hill, NC, 1976); J. Carey, John Donne: Life, Mind and Art (1981; 2nd edn., 1990); M. T. Hester, Kinde Pitty and Brave Scorn: John Donne's Satyres (Durham, NC, 1982). P. G. Stanwood and H. [A.] R. Asals, John Donne and the Theology of Language (Columbia, Mo., 1986). A. J. Smith (ed.), John Donne: The Critical Heritage (1975). T. D. Reeves (ed.), An Annotated Index to the Sermons of John Donne (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Studies, 95; 3 vols., 1979–81). G. [L.] Keynes, A Bibliography of Dr John Donne (Publications of the Baskerville Club, 2; 1914; 4th edn., Oxford, 1973); J. R. Roberts, John Donne: An Annotated Bibliography of Modern Criticism, 1912–1967 (University of Missouri Studies, 60; 1973); id., John Donne: An Annotated Bibliography of Modern Criticism, 1968–78 (Columbia, Mo., and London, 1982); R. D. Dunn and J. Horder in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 1169–86.

doorkeeper. The doorkeepers, or ostiarii, constituted the lowest of the *Minor Orders of the W. Church. Their functions, as stated in the *Pontifical, were similar to those of the modern verger; in antiquity they were particularly responsible for excluding unauthorized persons from attending the Eucharist. The order, which was probably established at Rome during the first half of the 3rd cent., is first attested in a letter of Pope *Cornelius written in 251. It is no longer recognized in the E. Churches, though doorkeepers (θυρωροί) are mentioned in the canons of *Laodicea (can. 24). In the RC Church the office was abolished in 1972.

A. Michel in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2600–2, s.v. 'Portier', with bibl.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1525–33, s.v. 'Portier'; A. Piolanti in EC 9 (1952), cols. 435–7, s.v. 'Ostiariato'.

Dorchester, Oxon. Originally a Roman station, it was conquered by the West Saxons *c.*560. In 635 St *Oswald, King of Northumbria, and Cynegils, King of the West Saxons, concurred in establishing it as a see, with St *Birinus as bishop. The diocese covered an area stretching from Dorset to Bucks and from Surrey to the Severn, part of which was for centuries disputed between the kingdoms of Wessex and Mercia. In later pre-Conquest times the diocese extended north to the Humber. About 1072–3, when the importance of the place had declined, Bp. Remigius, formerly a monk of Fécamp (consecrated 1067, d. 1092), transferred the see to *Lincoln. In 1140 Alexander, Bp. of Lincoln, founded an abbey of *Augustinian Canons, which was suppressed in 1536. By the 16th cent. the abbey church was the only notable feature of the village. In 1939 the Bishopric of Dorchester was re-created suffragan to *Oxford. Until 1956 it was held in conjunction with the Archdeaconry of Oxford.

J. H. Parker (ed.), The History of Dorchester, Oxfordshire, British Earthworks—Roman Camp—Bishopric, and the Architectural History of the Church (Oxford, 1882). J. Cook and T. Rowley (eds.), Dorchester through the Ages (ibid., 1985), with bibl.

Dordrecht, Synod of. See DORT, SYNOD OF.

Dormition of the BVM. In the E. Church, the Feast of the Falling Asleep (dormitio) of the Blessed Virgin, corresponding to the *Assumption in the West. It is observed on 15 Aug. and accounted one of the *Twelve Great Feasts. See also ASSUMPTION OF THE BVM.

Dorner, Isaak August (1809–84), German *Lutheran theologian. The son of a Lutheran pastor, he was educated at *Tübingen. He became professor of theology successively at Tübingen in 1838, at Kiel in 1839, at Königsberg in 1843, at Bonn in 1847, at Göttingen in 1853, and finally at Berlin in 1862. In theology he sought to interpret the *Kantian and post-Kantian systems in terms of the traditional Lutheran faith. He also took a prominent part in the ecclesiastical life of his time. The best known of his many writings was his treatise on the history of the doctrine of the Person of Christ, first published in 1839 (Eng. tr. in 5 vols., 1861–9). In 1867 he issued his Geschichte der protestantischen Theologie (Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1871). He was the founder, and for many years the editor, of the Jahrbücher für deutsche Theologie (1856 ff.).

His son, August Dorner (1846–1920), later became a distinguished theologian, holding professorial chairs at *Wittenberg and Königsberg.

I. A. Dorner's System der christlichen Sittenlehre was pub. posthumously by A. Dorner (1885); Eng. trs. by C. M. Mead and R. T. Cunningham (1887) and of extracts by C. Welch, God and Incarnation in Mid-Nineteenth Century German Theology (New York, 1965), pp. 115–284, both with introd. Correspondence of H. L. *Martensen, Bp. of Zealand, with I. A. Dorner (2 vols., Berlin, 1888). I. Bobertag, Isaak August Dorner (Gütersloh, 1906). J. Rothermundt, Personale Synthese: Isaak August Dorners dogmatische Methode (Forschungen zur systematischen und ökumenischen Theologie, 19 [1968]). C. Axt-Piscalar, Der Grund des Glaubens: Eine theologiegeschichtliche Untersuchung zum Verhältnis von Glaube und Trinität in der Theologie Isaak August Dorners (Beiträge zur Historischen Theologie, 79; 1990). J. Rothermundt in TRE 9 (1982), pp. 155–8, s.v. On August Dorner, W. Herms, ibid., pp. 150–5.

Dorotheus, St (6th cent.), ascetical writer. He entered a Palestinian monastery near Gaza, where he came under the influence of *Barsanuphius and *Evagrius, and *c.*540 he founded a monastery of his own, also near Gaza, of which he became *archimandrite. For the use of its members he wrote a series of 'Instructions' (Διδασκαλίαι Ψυχωφελεῖς) on the religious life, though not all the 24 items in the edition made in the 9th cent. are by Dorotheus himself. A number of letters also survive, and modern editors regard some of the traditional 'Instructions' as letters. In his spiritual doctrine Dorotheus gives an exceptionally high place to humility, not only maintaining that it was the cement of all other virtues but even putting it above love. His writings are an important source for earlier ascetic writers ('fathers'), on whose doctrines he frequently draws. They were highly esteemed by A. J. de *Rancé, who translated them into French for use by his *Trappists.

Works attributed to Dorotheus repr. from A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG 88. 1611–842. Modern edn., with Fr. tr., by L. Regnault, OSB, and J. de Préville, OSB (SC 92; 1963). Eng. tr. of [21] 'Instructions' entitled Discourses and Sayings by E. P. Wheeler (Cistercian Studies, 33; 1977), with introd. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 373–7 (nos. 7352–60). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 519 and 660. J. M. Szymusiak, SJ, and J. Leroy, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 1651–64, s.v. 'Dorothée (Saint)'.

Dorothy, St, also Dorothea, virgin and martyr. *Eusebius mentions a Christian lady of *Alexandria exiled in the *persecution under *Diocletian, whose name *Rufinus gives as Dorothea in his translation (HE 8. 14. 15). The '*Hieronymian Martyrology' commemorates a virgin and martyr called Dorothea, who is usually taken to be the same person, together with a 'Theophilus'. Acc. to the later legendary Acta she was martyred at Caesarea in Cappadocia; on her way to martyrdom a young lawyer, Theophilus, mocked her, asking her to send him fruits from the garden to which she was going. At the place of execution she knelt to pray, when an angel appeared with a basket of apples and roses, which she sent to Theophilus. When he had tasted of the fruit he, too, became a Christian and a martyr. Her martyrdom was made the subject of one of the charming Sieben Legenden of Gottfried Keller, the Swiss novelist. Feast day, 6 Feb., suppressed in 1969.

Discussion and text of 'Acta ex tribus MSS codicibus' in AASS, Feb. 1 (1658), pp. 772–6. Further recensions listed in BHL 1 (1898–9), pp. 349 f. (nos. 2321–5), and Novum Supplementum (1986), pp. 286 f. G. Keller, Sieben Legenden (1872), pp. 123–35. R. Van Doren in DHGE 14 (1960), col. 684, s.v. 'Dorothée (1)'; A. Amore and M. C. Celletti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 4 (1964), cols. 820–6, s.v.

dorsal (also dossal). A piece of cloth, often embroidered, which is sometimes hung at the back of an altar in place of a *reredos. It is apparently a survival of the curtains which in earlier times were hung between the four columns of the *ciborium.

Dort, Synod of (1618–19). The assembly of the Dutch Reformed Church, convened at Dort (Dordrecht) by the States-General to deal with the *Arminian Controversy. Although primarily a national gathering of Dutch theologians, several foreign delegates from Switzerland, the Palatinate, Great Britain, and other states took part; the British delegation comprised G. Carleton (Bp. of *Llandaff), J. *Hall (following illness replaced by T. Goad), J. Davenant, S. Ward, and W. Balcanquall. The Synod, which met in 154 formal sessions, sat from 13 Nov. 1618 to 9 May 1619, though the Arminians ('*Remonstrants'), led by S. *Episcopius, were not introduced till 6 Dec. 1618. The most important decision taken before their arrival was that which approved the proposal for an official Dutch translation of the Bible. John Bogerman of Leeuwarden, a strict *Calvinist, was elected president. The Synod, supported by Prince Maurice of Orange, was biased against Arminianism from the start and its decisions were a foregone conclusion. Five sets of articles passed on 23 Apr. 1619 asserted: (1) unconditional election, (2) a limited atonement, (3) the total depravity of man, (4) the irresistibility of grace, and (5) the final perseverance of the saints. At a final session on 9 May 1619 the Synod drew up 93 canonical rules and confirmed the authority of the *Belgic Confession and the *Heidelberg Catechism. This victory for Calvinist principles led to some 200 Remonstrant clergy being deprived, H. *Grotius being sentenced by the States-General to perpetual imprisonment, and J. van Oldenbarnevelt, the aged Advocate of Holland, being beheaded on a false charge of high treason.

Lat. text of canons, orig. pub. 6 May 1619, pr. in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, 3 (1877), pp. 550–80, with abridged Eng. tr., pp. 581–97; introd. in vol. 1 (1877), pp. 512–15. H. H. Kuyper, De Post acta . . . van de Nationale Synode van Dordrecht (Amsterdam [1899]); H. Kaajan, De Pro-acta der Dordtsche Synode in 1618 (Rotterdam, 1914). Id., De groote Synode van Dordrecht in 1618–1619 (Amsterdam [1918]). A. W. Harrison, The Beginnings of Arminianism to the Synod of Dort (1926), pp. 300–83. P. Y. De Jong (ed.), Crisis in the Reformed Churches: Essays in Commemoration of the Great Synod of Dort, 1618–1619 (Grand Rapids, 1968). N. Tyacke, Anti-Calvinists: The Rise of English Arminianism c.1590–1640 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1987), pp. 87–105.

dorter. A dormitory, esp. in a monastery. It was sometimes of great length, e.g. that at *Durham (1398–1404) 194 ft. long (now a library and museum). From Norman times, and possibly earlier, it was usually on the first floor of the E. range of the cloister, and thus adjacent to one of the transepts of the conventual church, to which direct access for the night office was provided by a flight of steps.

J. C. Dickinson, Monastic Life in Medieval England (1961), p. 33.

Dositheus (2nd cent.), Judaeo-*Gnostic heretic. He belonged to *Samaria, but very little is known of him. Acc. to *Hegesippus (*Eusebius, HE 4. 22), he was one of five original founders of sects in Palestine. *Origen, who mentions him several times, states that he set himself up as the Messiah foretold in Deut. 18: 18 (Contra Celsum, 1. 57) and insisted on strict observance of the Sabbath (De Princ. 4. 3. 2). Acc. to the *Clementine Recognitions (2. 8–11; cf. Hom. 2. 24), *Simon Magus first belonged to the circle of Dositheus and later ousted him. His followers (Dositheans) never seem to have been more than a very small body (Origen, Contra Celsum, 6. 11, mentions 'scarcely thirty' as surviving in his day), but they survived down to the 10th cent.

Among the writings discovered at *Nag Hammadi is a short work which begins 'The revelation of Dositheus about the three steles of Seth'. It relates what Dositheus 'saw and understood', but it is not clear whether it claims to be the work of this Dositheus or some unknown namesake.

S. J. Isser, The Dositheans: A Samaritan Sect in Late Antiquity (Studies of Judaism in Late Antiquity, 17; Leiden, 1976), with Eng. tr. of the primary sources and survey of modern discussion. 'The Three Steles of Seth' ed., with Fr. tr., by P. Claude (Bibliothèque Copte de Nag Hammadi, 'Textes', 8; Quebec, 1983). Eng. tr. in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 396–401. G. *Salmon in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 902 f.; A. *Jülicher in PW 10 (1905), cols. 1608 f.

Dositheus (1641–1707), Patr. of *Jerusalem from 1669. A native of the Peloponnese, prob. of humble family, on the death of his father at the age of 8 he was placed by the Abp. of *Corinth in a neighbouring monastery. He was ordained deacon three years later, and prob. educated at Athens under N. Kerameus (d. 1663). Before 1657 he entered the service of the Patr. of Jerusalem and in 1661 became Archdeacon of Jerusalem and in 1666 Abp. of *Caesarea. On the resignation of *Nectarius Pelopides (1661–69) he was appointed Patr. of Jerusalem by a synod held at *Constantinople. His best-known achievement was the Synod of *Jerusalem (q.v.) held in 1672 and intended to combat the influence of Protestantism in the Greek Church; Dositheus was the principal author of its decrees and confession. His patriarchate was also marked by the inauguration of various monastic and financial reforms, and more esp. by his vigorous defence of the Greeks against the Latins, as in the dispute with the *Franciscans over their rights to the Holy Places. He tried to extend the influence of Hellenism in Russia by adroit intervention in the disputes aroused by the patriarchate of *Nikon, by joining with Callixtus II (Patr. of Constantinople, 1689–93) in condemning the *Calvinistic teaching of J. Karophyllis on the *Eucharist in 1691, and by opposition to the *Uniat Churches in his writings against L. *Allatius and R. *Bellarmine. To combat W. influence in theology he established a printing press at Jassy in *Romania in 1680. His many theological works, characterized by wide erudition rather than original thought, include an Ἐγχειρίδιον against Calvinism (Bucharest, 1690). He edited a trilogy of three large volumes, Τόμος Καταλλαγῆς (Jassy, 1694), Τόμος Ἀγάπης (Jassy, 1698), and Τόμος Χαρᾶς (Rîmnicu Vîlcea, 1705), containing material relating to *Photius and works by *Gregory Palamas, together with more recent anti-Latin treatises. He also compiled a history of the Patriarchate of Jerusalem in twelve [really thirteen] books (ed. anonymously by P. Kerameus; posthumously published, Bucharest, 2 vols., 1715).

Dositheus pub. many other writings, most of them at Jassy. C. Notaras, his nephew, inserted a Life of his uncle into Dositheus's posthumous 'History of the Jerusalem Patriarchate' (Ἱστορία περὶ τῶν ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις Πατριαρχευσάντων; also, from its division into twelve books, known as the Δωδεκάβιβλος; Bucharest, 1715). A. Palmieri, OSA, Dositeo patriarca greco di Gerusalemme (Florence, 1909). I. V. Doura, Ὁ Δοσίθεος Ἱεροσολύμων καὶ ἡ προσφόρα αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰς Ῥουμανικὰς χώρας καὶ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν αὐτῶν (Athens, 1977). [J. C.] S. Runciman, The Great Church in Captivity (Cambridge, 1968), esp. pp. 350–3. G. Podskalasky, Griechische Theologie in der Zeit der Türkenherrschaft (1453–1821) (Munich, 1988), pp. 282–95. A. Palmieri, OSA, in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 1788–1800, with full bibl.; additional bibl. by V. Grumel in DHGE 14 (1960), col. 700; M. Jugie, AA, in EC 4 (1950), cols. 1890 f., s.v. 'Dositeo'.

Dostoevsky, Fedor Mikhailovitch (1821–81), Russian novelist. He was the son of a retired military Russian surgeon of *Orthodox or *Uniat priestly ancestry, born at Moscow, where he was educated at a private boarding-school. From 1838 to 1843 he attended the Military Engineering College at St Petersburg, but resigned his commission after three years. In 1849 he was arrested for revolutionary activities and eight months later condemned to death. Although he was eventually reprieved, this imminence of death made a deep impression on him. During four years' forced labour in Siberia, he gained an intimate knowledge and deep affection for the ordinary Russian people. In 1854 he was transferred as a private in an infantry battalion to Semipalatinsk, where he was able to resume his writing. In 1856 he formed an unhappy marriage terminated by the death of his wife in 1863. He returned to St Petersburg in 1859, and with his elder brother in 1861 founded the review Vremya (suppressed 1863), in which he defended Slavophil democratic ideas. Deeply in debt through gambling and general mismanagement, in 1867 he married his secretary, who later became his publisher. In 1873 he was invited by Prince Meshchersky to edit the newspaper Grazhdanin, to which he contributed his Author's Diary (published separately, 1876). Although known chiefly as a journalist in his lifetime, his more enduring works were the novels in which he penetrated the deep recesses of the human mind. They include (all written in Russian) Memoirs from the Underworld (1864), Crime and Punishment (1865–6), The Idiot (1869), The Possessed (1871), and The Brothers Karamazov (1880).

The centre of Dostoevsky's religious experience is the consciousness of salvation as the free gift of God to the weak and miserable and the refusal to admit any co-operation between God and man. There is no way from man to God, only one from God to man, who is united to his fellows by the common bond of sin. The result is a complete absence from religion of reason and will, and the moral effort that flows from them. The heroes and heroines of Dostoevsky's novels live entirely by their emotions, of which the foremost is boundless and irrational compassion. In the short story 'The Grand Inquisitor', incorporated in The Brothers Karamazov, the institutional Church is represented as the great tyrant and falsifier of Christ whom she would crucify again if He came back to earth. Dostoevsky's writings have had a profound influence, not only among Russian Orthodox (esp. those who left Russia after the Revolution) but also on the *Dialectical Theology of K. *Barth.

The standard Eng. tr. of Dostoevsky's novels is that by C. Garnett (12 vols., 1912–20). The principal works have also been tr. by D. Magarshack in Penguin Classics. There is a very extensive literature, mainly in Russ. More important studies available in Eng. include works by E. H. Carr (London, 1931), E. J. Simmons (New York, 1940), K. Mochulsky (in Russ., Paris, 1947; Eng. tr., 1967), R. Wellek (ed.) (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1962), E. Wasiolek (Cambridge, Mass., 1964), A. Steinberg (London, 1966), J. Frank (Princeton, NJ, 1976 ff.; London, 1977 ff.), and J. Catteau (Paris, 1978; Eng. tr., Cambridge, 1989). G. Steiner, Tolstoy or Dostoevsky: An Essay in Contrast (New York, 1959; London, 1960). J. Coulson, Dostoevsky: A Self Portrait (1962), incl. Eng. tr. of extensive extracts of letters. P. Evdokimov, Dostoïevsky et le problème du mal (Lyons, 1942). A. B. Gibson, The Religion of Dostoevsky (1973); S. Hackel, 'The Religious Dimension: Vision or Evasion? Zosima's discourse in The Brothers Karamazov', in M. V. Jones and G. M. Terry (eds.), New Essays on Dostoyevsky (Cambridge, 1983), pp. 139–68. W. J. Leatherbarrow, Fedor Dostoevsky: A Reference Guide (Boston, Mass. [1990] [bibl. 1846–1988]).

Douai, NE France. Formerly part of the Spanish Netherlands, Douai from 1562 was the seat of a university founded by *Philip II, and it came to house several colleges founded for the benefit of RC students from the British Isles. The most important was that founded by W. *Allen in 1568. This was intended to supply a learned clergy in England when the RC faith should be re-established, but it soon became a seminary for mission priests in England, and many of its alumni suffered death for their faith. Members of the college translated the *Douai-Reims Bible. Except for a brief period when it was removed to Reims (1578–93), the college remained at Douai until it was suppressed during the French Revolution. Its work was then transferred to England, where it was carried on at Crook Hall, near Ushaw, and at St Edmund's Old Hall, Ware. A similar college for Scottish students was founded at Douai in 1580, followed in 1607 by an English Benedictine community (which transferred to England in 1795 and has been settled at *Downside Abbey since 1814).

The First and Second Diaries of the English College, Douay, ed. by the Fathers of the Congregation of the London Oratory with hist. introd. by T. F. Knox, Cong. Orat. (Records of the English Catholics under the Penal Laws, 1; 1876); E. H. Burton and T. L. Williams (eds.), The Douay Diaries, Third, Fourth and Fifth, with the Rheims Report 1597–80 (*Catholic Record Society, 10 and 11; 1911); E. H. Burton, The Douay College Diaries: The Seventh Diary, 1715–1778, preceded by a Summary of Events, 1691–1715 (ibid. 28; 1928). P. Guilday, The English Catholic Refugees on the Continent, 1558–1795, 1 (1914), chs. 4 and 9, 'The English College at Douai', pp. 63–120 and 307–45, incl. full bibl. notes to date. J. H. Baxter, 'The Scots College at Douai', The Scottish Historical Review, 24 (1927), pp. 251–7; H. Chadwick, SJ, 'The Scots College, Douai, 1580–1613', EHR 56 (1941), pp. 571–85. C. Lefebvre in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 703–32, s.v. See also bibl. s.v. DOWNSIDE.

Douai Abbey, Woolhampton, Berks. The English *Benedictine community of St *Edmund the Martyr was founded in Paris in 1615. It became an important Jacobite centre, and *James II was buried in the monastic church. Many of its members served on pastoral missions in England. One of them, Charles Walmesley, who was *Vicar Apostolic of the Western District from 1770 to 1797, in 1790 consecrated John *Carroll, the first RC Bishop in the USA. The community experienced serious difficulties at the time of the French Revolution and in the following years when France and Britain were at war, and in 1818 the remaining monks moved to the buildings of St Gregory's, at Douai (see previous entry), vacated by the community which settled at *Downside. A school was established and benefited from the bursaries given by the French government to English RC bishops and other superiors for the education of students in France. For much of the 19th cent. the community supplied bishops for Port Louis, Mauritius. In 1903 the monks were expelled from France. Taking the name of Douai, they settled at Woolhampton; the vast abbey church was completed in 1993. The monks run a large public school, and parishes throughout England.

F. C. Doyle, OSB (ed.), Tercentenary of St Edmund's Monastery (1917). S. Marron, OSB, 'The Foundation of St Edmund's, Paris', Douai Magazine, NS 3 (1924), pp. 99–108; id., 'The Early Years at St Edmund's, Paris', ibid., pp. 258–65; id., 'St Edmund's; A Prison in the Reign of Terror', ibid., NS 1 (1920), pp. 20–9; id., 'Paris to Douai: A Chapter of our History', ibid., pp. 173–80.

Douai–Reims Bible. The version of the Bible in use among English-speaking RCs for more than three centuries. It was the work of members of the English College at *Douai, of whom the chief were G. *Martin (d. 1582), Thomas Worthington, Richard Bristow, and William *Allen, all of them formerly from Oxford. It claimed to provide a version free from the heretical renderings in the earlier English Bibles. The work was begun at Douai, but owing to the migration of the college to Reims in 1578, the NT was completed in that city and published there in 1582. The OT, which did not appear till 1609–10, was published at Douai, whither the college had returned in the meantime. The translation, which was made not from the original languages but from the Latin *Vulgate, was painstaking and reached a high standard of consistency, but was often too literal to be suitable for use in public worship or private devotional reading. There was also a strong tendency to retain technical words (e.g. 'pasch', 'parasceve', 'azymes') without alteration, and many passages are more an Anglicization than a translation of the Latin, e.g. Phil. 2: 7 (8): 'He exinanited Himself'. The dogmatic intentions of its authors found expression in the prologue and in the notes that accompany the text. Its language exercised considerable influence on the text of the *Authorized Version. Modern editions of this translation are based on the revision made by R. *Challoner in 1749–50. The Reims NT was vigorously attacked in 1589 by W. *Fulke.

Facsimile repr. of orig. edn. (English Recusant Literature 1558–1640, vols. 265 f. (OT) and 267 (NT); 1975), with introds. by D. M. Rogers. J. G. Carleton, The Part of Rheims in the Making of the English Bible (1902). A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911), pp. 33–7, with docs., pp. 298–313. J. Isaacs in H. Wheeler Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940), pp. 190–5. H. Pope, OP, and S. Bullough, OP, 'The History of the Rheims-Douai Version', in B. Orchard, OSB, and others (eds.), A Catholic Commentary on Holy Scripture (1953), pp. 34–9, with bibl. S. L. Greenslade in id. (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, [3] The West from the Reformation to the Present Day (1963), pp. 161–3; F. J. Crehan, SJ, ibid., pp. 211–13. Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968), pp. 95 f., 127 f. For background, see also Douai diaries and other works cited s.v. DOUAI, and Letters and Memorials of W. Allen s.v. ALLEN, W.

Double Feasts. The name formerly given, in the Roman *Missal and *Breviary, to the more important feasts. They were distinguished as (ordinary) Doubles, Greater Doubles, Doubles of the Second Class, and Doubles of the First Class. The use of the term is of uncertain origin.

double justice. A distinction between two kinds of righteousness drawn by some 16th-cent. theologians in an attempt to explain the mystery of *justification. In the Middle Ages and the Renaissance such writers as *Alexander of Hales, St *Thomas Aquinas, and *Erasmus, had distinguished between the justice acquired through *grace and that acquired through good works. This traditional distinction lay behind M. *Luther's early work De duplici justitia (1519). In the 1530s and 1540s the distinction was developed in a different form by such Catholic writers as J. *Gropper, G. *Contarini, and G. *Seripando. Recognizing some truth in Luther's doctrine of justification by faith, they now distinguished between (1) inherent justice acquired through sanctifying grace and/or good works performed in co-operation with grace, and (2) imputed justice acquired through faith when the merits of Christ were imputed to the believer. Consciousness of the continuing influence of *concupiscence and the impossibility of complete certainty of one's state of grace led the Christian to place his trust in the second kind of justice rather than the first. A version of the theory was discussed at the Conference of *Ratisbon in 1541. The Council of *Trent declined to support the theory, but did not condemn it.

A. E. McGrath, Iustitia Dei: A History of the Christian Doctrine of Justification (Cambridge, 1986), vol. 2, pp. 57–61 and 74–7. E. [J.] Yarnold, 'Duplex iustitia. The Sixteenth Century and the Twentieth', in G. R. Evans (ed.), Christian Authority: Essays in Honour of Henry Chadwick (Oxford, 1988), pp. 204–23.

double monastery. A religious house for both men and women. The two sexes dwelt in separate but contiguous establishments, worshipped in distinct parts of a common church, and were ruled by a common superior. Such monasteries are first found in the E. in the later generations of the Roman Empire. They were numerous in 6th- and 7th-cent. France, England, and through the Anglo-Saxon missions, in Germany. In the W. double monasteries women (often from families of high social standing) frequently had a dominant role— as e.g. at Whitby, ruled in the 7th cent. by St *Hilda, or *Ely, under St *Etheldreda. Most of them disappeared in the disorders of the 9th and 10th cents., but they were revived (generally only for a short time) by certain of the smaller monastic orders of the 12th cent., including that of St *Gilbert of Sempringham.

M. Bateson, 'Origin and Early History of Double Monasteries', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, NS 13 (1899), pp. 137–98. U. Berlière, OSB, Les Monastères doubles aux XII^e et XIII^e siècles (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques. Mémoires, 2nd ser. 18; 1923). M. J. L. G. Aliette, Marquise de Maillé, Les Cryptes de Jouarre (1971), pp. 13–57 ('Les Monastères Colombaniens de Femmes'). M. Parisse in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 3 (1986), cols. 1257–9, s.v. 'Doppelkloster'. See also bibl. to GILBERT OF SEMPRINGHAM, ST, and esp. the introd. to The Book of St Gilbert, pp. xlii–lii.

Double Procession of the Holy Spirit, the doctrine of the W. Church acc. to which the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father and the Son. Support for it is found in several NT passages, notably Jn. 16: 13–15, where Christ says of the Holy Spirit 'He shall take (λήψεται) of Mine and shall shew it unto you'. It is urged that in the Inner-Trinitarian relations one Person cannot 'take' or 'receive' (λήψεται) anything from either of the others except by way of Procession. Among other texts adduced for the doctrine are Gal. 4: 6, where the Holy Spirit is called 'the Spirit of the Son', Rom. 8: 9 'the Spirit of Christ', Phil. 1: 19 'the Spirit of Jesus Christ', and the Johannine texts on the sending of the Holy Spirit by Jesus (14: 16, 15: 26, 16: 7).

Among the Greek Fathers St *Cyril of Alexandria is usually considered one of the most important witnesses to the doctrine. He develops it in his struggle against *Nestorianism, speaking of the Holy Spirit as belonging to the Son, τὸ ἴδιον τοῦ Υἱοῦ. He also uses several times the characteristic Latin formula 'and the Son' side by side with the Greek phrase 'through the Son', the former indicating the equality of principle, the latter the order of origin. The doctrine was expressly denied, on the other hand, by *Theodore of Mopsuestia and *Theodoret. Among the Latin Fathers, St *Jerome, St *Ambrose, and esp. St *Augustine are representatives of the teaching summed up in the '*Filioque' (q.v.). But the doctrine did not become a matter of controversy until the time of *Photius (864), who asserted it to be contrary to the teaching of the Fathers and even suspected the relevant passages as interpolations. At the Council of *Florence (1439), Mark of Ephesus repeated this theory; but today most theologians of the E. Church recognize that St Augustine and other Latin Fathers taught the Double Procession, but only as a private opinion. The objection urged by E. theologians against the doctrine is that there must be a single Fount of Divinity (πηγὴ θεότητος) in the Godhead. The consideration urged by W. theologians in its support is that, as both Latins and Greeks attribute everything as common to the Father and the Son except the relation of Paternity and Filiation, the Spiration of the Holy Spirit, in which this relation is not involved, must also be common to both.

H. B. *Swete, On the History of the Doctrine of the Procession of the Holy Spirit from the Apostolic Age to the Death of Charlemagne (1876). Preface to P. E. *Pusey's Eng. tr. of Cyril's Commentary on the Gospel according to S. John (LF 43; 1874), pp. ix–lx. M. Jugie, AA, Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissentium, 1 (Paris, 1926), esp. pp. 286–311, and 2 (1933), pp. 296–535. Id., De Processione Spiritus Sancti ex Fontibus Revelationis et secundum Orientales Dissidentes (Lateranum, NS 2, nos. 3–4; 1936), with refs. Eng. tr. of V. *Lossky, 'The Procession of the Holy Spirit in the Orthodox Triadology', Eastern Churches Quarterly, 7 (1948), suppl. issue, 2, pp. 31–53. R. Haugh, Photius and the Carolingians: The Trinitarian Controversy (Belmont, Mass., 1975). H. J. Marx, SVD, Filioque und Verbot eines anderen Glaubens auf dem Florentinum (Veröffentlichungen des Missionspriesterseminars St Augustin bei Bonn, 26; 1977). J.-M. Garrigues, L'Esprit qui dit 'Père!': L'Esprit-Saint dans la vie trinitaire et le problème du Filioque [1981]. See also bibl. s.v. FILIOQUE.

Doukhobors (Russ.), 'Spirit-fighters'. A Russian sect of unknown origin. It seems to have arisen among Russian peasants in the district of Kharkov *c.*1740, and spread rapidly. Under Paul I (d. 1801) the Doukhobors came into conflict with the government and were banished to Siberia and other places; under Alexander I (d. 1825) they settled in Taurida as an agricultural community run on communist lines. Owing to the intolerance of the Orthodox clergy and their own growing moral laxity, they were again banished and sent to Transcaucasia in 1841. In 1895, having come under the influence of L. *Tolstoy, they refused to serve in the army and burnt their weapons. Being once more expelled they found themselves reduced to starvation, when the assistance of Tolstoy and the *Quakers enabled most of them to emigrate to Cyprus and, more successfully, to Canada. Here they became a nuisance to the government because they refused to own land as individuals and to register births, deaths, and marriages. After various upheavals, the majority of the Canadian Doukhobors, now centred in the western provinces of Canada, in 1938 were organized into the Union of Spiritual Communities in Christ, known also as the Orthodox Doukhobors; a tiny splinter group, the Sons of Freedom, are thought to practise subversion. Those Doukhobors who remained in Russia continued to suffer persecution, many being deported to Siberia and Central Asia. The Doukhobors believe that God is present in all human beings, who are thus equal; that Christ was one of a succession of inspired leaders, amongst whom are numbered the leaders of the Doukhobors. They reject the Bible, hierarchy, sacraments, and Christian dogma.

J. Elkinton, The Doukhobors: Their History in Russia. Their Migration to Canada (Philadelphia, 1903); A. Maude, A Peculiar People: The Doukhobors (1904). J. F. C. Wright, Slava Bohu: The Story of the Dukhobors (New York, 1940). H. B. Hawthorn (ed.), The Doukhobors of British Columbia (1955). G. Woodcock and I. Avakumovic, The Doukhobors (1968). F. C. *Conybeare, Russian Dissenters (Harvard Theological Studies, 10; 1921), pp. 266–87. A. Palmieri in DTC 4 (1908), cols. 1802–11; A. A. Stamouli in HERE 4 (1911), pp. 865–7.

dove. As a Christian symbol, the dove has many meanings. (1) From the dove with the olive branch in its beak in the story of the Flood (Gen. 8: 11), it is a sign of peace and reconciliation. (2) In the primitive Church, from the ref. to His descent upon Christ at His baptism under the form of a dove (Mk. 1: 10), it was esp. a type of the Holy Spirit. This symbol is found esp. in the vaults of early churches and frequently in conjunction with pictorial representations of the other two Persons of the Trinity. (3) From the Song of Solomon, where the Bride is called a dove (e.g. 2: 14, 5: 2), the symbol has been applied either to the Church, e.g. by *Tertullian, St *Ambrose, and St *Augustine, or to the individual soul regenerated by baptism, e.g. by St *Hilary of Poitiers. (4) Other meanings of the dove are to denote inspired theological knowledge in the case of many saints, e.g. St *Gregory the Great, St *Dominic, St *Thomas Aquinas, and St *Teresa of Ávila; and (5) to represent certain Christian virtues, notably purity and humility.

The 'Eucharistic Dove' is a hollow receptacle in the shape of a dove to contain the Blessed Sacrament. Its use was formerly believed, apparently wrongly, to go back to Tertullian. There are references to its use in a 9th-cent. Life of St *Basil and in the 'Consuetudines Cluniacenses' of Udalric. It was popular in the 12th and 13th cents., and more than 30 such receptacles of this period are extant. Eucharistic doves are now used mainly in churches of the Byzantine rite.

F. Sühling, Die Taube als religiöses Symbol im christlichen Altertum (Römische Quartalschrift, Suppl. 24; 1930), with full refs. Id., 'Taube und Orante. Ein Beitrag zum Orantenproblem', RQ 39 (1931), pp. 333–54. W. Stengel, Das Taubensymbol des Heiligen Geistes (1904). J. P. Kirsch in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2198–231, s.v. 'Colombe'.

On the Eucharistic Dove, F. Raible, Der Tabernakel einst und jetzt (1908), pp. 131–52; H. R. Kaufmann, 'Eucharistic Doves', in Eucharistic Vessels of the Middle Ages (Exhibition Catalogue, Busch-Reisinger Museum, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., 1975), pp. 86–96. Braun, CA 2, pp. 608–16, with pls. 353–5; id., AG, pp. 319–23.

Downside Abbey. St Gregory's Abbey, Downside, near Bath, is the premier house of the English *Benedictine Congregation. It traces its origin to a small settlement of English monks begun at *Douai in 1607, for which a monastery was built in 1611 with a school attached for the education of English RC boys. Expelled from Douai in the French Revolution, the monks found refuge in England, where Sir Edward Smythe put his Shropshire country seat at their disposal. In 1814 the community moved to Downside. In 1899 it was raised from the status of a priory to that of an abbey. It is today one of the centres of RC life in England, maintaining in its own buildings its large and important school. The Abbey church, consecrated in 1935, is one of the finest examples of modern Gothic in England. The monks, who carry on the Benedictine liturgical tradition, edit a quarterly periodical, The Downside Review, chiefly devoted to Church history, esp. monastic interests and philosophy. Scholars of distinction at Downside in recent times include F. A. *Gasquet, E. C[uthbert] Butler (1858–1934), J. *Chapman, R. H. *Connolly, B. C[hristopher] Butler (1902–86), and [M.] D. *Knowles.

H. N. Birt, OSB, Downside: The History of St Gregory's School from its Commencement at Douay to the Present Time (1902). [R.] H. Connolly, OSB, Some Dates and Documents for the Early History of our House, 1 [all pub.] (privately pr., 1930). H. van Zeller, OSB, Downside By and Large (1954). Arts. in The Downside Review, 33 (1914). Downside Abbey: Church Guide (1905 and subsequent edns.). Life of Henry Edmund Ford, Abbot 1900–1906, by B. Hicks, OSB (London [1947]). [M.] D. Knowles, OSB, 'Abbot Butler: a memoir' and 'The Works and Thought of Abbot Butler', Downside Review, 52 (1934), pp. 347–465, with a list of his works, pp. 466–72, repr. (without list of works) in The Historian and Character and other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 264–362; A. Bellenger, OSB, 'The English Benedictines: the Search for a Monastic Identity 1880–1920', in J. Loades (ed.), Monastic Studies [1] (Bangor, 1990), pp. 299–321, with refs. B. Sankey, OSB, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 767–9, s.v.

Dowsing, William (1596–1668), Puritan iconoclast. He is remembered for his energy in carrying out the order of Parliament of 1643 for the destruction of the ornaments in churches. He was employed on this task under the Earl of Manchester in Cambridgeshire (1643–4) and in Suffolk (6 Jan.–1 Oct. 1644), and his journal testifies to the zeal and completeness of his work. At the Restoration Dowsing was left unpunished, and he died in obscurity.

The orig. MS of the Journal is lost. Sections were first pub. by R. Loder (1786) from a transcript made in 1704 when the orig. was sold with the rest of Dowsing's library. A transcript of the Cambridge section survives in the Baker MSS, vol. 38 (*c.*1738), pp. 455–8 and 471–3, in the Cambridge University Library. There are modern edns. of the Suffolk sections by C. H. E. White (Ipswich, 1885) and of the Cambridgeshire section by A. C. Moule (Cambridge, 1926). The supposed account of destruction at Gorleston (now Norfolk) is a forgery. J. S. Morrill, 'William Dowsing: the Bureaucratic Puritan' in id. and others (eds.), Public Men and Private Conscience in Seventeenth-Century England: Essays presented to G. E. Aylmer (Oxford, 1993), pp. 173–203.

Doxology. An ascription of glory (Gk. δόξα) to the Persons of the Holy Trinity. (1) The Greater Doxology is the Gloria in Excelsis*. (2) The Lesser Doxology is the Gloria Patri*. (3) Metrical forms, in some cases with special reference to a particular mystery of Christ or season of the Church, were appended to the hymns of the *Breviary, and in later times to other hymns also. Among the most familiar of these in English is the verse which begins 'Praise God from Whom all blessings flow', written by T. *Ken.

J. A. Jungmann, SJ, Die Stellung Christi im liturgischen Gebet (Liturgiegeschichtliche Forschungen, 7–8; 1925; 2nd edn., ibid. 19–20; 1962), pp. 151–68; Eng. tr. (1965), pp. 172–90, with refs. J. M. Hanssens, SJ, La Liturgie d'Hippolyte (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 155; 1959), pp. 343–70 ('Les Doxologies de la liturgie hippolytienne'). A. *Fortescue in CE 5 (1909), pp. 150 f.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 4 (1921), cols. 1525–36; A. Stuiber in RAC 4 (1959), cols. 210–26, all s.v.

Dragonnades (1683–6). The persecutions, so named from their being carried out by mounted troops ('dragoons'), who were quartered on the *Huguenots under the direction of Louis XIV with a view to crushing their independence and forcing them to accept the Catholic religion. They brought financial ruin on the Huguenots and their alleged success in inducing the great majority of them to accept the faith was made a pretext for revoking the Edict of *Nantes on 18 Oct. 1685.

J. Orcibal, Louis XIV et les Protestants (Bibliothèque de la Société d'Histoire Ecclésiastique de la France, 1951), esp. chs. 3 and 4; W. C. Scoville, The Persecution of Huguenots and French Economic Development, 1680 1720 (Berkeley, Calif., 1960), esp. pp. 61 f. and 76–8. Y. Krumenacker, 'Les dragonnades de Poitou: leur écho dans les mémoires', Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme français, 131 (1985), pp. 405–22. See also works cited under NANTES, EDICT OF.

drama, Christian. In the first centuries of the Christian era drama existed only in the form of spectacula, which necessarily incurred the deep hostility of the Church. All plays, in the remote historical origins of the dramatic art, were acts of religious worship; and even the sterilizing degeneration of Classical and post-Classical polytheism had not destroyed the superficially liturgical character of the public shows. To take part, even as a spectator, in such a performance was to make an overt act of paganism, whether or not any definitely idolatrous ceremony was involved in it. This is the chief foundation of *Tertullian's invective in his De Spectaculis (*c.*200). Besides, the moral tendency of the pagan shows was wholly inconsistent with the Christian character, as two examples—the gladiatorial combats and the obscene comedies—sufficiently prove. Tertullian used this argument, but it was more thoroughly developed by *Cyprian (3rd cent.) and *Chrysostom (4th cent.). The pagans themselves acknowledged the demoralizing effect of their spectacles; the Emp. *Julian forbade pagan priests to go to the theatre (363); and *Augustine's friend, Alypius, though a heathen, abhorred all such 'deadly amusements' in his first youth (*c.*370). A third cause of the antagonism of the early Church towards spectacula in general lay in the supposed opposition between that asceticism implicit in the Christian profession and the pursuit of secular pleasures.

The destruction of the Roman Empire and of the Imperial religion involved the disappearance of the traditional pagan shows, and although plays of a kind were certainly performed in various places throughout the Dark Ages, drama ceased to present an important problem for the Christian conscience. In the 10th cent. two significant documents indicate a new development. The Saxon nun *Hrosvit wrote a number of edifying 'comedies' in imitation of Terence, and the English monk, *Ethelwold, described the 'praiseworthy custom' of celebrating the death and resurrection of Christ by a representation, with mime and dialogue, to be performed in church during or after the liturgical rites. Hrosvit may have been ignorant of the Classical conditions of performance, but there is a growing recognition of the theatricality of her plays. Those who devised the earliest Resurrection 'plays', using the *trope Quem quaeritis, were developing a representational or dramatic tendency implicit in all liturgical worship, and especially marked in the *Gallican rite. The Resurrection play provided the model for other liturgical dramas, which were widely disseminated in Europe until the 16th cent. Vernacular religious drama intended for popular audiences existed as early as the 12th cent. (in the Mystère d'Adam), but was chiefly represented in the 14th and 15th cents. by the English Corpus Christi or '*Mystery' cycles, the French Passion plays, and the *Morality genre.

Side by side with the elaboration of the mysteries and morality plays, there took place a great development of purely secular drama in all parts of Christendom. The attitude of the medieval Church towards stage plays in general was not wholly consistent, and individual instances of intolerance can be found; but since most of the plays were at least ostensibly edifying, and the players organized in ostensibly pious confraternities, the traditional hostility of the early Fathers to the spectacula had no longer any direct relevance to the changed situation. Since the 16th cent. drama has been once more released from its ecclesiastical connection. The more puritanical of the Reformers and their followers, e.g. W. *Prynne, tended to repudiate the stage altogether, though T. *Beza wrote mystery plays for a Protestant public. But on the whole, Christian people, while exhibiting a certain mistrust of the moral effects of play-going and esp. of acting, have acquiesced in the establishment of drama as a normal part of social life. The traditional religious plays have survived in various parts of the world (see OBERAMMERGAU), and there have been numerous civic, academic, and commercial revivals of the medieval mysteries and moralities during the 20th cent.

Anthology of medieval texts by D. Bevington, Medieval Drama (Boston [1975]); P. Meredith and J. E. Tailby, The Staging of Religious Drama in Europe in the Later Middle Ages: Texts and Documents in English Translation (Kalamazoo, Mich., 1983). A. C. Cawley and others, Medieval Drama (The Revels History of Drama in English, 1; 1983). E. K. Chambers, The Mediaeval Stage (2 vols., Oxford, 1903); K. Young, The Drama of the Medieval Church (2 vols., ibid., 1933); W. L. Smoldon, The Music of the Medieval Church Dramas, ed. C. Bourgeault (1980). O. B. Hardison, Christian Rite and Christian Drama in the Middle Ages (Baltimore [1965]); R. [P.] Axton, European Drama of the Early Middle Ages (1974). W. Tydeman, The Theatre in the Middle Ages: Western European Stage Conditions, c.800 1576 (Cambridge, 1978). E. K. Chambers, English Literature at the Close of the Middle Ages (Oxford History of English Literature, 1945), pp. 1–65; F. P. Wilson, The English Drama 1485 1585 (ibid., 1969), pp. 1–77 and 85–101. M. Roston, Biblical Drama in England from the Middle Ages to the Present Day (1968). V. A. Kolve, The Play called Corpus Christi (1966); R. [E.] Woolf, The English Mystery Plays (1972); R. Potter, The English Morality Play (1975). I. Lancashire, Dramatic Texts and Records of Britain: A Chronological Topography to 1558 (Toronto and Cambridge, 1984). G. Frank, The Medieval French Drama (Oxford, 1954), pp. 1–206. N. D. Shergold, A History of the Spanish Stage from Medieval Times to the End of the Seventeenth Century (ibid., 1967), pp. 1–112 and 415–504. W. F. Michael, Das deutsche Drama des Mittelalters (Grundriss der germanischen Philologie, 20; 1971). V. de Bartholomaeis, Origini della Poesia Drammatica Italiana (Nuova Biblioteca Italiana, 7; 2nd edn., Turin, 1952). C. J. Stratman, CSV, Bibliography of Medieval Drama (2nd edn., 2 vols., New York [1972]).

Dream of the Rood, The. An Old English poem of some 156 lines which, in the form of a dream-vision, represents the feelings of the Cross (expressed partly in the Cross's persona) during the Crucifixion; as such, the Cross becomes the object of mystical contemplation and a powerful symbol of personal salvation. No source for the poem has been identified (although it draws to some extent on the Latin tradition of enigmata), and it is best regarded as the individual creation of a poet of genius. The poet is unknown (although the poem was formerly attributed to *Cynewulf), as are the date and origin of the poem. Some 15 of its lines were carved on the 8th-cent. Ruthwell Cross, and an inscription reminiscent of two of its verses appears on the famous Brussels Cross (a lavish silver *reliquary of the late 10th or early 11th cent. in the Cathedral at Brussels), but the complete text is preserved only in the late 10th cent. Vercelli Book (Vercelli Chapter Library, Codex CXVII).

Crit. edns., with full notes, by A. S. Cook, The Dream of the Rood: An Old English Poem attributed to Cynewulf (Oxford, 1905); B. Dickins and A. S. C. Ross (London, 1934; 4th edn., 1954); and M. Swanton (Manchester, 1970). H. R. Patch, 'Liturgical Influence in The Dream of the Rood', Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, 34 (1919), pp. 233–57; R. Woolf, 'Doctrinal Infuences on The Dream of the Rood', Medium Ævum, 27 (1958), pp. 137–53; J. V. Fleming, ' "The Dream of the Rood" and Anglo-Saxon Monasticism', Traditio, 22 (1966), pp. 43–72; B. C. Raw, 'The Dream of the Rood and its Connections with Early Christian Art', Medium Ævum, 39 (1970), pp. 239–56; C. B. Pasternack, 'Stylistic Disjunctions in The Dream of the Rood', Anglo-Saxon England, 13 (1984), pp. 167–86. Further bibl. in S. B. Greenfield and F. C. Robinson, A Bibliography of Publications on Old English Literature to the End of 1972 (Toronto and Manchester, 1980), pp. 214–17 (nos. 3482–3527).

Drews, Arthur (1865–1935), German anti-Christian apologist. A disciple of E. von *Hartmann (q.v.), he taught from 1896 onwards at the Technical High School at Karlsruhe. Identifying God and world in a 'concrete monism', he held that religion consisted in a man's consciousness of himself as a supra-individual being and that true religion was based solely on reason, not on history. Hence he explained Christianity as a form of *Gnosticism and in Die Christusmythe (2 vols., 1909–11; Eng. tr., 1911) he challenged the historical existence of the Person of Christ. This denial caused a considerable stir. He wrote a large number of other works.

List of his writings in W. Ziegenfuss (ed.), Philosophen-Lexikon, 1 (1949), p. 256. J. Macquarrie in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 2 (1967), pp. 417 f., s.v.

Drexelius, i.e. Jeremias Drexel [not 'Drechsel'] (1581–1638), spiritual writer. In 1598 he entered the Society of Jesus (*Jesuits), and for many years was Professor of the Humanities at Augsburg. He is remembered chiefly as the author of a long series of devotional treatises which went through numerous editions and translations and circulated equally among Protestants and Catholics. Among the most popular of them were his Heliotropium; seu conformatio humanae voluntatis cum divina (1627) and his Noe architectus arcae, in diluvio navarchus, descriptus et morali doctrina illustratus (1642).

His works are enumerated in Sommervogel, 3 (1892), cols. 181–205, and 9 (1900), cols. 243–5. K. Pörnbacher, Jeremias Drexel: Leben und Werk eines Barockpredigers (Beiträge zur altbayerischen Kirchengeschichte, 24, Heft 2; Munich, 1965). Polgár, 1 (1990), p. 607. P. Bailly in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 1714–17, s.v.

Driver, Sir Godfrey Rolles (1892–1975), OT scholar and Semitic philologist. The son of S. R. *Driver, he was educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford. He was elected a Fellow of Magdalen College in 1919 and held the title of Professor of Semitic Philology from 1938 to 1962. He was intimately concerned with the New English Bible (see BIBLE, ENGLISH VERSIONS, 5), translating several Books and acting as Convener of the Old Testament Panel from 1957 and Joint Director (with C. H. *Dodd) from 1965. He was knighted in 1968.

His works include Grammar of the Colloquial Arabic of Syria and Palestine (1925), Semitic Writing (Schweich Lectures for 1944; 1948), and The Judaean Scrolls (1965), and editions, which have become standard texts, of Assyrian Laws (1935) and Babylonian Laws (1952–5), both with J. C. Miles, and Aramaic Documents of the Fifth Century B.C. (1954) and Canaanite Myths and Legends (1956).

Select bibl. of his writings in Hebrew and Semitic Studies presented to Godfrey Rolles Driver . . . in celebration of his seventieth birthday 20 August 1962, ed. D. W. Thomas and W. D. McHardy (Oxford, 1963), pp. 191–206., with suppl. in Vetus Testamentum, 30 (1980), pp. 185–91. J. A. Emerton, 'Godfrey Rolles Driver 1892–1975', Proceedings of the British Academy, 63 (for 1977; 1978), pp. 345–62. J. Barr in DNB, 1971–1980, pp. 252 f.

Driver, Samuel Rolles (1846–1914), OT and Hebrew scholar. Of *Quaker descent, he was educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, and in 1870 elected a Fellow of New College. From 1883 until his death he was Regius Professor of Hebrew and Canon of *Christ Church (in succession to E. B. *Pusey). His wide and exact knowledge of the OT, combined with sound judgement, caution, and a strong Christian faith, did much to foster the spread of the critical view of the OT in Britain. His Treatise on the Use of the Tenses in Hebrew (1874) established his reputation as a Semitic scholar; and his Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament (1897) remained a standard work for some fifty years. Before his death he had issued commentaries of one kind or another on about half the OT, the more notable being those on *Deuteronomy (1895), *Joel and *Amos (1897), *Daniel (1900), and *Genesis (1904). His other writings included Notes on the Hebrew Text . . . of the Books of Samuel (1890), The Parallel Psalter (1904), Modern Research as illustrating the Bible (Schweich Lectures, 1909), and Ideals of the Prophets (ed. G. A. Cooke, 1915). He also collaborated with F. Brown and C. A. Briggs in the preparation of the Oxford Hebrew Lexicon (1891–1905) and contributed extensively to J. *Hastings's Dictionary of the Bible and other reference works.

W. *Sanday, The Life-Work of Samuel Rolles Driver: A Sermon Preached in Christ Church on March 8, 1914 (1914); G. A. Cooke,

'Driver and Wellhausen', HTR 9 (1914), pp. 249–57. Bibl. of his pub. works in Driver's Ideals of the Prophets (ed. by G. A. C[ooke], 1915), Appendix A, pp. 213–34. J. [W.] Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in the Nineteenth Century: England and Germany (1984), esp. pp. 273–5 and 282 f. G. A. Cooke in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 162 f.

Droste-Vischering, Clemens August von (1773–1845), Abp. of *Cologne. A native of Münster i.W., he was the descendant of a devout Catholic family of the Westphalian nobility. In 1827 he became Auxiliary Bp. of Münster, and in 1835 he was elected Abp. of Cologne at the suggestion of the Prussian government, who hoped by this step to reconcile the Catholic nobility of Westphalia and the Rhineland as well as the clergy and laity to their policy. Soon, however, he came into conflict with the government through refusing his approbation to theological lectures and publications propagating the doctrines of G. *Hermes, which had been condemned by *Gregory XVI in 1835. The final break occurred over mixed marriages, which led to the Archbishop's imprisonment in the fortress of Minden in 1837 under pretext of treasonable activities. Gregory XVI protested; but the most powerful defence of the Archbishop was J. J. von *Görres's Athanasius (1838), which roused the support even of hitherto lukewarm Catholics. The effect of the conflict was a considerable increase in the vigour of Catholic life in Germany. Droste-Vischering was freed in 1839 and retired to Münster. After the accession of Frederick William IV, in 1841 the struggle ended in a compromise, the Archbishop retaining his dignity but leaving the government of his diocese to a coadjutor more acceptable to Prussia. His writings included Über die Religionsfreiheit der Katholiken (1817), written on the occasion of the tercentenary of M. *Luther's Ninety-Five Theses, and Über den Frieden unter der Kirche und den Staaten (1843).

H. J. Kappen, Clemens August, Erzbischof von Köln: Ein Lebensbild (1897). Short study by H. Kipper (Frankfurter Zeitgemässe Broschüren, NS 27, Heft 2; 1907). J. Will, 'Die achtzehn Thesen des Erzbischofs Klemens August von Köln in ihrer dogmatischen Berechtigung', Theologie und Glaube, 21 (1929), pp. 316–28. H. Richtering (ed.), Die Nachlässe der Gebrüder Droste zu Vischering (Westfälische Quellen und Archivverzeichnisse, 12; Münster, 1986), pp. 121–94. W. Müller in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 815–20, s.v. 'Droste-Vischering (1)', with extensive bibl.

Drummond, Henry (1786–1860), politician and *Irvingite leader. After some years in business he entered Parliament in 1810, and although ostensibly a Tory, voted throughout his life independently on the merits of individual measures, giving esp. support to those directed against RCs and Jews, but also taking a vigorous part in secular debates. In 1817 he went to Geneva, and there carried on a campaign against *Socinianism which split the local Protestant Church. From 1826 onwards he took a leading part in founding the Irvingite body (*Catholic Apostolic Church, q.v.), in which he held the rank of apostle, evangelist, and prophet, and which he helped greatly to finance. In 1834 he was ordained 'angel for Scotland' by the Irvingites, and continued to preach until 1856.

Short Introductory Notice by Lord Lovaine to his edn. of H. Drummond's Speeches in Parliament and Some Miscellaneous Pamphlets, 1 (1860), pp. iii–ix. C. G. Flegg, 'Gathered Under Apostles': A Study of the Catholic Apostolic Church (Oxford, 1992), esp. pp. 34–41, 392–5, and 481 f. J. A. Hamilton in DNB 16 (1888), pp. 28 f.

Drummond, Henry (1851–97), theological writer and revivalist. Brought up in the *Free Church of Scotland, he was educated at New College, Edinburgh, and at *Tübingen. In 1874–5 he assisted D. L. *Moody and I. D. Sankey in their mission in Ireland and England and worked with Moody on a similar undertaking in 1882. In 1883 he published his Natural Law in the Spiritual World, a work which sought to interpret the spiritual in terms of the principle of continuity evident in the natural order. In his later years Drummond conducted successful missions to several universities of Great Britain. He was also well known as a geologist and explorer in N. America and Central Africa. His other writings include Tropical Africa (1888) and The Ascent of Man (1894).

Lives by G. A. *Smith (London, 1899) and C. Lennox (ibid., 1901). Anthology ed. J. W. Kennedy (New York, 1953), with biog. introd., pp. 19–62. Brief sketches by J. Y. Simpson ('Famous Scots Series', London, 1901) and A. H. Walker (London, 1913). T. Seccombe in DNB, Suppl. 2 (1901), pp. 157 f.

Drummond, James (1835–1918), *Unitarian divine. Educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at Manchester New College, London, he became in 1860 assistant pastor of Cross Street Chapel, Manchester. From 1885 to 1906 he was Principal of Manchester New College, first in London and later (from 1889) at Oxford. In his books he attempted to write without bias either for or against orthodoxy, and valued Unitarianism rather for its encouragement of theological freedom than for its own particular dogmatic negations. This outlook led sometimes to unexpected and unconventional conclusions. Thus he maintained that the Resurrection and the nature miracles of the Gospels were not a priori impossible, though the evidence for affirming them was insufficient, and that, though the Apostle *John was the author of the Fourth Gospel, the gospel was of only very limited historical value. Among his works were: The Jewish Messiah (1877), Philo Judaeus (2 vols., 1888), Via, Veritas, Vita (*Hibbert Lectures for 1894; 1894), An Inquiry into the Character and Authorship of the Fourth Gospel (1903), and Studies in Christian Doctrine (1908).

A Memorial Introduction by E. Drummond (daughter) and G. D. *Hicks is prefixed to his Pauline Meditations (1919), pp. vii–lxii. A. S. *Peake in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 163 f.

Dry Mass (Missa sicca). An abbreviated form of Mass which became customary esp. in the late Middle Ages. It was not properly a Mass at all, since the *Offertory, *Canon, and Communion were omitted, but it was used on a variety of occasions, e.g. when the priest wished to say a second Mass on a particular day (the prescriptions against *bination prohibiting a proper Mass); on the occasion of pilgrimages, when a priest who had not broken his fast was not available; in rough sea on board ship (then called a missa nautica or missa navalis); or on hunting expeditions (missa venatoria, missa venatica). The celebration of Dry Masses was particularly widespread in France, and made its way even to Rome. It survives among the *Carthusians, who may say a Dry Mass of Our Lady in their cells after *Prime or *Terce; the practice is now optional. In the RC Church the pre-1955 Blessing of Palms on Palm Sunday, and in the C of E the *Ante-Communion service when ended with the 'Prayer for the Church Militant', may be regarded as forms of it.

J. Pinsk, 'Die Missa sicca', JLW 4 (1924), pp. 90–118.

Dryden, John (1651–70), poet, dramatist, and controversial writer. Of *Puritan upbringing, he served in a civilian capacity under O. *Cromwell, whose death he commemorated in Heroic Stanzas (1659). Astrea Redux (1660), written to celebrate the return of *Charles II, included a plea for clemency for those such as his family who had served under the Protectorate. His next major poem, Annus Mirabilis (1666), published in the aftermath of the Great Fire and in the middle of an unpopular war, established his skill as an advocate of royal policy. Religio Laici (1682) was inspired by the *Deists' sceptical use of R. *Simon's Histoire critique du Vieux Testament, which Dryden defended as compatible with Anglican freedom of inquiry. He depicted the C of E as providing a via media between Popery and fanaticism, at the same time reflecting severely on *Calvinist tenets on the legitimacy of resistance, which he likened to Catholic claims to the right to depose a heretical monarch. Presbyterians were prominent among the Whigs who sought to exclude the future *James II on grounds of his RCism, and Dryden, as poet laureate and historiographer royal, sought to elaborate on the parallel between Rome and Geneva in such works as the verse satire Absalom and Achitophel (1681) and the tragedy The Duke of Guise (1683). After James's accession Dryden became a RC (1686) and defended his new Church as the 'milk white hind' in the allegorical Hind and the Panther, published in 1687 after the first *Declaration of Indulgence. Dismissed from office at the Revolution of 1688, he turned to theatre and verse translation.

The standard edn. of his Works is that of W. Scott (18 vols., London, 1808), with Life as vol. 1; rev. edn. by G. Saintsbury (18 vols., Edinburgh, 1882–93); more recent edn. by E. N. Hooker and others (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1956 ff.). Letters, also ed. C. E. Ward (Durham, NC, 1942) and Poems, ed. J. Kinsley (4 vols., Oxford, 1958). M. van Doren, The Poetry of John Dryden (New York, 1920; 3rd edn., 1946); J. M. Osborn, John Dryden: Some Biographical Facts and Problems (New York, 1940; rev. edn., Gainsville, Fla, 1965); D. N. Smith, John Dryden (Clark Lectures, 1948–9; Cambridge, 1950); C. E. Ward, The Life of John Dryden (Chapel Hill, NC, and London [1961]); B. King (ed.), Dryden's Mind and Art (Edinburgh, 1969); S. N. Zwicker, Politics and Language in Dryden's Poetry (Princeton, NJ [1984]); J. A. Winn, John Dryden and his World (New Haven, Conn., and London [1987]). H. Macdonald, John Dryden: A Bibliography of Early Editions and Drydeniana (1939); D. J. Latt and S. H. Monk, John Dryden: A Survey and Bibliography of Critical Studies, 1895–1974 (Minneapolis [1976]). J. Barnard in NCBEL 2 (1971), cols. 439–63.

dryness. See ARIDITY.

dualism. (1) A philosophical doctrine which holds that mind and matter are distinct, equally real, and not essentially related, as opposed to *monism, which asserts that all that exists has a single ultimate nature.

(2) A metaphysical system which holds that good and evil are the outcome or product of separate and equally ultimate first causes.

(3) The view, attributed to the *Nestorians by their enemies, but repudiated by themselves, that in the Incarnate Christ there were not merely two natures but two persons, a human and a Divine.

S. Pétrement, Le Dualisme chez Platon, les Gnostiques et les Manichéens (Bibliothèque de Philosophie Contemporaine, 1947), and other works of this author; U. Bianchi, Il dualismo religioso: Saggio storico ed etnologico (1958). J. Duchesne-Guillemin and H. Dörrie in RAC 4 (1959), cols. 334–50, s.v. 'Dualismus'; U. Bianchi in M. Eliade (ed.), Encyclopedia of Religion, 4 [1987], pp. 506–12, s.v.

Dublin (Dubh-linn, 'the black pool'). Dublin grew up as a Norse town during the 9th cent. The population was mixed Hiberno-Irish by the 11th cent., when, prob. at the instigation of the Norse king Sihtric of Dublin (d. 1036), the city received a bishop. Dúnájn, or Donatus, the first known bishop, died in 1074. His early successors were trained in England, and, like the Bps. of Waterford and Limerick, the Bps. of Dublin made profession of allegiance to the Abp. of *Canterbury. These dioceses were more a part of the English Church than the Irish, as letters to and from Canterbury show. In 1152 at the Synod of Kells *pallia were conferred on the bishops of Dublin and Tuam as well as on the Abps. of *Armagh and Cashel, and Dublin was integrated into the Irish hierarchy. The first Abp., Patrick, was succeeded by St Laurence O'Toole (Abp. 1162–80), who made the cathedral chapter a community of *canons regular. During his archiepiscopate the English invasion of Ireland took place. Dublin was established as the bridgehead and later the capital of English government, and subsequent Abps. down to the *Reformation were exclusively Englishmen nominated by the Crown. John Comyn (Abp. 1182–1212) pursued a strongly pro-English policy. He also laid the foundations of St Patrick's Cathedral and secured privileges for his see at the expense of Armagh. This rivalry continued throughout the Middle Ages, and was not finally settled in the RC succession until 1893.

In 1536 *Henry VIII appointed as Abp. George *Browne, who, under *Edward VI, introduced the BCP and was deposed under *Mary in 1554. Under *Elizabeth I the (Protestant) Church of *Ireland was finally established, with possession of the two cathedrals of Holy Trinity (now Christ Church) and St Patrick's, and in 1591 *Trinity College was founded to support the settlement. The majority of the population, however, remained RC, despite spasmodic persecution during the next two centuries; during this period there were but few resident archbishops, Dublin frequently being governed by *Vicars General. John Carpenter (Abp. 1770–86) reorganized the RC diocese, and normal life was resumed at the end of the 18th cent. under the Dominican Thomas Troy (Abp. 1786–1823). Under him *Maynooth College was founded, the pro-cathedral, dedicated to Our Lady, was begun in 1815, and many schools and religious houses were established. Since 1929 Dublin has been the seat of a Papal *nuncio.

Notable Protestant Abps. in modern times include R. *Whately (1831), R. C. *Trench (1864), J. H. *Bernard (1915), C. F. D'Arcy (1919; translated to Armagh in 1920), a considerable philosopher, and G. O. Simms (1956; translated to Armagh, 1969).

There is much primary material ed. J. T. Gilbert, Historical and Municipal Documents of Ireland, A.D. 1172–1320 (Rolls Series, 1870). H. Cotton, Fasti Ecclesiæ Hibernicæ: The Succession of the Prelates and Members of Cathedral Bodies in Ireland, 2 (1848), pp. 1–212; 5 (1860), pp. 77–139. J. T. Gilbert, A History of the City of Dublin (3 vols., 1854–9); D. A. Chart, The Story of Dublin (Medieval Towns Series, 1907; rev. edn., 1932). A. Gwynn, SJ, 'The Origins of the See of Dublin', Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 5th ser. 57 (1941), pp. 40–55, 97–112. M. V. Ronan, The Reformation in Dublin 1536–1558 (1926). [P. F.] Moran, History of the Catholic Archbishops of Dublin, since the Reformation, 1 (Dublin, 1864). W. Butler, The Cathedral of Holy Trinity, Dublin: Christ Church (1901); W. M. Mason, The History and Antiquities of the Collegiate and Cathedral Church of St Patrick, near Dublin, from its foundation in 1190, to the Year 1819 (Dublin, 1820). J. H. Bernard, The Cathedral Church of St Patrick (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1903). N. Donnelly, Short History of Some Dublin Parishes (1906). C. Mooney, OFM, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 830–936, s.v., with bibl.; R. D. Edwards in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 1076–9, s.v., also with bibl. For ecclesiastical history see also bibl. s.v. IRELAND, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Dublin Review. This quarterly RC review owes its origin to M. J. Quin (1796–1843), an Irishman who practised at the English bar. The first issue appeared in May 1836. It has exercised from the first a great influence both within and outside the RC Church. For its success in its earliest years, N. *Wiseman and D. *O'Connell were largely responsible; and it was a quotation from St *Augustine—securus iudicat orbis terrarum—in an article by N. Wiseman in the issue for Aug. 1839, that encouraged J. H. *Newman's first serious doubts about the Catholicity of the C of E. From 1863 to 1878, under the editorship of W. G. *Ward, it strongly supported the cause of Papal Infallibility and attacked theological liberalism. In 1961 its name was changed to The Wiseman Review, but it reverted to its original title in 1965. In 1969 it was incorporated into The Month.

Arts. in Dublin Review, 198 (1936), pp. 187–321. T. Corbishley, SJ, 'Marriage of True Minds', Month, NS 42 (1969), pp. 4–7.

Dubourg, Anne (*c.*1520–159), French Protestant martyr. In 1547 he became professor of civil law at Orléans. It was prob. here that he was first drawn towards the Reformed faith, though he remained formally a Catholic until after becoming conseiller-clerc to the Parliament of *Paris in 1557. At Easter 1559 he professed his faith by receiving communion with the *Huguenots. A provocative speech in defence of the Huguenots delivered in Parliament before Henry II on 10 June 1559 led to his arrest and trial for heresy. He was burnt at the stake on 23 Dec. 1559.

M. Lelièvre, 'Anne du Bourg avant son incarcération à la Bastille', Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français, 36 (1887), pp. 569–90; id., 'Le procès et le supplice d'Anne du Bourg', ibid. 37 (1888), pp. 281–95 and 337–55; id., 'Les derniers jours d'Anne du Bourg', ibid., pp. 506–29; id., Anne du Bourg, conseiller au Parlement de Paris et martyr (Toulouse, 1903). R. d'Amat in Dictionnaire de Biographie Française, 11 (1967), pp. 1035 f., s.v.

Dubricius, St (6th cent.), also 'Dyfrig', reputed Bp. of *Llandaff. None of the traditions about him seems to merit credence. He is said to have been a pupil of St *Germanus of Auxerre (chronologically impossible); to have had his headquarters at Henllan near Ross and at Moccas, whence he established many other monastic settlements; and to have spent his last years as a hermit on the island of Bardsey (Ynys Enlli). He was the subject of many medieval legends, *Geoffrey of Monmouth making him Abp. of Caerleon and asserting that he crowned King Arthur. Tradition also makes him the consecrator of St *Samson of Dol and of St *Deiniol. Feast day, 14 Nov.

Apart from passing reference in the Life of St Samson, the sources are all late: The Liber Landavensis (Book of Llandaff; ed. J. G. Evans and J. Rhys, 'Old Welsh Texts', 4; Oxford, 1893, pp. 68–86); Geoffrey of Monmouth, Historia Regum Britanniae, 8. 12, 9. 4, 12, and 15 (ed. A. Griscom, New York and London, 1929, pp. 413, 432, 437, 453, and 458); late 12th-cent. Life by Benedict of Gloucester pr. in H. *Wharton, Anglia Sacra, 2 (London, 1691), pp. 654–61. Hardy, 1, pp. 40–4. S. Baring-Gould and J. Fisher, The Lives of British Saints, 2 (1908), pp. 359–82. G. H. Doble, Saint Dubricius ('Welsh Saints', 2; Guildford and Esher, 1943); rev. edn., Lives of the Welsh Saints, ed. D. S. Evans (Cardiff, 1971), pp. 56–87. T. F. Tout in DNB 16 (1888), pp. 82 f.

Ducaeus, Fronto (1559–1624), Fronton du Duc, *patristic scholar. He became a *Jesuit in 1577 and was librarian at the College of Clermont at Paris from 1604. He edited many Greek patristic writings, including those of *Chrysostom (12 vols., 1609–36), *Gregory of Nyssa (2 vols., 1615), and *Basil the Great (3 vols., 1618–38). He also issued an extended reply to *du Plessis-Mornay's book on the Eucharist.

Sommervogel, 3 (1892), cols. 233–49, and 9 (1900), col. 254. P. Lejay in CE 5 (1909), p. 181, s.v. 'Duc, Fronton du'; P. Bernard in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 930–3; suppl. note in DHGE 19 (1981), cols. 188 f., both s.v. 'Fronton du Duc'.

Du Cange, Charles Dufresne (1610–88), French historian and philologist. He was educated as a lawyer, but becoming dissatisfied with that profession, purchased in 1645 the position of Treasurer of France. His interest in history led him to a special study of Byzantine Greek and Low Latin, of which languages he soon became master. In 1678 he published his Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae latinitatis (3 vols., fol.), which remains the principal complete dictionary of Late Latin. It is a work of immense erudition based on a great variety of sources. This was followed in 1688 by a similar work on Low Greek (2 vols., fol.). Du Cange is also the author of important works on Byzantine and French history.

The Lat. 'Glossary' has frequently been ed. and much expanded. An edn. in 6 vols. was issued by the *Maurists, Paris, 1733–6; standard edn. by L. Favre (10 vols., Niort, 1883–7), with 'Notice sur la vie et les ouvrages de Charles Dufresne Du Cange' appended to vol. 9 (separate pagination; it is followed by a detailed list of his works, pub. and unpub.). A photographic repr. of the Gk. 'Glossary' was issued at Paris, 1943. M. Esposito in DACL 4 (1921), cols. 1654–60, s.v., with detailed bibl.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, ibid. 8 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 1422–52, s.v. 'Latin, 1. Le Glossarium'; J. H. Baxter in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 1086 f., s.v.

Duchesne, Louis (1843–1922), French Church historian. After being ordained priest in 1867, he continued his theological studies in Rome and subsequently travelled in Greece and Asia Minor. In 1877 he was appointed professor of Church history at the Institut Catholique at Paris, a position he resigned in 1885 owing to the opposition aroused by his lectures on the history of doctrine. For the next ten years he held a chair at the École Supérieure des Lettres. From 1895 to his death he was director of the French school at Rome; in 1910 he became a member of the French Academy. He was eminent esp. in the field of Christian archaeology and the history of the early Church, though his sharp critical sense and negative attitude towards traditional legends aroused opposition. His works include an edition of the Liber Pontificalis (2 vols., 1886–92), Origines du culte chrétien (1889; Eng. tr. by M. L. McClure under the title Christian Worship, 1903), Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule (3 vols., 1894–1915), L'Histoire ancienne de l'Église chrétienne (3 vols., 1906–10, put on the *Index in 1912; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1909–24), and L'Église au sixième siècle (1925).

Duchesne's Scripta Minora: Études de topographie romaine et de géographie ecclésiastique (Collection de l'École Française de Rome, 13; 1973), with bibl. by J.-C. Picard, pp. ix–l. E. Dupont, Mgr Duchesne chez lui en Bretagne (Rennes, 1923). C. d'Habloville, Grandes Figures de l'Église contemporaine (1925), pp. 1–177. Monseigneur Duchesne et son temps: Actes du Colloque organisé par l'École Française de Rome (Palais Farnèse, 23–25 mai 1973) (Collection de l'École Française de Rome, 23; 1973). B. Waché, Monseigneur Louis Duchesne (1843–1922): Historien de l'Église, Directeur de l'École Française de Rome (ibid. 167; 1992). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (1925), cols. 2680–735, s.v. 'Historiens du christianisme. 38'; P. d'Espezel in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 965–84.

du Duc, Fronton. See DUCAEUS, FRONTO.

duelling, Christian attitude to. Despite the protest of the Church, the recognition of the judicial duel by civil law continued till the later Middle Ages; and until the early 19th cent. in England, and much later abroad, the duel, though forbidden by law, was a recognized court of appeal in questions of 'honour' among the upper classes. In the Codex Iuris Canonici* of 1917 (can. 2351) automatic *excommunication was decreed for all in any way concerned with a duel. The subject is not specifically mentioned in the 1983 Code.

J. G. Millingen, The History of Duelling (2 vols., 1841). V. G. Kiernan, The Duel in European History (Oxford, 1988). F. Billacois, Le Duel dans la société française des XVIe–XVIIe siècles [1986]. V. Cathrein, SJ, in CE 5 (1909), pp. 184–7, s.v.; P. Fourneret in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 1845–56, s.v. 'Duel'; L. Falletti in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 3–40, s.v. 'Duel'.

Duff, Alexander (1806–78), Scottish *Presbyterian missionary. The first missionary of the Established Church of Scotland to India, he arrived at Calcutta in 1830, after twice being shipwrecked. At once he opened a school there, which later developed into a college that became a centre of W. education in India. From 1834 till 1840 he was engaged in stirring up the Church of Scotland to support his work; but shortly after his return to India in 1840 came the Schism of 1843, and Duff, joining the *Free Church, lost all his mission property. He nevertheless continued his work, until in 1849 he had to return home. In 1851 (and again in 1873) he was elected Chairman of the General Assembly of the Free Church. During his last stay in India (1856–64) he was largely occupied with the foundation of the University of Calcutta. In 1864 he visited S. Africa and on his return to Scotland spent much of the rest of his life working for the missionary cause.

Life by G. Smith (2 vols., London, 1879). Memorials of Alexander Duff (1890) by his son. W. Paton, Alexander Duff (1923). W. G. Blaikie in DNB 16 (1888), pp. 125–8, s.v.

Dufresne, Charles, Sieur Du Cange. See DU CANGE, CHARLES DUFRESNE.

Dugdale, William (1605–86), author of the Monasticon Anglicanum* (q.v.). He spent nearly all his life in antiquarian research. His share in the Monasticon Anglicanum began with his meeting in 1638 with Roger Dodsworth, then engaged in collecting documents illustrating the history of Yorkshire and the foundation of monasteries in the N. of England. A little later, in view of the dreaded war, he was commissioned by Sir Christopher Hatton to make exact drafts and records of monuments in the principal churches of England. During the Civil War he was employed by *Charles I in the delivery of royal warrants demanding the surrender of castles held by rebel garrisons. Besides the Monasticon, of which the first volume appeared in 1655, his writings included Antiquities of Warwickshire (1656), History of St Paul's Cathedral (1658), and The Baronage of England (1675–6). In 1677 Dugdale was created Garter Principal King of Arms.

His Visitation of the County of Yorks was pr. in The Surtees Society, 36 (1859), with index by G. J. Armytage (London, 1872), and ed. J. W. Clay (3 vols., Exeter, 1894–1917); that of Lancs ed. F. R. Raines (Chetham Society, 84, 85, and 88; 1872–3); that of Staffs ed. H. S. Grazebrook in The William Salt Archaeological Society, 2 (pt. 2; 1881), pp. 23–65, and by G. J. Armytage and W. H. Rylands (The Publications of the Harleian Society, 64; 1912); that of Derbys pub. London, 1879; that of Durham ed. J. Foster (London, 1887) and pr. in The Newcastle upon Tyne Record Series, 5 (1925), pp. 1–84; that of Cumberland and Westmorland ed. J. Foster (Carlisle, 1891); that of Northumberland ed. id. (Newcastle upon Tyne, 1891) and pr. in The Newcastle upon Tyne Record Series, 4 (1924), pp. 1–102. W. Hamper (ed.), The Life, Diary and Correspondence of Sir William Dugdale (1827). Short anon. Life (London, 1713); Life in Heraldic Miscellanies (London [1793]), pp. 1–24; W. F. S. Dugdale, 'Sir William Dugdale', in A. Dryden (ed.), Memorials of Old Warwickshire (1908), pp. 219–230. D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), pp. 31–59; 2nd edn. (1951), pp. 30–51. F. Maddison, D. Styles, and A. Wood, Sir William Dugdale 1605–1686: A List of his printed works and of his portraits with notes on his life and the manuscript sources (Warwick, 1953). L. Fox (ed.), English Historical Scholarship in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries: A record of the papers delivered at a Conference arranged by the Dugdale Society to commemorate the tercentenary of the publication of Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire (1956), esp. pp. 88–91.

Duhm, Bernhard (1847–1928), OT scholar. He was born at Bingum in Ostfriesland and received his schooling in Aurich and his theological education at Göttingen, where he became professor extraordinarius in 1877. In 1888 he was appointed professor ordinarius at Basle, where he remained till his death. It was above all as an interpreter of the Prophets that Duhm excelled. His first book, Die Theologie der Propheten als Grundlage für die innere Entwicklungsgeschichte der israelitischen Religion dargestellt (1875), laid a sound foundation for the best of his later work. It also gave an impulse from the side of prophetic criticism to the great contemporary movement in *Pentateuchal criticism, which led to the establishment of the 'documentary hypothesis' associated with J. *Well-hausen. Duhm held that the completed Law was later than the 8th- and 7th-cent. Prophets. His reconstruction of the development of Israelite religion was a counterpart to what J. Wellhausen was to present in his Prolegomena. Further, Duhm sought to understand the Prophets as great religious personalities. His commentary on Isaiah (1892) exercised a far-reaching influence. Of special interest were his separation of Is. 56–66 from 40–55 (*Deutero-Isaiah) as a later composition (*Trito-Isaiah) and his view that the four *Servant Songs (42: 1–4, 49: 1–6, 50: 4–9, and 52: 13–53: 12) were not the work of Deutero-Isaiah. The whole commentary was marked by discerning exegesis and poetic appreciation, but also at times marred by apparently arbitrary textual emendation. In Israels Propheten (1916; 2nd edn., 1922) he presented his interpretation of the Prophets again in more popular form. He also published commentaries on Job (1897), Psalms (1899; 2nd edn., 1922) and Jeremiah (1901), and a number of short studies, mainly on aspects of OT religion.

Biog. foreword by W. Baumgarten to his edn. of Duhm's comm. on Isaiah, Das Buch Jesaja (5th edn., 1967), pp. v–xiii. H. J. Kraus, Geschichte der historisch-kritischen Erforschung des Alten Testaments von der Reformation bis zur Gegenwart (Neukirchen, 1956), pp. 250–7; 3rd edn. (1982), pp. 275–83. J. Ebach in TRE 9 (1982), pp. 214 f., s.v., with further refs.

Dukhobors. See DOUKHOBORS.

dulia (Latinized form of Greek δουλεία, 'service'). The reverence which, acc. to Orthodox and RC theology, may be paid to the saints, as contrasted with hyperdulia (ὑπερδουλεία), which may be paid only to the BVM, and latria (λατρεία), which is reserved for God alone. In classical as contrasted with ecclesiastical usage δουλεία is a stronger term than λατρεία.

du Moulin, Pierre (1568–1658), 'Molinaeus', French Reformed theologian. The son of a Protestant preacher, Joachim du Moulin, whose family had settled at Sedan, Pierre became tutor in 1588 to the young Earl of Rutland. In 1592 he returned from England to the Continent and was appointed professor of philosophy and Greek in the university of *Leiden. From 1599 to 1620 he was minister of the Reformed Congregation at Charenton, and from 1620 till his death minister and professor at Sedan. He took a prominent part in religious controversy, upholding a mediating position which irritated Catholics and Calvinists alike; and more than 80 writings flowed from his pen. Over a long period he kept up relations with many Anglicans, including *James I. P. *Jurieu (1637–1713) was his grandson.

His Autobiog. was pub. in the Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme français, 7 (1858), pp. 170–82, 333–44, and 465–77. Eng. tr. of his Nouveauté du papisme, opposée à l'antiquité du vray christianisme by his son, P. du Moulin (London, 1662), with Life by id. (no pagination). L. Rimbault, Pierre du Moulin 1568–1658 (De Pétrarque à Descartes, 10; 1966), incl. Life by his son, repr. pp. 195–234, and various unpublished docs. G. Bonet Maury in PRE (3rd edn.), 5 (1898), pp. 56–60, s.v.

Dunkards, Dunckers. See TUNKERS.

Duns Scotus, Bl Johannes (*c.*1265–1308), 'Doctor Subtibilis' or 'Doctor Marianus', medieval philosopher and theologian. Little is known of his life. He was prob. born near Duns in Berwickshire. He took the *Franciscan habit, perhaps at Dumfries *c.*1280, and was ordained priest in Northampton in 1291. He was then apparently studying in *Oxford, where he read both arts and theology and lectured on the Sentences of *Peter Lombard, prob. in 1298–9. He is known to have been in Oxford in 1300–1. It is possible that he lectured in Cambridge (1301–2), but the evidence is weak. Though the idea that he studied in Paris *c.*1293–6 is improbable, it is certain that he completed his doctoral requirements there and became regent master in 1305. In 1307 he moved to *Cologne, where he died the following year.

His principal work is the commentary on the Sentences. This survives in three forms: copies of his own lecture notes (Lectura) for the Oxford commentary; copies of students' notes (Reportatae) taken from the various lectures; copies of his own final revision of the various notes. This last and most important version (the Ordinatio) was left incomplete at his death. His other writings include commentaries on some of *Aristotle's and *Porphyry's works on logic, a set of quaestiones on Aristotle's Metaphysics, a Tractatus de Primo Principio, and Quodlibeta.

Writing after the condemnation of a number of Aristotelian positions (including some opinions of St *Thomas Aquinas) by the Abp. of Paris in 1277, Scotus attempts to mediate between Aristotelianism and the Augustinianism associated with his main opponent, *Henry of Ghent. Scotus definitively rejects the Aristotelian principle of plenitude (no genuine possibility can remain forever unrealized), and posits instead the radical contingency (non-necessity) both of created entities and of God's action. He believes that for human will to be genuinely free, it must be really able to will what it does not in fact choose to will. The intellect offers a strong guidance to the will, inclining it to the right act; but the will is able to go against the suggestion of reason. Thus, Scotus denies the universal applicability of Aristotle's principle, 'everything which is moved is moved by some other agent', on the grounds that the will is freely capable of moving itself to an action. God's will is free in the sense that God can freely desire opposite objects and effects: thus, human actions are given moral value only if God commands them. The exception is the act of loving God. It is impossible to understand the word 'God' without also understanding that God should be loved. For this reason, God cannot will that creatures hate Him.

Scotus' proof of the existence of God attempts to show that one necessary cause is required in order to explain the existence of contingent entities. Creatures do not exist necessarily, and have essentially only the possibility of existence. But if the existence of some creature is really possible, then the creature must be capable of being caused; and if a creature is capable of being caused, there must be some agent able to cause it. Thus, in order to explain the existence of creatures, it is necessary to posit some being that exists necessarily.

Scotus rejects St Thomas Aquinas's position that individuation is by matter, and holds instead that the unity and individuality of each created thing is given by its own form of individuality (haecceitas) added to its matter and form. Unlike some of his contemporaries, he does not think that all substances—including God and the *angels—are material. He also believes that not every complete individual thing is a person: Christ's human nature is a complete individual thing that is not a human person. Individuals are properly called persons by virtue of the negative qualification of not being united to a divine person. Scotus rejects the Aristotelian position that the intellect can know only the universal ideas that it abstracts from sense data, and allows instead a certain intuitive knowledge of individual things. On the other hand, he rejects Henry of Ghent's Augustinian position that certitude follows only from divine illumination, and holds, like Aquinas, that certitude derives from necessary principles that are known naturally by the intellect.

In his theology Scotus lays stress on the primacy of Christ as the supreme manifestation of God's love; it follows that Christ's coming was not conditioned by any other historical events, and in particular that the Incarnation would have taken place irrespective of the *Fall. For Scotus this also entailed the doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM, a doctrine that he was the first well-known theologian to defend.

The thought of Scotus exercised a profound influence in the Middle Ages and beyond; in particular it was the principal element in the Franciscan theological tradition well into the 18th cent. Though the rise of *Nominalism in the 14th cent. reduced the impact of Scotus' *Realist metaphysics in the later Middle Ages, in modern times there has been renewed sympathy with his appreciation of the non-intellectual elements in man. The word 'dunce', used by humanists and the Reformers to ridicule the subtleties of the Schools, is a curious testimony to his popularity. He was beatified in 1993.

Collected edns. of his works [by L. *Wadding, OFM, and others] (12 vols., Lyons, 1639; with repr. of his Life by Wadding from the Annales) and F. Vivès (26 vols., Paris, 1891–5; repr., Farnborough, 1969); crit. edn. of his Opera [Theologica], by C. Balić, L. Modrić, and others (Rome, 1950 ff.); an edn. of his Opera Philosophica by the Franciscan Institute of St Bonaventure, NY, is in preparation. De Primo Principio, ed., with Eng. tr., by A. [B.] Wolter, OFM (Chicago, 1966; 2nd edn., with comm. [1982]). Quodlibetal Questions, ed., with Sp. tr., by F. Alluntis, OFM (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1968); Eng. tr. from this text by F. Alluntis, OFM, and A. B. Wolter, OFM, God and Creatures (Princeton, NJ, and London [1975]). Selection of his Philosophical Writings ed., with Eng. tr., by A. [B.] Wolter, OFM (Nelson Philosophical Texts, 1962; 2nd edn., Indianapolis and Cambridge [1987]). Eng. tr. of some texts On the Will and Morality by id. (Washington, DC, 1986). Fr. tr., with comm., of his Commentary on the Sentences, Ordinatio 1. 3. 1, 1. 8. 1, and Collatio 24, by O. Boulnois, as Sur la connaissance de Dieu et l'univocité de l'étant [1988].

A. Bertoni, Le Bienheureux Jean Duns Scot: sa vie, sa doctrine, et ses disciples (Levanto, 1917); E. Longpré, La Philosophie du B. Duns Scot (1924; repr. from Études franciscaines); [C. Balić,] Les Commentaires de Jean Duns Scotus sur les quatre livres des sentences: Étude historique et critique (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 1; 1927); E. Bettoni, OFM, Duns Scoto (Brescia, 1946; Eng. tr., Washington, 1961); id., Duns Scoto Filosofo (Milan, 1966); A. [B.] Wolter, OFM, The Transcendentals and their Function in the Metaphysics of Duns Scotus (Catholic University of America, Philosophical Series, 96; Washington, 1946); id., The Philosophical Theology of John Duns Scotus [Collected Papers], ed. M. McC. Adams (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1990); E. *Gilson, Jean Duns Scot: Introduction à ses positions fondamentales (Études de philosophie médiévale, 42; 1952); R. R. Effler, OFM, John Duns Scotus and the Principle 'Omne Quod Movetur ab Alio Movetur' (St Bonaventure, NY, 1962); J. K. Ryan and B. M. Bonansea (eds.), John Duns Scotus, 1265–1965 (Studies in Philosophy and the History of Philosophy, 3; Washington, 1965); F. Wetter, Die Trinitätslehre des Johannes Duns Scotus (BGPM 41, Heft 5; 1967); L. Honnefelder, Ens Inquantum Ens: Der Begriff der Seienden als solchen als Gegenstand der Metaphysik nach der Lehre des Johannes Duns Scotus (ibid., NF 16; 1979); C. Bérubé, De l'homme à Dieu selon Duns Scot, Henri de Gand et Olivi (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, 27; Rome, 1983), esp. pp. 113–223 and 241–390; B. M. Bonansea, OFM, Man and his Approach to God in John Duns Scotus (Langham, Md., etc. [1983]). The series 'Studia Scholastico-Scotistica', pub. by the Societas Internationalis Scotistica (Rome, 1968 ff. [8 vols. to 1984]) contains papers read at Scotistic conferences, 1966 ff. F. Copleston, SJ, A History of Philosophy, 2 (1950), pp. 476–551. O. Schäfer, OFM, Bibliographia de Vita Operibus et Doctrina Iohannis Duns Scoti . . . Saec. XIX–XX (Rome, 1955); S. Gieben, 'Bibliographia scotistica recentior (1953–1965)', Laurentianum, 6 (1965), pp. 492–522; D. A. Cress, 'Toward a Bibliography on Duns Scotus on the Existence of God', Franciscan Studies, 35 (1975), pp. 45–65. BRUO, 1 (1957), pp. 607–10; BRUC, pp. 198–201 and 674–5, with bibl. to 1961. P. Raymond, OFM Cap., in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 1865–947; C. Balić, OFM, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 1102–6; W. Dettloff and L. Honnefelder in TRE 9 (1982), pp. 218–40.

Dunstan, St (c.909–88), Abp. of *Canterbury. After being attached for some time to the court of King *Athelstan, he made his profession as a monk at *Glastonbury (where he had earlier received the tonsure) and c.940 became abbot. He was a strict ascetic who completely reformed the monastery, insisting on the full observance of the *Benedictine Rule, and under him the monastery became famous for its learning. He became a royal counsellor under King Eadred (946–55), but during the next reign had to migrate to Flanders. After his recall in 957 by *Edgar, King of Mercia and Northumbria, he was made Bp. of *Worcester and London; after Edgar had become King of all England in 959, Dunstan was made Abp. of Canterbury the same year. The King and the Archbishop together planned and carried out a thorough reform of Church and State. After the death of Edgar, Dunstan and his friend St *Oswald secured the election of King *Edward the Martyr, who continued his predecessor's policy. Edward, however, ruled for only a short time, and under his successor Dunstan's influence began to decrease. The restoration of regular monastic life, which seems to have been virtually extinct in England by the middle of the 10th cent., was in the first instance Dunstan's work; but as it got under way in Edgar's reign (959–75) much of the initiative passed to his colleagues St *Ethelwold and St Oswald. He zealously supported the cause of learning and himself achieved fame as musician, illuminator, and metalworker. In the political field his most important work was his support of King Edgar. Feast day, 19 May. See also REGULARIS CONCORDIA.

W. *Stubbs (ed.), Memorials of Saint Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury (Rolls Series, 1874). Crit. edn., with Eng. tr., by M. Winterbottom and M. Lapidge of Lives by 'B' (unidentified) and Adalhard (Oxford Medieval Texts, in preparation). Books belonging to St Dunstan, possibly incl. specimens of his handwriting, reprod. with introd. by R. W. Hunt, Saint Dunstan's Classbook from Glastonbury (Umbrae Codicum Occidentalium, 4; Amsterdam, 1961). F. A. *Gasquet and E. *Bishop, The Bosworth Psalter (1908), Appendix by L. A. St L. Toke, 'Some Notes on the Accepted Date of St Dunstan's Birth', pp. 131–43. J. A. *Robinson, The Times of St Dunstan (Ford Lectures, 1922; 1923), esp. no. 4, pp. 81–103. D. [J.] Dales, Dunstan: Saint and Statesman (Cambridge, 1988). N. [L.] Ramsay and others (eds.), St Dunstan: His Life, Times and Cult (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1992). [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, The Monastic Order in England (Cambridge, 1940; 2nd edn., 1963), pp. 31–56. M. Lapidge, 'St Dunstan's Latin Poetry', Anglia, 98 (1980), pp. 101–6. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), ch. 10, esp. pp. 243–53. [D.] H. Farmer in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1063–8, s.v.

duomo (cf. Lat. domus, 'a house'). The Italian name for a cathedral, as pre-eminently the house of God's people in the diocese.

Dupanloup, Félix Antoine Philibert (1802–78), Bp. of Orléans from 1849. A native of Savoy, he was educated in *Paris, and, on being ordained priest in 1825, was appointed vicaire of the Madeleine, whence he was transferred to the church of St-Roch in 1834. He instituted the method of teaching children known as the 'Catechism of *St-Sulpice', and became one of the foremost Catholic educationists of France. As superior of the seminary of St-Nicolas-du-Chardonnet (1837–45) he tried his new educational methods with the greatest success. As Bp. of Orléans, Dupanloup exerted strong pressure on public policy, esp. in education, and was active in securing for the Church the right, conceded by the 'Loi Falloux' of 1850, to conduct voluntary schools. Later he was an ardent advocate of the Pope's claims against the House of Savoy. At the First *Vatican Council (1870) he strongly advised the minority, of whom he was one, to abstain from voting and to withdraw, but he loyally accepted the decision of the Council when promulgated. His published works included La Haute Éducation intellectuelle (1850), La Femme studieuse (1869) and several panegyrics and pastoral letters.

Selected Letters ed. F. Lagrange (2 vols., Paris, 1888). Standard Life by id. (3 vols., ibid., 1883–4; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1885); cf. [M.] U. Maynard, Monseigneur Dupanloup et M. Lagrange son historien (1884). Other Lives by M. M. F. Trench (anon., London, 1890) and E. Faguet (Paris, 1914). C. Marcilhacy, Le Diocèse d'Orléans sous l'épiscopat de Mgr Dupanloup 1849 1878 (Histoire des mentalités [1962]), esp. part 1. S. Lösch, Döllinger und Frankreich (Munich, 1955), esp. pp. 247–342. R. Aubert, 'Monseigneur Dupanloup et le Syllabus', RHE 51 (1956), pp. 79–142, 471–512, 837–915, incl. orig. docs.; id., 'Mgr Dupanloup au début du concile du Vatican', in Miscellanea Historiae Ecclesiasticae: Congrès de Stockholm, août 1960 (Bibliothèque de la RHE 38; 1961), pp. 96–116. Mgr Dupanloup et les problèmes politiques de son temps, colloque 1978 (Société archéologique et historique de l'Orléanais, no° hors-série, 1980); Education et images de la femme chrétienne en France au début du XX^me siècle à l'occasion du centenaire de la mort de Mgr. Dupanloup, ed. F. Mayeur and J. Gadille (Lyons, 1980), pp. 15–78 ('Monseigneur Dupanloup éducateur et ses disciples'). R. Aubert in DHGE 8 (1960), cols. 1070–122, s.v., with bibl.; id. in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 1108 f., s.v. For works dealing with his relations with the First Vatican Council, see also bibl. to the latter.

Du Perron, Jacques Davy (1556–1618), French cardinal, statesman, and controversialist. He was the son of a *Calvinist minister at Saint-Lô, a member of the minor nobility, who gave him a grounding in classical languages. In 1576 Du Perron went to Paris and was presented to Henry III. After wide reading, he was converted to RCism in 1577/8 and came to be much influenced by St Robert *Bellarmine. Du Perron was appointed reader to the King and made a name for himself with funeral orations for P. de Ronsard in 1586 and *Mary, Queen of Scots, in 1587. Under *Henry IV he was made Bp. of Évreux in 1591. He helped to instruct Henry IV before his reception into the RC Church (1593) and was sent to Rome to secure Papal absolution from heresy for him in 1595. He was involved in a number of controversies, of which the best known is that with P. *du Plessis-Mornay in 1600; his refutation of him and his Traité de l'Eucharistie were published in the same volume in 1622. He was created a cardinal in 1604 and soon sent as ambassador to Rome, where he took part in the election of Popes Leo XI and *Paul V. In 1606 he was appointed Abp. of Sens; installed in 1609, he introduced a number of reforms in his archdiocese. After Henry's assassination (1610), he was appointed a member of the Regency. During 1611–12 he carried on a controversial correspondence with *James I (initially through I. *Casaubon) on the meaning of catholicity; this culminated in his Replique à la Response du . . . Roi de la Grand Bretagne (pub. 1620). He was also involved in the conflict between the *Gallicans and the *Ultramontanists. He attacked E. Richer's De Ecclesiastica et Politica Potestate (1611), which defended Gallican principles, and in his famous 'Harangue' at the Estates General in 1615 he again defended an Ultramontanist position against that favoured by the tiers état. The 'Harangue' provoked a reply from James I, upholding the power of kings as Divine but independent of the Pope. Du Perron was a member of the Académie des Valois and a poet of some renown.

Diverses Œuvres, ed. by his brother, Jean Davy Du Perron, who succeeded him as Abp. of Sens, and his nephew, Jacques Le Noël Du Perron, Bp. of Angoulême (Paris, 1622), with Life, pp. 1–36; Ambassades et négotiations, ed. by C. de Ligny, his secretary (ibid., 1623). Crit. edn. of his funeral oration for Ronsard by M. Simonin (Textes littéraires français, Geneva, 1985). Facsimile of a collection of his poems, orig. pub. Paris, 1622 (ibid., 1988). There are also facsimile reprs. of the Eng. trs. of his Refutation of du Plessis-Mornay, orig. pub. *c.*1601 (Ilkley, Yorks., 1978); of his Letter to Casaubon, orig. pub. 1612 (Menston, Yorks., 1971); of his Reply to James I, orig. pub. 1630 (Ilkley, 1975); and of his 'Harangue', orig. pub. 1616 (ibid., 1977). Further Life by [J. L.] de Burigny (Paris, 1768). P. Féret, Le Cardinal Du Perron . . .: Étude historique et critique (1877). Le Cardinal Jacques Davy Du Perron: Mélanges publiés à l'occasion du IV^e Centenaire de la naissance par la Société d'Archéologie et d'Histoire Naturelle de la Manche (Saint-Lô, 1956), with bibl. F. A. Yates, The French Academies of the Sixteenth Century (Studies of the Warburg Institute, 15; 1947), passim (see index s.v. 'Davy Du Perron'); R. Snoeks, L'Argument de tradition dans la controverse eucharistique entre catholiques et réformés français au XVII^e siècle (Louvain and Gembloux, 1951), esp. pp. 76–129. C. Grente in Dictionnaire des Lettres Françaises. Le XVI^e Siècle (1951), pp. 271–6, s.v.; R. Snoeks in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1130–6, s.v., with extensive bibl.; T. de Morembert in Dictionnaire de Biographie Française, 12 (1970), cols. 339–41, s.v.

Dupin, Louis Ellies (1657–1719), a prolific and influential *Gallican theologian. The first volumes of his Nouvelle Bibliothèque des Auteurs ecclésiastiques (some 60 vols., 1686–1719) were considered too critical of the early Christian centuries and aroused opposition, notably from J. B. *Bossuet and R. *Simon. He was censured by the Abp. of Paris (1693), but continued writing the Bibliothèque, which was put on the *Index in 1757. Banished from Paris in 1704 for alleged *Jansenism, he was removed from his Regius professorship, but remained a respected member of the Sorbonne. He was involved in the religious affairs of his age, esp. in opposition to the Bull Unigenitus. Ecumenically minded, he took part in a project for union between the Russian and French Churches in 1717, and in Feb. 1718 he entered into correspondence with Abp. W. *Wake in an equally unsuccessful attempt to achieve union between the Churches of England and France. Besides his historical writings, his main works are theological and biblical: De Antiqua Ecclesiae Disciplina (1686), Traité de la doctrine chrétienne (1703), put on the Index respectively in 1688 and 1704, and Prolégomènes sur la Bible (1699). He also edited the works of St *Optatus (1700) and J. *Gerson (1706).

J. Gres-Gayer (ed.), Paris-Cantorbéry (1717 1720): Le Dossier d'un premier œcuménisme [1989]. Id., 'Un théologien gallican, témoin de son temps: Louis Ellies Du Pin (1657–1719)', Revue d'Histoire de l'Église de France, 72 (1986), pp. 67–121; id., 'Un théologien gallican et l'Écriture sainte: Le "Projet biblique" de Louis Ellies Du Pin (1657–1719)', in J.-R. Armogarthe (ed.), Le Grand Siècle et la Bible [1989], pp. 255–75; id., 'Le gallicanisme de Louis Ellies Du Pin (1657–1719)', Lias, 18 (1991), pp. 37–82. N. Sykes, William Wake, 1 (Cambridge, 1957), pp. 254–95 and 302–14. J. Carreyre in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2111–15, s.v. 'Pin'; A. Dodin in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 1825–31, s.v.

du Plessis-Mornay, Philippe (1549–1623), French statesman and *Huguenot leader. He was a native of Normandy. After the death of his father (1559), his family became Protestants. He studied in Paris and then went on a tour through Europe. On his return, he served for a time with de Condé in the second War of Religion. After escaping from the St *Bartholomew's Day Massacre (1572) he fled to England, where he was befriended by Sir Philip Sidney. For the next ten years he acted as a military leader in the Huguenot cause and as diplomatic agent to William of Orange and *Henry of Navarre. In 1578 he published in London his Traité de l'Église (Eng. tr., 1579) and in 1579 finished writing De la Vérité de la religion chrétienne (pub. Antwerp, 1581; Eng. tr., 1587). He actively furthered the proceedings of the general synods of the French Reformed Churches and cherished the ideal of a union of all Protestant Churches, possibly under the aegis of *James I. In 1589 he became governor of Saumur, where he built a Protestant church and founded (1593) a Protestant academy. The conversion of Henry IV (1593), whose trusted counsellor he had been, came as a blow; but he continued to work for religious toleration and on behalf of his co-religionists, and helped to secure the Edict of *Nantes (1598). In 1598 he issued a treatise on the Eucharist, De l'Institution, usage et doctrine du saint sacrement de l'eucharistie en l'Église ancienne, the fruit of many years' study. J. D. *Du Perron charged him with innumerable misquotations from the Fathers, and at a public disputation before Henry IV, at Fontainebleau on 4 May 1600, du Plessis was defeated, though few actual misquotations were found. His Mysterium Iniquitatis seu Historia Papatus (Saumur, 1611; also pub. in French; Eng. tr., 1612) was an attack on C. *Baronius and R. *Bellarmine. In 1612, after the renewal of persecution under Louis XIII, he was deprived of the governorship of Saumur and retired to his castle, La Fôret-sur-Sèvre (Poitou), where he died.

The best edn. of his Mémoires et correspondance is that in 12 vols., Paris, 1824–5. This includes a memoir of his life by his widow (vol. 1, pp. 5–503), which is also ed., with some additional correspondence, by Mme de Witt-Guizot (Société de l'Histoire de France, 2 vols., 1868–9; partial Eng. tr. of the Life by L. Crump [1926]). [David de Licques and others], Histoire de la vie de Messire Philippes de Mornay (Leiden, 1647). R. Patry, Philippe du Plessis-Mornay (Paris, 1933). M. Richter, Il 'Discours de la Vie et de la Mort' di Philippe du Plessis-Mornay (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, Saggi e Ricerche, 3rd ser. 4; Milan, 1964), incl. text. J. Leclerc, SJ, Histoire de la tolérance au siècle de la réforme, 2 [1955], pp. 90–1 and 181–4; Eng. tr. (1960), pp. 104–6 and 213–15. E. Haag, La France Protestante, 7 (1857), pp. 512–42, s.v. 'Mornay, Philippe de'; R. Snoeks in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1136–41, s.v., with extensive bibl.

Duplex Querela. In the C of E the form of action open to a cleric whom the Bishop refuses to institute to a benefice to which he has been presented. Unlike the patron's corresponding action, Quare Impedit*, it takes place in an ecclesiastical court, viz. the *Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved. Appeal lies to a Commission of Review, appointed by the Crown in Chancery. Where the cleric is himself the patron he may sue the bishop either under Duplex Querela or Quare Impedit but not in both actions at the same time.

duplication. An alternative term for *bination.

Duppa, Brian (1588–1662), Bp. of *Winchester. In 1629 he became Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford. A *High Churchman, he was in favour with the court. On W. *Laud's recommendation he was appointed tutor to the Prince of Wales (later *Charles II) and the Duke of Gloucester, with the former of whom he retained much influence all his life. In 1638 he became Bp. of *Chichester, and in 1641 of *Salisbury. From 1645 to 1660 Duppa was one of the leaders of the persecuted Church. He remained in close touch with *Charles I till his death, and during the Commonwealth did his utmost to keep the extruded clergy together and held private ordinations as opportunity offered. From 1653 to 1660, in conjunction with Edward Hyde at the exiled Court, he was making plans to preserve the episcopal succession, though without success. As W. *Juxon's representative, he was the chief consecrator at the first consecration after the Restoration. In 1660 he was translated to Winchester.

A spiritual manual by Duppa, Holy Rules and Helps to Devotion, both in Prayer and Practice (1673), was ed. by B. Parry (1675); it was frequently repr. in the 19th cent. G. Isham (ed.), The Correspondence of Bishop Brian Duppa and Sir Justinian Isham, 1650–1660 (Northamptonshire Record Society, 17 [1955]), with memoir of Duppa, pp. xix–xxxi. N. Pocock in DNB 16 (1888), pp. 242 f.

Dura Europos. This ancient city (the 'Pompeii of the Syrian desert') on the right bank of the Euphrates, half way between Aleppo and Baghdad, first attracted attention in 1920 through the accidental discovery of some paintings here by a British army officer. A preliminary survey was made by J. H. Breasted (1920), and the site systematically excavated by F. Cumont (1922–3) and later jointly by Yale University and the French Academy of Inscriptions (1928–37). The city, which was earlier a Seleucid fortress and then a Parthian caravan city, came into Roman hands c. AD 165, when it was again made a fortress. It was held until c.256, when it was abandoned. It has yielded a rich harvest of discoveries, among them: (1) a 3rd-cent. Gk. fragment of *Tatian's *Diatessaron; (2) the earliest known certain Jewish synagogue, AD 245, with notable paintings of events from OT history; and (3) an early Christian church. This was constructed from two rooms of a private house by removing the partition wall. It had a raised platform, doubtless for the altar, at the E. end, while a third room of the house was converted into the *baptistery. At first it appeared that the conversion of the building into a church dated from c.232, but in the Final Report of the Excavations it is argued that the building itself dates from c.232 and the conversion from the 240s.

F. Cumont, Fouilles de Doura-Europos, 1922–1923 (Paris, 1926). P. V. C. Baur, M. I. Rostovtzeff and others, The Excavations at Dura-Europos (preliminary reports of excavations undertaken Oct. 1928–36 in annual sessions issued in 10 vols., New Haven, Conn., 1929–52; final report pub. ibid., 1943 ff., incl. vol. 8, part 1: The Synagogue, by C. H. Kraeling, 1956 (repr., with additional material, incl. index, New York, 1979), and part 2: The Christian Building, by id., 1967), with bibl. General survey in M. I. Rostovtzeff, Dura Europos and its Art (Oxford, 1938); R. Wischnitzer, The Messianic Theme in the Paintings of the Dura Synagogue (Chicago, 1948). J. Gutmann (ed.), The Dura-Europos Synagogue: A Re-Evaluation (Missoula, Mont., 1973). C. Hopkins, The Discovery of Dura-Europos, ed. B. Goldman (1979). O. Eissfeldt in RAC 4 (1959), cols. 358–70, s.v., with extensive bibl.; J. A. Fischer in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 1112 f., s.v.

Durandus of Saint-Pourçain (c.1275–1334), scholastic philosopher, 'Doctor Modernus', also (by later writers) 'Doctor Resolutissimus'. He became a *Dominican and taught at *Paris, where he lectured on the Sentences and in 1312 became 'magister in theologia'. In 1313 he was summoned to be Lector at the Papal Court at *Avignon. Later he became Bp. successively of Limoux (1317), Le Puy-en-Velay (1318), and Meaux (1326). He was one of the earliest exponents of what came to be called *Nominalism, which he developed in directions distinct from the teaching of St Thomas Aquinas. Rejecting the current doctrine on intelligible and sensible species, he held that the only real entities were individuals and that the search for a principle of individuation was meaningless. In theology he stood for a sharp contrast between faith and reason, holding e.g. that rational argument could not disprove that the doctrine of the Trinity did not contain impossibilities. He also held that the presence of Christ in the Eucharist did not preclude the continuing existence of the bread and wine. His principal work, a 'Commentary on the Sentences', survives in three recensions: (1) before 1308, (2) 1310–13, (3) 1317–27. In deference to the criticisms of his superiors he modified certain passages in the first recension, but the second recension was no less sharply criticized. He replied in three disputations (Quodlibets) held at *Avignon. By the time of the third recension, Durandus as a bishop was free from the jurisdiction of the Dominican Order. His other writings include De paupertate Christi et Apostolorum (1322), De Origine Potestatum et Jurisdictionum (1329), and a treatise on the condition of human souls after their separation from the body (c.1333). Eleven articles in the last-named work were censured by a Papal Commission set up by *John XXII (1333), but the censure was lifted by *Benedict XII. Durandus was highly esteemed in the later Middle Ages.

Comm. on the Sentences (3rd recension) pub. Paris, 1508; several other edns. in the 16th cent.; crit. edn. of the Quaestio de Natura Cognitionis (II Sent. (A) d. 3, qu. 5) by J. Koch (Opuscula et Textus Historiam Ecclesiae eiusque Vitam atque Doctrinam illustrantia, 6; Münster, 1929). De Origine Potestatum et Jurisdictionum, pub. Paris, 1506. Tractatus de Habitibus ed. J. Koch (Opuscula et Textus Historiam Ecclesiae eiusque Vitam atque Doctrinam illustrantia, 8; Münster, 1930). De Visione Dei quam habent Animae Sanctorum ante Iudicium Generale, pr. in part in O. Raynaldus, Annales Ecclesiastici, 15 (Cologne, 1652), under the year 1333, nos. 49–57; brief extract from De Paupertate Christi et Apostolorum, ibid., under the year 1322, nos. 59–61. Quodlibeta Avenionensia tria ed. P. T. Stella (Textus et Studia in Historiam Scholasticae cura Pontificii Athenaei Salesiani, 1; Zurich, 1965). J. Koch, Durandus de S. Porciano, O.P.: Forschungen zum Streit um Thomas von Aquin zu Beginn des 14. Jahrhunderts, Teil 1, Literargeschichtliche Grundlegung (BGPM 26, Heft 1; 1927). P. Fournier, 'Durand de Saint-Pourçain, théologien', Histoire littéraire de la France, 37 (1938), pp. 1–38, with refs. J. Koch, 'Jakob von Metz, O.P., der Lehrer des Durandus de S. Porciano, O.P.', AHDLMA 4 (1929–30), pp. 169–232, repr. in his Kleine Schriften, 1 (Rome, 1973), pp. 133–200; see also 'Die Magister-Jahre des Durandus de S. Porciano, O.P. und der Konflikt mit seinem Orden', ibid. 2 (1973), pp. 7–118. M. D. Philippe, OP, 'Les Processions divines selon Durand de Saint-Pourçain', Revue Thomiste, 47 (1947), pp. 244–88. B. Decker, Die Gotteslehre des Jakob von Metz: Untersuchungen zur Dominikanertheologie zu Beginn des 14. Jahrhunderts, ed. R. Haubst (BGPM 42, Heft 1; 1967), passim. Kaeppeli, 1 (1970), pp. 339–50. J. A. Weisheipl, OP, in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 1114–16, s.v.

Durandus of Troarn (c.1010–88), Abbot of Troarn in Normandy from 1059. A monk of Fécamp, who was cross-bearer to John (Abbot, 1028–78; a spiritual counsellor and writer of note), Durand presents in his 'Liber de corpore et sanguine Domini' the Eucharistic doctrine that was approved at Fécamp in the 1050s. Squarely based on the Fathers, his treatise concedes nothing to the radical methodology of *Berengar of Tours.

His 'Liber de Corpore et Sanguine Domini', orig. pr. by J. L. *d'Achery in an appendix to his edn. of Lanfranc (1648), is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 149. 1375–1424. R. Heurtevent, Durandus de Troarn et les origines de l'hérésie bérengarienne ('Études de Théologie historique', 5; 1912), with bibl. G. Poras in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1159 f., s.v. 'Durand (6) de Troarn', with further refs.

Durandus, William (c.1230–96), Bp. of Mende from 1285. Born in France, he taught at Modena and possibly at *Bologna, where he had studied. He was one of the chief medieval canonists. A legal official of the Roman *Curia, he attended Pope *Gregory X at the second Council of *Lyons (1274), and prob. helped to draft its decrees. Among canon lawyers his Speculum iudicale was widely influential and led to his being known as 'the Speculator'; centred on legal procedure, it drew on his judicial and administrative experience. Also much acclaimed was his Rationale divinorum*, a compendium of liturgical knowledge with allegorical interpretation. His *Pontifical was taken, for contents and arrangement, as a model, and is the direct ancestor of that in use until recent times.

He is to be distinguished from his nephew and successor in the bishopric of Mende of the same name (d. 1330), to whom the authorship of the Pontifical is sometimes accredited.

Crit. edn. of his Pontifical by M. Andrieu, Le Pontifical romain du moyen-âge, 3 (ST, 88; 1940), with important introd. J. Berthelé and M. Valmary (eds.), 'Les Instructions et Constitutions de Guillaume Durand, le Spéculateur, d'après le manuscrit de Cessenon', Académie des Sciences et Lettres de Montpellier. Mémoires de la Section des Lettres, 2nd ser. 3 (1900), pp. 1–148. Eng. trs., with notes, of the first book of his Rationale, with introd. by J. M. *Neale and B. *Webb, The Symbolism of Churches and Church Ornaments (1843), and of the third book by T. H. Passmore, The Sacred Vestments (1899). V. Le Clerc, 'Guillaume Duranti, évêque de Mende, surnommé le Spéculateur', Histoire littéraire de la France, 20 (1842), pp. 411–97, with notes of edns. of his works to date. P.-M. Gy, OP (ed.), Guillaume Durand: Évêque de Mende (v. 1230–1296). Canoniste, liturgiste et homme politique. Actes de la Table Ronde du C.N.R.S., Mende 24–27 Mai 1990 (1992). L. Falletti in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 1014–75, s.v. 'Guillaume Durand', with bibl.; S. Kuttner in NCE 4 (1967), p. 1117, s.v. 'Duranti, William, the Elder'. On William Durandus, his nephew, also Bp. of Mende, with whom he has constantly been confused since the 15th cent., see P. Viollet, 'Guillaume Durant le Jeune, évêque de Mende', Histoire littéraire de la France, 35 (1921), pp. 1–139.

Dürer, Albrecht (1471–1528), German painter and engraver. A native of Nuremberg, at first he entered his father's goldsmith business, but in 1486 began the study of wood-cutting under Michael Wolgemut. After travelling abroad, particularly to *Venice (1494/5 and 1505–7), he settled down at Nuremberg. Of his religious paintings, the best known are the Paumgärtner altar-piece (the Nativity between St George and St Eustace; before 1505) and the Four Apostles (1526), both at Munich, and the Adoration of the Magi (1504) at Florence; of his woodcuts, the series known as the Large Passion, the Small Passion, and the Life of the Virgin (all pub. in 1511); and of his engravings (which are characterized by closely observed landscape backgrounds), the Virgin with the Monkey (*c.*1498), St Eustace (*c.*1501), and St Jerome in his Study (1514).

Dürer provided links between Italian art and the Gothic North; a prime example of this interchange is the Feast of the Rose Garlands altar-piece (Prague), painted in Venice in 1506 for German clients. His woodcuts had much influence on Italian painters and were widely used as illustrations to Bibles in various languages, esp. his scenes of the Apocalypse (1498). Although he never renounced his Catholic faith, he felt sympathetic towards the *Reformation, and after his death he was eulogized by M. *Luther. He enjoyed the friendship of the Emp. Maximilian, *Erasmus, and many of the chief statesmen, humanists, and reformers of his day, some of whom he recorded in vivid portraits.

The three best collections of Dürer's drawings are in the Albertina in Vienna, the Staatliche Museum in Berlin, and the British Museum in London. F. Winkler, Die Zeichnungen Albrecht Dürers (4 vols., 1936–9); W. L. Strauss, The Complete Drawings of Albrecht Dürer (6 vols., New York, 1974, with suppl. [1977]), both listing and reproducing his drawings. F. Anzelewsky, Albrecht Dürer: Das malerische Werk [1971], listing and illustrating his paintings. There are also catalogues, with illustrations: of his paintings, drawings, and prints from an exhibition at Nuremberg, Albrecht Dürer 1471 1971 (Munich, 1971) and of his graphic work in American collections from an exhibition held at the National Gallery of Art, Washington, DC, Dürer in America, ed. C. W. Talbot (1971); of his drawings and prints in the British Museum by J. Rowlands (London, 1971); of his drawings in the Albertina in Vienna by W. Koschatzky and A. Strobl [Salzburg, 1971], and of his drawings in the Staatliche Museum, Berlin, by F. Anzelewsky and H. Mielke (Berlin, 1984). F. W. H. Hollstein, German Engravings, Etchings and Woodcuts, 7: Albert and Hans Dürer, ed. K. G. Boon and R. W. Scheller (Amsterdam [*c.*1962]), pp. 1–259. Dürer's Schriftlicher Nachlass [Letters, Diaries, etc.], ed. H. Rupprich (3 vols., 1956–69). The large number of monographs include those by E. Panofsky (Princeton, NJ, 2 vols., 1943; 3rd edn., 1948; with full list of Dürer's works and useful select bibl., 1, pp. 287–96), M. Levey (London, 1964), C. White (ibid., 1971), F. Anzelewsky (Stuttgart, 1980), J. C. Hutchison (Princeton, NJ, 1990), and P.-K. Schuster (2 vols., Berlin, 1991). J. Białostocki, Dürer and his Critics 1500–1971 (Saecula Spiritalia, 7; Baden-Baden, 1986).

Durham. At the end of the 10th cent. the see of *Lindisfarne was removed to Durham, and a cathedral was begun as a shrine for the relics of St *Cuthbert. Bp. Carilef began to build the present cathedral in place of the older one in 1093, and replaced the secular clergy by a *Benedictine community, which lasted till the *Dissolution in 1540. The Galilee chapel, projecting from the W. end, was built at the end of the Norman era, and the celebrated Chapel of Nine Altars, with its rose windows and elaborate carving, is Early English. The medieval bishops held immense civil jurisdiction (mainly in County Durham), ranking as Counts Palatine; this dignity, which became less important at the Reformation period, was attached to the see down to the time of W. *van Mildert, bishop from 1826 to 1836. In his episcopate the University of Durham was founded (1832). The see was comprised mainly of the counties of Durham and Northumberland until the separation of the diocese of Newcastle (covering Northumberland) in 1882. It still shares with the sees of London and *Winchester a rank inferior only to *Canterbury and *York, and superior to all others in the two provinces; and the bishop is entitled to sit in the House of Lords immediately he takes possession of his see, irrespective of his seniority of consecration. A hall at Oxford for students from Durham, established *c.*1300 by Prior Richard de Hoton and refounded in 1380 by Bp. Hatfield as 'Durham College', was re-established in 1555 as Trinity College, Oxford.

H. S. Offler (ed.), Durham Episcopal Charters, 1071 1152 (Surtees Society, 179; 1968). T. D. Hardy (ed.), Registrum Palatinum Dunelmense: The Register of Robert de Kellawe, Lord Palatine and Bishop of Durham 1311–1316 (4 vols., Rolls Series, 1873–8); G. W. Kitchin (ed.), Richard d'Aungerville of Bury: Fragments of his Register and other Documents (Surtees Society, 119; 1910); R. L. Storey (ed.), The Register of Thomas Langley, Bishop of Durham 1406–1437 (ibid. 164, 166, 169, 170, 177, and 182; 1956–70); M. P. Howden (ed.), The Register of Richard Fox, Lord Bishop of Durham, 1491 1501 (ibid. 147; 1932); G. Hinde (ed.), The Registers of Cuthbert Tunstall, Bishop of Durham 1530 59 and James Pilkington, Bishop of Durham 1561 76 (ibid. 161; 1952). J. Raine (ed.), Historiae Dunelmensis Scriptores Tres: Gaufridus de Coldingham, Robertus de Graystanes, et Willielmus de Chambre (ibid. 9; 1839). Sanctuarium Dunelmense pr. in The Publications of the Surtees Society, 5 (1837), pp. 1–90. J. Stevenson (ed.), Liber Vitae Ecclesiae Dunelmensis (ibid. 13; 1841). J. Raine (ed.), The Durham Household Book: or The Accounts of the Bursar of the Monastery of Durham from Pentecost 1530 to Pentecost 1534 (ibid. 18; 1844). Id., Depositions and other Ecclesiastical Proceedings from the Courts of Durham extending from 1311 to the Reign of Elizabeth (ibid. 21; 1845). Id., The Obituary Roll of William Ebchester and John Burnby, Priors of Durham (ibid. 31; 1856). W. Greenwell (ed.), Bishop Hatfield's Survey: A Record of the Possessions of the See of Durham, made by order of Thomas de Hatfield, Bishop of Durham (ibid. 32; 1856). J. T. Fowler (ed.), Extracts from the Account Rolls of the Abbey of Durham (ibid. 99, 100, 103; 1898–1901). Id. (ed.), The Rites of Durham: Being a Description or Brief Declaration of all the Ancient Monuments, Rites and Customs belonging or being within the Monastical Church of Durham before the Suppression. Written 1593 (ibid. 107; 1903). J. M. Falkner and A. H. Thompson (eds.), The Statutes of the Cathedral Church of Durham (ibid. 143; 1929). F. Barlow (ed.), Durham Annals and other Documents of the Thirteenth Century (ibid. 155; 1945). Id., Durham Jurisdictional Peculiars (Oxford Historical Series, British Series, 1950). G. T. Lapsley, The County Palatine of Durham (Harvard Historical Studies, 8; 1900). R. A. B. Mynors, Durham Cathedral Manuscripts to the End of the Twelfth Century (1939); W. A. Pantin, Report on the Muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Durham (privately pr., 1939). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum*, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 219–52. R. B. Dobson, Durham Priory 1400–1450 (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 6; 1973). B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of York, Durham, Carlisle, etc., 1 (1727), pp. 221–83. R. W. Billings, Architectural Illustrations and Description of the Cathedral Church at Durham (1843). C. J. Stranks, This Sumptuous Church: The Story of Durham Cathedral (1973). Medieval Art and Architecture at Durham Cathedral (British Archaeological Association Conference Transactions, 3, for the year 1977; 1980). C. R. Peers, J. Queckett, and F. H. Cheetham in VCH, Durham, 3, ed. W. Page (1928), pp. 93–114. D. Rollason, M. Harvey, and M. Prestwich (eds.), Anglo-Norman Durham 1093–1193 (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1994). M. [E.] James, Family, Lineage, and Civil Society: A Study of Society, Politics, and Mentality in the Durham Region, 1500–1640 (Oxford, 1974). W. A. Pantin in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1179–99, s.v. See also works cited s.v. CUTHBERT, ST.

Durham Book, the. One of the primary documents lying behind the 1662 Book of *Common Prayer. It is a folio copy of the BCP printed in 1619 with MS annotations in the margin and between the lines. These MS notes, by J. *Cosin (q.v.) and his chaplain, W. *Sancroft, were designed as a first draft for the revision of 1662. They appear to have been begun *c.*1626/7, but for the most part they belong to the winter of 1660–61; and they include the proposals of the *Savoy Conference (Apr.–July 1661). The Book is preserved in the Cosin Library, Durham (formerly D. 3. 5, now in a special safe). A fair copy was made by W. Sancroft later in 1661 in another copy of the BCP (printed in 1634); this is now in the Bodleian Library (Auct. v. 3. 16). Most of the proposals in Sancroft's 'Fair Copy' were taken over into the 'Convocation Book' and the '*Annexed Book' (q.v.) and thus found their way into the 1662 BCP.

Text, with full introd., notes, and bibl., ed. G. J. Cuming (London, 1961).

Durie (or Dury), John (1596–1680), Scottish Protestant divine. Appointed in 1625 minister to the English Company of Merchants at Elbing in Prussia, he devised plans for the reunion of the non-RC Churches, esp. the *Lutherans and *Calvinists, and between 1630, when his appointment ceased, and 1633 visited various dignitaries in England and on the Continent on behalf of his designs. In 1634 he was ordained priest in the C of E and made a chaplain to the King, and down to 1641 he again travelled widely in the cause of religious unity. In the Civil War he was at first a royalist, and tutor at The Hague to Princess Mary of Orange, but in 1643 he took up a chaplaincy at Rotterdam, and in 1645 returned to London to take part in drawing up the *Westminster Confession and Catechisms. From 1645 to 1654 he was in England, but made another tour for negotiation from 1654 to 1657, meeting with nothing but acrimony from the Lutherans. His bases of reunion were too vague to win enthusiasm. Being out of favour at the Restoration, he left England again in 1661, and settled at Cassel, where he died.

Durie's pamphlet, A Case of Conscience: whether it be lawful to admit Jews into a Christian Commonwealth (orig. pub. *c.*1650), is repr. from the edn. of 1656 in The Harleian Miscellany, 7 (1811), pp. 251–5; The Reformed Librarie-Keeper (1650) was ed. by R. S. Grannis (Chicago, 1906), with biog. sketch, pp. 9–36. Studies by K. Brauer (Marburg, 1907) and J. M. Batten (Chicago, 1944), with list of his works. G. H. Turnbull, Hartlib, Dury and Comenius (1947), pp. 127–341. G. Westin, Negotiations about Church Unity, 1628–1634 (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1932, Teologi 3). R. Rouse and S. C. Neill (eds.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement 1517–1948 (2nd edn., 1967), pp. 97–9 and 134–6. J. Westby-Gibson in DNB 16 (1888), pp. 261–3.

Dury, John. See DURIE, JOHN.

Duvergier de Hauranne. See SAINT CYRAN, ABBÉ DE.

Dyfrig, St. See DUBRICIUS, ST.

dying, care of the. The spiritual care of the dying has always been a central concern of the Church, and from an early date provision was made for reconciliation through *Penance and for sacramental anointing (see UNCTION), while there have long been special provisions for the administration of Communion to those facing death (see VIATICUM). The physical care of the sick and dying was one of the characteristic activities of the religious orders, and the work done by Mother *Teresa in seeking out the destitute and dying is in this tradition. In the W. the physical care of the sick and dying largely passed to secular institutions. It was partly in reaction to the limitations of such care, in which the main thrust of medicine was directed to prolonging life, that the modern hospice movement developed. This owes much to the vision of Dame Cecily Saunders (b. 1918) and St Christopher's Hospice in South London, opened in 1967. The movement is founded on the view that by the proper control of physical pain and distressing symptoms, dying patients are enabled to value and find meaning in what remains of their lives and perhaps even accept death when it becomes inevitable. The work of St Christopher's Hospice has had international influence both through the founding of other hospices and through the incorporation of the basic principles of hospice care into medical and nursing practice.

The modern hospice movement has developed at a time when there has been an increasing advocacy of so-called euthanasia. Etymologically euthanasia means an easy or gentle death (Gk. εὐθανασία), but in modern usage it has come to denote the termination of life on humanitarian grounds, as in the case of incurable illness. Like *suicide, such action is incompatible with a proper respect for the sacredness of human life and God's sovereignty over it and with a Christian attitude to suffering; Christian moralists regard it as illicit, though there is said to be no obligation to pursue burdensome or extraordinary means to preserve life. Euthanasia was condemned by the RC Church in 1940, 1980, and 1995 and by the General *Synod of the C of E in 1976. Bodies such as the Voluntary Euthanasia

Legislation Society, founded in England by C. K. Millard in 1932, have argued for the legalization of euthanasia, but bills presented to Parliament in 1936, 1969, and 1976 have been defeated. While not legalizing euthanasia as such, the state of California in the USA in 1976 made it legally possible there for terminally ill patients to authorize, by prior directive, the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining procedures when death is believed to be imminent. In the Netherlands, provided certain strictly defined criteria are met, prosecutions are not normally brought against doctors bringing about the death of terminally ill patients who so desire it, though the action remains technically illegal.

The RC judgement of the *Holy Office condemning euthanasia and its successor's 'Declaration on Euthanasia' are pr. in AAS 32 (1940), pp. 553 f., and ibid. 72 (1980), pp. 542–52; John Paul II's encyclical 'Evangelium Vitae', ibid. 87 (1995), pp. 401–522. A Report of a Working Party of the C of E Board for Social Responsibility, On Dying Well: An Anglican Debate on Euthanasia (1975) was strongly influenced by the work of Dame Cecily Saunders and was welcomed by the General Synod in 1976. The Report of a Working Party of the Linacre Centre for the Study of health care, Euthanasia and Clinical Practice: Trends, Principles and Alternatives (1982) treats similar questions. See also [R.] P. Ramsey, The Patient as Person: Explorations in Medical Ethics (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1970); id., Ethics at the Edges of Life (ibid., 1978), pp. 143–332; R. M. Veatch, Death, Dying, and the Biological Revolution: Our Last Quest for Responsibility (ibid., 1976); and R. F. Weir (ed.), Ethical Issues in Death and Dying (New York, 1977).

Dykes, John Bacchus (1823–76), writer of hymn-tunes. He was *precentor of Durham cathedral (1849–62) and then, from 1862, vicar of St Oswald's, Durham, where his High Church sympathies led to a long and unhappy conflict with his Bishop (Charles Baring). His melodic hymn-tunes, of which many were included in Hymns, Ancient and Modern, became very popular. Among them were Hollingside ('Jesu, Lover of my soul'), Dominus regit me ('The King of Love my Shepherd is'), Nicaea ('Holy, Holy, Holy!'), and St Cross ('O come and mourn').

J. T. Fowler (ed.), Life and Letters of John Bacchus Dykes (1897).

Dyophysites (Gk. δυοφυσῖται, from δύο, 'two', and φύσις, 'nature'; the form διφυσῖται is also found). A title given by the *Monophysites to the Catholics in reference to the orthodox belief that in the Person of Christ there coexist the two distinct natures of God and man, and not one composite nature. In modern times it was used by F. *Loofs as a distinguishing mark of the Christology of the *Antiochene school of theologians.

Dyothelites (Gk. δύο, 'two', θέλημα, 'will'). Those who, as against the *Monothelites, hold the orthodox doctrine that in the Person of Christ there are two distinct wills, the one human and the other Divine.

dysteleology. A term introduced by E. Häckel to denote 'purposelessness of nature' (the opposite of 'teleology'). It is also used of the study of certain rudimentary organs, thought by some to be purposeless in the evolution of species.

E

'E'. A symbol widely used by scholars who follow the 'documentary hypothesis' of the origins of the *Pentateuch; it denotes the Elohistic (Heb. אֱלֹהִים, 'elohim, 'God') source. This consists largely of narrative, and together with '*J' (q.v.) comprises most of the famous stories of the Patriarchs and Exodus; it is distinguished from 'J' by its regular use of 'elohim ('God') where 'J' uses the divine name Yahweh (Jahveh or Jehovah). It is commonly thought to embody the traditions current in the Northern Kingdom of Israel and to date from a period somewhat later than 'J' (perhaps 9th cent. BC).

For bibl. see PENTATEUCH.

Eadmer (*c.*1060–*c.*1128), English historian and theologian. He was brought up from childhood at the monastery of Christ Church, *Canterbury. During the whole of the period when St *Anselm was Abp. of Canterbury (1093–1109), Eadmer was a member of his household, sharing in his wanderings in exile; for much of the time he took notes on which his Historia Novorum and his Life of Anselm were largely based. In 1120 he was offered the Bishopric of St Andrews, but he was never consecrated. Besides his valuable Vita Anselmi, he wrote the Lives of various early English saints (incl. *Wilfrid and *Dunstan). His Historia Novorum, covering the period from *c.*1066 to *c.*1122, is an important source for the English history of its times. The Tractatus de conceptione S. Mariae, formerly attributed to St Anselm, and one of the earliest systematic treatises on the doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM, which it defends, is also his work.

Collected edn. of his works appended to those of St Anselm ed. G. Gerberon, OSB (Paris, 1675; sep. pagination); repr. from the Paris edn. of 1721 in J. P. Migne, PL 159. 345–808, with refs.; Life of Anselm, ibid. 158. 49–118. Eadmer's Historia Novorum and Vita Sancti Anselmi also ed. M. Rule (RS, 1884, with introd.); crit. edn. of the latter, with Eng. tr., by R. W. Southern (London, 1962; repr., with corrections, Oxford, 1972); his Life of St Dunstan, ed. W. *Stubbs, Memorials of Saint Dunstan (RS, 1874), pp. 162–249; his Life of St Wilfrid, ed. J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops (2 vols., RS, 1879–86), 1, pp. 161–226, together with a 'Breviloquium Vitae Sancti Wilfridi', perhaps by Eadmer, pp. 227–37; his Life of St *Oswald, ed. id., ibid. 2, pp. 1–59; his Life of Bregwine, Abp. of Canterbury 761–4, ed. B. W. Scholz in Traditio, 22 (1966), pp. 127–48. Tractatus de conceptione Sanctae Mariae, ed. H. Thurston, SJ, and T. Slater, SJ (Freiburg i.B., 1904). 'Nova Opuscula de Sanctorum Veneratione et Obsecratione', ed. A. *Wilmart, OSB, in Rev. S.R. 15 (1935), pp. 184–219 and 354–79. Eng. tr. of his Historia Novorum by G. Bosanquet (1964). R. W. Southern, Saint Anselm and his Biographer (Birkbeck Lectures, 1959; Cambridge, 1963), pp. 227–374. See also bibl. to IMMACULATE CONCEPTION OF THE BVM.

Eadmund, St. See EDMUND, ST.

Earle, John (*c.*1601–65), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was born at *York, educated at *Christ Church and Merton College, Oxford, and early secured literary fame by his Microcosmography, or A Piece of the World (1628), a pleasing and popular collection of character studies modelled on those of Theophrastus. He attracted royal favour by his pleasing manners and was appointed tutor to Charles, Prince of Wales. In 1643 he became Chancellor of Salisbury Cathedral, but was soon deprived by the *Puritans. He accompanied *Charles II in his exile, and at the Restoration was appointed in quick succession Dean of *Westminster (1660), Bp. of *Worcester (1662), and Bp. of Salisbury (1663). In the administration of his diocese he showed himself tolerant towards Nonconformists and a critic of the *Conventicles and *Five Mile Acts.

Modern edns. of Earle's Microcosmography by P. Bliss (London, 1811) and by A. S. West (Cambridge, 1897); also later edns. Facsimile of author's holograph MS preserved in the *Bodleian Library, Oxford, pub. Leeds, 1966. List of edns. in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 2044 f. A. G. Matthews (ed.), Walker Revised, being a Revision of John Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy during the Great Rebellion 1642–60 (Oxford, 1948), p. 372. G. G. Perry in DNB 16 (1888), pp. 320 f.

Earthquake Synod. During the spring and summer of 1382 a Synod was held at Blackfriars, London, under Abp. W. *Courtenay; in the course of one meeting, dated by most historians as that of 21 May when 24 theses from the writings of J. *Wycliffe were condemned as heretical or erroneous, the city was shaken by an earthquake. The name is sometimes extended to all the meetings of 1382 at which various actions were taken against heresy. The 1382 condemnation added various articles, including three dealing with the Eucharist, to those mentioned in earlier edicts against Wycliffe.

Primary account of the Council, with a list of its members, in Fasciculi Zizaniorum, ed. W. W. Shirley (RS, 1858), pp. 272–91; see also pp. 493–500. Modern account, drawing on this and other sources, by J. H. Dahmus, The Prosecution of John Wyclif (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1952), pp. 89–128.

Easter. The Feast of the Resurrection of Christ, being the greatest and oldest feast of the Christian Church. Its importance is emphasized liturgically by the long preparation of *Lent and *Passiontide, by the special ceremonies of *Holy Week, and by the following *Paschaltide, marked in the W. Church by the frequent reiteration of *Alleluia at the *Mass and in the Divine *Office, as the expression of Easter joy. In the ancient Church the *catechumens, after watching all Saturday night, were baptized early on Easter Day and received Communion. The night before Easter was celebrated by the illumination of the churches and even whole cities. In the W. Church the ceremonies were put back to the afternoon in the 10th cent. and to the morning of *Holy Saturday in the 14th, so that in the RC Church the Vigil, with the first Easter Mass, came to be celebrated on Saturday. A similar development took place in the E. Church, though here in addition Mattins of Easter Sunday begins at midnight on Saturday–Sunday, followed by the Liturgy of Easter Day. In the RC Church in 1951 it became permissible to offer the first Mass of Easter during the night of Saturday–Sunday, and in 1955 such celebration became obligatory. (For details of the service, see PASCHAL VIGIL SERVICE.) The BCP provides special anthems for use on Easter Day in place of the *Venite.

The derivation of the name 'Easter' is uncertain. Acc. to *Bede, it is connected with an Anglo-Saxon spring goddess 'Eostre'. At any rate it seems clear that, as in the case of Christmas (q.v.), the Christian feast of Easter has superseded an old pagan festival. The popular custom of exchanging 'Easter eggs' is of very ancient origin.

The date of the Easter feast is determined by the Paschal Full Moon, its extreme limits being 21 Mar. and 25 Apr. In the early Church, the two principal methods of computation were those of *Alexandria (owing to its astronomical resources) and *Rome. For the various disputes on the subject see PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES.

The principal texts are set out in H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ, Hebdomada Sancta (2 vols. in 3, Freiburg, etc., 1956–7), passim. Texts also ed., with Ital. tr. and introd. by R. Cantalamessa, La Pasqua nella Chiesa antica (Traditio Christiana, 4; 1978; Eng. tr. Collegeville, Minn. [1993]). B. Fischer and J. Wagner (eds.), Paschatis Sollemnia: Studien zu Osterfeier und Osterfrömmigkeit (1959). G. Bertonière, The Historical Development of the Easter Vigil and Related Services in the Greek Church (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 193; Rome, 1972). On the early history of the feast, cf. also H. Schürmann, 'Die Anfänge christlicher Osterfeier', Th.Q. 130 (1951), pp. 414–25; O. *Casel, OSB, 'Art und Sinn der ältesten christlichen Osterfeier', JLW 14 (1938), pp. 1–78; C. Mohrmann, 'Pascha, Passio, Transitus', EL 66 (1952), pp. 37–52; W. Huber, Passa und Ostern: Untersuchungen zur Osterfeier der alten Kirche (Beiheft zur ZNTW 35; 1969); R. Cantalamessa, La Pasqua della nostra salvezza: Le tradizioni pasquali della Bibbia e della primitiva Chiesa [Turin, 1971]. T. J. Talley, The Origins of the Liturgical Year (New York [1986]), pp. 1–57. On the religious and theological significance of the observance, L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., Le Mystère pascal (Lex Orandi, 6; 1945; Eng. tr., 1951). F. L. Cross, I Peter: A Paschal Liturgy (1954). P. Jounel in A. G. Martimort and others, L'Église en Prière (new edn.), 4 (1983), pp. 45–69; Eng. tr. (1986), pp. 33–56. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1521–74, s.v. 'Pâques'; J. D. Crichton in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 202–4, s.v. See also bibl. to PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES.

Easter Litany. The principal confession of faith of the *Bohemian Brethren. It takes the form of the *Apostles' Creed with considerable expansions, mainly from Scripture, though it is conceived more as an act of worship than as a dogmatic formulary and is designed primarily for use in church on Easter morning. It dates from 1749.

The text (Ger. and Eng.) is pr. in P. Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, 3 (1877), pp. 799–806.

Eastern Orthodox Church. See ORTHODOX CHURCH.

eastward position. In connection with liturgy, the term designates the position of the celebrant of the Eucharist standing on the same side of the altar as the people, with his back to them; because of the normal *orientation of churches, in this position he usually faces E. The adoption of this position was introduced at *Rome from the Frankish Empire in the 8th or 9th cent. Before that the celebrant had stood on the far side of the altar, facing the people, in what was later called the *westward position. Until the middle of the 20th cent. the so-called eastward position became universal in the W., even when, as in the Papal basilicas, it involved facing W. It is still always used in the E. Church.

In the C of E, authority for the use of the eastward position depends on the interpretation of three rubrics in the BCP, i.e. the fourth rubric at the beginning of the service, the rubric before the absolution, and the rubric before the prayer of consecration. The first of these, which dates from 1552, legislated for the time when the altar-table was placed, at the time of a celebration of the Communion, in the body of the church or chancel. Since the traditional altar-wise position came back in the 17th cent., the rubric, although retained in the 1662 BCP, has strictly ceased to be applicable, though in 1890 Abp. E. W. *Benson pronounced the eastward position to be a legitimate interpretation of this rubric. The second rubric is less precise. The third rubric has been interpreted legally as permitting either position, provided the 'manual acts' are visible to the congregation. In practice, except in extreme Evangelical churches where the *north end is taken, the eastward position had become almost universal in the C of E until the RC Church gradually again adopted a westward position, now found also in many C of E churches.

See bibl. s.v. ORIENTATION.

Ebedjesus (Abdisho' bar Berikha) (d. 1318). The last important theological writer of the *Church of the East. He became Bp. of Sigar and Bêt Arabâye in 1284/5, and about five years later Metropolitan of Armenia. He wrote extensively in Syriac, but several of his works are lost. Those which survive include a valuable catalogue of Syriac authors, two important compendia of canon law (the Collectio canonum synodicorum and the Ordo iudiciorum ecclesiasticorum), a theological work entitled Margaritha (the Pearl), and the Paradisus Eden, a series of 50 poems.

His collection of Canons, his 'Epitome Canonum Apostolicorum', and 'Margaritha', with a Lat. tr. by [J.] A. *Assemani, are pr. by A. *Mai, SVNC 10 (Rome, 1838), pt. 1, pp. 1–331. Selections of the Paradisus poems ed., with Lat. tr., H. Gismondi, SJ (Beirut, 1888); the first 25 ed. P. Cardahi (ibid., 1899). Eng. tr. of his 'Catalogue' and 'Margaritha' in G. P. Badger, The Nestorians and their Rituals, 2 (1852), pp. 361–422. Lat. tr. of his Ordo iudiciorum ecclesiasticorum by J.-M. Vosté, OP (Codificazione Canonica Orientale, Fonti, 2nd ser., fasc. 15; Rome, 1940). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 323–5, incl. full refs. J. Dauvillier in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 91–134, s.v.

Eberlin, Johannes (*c.*1468–1533), popular Reformation polemical writer. Born in Günzburg (Bavaria), he became a *Franciscan. He encountered the writings of M. *Luther while at Freiburg im Breisgau in 1520, and in 1521 he published a series of 15 pamphlets (the Bundsgenossen). The earliest of these reflect Luther's criticism of the contemporary Church and society, whereas the later ones show the more radical influence of *Carlstadt. The radical social ideas expressed in the later pamphlets contributed significantly to the popular discontent which was to manifest itself in the *Peasants' War. Entering the University of *Wittenberg in 1522, he came under the direct influence of Luther and P. *Melanchthon; this led to a moderation of his more extreme views, already evident in Vom Misbrauch christlicher Freiheit (1522). From 1525 he was preacher to Count George II of Wertheim. As a diversion he produced a German translation of *Tacitus' Germania.

Ausgewählte [sämtliche] Schriften, ed. L. Enders (3 vols., Neudrucke deutscher Litteraturwerke des xvi. und xvii. Jahrhunderts, nos. 139–41, 170–2, and 183–8; 1896–1902). His tr. of Tacitus' Germania, ed. A. Masser (Innsbrucker Beiträge zur Kulturwissenschaft, Germanistische Reihe, 30; 1986). M. Radlkofer, Johann Eberlin von Günzburg und sein Vetter Hans Jakob Wehe von Leipheim (1887). Studies on his Bundsgenossen by J. H. Schmidt (Leipzig, 1900) and W. Lucke (Halle, 1902). Full bibl. in Schottenloher, 1 (1933), pp. 205 f. (nos. 5144–67), and 7 (1966), p. 65 (nos. 54180–84). T. Kolde in PRE (3rd edn.), 5 (1898), pp. 122–5; R. Weijenborg, OFM, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1306 f., both s.v.

Ebionites (Heb. אֶבְיוֹנִים 'poor men'). A sect of Jewish Christians which flourished in the early cents. of the Christian era. The several scattered sources from which our knowledge of them is derived cannot easily be harmonized and related. It seems clear, however, that the sect flourished esp. on the E. of the *Jordan and that two of their principal tenets were (1) a 'reduced' doctrine of the Person of Christ, to the effect, e.g., that Jesus was the human son of Joseph and Mary and that the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove lighted on Him at His baptism, and (2) over-emphasis on the binding character of the Mosaic Law. They are said to have rejected the Pauline Epistles and to have used only one Gospel; on this see following entry. A poor community, they appear to have adopted a severely ascetic mode of life and to have remained outside the main stream of Christian development. It is difficult to state exactly what their relation was to such sects as the *Nazarenes; A. *Harnack and F. J. A. *Hort identified the two bodies, while J. B. *Lightfoot and T. *Zahn distinguished them.

The sources are scattered. They include *Justin, Dial. c. Tryph. 47; *Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 1. 26. 2; 3. 11. 7; 3. 21. 1; and 5. 1. 3; *Tertullian, De Praescr. 33; *Hippolytus, Haer. 7. 34 and 9. 13–17; *Eusebius, HE 3. 27; *Epiphanius, Haer. 30. H. J. Schoeps, 'Ebionite Christianity', JTS NS 4 (1953), pp. 219–24; J. A. Fitzmyer, SJ, 'The Qumran Scrolls, the Ebionites and their Literature', Theological Studies, 16 (1955), pp. 335–72, with refs. J. Daniélou, SJ, Théologie du judéo-christianisme, 1 (1958), pp. 68–76; Eng. tr. (1964), pp. 55–66. A. F. J. Klijn and G. J. Reinink, Patristic Evidence for Jewish Christian Sects (Supplement to Novum Testamentum, 36; 1973), pp. 19–43. A. Orbe, SJ, Cristología gnóstica: Introducción a la soteriología de los siglos II y III, 1 (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 384; 1976), pp. 351–79. J. M. Fuller in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 24–8; W. Beveridge in HERE 5 (1912), pp. 139–45, with bibl.; G. Strecker in RAC 4 (1959), cols. 487–500, s.v.; H. J. Schoeps in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1314–19, s.v., with bibl.; J. H. Crehan, SJ, in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 2 (1967), pp. 204–6, s.v.

Ebionites, Gospel according to the. The name given by modern scholars to the Jewish-Christian *apocryphal Gospel supposed to have been used by the *Ebionites (q.v.). *Irenaeus says that the Ebionites use the 'Gospel according to Matthew' (Adv. Haer. 1. 26. 2 and 3. 11. 7), though from the the beliefs he ascribes to them (ibid. 3. 21. 1 and 5. 1. 3) it seems that this cannot be identified with the canonical Mt. *Eusebius (HE 3. 27. 4), on the other hand, says that they use the 'Gospel according to the Hebrews'. The principal authority is *Epiphanius (Haer. 30). He not only states that the Ebionites 'receive the Gospel according to Matthew' and 'call it the Hebrew Gospel', but he quotes passages from the Gospel used by the Ebionites. These show that it was written in Greek. The relationship between this Gospel and the 'Gospel of the Nazarenes' and the 'Gospel according to the *Hebrews' is unclear; they are perhaps quite distinct.

Text of the Epiphanian frags., with notes, in A. *Hilgenfeld, Novum Testamentum extra Canonem Receptum, fasc. 4 (1866), pp. 32–8. Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 14–16; Ger. tr., with notes by P. Vielhauer and G. Strecker in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 138–42; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 166–71, and discussion of the whole question of Jewish Christian Gospels (with bibl.), pp. 114–28; Eng. tr., pp. 134–53. H. Waitz, 'Neue Untersuchungen über die sogen. judenchristlichen Evangelien', ZNTW 36 (1937), pp. 60–81; M. É. Boismard, OP, 'Évangile des Ébionites et problème synoptique', R.Bibl. 73 (1966), pp. 321–52. W. L. Petersen in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 261 f., s.v.

Ecce Homo (Lat., 'Behold the Man!'). The title of the Life of Christ, published (orig. anonymously) by Sir John *Seeley in 1865. It was a typical expression of the phase in 19th-cent. liberal thought which was more interested in the 'historic' Jesus than in the 'metaphysical Christ of the Creeds'. In it Seeley presented in an easy style an attractive picture of Christ as a moral reformer. So much, however, that belonged to the traditional conception of Christ was passed over in silence that the orthodoxy of its author was widely challenged, among others by J. H. *Newman, A. P. *Stanley, and W. E. *Gladstone. The work secured an immense circulation.

There is an edn. in the 'Everyman Library', with introd. by Sir Oliver Lodge.

Ecchellensis. See ABRAHAM ECCHELLENSIS.

Ecclesia docens (Lat., 'the teaching Church'). A term traditionally used by some Catholic writers of the clergy, who are commissioned to teach the Christian faith, as contrasted with the laity, who are called ecclesia discens, 'the learning Church'. Since the Second *Vatican Council, however, the distinction has become less rigid.

Ecclesiastes, Book of. The main theme of the Book, traditionally ascribed to *Solomon, is the worthlessness and vanity of human life. The title 'Ecclesiastes' found in the Greek and Latin versions is an attempted rendering of the Hebrew title 'Qoheleth'; English versions generally translate this as 'the Preacher', though the probable meaning of the Hebrew word is 'a speaker in an assembly'. In the Hebrew Bible it was the last of the five '*Megilloth' or Rolls, and was read publicly in the Synagogue on the Feast of *Tabernacles. It belongs to the so-called *Wisdom Literature, a fact which explains its association with the name of Solomon, who is no longer seriously held to be the author. Considerations of subject-matter and linguistic style make it clear that the book is the product of a late age in OT history, and it is known that it was one of the latest books to be admitted to the Hebrew canon. Like *Job, it questions the confident assumptions of much of the earlier Wisdom literature, but adopts a more detached and even cynical tone. The occasional passages which are out of harmony with its general pessimism are treated by many scholars as later interpolations in the interests of orthodoxy and canonicity, although others remain satisfied with the unity of the Book. There have been attempts, both Jewish and Christian, to interpret the Book so as to bring its teaching into accord with orthodox ethical principles. No direct quotations of it occur in the NT.

Comm. by H. W. Hertzberg (KAT 16. 4; 1932; 2nd edn., 17. 4–5, on Eccles. and Est., 1963, pp. 19–238), W. Zimmerli (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 16. 1, on Prov. and Eccles., 1962; 2nd edn. on Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, Lam., and Est., 1967, pp. 123–253), A. Lauha (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 19; Neukirchen, 1978), G. Ogden (Sheffield, 1987), J. L. Crenshaw (Old Testament Library, 1988), and R. N. Whybray (New Cent. Bib., 1989). H. L. Ginsberg, Studies in Koheleth (Texts and Studies of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 17; New York, 1950); R. Gordis, Koheleth—the Man and his World (ibid. 19; 1951; 2nd edn., 1968). O. Loretz, Qohelet und die alte Orient: Untersuchungen zu Stil und theologischer Thematik des Buches Qohelet (Freiburg, etc. [1964]). R. Braun, Kohelet und die frühhellenistische Popularphilosophie (Beiheft zur ZATW 130; 1973). C. F. Whitley, Koheleth: His Language and Thought (ibid. 148; 1979). M. V. Fox, Qohelet and his Contradictions (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 71; 1989). H. Gese, 'Die Krisis der Weisheit bei Koheleth', in Les Sagesses du Proche-Orient ancien: Colloque de Strasbourg, 17–19 mai 1962 (Paris, 1963), pp. 139–51; Eng. tr. in J. L. Crenshaw (ed.), Theodicy in the Old Testament (Issues in Religion and Theology, 4; 1983), pp. 141–53. G. von *Rad, Weisheit in Israel (Neukirchen [1970]), pp. 292–308; Eng. tr. (1972), pp. 226–39. R. N. Whybray, Ecclesiastes (Old Testament Guides, Sheffield, 1989). Eissfeldt, pp. 491–500, with bibl. A. Barucq in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 9 (1977), cols. 609–74, s.v. 'Qohéleth'; J. L. Crenshaw in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 271–80, s.v.

Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The body which from 1835 to 1948 managed the estates and revenues of the C of E. In 1835 two commissions were appointed to consider reforms in the allotment of Church revenues; and in the following year an Act of Parliament (the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act) was passed, establishing a permanent body of Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who were constituted a corporation with power to hold and purchase lands and to prepare schemes for the alteration and redistribution of ecclesiastical revenues. Its constitution was several times amended. In 1948 it consisted of the archbishops and bishops of England, the deans of *St Paul's, *Westminster, and *Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President of the Council, the First Lord of the Treasury, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, one of the principal Secretaries of State, the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls, and certain lay members of the C of E appointed by the Crown and the Abp. of Canterbury. The joint treasurers were three lay 'Church Estates Commissioners', two of them appointed by the Crown and the third by the Abp. of Canterbury. The Commission presented an annual report to Parliament. In 1948 the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and *Queen Anne's Bounty united in a new body, the *Church Commissioners for England (q.v.).

G. F. A. Best, Temporal Pillars: Queen Anne's Bounty, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the Church of England, 1704–1948 (1964), pp. 296–514. [W.] O. Chadwick, The Spirit of the Oxford Movement (Cambridge, 1990), pp. 63–85.

Ecclesiastical Courts Commissions. There were two Parliamentary Commissions on the English Church courts in the 19th cent.

(1) That set up under the influence of Lord Brougham, originally appointed on 28 Jan. 1830 and reappointed with additional members on 5 July 1830. It included Abp. W. *Howley and five Bishops. Under pressure from Brougham, it recommended (25 Jan. 1831) the replacement of the Court of *Delegates by the Privy Council as the final court of appeal in ecclesiastical matters; this led to the establishment of the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1833. The full report, issued in Feb. 1832, advocated many drastic changes, including trial by jury in ecclesiastical cases and the abolition of the provincial courts of *York. Some of its less revolutionary recommendations were adopted later in the 19th cent.

(2) That appointed by the Prime Minister (W. E. *Gladstone) and Lord Chancellor (R. *Palmer, first Earl of Selborne), at the request of the Abp. of Canterbury (A. C. *Tait), on 16 May 1881 'to inquire into the constitution and working of the Ecclesiastical Courts as created or modified under the Reformation Statutes of the 24th and 25th years of King Henry VIII and any subsequent Acts'. Its immediate object was to find some new and better way of dealing with the ritual controversies. It consisted of 25 members, among them both Archbishops (Tait and W. Thomson), Bp. E. W. *Benson, Lord Penzance, R. J. *Phillimore, E. A. Freeman, and W. *Stubbs. It recommended in its report (July 1883) a radical revision of the courts, the final court to consist of five lay judges appointed by the Crown, who had formally affirmed that they belonged to the C of E. Only nine of the commissioners signed the report without qualifications and Convocation objected to the constitution proposed for the final court. No legislation followed. Several of the appendices to the report, esp. those of Stubbs, are of great historical value.

(1) The Special and General Reports made to his Majesty by the Commissioners appointed to Inquire into the Practice and Jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in England and Wales (Parliamentary Papers, 1831–2, vol. 24 [C. 199]). (2) Report of the Commissioners Appointed to Inquire into the Constitution and Working of the Ecclesiastical Courts (2 vols.; Parliamentary Papers, 1883, vol. 24 [C. 3760 and 3761]).

Ecclesiastical Discipline, Royal Commission on. The Commission was appointed in 1904 as a result of pressure by Members of Parliament on the new Abp. of Canterbury, R. T. *Davidson, to take effective action against Ritualism. Its brief was to inquire into 'breaches or neglect of the Law relating to the conduct of Divine Service in the Church of England and to the ornaments and fittings of Churches' and to devise remedies. Its members were mainly laymen, but all were churchmen. After taking evidence from 164 witnesses and consulting the bishops, the Commissioners reported unanimously on 21 June 1906 that the law of public worship was too narrow, and that the machinery for discipline had broken down. They recommended that practices significant of teaching repugnant to the doctrine of the C of E should be made to cease, if necessary by force of law; that *Letters of Business should be issued to the *Convocations to regularize the vestments of the minister, and to provide greater elasticity in public worship; that the recommendations of the *Ecclesiastical Courts Commission of 1883 should in the main be carried out, with the replacement of the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as the final court of appeal; that the *Public Worship Regulation Act 1874 should be repealed; and that dioceses should be divided to secure greater supervision. The Letters of Business envisaged were duly issued on 10 Nov. 1906, thus initiating the long project of Prayer Book revision (defeated in the House of Commons in 1927 and 1928); see COMMON PRAYER, BOOK OF.

The Report of the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline [Cd. 3040] and the Minutes of Evidence taken before the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline [Cd. 3069 and Cd. 3070] are pr. among the Parliamentary Papers, 1906, vol. 33. G. K. A. *Bell, Randall Davidson (1935), pp. 454–73; A. R. Vidler, The Church in an Age of Revolution (Pelican History of the Church, 5; 1961), pp. 162–4.

Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963. A Measure intended to simplify the ecclesiastical law and jurisdiction in the C of E in accordance with the recommendations of the Archbishops' Commission on Ecclesiastical Courts of 1954. It repealed a large number of existing enactments, including the *Church Discipline Act 1840, the *Public Worship Regulation Act 1874, the Clergy Discipline Act 1892 and the Incumbents (Discipline) Measure 1947.

By the Measure, the *Consistory Court is the court of first instance against clerics for offences not involving doctrine, ritual or ceremonial ('conduct cases'), and retains its existing *faculty jurisdiction. A new court, the *Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved, has jurisdiction of first instance in matters involving doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial, and also hears appeals from the Consistory Court in faculty cases involving any of these matters. A Royal Commission consisting of three Lords of Appeal and two Bishops who are members of the House of Lords hears appeals from that court. The appellate jurisdiction of the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has ceased, except for certain faculty cases.

Conduct cases include conduct unbecoming the office and work of a clerk in holy orders and persistent neglect of duty, and there is a limitation period of three years. A complaint is first considered by the Bishop, who may refer it to an examiner, who decides whether a prima facie case is established. If so, the accused is tried in the Consistory Court by the *Chancellor sitting with two clerical and two lay assessors. The procedure in general follows the practice of the criminal law, so the Chancellor is judge in matters of law, and the assessors in matters of fact, and appeal lies to the Provincial Court. Where the complaint concerns doctrine, ritual or ceremonial, there is an informal hearing before a Bishop, who may veto proceedings, or refer it to a Committee of the Convocation. If a prima facie case is established, the accused is tried before the Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved, whence an appeal lies to a Commission of Review appointed by the Crown. Neither of these courts is bound by a previous decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or by its own precedents if fresh evidence is adduced.

The censures that may be inflicted are deprivation, *inhibition, suspension, monition, and a new penalty of rebuke. Deposition from holy orders may follow deprivation. Deprivation also follows certain convictions and orders in the secular court. Similar proceedings are employed in the case of Bishops, who are liable to the same censures. The Measure makes provision for the costs of both prosecution and defence to be paid by the Church Commissioners, in some cases jointly with the Central Board of Finance. The expense can be considerable, and this alone, quite apart from the complexity of the procedures, makes prosecutions rare.

Halsbury's Laws of England and Wales (4th edn., 1986), 14, pp. 275–336; E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law (3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, 1992), pp. 111–30.

Ecclesiastical text of the NT. A name occasionally given to the *Byzantine text on the ground that it was the text which established itself for official use in the Greek-speaking Church.

Ecclesiastical Titles Act 1851. The Act, passed at the time of the '*Papal Aggression', forbidding the assumption by RCs of territorial titles within the United Kingdom under penalty of a fine, and rendering void all bequests or donations made to persons under such titles. It was introduced as a counter-measure to the reinstitution of the RC hierarchy by *Pius IX in 1850, but, being a dead letter from the first, was repealed by the Ecclesiastical Titles Act 1871, which none the less preserves the principle that only the Crown can validly confer rank or title in the Realm, and is still in force.

ecclesiasticism. A word, commonly used in a depreciatory sense, for (1) over-attention to the external details of ecclesiastical practice and administration, or (2) the point of view which is formed and guided solely by the interests of the Church as an organization.

Ecclesiasticus. A Book of the *Apocrypha, orig. 'the Wisdom (or 'Proverbs') of Jesus the son of Sirach', also known as 'Ben-Sira' or 'Sirach'. The name 'Ecclesiasticus' is already found in *Cyprian; it is referred by *Rufinus to the Book's pre-eminence among the *deuterocanonical writings as a 'Church Book' (liber ecclesiasticus) for the purposes of moral instruction; but this explanation is doubtful, since (1) the name is earlier than the distinction between the deuterocanonical ('Apocryphal') Books and the rest of the OT, and (2) other evidence is wanting that the Book occupied this position of pre-eminence in the patristic period, the Apocryphal Book most quoted by the Fathers being Wisd. Sol. The origin of the name therefore remains uncertain.

Ecclus. is generally reckoned among the so-called Wisdom writings. Ch. 24 contains an important passage in which the personified figure of Wisdom is identified with the Law of Moses (v. 23). The Book was written or compiled in Hebrew by Jesus (i.e. Joshua) the son of Sirach of Jerusalem (prologue, cf. 50: 27). The translator's prologue (or preface) states that the translation into Greek was made by the author's grandson in Egypt after 132 BC. (The first prologue printed in the AV is spurious.) The historical catalogue of famous men (44–50) ends with Simon the son of Onias the High Priest, who appears to be the High Priest of this name who held office *c.*225–200 BC (not his earlier namesake, *c.*300–270 BC). The author also apparently knew nothing of the conflict between faithful Jews and Hellenists which dominates the literature of the *Maccabaean period (*c.*170 BC onwards). Internal evidence thus confirms a date about two generations before 132 BC for the original writing. It was presumably composed wholly or mainly in Palestine, though the author was aware of the larger Hellenistic world (cf. 10: 8) and his ideal scribe is represented as travelling abroad and appearing before rulers (39: 4).

In modern times the Book was known until comparatively recently only in its Greek translation, translations derived from the Greek, and a Syriac translation based on the Hebrew original. A Hebrew text, however, was known to *Jerome and is quoted in the *Talmud. Since 1896 extensive fragments of the Hebrew have been identified among the MSS discovered in the *geniza of an ancient synagogue in Cairo; further, much smaller fragments have been found in the area of the *Dead Sea.

Hebrew text ed., with Fr. tr. and comm., by I. Levi (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Sciences, Sciences religieuses, 10; 2 vols., 1898–1901); also ed., with Ger. tr., by R. Smend (Berlin, 1906). Separate Eng. tr. of rev. text by W. O. E. Oesterley (Translations of Early Documents, 1st ser., Palestinian Jewish Texts (Pre-Rabbinic), 2; 1916). A. A. Di Lella, OFM, The Hebrew Text of Sirach: A Text-Critical and Historical Study (Studies in Classical Literature, 1; 1966), with extensive bibl. to 1964. Comm. by R. Smend (Berlin, 1906), G. H. Box and W. O. E. Oesterley in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 268–517, J. G. Snaith (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1974), and P. W. Skehan and A. A. Di Lella, OFM (Anchor Bible, 1987). J. Haspecker, SJ, Gottesfurcht bei Jesus Sirach: Ihre religiöse Struktur und ihre literarische und doktrinäre Bedeutung (Analecta Biblica, 30; 1967). J. T. Sanders, Ben Sira and Demotic Wisdom (Society of Biblical Literature, Monograph Series, 28; Chico, Calif. [1983]). R. Smend, Griechisch-syrisch-hebräischer Index zur Weisheit des Jesus Sirach (1907); D. Barthélemy and O. Rickenbacher (eds.), Konkordanz zum Hebräischer Sirach (Göttingen, 1973). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 198–212. A. A. Di Lella in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 931–45, s.v. 'Wisdom of Ben-Sira'.

ecclesiology (Gk. ἐκκλησία, a 'church'). The science of the building and decoration of churches. The word was first used in the 19th cent., when interest in ecclesiastical buildings was much increased by such groups as the *Cambridge Camden Society. This Society published The Ecclesiologist, until it was later taken over by the Ecclesiological Society, 29 vols. in all (1841–68). Nowadays the term more commonly refers to the theology of the Church (q.v.).

Echternach. The monastery of Echternach in Luxembourg was founded in 698 by St *Willibrord. A Roman villa on the site had been occupied as a royal or aristocratic residence in the 5th and 6th cents.; half of this, together with other lands, was given to Willibrord in 697/8, the other half in 706. The abbey remained in the Carolingian sphere of influence for the next two centuries; it was taken under royal protection by *Pepin III and in 751 granted immunity from secular interference of any kind. A community of canons at Echternach is recorded in 848–50, and it was not until 973 that the Rule of St *Benedict was adopted. In the early 8th cent. the scriptorium produced a large number of fine MSS, most of them in insular script. There was another spate of book production in the 11th cent., and the monastery became the court atelier of the Salian Emperors of Germany through the connection of Abbot Humbert (1028–51) and the Emp. Henry III and his mother. The fortunes of the abbey declined in the later Middle Ages. It was dissolved in 1797. Remains of the later Merovingian church and the three-aisled Carolingian church of *c.*800 are still visible. A dancing procession to the tomb of St Willibrord takes place on the Tuesday after *Whitsunday.

[H.] C. Wampach, Geschichte der Grundherrschaft Echternach im Frühmittelalter (Publications de la section historique de l'institut royal grand-ducal de Luxembourg, 63; 2 vols., 1929–30), and other works of this author; N. Gauthier, L'évangélisation des pays de la Moselle (1980), pp. 316–28; M. Werner, Adelsfamilien im Umkreis der frühen Karolinger (Sigmaringen, 1982), pp. 60–98; J. Krier and R. Wagner, 'Zur Frühgeschichte des Willibrordus-Kloster in Echternach', Hémecht, 37 (1985), pp. 15–51; H. Hoffmann, Buchkunst und Königtum im ottonischen und frühsalischen Reich, 1 (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae Historica, 30/1; 1986), pp. 509–16; R. McKitterick, 'The Diffusion of Insular Culture in Neustria between 650 and 850: The Implications of the Manuscript Evidence', in H. Atsma (ed.), La Neustrie: Les pays au nord de la Loire de 650 à 850, 2 (Beiheft der Francia, 16/2; Sigmaringen, 1988), pp. 395–431, esp. pp. 421–9; G. Kiesel and J. Schoeder (eds.), Willibrord, Apostel der Niederlande, Gründer der Abtei Echternach (Saint-Paul, Luxembourg, 1989), esp. pp. 127–70 and 271–307. [H.] C. Wampach in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1365–75, s.v.

Eck, Johann (1486–1543), Johann Maier 'of Eck' (his birthplace, Egg an der Günz), hence Eckius, German theologian. From 1510 till his death he was professor of theology at Ingolstadt. He came under humanist influences, and his early writings, which included commentaries on *Aristotle and Petrus Hispanus (Pope *John XXI), were almost anti-Scholastic in their theology. In 1514 he attacked the medieval prohibition of interest, defending a return on capital up to 5 per cent, and won support for his thesis at *Bologna and Vienna. Until the controversy over *indulgences broke out, he was on good terms with M. *Luther; but in the public debate at Leipzig in 1519 he opposed *Carlstadt and Luther, and was largely responsible for procuring the latter's excommunication by the bull '*Exsurge Domine' at Rome in 1520. About this time he wrote an extended defence of the Papal position in De primatu Petri adv. Ludderum libri III (Paris, 1521), besides shorter works against Luther; and for the rest of his life he took a prominent part in organizing Catholic opposition to German Protestantism. In 1530 he was the champion of the Catholic attack on the *Augsburg Confession. In 1537 he published a German-dialect version of the Bible for Catholic use. He was one of the Catholic participants in the Conference of *Ratisbon (1541).

J. Metzler, SJ (ed.), Tres Orationes Funebres in Exequiis Ioannis Eckii habitae (Corpus Catholicorum, 16; 1930), with full introd., list of his works and modern edns. to date. His Enchiridion locorum communium adversus Lutherum et alios hostes ecclesiae (1525–1543), ed. P. Fraenkel (ibid. 34; 1979); De Sacrificio missae (1526), ed. E. Iserloh, V. Pfnür, and P. Fabisch (ibid. 36; 1982); other texts in P. Fabisch and E. Iserloh (ed.), Dokumente zur Causa Lutheri (1517–1521), 1 (ibid. 41; 1988), pp. 376–447. J. Greving, Johann Eck als junger Gelehrter: Eine literar- und dogmengeschichtliche Untersuchung über seinen Chrysopassus Praedestinationis aus dem Jahre 1514 (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 1; 1906); id., Johann Ecks Pfarrbuch für U. L. Frau in Ingolstadt (ibid. 4 and 5; 1908), with text; A. Brandt, Johann Ecks Predigttätigkeit an U. L. Frau zu Ingolstadt, 1525–42 (ibid. 27 and 28; 1914), with text; H. Schauerte, Die Busslehre des Johannes Eck (ibid. 38 and 39; 1919); E. Iserloh, Die Eucharistie in der Stellung des Johannes Eck (ibid. 73 and 74; 1950); id., Johannes Eck (1486–1543): Scholastiker, Humanist, Kontroverstheologe (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 41; 1981); K. Rischar, Johann Eck auf dem Reichstag zu Augsburg 1530 (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 97; 1968); W. Klaiber, Ecclesia militans: Studien zu den Festtagspredigten des Johannes Eck (ibid. 120; 1982). M. Ziegelbauer, Johannes Eck: Mann der Kirche im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung (St Ottilien [1987]); E. Iserloh (ed.), Johannes Eck (1486–1543) im Streit der Jahrhunderte: Internationales ... aus Anlass des 500. Geburtstages des Johannes Eck vom 13. bis 16. November 1986 in Ingoldstadt und Eichstätt (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 127; 1988). J. P. Kirsch in CE 5 (1909), pp. 271–3, s.v.; F. Zoepfl in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 86–93, s.v.

Eckhart, Meister (*c.*1260–*c.*1328), German theologian and preacher. Born at Hochheim in Thuringia, he entered the *Dominican convent of Erfurt as a youth and was sent to study in *Paris. He prob. also studied under St *Albertus Magnus at *Cologne. He returned to Paris as a lecturer (1293–4) and as a Master in Theology (1302–3 and 1311–13). In between he was prior of Erfurt and vicar of Thuringia (1294–*c.*1300) and provincial of the new Dominican province of Saxony (1303–11). After his last period in Paris he lived in Strasbourg until 1323, and then in Cologne.

As a scholastic theologian, Eckhart conceived an ambitious and original speculative and exegetical project, the Opus Tripartitum, only parts of which survive. He became famous as a vernacular preacher, esp. to nuns, and prob. also to *beguines. His brilliant, creative use of German makes him an author at once attractive and difficult. His readiness to exploit verbal ambiguities and dramatic paradoxes left him open to widely differing interpretations. When he was accused of heretical teaching in 1326 and tried before the court of the Abp. of Cologne, he appealed to the Pope but died during the proceedings. In 1329 *John XXII condemned 28 propositions as heretical or misleading, but declared that Eckhart had recanted before his death, in terms which prob. reflect Eckhart's insistence that he never had any heretical intentions. Up to modern times he has been claimed by numerous ideologies (incl. the Nazis in the 20th century), but recent scholarship, building on the work of H. S. *Denifle, has attempted a more scientific interpretation, based equally on his Latin and German writings.

Eckhart teaches that we should 'break through' the complexity of all the particulars which confront us, to reach the simple 'ground' of all reality, where God and the soul are inseparably one, by abstracting from all that is 'this' or 'that', both metaphysically and ascetically. 'Abstractedness' (Abgescheidenheit) is, for Eckhart, the highest virtue, subsuming both humility and charity, because it produces the most intimate union with God, from which the Christian life flows as spontaneously as God's own life. The Word is thus born in the soul; indeed, the soul gives birth to the Word. This doctrine skirts round the conventional dichotomy between the active and contemplative lives. In spite of the condemnation, Eckhart's writings continued to be copied and studied in and beyond the Dominican Order. Among those influenced by him were *Henry Suso, J. *Tauler, and *Nicholas of Cusa.

Crit. edn. for the 'Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft' of his Ger. works by J. Quint and others and of his Lat. works, with Ger. tr., by K. Weiss, J. Koch, E. Benz, and others (Stuttgart, 1936 ff., nearing completion). Lat. works also ed., with Fr. tr., by F. Brunner, A. de Libera, and others (Paris, 1984 ff.). The edn. of his Ger. works by F. Pfeiffer (Leipzig, 1857, repr. 1924 and 1962) contains much spurious and doubtful material. Eng. trs. of his Ger. works by M. O'C. Walshe (vols. 1–2, London, 1979–81; vol. 3, Shaftesbury, 1987); of a selection of his Lat. and Ger. works by E. Colledge, OSA, and B. McGinn (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1981); and of Parisian Questions and Prologues by A. A. Maurer, CSB (Toronto, 1974).

H. Denifle, OP, 'Meister Eckeharts lateinische Schriften, und die Grundanschauung seiner Lehre', Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, 2 (1886), pp. 417–652. G. Théry, OP, 'Édition critique des pièces relatives au procès d'Eckhart contenues dans le manuscrit 33ᵇ de la Bibliothèque de Soest', AHDLMA 1 (1926), pp. 129–268. J. Quint, Die Überlieferung der Deutschen Predigten Meister Eckeharts (Bonn, 1932). J. Ancelet-Hustache, Maître Eckhart et la Mystique Rhénane (1956; Eng. tr., 1957). J. Koch, 'Kritische Studien zum Leben Meister Eckharts', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 29 (1959), pp. 5–51; 30 (1960), pp. 5–52; repr. in his Kleine Schriften, 1 (Rome, 1973), pp. 247–347; also other arts. in this vol. U. M. Nix, OP, and R. Öchslin, OP (eds.), Meister Eckhart der Prediger: Festschrift zum Eckhart-Gedenkjahr (Freiburg, etc., 1960). V. *Lossky, Théologie négative et connaissance de Dieu chez Maître Eckhart (Études de philosophie médiévale, 48; 1960). I. Degenhardt, Studien zum Wandel des Eckhartbildes (Studien zur Problemgeschichte der antiken und mittelalterlichen Philosophie, 3; Leiden, 1967). R. Schürmann, Maître Eckhart ou la joie errante: Sermons allemands traduits et commentés ([1972]; expanded Eng. version, Bloomington, Ind., and London, 1978). C. F. Kelly, Meister Eckhart on Divine Knowledge (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1977). A. M. Haas, Meister Eckhart als normative Gestalt geistlichen Lebens (Einsiedeln, 1979); id., Sermo Mysticus: Studien zur Theologie und Sprache der deutschen Mystik (Dokimion, 4; 1979), esp. pp. 186–254. É. Zum Brunn and A. de Libera, Maître Eckhart: Métaphysique du Verbe et Théologie Négative (Bibliothèque des Archives de Philosophie, NS 42; 1984). É. Zum Brunn and others, Maître Eckhart à Paris: Une critique médiévale de l'ontothéologie. Les Questions parisiennes nº 1 et nº 2 d'Eckhart (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, section des sciences religieuses, 86; 1984), incl. text and Fr. tr. K. Ruh, Meister Eckhart, Theologe, Prediger, Mystiker (Munich, 1985). F. [J.] Tobin, Meister Eckhart: Thought and Language (Philadelphia, 1986). W. Trusen, Der Prozess gegen Meister Eckhart (Rechts- und Staatswissenschaftliche Veröffentlichungen der Görres-Gesellschaft, NF 54; 1988). O. Davies, Meister Eckhart: Mystical Theologian (1991). H. Stirnimann and R. Imbach (eds.), Eckardus Theutonicus, homo doctus et sanctus: Nachweise und Berichte zum Prozess gegen Meister Eckhart (Freiburg, 1992). B. McGinn, 'Meister Eckhart', in P. Szarmach (ed.), An Introduction to the Medieval Mystics of Europe (Albany, NY, 1984), pp. 237–57. N. Largier, Bibliographie zu Meister Eckhart (Neue Schriftenreihe zur Freiburger Zeitschrift für Philosophie und Theologie, 9; 1989). Kaeppeli, 1 (1970), pp. 354–8. R.-L. Oechslin, OP, in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 93–116, s.v.; F. Vandenbroucke, OSB, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1385–403, s.v. 'Eckhart (1)'; id., in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 38–40, s.v., all with bibl.

eclecticism. Any system of theology or philosophy which, rather than adhere to one school or tradition, selects such elements as seem the best in several systems, and combines them.

ecphonesis (Gk. ἐκφώνησις). Esp. in the E. Church, the concluding words, uttered in an audible voice, of a prayer the rest of which has been recited quietly (μυστικῶς).

ecstasy. The Greek word ἔκστασις, with its cognate forms, is used to refer to any state of powerful emotion, such that one is 'beside oneself'. Although often employed pejoratively, the idea of being 'taken out of oneself', suggested by the word's etymology, could be applied in a good sense to someone being raised above himself to consort with the divine (*Plato, Phdr. 249c), and it was often used of poetic inspiration, regarded as transcending the ordinary powers of the mind. In this sense it is applied to prophetic inspiration by *Philo (Quis heres 249) and by the *Apologists (*Justin, Dial. 115. 3; *Athenagoras, Leg. 9. 1). However, the orthodox reaction to the ecstatic prophesying of the *Montanists made 'ecstasy' a bad word (*Clement of Alexandria, Strom. 1. 85. 3; *Origen, Cels. 7. 3), and later theology took it as axiomatic that, whereas diabolical possession does disrupt the ordinary workings of the mind, divine inspiration enhances them without suspending them (*Thomas Aquinas, Super Matt. 849). *Plotinus used 'ecstasy' in a positive sense to refer to a union with God in which the individual, having passed beyond his own mental powers, is no longer quite 'himself' (Enn. 6. 9. 11). Subsequent Platonism distinguished between good and bad senses of the word (*Iamblichus, Myst. 3. 25), and this is followed by *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite (Ep. 9. 5), who connects 'ecstasy' in a good sense both with love, which takes us out of ourselves towards the objects of our love (DN 4. 13), and with faith (DN 7. 4), by which we surrender ourselves to the inspiration of God and become one with Him (DN 2. 9, 3. 2). With the growth in the later Middle Ages of an interest in paranormal phenomena associated with intense absorption in spiritual things, ecstasy came to be associated with 'rapture', and both tended to become more technical terms, referring to a state of more or less complete abstraction from the senses. Under the influence of St *Teresa of Ávila and St *John of the Cross, ecstasy and rapture were given a specific place in the scheme of spiritual progress, the two words often being effectively identified, though more precise theologians continue to distinguish between them, the latter term being used only when someone is carried out of himself quite helplessly by some influx of special grace. It is generally believed that the heart and mind of the recipient of this grace are supernaturally enflamed with love and enlightened with knowledge.

M. de Goedt, J. Kirchmeyer, SJ, and others in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 2072–171, s.v. 'Extase (B), mystique chrétienne', with extensive bibl. refs.

ectene (Gk. ἐκτένεια, 'earnest prayer'; cf. Acts 12: 5, προσευχὴ δὲ ἦν ἐκτενῶς γινομένη, 'prayer was made without ceasing'). In the E. Church, a prayer constructed like a *litany for use in the Liturgy and other services. It consists of short petitions said by the *deacon to which choir or congregation respond with *Kyrie Eleison.

Ecthesis (Gk. ἔκθεσις, 'a statement of faith'). The formula issued in 638 by the Emp. *Heraclius forbidding the mention of 'energies' (ἐνέργειαι), whether one or two, in the Person of Christ and asserting that the two Natures were united in a single Will (*Monothelitism, q.v.). It had been drafted earlier in the year by *Sergius, Patr. of *Constantinople, after consultation with Pope *Honorius (q.v.). It was accepted by Councils held at Constantinople in 638 and 639, but soon disowned by Heraclius as well as by Honorius' two successors in the Roman see (Severinus, 638–40; John IV, 640–2).

The text is preserved among the acts of the Lateran Council of 649, sess. 3; pr., with Lat. tr., in Hardouin, 3, cols. 791–6, and Mansi, 10 (1764), cols. 991–8. The condemnation in can. 18 of this council is repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 237 f. (nos. 518 f). Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 387–99, with full refs. F.-X. Murphy, CSSR, and P. Sherwood, OSB, Constantinople II et Constantinople III (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 3 [1974]), pp. 163–73. See also bibl. to HERACLIUS and MONOTHELITISM.

Ecumenical Councils. See OECUMENICAL COUNCILS.

Ecumenical Movement (formerly more usually Oecumenical, from Gk. οἰκουμένη, 'the whole inhabited world'). The movement in the Church towards the recovery of the unity of all believers in Christ, transcending differences of creed, ritual, and polity. This aspiration can be traced in various forms from NT times, but has never been so potent as in the 20th cent. The modern ecumenical movement may be dated from the *Edinburgh Missionary Conference of 1910, though this itself owed much to earlier movements which prepared the way. They included the *Evangelical revivals of the 18th and 19th cents., which crossed national and denominational frontiers, the great missionary expansion of the 19th cent., with its emphasis on interdenominational co-operation, the work of the Bible Societies which drew on the resources of many different Churches, and the *Student Christian Movement, which was interdenominational in membership and world-wide in scope. The Edinburgh Conference of 1910 led immediately to the establishment of the International Missionary Council, and thence to the creation in 1925 of the Universal Christian Conference on *Life and Work, which was concerned with the application of Christianity to social, economic, and political life. It was followed in 1927 by the first World Conference on *Faith and Order at *Lausanne, which addressed itself to the theological basis of the Church and its unity. The next decades were marked by the establishment of many national Councils of Churches (e.g. the Canadian Council of Churches, formed in 1944) and by the continued development of the Life and Work and Faith and Order movements. After a lengthy period of preparation these joined in 1948 to form the *World Council of Churches.

The initiative between 1910 and 1927 came mainly from within W. Protestantism, though it was reinforced in 1920 by an Encyclical Letter from the *Oecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople appealing to 'all the Churches of Christ' for 'closer intercourse and mutual co-operation'. This was paralleled by the Appeal for Reunion issued by the 1920 *Lambeth Conference. Both E. *Orthodox (incl. the Church of Greece) and *Oriental Orthodox (incl. the Malankara *Syrian Orthodox Church in India) have been in the World Council of Churches from its beginning. The Russian Orthodox Church, overcoming earlier reservations, joined in 1961, by which time nearly all the Orthodox Churches had become members. During the 1950s there was increasing contact between certain RCs and leaders of the World Council of Churches, as well as unofficial co-operation in some areas, esp. in prayer for Christian unity. This changed atmosphere was reflected in the visit of G. F. *Fisher, Abp. of Canterbury, to Pope *John XXIII in 1960. In 1961 for the first time official observers were permitted by the Vatican to attend the World Council of Churches' Third Assembly in New Delhi. The Pope's decision to invite observers from non-RC Churches to the Second *Vatican Council the following year was of great significance; this was heightened in 1964 by the Council's Decree on Ecumenism, which described members of other communions as 'separated brethren' rather than outside the Church. Within this new climate the historic severance between the E. Church and W. Catholicism began to be bridged and in 1965 Pope *Paul VI and the Oecumenical Patriarch *Athenagoras nullified the anathemas which had been in force since 1054 (see GREAT SCHISM).

Signs of the continuing vitality of the ecumenical movement include the numerous organic unions achieved (esp. in the 1960s and 1970s) among Protestant Churches in many parts of the world, with more being negotiated (see REUNION). Of particular significance were those (as in *South and *North India and in *Pakistan) which incorporated episcopally and non-episcopally ordered Churches. The multilateral discussions on issues dividing the Churches carried on by the Faith and Order Commission of the World Council of Churches are now paralleled by the many bilateral dialogues between World Christian Communions (the world-wide organizations representing each of the major denominations), e.g. between the *Anglican Communion and the *World Alliance of Reformed Churches. Also striking is the continued development of Councils of Churches at regional (as in the All Africa Conference of Churches, formed in 1958), national, and local levels, now normally including the Orthodox, with RCs belonging to some 35 national and one regional Council.

Among the trends that have marked the ecumenical movement since the late 1960s has been the dramatically increased participation of non-Western Churches and women. Official ecumenical activity has become professionalized, with many Churches having staff specializing in the field. At the same time there has been a widespread development of 'unofficial' ecumenism as Christians have gathered, across denominational lines (and often in advance of the official positions of the Churches to which they belong), for common worship or to make a common witness on social issues. Major questions now include how to involve more Evangelical, Charismatic, and *Pentecostal Churches which (except in Latin America) have so far taken little part in the ecumenical movement, and whether Councils of Churches are purely the servants of their member Churches, or also have a prophetic role in challenging them to take further steps towards visible unity and to increase their co-operation in Christian witness and service.

See also REUNION and WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity 1920–4 (1924); id., 2nd ser. [1920–30] (1930); id., 3rd ser. 1930–48 (1948); id., 4th ser. 1948–57 (1958). L. Vischer (ed.), A Documentary History of the Faith and Order Movement 1927–1963 (St Louis [1963]); G. Gassmann (ed.), Documentary History of Faith and Order 1963–1993 (Faith and Order Paper, 159; Geneva [1993]). H. Meyer and L. Vischer (eds.), Growth in Agreement: Reports and Agreed Statements of Ecumenical Conversations on a World Level (Faith and Order Paper, 108; New York and Geneva [1984]). C. G. Patelos (ed.), The Orthodox Church in the Ecumenical Movement: Documents and Statements 1902–1975 (Geneva [1978]); P. McPartlan (ed.), One in 2000? Towards Catholic-Orthodox Unity. Agreed Statements and Parish Papers (Slough, 1993).

Studies incl. K. [D.] Mackenzie (ed.), Union of Christendom (1938); R. Rouse and S. C. Neill (eds.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement, 1517–1948 (1954; 2nd edn., with rev. bibl., 1967; vol. 2: The Ecumenical Advance, 1948–1968, ed. H. E. Fey, 1970; both vols. repr., Geneva [1986], with bibl. covering the period 1968–85 in vol. 2, pp. 509–53); N. Goodall, The Ecumenical Movement: What it is and what it does (1961; 2nd edn., 1964); id., Ecumenical Progress: A Decade of Change in the Ecumenical Movement 1961–71 (1972); S. [C.] Neill, The Church and Christian Union (Bampton Lectures for 1964; 1968); W. A. Visser 't Hooft, Memoires: een leven in de oecumene (Amsterdam, 1971; Eng. tr., 1973); B. Till, The Churches Search for Unity (Harmondsworth, 1972); R. Beaupère, L'Oecuménisme (1991). N. Lossky and others (eds.), Dictionary of the Ecumenical Movement (1991). There are also a number of periodicals concerned with the ecumenical movement incl. Irénikon (Amay s.Meuse and then *Chevetogne, 1926 ff.), Eastern Churches Quarterly (16 vols., 1936–64), cont. as One in Christ (various places, 1965 ff.), Una Sancta (Meitingen, 1946 ff.), The Ecumenical Review (Geneva, 1948 ff.), Oekumenische Rundschau (Frankfurt, 1952 ff.), Istina (Paris, 1954 ff.), Mid-Stream (Indianapolis, 1962 ff.).

Ecumenical Society of the Blessed Virgin Mary. An interdenominational society founded in London in 1966 'to advance the study at various levels of the place of the BVM in the Church under Christ and to promote ecumenical devotion'. Its inauguration was inspired by the vision of Martin Gillett (d. 1980) that the BVM, usually regarded as a source of division between the Churches, should become an agent of ecumenism; Gillett himself had been ordained as a deacon in the C of E and later received into the RC Church. Members of the society include clergy and laity of the RC, Anglican, Orthodox, and Free Churches; it has branches in England, Ireland, and the USA, and holds meetings both regional and international.

A. Stacpoole, OSB (ed.), Mary's Place in Christian Dialogue. Occasional Papers of the Ecumenical Society of the Blessed Virgin Mary, 1970–1980 (Slough, 1982). Papers of conferences held at Chichester in 1986 and Liverpool in 1989 ed. id., Mary and the Churches (Dublin, 1987) and Mary in Doctrine and Devotion (ibid., 1990).

Eden, Garden of. The original home of *Adam and *Eve (Gen. 2: 8–3: 24), translated in the LXX by a word meaning '*Paradise'. From it issued the four rivers Pishon, Gihon, Hiddekel, and Euphrates (ibid.). The name is prob. connected with the Babylonian edinu, 'a plain' (such as would be made very fertile by irrigation), but would suggest in Heb. 'delight'. The writer of the Gen. narrative may have had in mind the well-watered country of Mesopotamia (cf. 2: 14), but the geographical ideas implied are very primitive or even mythological. Elsewhere, in Is. 51: 3, Ezek. 28: 13 and 31: 9, and Joel 2: 3, Eden is mentioned as a place of extreme fertility and magnificent trees. Older biblical scholars frequently made attempts to identify the site, e.g. Friedrich *Delitzsch put it some 100 miles N. of Baghdad.

F. Delitzsch, Wo lag das Paradies? (1881). A. Schulz, 'Eden', ZATW 51 (1933), pp. 222–6. A. Brock-Utne, Der Gottesgarten: Eine vergleichende religionsgeschichtliche Studie (Avhandlinger utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akademie i Oslo, II. Hist.-Filos.

Klasse, 1935, no. 2; 1936). J. W. Rosenberg, 'The Garden Story Forward and Backward: The Non-Narrative Dimension of Gen. 2–3', Prooftexts: A Journal of Jewish Literary History, 1 (Baltimore, 1981), pp. 1–27. E. Cothenet in Dict. Bibl. Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 1177–1220, s.v. 'Paradis'; H. N. Wallace in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 281–3, s.v. See also comm. cited s.vv. GENESIS (esp. that of C. Westermann), EZEKIEL, etc.

Edersheim, Alfred (1825–89), biblical scholar. An Austrian of Jewish parentage and upbringing, he was converted to Christianity at Pest by a Scottish *Presbyterian, John Duncan, and accompanied him to Edinburgh. After studying theology at Edinburgh and Berlin, he entered the Presbyterian ministry in 1846, but later joined the C of E (1875), and from 1876 to 1882 was Vicar of Loders in Dorset. He made an intensive study of the doctrines, practices, and conditions of *Judaism in the centuries preceding and following the beginning of the Christian era. Of his writings the most widely read was his Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah (2 vols., 1883), a work of great erudition written in an easy style, but somewhat lacking in critical judgement.

Tohu-Va-Vohu ['Without Form and Void']: A Collection of Fragmentary Thoughts and Criticisms, ed. with a memoir by E. Edersheim [daughter] (1890; memoir, pp. vii–xxxii). S. R. *Driver in DNB, Suppl. 2 (1901), pp. 175 f.

Edessa. The site has probably been inhabited from remote times, but the present city (now Urfa) was founded by Seleucus I in 304 BC. After the fall of Seleucid power it was the centre of an independent kingdom from *c.*132 BC until AD 214, and then a Roman colony. It was from a very early date the centre of Syriac-speaking Christianity. The church there, destroyed in 201 after a flood, may be the oldest known Christian edifice. Edessa is prob. the home both of the *Old Syriac and *Peshitta versions of the NT, and possibly also of the *Diatessaron. Its fame was enhanced by its claim to possess from AD 394 onwards the relics of the Apostle St *Thomas. It was the home of the 'Persian School' until that was closed in 489 on account of its alleged *Nestorian tendencies, and has always been an important centre of opposition to the Christological teaching of the Council of *Chalcedon (it remained the residence of a *Syrian Orthodox metropolitan until the beginning of the 20th century). In 641 it fell into the hands of the Arabs, but continued to be an important Christian centre for several centuries. It fell to the Byzantines in 944, and later became the capital of a small crusader principality, until its capture by Zengi in 1144. See also ABGAR, LEGEND OF, and CHRONICON EDESSENUM.

W. *Cureton (ed.), Ancient Syriac Documents relative to the Earliest Establishment of Christianity in Edessa and the Neighbouring Countries, from the Year After Our Lord's Ascension to the Beginning of the Fourth Century (1864). L. J. Tixeront, Les Origines de l'église d'Édesse et la légende d'Abgar: Étude critique suivie de deux textes orientaux inédits (1888). J. B. Segal, Edessa: 'The Blessed City' (Oxford, 1970), with bibl. Id., 'When did Christianity come to Edessa?', in B. C. Bloomfield (ed.), Middle East Studies and Libraries: A Felicitation Volume for . . . J. D. Pearson (1980), pp. 179–91. R. Duval, 'Histoire politique, religieuse et littéraire d'Édessa jusqu'à la première croisade', Journal asiatique, 8th ser. 18 (1891), pp. 87–133, 201–78, 381–439; 19 (1892), pp. 5–102. F. C. *Burkitt, Early Eastern Christianity (1904), pp. 1–38. A. *Baumstark, 'Vorjustinianische kirchliche Bauten in Edessa', Oriens Christianus, 4 (1904), pp. 164–83; K. E. McVey, 'The Domed Church as Microcosm', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 37 (1983), pp. 91–121 [on the 6th-cent. church at Edessa]. H. J. W. Drijvers in Aufstieg und Niedergang der Römischen Welt, II. Principat, 8 (1977), pp. 863–96, with bibl., pp. 902–4. W. Bauer, Rechtgläubigkeit und Ketzerei im ältesten Christentum (1934), pp. 6–48; Eng. tr. (1972), pp. 1–43. H. J. W. Drijvers in TRE 9 (1982), pp. 277–88, s.v., with bibl.; K. E. McVey in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 284–7, s.v.

Edgar (*c.*943–75), King of England from 959. The younger son of King Edmund, he became King of Mercia (and Northumbria) in 957, and, on the death of his brother Eadwig, King of all England in 959. He lent his support to the work of monastic reform, appointing St *Dunstan Abp. of *Canterbury in 959, St *Ethelwold Bp. of *Winchester in 963, and St *Oswald Bp. of *Worcester in 961 and Abp. of *York in 971. In 964 he was instrumental in driving the secular clergy from the Old and New Minsters at Winchester, and from other houses; and it was on his initiative that a synodal council was convened at Winchester *c.970, resulting in the promulgation of the Regularis Concordia. In 973 his establishment of firm rule throughout England, and his wider authority in Britain, was marked by his (second) coronation, at Bath; but after his death in 975, the succession was disputed between his sons St *Edward the Martyr and Ethelred the Unready, and resentment of his policies found expression in widespread disturbances. Edgar's reign was remembered by Churchmen as a period of great order and prosperity, and he came to be known as Edgar the Peaceful.

The chief authorities are the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle and Lives of Sts Dunstan, Ethelwold, and Oswald; see also the tract on King Edgar's establishment of monasteries, attributed to Ethelwold, conveniently pr. in Councils & Synods . . . 1, A.D. 871–1204, ed. D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke, 1 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 142–54 (no. 33); Eng. tr. also in D. Whitelock (ed.), English Historical Documents c.500–1042 (2nd edn., 1979), pp. 920–3 (no. 238); and the King's charters, listed in P. H. Sawyer, Anglo-Saxon Charters (Royal Historical Society Guides and Handbooks, 8; 1968), pp. 223–60 (nos. 667–827). F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (Oxford History of England; 3rd edn., 1971), pp. 367–72; E. John, Orbis Britanniae and other Studies (Leicester, 1966), passim.

Edict of Milan. See MILAN, EDICT OF.

Edict of Nantes. See NANTES, EDICT OF.

Edinburgh Conference (1910), World Missionary Conference. Convened as a consultative gathering to study missionary endeavour in the light of the circumstances of the day, the Conference was significant esp. for its presentation of the ideal of world-evangelization and as a forerunner of the *Ecumenical Movement. Through the creation of the International Missionary Council, it also led to much greater co-operation among Missionary Societies. Some 1,200 delegates, representative of many Christian bodies and some 160 Missionary Boards or Societies, took part. J. R. *Mott was chairman of the Committee and J. H. *Oldham general secretary of the Conference.

World Missionary Conference, 1910 (Report, 9 vols. [1910]). W. H. T. *Gairdner, Edinburgh 1910: An Account and Interpretation of the World Missionary Conference (1910).

Edinburgh Conference (1937). The second World Conference on *Faith and Order, which continued the work of *Lausanne (q.v.). Its subjects were Grace, the Word of God, the Communion of Saints, the Ministry and Sacraments, and the Church's Unity in Life and Worship. The Report issued by the Conference stated the agreements as well as the differences. Grace, equated with the manifestation of God's love in the creation and redemption of man, is given in the Church through the Word and the Sacraments. Scripture is the principal rule of Christian doctrine and worship, but there was dissension as to the authority of the Church to interpret it, on the place assigned to Tradition, and on the nature, visibility, and membership of the Church. The Communion of Saints was interpreted in various ways as synonymous with the Holy Catholic Church, as the way of life of Christians in the state of grace, or, esp. by the Orthodox, as including also the angels and the Saints in heaven. There was considerable division on the number and efficacy of the Sacraments and on the ministry, the Presbyterians and other Protestants rejecting episcopacy as taught in the Orthodox Church and in the C of E. The union visualized by the Conference was largely one of co-operative action, confederation, and intercommunion, founded on essential unity in faith. The principal obstacle in the way of its achievement was the opposition between two main types of the conception of the Church as 'authoritarian' and 'personal' respectively. The Conference approved the proposal of a '*World Council of Churches' (q.v.). See also ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT.

The Second World Conference on Faith and Order, held at Edinburgh, August 3–18, 1937, ed. L. Hodgson (1938).

Edmund, St, of Abingdon (also wrongly Edmund Rich) (c.1180–1240), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Abingdon, Oxon, of pious parents, Edmund early obtained a reputation for austerity and sanctity. Before 1222 he became Treasurer of *Salisbury Cathedral, and in 1233 he was elected Abp. of Canterbury. During his short tenure of the primacy he boldly, though ineffectually, attempted to check royal mismanagement and Papal exactions. When the legate, Cardinal Otto, whom Henry III had induced the Pope to appoint, arrived, Edmund protested against the infringement of his archiepiscopal rights; but he failed to stop the exploitation of ecclesiastical wealth and patronage, and retired to Pontigny in self-imposed exile. In his earlier years he had taught the new logic at Oxford, and his association with the University is commemorated in St Edmund Hall, the one surviving medieval Hall in Oxford. He wrote a devotional treatise Speculum Religiosorum; the vulgate Latin text, which is a translation from one of the Anglo-Norman versions and commonly known as the Speculum Ecclesie, had a wide circulation. He was canonized by *Innocent IV in 1247. Feast day, 16 Nov.

Speculum Religiosorum and Speculum Ecclesie ed. H. P. Forshaw, SHCJ (Auctores Britannici Medii Aevi, 3; London, 1973), with refs. to earlier edns. of the latter. The chief authorities are the Monastic Chroniclers, esp. *Matthew Paris, and several early biographies. Modern Lives by W. Wallace (London, 1893), B. Ward (ibid. 1903), and C. H. Lawrence (Oxford, 1960), incl. texts of early material. A. B. Emden, An Oxford Hall in Medieval Times (1927). C. H. Lawrence, 'Edmund of Abingdon', The Month, NS 29 (1963), pp. 213–29. BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 6 f., s.v. 'Abingdon, Edmund of'. T. A. Archer in DNB 16 (1888), pp. 405–10; C. H. Lawrence in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 293–5, s.v.

Edmund Campion, St. See CAMPION, ST EDMUND.

Edmund the Martyr, St (c.840–69), King of East Anglia. Born of Saxon stock, Edmund had become King of the East Angles by 865. His equitable rule was cut short in 869 by the invasion of the Danes under Inguar and Hubba. After the defeat of his army, he was captured; but though the invaders promised him his life if he would share his kingdom with Inguar, he refused as a Christian to associate himself thus with a pagan, and was condemned to be made the target of the Danes' archery practice, and finally beheaded. The cult of the martyr started almost immediately, and his body was translated in the 10th cent. to the present Bury St Edmunds, where the abbey rapidly became a great place of pilgrimage. Feast day, 20 Nov.

T. Arnold (ed.), Memorials of St Edmund's Abbey, 1 (RS, 1980), incl. 'Passio Sancti Edmundi' of *Abbo of Fleury (pp. 3–25), 'De Infantia Sancti Edmundi' of Gaufridus de Fontibus (pp. 93–103), and other material on the miracles attributed to Edmund. The Life by Abbo of Fleury is also ed. M. Winterbottom, Three Lives of English Saints (Toronto Medieval Latin Texts, 1972), pp. 67–87. Corolla Sancti Edmundi, ed. with a preface by Lord Francis Hervey (1907; with Eng. tr. of chief sources). Id. (ed.), The History of King Eadmund the Martyr and of the Early Years of his Abbey: Corpus Christi College, Oxford MS. 197 (Oxford, 1929). La Vie de Seint Edmund le Rei, an Anglo-Norman poem of the Twelfth Century by Denis Piramus also ed. by F. L. Ravenel (Philadelphia, 1906), and, with useful introd., by H. Kjellman (Göteborgs Kungl. Vetenskaps- och Vitterhets-Samhälles Handlingar, Femte Följden, Ser. A, 4. 3; 1935). G. Loomis, 'The Growth of the Saint Edmund Legend', Harvard Studies and Notes in Philology and Literature, 14 (1932), pp. 83–113. D. Whitelock, 'Fact and Fiction in the Legend of St. Edmund', Proceedings of the Suffolk Institute of Archaeology, 31 (for 1969; 1970), pp. 217–33; and other arts. in this issue commemorating St Edmund; R. M. Thomson, 'Two Versions of a Saint's Life from St. Edmund's Abbey', R. Bén. 84 (1974), pp. 383–408. S. J. Ridyard, The Royal Saints of Anglo-Saxon England (Cambridge, 1988), pp. 211–33 ('The Cult of St Edmund').

Edward, St (c.962–78), king and martyr. He was the eldest son of *Edgar the Peaceful, King of England, whom, contrary to the wishes of his stepmother, Queen Elfrida, but with the support of Abp. *Dunstan, he succeeded on his death in 975. Three years later he was murdered. Acc. to the details in *William of Malmesbury, this took place near Corfe in Dorset at the instigation of Elfrida, who had him stabbed while drinking by one of her attendants. His body was buried in the church of Wareham and a year later translated to Shaftesbury. In 1008 he was officially decreed a martyr and miracles were reported at his tomb. Feast day, 18 Mar.; of his translation, 20 June.

The chief authorities are William of Malmesbury, Florence of Worcester and the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, and the Vita S. Oswaldi. See also Memorials of St Dunstan (ed. W. *Stubbs, RS, 1874). D. J. V. Fisher, 'The Anti-Monastic Reaction in the Reign of Edward the Martyr', Cambridge Historical Journal, 10 (1950–52), pp. 254–70. C. E. Fell, Edward, King and Martyr (Leeds Texts and Monographs, 1971), incl. text of Passio or Life of Edmund, in its present form dating from late 11th or early 12th cent.

Edward the Confessor, St (*c.*1005–66), English king. The son of Ethelred II and Emma, the daughter of Duke Richard I of Normandy, he was sent to Normandy in 1013 and educated there in Norman ways. On the death of his half-brother, Hardicanute, in 1042, he was acclaimed King. He owed the throne largely to the support of the powerful Earl Godwin, whose daughter, Eadgyth (or Edith), he married later in 1045. His reign was outstandingly peaceful, seriously disturbed only by the abortive rebellion of Earl Godwin and his sons in 1051 against Edward's turning to other favourites, including Normans. Though banished at the time, Godwin returned by force in 1052, and the subsequent dominance of his family led to the succession of Harold Godwinson, Edward's brother-in-law, in 1066. Edward, always a martial figure and great hunter, in his later years re-endowed and rebuilt St Peter's Abbey at *Westminster (the church was re-consecrated on 28 Dec. 1065) as his mausoleum. His reputation for sanctity developed after the Norman Conquest. Some Westminster monks, led by Osbert of Clare, maintained that as King he had been mild and merciful, had loved and fostered the Church; although married, had remained a virgin; and that in life as in death had performed miracles. On the petition of King Henry II and the English Church he was canonized by *Alexander III in 1161 and his relics translated on 13 Oct. (his feast day) in both 1163 and 1269.

The earliest, anonymous, Life, attributed to a monk of St Bertin, was almost certainly written before *c.*1100; it is dated 1065–6 by F. Barlow (see below). The Life by Osbert of Clare was completed in 1138. H. R. Luard (ed.), Lives of Edward the Confessor (RS, 1858), incl. text of anon. Life (pp. 389–435); it is also ed., with Eng. tr., by F. Barlow (London, 1962, 2nd edn., 1992), incl. full refs. and notes, and appendix on the development of Edward's cult. M. Bloch, 'La Vie de S. Édouard le Confesseur par Osbert de Clare', Anal. Boll. 41 (1923), pp. 5–131, incl. text, pp. 64–131; F. Barlow, Edward the Confessor (1970; 2nd edn., 1979). L. E. Tanner, 'Some Representations of St. Edward the Confessor in Westminster Abbey and Elsewhere', Journal of the British Archaeological Association, 3rd ser. 15 (1952), pp. 1–12. See also works cited s.v. ANGLO-SAXON CHURCH.

Edward VI (1537–53), King of England. The son of *Henry VIII and Jane Seymour, he was a precocious and studious boy. He was provided by his father with consistently Protestant tutors, and succeeded to the throne in 1547, at a time which was critical for the C of E. Having delegated his royal authority to the Privy Council, dominated first by the Protector, *Somerset, and then by the Duke of Northumberland, he was himself of little account politically. His one important intervention in politics occurred in 1553: when he realized that tuberculosis threatened his life he joined with Northumberland in an attempt to alter the succession in favour of his cousin Lady Jane Grey in place of his half-sisters *Mary and *Elizabeth. His reign is outstanding ecclesiastically for numerous reforms and alterations often forced on the Church by an *Erastian government; they reflected the influence of Continental theologians, particularly of *Peter Martyr Vermigli and M. *Bucer, but also of the *Zwinglian tradition of Zurich. It was marked by the publication (1547) of a Book of *Homilies, drawn up by T. *Cranmer; by the *Injunctions (1547) condemning pictures and all lights except the two before the Blessed Sacrament, providing a copy of the *Great Bible and of the paraphrase of *Erasmus in every parish church, and enforcing the reading in English of the Epistle and Gospel at High Mass; by the Acts of Parliament (1547) imposing penalties on those who spoke irreverently of the Sacrament of the Altar, and enjoining that Communion be given in both kinds, abolishing the congé d'élire and repealing the *Lollard heresy laws and the Act of *Six Articles; by the Privy Council's Proclamations (1548) enumerating ceremonies no longer to be enforced, abolishing all images, and enforcing the use of the newly drawn up order in English for the giving of Communion in both kinds; by the recognition (1549) of clerical marriages; by the Act of *Uniformity passed in 1549, imposing by penal legislation the use of the First BCP; by the new *Ordinal (1550); by the destruction of altars (1550) and the substitution of wooden tables; by the attack on the doctrine of the *Real Presence; by the Second and more Protestant BCP (1552); the *Forty-Two Articles of Religion (1553), and the *Catechism and *Primer of 1553.

J. G. Nichols (ed.), Literary Remains of King Edward the Sixth (Roxburghe Club, 2 vols., 1857). R. H. Brodie (ed.), The Calendar of the Patent Rolls preserved in the Public Record Office: Edward VI, 1547–1553 (6 vols., 1924–9); other calendars of the papers of his reign issued by the Master of the Rolls in their respective series. W. K. Jordan (ed.), The Chronicle and Political Papers of King Edward VI (1966). P. F. Tytler, England under the Reigns of Edward VI and Mary (2 vols., 1839), vol. 1, and vol. 2, pp. 1–187. C. H. [E.] Smyth, Cranmer & the Reformation under Edward VI (Cambridge, 1926). H. W. Chapman, The Last Tudor King: A Study of Edward VI [October 12th, 1537–July 6th, 1553] (1958). W. K. Jordan, Edward VI: The Young King. The Protectorship of the Duke of Somerset (1968); id., Edward VI: The Threshold of Power. The Dominance of the Duke of Northumberland (1970). M. L. Bush, The Government Policy of Protector Somerset (1975). D. E. Hoak, The King's Council in the Reign of Edward VI (1976). G. Constant, La Réforme en Angleterre, 2. Introduction de la Réforme en Angleterre, Édouard VI (1547–1553) (1939; Eng. tr., 1942); A. G. Dickens, The English Reformation (1964), esp. chs. 9–10; 2nd edn. (1989), chs. 10–11. See also bibl. to REFORMATION.

Edwards, Jonathan (1703–58), American evangelical preacher and *Calvinist theologian. He was nurtured in the piety of New England *Puritanism and educated at the newly founded Yale College. After several years as a supply minister and tutor, he was ordained to the ministry of the *Congregational church at Northampton, Massachusetts, in 1727. There he maintained an intense programme of study and meditation reflected in his private writings at the same time that he was drawn into the public arena by his congregation's participation in a series of revivals beginning in 1734. His Faithful Narrative of the Surprising Works of God (1737) brought him into the limelight, both in the American colonies and abroad. During the *Great Awakening of the 1740s he emerged as the champion of evangelical religion; he preached the necessity of a 'new birth' and in his Treatise Concerning Religious Affections (1746) he defended the role of both the will and the intellect in the religious life, thereby averting charges of rationalism and enthusiasm. As a conservative Reformed theologian, he opposed *Arminianism with insights derived from the Bible, the theological tradition, and the *Enlightenment. He defended the evangelical revivals as the work of the Holy Spirit and sought to rekindle them when they dissipated in later years. In 1750 he was dismissed from his congregation because he insisted on strict standards for admission to Communion. Subsequently he served as a missionary to the Indians at Stockbridge, Massachusetts. There he wrote a philosophical treatise on the bondage of the will (Freedom of the Will, 1754), an exposition of the traditional notion of human depravity (Original Sin, posthumous) and a speculative essay on ethics (Nature of True Virtue, also posthumous). Freedom, as popularly understood, he rejected, maintaining that self-determination was 'unphilosophical, self-contradictory, and absurd', and that the essence of virtue and vice lay 'not in their cause but in their nature'. In theology he was an orthodox Calvinist and it was his desire to defend the extreme position of 'election' that inspired his metaphysical account of freedom. In 1757 he became president of the College of New Jersey (later Princeton), where he died of smallpox after only three months in office. Regarded as the foremost American theologian and philosopher of the colonial period, Edwards has exercised influence through his voluminous writings, through a school of disciples known as the 'New England Theologians', and through the expansion of the evangelical movement during the 19th and 20th cents.

See also GREAT AWAKENING.

Works, ed. E. Williams and E. Parsons (8 vols., Leeds, 1806–11; 2 suppl. vols., Edinburgh, 1847); by S. Austin (8 vols., Worcester, Mass., 1808–9; repr. Boston, 1843); by S. E. Dwight, incl. Memoir (10 vols., New York, 1829–30); and by P. [G. A.] Miller and J. E. Smith (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1957 ff.). Lives by A. V. G. Allen (Edinburgh, 1889), O. E. Winslow (New York, 1940) and P. [G. A.] Miller (ibid., 1949); on the period to 1750, P. J. Tracy, Jonathan Edwards, Pastor: Religion and Society in Eighteenth-Century Northampton (ibid., 1980). C. C. Cherry, The Theology of Jonathan Edwards: A Reappraisal (Garden City, NY, 1966); R. A. Delattre, Beauty and Sensibility in the Thought of Jonathan Edwards: An Essay in Aesthetics and Theological Ethics (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1968); C. A. Holbrook, The Ethics of Jonathan Edwards: Morality and Aesthetics (Ann Arbor, Mich. [1973]); W. J. Scheick (ed.), Critical Essays on Jonathan Edwards (Boston [1980]); N. Fiering, Jonathan Edwards's Moral Thought and its British Context (Chapel Hill, NC [1981]); B. Kuklick, Churchmen and Philosophers from Jonathan Edwards to John Dewey (New Haven, Conn., and London [1985]), esp. pp. 15-42. M. Vetö, La Pensée de Jonathan Edwards (1987); S. H. Lee, The Philosophical Theology of Jonathan Edwards (Princeton, NJ [1988]); N. O. Hatch and H. S. Stout, Jonathan Edwards and the American Experience (New York and Oxford, 1988); A. C. Guelzo, Edwards on the Will: A Century of Theological Debate (Middletown, Conn. [1989]). The most useful bibl. is M. X. Leaser, Jonathan Edwards: A Reference Guide (Boston [1981]). See also H. T. Johnson, The Printed Writings of Jonathan Edwards 1703–1758 (Princeton, NJ, and London, 1940).

Edwin (c. 585–633), Northumbrian king. The son of Ælla, King of Deira (i.e. S. Northumbria), Edwin was banished by the King of Bernicia (N. Northumbria) who had seized his father's kingdom. After taking refuge, first in N. Wales, then in Mercia, and finally with Redwald, King of E. Anglia, he was restored to the throne through Redwald's victory over the Bernician king, Ethelfrith, in 616. He proved an able ruler, and in 625 married Ethelburga, the sister of the Kentish king, Eadbald, and daughter of King *Ethelbert, a Christian woman who was accompanied to Northumbria by her chaplain, *Paulinus. Edwin's victory over the West Saxons, which made him the most powerful monarch in England, was followed by his Baptism at Paulinus' hands (627). He then appointed Paulinus Bp. of *York and set about building a stone church there, but his plans were foiled by the invasion of his kingdom by Penda, the heathen King of Mercia, and his ally, Cadwallon of N. Wales. His defeat and death at the battle of Hatfield Chase, 12 Oct. 633, was followed by the break-up of his kingdom. He was long venerated as a saint, his festival being kept on 12 Oct.

The primary authority is *Bede, HE 2. 9–20. Notes to edn. by C. Plummer, 2 (Oxford, 1896), pp. 93–117; further refs. in index, s.v. 'Aeduini', pp. 401 f.; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (ibid., 1988), pp. 52, 59 f., 65–75, 80, 84 f., 122, 222, and 226, with refs.

Effeta. See EPHPHATHA.

efficacious grace. In the RC theology of *grace, grace to which free consent is given by the will so that it always produces its effect (effectum). In the controversy between the *Dominicans (D. *Báñez) and the *Jesuits (L. de *Molina), the former held the efficacy of such grace to be dependent on the character of the grace itself, the latter on the fact that it is given under circumstances which God foresees to be congruous with the dispositions of the recipient. Both parties were agreed that, although the result was inevitable, the grace did not necessitate the will and destroy freedom. Both sufficient and efficacious grace are regarded as different forms of 'actual grace'.

Egbert (d. 766), Abp. of *York. A member of the Northumbrian royal house, he was educated in a monastery, ordained deacon at *Rome, and appointed Bp. of York *c.*732. In 735, on the advice of the Ven. *Bede (in a letter still surviving), he applied for the *pallium from Pope Gregory III. Owing to this increase of dignity and the harmonious relations with the King which ensued when his brother ascended the Northumbrian throne in 738, he was able to carry out many reforms. His most important work was the foundation of the cathedral school, where he himself taught theology and numbered *Alcuin among his pupils. Of the literary works connected with his name the best known is the compilation of canons known as the 'Excerptiones e dictis et canonibus SS. Patrum' (the Excerptiones Egberti) or in some MSS as the 'De Jure Sacerdotali'; in its present form, however, this cannot be earlier than the 11th cent. The 'Dialogus Ecclesiasticae Institutionis', a treatise on various points of Church discipline, and the 'Poenitentiale' (or 'Confessionale'), which exists in Latin and the vernacular, have been much added to from later sources. The 'Pontificale', which goes under Egbert's name is a later compilation having no connection with him; it is, however, of great value as an early source for the history of the liturgy and of the English *Coronation Rite. A letter from St *Boniface to Egbert has also survived.

The 'Excerptiones', 'Dialogus Ecclesiasticae Institutionis', and 'Poenitentiale', repr. from G. D. *Mansi, with introd., in J. P. Migne, PL 89. 377–451; better text of the 'Poenitentiale', which more probably represents the genuine work of Egbert, repr. from F. W. H. Wasserschleben, Die Bussordnungen der abendländischen Kirche (1851), pp. 231–47, in A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 3 (1871), pp. 416–31, with important note on Egbert's works, pp. 413–416. Anglo-Saxon text of the 'Poenitentiale' ed. J. Raith (Bibliothek der angelsächsischen Prosa, 13; 1933) and R. Spindler (Leipzig, 1934). 'Pontificale' ed. W. Greenwell (Surtees Society, 27; 1853). The letter of Bede is pr. among his Opera Historica, ed. C. Plummer, 1 (Oxford, 1896), pp. 405–23, with notes, 2 (1896), pp. 378–88; also in A. W. Haddan and W. Stubbs, op. cit., pp. 314–26; Eng. tr. in D. Whitelock (ed.), English Historical Documents c.500–1042 (English Historical Documents, ed. D. C. Douglas, 1; 2nd edn., 1979), pp. 799–810 (no. 170). The letter from St Boniface is pr. in A. W. Haddan and W. Stubbs, op. cit., pp. 358–60; Eng. tr. in D. Whitelock, op. cit., pp. 823 f. On the 'Excerptiones', P. Fournier and G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en occident, 1 (1931), pp. 316–20. On the 'Poenitentiale', A. J. Frantzen, The Literature of Penance in Anglo-Saxon England (New Brunswick, NJ, 1983), pp. 69–78 and 107–10. On the 'Pontificale', F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 4 (1921), cols. 2211–20, s.v. 'Egbert (Pontifical de)', with full bibl. J. Raine in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 50–2, s.v. 'Egbert (6)'; H. Dauphin, OSB, in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1476–8, s.v. 'Egbert (8)'.

Egbert, St (d. 729), Northumbrian hermit. He was a monk of *Lindisfarne who crossed to *Ireland in search of learning and sanctity, where during a plague he vowed that if his life were spared he would never go back to his native land. He was largely instrumental in organizing the evangelization of Germany and arranged the mission of St *Willibrord and others. About 716, or slightly earlier, he came to *Iona, where he played a large part in persuading the monks to observe the Roman method of calculating the date of Easter (see PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES). He remained there, living a life of great devotion, until his death. News of his death may have inspired *Bede to start work on his Ecclesiastical History. Feast day, 24 Apr.

The principal authority is Bede, HE 3. 4, 27; 4. 3, 26; 5. 9 f., 22–4; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 94, 132, 141, 181 f., and 196–8. W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures for 1943; 1946), pp. 52 f., 271. A. A. M. Duncan, 'Bede, Iona, and the Picts', in R. H. C. Davis and J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (eds.), The Writing of History in the Middle Ages: Essays Presented to Richard William Southern (Oxford, 1981), pp. 1–42, esp. pp. 41 f. T. F. Tout in DNB 17 (1889), pp. 146 f., s.v., with refs.

Egede, Hans (1686–1758), *Lutheran missionary from Norway to Greenland, the 'Apostle of the Eskimos'. From 1707 to 1717 he ministered at Vaagen, in the Lofoten Islands. In 1717 he went to Bergen to get support for a scheme for a mission to Greenland and in 1721 he set out. After many difficulties, but much success, he returned to Copenhagen in 1736, where he founded a seminary for missionaries to Greenland. His work among the Eskimos was carried on after 1736 by his sons Poul (1708–89), who succeeded him as Bp. of Greenland, and Niels (1710–82).

H. M. Fenger, Bidrag til Hans Egedes og dem grønlandske Missions Historie 1720–60 (1879); L. T. A. Bobé, Hans Egede, Grønlands Missionær og Kolonisator (Copenhagen, 1941; Eng. tr., ibid., 1952); O. G. Myklebust (ed.), Hans Egede: Studier til 200-Årsdagen for hans Død 5. November 1958 (Studies of the Egede Institute, 8; Oslo, 1958). E. Garnett, To Greenland's Icy Mountains: The Story of Hans Egede, Explorer, Coloniser, Missionary (1968) [orig. written for children, but useful]. M. Lidegaard in TRE 14 (1985), pp. 259 f., s.v. 'Grönland', with bibl., p. 263.

Egeria, Pilgrimage of. A treatise narrating the journey of a devout woman to Egypt, the *Holy Land, *Edessa, Asia Minor, and *Constantinople, prob. in 381–4. She is traditionally thought to have been a nun or abbess, perhaps from Spain or more probably Gaul; she certainly had considerable intelligence and powers of observation. In the first part, she records her identification of various places and scenes en route with the sites of biblical events, e.g. *Moses' brook, the place where the Golden Calf was made, the city of *Melchizedek ('Sedima'). In the latter part the descriptions are mainly of liturgical matters, esp. the services at *Jerusalem and in the neighbourhood. They include accounts of the daily and Sunday offices, *Epiphany (including the Night Station at *Bethlehem), *Holy Week and *Easter (including the procession with palms to the Mount of *Olives and the *Veneration of the Cross), and *Whitsuntide, in all of which Egeria had evidently taken part. It becomes clear that in her time in Egypt and at Jerusalem the Feast of the Nativity was kept on 6 Jan. She is also the earliest writer to mention the Feast of the *Purification (here 14 Feb.).

The text is preserved (apart from a few fragments also contained in a Madrid MS) in a single 11th cent. MS which was discovered by F. Gamurrini at Arezzo in 1884. Gamurrini held the writer to be St Silvia, the sister of the Roman prefect, Rufinus, and hence the document came to be known as the 'Peregrinatio Silviae'. In 1903, however, Dom M. Férotin argued that she was very probably to be identified with one Egeria (or, as he thought, Etheria), referred to by Valerius, a 7th cent. monk of the region of El Bierzo in N. Spain, and this identification is now very widely accepted. The 'Peregrinatio' is written in a curious Latin dialect, though how far this is a local form is disputed.

Edns. by J. F. Gamurrini (Rome, 1887), J. H. *Bernard (London, 1891), P. Geyer (CSEL, 1898), H. Pétré (SC 21; 1948), O. Prinz (Heidelberg, 1960), A. Franceschini and R. Weber, OSB, in Itineraria et Alia Geographica (CCSL 175; 1965), pp. 29–103, and, with Fr. tr., by P. Maraval (together with letter of Valerius, ed. and tr. M. C. Díaz y Díaz, SC 296; 1982), with bibl. Eng. trs., with notes, by G. E. Gingras (ACW 38 [1970]) and J. [D.] Wilkinson (London, 1971; rev. edn., Jerusalem and Warminster, 1981). F. *Cabrol, Étude sur la Peregrinatio Silviae (1895); M. Férotin, 'Le Véritable Auteur de la Peregrinatio Silviae. La vierge espagnole Éthéria', RQH 74 (1903), 2, pp. 367–97; A. Bludau, Die Pilgerreise der Aetheria (1927); P. Devos, SJ, 'La Date du Voyage d'Égérie', Anal. Boll. 85 (1967), pp. 165–94; id., 'Égérie à Bethléem. Le 40ᵉ jour après Pâques à Jérusalem, en 383', ibid. 86 (1968), pp. 87–108; E. D. Hunt, 'St. Silvia of Aquitaine. The Role of a Theodosian Pilgrim in the Society of East and West', JTS NS 32 (1972), pp. 351–73; E. Lamirande, 'La pélerine Égérie', Église et Théologie, 15 (1984), pp. 259–91; H. Sivan, 'Who was Egeria? Pilgrimage and Piety in the Age of Gratian', HTR 81 (1988), pp. 59–72. Atti del Convegno Internazionale sulla Peregrinatio Egeriae nel centenario della pubblicazione del Codex Aretinus 405 . . .: Arezzo 23–25 ottobre 1987 (Arezzo [1990]). M. Starowieyski, 'Bibliografia Egeriana', Augustinianum, 19 (1979), pp. 297–318. A. Hamman in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 558–62.

Egerton, Francis Henry (1756–1829), 8th Earl of Bridgewater and founder of the *Bridgewater Treatises. He was educated at Eton and *Christ Church, Oxford, and elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1780. He became a Prebendary of Durham and collected other ecclesiastical preferments which he retained to the end of his life, performing his duties by proxy. In 1823 he succeeded his brother as Earl of Bridgewater. He was a great patron of learning and a good scholar, if eccentric. His own works, largely on family history, were mainly privately printed. Under the terms of his will he left to the President of the Royal Society £8,000, which financed the production of the Bridgewater Treatises, and he left to the British Museum his MSS and £12,000, of which the interest was partly for the custodian and partly to augment his collection, which came to be known as the 'Egerton MSS'. Money from this fund was used to purchase the '*Egerton Papyrus' (see following entry).

C. W. Sutton in DNB 17 (1889), pp. 154–6.

Egerton Papyrus. Two imperfect leaves and a scrap of papyrus in the British Library (numbered 'Egerton Papyrus 2') containing passages from a Greek writing akin to, but distinct from, the canonical Gospels. On palaeographical grounds the papyrus, which was part of a codex (not a roll), used to be dated c. AD 150 or even earlier; it was thus regarded as the oldest known specimen of Christian writing, with the possible exception of the *Rylands St John. This dating has been called in question by the identification as part of Egerton 2 of a fragment in Cologne (P. Köln VI 255) which is dated nearer 200. The surviving leaves of Egerton 2 contain four incomplete narratives, all relating to the period of Christ's Ministry. Their closeness to the canonical Gospels may imply that the author was acquainted with them; on the other hand, it seems likely that he had access to independent historical material derived from genuine tradition. The actual date of the 'unknown Gospel' is presumably earlier than that of the codex, as there is no reason to suppose it is an autograph.

The text was first pub., with Eng. tr., by H. I. Bell and T. C. Skeat as Fragments of an Unknown Gospel and other early Christian Papyri (1935), with facsimiles. Idd., The New Gospel Fragments (more popular, with rev. text, 1935). Eng. tr. also in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 37–40. The Cologne papyrus is ed. by M. Gronewald in id. and others, Kölner Papyri, 6 (Abhandlungen der Rheinisch-Westfälischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, Sonderreihe Papyrologica Coloniensia, 7 [1987]), pp. 136–45. C. H. *Dodd, 'A New Gospel', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 20 (1936), pp. 56–92. G. Mayeda, Das Leben Jesu—Fragment Papyrus Egerton 2 und seine Stellung in der urchristlichen Literaturgeschichte (1946). H. I. Bell, 'The Gospel Fragments P. Egerton 2', HTR 42 (1949), pp. 53–63. J. Jeremias and W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn.; 1987), pp. 82–5; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 96–9.

Eginhard. See EINHARD.

Egypt, Christianity in. See COPTIC CHURCH.

Egyptian Church Order. The early liturgical treatise which, as a result of the researches of Dom Hugh *Connolly and E. *Schwartz, is now commonly identified as the '*Apostolic Tradition' of St *Hippolytus (q.v.). It was so described by H. Achelis (1891), when it was known to exist in *Ethiopic, *Coptic, and Arabic versions, 'merely to give it a name, which so far it lacks'.

Egyptians, Gospel according to the. An apocryphal gospel, probably written in Egypt in the first half of the 2nd cent., which seems to have circulated widely since it was known to *Clement of Alexandria, *Theodotus (his *Gnostic adversary), and *Origen. Its standpoint is markedly ascetic (apparently *Encratite). Only a few quotations from it survive. This text has nothing to do with the 'Gospel of the Egyptians' found in the *Nag Hammadi Library (NHC III. 2 and IV. 2), also called 'The Holy Book of the Great Invisible Spirit'.

Clement Al., Strom. 3. 9 (63–6); 3. 13 (92); *Hippolytus, Haer. 5. 7; *Epiphanius, Haer. 62. 2. Eng. tr., with introd., in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 16–19. Bardenhewer, pp. 521–4. W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 174–9; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 209–15.

Egyptian Versions of the Bible. See BOHAIRIC, FAYUMIC, SAHIDIC.

Ehrle, Franz (1845–1934), medievalist. A native of Isny in Württemberg, he was educated by the *Jesuits of Feldkirch and entered their novitiate at Gorheim in 1861. Driven from Germany by the *Kulturkampf, he lived from 1873 to 1877 at Ditton Hall, Lancs, where he was ordained priest in 1876. After travelling on the Continent for some years and examining a great number of medieval MSS, he went to Rome in 1880, where he remained till his death, except during the war years of 1915–19, which he spent at Feldkirch and later at Munich. In 1885 he started, in conjunction with H. *Denifle, the Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, and in 1890 published the first volume of his Historia Bibliothecae Romanorum Pontificum. From 1895 to 1914 he was prefect of the *Vatican Library, which he reorganized on modern lines, attaching to it a reference library and a department for the restoration of MSS. He was created cardinal in 1922. In 1924, on the occasion of his 80th birthday, he was presented with the 5 vols. of Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, containing essays by many scholars of European reputation on a large variety of subjects. His Der Sentenzenkommentar Peters von Candia (1924) was an important study in 14th-cent. Scholasticism and his *I più antichi statuti della facoltà teologica dell'Università di Bologna (1932) important for its introduction. With Denifle, Ehrle was the founder of the scientific study of the history of Scholasticism.

The 'Album' appended to the Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle (ST 37–42; 1924) incl. 'Cenni biografici' (pp. 12–16) and list of his publications to date; Gesammelte Aufsätze zur englischen Scholastik, ed. F. Pelster, SJ (Storia e Letteratura, 50; Rome, 1970), with biographical introd., pp. xxi–xxix. M. *Grabmann, 'Heinrich Denifle O.P. und Kardinal Franz Ehrle S.J. Ein nachträgliches Gedenken zu ihrem hundertsten Geburtstag', Philosophisches Jahrbuch, 56 (1946), pp. 9–26, esp. pp. 16–26, with bibl. p. 16. F. Pelster, SJ, 'Franz Kardinal Ehrle und seine Verdienste um die Geschichte der Scholastik', appended to his edn. of Ehrle's comm. on the encyclical Aeterni Patris* (Sussidi Eruditi, 6; 1954), pp. 191–202. M. D. *Knowles, 'Denifle and Ehrle', History, 54 (1969), pp. 1–12. Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 625–8.

Eichhorn, Johann Gottfried (1752–1827), biblical scholar and orientalist. He studied at Göttingen (1770), and became professor of oriental languages at Jena in 1775. From 1788 he was professor of philosophy at Göttingen. He was one of the first commentators to make a scientific comparison between the biblical books and other Semitic writings. He was also among the earliest critics to divide

*Genesis between the 'Yahwist' and 'Elohist' sources, and to distinguish the priestly law in *Exodus–*Leviticus–*Numbers from the popular code in *Deuteronomy. His most important works include his Einleitung ins Alte Testament (3 vols., 1780–3); Einleitung in die apokryphischen Bücher des AT (1795); Einleitung in das NT (2 vols., 1804–12). His work, though inaccurate, was popular and did much to encourage biblical study and criticism.

H. C. A. Eichstaedt, Oratio de Jo. Godofredo Eichhornio (Jena [1827]). E. Sehmsdorf, Die Prophetenauslegung bei J. G. Eichhorn (Göttingen, 1971). J. C. O'Neill, The Bible's Authority (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 78–94. H.-J. Zobel in TRE 9 (1982), pp. 369–71, s.v., with further bibl.

Eighteen Benedictions, the (Heb. Shemoneh 'Esreh, 'eighteen'; also Tephillah, 'prayer', or 'Amidah, 'standing'). A group of prayers, now numbering 19, which are recited on weekdays at each of the three services of the Jewish synagogue. The first three, which are benedictions, and the last three, which are thanksgivings, are used also on *Sabbaths and festivals, but the middle group, consisting of petitions, is then replaced by other prayers. Their contents date in part from pre-Christian times; but apparently they were for long not written down and varied in number and wording, esp. in the middle section.

The current Orthodox text is in the 'Morning Service' in S. Singer, The Authorised Daily Prayer Book of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire (1949), pp. 44–54. They are also pr., with a variant text and Eng. tr., in C. W. Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue upon the Divine Office (1944), pp. 114–25; Eng. tr., with brief discussion and full bibl. refs., also in E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 455–63. K. G. Kuhn, Achtzehngebet und Vaterunser und der Reim (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testamentum, 1; 1950). J. Heinemann, Prayer in the Talmud: Forms and Patterns (Eng. tr. from Heb. [orig. pub. in 1964], Studia Judaica, 9; Berlin and New York, 1977), esp. pp. 13–76 and 218–27.

Eikon Basilike, 'The Portraiture of His Sacred Majesty in His Solitudes and Sufferings'. An influential royalist work, secretly published just before the death of *Charles I in 1649, and purporting to be the King's own work. It has long been attributed to J. *Gauden, later Bp. of Exeter; he prob. created the book, using genuine materials written, and later corrected, by the King. It provoked a reply in John *Milton's Eikonoklastes (1649).

Text ed., with introd., by P. A. Knachel (New York, 1966). C. Wordsworth, Who Wrote ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ? (1824), and later writings by the same author; H. J. Todd, Bishop Gauden, the Author of Icôn Basilikè (1829). The fullest treatment is by F. F. Madan, A New Bibliography of the Eikon Basilike of King Charles I with a Note on the Authorship (Oxford Bibliographical Society, NS 3, for 1949; 1950); cf. H. Trevor-Roper, ' "Eikon Basilikè". The problem of the King's Book', History Today, 1, pt. 9 (Sept. 1950), pp. 7–12, repr. in id., Historical Essays (1957), pp. 211–20.

eileton (Gk. εἰλητόν; lit. 'something wrapped' or 'wound'). In the E. Church, a cloth spread on the altar during the Liturgy. It is the real counterpart of the W. *corporal, though the functions of the latter are now partly filled by the *antiminsion. It is interpreted as symbolizing the linen cloth wrapped around Christ's head during His entombment.

Einhard (c. 770–840), also 'Eginhard', Frankish historian. He was educated at the school of *Fulda, and later became a member of *Charlemagne's palace school at Aachen and one of the Emperor's most trusted friends. He was a craftsman as well as a scholar and teacher, and is credited with responsibility for overseeing the building works at Aachen. On Charlemagne's death Einhard continued in the favour of his successor, *Louis I, and was presented by him with numerous abbeys and the estates of Michelstadt and Mulinheim (Seligenstadt), where he retired *c.*830 and founded a monastery to which the relics of Sts Marcellinus and Peter were brought. He was the author of several works, one of which, the 'Life of Charlemagne', was among the most remarkable biographies of the Middle Ages. It is modelled on the Vitae of *Suetonius, and thereby freed from the annalistic methods of its contemporaries, and distinguished for its fresh and accurate presentation of the Emperor's character and rule. He may also have written an epic poem about Charlemagne, of which only one book survives (known by the title of 'Karolus Magnus et Leo Papa'). His authorship of the so-called 'Annales Einhardi' (attributed to him by G. H. Pertz) is no longer accepted.

For edns. and trs. of Life of Charlemagne, see bibl. to CHARLEMAGNE. Translatio et Miracula Sanctorum Marcellini et Petri ed. G. Waitz, MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 238–64; Eng. tr. by B. Wendell (Cambridge, Mass., 1926). Epistolae ed. K. Hampe in MGH, Epistolae, 5 (1899), pp. 105–45. Karolus Magnus et Leo Papa, ed., with Ger. tr., by F. Brunhölzl, and essays by H. Beumann and others (Studien und Quellen zur Westfälischen Geschichte, 8; Paderborn, 1966). The so-called 'Annales Einhardi' are ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 1 (1826), pp. 174–218. A. Kleinclausz, Éginhard (Annales de l'Université de Lyon, 3rd ser., fasc. 12; 1942), with full refs. F. L. Ganshof, 'Éginhard, biographe de Charlemagne', in Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance: Travaux et Documents, 13 (1951), pp. 217–30; Eng. tr., id., The Carolingians and the Frankish Monarchy (1971), pp. 1–16. M. Bondois, La Translation des saints Marcellin et Pierre: Étude sur Einhard et sa vie politique de 827 à 834 (Bibliothèque des Écoles des Hautes Études, 160; 1907). H. Beumann, 'Topos und Gedankengefüge bei Einhard', Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 33 (1951), pp. 337–50; id., 'Einhard und die karolingische Tradition im ottonischen Corvey', Westfalen, 30 (1952), pp. 150–74, both repr. in his Ideengeschichtliche Studien zu Einhard und anderen Geschichtsschreibern des früheren Mittelalters (Darmstadt, 1962), pp. 1–39. K. Hauck (ed.), Das Einhardkreuz: Vorträge und Studien über Münsteraner Diskussion zum arcus Einhardi (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 87; 1974). D. Schaller, 'Das Aachener Epos für Karl den Kaiser', Frühmittelalterliche Studien, 10 (1976), pp. 134–68. H. Löwe, 'Die Einstehungszeit der Vita Karoli Einhards', Deutsches Archiv, 39 (1983), pp. 85–103. E. S. Duckett, Carolingian Portraits (Ann Arbor, Mich. [1962]), pp. 58–91. J. Fleckenstein in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 3 (1986), cols. 1737–9, with bibl.

Einsiedeln, *Benedictine abbey and place of pilgrimage in Switzerland. Previously the dwelling-place of the hermit, St *Meinrad (q.v.), the abbey was founded by St Benno, Bp. of Metz, and Eberhard in 934. The present church is a fine baroque building of enormous dimensions, and in the abbey library is a large collection of valuable MSS.

'Annales Einsidlenses' ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 3 (1839), pp. 137–49. Calendar of docs. by G. Morel, OSB, Die Regesten der Benedictiner-Abtei Einsiedeln (Regesten der Archive in der schweizerischen Eidgenossenschaft ed. T. v. Mohr, 1; Chur, 1848). Profession book ed. R. Henggeler, OSB, (Einsiedeln, 1934).

G. Meier, OSB, Catalogus Codicum Manuscriptorum qui in Bibliotheca Monasterii Einsidlensis OSB servantur (1899). O. Ringholz, OSB, Geschichte des fürstlichen Benediktinerstiftes U.L.F. von Einsiedeln, seiner Wallfahrt, Propsteien, Pfarreien und übrigen Besitzungen, vol. 1 (no more pub.; Einsiedeln, 1904). Id., Die Kulturarbeit des Stiftes Einsiedeln (ibid., 1913). R. Henggeler, OSB, Das Stift Einsiedeln und die französische Revolution: Ein Beitrag zur Einsiedler Klostergeschichte von 1730–1808 (ibid., 1924). J. Salzgeber, OSB, Die Klöster Einsiedeln und St Gallen im Barockzeitalter: Historisch-soziologische Studie (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, 28; Münster [1967]). Id. in Helvetia Sacra, 3. 1, pt. 1 (Berne [1986]), pp. 517–94, with full refs. R. Henggeler, OSB, in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 95–7, s.v. See also works cited under MEINRAD, ST.

Ekphonesis. See ECPHONESIS.

Ekthesis. See ECTHESIS.

Eldad and Modad, Book of. An apocryphal book, forged on the basis of Num. 11: 26–9. Though it no longer survives, it was quoted by *Hermas (Vis. 2. 3) and perhaps also (J. B. *Lightfoot) by *Clement of Rome (1 Clem. 23. 3 f.; cf. also '2 Clem.' 11. 2 f.).

A.-M. Denis, Introduction aux pseudépigraphes grecs d'Ancien Testament (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, 1; Leiden, 1970), pp. 142–4; E. G. Martin in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 463–5. J. B. Lightfoot (ed.), S. Clement of Rome: The Two Epistles to the Corinthians (1869), notes on pp. 91 f. and 205 f.

elder. A Church officer in the *Presbyterian Church. Elders are of two kinds: (1) 'Teaching elders', whose function is pastoral; (2) 'Ruling elders', i.e. laymen often set apart by ordination who assist the pastor in the administration and government of the Church. Biblical support for the distinction was found by J. *Calvin and others in 1 Tim. 5: 17. When the word is used without further specification, the latter class is commonly meant.

For the history of the office in the early Church, see PRESBYTER.

election (Gk. ἐκλογή, 'choice'). In the vocabulary of theology, an act of the Divine Will exercising itself on creatures, among which it chooses some in preference to others. In the OT the Divine election bears esp. on Israel, the 'Chosen People', and among them in particular on those who do the will of God and remain faithful in time of trial. In the NT the place of the Old Israel is taken by the members of the new Christian community. The number of the elect is small (Mt. 22: 14), but Satan cannot prevail against them and they will be gathered together 'from the uttermost part of the earth' (Mk. 13: 22 and 27) on the Last Day. In St Paul the term 'election' usually signifies vocation acc. to the Divine predilection, e.g. in Rom. 9: 11 and 11: 5, 7, 28, and 1 Thess. 1: 4. In the teaching of the Fathers and Schoolmen the term plays an important part in connection with *predestination (q.v.). St *Augustine's belief that gratuitous predestination to eternal salvation presupposes an act of election on the part of God deeply influenced subsequent W. theology, though it left the E. very largely untouched. The Fathers frequently use the terms 'election', and 'predestination' without distinction, but some later theologians, e.g. St *Thomas Aquinas, give 'election', as an act of the will, a logical priority over predestination, as an act of the intelligence, because God must first will the end, i.e. salvation, for a creature, i.e. elect it, before ordaining it towards this end, i.e. predestining it. Most *Jesuit theologians, however, reject the Thomist distinction and use the terms 'election' and 'predestination' indifferently, as was done by the Fathers.

The doctrine of election filled a central place in the Institutes* of J. *Calvin, who affirmed that certain persons are elected by God wholly without relation to faith or works. This belief was everywhere held by Calvinist theologians till questioned by the school of *Arminius, for whom election was God's choice of those who believe and persevere by grace in faith and works. An even wider interpretation was given to it in the works of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, who maintained that election includes all humanity, but that, on earth, only certain men and women are, through historical circumstances, elect. In the theology of K. *Barth, the idea of election was central; he focused on the assertion that it is primarily in Jesus Christ that election (and reprobation) is realized.

It is to be observed that, while a natural consequence of belief in election might be expected to be to weaken or destroy moral effort, history in fact does not bear out this deduction, even in the case of those holding an extreme form of the doctrine.

Elephantine Papyri. A collection of *Aramaic documents from the reigns of Xerxes, Artaxerxes I, and Darius II (485–404 BC), found in 1904–8 on the site of an ancient Jewish military colony which had settled at Elephantine in the far south of Upper Egypt some time before the conquest of Egypt by the Persians. The papyri throw valuable light on the organization, law, and religious beliefs and practices of the colony, and indirectly of the Jewish *Diaspora in the 5th cent. BC. They provide evidence for the existence of a syncretistic form of Judaism which is in sharp contrast with the orthodox Judaism of *Ezra and *Nehemiah.

Plates, with Eng. tr. and notes, ed. A. H. Sayce and A. E. Cowley, Aramaic Papyri Discovered at Assuan (1906). Crit. edns. of the text by E. Sachau, Aramäische Papyrus und Ostraka aus einer jüdischen Militär-Kolonie zu Elephantine (1911, with Ger. tr. and notes), and, with Eng. tr. and full notes, by A. [E.] Cowley, Aramaic Papyri of the Fifth Century B.C. (1923). Separate Eng. tr. by A. [E.] Cowley, Jewish Documents of the Time of Ezra (Translations of Early Documents, Series 1, Palestinian Jewish Texts (Pre-Rabbinic), 1919). Further papyri from Elephantine, purchased in 1893 by Charles Edwin Wilbour (d. 1896) which remained unknown until they were bequeathed by his daughter to the Brooklyn Museum in 1947, ed., with Eng. tr. and useful introd., by E. G. Kraeling, The Brooklyn Museum Aramaic Papyri: New Documents of the Fifth Century B.C. from the Jewish Colony at Elephantine (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1953). Fr. tr., with introd. and notes, by P. Grelot, Documents Araméens d'Égypte (Littératures Anciennes du Proche-Orient, 1972), esp. pp. 398–423. B. Porten, Archives from Elephantine: The Life of an Ancient Jewish Military Colony (Berkeley, Calif., 1968); M. H. Silvermann, Religious Values in the Jewish Proper Names at Elephantine (Alter Orient und Altes Testament, 217; 1985). B. Porten in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 445–55, s.v.

Elevation. At the Eucharist, the lifting of the sacred elements in turn by the celebrant immediately after he has recited the Words of *Institution over them, its purpose being to exhibit them for the people's adoration. The practice of elevating the *Host apparently originated in France early in the 13th cent., possibly in response to a growing popular desire to see the Host at the moment of consecration, which was believed to take place at this point and not, as some theologians argued, only after the Words of Institution had been pronouced over the wine also. The elevation of the chalice was added later. A second, more ancient, elevation of the Host and chalice together (formerly known as the 'lesser elevation') is made at the end of the *Canon or other *Eucharistic Prayer in the Roman and *Ambrosian rites.

H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Elevation', The Tablet, 110 (1907), pp. 603–5, 643–5, 684–6. E. Dumoutet, Le Désir de voir l'hostie et les origines de la dévotion au saint sacrement (1926). P. Browe, SJ, 'Die Elevation in der Messe', Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft, 9 (1929), pp. 20–66; id., Die Verehrung der Eucharistie im Mittelalter (1933), ch. 2, pp. 26–69. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, 'The Moment of Consecration and the Elevation of the Host', Mediaeval Studies, 6 (1944), pp. 121–50, with full refs.; id., 'The Date of the Parisian Decree on the Elevation of the Host', ibid. 8 (1946), pp. 87–96. H. B. Meyer, SJ, 'Die Elevation im deutschen Mittelalter und bei Luther', ZKT 85 (1963), pp. 162–217. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 158–60; 2, pp. 256–62 and 331–3 (Eng. tr., 1, pp. 120 f.; 2, pp. 206–10 and 266–8).

Eleven Thousand Virgins. See URSULA, ST.

Elgar, Sir Edward (1857–1934), English composer. The son of a Worcester music seller and RC organist, he was largely self-taught musically. After much early hardship he rose to international fame c. 1900 as a composer of choral and orchestral music. He was knighted in 1904, became Master of the King's Music in 1924, and created a baronet in 1931. Among his works of a religious nature are his setting of J. H. *Newman's Dream of Gerontius (1900), and the *oratorios The Apostles (1903) and The Kingdom (1906).

Letters . . . and Other Writings, ed. P. M. Young (1956); Letters to Nimrod: Edward Elgar to August Jaeger 1897 1908, ed. id. (1965); Elgar and his Publishers: Letters . . ., ed. J. N. Moore (2 vols., Oxford, 1987); Letters of a Lifetime, ed. id. (ibid., 1990). [G.] M. [S.] Kennedy, Portrait of Elgar (1968; rev. edn., 1982); J. N. Moore, Edward Elgar: A Creative Life (Oxford, 1984). C. Kent, Edward Elgar: A Guide to Research (New York and London [1993]).

El Greco (1541–1614), properly Domenicos Theotocopoulos, painter and sculptor. A native of Crete, he went to Italy some time before 1570 and prob. studied under *Titian in Venice before going to Rome. His works from this period include two paintings of the Healing of the Blind and two of the Purification of the Temple. By 1577 he was in Toledo, where he seems to have spent the rest of his life interpreting religious themes in the spirit of the *Counter-Reformation. His Martyrdom of St Maurice, commissioned for the Escorial, failed to please *Philip II, and El Greco thenceforward worked mainly for churches and religious houses. The works of his Spanish period are marked increasingly by a quality of mysticism as well as by personal idiosyncrasies. Formal modelling is abandoned as human forms and facial expressions are exaggerated and even distorted to produce an emotional rather than a literal likeness. In colour, too, his elongated sinuous forms are matched by the startling effects of his cold, ashen hues, often painted on to a dark background. As a portrait painter, he stands comparison with Titian and Rubens. His work also exhibits an early interest in landscape. His major works include The Disrobing of Christ in the sacristy of Santo Domingo, Toledo, The Burial of Count Orgaz for the church of Santo Tomé, Toledo, and the altar-pieces for the Hospital of San Juan Bautista extra Muros, Toledo. He was also responsible for the entire scheme of decoration (incl. the sculpture) in the Capilla Mayor of the Hospital de la Caridad, Ilescas.

M. B. Cossio, El Greco (3 vols., Madrid, 1908); A. L. Mayer, Dominico Theotocopuli El Greco (Munich, 1926); H. E. Wethey, El Greco and his School (2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1962); D. Davies, El Greco (Oxford, 1976). E. Waterhouse and E. Baccheschi, El Greco: The Complete Paintings (1980). El Greco of Toledo: Catalogue of an exhibition organized by the Toledo Museum of Art and other institutions, with contributions by J. Brown and others (Eng. lang. edn., Boston, 1982). R. G. Mann, El Greco and his Patrons: Three Major Projects (Cambridge Studies in the History of Art, 1986).

Elias. See ELIJAH.

Elias of Cortona (c. 1180–1253), General of the *Franciscan Order. A native of *Assisi and one of the earliest of the companions of St *Francis, he soon rose to prominence. In 1219 he became first Provincial of Syria, and in 1221 Vicar-General of the order. On Francis' death (1226) he was mainly instrumental in the erection of the basilica at Assisi as a burial-place for the saint. In 1232 he became the third General of the order, but his government was marked by repeated crises, as he acted in a despotic manner towards all those, and esp. the '*Spiritual Franciscans', who opposed his princely way of life. In 1239 he was deposed from his office by Pope *Gregory IX. Thenceforth he supported the Emp. *Frederick II in his anti-Papal policy, and later was excommunicated and expelled from the order. For the small body of friars who followed him, he erected a monastery at Cortona. On his deathbed he is said to have made his submission to the Pope. A man of remarkable gifts, he was possessed of a character which was a strange combination of piety and pride.

His 'Epistola Encyclica de Transitu S. Francisci . . . ad omnes Provincias Ordinis Missa', pr. in Analecta Franciscana, 10 (1941), pp. 525–8. I. Affò, OFM, Vita di Frate Elia, ministro generale de' Francescani (Parma, 1783). E. Lempp, Frère Élie de Cortone: Étude biographique (1901). P. *Sabatier, Examen de la vie de Frère Élie du Speculum Vitae, suivi de trois fragments inédits (Opuscules de Critique historique, 11; 1904). D. Sparacio, Fra Elia compagno, vicario e successore di S. Francesco Serafico (2nd edn., 1923). S. Attal, Frate Elias compagno di Francesco (1936; rev. edn., Geneva, 1953). A. Pompei, OFM Conv., 'Frate Elia d'Assisi nel Giudizio dei Contemporanei e dei Posteri', Miscellanea Francescana, 54 (1954), pp. 539–635. R. B. Brooke, Early Franciscan Government: Elias to Bonaventure (Cambridge, 1959), pp. 3–177. L. di Fonzo, OFM Conv., in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 167–83, s.v. 'Élie (12) d'Assise'; G. Odoardi, OFM Conv., in DIP 3 (1976), cols. 1094–1110, s.v. 'Elia, di Assisi', both with refs. to primary sources.

Eligius, St (c. 590–660), Fr. 'Éloi', Bp. of Noyon and patron saint of metalworkers. He was born at Chaptelat near Limoges. Through his skill in working in precious metals, he was given positions at the courts of the Frankish kings, Clothair II (d. 629), who made him Master of the Mint at Marseilles, and his son Dagobert I (d. 639), whose chief councillor he became. Under Dagobert he was instrumental in ransoming captives, founding monasteries, and building churches. In 641 he was consecrated Bp. of Noyon (on the same day as his close friend St *Ouen was consecrated Bp. of Rouen) and became a zealous pastor, evangelizing Flanders, esp. the territories round Antwerp, Ghent, and Courtrai. An early Life of Eligius incorporates the substance of two early homilies attributed to him, one attacking superstition and the other on the Last Judgement. The other homilies ascribed to him are almost certainly not authentic. Feast day, 1 Dec.

'Vita Eligii Episcopi Noviomagensis', pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 87. 479–594; crit. edn. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 4 (1902), pp. 634–741 (with homily on the Last Judgement pr. separately, pp. 751–61). His letter to Pope Desiderius in J. P. Migne, op. cit. 259; also ed. W. Arndt in MGH, Epistolae, 3 (1892), p. 206, repr. in CCSL 117 (1957), p. 330. The other homilies attributed to him are pr. in J. P. Migne, op. cit. 593–654. É. Vacandard, 'Les Homélies attribuées à saint Éloi', RQH 64 (1898), pp. 471–80; F. Plaine, OSB, 'Nouvelles remarques sur les homélies attribuées à saint Éloi', ibid. 65 (1899), pp. 235–42; É. Vacandard, 'Réponse aux remarques de Dom Plaine', ibid., pp. 243–55. P. Parsy, Saint Éloi, 590 659 ('Les Saints', 1907); J. Duquesne, Saint Éloi [1985]. P. Fouracre, 'The Work of Audoenus of Rouen and Eligius of Noyon in extending episcopal influence from the town to the country in seventh-century Neustria', in D. Baker (ed.), The Church in Town and Countryside (Studies in Church History, 16; Oxford, 1979), pp. 77–91. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), p. 689 (nos. 2094–6). É. Vacandard in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 2340–9; É. Brouette in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 260–3, both s.v. 'Éloi', with further bibl.

Elijah (Gk. form, 'Elias') (9th cent. BC). Traditionally held to be the greatest Hebrew prophet, and certainly a forerunner of the classical prophets (Amos, Isaiah, etc.). He maintained the ascendancy of the worship of Yahweh in the face of Canaanite and Phoenician cults (1 Kgs. 18) and upheld the claims of moral uprightness and social justice (1 Kgs. 21). With *Enoch he shared the glory of not seeing death but of translation into heaven (2 Kgs. 2: 1–18); and such was the impression which he made on the people that his return was held to be a necessary prelude to the deliverance and restoration of Israel (Mal. 4: 5 f.). In the NT (e.g. Mk. 9: 4) he appears as the typical representative of the OT prophets. He is regarded with particular devotion by the *Carmelites. Feast day, 20 July.

The main material is to be found in comm. on Kings, cited s.v. Modern works devoted to Elijah incl. Élie le prophète (Études Carmélitaines, 2 vols., 1956), G. Fohrer, Elia (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 31; 1957; 2nd edn., ibid. 53; 1968), and L. Bronner, The Stories of Elijah and Elisha as Polemics against Baal Worship (Pretoria Oriental Series, 6; Leiden, 1968). H. H. Rowley, 'Elijah on Mount Carmel', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 43 (1961), pp. 190–219. J. T. Walsh in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 463–6, s.v.

Eliot, Thomas Stearns (1888–1965), poet and critic. Born in St Louis, Missouri, he was educated at the Smith Academy, St Louis, Harvard (1906–9 and again 1911–13), the *Sorbonne (1910–11), and Merton College, Oxford (1914–15). He taught for a short time in Highgate Grammar School, London, and worked for Lloyds Bank; from this period his main interests appear to have been literary. Assistant editor of The Egoist from 1917 to 1919 and a frequent contributor to The Athenaeum, in 1922 he became the first editor of The Criterion, which he made a leading organ of literary expression until it ceased in 1939. In 1925 he joined the board of Faber, the publisher. He received many honours, including the Order of Merit and the Nobel Prize for literature (both in 1948).

Brought up in the American *Unitarian tradition, Eliot passed through a period of agnosticism reflected in his earlier poetry, e.g. Prufrock (1917) and Poems 1920 (1920). The expression of his sense of the emptiness of life reached its climax in The Waste Land (1922) and is also seen in The Hollow Men (1925). These early poems rejected the poetical tradition as it had developed in England since the 18th cent. and found inspiration in the 17th-cent. *Metaphysical poets and the 19th-cent. French symbolists. In 1927 Eliot was baptized in the parish church at Finstock, Oxon, and in 1928 he declared his viewpoint to be 'classicist in literature, royalist in politics, and *anglo-catholic in religion' (Preface to For Lancelot Andrewes). Henceforth much of his poetry, culminating in Four Quartets (1935–42), expressed his religious search, his struggle with faith and doubt, and his attempt to find fresh meaning in tradition; here he turned notably to *Dante, as well as to such mystics as St *John of the Cross and *Julian of Norwich. His influence as a poet was immense. His attempts at poetical drama were less successful, but also sought to communicate something of the dilemmas of faith, explicitly in Murder in the Cathedral (1935; written for the *Canterbury Festival of that year), but no less genuinely in his later plays, The Family Reunion (1939), The Cocktail Party (1950), The Confidential Clerk (1954), and The Elder Statesman (1959). He was also influential as a critic; many of his early essays were published in Selected Essays (1932; 3rd edn., enlarged, 1951), and his later essays collected in On Poetry and Poets (1957) and To Criticize the Critic (1965). He was deeply interested in the social implications of Christianity and discussed these in The Idea of a Christian Society (1939) and Notes towards a Definition of Culture (1948).

Complete Poems and Plays (1969). A facsimile and transcript of the original drafts of The Waste Land, incl. the annotations of Ezra Pound, ed. by V. Eliot (widow) (1971). Letters, ed. id. (1988 ff.). Biographies by L. Gordon (2 vols., Oxford, 1977–88) and P. Ackroyd (London, 1984). The many symposia on Eliot and his work include those ed. by R. March and Tambimuttu (London, 1948), A. Tate (ibid., 1967), and J. Olney (Oxford, 1988). F. O. Matthiesen, The Achievement of T. S. Eliot: An Essay on the Nature of Poetry (1935; 3rd edn., 1958); H. [L.] Gardner, The Art of T. S. Eliot (1949); id., The Composition of Four Quartets (1978); G. [C.] Smith, T. S. Eliot's Plays and Poetry: A Study in Sources and Meaning (Chicago [1956]); H. Kenner, The Invisible Poet (New York, 1959; London, 1960); C. H. Smith, T. S. Eliot's Dramatic Thought and Practice (Princeton, NJ, and London, 1963); H. Howarth, Notes on Some Figures Behind T. S. Eliot (1965); E. M. Browne, The Making of T. S. Eliot's Plays (Cambridge, 1969); M. Lojkine-Morelec, T. S. Eliot: Essai sur la génèse d'une écriture (Publications de la Sorbonne, 2nd ser. 17; 1985); C. Ricks, T. S. Eliot and Prejudice (1988); P. Murray [OP], T. S. Eliot and Mysticism: The Secret History of Four Quartets (1991). D. Gallup, T. S. Eliot: A Bibliography (2nd edn., 1969); B. Ricks, T. S. Eliot: A Bibliography of Secondary Works (1980). R. Ellmann in DNB, 1961–1970, pp. 325–9.

Elipandus (717–802), Abp. of Toledo. He was the originator and chief exponent of the *Adoptianist heresy in Spain, though his capacities as a theologian were much inferior to those of his supporter, *Felix of Urgel. He seems to have been led to his theological position by opposition to the unorthodox Trinitarian views of a certain *Migetius, which he had condemned at a council at Seville in 782. Though his doctrines were proscribed as heretical in synods at Ratisbon (792), *Frankfurt (794), Rome (798), and Aachen (799), the Arab domination enabled him to retain possession of his see till his death. A few of his letters survive.

Elipandus' letters are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 96. 859–82; crit. edn. by J. Gil, Corpus Scriptorum Muzarabicorum, 1 (Manuales y Anejos de 'Emerita', 28; Madrid, 1973), pp. 67–78, 80–111. His creed is ed. by J. Gil, ibid., pp. 78–80. The attack on his doctrine by Beatus of Liebana and Etherius of Osma is pr. in Migne, loc. cit. 893–1030; crit. edn. by B. Löfstedt (CCCM 59; 1984). J. F. Rivera [Recio], Elipando de Toledo: Nueva aportación a los estudios mozárabes (Toledo, 1940), with bibl. Id. in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 204–14, s.v.; K. Schäferdiek in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 3 (1986), cols. 1830 f., s.v.

Elisha (Gk. form, 'Eliseus') (9th cent. BC), Hebrew prophet and the successor of *Elijah. Various stories of his life are told in 1 Kgs. 19–2 Kgs. 13, but he had not the individuality or strength of character of his predecessor. It has been argued that the Elisha cycle of stories merely represents a more primitive version of the tradition about the prophet whom we know as Elijah, but most critics regard Elisha as an actual historical figure. He appears as the head of a band of enthusiasts called the 'sons of the prophets'.

See bibl. s.v. ELIJAH.

Elizabeth, St. The mother of *John the Baptist and 'cousin' (Lk. 1: 36) of the BVM. The visit of the Blessed Virgin to her shortly before the birth of Christ is commemorated in the Feast of the *Visitation. According to a few MSS of the NT, it was she, and not Mary, who spoke the words called the '*Magnificat'. Feast day in the W., 5 Nov.; in the E., 5 Sept.

Elizabeth, St, of Hungary (now more generally known as Elizabeth of Thuringia) (1207–31). She is to be distinguished from Elizabeth of Hungary, the *Dominican nun (1293–1337). The daughter of King Andrew II of Hungary, she was born at Pressburg. In 1211, with a view to a future marriage for political purposes, she was sent to Thuringia and did not again leave Germany; and in 1221 she married Ludwig IV, the Landgrave of Thuringia. From an early age she showed a desire for the ascetic life, and, esp. in the first years after her early marriage, came under the influence of the *Franciscans, who had recently arrived in Germany. On her husband's death on the *Crusade in 1227, she was driven from the court by his brother, Henry Raspe, on the pretext that her charities were exhausting the state finances, and this determined her to renounce the world completely. In 1228 she settled at Marburg, where she came under the absolute rule of *Conrad of Marburg, who had been her spiritual director since 1225. Under his orders, which seem to have been quite unsuited to Elizabeth's devout and delicate nature, she gave up her children, submitted to physical chastisement at his hands, and amid a life of great austerity, spent all her energies in visiting and caring for the sick and poor. After her early death in 1231, numerous miracles at her tomb were recorded, and she was canonized in 1235. The fine Gothic Elizabethskirche at Marburg was built to enshrine her relics, where they remained till removed by *Philip of Hesse in 1539. Feast day, 17 (formerly 19, and so in the American BCP, 1979) Nov.

Early Lives and miracles (incl. the Summa vite by Conrad of Marburg), ed. A. Huyskens, Quellenstudien zur Geschichte der hl. Elisabeth Landgräfin von Thüringen (Marburg, 1908); Libellus de dictis quatuor ancillarum S. Elisabeth confectus, ed. id. (Kempten and Munich, 1911); the Life by *Caesarius of Heisterbach, ed. id. in A. Hilka (ed.), Die Wundergeschichte des Caesarius von Heisterbach, 3 (1937), pp. 329–90; that by Theodoric of Apolda, OP (b. 1228), ed. H. Canisius, Antiquae Lectiones, 5 (Ingolstadt, 1604), pp. 147–217. Further anonymous Life ed. D. Henniges, OFM, in AFH 2 (1909), pp. 240–68. K. Wenck, 'Quellenuntersuchungen und Texte zur Geschichte der heiligen Elisabeth. I. Über die Dicta Quatuor Ancillarum Sanctae Elisabeth', NA 34 (1909), pp. 427–502. Modern Lives by C. R. F. *Montalembert (Paris, 1836; Eng. tr., 1904), E. Busse-Wilson (Munich, 1931), and J. Ancelet-Hustache (Paris, 1946; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1963). P. Braun, 'Der Beichtvater der heiligen Elisabeth und deutsche Inquisitor Konrad von Marburg (†1233)', Beiträge zur Hessischen Kirchengeschichte, 4 (1911), pp. 248–300 and 331–64. Sankt Elisabeth: Fürstin, Dienerin, Heilige. Aufsätze, Dokumentation, Katalog. Austellung zum 750. Todestag der hl. Elisabeth, Marburg, Landgrafenschloss und Elisabethkirche, 19. November 1981–6. Januar 1982 (Sigmaringen [1982]). U. Arnold and H. Leibing, Elizabeth, der Deutsche Orden und ihre Kirche (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte des Deutschen Ordens, 18; 1983). F. Schmoll, Zur Ikonographie der heiligen Elisabeth im 13. bis 16. Jahrhundert (1914). J. Ancelet-Hustache in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 225–8, s.v. 'Élisabeth, 10 (Sainte) de Thuringe'.

Elizabeth I (1533–1603), Queen of England from 1558. She was the daughter of *Henry VIII and *Anne Boleyn, declared illegitimate by statute in 1536. In 1544 the Succession to the Crown Act 1543 placed her next in succession after *Edward and *Mary. She was tutored by reforming Cambridge scholars, and learnt French, Greek, Latin, Italian, and perhaps Spanish. In her youth she cultivated an image of godly austerity and behaved with prudence in the face of the unwelcome advances in 1548 of Lord Thomas Seymour, the widowed husband of her stepmother, Catherine Parr. In the reign of her half-sister Mary (1553–1558), she conformed outwardly to Catholicism, but was often suspected of involvement in plots against Mary.

After her accession, Elizabeth attempted to break away from the policies which had made Mary unpopular. Her own sympathies and supporters were Protestant, and she immediately appointed Protestant preachers for public occasions. In the Parliament of 1559, she sought to achieve a royal supremacy and the restoration of the 1552 Book of *Common Prayer; after resistance in the House of Lords she accepted supreme governorship and an amended Prayer Book which made a few concessions to Catholics. Though she appointed Protestant bishops, led by M. *Parker, she made some further attempts to conciliate conservative opinion: she reintroduced a *crucifix in her chapel, contemplated a prohibition of clerical marriage, tried to insist on traditional *vestments, and was probably responsible for last-minute modifications in the *Thirty-Nine Articles of 1563. Later she attempted to limit Protestant preaching, a course of action which brought about a clash with Abp. E. *Grindal in 1576. Her refusal to consider further structural changes in the Church led to tensions with leading Protestants, including her own bishops and councillors.

Although political realities often made her cautious, Elizabeth posed as the restorer of the Gospel and the patron of Protestants. She sent military aid to Protestant rebels in Scotland in 1560, France in 1562, and the Netherlands in 1585. The Netherlands involvement soon brought open war with Spain which continued for the rest of the reign, and during the 1590s her government was also embroiled in serious difficulties with national and Catholic movements in Ireland. In 1569 she faced a conservative revolt in northern England, and in 1570 she was excommunicated by *Pius V; these attacks confirmed her public status as a Protestant heroine, which was stressed in ballads, portraits, and sermons. In 1579–80 she considered marriage to the Catholic Duke of Anjou, but abandoned the idea after a popular outcry. Her collection of private prayers suggests a genuine Protestant piety, hatred of superstition, and commitment to the doctrine of *justification by faith alone.

From 1583 Elizabeth turned more decisively against English Catholics, partly for fear of plots and partly as the growth of popular Protestantism made conservative concessions less necessary. Persecution of Catholics was vigorous in 1585–91, and in 1587 Elizabeth reluctantly allowed the execution of her cousin Mary Stuart (*Mary, Queen of Scots), who had been a focus of Catholic plotting. The defeat of the Spanish *Armada in 1588 was presented by Elizabeth's propagandists as evidence of Divine favour, and she claimed that her successes showed that she had been chosen to rule by God. Her image as Protestant protectress helped her to overcome suspicion of female rule, and made anti-popery a powerful national ideology.

The principal primary material for the reign is to be found in the Calendars of the State Papers, Domestic and Foreign. Useful collections of docs. repr. in G. W. Prothero (ed.), Select Statutes and other Constitutional Documents Illustrative of the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I (1894; 4th edn., 1913, pp. 1–249), and G. R. Elton (ed.), The Tudor Constitution: Documents and Commentary (Cambridge, 1960; 2nd edn., 1982). G. B. Harrison (ed.), The Letters of Queen Elizabeth (1935, with refs. to earlier collections). Collection of docs. in C. Cross, The Royal Supremacy in the Elizabethan Church (1969). The most important modern studies are those by M. *Creighton (London, 1896), J. E. Neale (ibid., 1934), J. Hurstfield ('Teach Yourself History', 1960; Pelican, 1971), and P. [B.] Johnson (London, 1974). Other studies by M. Waldman (ibid., 1952), and [M.] E. [H.] Jenkins (ibid., 1958), C. Erickson (ibid., 1983), and C. A. Haigh (ibid., 1988). W. [T.] MacCaffrey, The Shaping of the Elizabethan Regime (Princeton, NJ, 1968; London, 1969); id., Queen Elizabeth and the Making of Policy, 1572–1588 (Princeton, NJ, 1981); id., Elizabeth I: War and Politics 1588–1603 (ibid., 1992). W. P. Haugaard, Elizabeth and the English Reformation (Cambridge, 1968). C. [A.] Haigh (ed.), The Reign of Elizabeth I (Basingstoke and London, 1984). D. [N. J.] MacCulloch, The Later Reformation in England 1547–1603 (ibid., 1990). D. M. Dean and N. L. Jones (eds.), The Parliaments of Elizabethan England (Oxford, 1990).

Elkesaites. A Jewish sect which arose c. AD 116 in Mesopotamia. They took their name from their sacred writing, the 'Book of Elkesai', which professed to contain the revelation given to Elkesai ('hidden power') by an angel 96 miles high. In the early 3rd cent. this book was taken over by Judaeo-Christians who held beliefs similar to those of the *Ebionites, insisting on a very strict observance of the rites and teaching of the Mosaic Law, rejecting sacrifices and certain biblical books, esp. the Pauline Epistles, maintaining a *Docetic view of the Person of Christ, and placing great emphasis on the redemptive nature of Baptism. Their ethical and social teaching was ascetic in character. Almost all our knowledge of them derives from references in St *Hippolytus' Refutatio omnium haeresium (9. 13–17; 10. 29) and St *Epiphanius' Haereses (19; 30. 17; 53). It is disputed whether Alchasaios, the leader of a baptist sect, mentioned in the Greek life of *Mani, is to be identified with Elkesai.

Frags. of 'Book of Elkesai' collected by A. *Hilgenfeld in Novum Testamentum extra Canonem Receptum, fasc. 3 (Leipzig, 1866), pp. 153–67. W. Brandt, Elchasai: Ein Religionsstifter und sein Werk (1912). J. Thomas, Le Mouvement baptiste en Palestine et Syrie (Gembloux, 1935), esp. pp. 140–56. A. Heinrichs and L. Koenen, 'Mani und die Elchasaiten', Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik, 5 (1970), pp. 141–60. G. P. Luttikhuizen, The Revelation of Elchasai (Texte und Studien zum Antiken Judentum, 8; 1985). J. Irmscher in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn.; 1989), pp. 619–23; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 685–90.

Ellerton, John (1826–93), English hymn-writer. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was ordained in 1850 and held a succession of parochial appointments. He is esp. remembered for his many hymns, both original compositions and translations, among them being 'The day Thou gavest, Lord, is ended', 'Saviour, again to Thy dear Name we raise', and 'O Strength and Stay, upholding all creation'.

H. Housman, John Ellerton: Being a Collection of his Writings on Hymnology together with a Sketch of his Life and Works (1896; Life, pp. 15–181).

Ellicott, Charles John (1819–1905), English divine. Educated at St John's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow (1845), he subsequently occupied the chair of divinity at King's College, London (1858–61), and the Hulsean professorship at Cambridge (1860–1). In 1861 he became Dean of *Exeter and two years later Bp. of *Gloucester and Bristol. On the division of the see into two parts in 1897, he became Bp. of Gloucester, resigning in 1904. He sat on many commissions, being chairman of the British New Testament Revision Company 1870–81, of which he missed only 2 out of the 407 sittings. He edited a considerable number of the Pauline Epistles (Gal., 1854; others 1855–8; 1 Cor., 1887) and wrote several other theological and religious books.

His Addresses on the Revised Version of Holy Scripture (1901), forming the Charge to the Archdeaconry of Cirencester at the Visitation in Oct. 1901, were repr. in 1933. R. Bayne in DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 618 f.

Elmo, St, in Spain known as 'San Telmo'; since at least the 15th cent. the popular name for the Bl Peter Gonzalez (c. 1190–1246). Born in Castile, Peter became a canon, then dean, of Palencia, where his uncle was bishop. Soon afterwards he joined the *Dominicans in the same city. He became a tireless itinerant preacher. Called to the service of Ferdinand III, for a time he accompanied the King's campaign against the Moors in Andalucia. He spent his last ten years preaching in NW Spain and northern Portugal, concerning himself not only with the spiritual needs of the people, but also with their temporal needs, particularly the provision of bridges. He died in Tuy, which soon became the centre for his cult. He was regarded as a special patron of seafarers; this is prob. the reason he was given the name of an earlier patron of theirs, St Erasmus, known as Ermo or Elmo, one of the 14 *Auxiliary Saints and a martyr in the *Diocletianic persecutions (feast day, 2 June). The electrical discharge often seen at the mastheads and yard-arms of ships, known as St Elmo's fire, was interpreted as a sign of his protection. The cult of Peter Gonzalez was confirmed by *Benedict XIV in 1741. Feast day, 14 Apr.

The anonymous 13th-cent. 'Legenda B. Petri', together with a collection of miracles made in 1258, an office, and the decree confirming his cult, are pr. in H. Florez, OSA, España sagrada, 23 (Madrid, 1767) pp. 245–89. 16th-cent. Life by Stephanus Sampayo, OP, in AASS, Apr. 2 (1675), pp. 391–8. J. Gómez Sobrino, 'Documentos sobre San Telmo existentes en el Archivo de la Catedral de Tuy', Arquivo Histórico Dominicano Português, 3/1 (Porto, 1984), pp. 317–26. H. Sancho, S. Pedro González (Vergara, 1921); L. Galmés, OP, El Bienaventurado Fray Pedro González O.P. San Telmo (Biblioteca Dominicana, 13; Salamanca, 1991). A. Dávila, San Telmo: Notas sobre el desarrollo de su culto en las Antillas (Santo Domingo, 1983). On St Erasmus, AASS, Jun. 1 (1695), pp. 211–19.

Elohim (Heb. אֱלֹהִים, lit. 'gods'). Used occasionally in the OT of heathen gods, supernatural beings, or earthly judges, but generally of the God of Israel, for whom it is a very frequent term, esp. in what has often been reckoned the second oldest *Pentateuchal source (the supposed writer of which is therefore referred to by critics as '*E', or 'the Elohist'). The use of the plural form to describe the one God is frequently explained as a 'plural of majesty', though it may reflect a background in polytheistic culture.

Éloi, St. See ELIGIUS, ST.

Elphege, St. See ALPHEGE, ST.

Elvira, Council of. A Spanish Council held at the beginning of the 4th cent., traditionally dated c. 306, almost certainly at Granada. It passed 81 canons whose interest lies in the severe disciplinary penalties enforced for apostasy and adultery. It also required continence of all the clergy under pain of deposition (can. 33). Several of the canons order lifelong excommunication without reconciliation even at death.

Hardouin, 1 (1715), cols. 247–58; Mansi, 2 (1759), cols. 1–406. Crit. text in G. Martinez Diez, SJ, and F. Rodriguez, SJ (eds.), La Coleccion Canonica Hispana, 4 (1984), pp. 233–68. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (1; 1907), pp. 212–64. A. W. W. Dale, The Synod of Elvira and Christian Life in the Fourth Century: A Historical Essay (1882). L. *Duchesne, 'Le Concile d'Elvire et les Flamines chrétiens', Mélanges Renier (1886), pp. 159–74; V. C. de Clercq, CICM, Ossius of Cordova (Washington, DC, 1953), esp. pp. 85–117. S. Laeuchli, Power and Sexuality: The Emergence of Canon Law at the Synod of Elvira (Philadelphia, 1972), with Eng. tr. of the canons, pp. 126–35. M. Meigne, 'Concile ou Collection d'Elvire', RHE 70 (1975), pp. 361–87. D. Ramos-Lissón in J. Orlandis and D. Ramos-Lissón, Die Synoden auf der Iberischen Halbinsel bis zum Einbruch des Islam (1981), pp. 3–30. J. Gaudemet in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 317–48, s.v. 'Elvire II. Le Concile d'Elvire', with extensive bibl.

Ely. In 673 St *Etheldreda (Audrey) founded a *double monastery here for monks and nuns, endowing it with the principality of the Isle. After her death in 679, her shrine became a place of pilgrimage and the importance of Ely grew. In 870 the monastery was destroyed by the Danes, but in 970 it was restored, for monks only, by King Edgar and *Ethelwold, Bp. of *Winchester, and about 100 years later a new church, now the cathedral, was begun by Abbot Simeon (1082–93). In 1109 Henry I and Abp. *Anselm formed the see of Ely out of the large diocese of *Lincoln, and the prior and monks became the cathedral chapter. At the *Dissolution the prior became the dean, and eight canonries were founded (1541). In 1848 two of the canonries were attached to the Regius Professorships of Hebrew and Greek at Cambridge; by an Act of 1877 the latter was severed at the next vacancy in 1889 and joined to a new professorship of a theological character known as the Ely Professorship of Divinity (suppressed in 1980); the other chair was dissociated from the canonry in 1932. The cathedral, which contains every style of architecture from early Norman to late Perpendicular, is famous for its central octagon (1322–8), with its domed roof (known as 'The Lantern', completed in the 1340s), and other 14th cent. work including the magnificent Lady Chapel. Much of the monastic building has survived. The Grammar School was founded in 1541, and the Theological College in 1876 (opened in 1881 but closed in 1964).

Liber Eliensis ed. E. O. Blake (Camden Society, 3rd ser. 92; 1962). F. R. Chapman (ed.), Sacrist Rolls of Ely (2 vols., Cambridge, 1907). S. J. A. Evans (ed.), Ely Chapter Ordinances and Visitation Records, 1241 1515 (Camden Miscellany, 17; 1940). W. E. Dickson (ed.), A Catalogue of Ancient Choral Services and Anthems, preserved . . . in the Cathedral Church of Ely (1861). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 457–500. J. Bentham, The History and Antiquities of the Conventual and Cathedral Church of Ely from the Foundation of the Monastery, A.D. 673, to the Year 1771 (Cambridge, 1771; 2nd edn., 1812, with suppl. by W. Stevenson, Norwich, 1817). T. D. Atkinson, An Architectural History of the Benedictine Monastery of Saint Etheldreda at Ely (Cambridge, 1932, with a vol. of plates). British Archaeological Association Conference Transactions for the Year 1976, 2: Medieval Art and Architecture at Ely Cathedral (1979). G. Zarnecki, The Early Sculpture of Ely Cathedral (1958). D. [M.] Owen, 'The Muniments of Ely Cathedral Priory', in C. N. L. Brooke and others (eds.), Church and Government in the Middle Ages: Essays Presented to C. R. Cheney on his 70th Birthday (Cambridge, 1976), pp. 157–76. S. J. A. Evans, 'Ely Almonry Boys and Choristers in the Later Middle Ages', in C. J. Davies (ed.), Studies presented to Sir Hilary Jenkinson (1957), pp. 155–63. E. Miller, The Abbey and Bishopric of Ely: The Social History of an Ecclesiastical Estate from the Tenth to the Early Fourteenth Century (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, NS 1; 1951). M. D. Ellis and L. F. Salzman in VCH, Cambridge and the Isle of Ely, 2, ed. L. F. Salzman (1948), pp. 199–210. Ely Cathedral Monographs (Ely, 1973 ff.). D. M. Owen and D. Thurley (eds.), The King's School, Ely: A Collection of Documents relating to the History of the School and its Scholars (Cambridge Antiquarian Records Society, 5; Cambridge, 1982). H. Dauphin, OSB, in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 348–66, s.v.

Elzevir (or Elsevier), 16th–17th cent. Dutch family of printers at *Leiden and Amsterdam, celebrated for the neatness and accuracy of their editions, esp. their pocket texts. In 1624 they issued their first edition of the Greek NT, which, though it was little more than a reprint of T. *Beza's text of 1565, at once won favour and was accepted for some two centuries as the *Textus Receptus.

A. C. J. Willems, Les Elzévier (1880); G. Berghman, Études (1885) and Nouvelles Études (1897) sur la bibliographie elzévirienne; H. B. Copinger, The Elzevier Press (1927); D. W. Davies, The World of the Elzeviers, 1580–1712 (The Hague, 1954); S. L. Hartz, The Elseviers and their Contemporaries: An Illustrated Commentary (Amsterdam, 1955). H. J. de Jonge, Daniel Heinsius and the Textus Receptus of the New Testament: A Study of his Contribution to the Editions of the Greek Testament Printed by the Elzeviers at Leiden in 1624 and 1633 (Leiden, 1971).

Ember Days. Four groups each of three days, in the Church year, namely the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after St *Lucy (13 Dec.), *Ash Wednesday, *Whitsunday, and *Holy Cross Day (14 Sept.) respectively, which have been observed as days of fasting and abstinence in the Churches of the W. Their early history and original purpose are obscure. At first there were apparently only three groups, perhaps taken over from the pagan religious observances connected with harvest, vintage, and seed-time; in this form they traditionally date back to the time of Pope *Callistus I (*c.*220) and were certainly well established at Rome in the time of Pope *Leo (440–61), who preached a series of Embertide sermons. From Rome their observance spread through W. Christendom. In 1969 in the RC Church the traditional Ember days were replaced by days of prayer for various needs at times to be determined by regional conferences of bishops. From at least the 5th cent. the Ember seasons were recognized as esp. appropriate for *Ordinations, and the BCP provides prayers for those 'to be admitted into Holy Orders' to be said every day in the Ember Weeks. The association of Ember days with prayer for ordination candidates is preserved in modern Anglican liturgies, even when the usual times for Ordinations has changed. Thus the ASB places two groups of Ember days in the weeks before the Sundays nearest the feasts of St *Peter and St *Michael and All Angels.

G. *Morin, OSB, 'L'Origine des Quatre Temps', Rev. Bén. 14 (1897), pp. 337–46. L. Fischer, Die kirchlichen Quatember: Ihre Entstehung, Entwicklung und Bedeutung (Veröffentlichungen aus dem Kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, 4, 3; 1914). K. *Holl, Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte, 2 (1928), no. 9, 'Die Entstehung der vier Fastenzeiten in der griechischen Kirche' [1923], pp. 155–203. G. G. Willis, Essays in Early Roman Liturgy (Alcuin Club Collections, 46; 1964), pp. 49–98. T. J. Talley, 'The Origin of the Ember Days. An Inconclusive Postscript', in P. De Clerck and E. Palazzo (eds.), Rituels: Mélanges offerts à Pierre-Marie Gy, O.P. (1990), pp. 465–72. A. Molien in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1447–55, s.v. 'Quatre-Temps'; R. E. McNally in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 296–8, s.v.

Embolism (Gk. ἐμβολισμός, 'intercalation'). The name given to the prayer in the Roman Mass inserted between the *Lord's Prayer and the Prayer for Peace. Its opening words, 'Libera nos, quaesumus, Domine, ab omnibus malis', take up the final words of the Lord's Prayer ('Libera nos a malo') which has just preceded it. Many E. liturgies have a similar prayer at this point. The word is also used (not in a specifically religious sense) to denote the difference of days in the calendar between the lunar year of 354 days and the solar year of $365\frac{1}{4}$ days, also known as the '*epact'.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 352–63; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 284–93, with full refs.

Embury, Philip (1728–75). One of the earliest *Methodist preachers in America. A native of Ireland, he was converted by J. *Wesley in 1752, and began to preach soon afterwards. In 1760 he emigrated to America, but did not begin to preach there till 1766. In 1768 he built the first Methodist church in America, in New York, but in 1770 he removed to Camden, where he founded a Methodist society.

F. Baker, From Wesley to Asbury (Durham, NC, 1976), esp. pp. 40–4. H. E. Starr in Dict. Amer. Biog. 6 (1931), pp. 125 f.; A. B. Moss in N. B. Harmon (ed.), The Encyclopedia of World Methodism, 1 (Nashville [1974]), p. 772, s.v.

Emerson, Ralph Waldo (1803–82), American essayist, philosopher, and poet. The son of a *Unitarian minister of Boston, he was educated at Boston Latin School and Harvard College, and trained for the Unitarian ministry at the Divinity School, Cambridge, Mass. He was 'approbated to preach' in 1826 and ministered at Boston from 1829 to 1832, when he resigned owing to his extremely unconventional views on the *Eucharist; he continued to preach until 1847. On a visit to Europe in 1833 he met T. *Carlyle, S. T. *Coleridge, and W. *Wordsworth, with the first of whom he formed a close friendship. Returning to America the same year, he settled at Concord, Mass., where, with the exception of the period of a second visit to Britain in 1847–8, he remained for the rest of his life as a lecturer on literature and philosophy.

Emerson's philosophy was founded on a combination of rationalism and mysticism. Although he disowned the name, it appears that he fundamentally believed in 'Transcendentalism'—the doctrine that 'the highest revelation is that God is in every man'. It follows that man contains all that is needful in himself and that everything that happens to him has its origin within him. In his lecture on The Defects of Historical Christianity (delivered 1835) he went so far as to maintain that even redemption was to be sought within the soul. In spite, however, of the exalted position which he accorded to man philosophically, he had little liking for democracy and was only reluctantly led (by 1856) to support the cause of the abolition of slavery. At least from the 1840s he enjoyed a wide influence and popularity enhanced by the freshness and imagination of his style. From 1840 to 1844 Emerson was editor of The Dial, a Transcendentalist periodical in which some of his poetry was published. His prose works, of which the majority were based on his lectures, include Nature (1838), two series of Essays (1841, 1844), Representative Men (1850), English Traits (1856), Conduct of Life (1860), Society and Solitude (1870) and Letters and Social Aims (1876). They are mainly ethical in purpose, but are possessed of an underlying religious tone. His poetry, though attractive in its inspiration, lacks the polish of his prose.

Complete Works, ed. by E. W. Emerson (Centenary Edition, 12 vols., Boston, New York, and London, c. 1903–4); also ed. A. [R.] Ferguson and others (Cambridge, Mass., 1971 ff.); Journals, ed. E. W. Emerson and W. E. Forbes (10 vols., Boston and New York, 1909–14); also ed. W. H. Gilman and others (16 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1960–82); Letters, ed. R. L. Rusk (6 vols., New York, 1939); Early Lectures, ed. S. E. Whichter, R. E. Spiller, and W. E. Williams (3 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1959–72); Complete Sermons, ed. A. J. von Frank and others (4 vols., Columbia, Mo., 1989–92). Selections ed. F. I. Carpenter (New York [1934]) and C. Bode and M. Cowley, The Portable Emerson (Harmondsworth, 1981). J. E. Cabot, A Memoir of Ralph Waldo Emerson (2 vols., 1887). J. Benton, Emerson as a Poet (New York, 1883); O. W. Holmes, Ralph Waldo Emerson (1885); G. E. Woodberry, Ralph Waldo Emerson (New York, 1907); K. W. Cameron, Emerson the Essayist (2 vols., Raleigh, NC, 1945); R. L. Rusk, The Life of Ralph Waldo Emerson (New York, 1949; London, 1957); J. Bishop, Emerson on the Soul (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1964); G. W. Allen, Waldo Emerson: A Biography (New York, 1981); B. L. Packer, Emerson's Fall: A New Interpretation of the Major Essays (New York, 1982); J. Myerson (ed.), Emerson Centenary Essays (Carbondale, Ill. [1982]); J. McAleer, Ralph Waldo Emerson: Days of Encounter (Boston [1984]); A. D. Hodder, Emerson's Rhetoric of Revelation: Nature, the Reader and the Apocalypse Within (University Park, Pa., and London [1989]). F. O. Matthiessen, American Renaissance: Art and Expression in the Age of Emerson and Whitman [1941], pp. 3–75. M. R. Konvitz (ed.), The Recognition of Ralph Waldo Emerson: Selected Criticism since 1837 (Ann Arbor, Mich. [1972]). J. Myerson, Ralph Waldo Emerson: A Descriptive Bibliography (Pittsburgh, 1982); R. E. Barkholder and J. Myerson, Emerson: An Annotated Secondary Bibliography (ibid., 1985).

Eminence. A title of honour given to a *cardinal of the RC Church. Until a decree of *Urban VIII in 1630 confined its use to the cardinals, the Imperial electors and the Grand Master of the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem (who still retains it), it had been more widely used. Before that date cardinals were entitled 'Illustrissimi' or 'Reverendissimi'.

Emmanuel. See IMMANUEL.

Emmaus. The village in which the Lord made His Resurrection appearance to two of the disciples (Lk. 24: 13–35). It was 60 furlongs from *Jerusalem (Lk. 24: 13; but acc. to a variant reading 160, perhaps an accommodation to the ancient identification of this Emmaus with that mentioned in 1 Macc. 3: 40, etc.). Among suggested sites are Kuloniyeh ('Colony') to the W, Khamasah to the SW, and Amwas, some 19 miles WNW of Jerusalem.

L. H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Emmaüs: Sa basilique et son histoire (1932). P. Duvignau, Emmaüs: Le Site—le mystère (1937). J. Murphy-O'Connor, OP, The Holy Land: An Archaeological Guide from Earliest Times to 1700 (2nd edn., Oxford, 1986), pp. 133, 270 f., and 320. M. Avi-Yonah and M. Gichon in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 2 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 385–9, s.v.

Emmerick, Anna Katharina (1774–1824), ecstatic. She entered an *Augustinian house at Agnetenberg, Dülmen, Westph., in 1802, where she aroused the dislike of some of the laxer members by the fervour of her spiritual life. In 1812 the house was closed by order of the civil authorities, and she took refuge in a private house, where she had a serious illness. At about this time she received the *Stigmata of the Passion on her body. Her 'Meditations on the Passion' (Das bittere Leiden unseres Herrn und Heilandes Jesus Christ) were taken down by Clemens Brentano (1778–1842) and published in 1833 (Eng. tr., 1862). Other visions were collected by Brentano and published after his death as Leben der heil. Jungfrau Maria (1852; Eng. tr., 1954) and a further collection of Brentano's notes were edited by K. E. Schmöger, CSSR, Das Leben unsers Herrn und Heilandes Jesu Christi (3 vols., 1858–60).

Crit. edns. of Das bittere Leiden, both based on Brentano's notes, by A. Michelitsch (Graz, 1935) and D. K. Bücher (Munich, 1937). W. Hümpfner, OESA, Clemens Brentanos Glaubwürdigkeit in seinen Emmerick-Aufzeichnungen (Würzburg, 1923). Biog. by K. E. Schmöger (2 vols., Freiburg i.B., 1867–70; Eng. tr., New York, 1885), and many others. Best modern Life is H. J. Seller, Im Banne des Kreuzes: Lebensbild der stigmatisierten Augustinerin Anna Katharina Emmerick (Würzburg, 1940). J. Adam, SCJ, Clemens Brentanos Emmerick-Erlebnis (Freiburg i.B., 1956). O. Katann, 'Die Glaubwürdigkeit von Clemens Brentanos Emmerick-Berichten. Zum gegenwärtigen Stand der Quellen und der Forschung', Literaturwissenschaftliches Jahrbuch, NF 7 (1966), pp. 145–94. H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Problem of Anne Catherine Emmerich', Month, 138 (1921), pp. 237–48, 344–56, 429–39, 519–30, repr. in Surprising Mystics ed. J. H. Crehan, SJ (1955), pp. 38–99. W. Hümpfner in Dict. Sp. 4 (1960), cols. 622–7, s.v.

Ems, Congress of. A conference attended by representatives of the four archbishops of Mainz, Trier, *Cologne, and Salzburg, which was held at Bad Ems in Hesse-Nassau in 1786. Its object was to carry into effect the teachings of 'Justinus Febronius' (J. N. von *Hontheim), which repudiated Papal interference in all but purely spiritual matters. It issued on 25 Aug. the 'Punctation of Ems' (Emser Punktation), proposing, inter alia, that in future appeals to Rome in Germany should be restrained, the bishops should have the control of matrimonial dispensations, and Papal bulls and other official Roman decisions should not be binding until accepted by the German episcopate. The project failed to secure the support of the German bishops, who interpreted the plan as a device of the archbishops to aggrandize their own position.

L. *Pastor, The History of the Popes from the Close of the Middle Ages (Eng. tr.), 40 (1953), pp. 43–65. M. Höhler (ed.), Des kurtrierischen Geistlichen Rats Heinrich Aloys Arnoldi Tagbuch über die zu Ems gehaltene Zusammenkunft der vier Erzbischöflichen . . . Deputierten, 1786 (Mainz, 1915). C. Mirbt in PRE (3rd edn.), 5 (1898), pp. 342–50; H. Raab in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 441–4; F. Maass in NCE 5 (1967), p. 329, all s.v.

Emser, Hieronymus (1478–1527), editor of earlier writers, secular essayist, and controversialist. From about 1504 he was secretary to Duke George of Saxony. He is chiefly remembered for his controversy with M. *Luther, which lasted from 1519 till his death, and was popular and scurrilous in character. He disliked Luther's 'December Bible' of 1522, and published a counter-edition in 1527, made to resemble it as much as possible, with introduction and notes added. In 1530 the *Brethren of the Common Life settled at Rostock issued it in a Low German translation. Emser's Bible went into over 100 editions in the 16th, 17th and 18th cents.

His first writings against Luther ed. F. Thurnhofer in the Corpus Catholicorum, 4 (1921); his writings in support of the Mass ed. T. Freudenberger, ibid. 28 (1959). Life by G. Kawerau (Halle, 1898). H. Smolinsky, Augustin von Alveldt und Hieronymus Emser: Eine Untersuchung zur Kontroverstheologie der frühen Reformationszeit im Herzogtum Sachsen (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 122; 1983). E. Iserloh in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 445 f., s.v., with detailed refs.; J. Steinruck in TRE 9 (1982), pp. 576–80, s.v.

Enabling Act. The commonly used name for the Church of England Assembly (Powers) Act 1919, which gave the C of E a general power, subject to the control of Parliament and the Act of *Uniformity 1662, to legislate for itself. Its provisions closely followed recommendations in the Report on the Relations of Church and State (1916), and incorporated as a schedule the Appendix to the Addresses made by the *Convocations of Canterbury and York to the King in May 1919. It conferred legislative powers on the *Church Assembly, established an Ecclesiastical Committee consisting of 15 members of each of the Houses of Parliament, nominated by the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker respectively, to which its measures were to be submitted before proceeding to Parliament, which could pass or reject (but not amend) them. It also gave legal status to *Parochial Church Councils.

Enarxis (Gk. Ἔναρξις, lit. 'beginning'). In the Byzantine liturgy, the section between the *Proskomide and the *Little Entrance. It consists of three Diaconal Litanies, each followed by Psalms or antiphons sung by the choir, and ending (on some occasions) with the *Beatitudes. The celebrant meanwhile silently recites the prayers known as the 'Prayers of the Antiphon' (Εὐχαὶ Ἀντιφώνου); the third of these is the 'Prayer of St *Chrysostom' found in the BCP. The Enarxis was prob. first introduced into the Liturgy in the 9th cent.

9th cent. text in Brightman, LEW, pp. 310–12; current text, pp. 362–7.

encolpion (Gk. ἐγκόλπιον), also known as the *panagia. An oval medallion worn by bishops in the E. Church, suspended from the neck by a chain. The figure of Christ or the BVM is normally depicted upon it, and relics are sometimes placed inside it. Certain prelates have the privilege of wearing two encolpia.

enclosure. See CLAUSURA.

Encratites. A title applied to several groups of early Christians who carried their ascetic practice and doctrine to extremes which were in most cases considered heretical. They are referred to by *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Hippolytus, who respectively call them ἐγκρατεῖς, ἐγκρατηταί, and ἐγκρατῖται. The name, however, seems never to have been used very precisely, but to have been applied in a general sense to many of the *Gnostic, *Ebionite, and *Docetic sects. They commonly rejected the use of wine and flesh-meat, and often also of marriage. It was largely in Encratite circles that the *Apocryphal Gospels and Acts were produced.

Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 1. 28; Clement Al., Strom. 7. 17 (108. 2), etc.; Hippolytus, Haer. 8. 20; cf. also *Epiphanius, Haer. 46, 47. A certain Julius Cassian, the author of a book Περὶ Εὐνουχίας, was reckoned a leading exponent of Encratite doctrines, while St *Jerome (Ep. 48. 2) names *Tatian as the princeps encratitarum. G. Blond, 'L'"Hérésie" encratite vers la fin du quatrième siècle', Rech. S.R. 31 (1944), pp. 159–210; F. Bolgiani, 'La tradizione eresiologica sull'encratismo', Atti della Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, II. Classe di Scienze Morali, Storiche et Filologiche, 91 (1957), pp. 343–419; U. Bianchi (ed.), La Tradizione dell'Enkrateia: ... Atti del Colloquio Internazionale, Milano, 20–23 aprile 1982 (1985). H. Chadwick in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 343–65, s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. s.v. TATIAN.

encyclical. A circular letter sent to all the churches of a given area. In early times the word might be used of a letter sent out by any bishop, but in modern RC usage the term is restricted to such letters as are sent out worldwide by the Pope. It has also been used from the first (1867) of the letters issued by the Anglican bishops at the end of the *Lambeth Conferences.

Encyclopaedists. The name given to contributors to the French Encyclopédie, a large collaborative work (28 vols., 1751–2). Edited by D. *Diderot and (initially) J. Le R. *D'Alembert, with some 160 contributors, it developed out of a project to translate the Cyclopedia of Ephraim Chambers. The first two volumes appeared with official approval in 1751–2, but the next five volumes aroused growing clerical opposition, and the Encyclopédie was formally banned in 1759. Diderot nevertheless continued his editorial work, and in 1765 was able to publish the remaining ten volumes of text under a false imprint; publication of the eleven volumes of plates were completed in 1772. Other editors published four supplementary volumes of text and one of plates at Paris and Amsterdam in 1776–7, followed by two volumes of tables issued in 1780.

The Encyclopédie sets out to review the full extent of human achievement in the arts and sciences from a purely secular standpoint. Many articles on religious topics were prudently entrusted to sound theologians, but the general tone of the works is that of rationalist humanism, and anticlerical opinions, scepticism concerning the claims of revealed religion, and pleas for religious, intellectual, and political liberty are everywhere insinuated into the vast mass of accurate and up-to-date scholarly and practical information. The religious views of the editors and major contributors (who included C. L. J. de S. *Montesquieu, *Voltaire, and J.-J. *Rousseau) ranged from *deism to militant atheism, but they were united in their opposition to Catholic orthodoxy and in their demand for toleration. The Encyclopédie became a rallying-point for opponents of established beliefs and practices (the 'philosophes'), in the political and social as well as the religious spheres.

J. Lough (ed.), The Encyclopédie of Diderot and D'Alembert: Selected Articles (1954). J. Morley, Diderot and the Encyclopaedists (2 vols., 1878); F. Venturi, Le origini dell'Enciclopedia (1946; 2nd edn., 1963); N. N. Schargo, History in the Encyclopédie (New York, 1947). D. H. Gordon and N. L. Torrey, The Censoring of Diderot's Encyclopédie and the Re-established Text (New York, 1947). P. Grosclaude, Un Audacieux Message: L'Encyclopédie (1951); J. Proust, Diderot et l'Encyclopédie (1962; 2nd edn., 1967); J. Lough, Essays on the Encyclopédie of Diderot and d'Alembert (1968); id., The Encyclopédie (1971), and other works of this author. R. [C.] Darnton, The Business of Enlightenment: A Publishing History of the Encyclopédie 1775–1800 (Cambridge, Mass., 1979). R. N. Schwab and others, Inventory of Diderot's Encyclopédie (Studies on Voltaire and the Eighteenth Century, 80, 83, 85, 91–3, and 223; Geneva and later Oxford, 1971–84). F. A. and S. L. Kafker, The Encyclopedists as Individuals: A Biographical Dictionary of the Authors of the Encyclopédie (ibid. 257; 1988). See also bibl. to DIDEROT, D'ALEMBERT, etc.

energumen (Gk. ἐνεργούμενος). In ancient Christian literature a term used of demoniacs and others possessed of abnormal mental and physical states, esp. insanity. Following the example of the Lord, the Church treated them with special pity and care. They received the ministrations of *exorcists. At the Eucharist they were normally dismissed at the end of the *Missa Catechumenorum with prayer and blessing, though if not violent they might be admitted to communion. They were debarred from ordination, even after cure.

E. *Martène, OSB, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, 3 (1702), cap. 9, pp. 497–530. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 1, 1922), cols. 964–78, s.vv. 'Exorcisme', 'Exorciste'; T. Klauser in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 51–3, s.v. 'Energumenoi'.

England, Church of. See CHURCH OF ENGLAND (for history); ANGLICANISM (for theological outlook).

English Church Music, School of. See ROYAL SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC.

English Church Union. A society formed in 1859 as the 'Church of England Protection Society', and renamed in 1860 the 'English Church Union', when it incorporated various local Church societies. Its object was to defend, and further the spread of, *High Church principles in the C of E. The Union championed many priests during the ritual prosecutions, and frustrated many attacks upon Catholic practices. In 1934 the ECU was united with the Anglo-Catholic Congress to form the '*Church Union'. In 1868 Charles Lindley Wood, afterwards Viscount *Halifax, was elected president and was for many years its dominating personality.

G. Bayfield Roberts, The History of the English Church Union, 1859–1894 (1895). J. G. Lockhart, Charles Lindley, Viscount Halifax, 1 (1935), pp. 137–56, 173–91; 2 (1936), pp. 113–24.

English College, Rome. The seminary for English candidates for the RC priesthood. Originally founded in 1362 as a hospice for English pilgrims, it was refounded as a seminary in 1579 by *Gregory XIII; its students had to take an oath to go to England when it should seem good to their superiors. Soon afterwards its direction was entrusted to the *Jesuits, who were in charge of it until the suppression of the Society in 1773. It then passed into the hands of Italian secular priests, under whose direction it remained till it was closed during the invasion of the French. In 1818 it was restored by *Pius VII, and since then its rectors have always been members of the English secular clergy, the most famous of them being N. P. S. *Wiseman, afterwards cardinal.

Liber Ruber Venerabilis Collegii Anglorum de Urbe, ed. by W. Kelly, assisted by O. Littledale, S. Roxburgh, and I. Vaughan, I. (1) Annales Collegii; Nomina Alumnorum (*Catholic Record Society, 37 and 40; 1940–3), incl. bibl., 1, p. xiv, note i. Incomplete Eng. tr. by H. Foley, SJ, Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, 6 (1880), pp. 1–540, with other material from the College archives. The Responsa Scholarum of the English College, Rome, 1598–1685, ed. A. Kenny (Catholic Record Society, 54–55; 1962–3). The English Hospice in Rome, with preface by G. W. Tickle (The Venerabile, 21; 1962; also other arts. in this periodical). M. E. Williams, The Venerable English College Rome: A History, 1579–1979 (1979). See also Lives of W. *Allen, R. *Parsons, and N. P. S. Wiseman.

English Hymnal, The. This widely used Anglican hymnal, pub. in 1906, was the result of a considered attempt by a group, mainly of Anglo-Catholic sympathies, to eradicate banalities and generally to raise the quality of English hymnody, in the matter both of words and music. The editorial committee responsible for the words included W. J. Birkbeck, P. *Dearmer, and T. A. *Lacey, while the musical editor was R. *Vaughan Williams. It included *Office Hymns and *Propers for the Sung Eucharist, both taken mainly from the *Sarum books. A new edition, with extensive revision of the plainchant music by J. H. Arnold, was issued in 1933. The English Hymnal Service Book, pub. 1962, contains hymns from the English Hymnal, the Psalter pointed for chanting, J. *Merbecke's setting of the Holy Communion, the versicles and responses at Mattins and Evensong, and other material which obviates the need to provide copies of the BCP. In 1975 English Praise, a supplement to English Hymnal, was pub., containing 106 hymns not in the parent book. A new version of the original book, designed to meet the needs occasioned by liturgical revision and changes in custom and feeling, was issued in 1986 under the title New English Hymnal. It includes a congregational setting for the Rite A Communion Service of the ASB, a number of responsorial psalm settings, and other liturgical matter.

English Ladies (Ger. Englische Fräulein). A popular name, esp. in Germany, for the 'Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary' founded by Mary *Ward, q.v.

Enhypostasia (Gk. ἐν 'in', and ὑπόστασις, 'person'). The doctrine that, in the Incarnate Christ, though the humanity has no 'person' (hypostasis) of its own, it is not on that account 'anhypostatic' (deprived of a hypostasis), but finds its hypostasis in the hypostasis of the Logos. Thus the distinguishing features of the particular man who Jesus is, as well as the essential qualities of the species (mankind) to which He belongs, are attributed to the Divine hypostasis. The notion occurs in the work of *Leontius of Byzantium, but is fully exploited only by *Leontius of Jerusalem and the *Neo-Chalcedonians (or Cyrilline Chalcedonians), who used it to give fuller expression to the human side of Christ's work without endangering the unity of His person. It was taken up in later Byzantine theology, notably by St *John of Damascus. In modern times the doctrine has been defended by H. M. Relton (A Study in Christology, 1917). The noun ἐνυποστασία is apparently not found in the ancient writers, though the theologians mentioned make abundant use of its cognates.

A Patristic Greek Lexicon, ed. G. W. H. Lampe (Oxford, 1968), pp. 485–6, s.v. ἐνυπόστατος.

Enlightenment, the. Though the term originated as a translation of the German Aufklärung*, it is now applied more generally to the movement of ideas which characterized much of 18th-cent. Europe. In many ways it was a continuation of the scientific spirit of the previous age, esp. of the thought of R. *Descartes, J. *Locke, and I. *Newton. Its adherents distrusted all authority and tradition in matters of intellectual inquiry, and believed that truth could be attained only through reason, observation, and experiment. On the whole, however, they were more socially committed than their predecessors. They sought to diffuse knowledge as much as to create it and where possible to use their scientific method in the service of their humanitarian ideals of tolerance, justice, and the moral and material welfare of mankind. The more scientific among them (e.g. J. Bentham and other *Utilitarians) tried to discover 'Newtonian' laws governing man and his social relationships, believing that if these could be found, man would be in a position to control his destiny. Others, such as C. L. J. de S. *Montesquieu, D. *Hume, and Adam Smith (1723–90), attempted a more open-minded investigation of the nature of society. A third group (esp. French writers such as P. H. D. d'Holbach (1723–89) and J.-J. *Rousseau) were more revolutionary in their programme. The movement embraced a wide spectrum of views and aims, incl. *Voltaire's defence of the victims of religious persecution, the encouragement of technology in D. *Diderot's Encyclopédie, and attempts to improve legal practice in Italy and the economy in Spain, but its adherents were united by a common belief in 'reason' and zeal for human welfare. In general, with notable exceptions such as Hume and I. *Kant, they were propagandists rather than philosophers. But their activity transformed the intellectual map of Europe.

The thinkers of the Enlightenment often came into conflict with the Church. Some, such as d'Holbach, were dogmatic atheists; others, such as Hume and Diderot, rejected religion less vehemently. The majority were prob. *deists. Yet, though the movement as a whole was undoubtedly hostile to orthodox Christianity, there were many exceptions to this generalization. Even in relatively intolerant Catholic countries, such as France and Spain, it was possible for men such as A. R. J. Turgot (1727–81) and G. M. de Jovellanos (1744–1811) to reconcile their faith with 'enlightened' ideas. In Protestant lands, where 'rational theology' was developing within the Churches, there was more co-operation; and in Scotland, e.g., many of the leaders of the Enlightenment were also ministers of the Kirk.

See also AUFKLÄRUNG.

There is a very extensive lit. E. Cassirer, Die Philosophie der Aufklärung (Tübingen, 1932; Eng. tr., Princeton, NJ, 1951); P. Hazard, La Crise de la conscience européenne (3 vols., 1935; Eng. tr., 1953); id., La Pensée européenne au XVIIIe siècle de Montesquieu à Lessing (3 vols., 1946; Eng. tr., 1954). P. Gay, The Party of Humanity: Studies in the French Enlightenment (New York and London, 1964); id., The Enlightenment: An Interpretation (ibid., 1967); L. G. Crocker, An Age of Crisis: Man and World in Eighteenth Century French Thought (Baltimore, 1959); id., Nature and Culture: Ethical Thought in the French Enlightenment (ibid., 1963). R. J. White, The Anti-Philosophers: A Study of the Philosophes in Eighteenth-Century France (1970). G. R. Cragg, Reason and Authority in the Eighteenth Century (Cambridge, 1964). Collection of previously pub. arts. by R. Mortier, Le Cœur et la Raison (Oxford, Brussels, and Paris, 1990). A. Richardson, History Sacred and Profane (Bampton Lectures for 1962; 1964), pp. 41–5, 90–103. E. Hegel in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 435–9, s.v., with further bibl.

Ennodius, St, Magnus Felix (*c.*473–521) Christian rhetorician and Bp. of Pavia. Born at Arles, he was brought up probably at Pavia (possibly at Milan). After ordination as deacon *c.*493 by St Epiphanius, Bp. of Pavia, he went to Milan, where he taught rhetoric until consecrated Bp. of Pavia *c.*514. In the dispute about the succession to Pope Anastasius II (d. 498), he defended *Symmachus and wrote a libellus against those who challenged the synod of 502, maintaining that the Papal office was de jure exempt from all interference from the secular power. He was twice sent by Pope *Hormisdas on missions to Anastasius, Patr. of *Constantinople, to effect a reconciliation with the E. His abundant writings suffer from a turgid style, but are valuable through the incidental light they throw on the happenings and cultural ideals of his age. They include an account of his own religious experiences ('Eucharisticon de Vita Sua'), a long panegyric on the Arian King *Theodoric (507), a Life of St Epiphanius of Pavia, several discourses ('Dictiones'), many epitaphs and epigrams, and a considerable collection of hymns, modelled on those of St *Ambrose. His work reflects an attempt to combine a fundamentally pagan culture with the profession of the Christian creed. His epitaph survives in the church of S. Michele in Pavia. Feast day, 17 July.

His writings, ed. by J. *Sirmond (Paris, 1611), are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 63. 13–364. There are good critical edns. by W. Hartel (CSEL, 1882) and F. Vogel (MGH, 1884, with full prolegomena). G. Bardy, 'Saint Ennodius de Pavie', in J. R. Palanque (ed.), Le Christianisme et l'Occident barbare (1945), pp. 229–64; L. Navarra, 'Contributo storico di Ennodio', Augustinianum, 14 (1974), pp. 315–42. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 478 f. and 653. E. M. Young in DCB 2 (1880), pp. 123 f.; J. Fontaine in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 398–421, s.v.

Enoch, OT patriarch. The OT records nothing of Enoch except that he was the father of Methuselah and that 'he walked with God and he was not; for God took him' (Gen. 5: 24). In Jewish tradition many legends became attached to him and in the NT his ascension is referred to at Heb. 11: 5. For the pseudepigraphical books ascribed to Enoch, see the following entry.

Enoch, Books of. (1) 1 Enoch, or 'Ethiopic Enoch' as it is sometimes called from the fact that it survives in its most complete form in Ethiopic, is one of the most important Jewish *Pseudepigrapha. It embodies a series of revelations, of which Enoch is the professed recipient, on such matters as the origin of evil, the angels and their destinies, and the nature of *Gehenna and *Paradise. Apart from the continuous Ethiopic text, several Greek fragments have come to light (some of them extensive), a single Latin fragment, and a number of fragments in *Aramaic and Hebrew (representing the remains of ten or more separate MSS) from *Qumran. The original language of the work appears to have been Aramaic, or possibly Hebrew.

As it is preserved in Ethiopic, the work is clearly composite. About the precise divisions and their dates there is some disagreement. R. H. *Charles divided it as follows into five sections composed at different dates: Section 1 (chs. 1–36) incorporates portions of 'The Book of Noah' and was written before 170 BC; 2 (chs. 37–71) contains the 'Parables' or 'Similitudes', *c.*105–64 BC; 3 (chs. 72–82), 'The Book of the Heavenly Luminaries', before 110 BC; 4 (chs. 83–90), 'The Dream Visions', *c.*165–161 BC; and 5 (chs. 91–104), incorporating an 'Apocalypse of Weeks', contains material of various dates.

The passages on 'the Son of Man' in the 'Parables' or 'Similitudes' (chs. 37–71) have been widely held to have influenced the NT writings; and other NT titles, such as 'the Righteous One' and 'the Elect One' have been said to have appeared here first as Messianic designations. But this view has been increasingly questioned, especially since the discovery of the Qumran fragments; for although all the other sections of 1 Enoch are well represented in these fragments, chs. 37–71 are not represented at all. Nor are they represented in the Greek and Latin fragments. It is probable, therefore, that they are a later (Christian) insertion into the Book, and that it was the NT which influenced them rather than vice versa. But about the value of the other sections of the Book for understanding the NT there can be no doubt. 1 En. 1: 9 is explicitly quoted as Enoch's in the Ep. of Jude (vv. 14–15), and themes appear to be taken up elsewhere, e.g. in 2 Peter 2. 1 En. 79: 56 is quoted as 'Scripture' in the Ep. of *Barnabas (16: 4; cf. 4: 3); and *Tertullian also regarded the Book as Scripture, although he admitted that he knew of 'some' who did not (Cult. Fem. 1. 3. 1).

(2) 2 Enoch, or 'Slavonic Enoch', or 'The Book of the Secrets of Enoch' (a title based on the titles in some of the MSS), has many points of contact with 1 Enoch, although there are no literary parallels. It survives only in Old Church Slavonic, the language of the Russian Church, and first came to knowledge of W. scholars in the last part of the 19th cent. Of the Slavonic text there are two recensions, of which the shorter is undoubtedly the earlier. About its origin, date, authorship, and original language, opinions have differed widely. At one extreme, R. H. Charles thought that it was written about the beginning of the Christian era, by an Alexandrian Jew, and in Greek (though certain parts of it 'were founded on Hebrew originals'); at the other extreme, it has been argued that it is a *Bogomil work, written in Bulgarian between the 12th and 15th cents. As an intermediate view may be instanced that of A. Vaillant, that the author was a Jewish Christian, who was concerned to produce a Christian counterpart to the Jewish 1 Enoch, and wrote in Greek, prob. in the 2nd or early 3rd cent.

(3) 3 Enoch, a Jewish work, dating from well within the Christian era (perhaps the 4th or 5th cent. AD), has gradually come to light, mainly in fragments, from *c.*1870 onwards. The continuous Hebrew text was first published by H. Odeberg in 1928 from a *Bodleian MS of c. AD 1511. Its subjects include the destinies of 'Metatron' (i.e. the Divine servant who is identified with Enoch), many descriptions of angels and their operations, and an account of *Sheol. It appears to betray traces of an anti-Christian polemic.

(1) Ethiopic text ed. A. *Dillmann (Leipzig, 1851), J. Flemming (TU 22, Heft 1; 1902), R. H. Charles (Anecdota Oxoniensia. Semitic Series, pt. 11; 1906) and, with Eng. tr., by M. A. Knibb (2 vols., Oxford, 1978). Greek texts conveniently pr. in H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint, 3 (4th edn., Cambridge, 1912), pp. 789–809, and C. Bonner (ed.), The Last Chapters of Enoch in Greek (Studies and Documents, 8, 1937); all the available frags. ed. M. Black, Apocalypsis Henochi Graece (Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece, 3; Leiden, 1970). J. T. Milik and M. Black (eds.), The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumrân Cave 4, (Oxford, 1976, incl. Eng. tr.). Eng. tr. of Dillmann's text by R. H. Charles (Oxford, 1893) and of his own edn. (ibid., 1912). The latter is repr., with introd., in R. H. Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 163–281; Knibb's tr. is repr., with introd., in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 169–319. Further Eng. trs. by E. Isaac in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 5–89, and by M. Black (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, 7; Leiden, 1985), with comm. and textual notes. E. Sjöberg, Der Menschensohn im Äthiopischen Henochbuch (Acta Reg. Societatis Humaniorum Litterarum Lundensis, 41; 1946); C. P. van Andel, De Structuur van de Henoch-Traditie en het Nieuwe Testament (Studia Theologica Rheno-Traiectina, 2; Utrecht, 1955, with Eng. summary). J. Theisohn, Die auserwählte Richter: Untersuchungen zur traditionsgeschichtlichen Ort der Menschensohngestalt der Bilderreden des Äthiopischen Henoch (Göttingen [1975]). J. C. VanderKam, Enoch and the Growth of an Apocalyptic Tradition (Catholic Biblical Quarterly Monograph Series, 16; Washington, DC, 1984). S. Uhlig, Das Äthiopische Henochbuch (Jüdische Schriften aus hellenistisch-römischer Zeit, Band 5, Lieferung 6; 1984). M. Barker, The Older Testament (1987), pp. 8–80; id., The Lost Prophet: The Book of Enoch and its Influence on Christianity (1988). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1, Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 250–77. G. W. E. Nickelsburg in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 508–16. See also bibl. to SON OF MAN.

(2) Slavonic text, with Fr. tr., ed. A. Vaillant (Textes publiés par l'Institut d'Études slaves, 4; 1952). Eng. trs. by W. R. Morfill, with introd. by R. H. Charles (Oxford, 1896); by N. Forbes and R. H. Charles in R. H. Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 425–69; by F. I. Andersen in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 91–221; and by A. [A.] Pennington in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 321–62. E. Schürer, op. cit. 3 (pt. 2, 1987), pp. 746–50. F. I. Andersen in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 516–22.

(3) Heb. text ed., with Eng. tr., by H. Odeberg (Cambridge, 1928; repr., New York, 1973, with prolegomenon by J. C. Greenfield). Eng. tr. by P. [S.] Alexander in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 223–315. Id. in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 2 (1992), pp. 522–6.

enthronization. The rite by which a newly consecrated archbishop, bishop, or sovereign is put into possession of his throne. It is normally performed by ceremonially leading him to it and seating him thereon; in the case of a sovereign it forms part of the rite of *Coronation (q.v.). Since a bishop's throne was the earliest emblem of his office, his enthronement prob. orig. signified his assumption of power to govern the Church; it would seem to have been performed in silence by the consecrating bishop immediately after the candidate's consecration and before the celebration of the Mass. By the time of the earliest English Pontificals (10th cent.) enthronization was accompanied by the recitation of a prayer (prob. of *Gallican origin) and a blessing of the new bishop, prob. by the consecrator. In the late 12th cent., owing to the growing custom of consecrating bishops outside their cathedral churches, it became a separate rite, which was accompanied by prayers and performed by a third bishop appointed by the metropolitan. In the 13th cent. various changes in the wording of the rite gave ground to the legal interpretation of the ceremony as parallel to the *induction of a clerk, i.e. it was understood as the formal assumption (possessio) of the see; at the same time metropolitans began to assign the task to their *archdeacons. In the later Middle Ages the increase in the practice of translation gave the ceremony an added importance; a new and more precise formula became customary; and, as the legal aspects were emphasized, cathedral chapters used the occasion to demand from the new bishop, who needed access to the cathedral for the purpose, an oath of loyalty to the Church and pledges to preserve its rights. Until the *Reformation the ceremony was performed at *Canterbury by the Prior and at *York by the Dean. In the C of E, the Archdeacon of Canterbury normally enthrones bishops in that Province, but in the Province of York the duty is undertaken by the Dean or Provost of the cathedral of the diocese. In the RC Church enthronization is usually performed by the consecrating bishop if the candidate is consecrated in his own cathedral church; but it is no longer of any juridical significance. The enthronement of the Pope in the Church of *St Peter, Rome, was formerly a ceremony of considerable importance, because, until 1059, it was deemed to confer on him the power of administering the Church.

The term is also applied to the sealing up of relics in a new altar and in the E. Church to induction to a cure of souls.

E. C. Ratcliff, 'On the Rite of the Inthronization of Bishops and Archbishops', Theology, 45 (1942), pp. 71–82. N. Gussone, Thron und Inthronisation des Papstes von den Anfängen bis zum 12. Jahrhundert (Bonner Historische Forschungen, 41; 1978).

enthusiasm (Gk. ἐνθουσιασμός). The original meaning of the word, the 'being possessed by a god', was current in the 17th cent. Later it took on the sense of fancied inspiration, S. *Johnson defining it as 'a vain confidence of Divine favour or communication'; and in the 18th cent. it was widely used for extravagance in religious devotion.

R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm: A Chapter in the History of Religion (1950).

Entrance, Great; Little. See GREAT ENTRANCE; LITTLE ENTRANCE.

Enurchus, St (4th cent.), Bp. of Orléans. Hardly anything is known with certainty of him. Feast day, 7 Sept. In 1604 a mention of the feast was included, probably (via the Preces Privatae* of 1564) from the Calendar of the *York Breviary, in that of the BCP, to mark Queen *Elizabeth I's birthday. The form 'Evurtius' found in modern Prayer Books is the correct one; 'Enurchus' appears to derive from a misreading in the York Breviary (printed 1524), which reads 'Euurcius'.

The highly legendary 'Vita' by Lucifer the Subdeacon, pr. in AASS, Sept. 3 (1750), pp. 52–8, with discussion by J. Stilting, SJ, pp. 44–52, is based on an earlier work, pr. in Catalogus Codicum Hagiographicorum Latinorum Antiquorum Saeculo XVI qui asservantur in Bibliotheca Nationali Parisiensi, 2 (1890), pp. 312–19; both Lives can be dated to the first half of the 9th cent. L. S. Le Nain de *Tillemont, Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire ecclésiastique des six premiers siècles, 8 (2nd edn., 1713), pp. 555 f. On the commemoration in Anglican calendars, see V. Staley, The Liturgical Year (1907), pp. 43–5.

epact (Gk. ἐπακτός, 'brought in'). (1) The excess of days in the solar year over the lunar year of 12 months. (2) The age in days of the moon on 1 Jan. of a given year. In the latter sense the epact is used in ecclesiastical calculations of the date of Easter.

epanokamelavchion (Gk. ἐπανωκαμηλαύχιον, ἐπικαλυμμαύχιον). The veil placed on top of the *kamelavchion and hanging down at the back, worn by monks and bishops in the E. Church. It is normally of black material, except in the case of metropolitans of the Russian Church, who wear a veil of white.

Epaphroditus. A 'brother, and fellow-worker, and fellow-soldier' of St *Paul, mentioned only in Phil. (2: 25 and 4: 18; and perhaps also 4: 3). He carried a gift from Philippi to Paul and returned, probably bearing the Ep. to the Philippians. There is no reason to identify Epaphroditus with the Epaphras of Col. 4: 12.

eparchy (Gk. ἐπαρχία). In the E. Church, the name for an ecclesiastical *province. It is a subdivision of the civil diocese or 'exarchate'. The word is of frequent occurrence in the canons of E. councils, e.g. in those of *Nicaea (325) and *Chalcedon (451). Its ecclesiastical head is the 'eparch', often called the 'metropolitan', who has a veto on the election of the bishops of the dioceses in his eparchy. In the Council of Chalcedon (can. 17), however, the phrase 'eparch of the [civil] diocese' (ἔπαρχος τῆς διοικήσεως) is used to describe what is more commonly and accurately called the '*exarch' (ἔξαρχος).

